FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION DECISIONS

FINDINGS AND ORDERS, DECEMBER 1, 1936 TO MAY 31, 1937

IN THE MATTER OF

CONDE NAST PUBLICATIONS, INC.

COMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 26, 1914

Docket 2399. Complaint, May 20, 1935—Decision, Dec. 2, 1936

Where a corporation long engaged in the publication of a semi-monthly women's style magazine which (1) had an approximate circulation of 150,000, distributed throughout every State of the United States, with editions also published in England and France, (2) was considered a style leader in its field, with its opinions and recommendations in matters of women's styles and dresses carrying great weight with a large portion of the feminine population, who buy style garments, and with manufacturers and retailers thereof, and (3) was at all times in demand on the part of the purchasing public on account of its recommendations as to stylish and "smart garments"—

- (a) Entered into contracts with from four to seven manufacturers, for each issue, out of the two hundred New York City manufacturers, in round numbers, of women's garments of the price range with which it was concerned, under which contracts, and subject to the various provisions thereof as set forth in detail, each manufacturer agreed to pay it a specified percentage of the named price of such garment of said manufacturer as might be selected by it for its featured garments in the issue and department of its said magazine devoted to such matters, and not to manufacture, during the period concerned, a similar garment, or to sell the model selected in cities in which the publisher had selected retailers participating in plan and arrangement herein set forth, and it, the publisher, agreed to supply manufacturer with list of retailers throughout the country with whom it had made agreement to feature garment in question and the names of which it undertook to publish in its said periodical; and
- (b) Entered into agreements with some seventy-three retailers in about seventy-five cities in the different States besides New York, and other than New York City, under which the retailer undertook to purchase, subject to the various detailed provisions of such contracts, at least two articles of such featured selection, and to maintain the resale prices quoted thereon, and it undertook to publish in its said periodical, and in connection with its aforesaid selections, the name of the retailer and price of the particular garment, and not to sell to any other store in such retailer's city except on the same terms, and entered into some twenty oral contracts of the same kind and effect with New York City retailers, and furnished, as a part of the aforesaid plan, for retailers' use in their local advertising, colored display cards and materials calling attention to and giving publicity to the fact that they had been selected by said periodical to sell its featured garments, and thus gave them the prestige possessed by said periodical and which it was able to confer ;

With effect of securing the maintenance, by said selected retailers, anxious to avoid price competition and obtain lines of dresses to the exclusion of competitors, and who found plan profitable, of the resale prices fixed by it, of depriving the public of normal price competition among retailers of such garments, and of causing manufacturers, by whom selection of their garments as above set forth was featured and capitalized, to limit the number of retailers displaying and selling such selected garments to those retailers thus chosen, and of thereby depriving the public of normal competition among a number of dealers in each locality, and with capacity and tendency so to do, and to do substantial injury to (1) manufacturers of the class of garments featured in department in question of said periodical, but who do not participate in practice in question; (2) retailers in garments of class thus featured and who do not thus participate; and (3) competition in commerce; and (4) the public:

Held, That such acts and practices were against public policy in that they unduly suppressed and hindered competition in sale and resale of women's garments, and had capacity and tendency so to do, to prejudice of public interest; and constituted unfair methods of competition.

Before Mr. John W. Norwood, trial examiner.

Mr. Astor Hogg for the Commission.

DeWitt, Van Aken & Moynihan, of New York City, for respondent.

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission having to believe that Conde Nast Publications, Inc., a corporation, hereinafter called the respondent, has been and is using unfair methods of competition in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in said act, and it appearing to said Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint, stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. The respondent, Conde Nast Publications, Inc., is and at all times hereinafter mentioned was a corporation organized, created, and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the State of New York, having its principal office and place of business in the city of New York, in said State, and a branch office in the city of Greenwich, State of Connecticut. It is now engaged, and for more than two years last past has been engaged, in the business of selling and distributing various publications, including "Vogue," between and among the various States of the United States. It now causes, and for more than two years last past has caused, its various publications, including "Vogue," when sold by it to be transported from its place of business in Greenwich, Conn., to newsdealers and subscribers thereof, some located in the State of New York and others in the various States of the United States; and there is now, and has been for more than two years last past, a constant current trade and commerce by said respondent in such publications, including "Vogue," between and among the various States of the United States. In the course and conduct of its business respondent is now and for more than two years last past has been in substantial competition with other corporations and with firms and partnerships engaged in the sale and distribution of like publications between and among the various States of the United States.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid, respondent publishes a magazine known as "Vogue," in which magazine respondent has featured and does feature a department sometimes entitled "Vogue Smart Economies," and at other times, "Vogue's Finds of the Fortnight." The magazine "Vogue" is a woman's magazine devoted to fashion and has a circulation throughout all the States of the United States, and said magazine is at all times in demand on the part of the purchasing public, on account of the fashions and styles of women's apparel which it features, including the department entitled "Vogue Smart Economies" and "Vogue's Finds of the Fortnight." A substantial number of respondent's said competitors maintain in their respective publications similar departments of information and recommendation concerning women's clothing.

PAR. 3. In the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid, respondent has adopted and still has in effect a plan whereby it enters into written contracts with various dress and garment manufacturers of the United States, wherein it is agreed that the respondent shall choose models of women's wearing apparel from the model lines of such manufacturers, for featuring in "Vogue Smart Economies" and "Vogue's Finds of the Fortnight" department of the "Vogue" magazine. For featuring such models as selected by the respondent the manufacturers agree to pay respondent, for each occasion a model is chosen from such manufacturer's line and published in the above-mentioned department, a service fee of five percent of the amount collected as the price payable for the sale of each and every article which is a reproduction of the model chosen by respondent for the picture of the garment to be featured in said magazine. The manufacturers agree not to manufacture or sell any other garment so similar in design to the models so chosen and pictured in "Vogue" as to simulate the said designs.

The written contract which respondent enters into with such manufacturers of women's apparel also stipulates that respondent has made agreements with certain retailers throughout the various States of the United States who will feature and sell these garments, and that it will publish the names of such retailers in the magazine "Vogue," and respondent agrees to furnish a list of these retailers selected by it in the various States of the United States to the manufacturers with whom it enters into such written contract, and the manufacturers agree that in localities where respondent has made such agreements with retailers they will not sell their garments to any retailers in such localities except to those specified in the list furnished the manufacturers. The said manufacturers so selected by respondent in selling to retail dealers regularly, and as a part of such sales, ship their garments to said dealers from the manufacturer's places of business to such purchasers located in various other States, and in so doing are in substantial competition with other manufacturers of women's clothing.

In further connection with the operation of this department of the magazine, respondent selects retail dealers in women's apparel in various localities of the different States of the United States and enters into both written contracts and oral contracts with such retail dealers, by the terms of which contracts respondent agrees to publish in each issue of "The Vogue" the name of the retailer with whom it enters into such contract as the outlet or place where such garment can be obtained in his locality. Such retailer agrees to purchase a minimum of one of each garment pictured and featured in "Vogue's Finds of a Fortnight" and "Vogue Smart Economies," in every issue of "The Vogue," and further agrees and binds itself to respondent to maintain the retail price thereof quoted in "Vogue" for a period of at least one month from the on-sale date of the issue of "Vogue" in which the garments are shown. Respondent agrees that for at least a period of two months after the delivery of these models in the retail store, such models will not be sold by the manufacturers thereof to any other store in the retailer's city or locality except under the same terms and under the same form of contract as entered into between such retailer and respondent.

PAR. 4. Before selecting any model of any such manufacturer to be featured and shown in the "Vogue Smart Economies" and "Vogue's Finds of the Fortnight" department of the magazine, respondent's experts, agents, and servants visit the various manufacturing establishments of the different States of the United States and select the designs to be featured, and require, before featuring such designs, that said manufacturers alter and modify such designs of wearing apparel to meet the demand of the respondent.

PAR. 5. By and through the captions of such department of its said magazine, "Vogue Smart Economies" and "Vogue's Finds of the Fortnight," the publication therein of the identity of the manufacturers whose garments are selected and of the retailers where same may be purchased, and by and through the text of the reading matter in said department contained, respondent impliedly represents to its readers that it is disinterestedly acting to inform them of "smart" garments and where they may be purchased at economical prices; when in truth and in fact respondents select the garments of those manufacturers who will agree to pay it a consideration for making such selection and recommending the same to its readers, and causes the manufacturers of such garments to adopt and carry out, and aids and assists them in adopting and carrying out, a resale price maintenance policy whereby all price competition among retail dealers in such garments is prevented.

PAR. 6. The capacity and tendency, and purpose and result, of the combination and agreement between respondent and the manufacturers and retailers of women's garments and of the acts and practices of respondent, as hereinabove alleged, has been and is to mislead and deceive the readers of respondent's said magazine into the belief that respondent's research and recommendations were and are disinterested; to deprive the public of the benefits of normal price competition among retailers of such garments by constraining retailers to sell at a price arbitrarily fixed by respondent and said manufacturers; and to cause manufacturers to limit the retail dealers in each locality to those selected by respondent, thus depriving the public of the benefits of competition among a number of dealers in each locality.

PAR. 7. The said combination and agreement and acts and practices, were and are to the prejudice of the public interest, as aforesaid; to prejudice of respondent's competitors who honestly conduct similar departments in the interest of their readers; and to the prejudice of the competitors of the said manufacturers who enter into no such schemes to deceive the public, and deprive it of the benefits of competition; and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 20, 1914.

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission on the 20th day of May 1935, issued and served its complaint in this proceeding upon respondent, Conde Nast Publications, Inc., a corporation, charging it with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of the provisions of said act. After the issuance of said complaint, and the filing of respondent's answer thereto, testimony and other evidence in support of the allegations of the said complaint were introduced by Astor Hogg, attorney for the Commission, before John W. Norwood, an examiner of the Commission theretofore duly designated by it, and in opposition to the allegations of the complaint by MacDonald DeWitt, attorney for respondent; and said testimony and evidence were duly recorded and filed in the office of the Commission. Thereafter, the proceeding came on for final hearing before the Commission on the said complaint, the answer thereto, testimony and other evidence, briefs in support of the complaint and in opposition thereto, and the oral arguments of the counsel aforesaid; and the Commission having duly considered the same, and being fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public, and makes this its findings as to the facts and conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent, Conde Nast Publications, Inc., is a corporation, organized, existing, and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of New York with its principal corporate office located in the city and State of New York and its principal place of business located in the town of Greenwich, State of Connecticut. It is now, and has been for more than twenty years last past, engaged in the business of selling and distributing various publications, including the magazine known as "Vogue," to various individuals, firms, and corporations, located in the various States of the United States. It has caused and still causes its said publications, including "Vogue," when so sold by it to be transported, in commerce, from its principal place of business in the town of Greenwich, Conn., to, into, and through said other States to the purchasers thereof.

Findings

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid respondent published the magazine "Vogue" in which it has featured and does feature a department, or continuous feature, which from its incipency in September 1932, to June 1934, was entitled "Vogue's Smart Economics," since said latter date it has been entitled "Vogue's Finds of the Fortnight." "Vogue" is a women's style magazine, published twice a month, and has an approximate circulation of 150,000, distributed throughout every State of the United States. It also has editions published in England and France. It is considered a style leader in its field and its opinions and recommendations in matters of women's styles and dresses have great weight with a large portion of the female population who buy style garments, and with manufacturers and retailers of such garments. It is at all times in demand on the part of the purchasing public on account of its recommendations as to stylish and "smart garments".

PAR. 3. In the course of and in connection with the conduct of said department "Finds of the Fortnight," respondent has adopted and still has in effect a plan whereby it enters into and carries out certain written contracts, first, with women's garment manufacturers, and second, with retailers of such garments. Its contract with manufacturers is in the words and figures following, to wit:

CONDE NAST PUBLICATIONS, INC.

420 Lexington Avenue,

New York, N. Y.

AGREEMENT between The Conde Nast Publications, Inc., publisher of the magazine Vogue, hereinafter called the "Publisher", and _____, wholesale manufacturer, hereinafter called the "Manufacturer."

1. The Publisher conducts a department in Vogue entitled "Vogue's Finds of the Fortnight", wherein it publishes pictures of models of women's wearing apparel, with retail prices given. These models are chosen by the editors of Vogue from the Model lines of wholesale manufacturers. The Manufacturer is desirous of having selections made by Vogue from his line for that purpose.

2. The Manufacturer agrees to pay the Publisher, to offset, in part, the expense to the Publisher of operating such Finds of the Fortnight Department, for each occasion when a model is so chosen from his line and published in the above-mentioned department of Vogue, a service fee of 5% of the amount quoted to Vogue as the price payable to him from the sale of each and every article of wearing apparel (in any and all materials in which the same may be made) which is a reproduction or adaption of the model so chosen and pictured in Vogue (less 8% to cover trade discount), and the Manufacturer agrees not to manufacture or sell any other garment so similar in design to the model so chosen and pictured in Vogue as to constitute an infringement of the design of such model or a substantial imitation thereof. The Manufacturer shall pay such service fee to the Publisher each thirty days after delivery of the merchandise to retailers during the sales life of the garment selected by Vogue.

3. The Publisher has made agreements with certain retailers throughout the country who will feature these garments, to publish the names of such retailers in Vogue. The list of these retailers will be furnished to the Manufacturer, and the Manufacturer agrees that in cities where Vogue has made such agreements with retailers he will not, without Vogue's written consent, sell these garments to any retailers except those specified in such list. The Manufacturer agrees not to make delivery of any garment reproduced by him from the model so chosen by the editors of Vogue to retailers more than five days before the publication date of the particular issue of Vogue in which such garment is to be pictured, and the Publisher agrees to give the Manufacturer advance notice of such publication date.

The written contract between the respondent and the retailers is in the words and figures following, to wit:

AGREEMENT, made the _____ day of _____ 193 , between THE CONDE NAST PUBLICATIONS, INC., Publisher of the magazine Vogue, and _____ of _____, Retailer.

1. There appears in the editorial section of each issue of Vogue a special department consisting of several pages of illustrated wearing apparel under the title "Vogue's Finds of the Fortnight".

The purpose of this Editorial feature is to present to the readers of Vogue special garments selected by Vogue from wholesale manufacturers, because of their good style and good values. On the pages where these garments are illustrated, Vogue quotes the retail prices and states further that they may be found in the better shops throughout the country.

2. In order that you may get the full benefit of Vogue's promotion of these garments, Vogue is prepared to publish in each issue the name of your store as a retail outlet for these particular garments in your community, providing you subscribe to the conditions specified herein.

3. You agree to purchase until further notice a minimum of two of each garment (not to exceed seven numbers) shown in "Vogue's Finds of the Fortnight" in every issue of Vogue, and you further agree to maintain the retail price thereof quoted in Vogue for a period of at least one month from the on-sale date of the issue of Vogue in which these garments have been shown.

4. Vogue agrees that for at least a period of two months after the delivery of these models to your store, these same models will not be sold by the manufacturers thereof to any other store in your city, except under the same terms and under the same form of contract as subscribed to by you.

5. This agreement may be terminated by either party giving the other thirty days' written notice, at the expiration of six months.

tions and requires alterations in the same to meet respondent's ideas and desires. During the year 1932, respondent entered into such contracts with seventy-three manufacturers of dress garments, all of whom were located in New York City. In 1933 it entered into seventy-seven such contracts; in 1934 it entered into seventy-three such contracts and from January 1, 1935, to August 1, 1935, respondent entered into forty such contracts. Approximately 85% of the manufacturers in the United States, of garments of the class featured by Vogue, in "Finds of the Fortnight," are situated in New York City. Manufacturers of such dresses outside of New York City are not permitted to participate in the plan although said manufacturers are engaged in interstate commerce in the sale of their dresses to the same class of retail dealers as those to whom said other manufacturers sell. The wholesale price range of dresses featured by Vogue in its "Finds of the Fortnight" is from $10.75 to $39.50. In this price range there are about 200 manufacturers in New York City who manufacture dresses of the class which Vogue features in its department, and it has contacted approximately 160 of that number. Thus, in any one issue of Vogue, from four to seven of the manufacturers in New York are favored against the remainder of about 200, and against all manufacturers outside of New York. The selected manufacturers circularize their trade and stress the fact of their selection by Vogue. The manufacturers with whom respondent enters into such contracts are regularly engaged in selling women's garments to retail dealers located in states other than the state in which such manufacturers are located, and pursuant to such sales, and as a part thereof, shipping the garments into and through the various States of the United States to purchasers thereof.

PAR. 5. The list of Vogue retail dealers, with whom it enters into the written contract hereinabove set out, covers regularly about seventy-five cities in the different States of the United States, besides New York City, and embraces about seventy-three retailers outside the State of New York. Since the plan was adopted written contracts have been made with a total of 137 retail dealers. Approximately twenty oral contracts of the same tenor and effect as the written contracts are operative between respondent and retailers in New York City. Respondent has had, at various times, co-existing contracts covering the same models with two retailers in each of the following cities:

Philadelphia
Los Angeles
San Francisco
Chicago

Brooklyn
Kansas City
Pittsburgh

and with from six to eight retailers in New York City. As a part of the plan the selected retail dealers are furnished with colored display cards and materials for use in their local advertising, calling attention to and giving publicity to the fact that they have been selected by Vogue to sell the featured garments, thus giving them the prestige which Vogue possesses and is able to confer. It is understood that failure by the retailers to maintain, according to the contract, the resale price for the garments fixed by respondent and quoted in Vogue, with fractional tolerances, will result in such retailer being denied further participation in the plan. However, the selected retailers have found the plan profitable to them, and they have maintained the fixed prices. Retail dealers in such garments have been and are anxious to avoid price competition and to obtain lines of dresses to the exclusion of competitors.

PAR. 6. The maximum demand for a garment featured in "Finds of the Fortnight" occurs during the first month after the issue of the magazine in which said garment is featured goes on sale. In the year 1934, Vogue circulation increased approximately 15,000 copies per issue and the Department "Finds of the Fortnight" contributed substantially to the increase. The plan under which this department is and has been operated, has resulted in the sale of 32,459 garments in the year 1933, of 32,301 garments in the year 1934, and 9,937 garments from January 1, 1935, to August 1, 1935.

PAR. 7. The capacity, tendency, and effect of respondent's plan and practices as set forth in these findings has been and is to secure the maintenance by the selected retail dealers of the resale prices fixed by respondent and to deprive the public of normal price competition among the retailers of such garments; and to cause manufacturers to limit the number of retail dealers displaying and selling said selected garments to those selected by respondent, thus depriving the public of normal competition among a number of dealers in each locality. The plan has had and has the capacity and tendency to do substantial injury to manufacturers of the class of garments featured in "Finds of the Fortnight" who do not participate in the practice herein set out and to do substantial injury to retailers in garments of the class featured in "Finds of the Fortnight" who do not participate in the practice herein set forth. The plan has had and has the capacity and tendency to do substantial injury to competition in interstate commerce and to do substantial injury to the public.

PAR. 8. The evidence in the record fails to establish by substantial proof that respondent's method of conducting the department "Vogue's Finds of the Fortnight" has the capacity or tendency to mislead and deceive its readers, as alleged in the complaint.

Order

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of Conde Nast Publications, Inc. are against public policy in that they have the capacity and tendency to, and do, unduly suppress and hinder competition in the sale and resale of women's garments, to the prejudice of the public interest, and constitute unfair methods of competition within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

This proceeding having been heard by the Federal Trade Commission upon the complaint of the Commission, the answer of the respondent, testimony and other evidence taken before John W. Norwood, an examiner of the Commission theretofore duly designated by it, in support of the allegations of said complaint and in opposition thereto, briefs filed herein and oral arguments by Astor Hogg, counsel for the Commission, and by MacDonald DeWitt, counsel for the respondent, and the Commission having made its findings as to the facts and its conclusion that said respondent has violated the provisions of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled, "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

It is now ordered, That the respondent, Conde Nast Publications, Inc., its officers, representatives, agents and employees, in connection with the publication and sale of its magazines in interstate commerce, or in the District of Columbia, do cease and desist from:

(1) Entering into contracts, agreements, or understandings with retail dealers of women's garments, who regularly purchase such garments in interstate commerce, requiring or providing that the retailers, in the resale of such garments, or any of them, shall observe and maintain the retail prices therefor specified, fixed or quoted by respondent;

(2) Entering into contracts, agreements, or understandings with manufacturers of women's garments, who regularly sell and ship such garments in interstate commerce, requiring or providing that the manufacturers shall limit, in each locality, the number of retail dealers to whom it will sell and ship such garments, or any of them;

(3) Using and carrying out a plan whereby, pursuant to contracts with selected manufacturers of women's garments, who regularly sell and ship such garments in interstate commerce to retailers thereof, respondent selects models of such manufacturers' garments, pictures the same in its magazine, selects, and publishes the names of, retailers who will have and have such garments for sale, and requires the manufacturers to refrain from selling such garments, in cities where respondent has selected retailers, to any retailers except those selected by respondent; and enters into contracts with and requires the selected retailers to observe and maintain the resale prices fixed and quoted by respondent for such garments;

(4) Aiding, assisting, and abetting any person in carrying out any resale price maintenance policy, the capacity, tendency, or effect of which may be to prevent or to substantially lessen competition among retail dealers;

(5) Utilizing any cooperative means of accomplishing or carrying out the things prohibited in paragraphs 1, 2, 3, and 4, hereof.

It is further ordered, That the said respondent shall, within 30 days from and after the day of the date of the service upon it of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which it has complied with this order.

COMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION
OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 28, 1914

Docket 2237. Complaint, Dec. 30, 1935¹—Decision, Dec. 3, 1936

Where a corporation engaged in manufacture and sale of "straight" goods candy and of so-called "break and take," "draw," or "deal" assortments, one of the principal trade demands for which comes from the small retailers with stores, in many instances, near schools and patronized by the school children, and sale and distribution of which, or similarly sold candy, offering opportunity of obtaining a prize or becoming a winner by lot or chance, teaches and encourages gambling among children, largest class by far of purchasers and consumers of such type of candy, who buy same in preference to so-called "straight" goods, when displayed side by side, by reason of lottery or gambling feature connected with former, and selling of which, in the market of the other, i. e., the "straight" goods, sold exclusively by many manufacturers, has been followed by a marked decrease in sale of such "straight" candy, due to gambling or lottery feature connected with so-called "break and take," "draw," or "deal" merchandise—

Sold, to wholesalers and jobbers, its said candy, including assortments of (1) two-for-a-penny individually wrapped pieces of uniform size and shape in which chance purchaser of pieces, the enclosed concealed color of which differed from that of the majority, was entitled, free of charge, to one of the larger pieces included, and purchaser of last piece was similarly entitled to small package of candy; in which (2) plan and arrangement were employed, but with uniform pieces priced at penny each instead of two for a penny; and (3) in which purchaser paid nothing and secured nothing other than a free punch, or paid two cents, three cents, or five cents for one of the bars comprising the assortment, in accordance with number pushed by chance from push card included therewith, and with purchaser of last punch on board receiving two bars; so packed and assembled that such various assortments could be displayed and offered by the numerous retailer purchasers thereof, and with knowledge and intent that such assortments would and could be sold without alteration or rearrangement to the consuming or purchasing public by lot or chance, in accordance with such arrangement, in violation of public policy and in competition with many manufacturers of "straight" candy exclusively, and in competition with many who regard such methods of sale and distribution as morally bad and as encouraging gambling and especially among children, as injurious to the industry through resulting in the merchandising of a chance or lottery instead of candy, and as providing retail merchants with the means of violating the laws of the several States, and some of whom, for such reasons, refuse to sell candy so packed and assembled that it can be resold to the public by lot or chance;

With the result that such refusing competitors, who can compete on even terms only by giving the same or similar devices to retailers, were put to a disadvantage in competing and their sales of "straight" candy showed a continued decrease, some competitors began the sale and distribution of candy for resale to the public by lot or chance, for which, thus sold, there is demand, public and competitors were prejudiced and injured and trade was diverted to it from its said competitors, and there was a restraint upon and a detriment to the freedom of fair and legitimate competition in industry concerned:

Held, That such acts and practices were to the prejudice of the public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition.

AMENDED AND SUPPLEMENTAL COMPLAINT

Whereas the Federal Trade Commission did heretofore, to-wit, on October 2, 1934, issue its complaint herein charging and alleging that respondent is and has been guilty of unfair methods of competition in interstate commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914; and

Whereas this Commission having reason to believe that respondent herein has been and is using unfair methods of competition in commerce as "commerce" is defined in said act other than and in addition to those in relation to which the Commission issued its complaint as aforesaid, and it appearing to said Commission that a further proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest:

Now, therefore, acting in the public interest pursuant to the provisions of the act of September 26, 1914, aforesaid, the Federal Trade Commission charges that the Paul F. Beich Company, a corporation, hereinafter referred to as respondent, has been and now is using unfair methods of competition in commerce as "commerce" is defined in said act, and states its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent is a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Illinois with its principal office and place of business in the city of Bloomington, State of Illinois, and with a branch selling office and branch manufacturing establishment in the city of Chicago, State of Illinois. Respondent for several years last past has been engaged in the manufacture of candy and in the distribution thereof to wholesale dealers and jobbers and retail dealers located at points in the various States of the United States, and causes said products when so sold to be transported from its principal place of business in the city of Bloomington, Ill., and from its branch establishment in the city of Chicago, Ill., into and through other States of the United States and the District of Columbia to said purchasers at their respective points of location in said several States and in the District of Columbia. In the course and conduct of the said business respondent is in competition with other corporations, partnerships, and individuals, engaged in the manufacture of candy and in the sale and distribution thereof in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and the District of Columbia and within the District of Columbia.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of its business as described in paragraph 1 hereof respondent sells and has sold to wholesale and retail dealers various packages or assortments of candy so packed and assembled as to involve the use of a lottery scheme when sold and distributed to the consumers thereof. Certain of said packages are hereinafter described for the purpose of showing the methods used by respondent, but this list is not all-inclusive of the various packages, nor does it include all the details of several sales plans which respondent has been or is using in the distribution of candy by lot or chance:

(a) One of the said assortments of candies is composed of a number of pieces of candy of uniform size and shape, together with a number of larger pieces of candy, which larger pieces of candy are to be given as prizes to said purchasers of said pieces of candy of uniform size and shape, in the following manner:

The said pieces of candy of uniform size and shape in said assortment are contained within wrappers, 2 pieces of said candy being contained within each wrapper. The majority of said pieces of candy are of the same color, but a small number of said pieces of candy are of a different color, the colors of said pieces of candy being effectively concealed from the prospective purchaser by the wrappers in which they are contained until a selection or purchase has been made and the wrapper removed. The pieces of candy of uniform size and shape in said assortment retail at the price of 2 for 1¢, but the purchaser who procures 2 pieces of said candy of a different color than the majority is entitled to receive and is to be given free of charge one of the said larger pieces of candy heretofore referred to. The purchaser of the last piece of candy in said assortment is entitled to receive and is to be given free of charge one of the said larger pieces of candy. The aforesaid purchaser of said candies who procures a candy of a different color than the majority, is thus to procure one of the said larger pieces of candy wholly by lot or chance.

(b) Another assortment of candy consists of a number of small pieces of candy of uniform size and shape, together with a number of larger pieces of candy, which larger pieces of candy are to be given as prizes to purchasers of said pieces of candy of uniform size and shape in the following manner: The said pieces of candy of uniform size and shape are contained within wrappers and the majority of said pieces of candy are of the same color, but a small number of the said pieces of candy are of a different color but the color of the said pieces of candy is effectively concealed from the prospective purchaser by the wrappers in which they are contained, until a selection or purchase has been made and the wrapper removed. The pieces of candy of uniform size and shape in said assortment retail at the price of 1¢ each, but the purchaser who procures one of the said candies of a different color than the majority is entitled to receive and is to be given free of charge one of the said larger pieces of candy heretofore referred to and the purchaser of the last piece of candy in the said assortment is also entitled to receive and is to be given free of charge one of the said larger pieces of candy. The aforesaid purchaser of said candies who procures a candy of a color different from the majority of said pieces of candy is thus to procure one of the said larger pieces of candy wholly by lot or chance.

(c) Another of said assortments contains a number of bars of candy together with a device commonly called a "push card." The bars of candy contained in said assortment are distributed to purchasers in the following manner:

The push card has a number of partially perforated disks and when a push is made, the disk is separated from the card and a number is disclosed. The numbers are effectively concealed from the purchaser and prospective purchaser until a selection has been made and the disk separated from the card. The card bears statements or legends informing purchasers and prospective purchasers as follows:

NUMBERS: 1 2 3 4 5 FREE PUNCH
 NUMBERS: 6 7 8 9 10 Pay 2¢ and receive 5¢ BAR
 NUMBERS: 11 12 13 14 15 Pay 3¢ and receive 5¢ BAR
 ALL OTHER NUMBERS PAY 5¢ AND RECEIVE 5¢ BAR
 LAST PUNCH ON BOARD RECEIVES 2—5¢ BARS

The candy bars in said assortment are distributed by the retail dealers in accordance with the above legends or instructions. The fact as to whether a purchaser pays 2¢ and receives one bar of candy, or pays 3¢ and receives one bar of candy, or pays 5¢ and receives one bar of candy, or pays 5¢ and receives two bars of candy, or receives a free punch and obtains no candy is thus determined wholly by lot or chance.

PAR. 3. The wholesale dealers to whom respondent sells its assortments, resell said assortments to retail dealers, and said retail dealers, and the retail dealers to whom respondent sells direct, expose said assortments for sale, and sell said candy to the purchasing public in accordance with the aforesaid sales plans. Respondent thus supplies to and places in the hands of others the means of conducting lotteries in the sale of its products in accordance with the sales plans hereinabove set forth, as a means of inducing purchasers thereof to purchase respondent's said products in preference to candy offered for sale and sold by its competitors.

PAR. 4. The sale of said candy to the purchasing public in the manner above alleged involves a game of chance or the sale of a chance to procure (a) and (b) larger pieces of candy at the price of 1¢; or (c) bars of candy at a price of 2¢ or 3¢, rather than at the price of 5¢.

The use by respondent of said method in the sale of candies, and the sale of candies by and through the use thereof and by the aid of said method is a practice of the sort which the common law and criminal statutes have long deemed contrary to public policy; and is contrary to an established public policy of the Government of the United States. The use by respondent of said method has the dangerous tendency unduly to hinder competition or create monopoly in this, to wit: that the use thereof has the tendency and capacity to exclude from the branch of the candy trade involved in this proceeding competitors who do not adopt and use the same method or an equivalent or similar method involving the same or an equivalent or similar element of chance or lottery scheme.

Wherefore, many persons, firms, and corporations who make and sell candy in competition with respondent, as above alleged, are unwilling to offer for sale or sell candy so packed and assembled as above alleged, or otherwise arranged and packed for sale to the purchasing public so as to involve a game of chance, and such competitors refrain therefrom.

PAR. 5. Many dealers in and ultimate purchasers of candy are attracted by respondent's said method and manner of packing said candy, and by the element of chance involved in the sale thereof in the manner above described, and are thereby induced to purchase said candy so packed and sold by respondent, in preference to candy offered for sale and sold by said competitors of respondent who do not use the same or equivalent methods. The use of said method by respondent has the tendency and capacity, because of said game of chance, to divert to respondent trade and custom from its said competitors who do not use the same or an equivalent method; to exclude from said candy trade all competitors who are unwilling to and who do not use the same or an equivalent method because the same is unlawful; to lessen competition in said candy trade, and to tend to create a monopoly of said candy trade in respondent and such other distributors of candy as use the same or an equivalent method, and to deprive the purchasing public of the benefit of free competition in said candy trade. The use of said method by the respondent has the tendency and capacity to eliminate from said candy trade all actual competitors, and to exclude therefrom all potential competitors, who do not adopt and use said method or an equivalent method.

PAR. 6. Many of said competitors of respondent are unwilling to adopt and use said method or any method involving a game of chance or the sale of a chance to win something by chance or any other method that is contrary to public policy.

PAR. 7. The aforementioned methods, acts, and practices of the respondent are all to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors as hereinabove alleged. Said methods, acts and practices constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914.

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

had been and was using unfair methods of competition in commerce as "commerce" is defined in said act of Congress.

After the issuance of said amended and supplemental complaint, the respondent having failed to file answer thereto, testimony and other evidence in support of the allegations of said complaint were introduced by Henry C. Lank and P. C. Kolinski, attorneys for the Commission, before Miles J. Furnas, an examiner of the commission theretofore duly designated by it, and said testimony and other evidence were duly recorded and filed in the office of the Commission. The respondent was represented by Walter C. Hughes, Esq., but offered no testimony or other evidence in opposition to the allegations of said complaint. Thereafter the proceeding came regularly on for final hearing, before the Commission on said amended and supplemental complaint, the testimony and other evidence, and brief of counsel for the Commission, the respondent having failed to file any brief and having indicated that it did not desire to orally argue the matter, and the Commission, having duly considered the same and being fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH. 1. The respondent, Paul F. Beich Company, is a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Illinois, with its executive office and manufacturing plant in the city of Bloomington, Ill., and with a sales office and a manufacturing plant in the city of Chicago, Ill. Respondent is now and for several years last past has been engaged in the manufacture of candy and in the sale and distribution of said candy to wholesale dealers and jobbers located in practically all States of the United States. It causes said candy when sold to be shipped or transported from its manufacturing plant in Bloomington, or from its manufacturing plant in Chicago, to purchasers thereof in the State of Illinois and in the other States of the United States, and in the District of Columbia. In so carrying on said business respondent is and has been engaged in interstate commerce and is and has been in active competition with other corporations and with partnerships and individuals engaged in the manufacture of candy and in the sale and distribution thereof in commerce between and among the various States of the United States, and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 2. Among the candies manufactured and distributed by respondent was an assortment composed of a number of pieces of candy of uniform size and shape, together with a number of larger pieces of candy and a small package of candy, which larger pieces of candy and small package of candy were given as prizes to said purchasers of said pieces of candy of uniform size and shape in the following manner.

The said pieces of candy were contained within wrappers—two pieces of said candy being contained within each wrapper. The majority of the said pieces of candy were of the same color, but a small number of said pieces of candy were of a different color. The color of the said pieces of candy were effectively concealed from purchasers or prospective purchasers by the wrapper in which they were contained until a selection or purchase had been made and the wrapper removed. The pieces of candy of uniform size and shape in said assortment retailed at the price of 2-for-1¢, but the purchaser who procured two pieces of said candy of a different color than the majority was entitled to receive, and was to be given free of charge, one of the said larger pieces of candy heretofore referred to. The purchaser of the last piece of candy in said assortment was entitled to receive, and was given free of charge, the small package of candy. The aforesaid purchasers of said candies who procured candies colored differently than the majority thus procured one of the said larger pieces of candy wholly by lot or chance.

Respondent also manufactured and distributed an assortment of candy similar to the above described assortment, but where the retail price of the pieces of candy of uniform size and shape was 1¢ each instead of 2-for-1¢, the sales plan involved was identical with that above described.

The respondent manufactured and distributed the above described assortments until shortly prior to the issuance of the amended and supplemental complaint, but the Commission has no assurance that the respondent will not again begin the manufacture and distribution of said assortment.

PAR. 3. Another assortment manufactured and distributed by respondent contained a number of bars of candy, together with a device commonly called a "push card." The bars of candy contained in said assortment were distributed to purchasers in the following manner.

The push card has a number of partially perforated disks, and when a push is made a disk is separated from the card and a number is disclosed. The numbers are effectively concealed from the purchaser and prospective purchaser until a selection has been made and the disk separated from the card. The card bears statements or legends informing purchasers and prospective purchasers as follows:

Findings

NUMBERS: 1 2 3 4 5 FREE PUNCH
 NUMBERS: 6 7 8 9 10 Pay 2¢ and receive 5¢ BAR
 NUMBERS: 11 12 13 14 15 Pay 3¢ and receive 5¢ BAR
 ALL OTHER NUMBERS PAY 5¢ AND RECEIVE 5¢ BAR
 LAST PUNCH ON BOARD RECEIVES 2-5¢ BARS

The candy bars in said assortment are distributed by the retail dealers in accordance with the above legends or instructions. The fact as to whether a purchaser pays 2¢, 3¢ or 5¢ and receives one or two bars of candy or receives a free punch and obtains no candy is thus determined wholly by lot or chance.

PAR. 4. The candy assortments involving the lot or chance feature, as described in paragraphs 2 and 3 above, are generally referred to in the candy trade or industry as "break and take," "draw," or "deal" assortments, and assortments of candy without the gaming device or lottery feature in connection with their resale to the public are generally referred to in the candy trade or industry as "straight" goods. These terms will be used hereafter in these findings to describe these respective types of candy.

PAR. 5. Numerous retail dealers purchase the assortments described in paragraphs 2 and 3 above from wholesale dealers or jobbers who in turn have purchased said assortments from respondent, and such retail dealers display said assortments for sale to the public as packed by the respondent, and the candy contained in said assortment is sold and distributed to the consuming public in the manner described.

PAR. 6. All sales made by respondent to wholesale dealers and jobbers are absolute sales, and respondent retains no control in any manner over the goods after they are delivered to the wholesale dealer or jobber. The assortments are assembled and packed in such a manner that they are sold and are designed to be sold by retail dealers to the consuming public in the manner described without alteration or rearrangement.

The respondent has knowledge that the said assortments will be resold to the purchasing public by retail dealers by lot or chance, and it packs and assembles such candy in the way and manner described so that without alteration, addition, or rearrangement it may be resold to the public by lot or chance by said retail dealers.

PAR. 7. The sale and distribution of candy by retail dealers by the methods described in paragraphs 2 and 3 above is a sale and distribution of candy by lot or chance and constitutes a lottery or gaming device.

Competitors of respondent appeared as witnesses in this proceeding and testified, and the Commission finds as a fact, that many competitors regard such methods of sale and distribution as morally bad and as encouraging gambling, especially among children; as injurious to the candy industry because it results in the merchandising of a chance or lottery instead of candy; and as providing retail merchants with the means of violating the laws of the several states. Because of these reasons some competitors of respondent refuse to sell candy so packed and assembled that it can be resold to the public by lot or chance. These competitors are thereby put to a disadvantage in competing. Certain retailers who find that they can dispose of more candy by the "break and take", "draw", or "deal" methods buy respondent's products and the products of others employing the same methods of sale and thereby trade is diverted to respondent and others using similar methods from said competitors. Said competitors can compete on even terms only by giving the same or similar devices to retailers. This they are unwilling to do and their sales of "straight" candy show a continued decrease.

There is a demand for candy which is sold by lot or chance, and in order to meet the competition of manufacturers who sell and distribute candy which is sold by such methods some competitors of respondent have begun the sale and distribution of candy for resale to the public by lot or chance. The use of such methods by respondent in the sale and distribution of its candy is prejudicial and injurious to the public and to respondent's competitors and has resulted in the diversion of trade to respondent from its said competitors and is a restraint upon and a detriment to the freedom of fair and legitimate competition in the candy industry.

PAR. 8. One of the principal demands in the trade for the "break and take," "draw," or "deal" candy comes from the small retailers. The stores of these small retailers are in many instances located near schools and attract the trade of school children. The consumers or purchasers of the lottery or prize package candy are principally children and because of the lottery or gambling feature connected with the "break and take," "draw," or "deal" package and the possibility of becoming a winner, children purchase candy from such packages in preference to the "straight" candy, when the two types of assortments are displayed side by side. The sale and distribution of "break and take," "draw," or "deal" packages of candy or of candy which has connected with its sale to the public the means or opportunity of obtaining a prize or becoming a winner by lot or chance teaches and encourages gambling among children, who comprise by far the largest class of purchasers and consumers of this type of candy.

PAR. 9. There are in the United States, many manufacturers of candy who do not manufacture and sell lottery or prize assortments of candy, and who sell their "straight" candy in interstate commerce in competition with the "break and take," "draw," or "deal" candy, and manufacturers of the "straight" type of candy have noted a marked decrease in the sales of their products whenever and wherever the lottery or prize candy has appeared in their markets. This decrease in the sales of "straight" candy is principally due to the gambling or lottery features connected with the "break and take," "draw," or "deal" candy.

PAR. 10. In addition to the assortments described in Paragraphs Two and Three herein the respondent manufactures candy which it sells to wholesale dealers and jobbers without any lottery or chance feature. The total annual volume of respondent's business was not shown, but an officer of the respondent corporation testified, and the Commission finds, that the respondent's business is substantial. The "break and take," "draw," or "deal" assortments, as described by the respondent, are not the major part of its total business.

PAR. 11. The Commission further finds that the sale and distribution in interstate commerce of assortments of candy so packed and assembled as to enable retail dealers without alteration, addition, or rearrangement to resell the same to the consuming public by lot or chance, is contrary to public policy.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondent, Paul F. Beich Company, a corporation, are to the prejudice of the public and respondent's competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce, and constitute a violation of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

This proceeding having been heard by the Federal Trade Commission upon the amended and supplemental complaint of the Commission, the testimony and other evidence in support of the charges of said complaint taken before Miles J. Furnas, an examiner of the Commission theretofore duly designated by it, no answer having been filed by the respondent nor any testimony having been offered in opposition to the allegations of the complaint, and the Commission having made its findings as to the facts and its conclusion that said respondent has violated the provisions of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

It is hereby ordered, That the respondent, Paul F. Beich Company, a corporation, its officers, agents, representatives, and employees, in the offering for sale, sale and distribution in interstate commerce of candy and candy products do cease and desist from:

(1) Selling and distributing to jobbers and wholesale dealers for resale to retailers candy so packed and assembled that sales of such candy to the general public are to be made, or are designed to be made, by means of lottery, gaming device, or gift enterprise.

(2) Supplying to, or placing in the hands of wholesale dealers and jobbers packages or assortments of candy which are used, or are designed to be used, without alteration or rearrangement of the contents of such packages or assortments, to conduct a lottery, gaming device, or gift enterprise in the sale or distribution of the candy contained in said assortment to the public.

(3) Packing or assembling in the same package or assortment of candy for sale to the public at retail pieces of candy of uniform size and shape, but having different colors, together with larger pieces of candy and a small box of candy, which said larger pieces of candy and small box of candy are to be given as prizes to the purchaser procuring a piece of candy of a particular color.

(4) Supplying to or placing in the hands of wholesale dealers and jobbers assortments of candy together with a device commonly called a "push card" for use or which is designed to be used in distribution of said candy to the public at retail.

(5) Furnishing to wholesale dealers and jobbers a device commonly called a "push card," either with assortments of candy, or separately, and bearing a legend or legends or statements informing the purchaser that the candy is being sold to the public by lot or chance or in accordance with a sales plan which constitutes a lottery, gaming device, or gift enterprise.

It is further ordered, That the respondent, Paul F. Beich Company, within 30 days after the service upon it of this order, shall file with the Commission a report in writing, setting forth in detail the manner and form in which it has complied with the order to cease and desist hereinabove set forth.

Syllabus

IN THE MATTER OF
GOLD SEAL DISTILLERS, INC.COMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 26, 1914*Docket 2425. Complaint, June 5, 1935—Decision, Dec. 3, 1936*

Where a corporation engaged in purchasing and bottling whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages and in the sale thereof to wholesalers and retailers, in substantial competition with those engaged in the manufacture by distillation of whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages and in sale thereof, and with those engaged in purchasing, rectifying, blending, and bottling, or in purchasing and bottling, such products, and respectively selling the same among the various States and in the District of Columbia, and including among aforesaid competitors those who manufacture and distill from mash, wort, or wash, as commonly understood, their whiskies and other spirituous beverages and truthfully use words "distillery," "distilleries," "distillers," or "distilling" as part of their corporate or trade names and on their stationery and on the labels of the bottles in which they sell and ship their products, and those who, engaged in purchasing, rectifying, blending, bottling, and selling, or in purchasing, bottling, and selling at wholesale, such various products, do not use aforesaid words as a part of their corporate or trade names, etc., as above set forth—

Represented, through use of word "Distillers" in its corporate name, printed on its stationery and on the labels attached to bottles in which it sold and shipped its said products, and in various other ways, to its customers, and furnished same with means of representing to their vendees, both retailers and ultimate consuming public, that the said whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages contained in said bottles were by it made through process of distillation from mash, wort, or wash, notwithstanding fact they did not distill said whiskies, etc., thus bottled, labeled, sold, and distributing by it, nor own, operate, or control any place or places where such beverages were made by process of distillation from mash, wort, or wash, as long definitely understood from word "Distillers" by trade and ultimate purchasing public as meaning places where such liquors are made by aforesaid process, and it was not a distiller, for the purchase of bottled liquors of which there is a preference on the part of a substantial portion of the purchasing public;

With effect of misleading and deceiving dealers and purchasing public into belief that the whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages sold by it were by it made and distilled from mash, wort, or wash as above set forth, and of inducing dealers and purchasing public, acting in such belief, to buy its said whiskies, etc., bottled and sold by it, and of diverting thereby trade to it from its competitors who do not, by their corporate or trade names, or in any other manner, misrepresent that they are manufacturers by distillation, as above set forth, of their products; to the substantial injury of competition and commerce:

Held, That such acts and practices were to the prejudice of the public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition.

Before Mr. John L. Hornor, trial examiner.

Mr. PGad B. Morehouse for the Commission.

Mr. Philip B. Heller, of Chicago, Ill., for respondent.

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that Gold Seal Distillers, Inc., hereinafter referred to as respondent, has been and is using unfair methods of competition in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in said act, and it appearing to the said Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint, stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent is a corporation organized, existing, and doing business under the laws of the State of Illinois with its office and principal place of business in Chicago, in said State. It is now, and for more than one year last past has been, engaged in the business of purchasing and bottling whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages and selling the same at wholesale in constant course of trade and commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia. In the course and conduct of its said business it causes its said products when sold to be transported from its place of business aforesaid into and through various other States of the United States to the purchasers thereof, consisting of wholesalers and retailers, some located within the State of Illinois and some located in other States of the United States and the District of Columbia. In the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid, respondent is now, and for more than one year last past has been, in substantial competition with other corporations and with individual partnerships, and firms engaged in the manufacture by distillation of whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages and in the sale thereof in trade and commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia; and in the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid respondent is, and for more than one year last past has been, in substantial competition with other corporations, and with individuals, firms, and partnerships engaged in the business of purchasing, rectifying, blending, and bottling whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages and in the sale thereof in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia; and in the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid respondent is, and for more than one year last past has been, in substantial competition with other corporations and with individuals, firms, and partnerships engaged in the business of purchasing and bottling whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages and selling the same at wholesale in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 2. For a long period of time the word "distillers" when used in connection with the liquor industry and with the products thereof has had and still has a definite significance and meaning to the minds of wholesalers and retailers in such industry and to the ultimate purchasing public, to wit, the manufacturers of such liquors by the process of distillation from mash, wort, or wash, and a substantial portion of the purchasing public prefers to buy spirituous liquors bottled by the actual distillers and manufacturers thereof.

PAR. 3. In the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid, by the use of the word "Distillers" in its corporate name, printed on its stationery and on the labels attached to the bottles in which it sells and ships its said products, and in various other ways, respondent represents to its customers and furnishes them with the means of representing to their vendees, both retailers and the ultimate consuming public, that the said whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages therein contained were by it manufactured through the process of distillation from mash, wort, or wash, when, as a matter of fact, respondent is not a distiller, does not distill the said whiskies, gins, or other spirituous beverages by it so bottled, labeled, sold, and transported, and respondent does not own, operate, or control any place or places where such beverages are manufactured by the process of distillation from mash, wort, or wash.

PAR. 4. There are among the competitors of respondent engaged in the sale of spirituous beverages, as mentioned in paragraph 1 hereof, corporations, firms, partnerships, and individuals who manufacture and distill from mash, wort, or wash, whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages sold by them and who truthfully use the words "distillery," "distilleries," "distillers," or "distilling" as a part of their corporate or trade names and on their stationery, and on the labels of the bottles in which they sell and ship such products. There are also among such competitors corporations, firms, partnerships, and individuals engaged in the business of purchasing, rectifying, blending, and bottling whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages who do not use the words "distilling," "distillery," "distilleries," or "distillers" as a part of their corporate or trade names, nor on their stationery, nor on the labels attached to the bottles in which they sell and ship their said products. There are also among such competitors corporations, firms, partnerships, and individuals engaged in the business of purchasing, bottling, and selling at wholesale whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages who do not use the words "distillery," "distilleries," "distilling," or "distillers" as a part of their corporate names, nor on the labels attached to the bottles in which they sell and ship their said products.

PAR. 5. The representation by respondent, as set forth in paragraph 3 hereof, is calculated to and has the capacity and tendency to and does mislead and deceive dealers and the purchasing public into the belief that the whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages sold by the respondent are manufactured and distilled by it from mash, wort, or wash, and is calculated to and has the capacity and tendency to and does induce dealers and the purchasing public, acting in such belief, to purchase the whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages bottled and sold by the respondent, thereby diverting trade to respondent from its competitors who do not by their corporate names or in any other manner misrepresent that they are manufacturers by distillation from mash, wort, or wash, of whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages, and thereby respondent does substantial injury to substantial competition in interstate commerce.

PAR. 6. The acts and things above alleged to have been done and the false representations alleged to have been made by respondent are to the prejudice of the public and the competitors of respondent and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914.

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

hearing before the Commission on the said complaint and the substituted answer, briefs, and oral arguments of counsel having been waived, and the Commission, having duly considered the same and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent is a corporation organized, existing, and doing business under the laws of the State of Illinois, with its office and principal place of business at 78 West Van Buren Street, in the city of Chicago, in said State. It is now, and for more than one year last past has been, engaged in the business of purchasing and bottling whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages and selling the same at wholesale in constant course of trade and commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia. In the course and conduct of its said business, it causes its said products, when sold, to be transported from its place of business aforesaid into and through various other States of the United States to the purchasers thereof, consisting of wholesalers and retailers, some located within the State of Illinois and some located in other States of the United States and the District of Columbia. In the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid, respondent is now, and for more than one year last past has been, in substantial competition with other corporations and with individuals, partnerships, and firms engaged in the manufacture by distillation of whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages and in the sale thereof in trade and commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia; and in the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid, respondent is, and for more than one year last past has been, in substantial competition with other corporations, and with individuals, firms, and partnerships engaged in the business of purchasing, rectifying, blending, and bottling whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages and in the sale thereof in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia; and in the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid, respondent is, and for more than one year last past has been, in substantial competition with other corporations and with individuals, firms, and partnerships engaged in the business of purchasing and bottling whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages and selling the same at wholesale in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 2. For a long period of time the word "distillers" when used in connection with the liquor industry and with the products thereof, has had, and still has, a definite significance and meaning to the minds of wholesalers and retailers in such industry and to the ultimate purchasing public, to wit: the manufacturers of such liquors by the process of distillation from mash, wort, or wash, and a substantial portion of the purchasing public prefers to buy spirituous liquors bottled by the actual distillers and manufacturers thereof.

PAR. 3. In the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid, by the use of the word "Distillers" in its corporate name, printed on its stationery and on the labels attached to the bottles in which it sells and ships its said products, and in various other ways, respondent represents to its customers, and furnishes them with the means of representing to their vendees, both retailers and the ultimate consuming public, that the said whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages therein contained were by it manufactured through the process of distillation from mash, wort, or wash, when, as a matter of fact, respondent is not a distiller, does not distill the said whiskies, gins, or other spirituous beverages by it so bottled, labeled, sold, and transported, and respondent does not own, operate, or control any place or places where such beverages are manufactured by the process of distillation from mash, wort, or wash.

PAR. 4. There are among the competitors of respondent engaged in the sale of spirituous beverages, as mentioned in paragraph 1 hereof, corporations, firms, partnerships, and individuals who manufacture and distill from mash, wort, or wash whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages sold by them and who truthfully use the words "distillery," "distilleries," "distillers," or "distilling" as a part of their corporate or trade names and on their stationery, and on the labels of the bottles in which they sell and ship such products. There are also among such competitors corporations, firms, partnerships, and individuals engaged in the business of purchasing, rectifying, blending, and bottling whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages who do not use the words "distilling," "distillery," "distilleries," or "distillers" as a part of their corporate or trade names, or on their stationery, or on the labels attached to the bottles in which they sell and ship their said products. There are also among such competitors corporations, firms, partnerships, and individuals engaged in the business of purchasing, bottling, and selling at wholesale whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages who do not use the words "distillery," "distilleries," "distilling," or "distillers" as a part of their corporate names, or on the labels attached to the bottles in which they sell and ship their said products.

Order

PAR. 5. The representation by respondent, as set forth in paragraph 3 hereof, is calculated to, and has the capacity and tendency to, and does, mislead and deceive dealers and the purchasing public into the belief that the whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages sold by the respondent are manufactured and distilled by it from mash, wort, or wash, and is calculated to, and has the capacity and tendency to, and does, induce dealers and the purchasing public, acting in such belief, to purchase the whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages bottled and sold by the respondent, thereby diverting trade to respondent from its competitors who do not by their corporate names, or in any other manner, misrepresent that they are manufacturers by distillation from mash, wort, or wash, of whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages, and thereby respondent does substantial injury to competition in interstate commerce.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondent, Gold Seal Distillers, Inc., are to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce, within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled, "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

It is ordered, That the respondent, Gold Seal Distillers, Inc., its officers, representatives, agents, and employees, in connection with the offering for sale, sale, and distribution of whiskies, gins, or other spirituous beverages, in interstate commerce or in the District of Columbia, do forthwith cease and desist from: other way by word or words of like import, (a) that it is a distiller of whiskies, gins, or other spirituous beverages; or (b) that the said whiskies, gins, or other spirituous beverages were by it manufactured through the process of distillation; or (c) that it owns, operates, or controls a place or places where any such products are by it manufactured by a process of original and continuous distillation from mash, wort, or wash, through continuous closed pipes and vessels until the manufacture thereof is completed, unless and until respondent shall actually own, operate, or control such a place or places.

It is further ordered, That the said respondent within 60 days from and after the date of the service upon it of this order, shall file with the Commission a report or reports in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which it is complying, and has complied, with the order to cease and desist hereinabove set forth.

IN THE MATTER OF VALLEY SPRINGS DISTILLERY, INC.

COMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION
OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 26, 1914

Docket 2478. Complaint, June 28, 1935—Decision, Dec. 3, 1936

Where a corporation engaged as wholesaler and rectifier of distilled spirits, in purchasing, rectifying, blending, and bottling whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages, and in producing gin by process of rectification whereby alcohol, purchased but not produced by it, was by it redistilled over juniper berries and other aromatics, and in selling aforesaid various products to wholesalers and retailers in other States and in the District of Columbia, in substantial competition with those engaged in the manufacture by true distillation of whiskies, gins, and other spirituous liquors from mash, wort, or wash, and in the sale thereof among the various States and in the District of Columbia, and with those engaged in purchasing, rectifying, blending, and bottling whiskies and other spirituous liquors and in selling the same as aforesaid, and including among its said competitors those who, as manufacturers and distillers from mash, wort, or wash of whiskies, etc., sold by them, truthfully use words "distillery," "distilleries," "distillers," or "distilling" as part of their corporate or trade names and on their stationery, catalogues, advertising, and on the labels of the bottles in which they sell and ship such products, and those who, engaged in purchasing, rectifying, blending, bottling and selling such various products, do not use aforesaid words as above set forth—

Represented, through use of word "Distillery" in its corporate name, printed on its stationery, catalogues, advertising, and labels attached to bottles in which it sold and shipped its said products, and by express representation on its letterheads and in various other ways, to its customers and furnished the same with the means of representing to their vendees, both retailers and ultimate consuming public, that it was a distiller and that the whiskies, gins, and other spirituous liquors contained in its bottled products, labeled as above set forth, were by it made through process of distillation from mash, wort, or wash, notwithstanding fact it did not distill said whiskies, gins, and other spirituous liquors thus bottled, labeled, sold, and transported by it, nor own, operate, or control any place or places where such spirituous liquors are made by process of original and continuous distillation from mash, wort, or wash, through continuous closed pipes and vessels, until manufacture is complete, as long definitely understood from word "Distilleries" in the trade and by the ultimate purchasing public, as meaning the place where spirituous liquors are thus made, and it was not a distiller, for the purchase of bottled liquors of which there is a preference on the part of a substantial portion of the purchasing public;

With effect of misleading and deceiving dealers and purchasing public into belief that it was a distiller and that the whiskies, gins, and other spirituous liquors sold by it were by it made or distilled from mash, wort, or wash, as above set forth, and of inducing dealers and purchasing public, acting in such belief, to buy its said whiskies, etc., rectified and bottled

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that Valley Springs Distillery, Inc., hereinafter referred to as respondent, has been and is using unfair methods of competition in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in said act, and it appearing to the said Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint, stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent is a corporation organized, existing, and doing business under the laws of the State of Illinois, with its office and principal place of business in the city of Chicago, in said State. It is now, and for more than one year last past has been, engaged in the business of purchasing, rectifying, blending, and bottling whiskeys, gins, and other spirituous beverages and in the sale thereof in constant course of trade and commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia. In the course and conduct of its said business it causes its said products when sold to be transported from its place of business aforesaid into and through various States of the United States to the purchasers thereof, consisting of wholesalers and retailers, located in other States of the United States and the District of Columbia. In the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid, respondent is now, and for more than one year last past has been, in substantial competition with other corporations and with individuals, partnerships, and firms engaged in the manufacture by true distillation of whiskeys, gins, and other spirituous liquors from mash, wort, or wash, and in the sale thereof in trade and commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia; and in the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid, respondent is, and for more than one year last past has been, in substantial competition with other corporations and with individuals, firms, and partnerships engaged in the business of purchasing, rectifying, blending, and bottling whiskies, gins, and other spirituous liquors and in the sale thereof in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid, respondent has upon its said premises a still which it uses in the production of gin by the process of rectification whereby alcohol purchased but not produced by respondent is redistilled over juniper berries and other aromatics. Such rectification of alcoholic spirits does not make or constitute respondent a distiller as defined by Section 3247 of the Revised Statutes regulating Internal Revenue, nor as commonly understood by the public or the liquor industry. For a long period of time the word "Distillery" when used in connection with the liquor industry and with the products thereof has had and still has a definite significance and meaning to the minds of wholesalers and retailers in such industry and to the ultimate purchasing public, to wit, a place where spirituous liquors are manufactured by a process of original distillation from mash, wort, or wash, through continuous closed pipes and vessels until the manufacture thereof is complete, and a substantial portion of the purchasing public prefers to buy spirituous liquors bottled and prepared by distillers.

PAR. 3. In the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid, by the use of the word "Distillery" in its corporate name, printed on its stationery, catalogs, advertising, and labels attached to the bottles in which it sells and ships its said products and by express representation on its letterheads that it is a distiller, and in various other ways, respondent represents to its customers and furnishes them with the means of representing to their vendees, both retailers and the ultimate consuming public, that it is a distiller and that the said whiskies, gins, and other spirituous liquors therein contained were by it manufactured through the process of distillation from mash, wort, or wash, when, as a matter of fact, respondent is not a distiller, does not distill the said whiskies, gins, and other spirituous liquors by it so bottled, labeled, sold, and transported, and merely by the use of a still operated by it as aforesaid in the rectification of alcoholic spirits by redistillation over juniper berries and other aromatics does not distill the whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages by it so bottled, labeled, sold, and transported in the sense in which the word "distilled" is commonly accepted and understood by those engaged in the liquor trade and by the public. Respondent does not own, operate, or control any place or places where spirituous liquors are manufactured by a process of original and continuous distillation from mash, wort, or wash.

PAR. 4. There are among the competitors of respondent engaged in the sale of spirituous beverages, as mentioned in paragraph 1 hereof, corporations, firms, partnerships, and individuals who manufacture and distill from mash, wort, or wash, whiskies, gins, and other spirituous liquors sold by them and who truthfully use the words "distillery," "distilleries," "distillers," or "distilling" as a part of their corporate or trade names and on their stationery, catalogs, advertising, and on the labels of the bottles in which they sell and ship such products. There are also among such competitors corporations, firms, partnerships, and individuals engaged in the business of purchasing, rectifying, blending, bottling, and selling whiskies, gins, and other spirituous liquors who do not use the words "distillery," "distilling," or "distillers" as a part of their corporate or trade names, nor on their stationery, catalogs, advertising, nor on the labels attached to the bottles in which they sell and ship their said products.

PAR. 5. The representations by respondent, as set forth in paragraph 3 hereof, are calculated to and have a capacity and tendency to and do mislead and deceive dealers and the purchasing public into the beliefs that respondent is a distiller and that the whiskies, gins, and other spirituous liquors sold by respondent are manufactured or distilled by it from mash, wort, or wash by one continuous process and are calculated to and have the capacity and tendency to and do induce dealers and the purchasing public, acting in such beliefs, to purchase the whiskies, gins, and other spirituous liquors rectified and bottled by the respondent, thereby diverting trade to respondent from its competitors who do not by their corporate or trade names or in any other manner misrepresent that they are distillers, and thereby respondent does substantial injury to substantial competition in interstate commerce.

PAR. 6. The acts and things above alleged to have been done and the false representations alleged to have been made by respondent are to the prejudice of the public and the competitors of respondent and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914.

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled, "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, on June 28, 1935, issued and served its complaint in this proceeding upon respondent, Valley Springs Distillery, Inc., charging it with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of the provisions of said act. After the issuance of said complaint, and the filing of the respondent's answer, the Commission, by order entered herein, granted respondent's motion for permission to withdraw said answer and to substitute therefor an answer admitting all the material allegations of the complaint to be true, and waiving the taking of further evidence and all other intervening procedure, which substitute answer was duly filed in the office of the Commission. Thereafter, this proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on the said complaint and the substituted answer, briefs and oral arguments of counsel having been waived, and the Commission, having duly considered the same and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent is a corporation organized, existing, and doing business under the laws of the State of Illinois, with its office and principal place of business at 3512-26 Carroll Avenue, in the city of Chicago, in said State. It is now, and for more than one year last past has been, engaged in business under a whiskey permit from the United States Government, which permit is designated "R-151", as a wholesaler and rectifier of distilled spirits, purchasing, rectifying, blending, and bottling whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages and in the sale thereof in constant course of trade and commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia. In the course and conduct of its said business it causes its said products when sold to be transported from its place of business aforesaid into and through various States of the United States to the purchasers thereof, consisting of wholesalers and retailers, located in other States of the United States and in the District of Columbia. In the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid, respondent is now, and for more than one year last past has been, in substantial competition with other corporations and with individuals, partnerships, and firms engaged in the manufacture by true distillation of whiskies, gins, and other spirituous liquors from mash, wort, or wash, and in the sale thereof in trade and commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia; and in the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid, respondent is, and for more than one year last past has been, in substantial competition with other corporations and with individuals, firms, and partnerships engaged in the business of purchasing, rectifying, blending, and bottling whiskies, gins, and other spirituous liquors and in the sale thereof in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid, respondent has upon its said premises a still which it uses in the production of gin by the process of rectification, whereby alcohol purchased, but not produced, by respondent is redistilled over juniper berries and other aromatics. Such rectification of alcoholic spirits does not make or constitute respondent a distiller as defined by Section 3247 of the Revised Statutes regulating Internal Revenue, nor as commonly understood by the public or the liquor industry. For a long period of time the word "Distillery," when used in connection with the liquor industry and with the products thereof, has had, and still has, a definite significance and meaning to the minds of wholesalers and retailers in such industry and to the ultimate purchasing public, to wit: a place where spirituous liquors are manufactured by a process of original distillation from mash, wort, or wash, through continuous closed pipes and vessels until the manufacture thereof is complete, and a substantial portion of the purchasing public prefers to buy spirituous liquors bottled and prepared by distillers.

PAR. 3. In the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid, by the use of the word "Distillery" in its corporate name, printed on its stationery, catalogs, advertising, and labels attached to the bottles in which it sells and ships its said products, and by express representation on its letterheads that it is a distiller, and in various other ways, respondent represents to its customers, and furnishes them with the means of representing to their vendees, both retailers and the ultimate consuming public, that it is a distiller and that the said whiskies, gins, and other spirituous liquors therein contained were by it manufactured through the process of distillation from mash, wort, or wash, when, as a matter of fact, respondent is not a distiller, does not distill the said whiskies, gins, and other spirituous liquors by it so bottled, labeled, sold, and transported, and merely by the use of a still operated by it as aforesaid in the rectification of alcoholic spirits by redistillation over juniper berries and other aromatics does not distill the whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages by it so bottled, labeled, sold, and transported in the sense in which the word "distilled" is commonly accepted and understood by those engaged in the liquor trade and by the public. Respondent does not own, operate or control any place or places where spirituous liquors are manufactured by a process of original and continuous distillation from mash, wort, or wash.

PAR. 5. The representations by respondent, as set forth in paragraph 3 hereof, are calculated to, and have a capacity and tendency to, and do, mislead and deceive dealers and the purchasing public into the beliefs that respondent is a distiller and that the whiskies, gins, and other spirituous liquors sold by respondent are manufactured or distilled by it from mash, wort, or wash by one continuous process and are calculated to, and have the capacity and tendency to, and do, induce dealers and the purchasing public, acting in such beliefs, to purchase the whiskies, gins, and other spirituous liquors rectified and bottled by the respondent, thereby diverting trade to respondent from its competitors who do not by their corporate or trade names, or in any other manner, misrepresent that they are distillers, and thereby respondent does substantial injury to substantial competition in interstate commerce.

PAR. 6. Much of the "distilled" gin on the market is produced by companies who do distill their own alcohol and produce gin therefrom by redistillation in exactly the same manner that respondent produces its gins—not under any distillery permit, but under a rectifying permit. These distiller-rectifiers place on their gin labels: "Distilled by ----- Distillers". There are distilleries which produce gin by the same process in the distillery by one continuous process and the tax is paid at the completion of the process, that is, after the alcohol becomes gin, so that although the final redistillation process is the same as that of respondent, yet it is all done in a distillery and the distiller has control over the process from the mash to the gin. Thus, it includes original or primary distillation through closed pipes and vessels, as well as the final process of redistillation over the juniper berries.

Section 5 of the Federal Alcohol Administration Act, approved August 29, 1935, dealing with unfair competition and unlawful practices in the industry, provides that it shall be unlawful to sell in bottles any distilled spirits in interstate or foreign commerce unless they are bottled, packaged, and labeled in conformity with such regulations, to be prescribed by the Administrator, as will prohibit deception of the consumer with respect to such products.

Existing regulations under this act define "distilled gin" as the distillate by original distillation or redistillation of neutral spirits with aromatics.

The regulations further provide that on labels of domestic distilled spirits bottled by or for the actual distiller thereof, there shall be stated the words "distilled by" and immediately thereafter the name of such distiller and the place where distilled.

Because of existing regulations, under the Federal Alcohol Administration Act approved August 29, 1935 (49 Stat. 977), which regulations became effective August 15, 1936, providing that rectifiers who redistill purchased alcohol over juniper berries and other aromatics may call such resulting product "distilled gin", and requiring that the labels state who distilled it, the Commission has excepted gins produced by respondent by redistillation of alcohol over juniper berries and other aromatics from the prohibitions of its order.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondent, Valley Springs Distillery, Inc., are to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce, within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

This proceeding having been heard by the Federal Trade Commission upon the complaint of the Commission and the answer filed herein, dated October 24, 1936, by respondent, admitting all the material allegations of the complaint to be true and waiving the taking of further evidence and all other intervening procedure, and the Commission having made its findings as to the facts and its conclusion that said respondent has violated the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

It is ordered, That the respondent, Valley Springs Distillery, Inc., its officers, representatives, agents, and employees, in connection with the offering for sale, sale, and distribution of whiskies, gins, or other spirituous beverages, in interstate commerce or in the District of Columbia (except gins produced by it through a process of rectification whereby alcohols purchased, but not produced, by respondent are redistilled over juniper berries and other aromatics), do forthwith cease and desist from:

Representing, through the use of the word "Distillery" in its corporate name, on its stationery, advertising, or on the labels attached to the bottles in which it sells and ships said products, or in any other way by word or words of like import, (a) that it is a distiller of whiskies, gins, or other spirituous beverages; or (b) that the said whiskies, gins, or other spirituous beverages were by it manufactured through the process of distillation; or (c) that it owns, operates, or controls a place or places where any such products are by it manufactured by a process of original and continuous distillation from mash, wort, or wash, through continuous closed pipes and vessels until the manufacture thereof is completed, unless and until respondent shall actually own, operate, or control such a place or places.

It is further ordered, That the said respondent within 60 days from and after the date of the service upon it of this order, shall file with the Commission a report or reports in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which it is complying, and has complied, with the order to cease and desist hereinabove set forth.

MEMORANDUM

UNITED DISTILLERS & WINERS, INC. (D. 2486). Complaint, July 1, 1935. The Commission, as of the same date, made findings and order which, excepting the use of the word "Distillery" in the Valley Springs case, supra, and word "Distillers" by instant respondent, with principal place of business in Detroit, were substantially similar to those in the Valley Springs case; testimony having been taken before Mr. John L. Hornor, trial examiner, and Commission having been represented in the instant matter by Mr. PGad B. Morehouse.

IN THE MATTER OF CAREY SALT COMPANY¹

COMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION
OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 26, 1914

Docket 2516. Complaint, Aug. 14, 1935—Decision, Dec. 3, 1936

Where a corporation engaged in the production and sale of a product which consisted of salt, treated with pyroligneous liquor or acid, secured through destructive distillation of wood in the absence of air, with the addition of pepper, saltpeter, and sugar, and of caramel or burnt sugar, to produce the honey-brown color associated by the trade and public with products subjected to or impregnated or treated with natural wood smoke—

- (a) Described said product as "Smoke Salt," and featured said designation on the labels of the containers in which the same was offered, distributed, and sold, and repeatedly made use thereof in the printed directions for use on one side of the label, and likewise made use thereof in advertising its said product in a booklet distributed among purchasers and prospective purchasers; and
- (b) Represented, in advertising its said product through radio broadcasting and in periodicals, newspapers, booklets, and pamphlets, that its said so-called "Smoke Salt" cured and smoke-flavored meat in one operation, and that it was "a thousand times better than the old smokehouse," and that meat treated with it acquired therefrom the same taste and other properties or effects as it acquired from treatment with salt and subsequent exposure to the smoke from burning wood during process and course of combustion, through such statements as "* * * perfect improved meat cure that takes all guesswork out of home meat-curing," "Old-timers' in butchering and curing meats at home amazed!", "Cures and Smoke-Flavors Meat in one Operation . . . Quicker . . . Easier . . . With Never-Failing, Uniform Results!", "* * * a great step forward in home-curing methods * * * Reduces the whole curing process * * * into one single operation * * *", "experts, familiar with used meat-curing methods, * * * amazed at the extra fine flavor," "* * * made of pure * * * meat salt * * * combined with well-balanced sugar-cure—and flawless, doubly refined and condensed wood smoke";

Notwithstanding fact that its said "Smoke Salt" had not been, as signified to consuming public from use of such a word, smoked with natural wood smoke, nor subjected directly or at all to such smoke, and had not derived from such smoke and did not have either its qualities and properties

¹Through subsequent Commission action, effective date for report of compliance with order in the instant matter was extended until such time as the Commission rendered its final decisions in Smoke Salt Products Co., et al., Docket 2783, and Pennsylvania Salt Manufacturing Co., et al., Docket 2784, subject, however, to amendments or revocation at any time if such action appeared warranted in the discretion of the Commission, and through later Commission action relating to its aforesaid stay order, it was directed that the matter "remain in fieri without prejudice to the right of the Commission forthwith to enter such final order as seems just at or after the Commission's final decision in the matter" of the aforesaid two cases.

Williams, Martindell & Carey, of Hutchinson, Kans., for respondent.

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that Carey Salt Company has been and is using unfair methods of competition in commerce as "commerce" is defined in said act, and it appearing to said Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint stating its charge in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent, Carey Salt Company, is now and for several years last past has been a corporation organized, existing, and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Kansas, with its principal office and place of business at Hutchinson in said State.

It has been and is engaged in the production of salt and its sale in commerce among and between the State of Kansas and the various other States of the United States and the District of Columbia. It causes its product, when sold, to be transported from its said place of business in the State of Kansas to purchasers located in the various other States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

In the course and conduct of such business respondent, Carey Salt Company, has been and is engaged in competition with individuals, partnerships, and corporations offering for sale and selling salt of any kind in interstate commerce.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of its business, as described in paragraph 1 hereof, it has been and is the practice of respondent, Carey Salt Company, to offer for sale and sell a product which it has designated and described, and continues to designate and describe, as "Smoke-Salt."

The label on the container in which such product is sold carries the legend consisting in part of the words "Carey-Ized," beneath which appears the word "Salt" under which are the words "Smoke-Salt," all in large and conspicuous letters. On one side of the label there are printed directions wherein the words "Smoke-Salt" repeatedly appear.

Respondent has advertised its product in the booklet which describes it throughout as "Smoke-Salt." This booklet it has caused to be distributed in the various States of the United States among purchasers and prospective purchasers. Respondent also has advertised its product by means of radio broadcasting and in magazines, newspapers, booklets, pamphlets, and leaflets. In such advertisements it has representations and statements such as the following:

New Carey-Ized smoke-salt great boon to farmers.

Famous Carey laboratories perfect improved meat cure that takes all guess work out of home meat-curing.

A thousand times better than the old smokehouse.

Our hams are never under cured or too smoky.

"Old-timers" in butchering and curing meats at home amazed!

Cures and Smoke-Flavors Meat in One Operation * * * Quicker * * * Easier * * * With Never-Failing, Uniform Results!

Already thousands who thought they were satisfied with older methods are turning to this new and vastly better way! Proving for themselves that "Carey-ized" Smoke-Salt is a great step forward in home-curing methods. For it gives better quality meats that stay good longer. Reduces the whole curing process—salting, sugar-curing and smoke-flavoring—into one single operation * * * and then does the complete job quicker, easier, more thoroughly than ever before.

Yes, the experts, familiar with usual meat-curing methods, were frankly amazed at the extra fine flavor "Carey-ized" Smoke Salt gives hams and bacon. Yet there's a real reason for better flavor—surer results. "Carey-ized" Smoke-Salt is made of pure, Carey meat salt, of just the right grain and strength, combined with a well-balanced sugar-cure—and flawless, doubly refined and condensed wood smoke.

Carey-ized Smoke-Salt ends the drudgery, expense and varying results of the old smoke-house method.

In truth and in fact the word "Smoked" and the word "Smoke" used in connection with salt offered for sale or sold for curing, preserving, smoking or flavoring meats have for many years signified and meant to dealers wholesale and retail and the consuming public, and now signify and mean to them, particularly that portion thereof engaged or interested in the curing of meats, that the salt so described or designated has been subjected to the action and effect of, or to impregnation or treatment with, the smoke of burning wood during its process of combustion sufficiently to acquire from such source alone all of its smoke properties or smoke effects for use in curing, preserving, smoking, or flavoring meats.

The product which respondent sells to the public described and designated as "Carey-ized Smoke-Salt" or as "Smoke-Salt" has not been and is not smoked salt or smoke salt as understood by the consuming public. Such product has not been and is not subjected to the action and effect of, or impregnated or treated with, the smoke of burning wood during its process of combustion sufficiently to acquire from such source alone its smoke effects or smoke properties, or at all. It consists of salt, sugar, saltpeter, pepper red and black, and a so-called condensed smoke, such condensed smoke being pyroligneous acid or a concentrate thereof, produced from or by the destructive distillation of wood.

PAR. 3. There have been for many years last past and now are individuals, partnerships, and corporations offering for sale and selling salt of various kinds in interstate commerce, including smoke salt, truthfully described and designated.

PAR. 4. The practices of respondent, as described in paragraph 2 hereof, have had and have the capacity and tendency to mislead and deceive, and have misled and deceived, and do mislead and deceive dealers, wholesale and retail, and the consuming public into the belief that respondent's said product has been treated or impregnated with, or subjected to the action and effect of the smoke of burning wood during its process of combustion sufficiently to acquire from such source alone all of its smoke effects and properties, and into the purchase of respondent's said product in reliance upon such erroneous belief.

PAR. 5. The above and foregoing practices of respondent have had and have the capacity and tendency to divert, have diverted and do divert trade to respondent from competitors offering for sale or selling in interstate commerce white salt or salt smoked in accordance with the significance and meaning of the words "Smoke" or "Smoked" used in connection with salt for curing, preserving, smoking or flavoring meats as described in paragraph 2 hereof.

PAR. 6. The above and foregoing practices of respondent have been and are all to the prejudice of the public and respondent's competitors and in violation of the provisions of Section 5 of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission on the 13th day of November 1934, issued and thereafter caused to be served upon respondent, Carey Salt Company, its complaint in this proceeding, charging it with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of the provisions of said act. After the issuance of said complaint and the filing of respondent's answer thereto, a stipulation subject to the approval of the Federal Trade Commission, and which hereby is approved, was introduced by James M. Brinson, counsel for the Commission and W. D. P. Carey of Williams, Martindell and Carey, of Hutchinson, Kans., counsel for the respondent, before Robert S. Hall, an examiner theretofore duly designated by it whereby and wherein there were adopted and accepted as testimony and other evidence for the purpose of this proceeding all testimony taken and evidence received of a general character in the matters of Morton Salt Company, Docket 2150, Jefferson Island Salt Company, Docket 2151, Myles Salt Company, Docket 2152 and Avery Salt Company, Docket 2248. This stipulation, testimony and evidence were reduced to writing and filed in the office of the Commission. Thereafter the proceeding regularly came on the final hearing before the Commission on the said complaint, the answer thereto, the testimony and evidence admitted by the stipulation aforesaid, briefs in support of the complaint and in opposition thereto, and the oral arguments of counsel having been waived, and the Commission having duly considered the same and being now fully advised in the premises finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public and makes this its report stating its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom.

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent, Carey Salt Company, is now and for several years last past has been a corporation organized, existing, and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Kansas, with its principal office and place of business at Hutchinson in said State.

It has been and is engaged in the production of salt and its sale in commerce among and between the State of Kansas and the various other States of the United States and the District of Columbia. It causes its product, when sold, to be transported from its said place of business in the State of Kansas to purchasers located in the various other States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

In the course and conduct of such business respondent, Carey Salt Company, has been and is engaged in substantial competition with individuals, partnerships, and corporations offering for sale and selling salt of any kind in interstate commerce.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of its business, as described in paragraph 1 hereof, it has been and is the practice of respondent, Carey Salt Company, to offer for sale and sell to retail dealers, a product which it has designated and described, and continues to designate and describe, as "Smoke Salt."

The label on the container in which such product is offered for sale, distributed and sold, carries the legend consisting in part of the words "Carey-Ized" beneath which appears the word "Salt" under which are the words "Smoke Salt," all in large and conspicuous letters. On one side of the label there are printed directions wherein the words "Smoke Salt" repeatedly appear.

Respondent has advertised its product in a booklet which describes it throughout as "Smoke Salt." This booklet it has caused to be distributed in the various States of the United States among purchasers and prospective purchasers. Respondent also has advertised its product by means of radio broadcasting and in magazines, newspapers, booklets, pamphlets, and leaflets. In such advertisements it has representations and statements such as the following:

New Carey-Ized smoke-salt great boon to farmers.

Famous Carey laboratories perfect improved meat cure that takes all guess-work out of home meat-curing.

Already thousands who thought they were satisfied with older methods are turning to this new and vastly better way! Proving for themselves that "Carey-ized" Smoke-Salt is a great step forward in home-curing methods. For it gives better quality meats that stay good longer. Reduces the whole curing process—salting, sugar-curing and smoke-flavoring—into one single operation . . . and then does the complete job quicker, easier, more thoroughly than ever before.

Findings

24 F. T. C.

Yes, the experts, familiar with usual meat-curing methods, were frankly amazed at the extra fine flavor "Carey-ized" Smoke Salt gives hams and bacon. Yet there's a real reason for better flavor—surer results. "Carey-ized" Smoke-Salt is made of pure, Carey meat salt, of just the right grain and strength, combined with a well-balanced sugar-cure—and flawless, doubly refined and condensed wood smoke.

Carey-ized Smoke Salt ends the drudgery, expense and varying results of the old smoke-house method.

In truth and in fact, wood smoke, as commonly understood by the public is the product or result of the incomplete or imperfect combustion of wood, in the presence of air. The word "Smoke," and the word "Smoked" used in connection with salt offered for sale, distributed, or sold, for curing, preserving, smoking, or flavoring meats, or any other word or words used in such connection implying smoke, or use of smoke, have, for a considerable period of time signified and meant and now signify and mean, to the consuming public, that the product to which the word "Smoke," or "Smoked" or any word, or words, implying smoke or use of smoke is applied, has been or is smoked with natural wood smoke, that is, subjected directly to the action and effect of, or to treatment or impregnation with smoke produced by burning wood, during the process and course of its combustion, sufficiently to acquire from such source alone smoke or smoke effects for use in curing, preserving, smoking, or flavoring meats.

The product which respondent offers for sale, distributes and sells to retail dealers and through them to their customers the consuming public, described and designated as "Smoke Salt" has not been and is not smoked with natural wood smoke. It has not been and is not subjected directly or at all to such smoke, that is, smoke produced by burning wood during the process and course of its combustion. It has not acquired or derived from such smoke, and has not had and does not have, either its qualities and properties for, or its efficacy in, curing, preserving, smoking, or flavoring meats, as in the conventional smoke house, or as in the operation or course of similar or equivalent processes. It can do neither the complete job of curing and smoking meats, nor the curing and smoking of meats in one operation. The product of respondent consists of salt, treated with a liquid known as pyroligneous liquor or acid, to which are added pepper, saltpeter, sugar, and caramel or burnt sugar.

Pyroligneous liquor or acid is manufactured by a process known and described as the destructive distillation of wood. This process requires the absence of air for its efficiency in recovery of the maximum amount of the constituents or products of the wood. As a result of this necessity, air is excluded from the retort in which the decomposition of the wood is accomplished by the external application of heat. The only opening in the retort when the process is in operation is that leading into the condensing apparatus. It affords no entrance for air but, on the contrary, provides an exit through which air present in the retort and in the wood is expelled as soon as the vapors or fumes, and other material or products in the wood commence their passage into the condensing apparatus. This absence of air and consequently of combustion effects in the course of the destructive distillation recovery of all condensible material resulting from decomposition of the wood. The distillate so produced, pyroligneous liquor, contains therefore many substances which would be destroyed in the course of combustion or incomplete or imperfect combustion of wood, or would escape into the atmosphere, and which have not been discovered or identified in the smoke produced by burning wood in the process and course of its combustion. The application of respondent's product, treated with such pyroligneous liquor, to meats, therefore, necessarily subjects them to an entirely different treatment under different atmospheric and other conditions than does the conventional smokehouse method, or equivalent processes in which natural wood smoke is employed.

A product exposed to the dense natural wood smoke of the smokehouse or its equivalent is subjected to conditions which the application of pyroligneous liquor or acid does not and cannot supply, and salt treated with such liquor or acid also fails to supply such conditions. Pyroligneous liquor or acid subjects the product with which it is treated and such product subjects meats to which it is applied to the action and effect of numerous substances never found in smoke and which do not and cannot serve as a substitute for the conditions and effects of natural wood smoke operating in the smokehouse or its equivalent processes. This fact is emphasized by the practice of respondent, in adding caramel or burnt sugar, as an ingredient, to its product, in order to produce the honey brown color which the trade and public associates with products subjected to or impregnated or treated with the said natural wood smoke. In other words, although using the product of destructive distillation, which it designates as condensed smoke, for the treatment of its salt, it is necessary for respondent to resort to caramel or burnt sugar as a coloring agent, in order to simulate the appearance of a product actually treated with natural wood smoke and thereby to produce a merchantable commodity, which can, in appearance, satisfy the expectations of the trade and consuming public.

PAR. 3. There are now and for several years last past have been individuals, partnerships, and corporations engaged in substantial competition with respondent in the sale of salt truthfully represented and described, in interstate commerce, for the purpose, among others, of curing and preserving meats.

PAR. 4. The above and foregoing practices of respondent, described in paragraph 2 hereof have had and have and each of them has had and has the capacity and tendency to mislead and deceive retail dealers into the belief that the so-called smoke salt has been and is a product subjected directly to the action and effect of, or impregnated or treated with, the smoke of burning wood during the process or course of its combustion and that such product can do the complete job of curing and smoking meat in one operation and into the purchase of such product in reliance on such erroneous belief.

The practices aforesaid have placed and do place in the hands of retail dealers to whom respondent sells its product the means whereby they have been and are enabled to mislead and deceive, have misled and deceived, and do mislead and deceive, the consuming public into the belief that the product of respondent has been smoked with natural wood smoke as described in paragraph 2 hereof, and that application and use of such product will do the complete job of curing and smoking meats in one operation and into the purchase of such product in reliance upon such erroneous belief.

The aforesaid practices of respondent have had and have and each of them has had and has the capacity and tendency to divert and each of them has diverted and does divert trade to respondent from competitors mentioned in paragraph 3 hereof. As a result of such practices, substantial injury has been and is being done to such competitors.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondent, Carey Salt Company, are to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its power and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

This proceeding having been heard by the Federal Trade Commission upon the complaint of the Commission, the answer of the respondent, a stipulation as to certain facts and as to the testimony and evidence before Robert S. Hall, Examiner of the Federal Trade Commission theretofore duly designated by it for such purpose, in support of the allegations of said complaint and in opposition thereto, briefs filed herein, by James M. Brinson, counsel for the Commission, and by William D. P. Carey of Williams, Martindell and Carey of Hutchinson, Kans., counsel for respondent, oral arguments having been waived by the said counsel for the Commission and respondent, and the Commission having made its report stating its findings as to the facts and its conclusion that said respondent has violated the provisions of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

It is ordered, That the respondent, Carey Salt Company, its officers, representatives, agents, and employees in connections with the offering for sale, sale and distribution of its salt in interstate commerce or in the District of Columbia, do forthwith cease and desist from:

(1) Using the word "smoke," or any other word or words signifying smoke or implying use of smoke, to designate or describe salt offered for sale, or sold, for curing, preserving, smoking, or flavoring meats, unless the salt so described or designated has been or is directly subjected to the action and effect of the smoke from burning wood during the process and course of its combustion sufficiently to acquire from such source alone all of its smoke or smoke effects for use in curing, preserving, smoking, or flavoring meats.

(2) Representing that its so called smoke salt cures and smoke-flavors meat in one operation or that it cures and smokes meat at all or that treatment of meat with its said product is a thousand times better than the old smoke house or as good or that meat by treatment with such product acquires therefrom the same taste or flavor or other properties or effects, as meat acquires from treatment with salt and subsequent exposure to the smoke from burning wood during the process and course of its combustion.

It is further ordered, That respondent, Carey Salt Company, shall file within 60 days from and after the service of this order a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form of its compliance herewith.

IN THE MATTER OF
 GEORGE LANDON AND M. M. WARNER, TRADING AS LANDON & WARNER

COMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION
 OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 26, 1914

Docket 2701. Complaint, Jan. 31, 1936—Decision, Dec. 4, 1936

Where two partners engaged in the offer, sale, and distribution of the so-called "Director" elastic fabricated belt for use as an abdominal support and in the reduction of surplus fat in that region; in advertising the same in periodicals and newspapers of general circulation among the States, and through published descriptive letters, circulars, booklets, and other printed matter, including testimonial reproductions—

- (a) Falsely represented that said belt, worn, provided a gentle changing pressure or massage-like action which reduced the wearer's waistline, and that wearing thereof brought about results formerly obtained by massage and exercise, with result that excess fatty tissues in said region were caused to disappear, and that, through use thereof, the wearer's waistline would be permanently reduced, and that it provided and constituted a safe and effective remedy and method of treatment of abdominal obesity and the reduction of weight; and
- (b) Falsely represented that the use thereof made the wearer feel fifteen years younger, and eliminated tired bloated feeling after meals and relieved shortness of breath and restored the user's vigor, and that use thereof would cure constipation and increase elimination in a normal way without the use of harsh, irritating cathartics;

With effect of confusing, misleading, and deceiving members of the public, through such false and, generally, inaccurate, unfounded or greatly exaggerated representations, into the erroneous belief that use of their said belt would reduce excess fat around the abdomen and bring about the beneficial results to the wearer stated and implied by their said advertisements and literature, and with tendency and capacity to induce members of the public to buy and use such belt because of the erroneous beliefs thus engendered, and thereby to divert trade to them from competitors engaged in the sale and distribution in commerce of devices and belts designed, sold, and used for the same or similar purposes as their said belt, and who do not, by false and misleading representations or advertising, induce purchasers and consumers to buy or use such competitors' products:

Held, That such acts and practices were to the prejudice of the public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition.

COMPLAINT

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondents, George Landon and M. M. Warner, above named, are the sole partners of a copartnership organized, existing, and operating under the name and style of Landon and Warner, with its principal office and place of business located at 360 North Michigan Avenue, in the city of Chicago, in the State of Illinois. Respondents, trading as said copartnership, are now, and have been for more than five years last past, engaged in the business of offering for sale, selling, and distributing an elastic fabricated belt, known and designated as the "Director" belt, to ultimate consumers located in the several States of the United States and the District of Columbia. Said belt is offered for sale, sold, and distributed for use as an abdominal support, to provide a means of massaging the abdominal area of the wearer, for use in the reduction of surplus fat around the abdomen and for the relief of obesity in that region.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of their said business, respondents cause their said "Director" belt, when so sold, to be transported from their place of business in the city of Chicago, State of Illinois, to, into, and through States of the United States other than the State of Illinois, including the District of Columbia, to the various members of the consuming public to whom they are or have been sold, who are located in the different States of the United States. Respondents usually sell and distribute their said product directly to members of the purchasing public by and through the use of the United States mails.

PAR. 3. That during the time above mentioned, other individuals, firms, and corporations in various States of the United States are, and have been, engaged in the sale and distribution in interstate commerce of medicines, preparations, belts, and devices designed, intended, and used for the same general purpose as respondents' said "Director" belt, as above described, and also medicines, preparations, devices, and belts designed, intended and used for the treatment of the various bodily ailments that accompany or produce the condition of obesity for which respondents' product is advertised as a remedy, as hereinafter shown, and such other individuals, firms, and corporations have caused and do now cause their said medicines, preparations, devices, and belts, when sold by them, to be transported from the various States of the United States in which said products are manufactured or held for distribution to, into, and through States other than the State of the origin of the shipment thereof. That said respondents have been, during the aforesaid time, in competition in interstate commerce in the offering for sale, sale, and distribution of the said "Director" belt with such other individuals, firms, and corporations above described. That said competing products are sold by such other individuals, firms, and corporations, through the medium of the United States mails and otherwise directly to the consumers, and also at wholesale to retail outlets of various kinds for resale to the consumer.

PAR. 4. That respondents in advertising their said elastic fabricated belt designated as the "Director" belt, have and do cause advertisements, descriptive of the product and its purported uses, to be inserted in various magazines, newspapers, and periodicals having general circulation between and among various States of the United States, and further publish and circulate or cause to be published and circulated in aid of the sale of said product certain descriptive letters, circulars, booklets, and other literature which are usually transmitted to purchasers or prospective purchasers through the United States mails. That said advertisements, letters, circulars, booklets, and other literature so circulated in the several States by the respondent to customers and prospective customers represent and imply:

That said elastic fabricated belt, known and designated as the "Director" belt, as a result of being worn and used as directed and without the use of drugs and without dieting, reduces and has the capacity to reduce the measure of the waistline of the wearer thereof from four to six inches or some greater amount up to eleven inches; that by the faithful use of said "Director" belt practically all adipose tissue can surely be eliminated; that the elastic action of said "Director" belt, when worn, causes a gentle changing pressure on the abdomen, bringing results formerly obtained only by regular massage and exercise; that the use of said belt makes the wearer thereof feel 15 years younger and eliminates a tired and bloated feeling after meals; that the use of said belt helps to relieve shortness of breath, restores the vigor of the user, and makes him look years younger the minute he starts to wear it; that the use of said belt breaks the constipation habit, cures constipation, and increases the elimination and regularity in a normal way without the use of harsh, irritating cathartics; that the use of said belt adds years to the wearer's life; that the use of said belt reduces the weight of the wearer, eliminates excess fat around the abdomen, and corrects or eliminates obesity in said region; that the use of said belt constitutes a remedy for, and a safe, proper, and efficacious method of treatment for abdominal obesity; and other representations of like import.

PAR. 5. That a sample of an advertisement caused by respondents to be inserted in a magazine of general circulation between and among the several States is as follows:

(Pictorial representation of a man with an arrow pointing to the abdomen)

REDUCE 4 to 6 inches without drugs without dieting or your money Refunded

"I wore the Director Belt and reduced my waistline from 42 to 33 inches. Practically all adipose tissue can surely be eliminated by its faithful use. I have recommended it to many of my patients."

(Signed) R. A. LOWELL,
Physician and Surgeon.

HOW DIRECTOR WORKS

Director is fitted to your individual measure without laces, hooks or buttons. Its elastic action causes a gentle changing pressure on the abdomen bringing results formerly obtained only by regular massage and exercise. Now all you have to do is slip on Director and watch results.

IMPROVE YOUR APPEARANCE

This remarkable belt produces an instant improvement in your appearance the moment you put it on. Note how much better your clothes fit and look without a heavy waistline to pull them out of shape.

RESTORE YOUR VIGOR

"I received my belt last Monday," writes S. L. Brown, Trenton, N. J. "I feel 15 years younger; no more tired and bloated feeling after meals."

Director puts snap in your step, helps to relieve "shortness of breath," restores your vigor. You look and feel years younger the moment you start to wear a Director.

BREAK CONSTIPATION HABIT

"I was 41 inches around the waist—now down to 37½—feel better—constipation gone—and know the belt has added years to my life." D. W. Bilderback, Wichita, Kans.

Loose, fallen abdominal muscles go back where they belong. The gentle changing action of Director increases elimination and regularity in a normal way without the use of harsh, irritating cathartics.

PAR. 6. That in truth and in fact: Respondents' said elastic fabricated belt, known as the "Director" belt, when worn and used as directed, does not, and will not, reduce the measure of the waistline of the wearer from four to six inches, or some greater amount up to eleven inches without the use of drugs and without dieting; the faithful use of said "Director" belt will not eliminate nor has it ever eliminated practically all adipose tissue; the elastic action of said belt does not cause a gentle changing pressure on the abdomen bringing results formerly obtained only by regular massage and exercise; the use of said belt does not make the wearer feel 15 years younger or eliminate a tired and bloated feeling after meals; the use of said belt does not help to relieve shortness of breath nor does it restore the vigor of the user or make him look years younger the minute he starts to wear it; the use of said belt does not break the constipation habit, cure constipation, or increase elimination and regularity in a normal way without the use of harsh, irritating cathartics; the use of said belt does not add years to the wearer's life; the use of said belt does not reduce the weight of the wearer, eliminate excess fat around the abdomen, or cure or alleviate obesity in that region; the use of said belt is not a remedy for, or a safe, proper or efficacious method of treatment for abdominal obesity. All the statements, representations, and implications set forth in paragraph 4 above are either wholly unfounded in fact or greatly exaggerated, or wholly inaccurate.

PAR. 7. That the representations of respondents above set forth and made as aforesaid, have had, and do have the tendency and capacity to and do confuse, mislead, and deceive members of the public into the belief that the use of respondents' said elastic fabricated belt does and will reduce excess weight and does and will bring about the beneficial results to the wearer which said advertisements and litera-

Said representations so made by respondents have had, and do have, the tendency and capacity to induce members of the public to buy and use said belt because of the erroneous beliefs engendered as above set forth, and to divert trade to respondents from competitors engaged in the sale and distribution in interstate commerce of devices and belts designed, sold, and used for the same or similar purposes as respondents' belt, and of medicines and preparations designed, adapted, and used for the treatment of obesity and the various ailments and conditions that accompany and induce the same, who do not by false and misleading representations or advertising induce purchasers and consumers to buy or use their products.

PAR. 8. The above acts and things done by the respondent are all to the injury and prejudice of the public and the competitors of respondent in interstate commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914.

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, on January 31, 1936, issued and served its complaint in this proceeding upon respondents George Landon and M. M. Warner, a copartnership, trading as Landon & Warner, charging them with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of the provisions of said act. After the issuance of said complaint and the filing of the respondent's answer thereto, testimony and other evidence in support of the allegations of the said complaint were introduced by Allen C. Phelps, attorney for the Commission before William C. Reeves, an examiner of the Commission, theretofore duly designated by it, and in opposition to the allegations of the complaint by George Landon, attorney for the respondents; and said testimony and other evidence were duly recorded and filed in the office of the Commission. Thereafter, the proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on the said complaint, the answer thereto, testimony and other evidence and briefs in support of the complaint and in opposition thereto (oral arguments of counsel having been waived); and the Commission having duly considered the same and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public, and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondents, George Landon and M. M. Warner, are the sole partners of a copartnership engaged in business at Chicago, Ill., under the name and style of Landon & Warner. Respondents, trading as said copartnership are engaged in the business of offering for sale, selling, and distributing an elastic, fabricated belt known and designated as the "Director" belt, to ultimate consumers located in the several States of the United States and in the District of Columbia. Said belt is offered for sale, sold, and distributed for use as an abdominal support, to provide a means of massaging the abdominal area of the wearer, for use in the reduction of surplus fat around the abdomen and for the relief of obesity in that region.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of the said business respondents sell and distribute their said "Director" belt directly to members of the purchasing public, by and through the use of the United States mails. Said respondents cause their said "Director" belt when sold to be transported from their place of business in the city of Chicago, State of Illinois, into and through the several States of the United States other than the State of Illinois, including the District of Columbia, to the various members of the consuming public to whom they have been sold, said purchasers being located in all of the different States of the United States and the District of Columbia.

PAR. 3. There are and have been other individuals, firms, and corporations in various States of the United States engaged in the sale and distribution in interstate commerce, of belts and devices designed, intended and used for the same general purpose as respondents' said "Director" belt, and such other individuals, firms, and corporations have caused and do cause their said devices and belts when sold by them to be transported from the various States of the United States in which said products are manufactured or held for distribution, to, into and through States other than the State of origin or shipment thereof. Said respondents have been and are in competition in interstate commerce in the offering for sale, sale, and distribution of the said "Director" belt with such other individuals, firms, and corporations above mentioned. Said products so sold in competition with respondents' said "Director" belt are sold by such other individuals, firms, and corporations, through the medium of the United States mails and otherwise directly to the consumers, and also at wholesale to retail outlets of various kinds for resale to the consumer.

PAR. 4. Respondents in advertising their said elastic, fabricated belt designated as the "Director" belt have and do cause advertisements descriptive of the product and its purported uses to be inserted in various magazines, newspapers, and periodicals having general circulation between and among the various States of the United States, and further publish and circulate in aid of the sale of said product, certain descriptive letters, circulars, booklets, and other printed matter which are usually transmitted to purchasers or prospective purchasers through the United States mails. Through said advertisements, letters, circulars, booklets, and other literature so circulated in the several States by the respondents to purchasers and prospective purchasers respondents represent and imply that said elastic, fabricated belt known and designated as the "Director" belt, as the result of being worn and used as directed and without the use of drugs and without dieting, reduces and has the capacity to reduce the measure of the waist line of the wearer thereof from four to six inches, or some other greater amount up to eleven inches; that by the use of said "Director" belt practically all adipose tissue can surely be eliminated; that the elastic action of said "Director" belt when worn causes a gentle changing pressure on the abdomen bringing results formerly obtained only by regular massage and exercise; that the use of said belt makes the wearer thereof feel fifteen years younger and eliminates a tired and bloated feeling after meals; that the use of said belt helps to relieve shortness of breath, restores the vigor of the user, makes him look years younger the minute he starts to wear it; that the use of said belt breaks the constipation habit, cures constipation and increases elimination and regularity in a normal way without the use of harsh and irritating cathartics; that the use of said belt adds years to the wearer's life; that the use of said belt reduces the fat of the wearer, eliminates excess fat around the abdomen and corrects or eliminates obesity in said region; that the use of said belt constitutes a remedy for and is a safe and efficacious medium of treatment for abdominal obesity; and makes other representations of similar import.

PAR. 5. Typical statements by respondents in their said advertisements, letters, circulars, booklets, and other literature so circulated in offering for sale and selling the said "Director" belt are the following:

Eight inches off waistline. Director Belt reduced my waistline from 42 to 34 inches. I feel 10 years younger. Constipation gone—no tired, bloated feeling after meals. G. Newton, Troy, N. Y. Director belt instantly improves your appearance, puts snap in your step, relieves "shortness of breath" restores your vigor as fat vanishes, loose, fallen abdominal muscles go back where they belong. Gentle, massage-like action increases elimination and regularity in a normal way without the use of harsh, irritating cathartics. You look and feel years younger. Sent on trial. Let us prove our claims. No obligation. Write today for trial offer. New, easy way—no drugs, no diet.

Must reduce waistline three inches or no cost. Massage reduces—so does "Director." Its elastic action with every movement of your body causes a gentle, changing, vibrating pressure that easily and comfortably works away abdomen fat, restores vigor. You look and feel years younger as soon as you wear Director Belt. Sent on Trial—Let us prove our claims. If you don't get results you owe nothing.

Reduce 4 to 6 inches without drugs, without dieting, or your money refunded * * * How Director works. Director is fitted to your individual measure without laces, hooks or buttons. Its elastic action causes a gentle changing pressure on the abdomen bringing results formerly, obtained only by regular massage and exercise. Now all you have to do is to slip on a Director and watch results. Reduce Like This. Let us prove our claims. We'll send a Director for trial. If you don't get results you owe nothing.

A sure, simple easy way to reduce your girth two to four inches instantly and then acquire a permanent reduction. Results assured—or not a penny's cost to you. We want an opportunity to prove to you that Director will accomplish wonders in reducing your weight and waist measure. So we ask permission to send you a Director for one week's trial.

Trial Offer. We have tried to give you some idea of what Director is and how it is warranted to reduce excess fat. But nothing we can say will be half so convincing as an actual test. So we invite a test on this basis. Use the Order Form enclosed with this letter—send today for a Director. Wear it for one week. Then, if you don't agree with each and every statement we have made herein, simply return the belt and we will refund your money promptly and the trial won't cost you a penny. We can think of no more fair or liberal offer than this. In fairness to yourself please make this test. Fill in and mail the Order Form today. We warrant every Director Belt to be fitted to your measure and woven from the finest fabrics for the purpose, and we warrant that it will perfectly fit the wearer. Director Belt is to satisfy you in every way. You are to have the privilege of examining it and wearing it for two weeks. If for any reason it does not meet your approval you may return it and we will refund the money sent with the order, which will be held as a deposit, pending your decision to keep or return the belt. You, the wearer, are to be the judge.

Your waistline is too large. It needs attention. By letting it go it will continue to grow—bigger and bigger. Your stomach has no stopping point. Once it starts to sag and bulge health suffers—appearance too. Why not follow my suggestion. Director will reduce your growing paunch to a size consistent with good health and rebuild your body. Here's my offer. If Director doesn't reduce your stomach within two weeks, the trial will cost you nothing. If for any reason you are not entirely satisfied, I'll refund your money—every penny of it—without delay or conversation. That's fair—Isn't it? Every day I receive letters from enthusiastic Director users. They have found that the easy comfort of Director reducing belt is just what they need; that it does them a world of good. Here is a letter that came in this morning. After 2 weeks the sum of $6.50 is to be refunded to me by Landon & Warner if I am not satisfied with the Director Belt.

Findings

Wear Director on trial. Reduce your waistline this natural and easy way. Director will reduce waistline 4 and 6 inches; improve appearance; eliminate constipation; promote digestion; renew vitality. * * * Fat disappears. The improvement that Director makes in your appearance will please you. You will enjoy a feeling of restored vitality and new life but the knowledge that excess fat is surely disappearing during every moment of the day is the most comforting feeling of all. Director does more than just relieve—it effects a permanent reduction of waist measurement and fat as well. Director actually promotes the absorption and elimination of all excess fat. We warrant every Director Belt to be fitted to your measure and woven from the finest fabrics for the purpose, and we warrant that it will perfectly fit the wearer. Director Belt is to satisfy you in every way. You are to have the privilege of examining it and wearing it for two weeks. If for any reason it does not meet your approval you may return it and we will refund the money sent with the order, which will be held as a deposit pending your decision to keep or return the belt. You, the wearer, are to be the judge.

PAR. 6. In truth and in fact: Respondents' said "Director" belt when worn and used as directed does not and will not reduce the measure of the waistline of the wearer from four to six inches or some greater amount up to eleven inches without the use of drugs or without dieting. The faithful use of said "Director" belt will not eliminate, nor has it ever eliminated, practically all adipose tissue. The elastic action of said belt does not cause a gentle changing pressure on the abdomen bringing results formerly obtained only by regular massage and exercise. The use of said belt does not make the wearer feel fifteen years younger, or any certain number of years younger, or eliminate a tired, bloated feeling after meals. The use of said belt does not help to relieve shortness of breath nor does it restore the vigor of the user or make him look years younger the minute he starts to wear it. The use of said belt does not break the constipation habit, cure constipation, or increase elimination and regularity in a normal way without the use of harsh irritating cathartics. The use of said belt does not add years to the wearer's life. The use of said belt does not reduce the fat of the wearer, eliminate excess fat around the abdomen or cure obesity in that region. Said belt is not a remedy for, or a safe, proper or efficacious medium of treatment for abdominal obesity. In general, the statements, representations and implications referred to or set forth in paragraphs 4 and 5 above are inaccurate, unfounded in fact, or greatly exaggerated.

PAR. 7. The representations of respondents above set forth and made as aforesaid have had and do have the tendency and capacity to and do confuse, mislead and deceive members of the public into the false belief that the use of respondents' "Director" belt does and will reduce excess fat around the abdomen and does and will bring about the beneficial results to the wearer which said advertisements and literature state and imply have been and will be achieved by the use of said belt. Said representations so made by respondents have had and do have the tendency and capacity to induce members of the public to buy and use said belt because of the erroneous beliefs so engendered and to thus divert trade to respondents from competitors engaged in the sale and distribution in interstate commerce of devices and belts designed, sold and used for the same or similar purposes as respondents' belt who do not by false and misleading representations or advertising induce purchasers and consumers to buy or use their products.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondents, George Landon and M. M. Warner, a copartnership trading as Landon & Warner, are to the prejudice of the public and of respondents' competitors and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

It is ordered, That the respondents, George Landon and M. M. Warner, individually, and as partners in the copartnership of Landon and Warner, and their representatives, agents, and employees, in connection with the offering for sale, sale and distribution of that certain elastic fabricated abdominal belt, known as the "Director" belt or any other belt of substantially similar construction, in interstate commerce or in the District of Columbia, by the use, publication or circulation of advertisements, letters, circulars, booklets, or other printed matter, or by the inclusion of testimonials in such advertising literature or by any other means whatsoever, do forthwith cease and desist from representing:

1. That as a result of wearing said belt the waistline of the wearer will be permanently reduced in circumference.
2. That the said belt, when worn, provides a gentle, changing pressure or massage-like action which will reduce the waistline of the wearer.
3. That the wearing of said belt will bring about results formerly obtained by massage and exercise.
4. That by the use of said belt excess fat or fatty tissue at the waistline or around the abdomen will be absorbed, eliminated, rubbed off or caused to disappear.
5. That the wearing of said belt in and of itself makes the wearer feel 15 years younger, or any certain number of years younger, or eliminates a tired, bloated feeling after meals, relieves shortness of breath or restores the vigor of the user.
6. That the wearing of said belt will break the constipation habit, cure constipation or increase elimination and regularity in a normal way without the use of harsh irritating cathartics.
7. That the wearing of said belt will reduce body weight or cure or relieve obesity.
8. That the wearing of said belt provides a remedy for or constitutes a safe, proper or efficacious method of treatment for abdominal obesity.

It is further ordered, That the respondents shall, within 60 days after service upon them of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which they have complied with this order.

IN THE MATTER OF

MARION VAULT MANUFACTURING COMPANY

Docket 2712. Complaint, Feb. 4, 1936—Decision, Dec. 4, 1936

Where a corporation engaged in the manufacture of two types of metal burial vaults, i. e., its "New Imperial Burial Vault" and "Gold Seal Burial Vault," and in the sale thereof to jobbers, funeral directors, and undertakers—

- (a) Represented, in circulars advertising its said products, distributed among undertakers, funeral directors, and morticians, that its said Imperial Vaults would "protect through the years" and that they were "inherently qualified to provide enduring protection," and, as to said "Patented Double Seal," that it was "permanently secure" and that it "improves as time goes on"; and represented that the former were watertight both at time of interment and after, and were waterproof and endured as such under all conditions for fifty years, and would give permanent protection; and
- (b) Made use of certificates of warranty or guarantee, in connection with sale and offer of latter, that said vaults were guaranteed "to be vermin, moisture, water, and air-proof, and to give positive protection for an indefinite number of years," and authorized "the undersigned funeral directors" "to countersign this guarantee to the purchaser";

The facts being that, while its said vaults were equal to the standard metal vaults made by the industry and were not inferior products or made of an inferior grade of metal or by methods of construction which differed from those used by reputable and responsible members of the industry in question, but were made with great care by skilled workmen, of the highest grade and quality of metals obtainable by it for the manufacture of such vaults, impervious and impenetrable by moisture, vermin, and water during the life of the metals, such metals were not rust or corrosion resistant to the extent that they would never rust or corrode after burial and, once rusted or corroded to a certain extent during a period of years, they would crumble and disintegrate; corrosive qualities, present in all soils, vary greatly, so that, while in many sections throughout the United States in which soil corrosion is not a problem, and in some of which a 12-gauge metal vault, buried, would resist penetration by corrosion for more than one hundred years, in other soils its said vaults would pit through and cease to be waterproof in from eight to ten years; conjunction of conditions, which does not always exist, must obtain in the case of said vaults in order to provide protection from entering water; its vaults and the materials from which made have not been tested under ground for the full period of fifty years; disinterment is rare and it had rarely been called upon to replace its said vaults;

With capacity and tendency, as result of such misleading acts and practices, to induce the public to purchase and use the same in the belief that said statements and representations, which were each and all to the prejudice of the public, were true, and to divert unfairly trade to it from its competitors engaged in sale and distribution of metal, stone, concrete, cement and other burial vaults in and between the various States:

Held, That such acts and practices were to the prejudice of the public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition.

Mr. M. Turin for the Commission.

Waite, Schindel & Bayless, of Cincinnati, Ohio, for respondent.

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that Marion Vault Manufacturing Company, hereinafter referred to as respondent, has been and now is using unfair methods of competition in commerce as "commerce" is defined in said act, and it appearing to said Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent, Marion Vault Manufacturing Company, is a corporation organized and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Ohio, with its principal office and place of business in the city of Marion in said State.

PAR. 2. Respondent is now, and has been for a number of years last past, engaged in the manufacture and sale of two types of metal burial vaults for use in the burial of the dead, one being designated "The New Imperial Burial Vault," and the other "Gold Seal Burial Vault," and has caused said products, when sold, to be shipped and transported from its place of business in the city of Marion, State of Ohio, to purchasers thereof located in many other States of the United States.

PAR. 3. In the course and conduct of its business, as aforesaid described and alleged, respondent, in soliciting the sale of and selling its said products in interstate commerce, caused circulars pertaining to its New Imperial Burial Vault to be distributed among undertakers, funeral directors, and morticians located in various States of the United States for their use and which were used by them in aid of soliciting the sale of and selling its said products to the purchasing public. In said circulars appeared statements and representations to the effect that said products "will protect through the years," and are "inherently qualified to provide enduring protection." Other circulars also were distributed as aforesaid by said corporation in interstate commerce as a means to advertise its Gold Seal Burial Vault, equipped with a patented double seal represented to be "permanently secure" and as "improving as time goes on." A so-called guarantee accompanied each Gold Seal Burial Vault sold and shipped by the respondent in interstate commerce, said guarantee reading in part:

The Marlon Vault Manufacturing Company, through its duly authorized officers whose signatures are attached hereto, hereby guarantee their Gold Seal Burial Vaults, to be vermin, moisture, water, and air proof, and to give positive protection for an indefinite number of years.

And which products, so advertised and represented, the respondent sold in interstate commerce; when, in truth and in fact, the aforesaid statements and representations to the effect that said vaults, or either of them, will "protect through the years," or "provide enduring protection," or are guaranteed to be verminproof, moisture, or water-proof, and air-proof, are vague, misleading, and deceptive and are not justified. The terms "Protect through the years," "Provide enduring protection," "waterproof," "verminproof," "moistureproof" and "airproof" as used by respondent as aforesaid, mean to the consuming public water tight vaults, vaults which will not permit water, vermin, moisture, or air to enter the same under actual burial conditions. Neither of said vaults is waterproof as the term is understood by the consuming public; and either water, vermin, moisture, and air may enter the same through the joints thereof, because of defects in mechanical construction and through holes due to corrosion.

PAR. 4. With reference to the Gold Seal Burial Vault guarantee, above mentioned, it contains no statement, promise, or agreement of any kind by the respondent as to what it will do or agree to do, in the event that any purchaser should claim, or make claim, that said Gold Seal Burial Vault has not proven to be "vermin, moisture, water, and air-proof, and to give positive protection for an indefinite number of years," as stated in respondent's said guarantee. Aside from this, the exhumation of bodies after burial is so rare as to make this certificate of guarantee utterly worthless for all purposes to a vast majority of the ultimate purchasers of this Gold Seal Burial Vault, for the reason that ordinarily and usually no such opportunity is afforded them in which to ascertain and establish, under any circumstances, whether said Gold Seal Burial Vault gives "positive protection" and is "vermin, water, and air-proof." The fact that exhumation of bodies after burial is so rare, also, in like manner, make the statements and representations of respondent in connection with the sale of the New Imperial Burial Vault practically worthless to a vast majority of ultimate purchasers of this type of burial vault for the like reason that ordinarily and usually no opportunity is afforded them in which to ascertain and establish, under any circumstances, whether said New Imperial Burial Vault "provides enduring protection" or "will protect through the years."

PAR. 5. The said methods and practices of respondent in soliciting the sale of and in selling its said burial vault products, as hereinabove alleged and set forth, have the tendency and capacity, and are calculated, to mislead and deceive, and in fact do mislead and deceive, a substantial portion of the purchasing public, including the ultimate purchaser, into buying such said burial vault products, or either of them, in the erroneous and mistaken belief that they will "protect through the years" or "provide enduring protection," or are guaranteed to be verminproof, moisture, or water-proof, and airproof.

PAR. 6. In the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid, respondent is in competition with corporations, partnerships, firms, and individuals likewise engaged in the manufacture, sale and transportation in interstate commerce of like and similar products, such as steel, stone, cement, and other vaults used in the burial of the dead, which said competitors in no wise make or indulge in the same or similar false and misleading representations, methods and practices as are made or indulged in by the respondent as hereinbefore set forth. The aforesaid representations made by respondent about its said burial vault products and the use of its guarantee as hereinabove set forth and alleged, have the capacity and tendency to deceive and mislead the purchasing public, and to induce purchasers, including ultimate purchasers, to buy the product of respondent in and on account of the belief that said statements, representations and warranties are true, and thus unfairly divert trade to the respondent from its said competitors engaged in the sale in interstate commerce of like or similar burial vault products.

PAR. 7. The acts, things and practices of the respondent, as hereinabove alleged, are all to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914.

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission on the 6th day of February 1936, issued and served its complaint in this proceeding upon respondent, Marion Vault Manufacturing Company, a corporation, charging it with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of the provisions of said act. After the issuance of said complaint, and the filing of respondent's answer thereto, a stipulation as to the facts was agreed upon by and between W. T. Kelley, Chief Counsel for the Commission, and the respondent by which it was agreed that, subject to the approval of the Commission, the statement of facts so agreed upon should be taken as the facts in this proceeding and in lieu of testimony in support of the charges stated in the complaint or in opposition thereto. It was further agreed that said Commission might proceed upon such statement of facts, including inferences drawn from said stipulated facts, to make its report stating its findings as to the facts and its conclusions based thereon, and enter its order disposing of the proceeding, without the presentation of argument or the filing of briefs. Said stipulation as to the facts has been filed in the office of the Commission and approved by it. Thereafter the proceeding came on for final hearing before the Commission on said complaint, the answer thereto and the statement of facts as agreed upon in lieu of testimony, briefs and argument having been waived, and the Commission having duly considered the same, and being fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusions drawn therefrom.

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent, Marion Vault Manufacturing Company, is, and has been for a number of years last past, a corporation duly organized and existing under the laws of the State of Ohio, with its factory and principal place of business located in the city of Marion, in the State of Ohio.

It is now, and for a number of years last past has been, engaged in the business of manufacturing and selling two types of metal burial vaults, "The New Imperial Burial Vault" and the "Gold Seal Burial Vault"; said vaults are intended to be, and actually are, used to encase or enclose coffins in the burial of the human dead.

Respondent sells and ships its vaults to jobbers, funeral directors, and undertakers, the last two of which sell the same to ultimate purchasers thereof for use in the burial of their dead.

It does now, and has, so sold and shipped its vaults to such purchasers thereof, to be used in the State of Ohio and other States of the United States. When orders are received by it they are filled by causing the said vaults to be shipped from the city of Marion in the State of Ohio, into and through other States of the United States, to the respective places of business or the residences of the purchasers.

PAR. 2. Respondent, in the course and conduct of its said business, and in soliciting the sale of and selling its said product in interstate commerce, has caused circulars advertising said vaults to be distributed among undertakers, funeral directors, and morticians located in the various States of the United States. Said circulars are used by them in connection with the solicitation of the sale of said vaults to the purchasing public. In said circulars, the respondent causes the following general statements and representations as to its vaults to be made without limitation or qualification:

As to its New Imperial burial vaults:

They "will protect through the years."

They are "inherently qualified to provide enduring protection."

As to its Gold Seal burial vaults:

The Patented Double Seal "is permanently secure."

The Patented Double Seal "Improves as times goes on."

Respondent issues with each Gold Seal burial vault, the following written guarantee which is intended to be, and usually is, delivered to the ultimate purchaser:

GUARANTEE

MARION, OHIO.

The Marion Vault Manufacturing Company, through its duly authorized officers, whose signatures are attached hereto, hereby guarantee their Gold Seal Burial Vaults to be vermin, moisture, water and air proof, and to give positive protection for an indefinite number of years.

The undersigned funeral director is hereby authorized by the Marion Vault Manufacturing Company of Marion, Ohio, to countersign this guarantee to the purchaser.

All genuine Gold Seal Vaults are labeled with the Gold Seal shown below.

Secretary

President

PAR. 3. The ferrous metals used by respondent in the manufacture of its said burial vaults are: Armco Ingot Iron and Armco Steel manufactured by the American Rolling Mill Company of Middletown, Ohio, and Keystone Copper Bearing Steel manufactured by the American Sheet and Tinplate Company of Pittsburgh, Pa.

These metals, 12 U. S. Standard Gauge and heavier, are purchased by the respondent in sheets of extra dimensions specially processed and rolled for use in the manufacture of burial vaults. The cost of said metals is considerably higher than the cost of ordinary commercial steel for the same gauges.

These metals are the highest grade and quality of metals for use in the manufacture of burial vaults that can be obtained on the market in the United States. Said metals used by the respondent in its burial vaults are highly refined grades of steel which are made under the best modern scientifically controlled steel manufacture processes wherein the impurities are removed and furnacing operations are accurately controlled. This process results in the best grade of steel which resists, but does not prevent corrosion, thus tending to increase its life and durability in use underground over steel not similarly or equally refined.

Both of the companies from whom respondent purchases these metals, represent in their advertising and otherwise to the respondent that said metals are rust resisting. They are manufacturers of recognized responsibility and integrity. These companies make rigid inspection and testing of each sheet of metal before it is shipped to the respondent.

These metals are, by their very nature, impervious to, and impenetrable by, air, moisture, vermin, and water during the life of said metals, which said life terminates when a hole has been punctured or has been penetrated through the metal by any instrument, rust, or corrosion.

The metals are not rustproof or corrosionproof, but will rust or corrode after they are buried underground. They are not rust-resisting or corrosion-resisting to the extent or degree that they will never rust or corrode after burial underground. When they have rusted and corroded to a certain degree and extent during the period of years after burial underground, they will crumble and disintegrate.

PAR. 4. Respondent's said vaults are manufactured with great care by skilled workmen.

PAR. 5. Respondent's vaults are constructed on the air seal principle. The vault consists of two parts, (1) a pan or base, and (2) a dome (hood or top).

PAR. 6. The outside measurements of the said New Imperial vault are: length, 90 inches; width, 34 inches; and height 29 inches. It weighs empty and without a casket in it 410 pounds. Its inside dimensions are: length, 86 inches; width, 30 inches; side height, 19 inches; center height 25 inches above the top of the pan. The entire dome consists of three pieces, two ends and one piece which forms the rounded top and both sides. The ends are electrically welded from the inside and outside, so as to then make the dome airtight and watertight in the sense that no air or water can then get through the metal or welds of the top, sides and ends of the dome from the outside of the dome to the inside of the dome. Water and air can go in and out of the dome from the bottom of it, as the dome itself has no bottom to it. The pan is made of one piece of steel and the ends are electrically welded. The pan is flat on top and the four edges are turned down, making the top of the pan three inches above the plane of the upper surface of the flange as it rests on the ground or support. The edges of the pan are turned outward 2 inches wide to form this flange, which extends entirely around the bottom of the vault. This flange itself has approximately a total of 3 square feet and 46 square inches. The entire base resembles an inverted pan. At each of the four corners of the pan is a hole, pierced through near its top edge. Circulation of air through its hollow space into the hood is provided by these holes, thereby making one single column of air. Projecting one inch above the top of the pan are four small raised bosses or casket rests, which support the bottom of the casket when it is placed in the vault. Thus, the bottom of the casket is raised 4 inches above the top surface of the flange on the pan. The bottom edge or rim of the dome rests on this outside flange of the pan.

PAR. 7. The dimensions of the said Gold Seal vault vary slightly from the dimensions of the vault described above, but the principle upon which it operates is the same. In the Gold Seal vault the bottom edge or rim of the dome is turned inward to form a flange. At the line of contact between the dome and the base is a rubber gasket, fitted by hand to a metal retainer, which is welded to the base of the vault. As the weight of the dome, earth and water presses down, the pressure causes the rubber gasket to seal this vault, so that it has a double seal, the air seal and the gasket seal. This is the principal difference between the New Imperial vault and the Gold Seal vault. Like the New Imperial, it has a hole at each of the four corners of the pan. The said gasket is especially prepared by incorporating therein certain chemicals to retard ordinary oxidation. Respondent purchases said gasket from reputable rubber manufacturers, to wit, Goodrich Rubber Company of Akron, Ohio, and the Corduroy Rubber Company of Grand Rapids, Mich. After water completely surrounds either the Imperial or Gold Seal vault to the extent that it covers the entire line of juncture between the dome and the flange on the pan, the pressure of the confined air in the inside of the dome resists the pressure of the water head so as to prevent the surface of the water level rising within the dome above the lower edge. The air within the vault is not sealed until then. As the water level rises in the ground surrounding the vault, its pressure forces the air from the empty space underneath the raised portion of the pan, through the holes at each corner of the pan, into the hood, where it is added to the air within the dome, thereby increasing the pressure and resistance of the air to the pressure of the water level in the ground, and so adding to the effectiveness of the operation of the air seal principle of the vault.

PAR. 8. When, for any reason, the air seal principle of the above-described vaults is not in operation, the vault is not airtight as a vault. Air can circulate freely and water can enter the dome and rise within it to the extent that it is not resisted by the pressure of the air confined within the dome.

PAR. 9-A. According to the recognized principles of mechanical engineering applied in the construction of the respondent's New Imperial and Gold Seal vaults, the confined air within the dome of respondent's vaults, buried level on the bottom of the grave, containing a corpse in an ordinary casket, or one not hermetically sealed, estimated at five cubic feet, will resist by the air seal principle the pressure of a water column in the ground five feet, or 60 inches, above the lower edge of the hood, and under such conditions, the water in the vault will rise only to the top of the pan, or one inch below the rests for the bottom of the casket. According to such recognized principles, it would require a water column in the ground 6.1 feet, or 73.2 inches above the lower edge of the hood, for the water in the vault to rise so as to submerge the bottom of the casket.

Respondent's vaults, even though provided with said mechanical principles of air sealing, will not under all burial conditions, prevent the entrance of water into said vaults to such a height as to damage the coffin and body placed therein. The metals from which said vaults are made will corrode and rust. If said metals do so corrode or rust to the extent that holes or punctures, which will permit the entry of water, develop, and there is sufficient water in the grave to reach the holes or punctures, or exit of air from the enclosed portion of the dome develops, then the entire principle of the diving bell is defeated.

In some instances said vaults will corrode and rust so as to cave in and collapse. Respondent's said vaults have never been tested for corrosion for a period of fifty years, nor has the metal from which they are made been so tested; respondent's said vaults when buried underground will, and often do, permit air, vermin, and water to enter them. Water entering respondent's said vaults to such a height as to touch the casket will promote in some instances disintegration of the body and the casket therein. Water often enters the graves of the dead. In many cemeteries of the United States, water rises in some graves to a depth of 6 feet.

In order for either of said vaults to provide protection of the casket and body placed therein from the effects of water entering from the grave, they must be buried and remain buried under the following conditions, which are:

No. 1. The hood of the air seal vault must not be defective and the metal and welds must be airtight.

No. 2. The vault should be buried level.

No. 3. The vault should be buried in the surface of the bottom of the grave and have no earth or other material which occupies the empty space underneath the pan.

No. 4. There should be no change in temperature after its burial.

No. 5. There should be no change in barometric pressure after its burial.

These said conditions do not obtain in all conditions of burial where either of said vaults are used.

Condition No. 1 is essential for the successful operation of the air seal principle of either of said vaults. Conditions Nos. 2 or 3 affect these air seal vaults unfavorably to a more or less degree in that they reduce the amount of confined air within the dome and also its pressure, when this vault is sealed by water rising above the lower edge of the hood, and thus the water within the hood tends to rise higher. A change in conditions Nos. 4 and 5 may affect these air seal vaults favorably, or it may affect these vaults unfavorably and make the water rise higher within the hood, even though the air seal principle is in operation. When changes in conditions 2, 3, 4, and 5 are sufficient to cause water to enter either of said vaults, and to touch the casket therein, then such changes tend to damage the casket and the body contained therein.

PAR. 9-B. Neither the New Imperial or the Gold Seal vault is shipped by respondent until the domes thereof have been tested and approved to have no defect in its metal or in its welds, and the domes thereof are waterproof and airtight at the time of shipment. No test is made of metal and weld of the pan.

PAR. 10. A corpse, either embalmed or not embalmed, is in the process of decay and disintegration at the time of its burial. The process of embalming is the method of injecting certain fluids into the corpse for the purpose of delaying such decay and disintegration of the corpse for a temporary period of time after burial. The delay in disintegration thus brought about is temporary and not permanent.

The above described use of the air seal vaults of the respondent is intended for the purpose of protecting the corpse against such accelerated decay and disintegration through damage by water rising to such a height within the dome of the vault that it will touch the bottom of the casket. The actual protection of the corpse by respondent's vaults will depend upon the actual burial conditions of the locality in which they are buried.

PAR. 11. The terms "waterproof" and "airtight" and "vermin proof" as used by respondent as described herein, mean in fact, and are understood by many ultimate purchasers of said vaults to mean a watertight, airtight, verminproof vault, which will not permit water, air, or vermin to enter the same and that it will endure as such under burial conditions for a period of twenty-five to fifty years or more. Water, vermin and air do enter these New Imperial and Gold Seal vaults through the bottom holes due to corrosion, or other causes, or when there is so much water in the graves in which they are contained that the water touches the casket, or because of absence of one or more of the conditions described in paragraph 9. Neither of said vaults is vermin proof or air tight until the same is sealed with water.

Disinterment after burial is rare and respondent has rarely been called upon to replace said vaults.

PAR. 12. The metals of which respondent's vaults are made are ferrous metals and will rust after burial underground. Rust is an oxidation of iron, a union of iron and oxygen and its presence means that to some extent the metal has corroded.

The corrosive qualities of different soils vary to a great extent. In some soils the corrosion is practically negligible.

There are many sections throughout the United States where soil corrosion is not a problem. In some soils in the United States a 12 U. S. Standard gauge metal vault buried underground would resist penetration by corrosion for a period of more than 100 years.

As one goes down in the ground, the strata in contact with the burial vault changes, and it may be a more corrosive or less corrosive strata, depending on the location.

The life of a metal burial vault unless punctured by rust or corrosion, depends upon the character of the soil in which it is buried and upon the climatic and other conditions prevailing in the locality where interment is made.

All soils are more or less corrosive and in the course of years will cause all ferrous metals to pit or corrode.

Corrosion, in the course of years, will cause the failure of respondent's ferrous metal vaults.

Respondent's vaults, and the metals from which they are manufactured, have not been tested underground for the full period of fifty years.

There are some soils in the United States where respondent's ferrous metal vaults will pit through and cease to be waterproof in a period of from eight to ten years.

PAR. 13. Metal Grave vaults of 12 gauge metal have been disinterred, in good condition, with no water in them, no holes in them, and no damage to the caskets and the corpses in them from water entering or ever having entered these vaults from the grave in 26 States and the District of Columbia, after being buried 48 years, 37 years, 35 years, 30 years, 27 years, 26 years, 25 years, 24 years, 23 years, 22 years, 21 years, 20 years, 19 years, 18 years, 17 years, 16 years, 15 years, 14 years, 13 years, 12 years, 11 years, 10 years, 9 years, 8 years, 7 years, 6 years, 5 years, 4 years, 3 years, 2 years, and one year or less.

Other metal vaults of 12 gauge ferrous metal have been disinterred and found to be in bad condition, with water in them, with holes in them, and the caskets and corpses therein in a damaged condition due to water having entered these vaults from the grave in which they were contained.

PAR. 14. In the course and conduct of said business, respondent is in substantial competition with other individuals, copartnerships, and corporations engaged in the sale and distribution of metal, stone, concrete, cement, and other burial vaults, in and between the various States of the United States.

PAR. 15. Respondent's vaults are equal to the standard metal vaults manufactured by the industry. They are not inferior products, are not made of an inferior grade of metal, or of methods of construction different from those used by reputable and responsible members of the metal vault industry.

PAR. 16. Respondent is and has been financially able, ready and willing to comply fully with and to perform the full terms of its written certificate of warranty, or to replace, without cost, any one of its vaults which has been damaged by water admitted from the grave because of the failure of the vault due to rust, corrosion, defective material or workmanship and respondent has made and issued said certificates of warranty in good faith.

PAR. 17. The ferrous metal burial vaults so manufactured by the respondent are useful, proper and suitable receptacles for the burial of the dead and are transported in interstate commerce for such purpose. In certificates of warranty and in other advertising material used by the respondent, its agents, employees, and representatives, in offering for sale or selling the various types of air seal ferrous metal burial vaults manufactured by it, the respondent has represented:

1. That its New Imperial Air Seal vaults are water-tight, both at the time of interment and after burial under ground;
2. That its New Imperial Air Seal vaults are water-proof;
3. That its New Imperial Air Seal vaults will endure as water-proof under all burial conditions for a period of fifty (50) years, or any fixed or stated period of time;
4. That its New Imperial Air Seal vaults will give permanent protection after under ground;
5. That the double seal of its Gold Seal burial vaults is permanently secure;
6. That the double seal of said Gold Seal burial vaults gives permanent protection.

In connection with the sale of its vaults, the respondent has also made use of certificates of warranty which guarantee such vaults to be airtight, verminproof, and waterproof, when used for burial purposes.

All of the aforementioned representations together with the acts and practices of the respondent, hereinabove set out are deceptive and misleading and have and have had the capacity and tendency to induce the public to purchase and use respondent's vaults in the belief that said statements and representations are true, and each and all of them are to the prejudice of the public, and have the capacity and tendency to unfairly divert trade to the respondent from its said competitors.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondent under the conditions described in the foregoing findings are to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors; they are unfair methods of competition in commerce and constitute violations of Section 5 of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

This proceeding having been heard by the Federal Trade Commission upon the complaint of the Commission, the answer of the respondent, and the stipulated facts filed herein, and the Commission having made its findings as to the facts and its conclusion that said respondent has violated the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes.”

It is ordered, That respondent, Marion Vault Manufacturing Company, a corporation, its officers, representatives, agents, and employees, in connection with the offering for sale, sale, and distribution of ferrous metal burial vaults in interstate commerce or in the District of Columbia, forthwith cease and desist from:

1. Representing in purported certificates of warranty or guarantees, in advertising or in any other manner, that:

(a) Its new Imperial Air Seal Vaults are water-tight either at the time of interment or after burial under ground;

(b) Its new Imperial Air Seal Vaults are water-proof;

(c) Its new Imperial Air Seal Vaults will endure, as water-proof, under all burial conditions, for a period of fifty years, or for any fixed or stated period of time;

(d) Its new Imperial Air Seal Vaults will give permanent protection after burial under ground;

(e) The double seal of its Gold Seal Burial vaults is permanently secure;

(f) The double seal of said Gold Seal burial vaults gives permanent protection, and that such vaults will endure vermin, moisture, water, and are air-proof when buried in the ground.

2. Making other representations of like import.

3. Using certificates of “Warranty” or “Guaranty” in connection with the sale or offering for sale of such vaults, unless it clearly appears therein that such certificates refer to the care, skill, mechanism, and materials used in the construction of said vaults and to tests made to determine whether they leak, and not to their durability as to remaining airtight, verminproof, or waterproof when used for burial purposes.

It is further ordered, That respondent shall, within 60 days after service upon it of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing, setting forth in detail the manner and form in which it has complied with this order.

IN THE MATTER OF
JAMES VAN DISSEN DISTILLING COMPANY

COMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION
OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 26, 1914

Docket 2426. Complaint, June 5, 1935—Decision, Dec. 7, 1936

Where a corporation engaged as rectifier and wholesaler of spirituous liquors, in purchasing and bottling whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages, and in making gin with a still which it used therefor by redistillation of purchased alcohol, not produced by it, over juniper berries and other aromatics, and in selling its aforesaid various products to wholesalers and retailers, in substantial competition with those engaged in the manufacture by distillation of whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages, and in selling the same in trade and commerce among the various States and in the District of Columbia, and with those engaged in purchasing, rectifying, blending, and bottling such various beverages and in similarly selling the same, and including among said competitors those who, as manufacturers and distillers from mash, wort, or wash of whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages sold by them, truthfully use words "distillery," "distilleries," "distillers," or "distilling" as a part of their corporate names and on their stationery and on the labels of the bottles in which they sell and ship such products, and those who, engaged in purchasing, rectifying, blending, and bottling such various products, do not use, with competitive advantage attaching thereto, aforesaid words as above set forth—

Represented, through use of word "Distilling" in its corporate name, printed on its stationery and labels, together with words "Distilled by" in case of its aforesaid gin, "Manufactured by" in case of its sloe gin and cordials, and "Bottled by" in case of its brandy, and in various other ways to its customers, and furnished the same with the means of representing to their vendees, both retailers and ultimate consuming public, that the whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages contained in such bottles were by it made through process of distillation from mash, wort, or wash, notwithstanding fact it did not thus distill said various beverages thus bottled, labeled, sold and transported by it, as definitely understood and implied to the trade and ultimate purchasing public from word "Distilling" as meaning such original distillation from grain, fruit or vegetable mash, and did not own, operate, or control any place or places where such beverages are thus made, and was not a distiller, investment and expenses of which are greater, in general, than those of the rectifier, and for the purchase of the bottled liquors of which there is a preference on the part of a substantial portion of the purchasing public, and to which an advantageous prestige in overcoming sales resistance attaches in the mind of the wholesale trade, and associated with the products of which there is an advantage to the seller by virtue of the distiller's control, as believed, of the making of its product and the ingredients entering therein from start to finish in its own establishment; With effect of misleading and deceiving dealers and purchasing public into the belief that the whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages sold by it were by it made and distilled from mash, wort, or wash, and of inducing dealers and purchasing public, acting in such belief, to buy its said whiskies, etc., bottled and sold by it, and of thereby diverting trade to it from its competitors who do not, by their corporate names or in any other manner, misrepresent that they are manufacturers by distillation from mash, wort, or wash of whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages; to the substantial injury of substantial competition in commerce:

Held, That such acts and practices were to the prejudice of the public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition.

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that James Van Dissen Distilling Co., a corporation, hereinafter referred to as respondent, has been and is using unfair methods of competition in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in said act, and it appearing to the said Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint, stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent is a corporation organized, existing and doing business under the laws of the State of California, with its office and principal place of business in the city of Los Angeles, in said State. It is now, and for more than one year last past has been, engaged in the business of a rectifier and wholesaler of liquors, purchasing, rectifying, blending, and bottling whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages and selling the same at wholesale in constant course of trade and commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia. In the course and conduct of its said business, it causes its said products when sold to be transported from its place of business aforesaid into and through various States of the United States to the purchasers thereof, consisting of wholesalers and retailers, some located within the State of California and some located in other States of the United States and the District of Columbia. In the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid respondent is now, and for more than one year last past has been, in substantial competition with other corporations and with individuals, partnerships, and firms engaged in the manufacture by distillation of whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages and in the sale thereof in trade and commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia; and in the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid respondent is, and for more than one year last past has been, in substantial competition with other corporations, and with individuals, firms, and partnerships engaged in the business of purchasing, rectifying, blending and bottling whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages and in the sale thereof in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid respondent has, upon its premises, a still which it uses in the production of gin by a process of rectification whereby alcohol, purchased but not produced by respondent, is redistilled over juniper berries and other aromatics. Such rectification of alcoholic spirits does not make or constitute respondent a distiller, as defined by Section 3247 of the Revised Statutes regulating Internal Revenue, nor as commonly understood by the public and the liquor industry. For a long period of time the word "distilling" when used in connection with the liquor industry and with the products thereof has had and still has a definite significance and meaning to the minds of wholesalers and retailers in such industry and to the ultimate purchasing public, to wit, the manufacturing of such liquors by the process of original and continuous distillation from mash, wort, or wash, through continuous closed pipes and vessels until the manufacture thereof is complete, and a substantial portion of the purchasing public prefers to buy spirituous liquors bottled by the actual distillers and manufacturers thereof.

PAR. 3. In the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid, by the use of the word "Distilling" in its corporate name, printed on its stationery and on the labels attached to the bottles in which it sells and ships its said products, and in various other ways, respondent represents to its customers and furnishes them with the means of representing to their vendees, both retailers and the ultimate consuming public, that the whiskies, gins and other spirituous beverages therein contained were by it manufactured through the process of distillation from mash, wort, or wash, as aforesaid, when, as a matter of fact respondent is not a distiller, does not distill the said whiskies, gins, or other spirituous beverages by it so bottled, labeled, sold and transported, and does not own, operate, or control any place or places where such beverages are manufactured by the process of distillation from mash, wort, or wash.

PAR. 4. There are among the competitors of respondent engaged in the sale of spirituous beverages as mentioned in paragraph 1 hereof corporations, firms, partnerships, and individuals who manufacture and distill from mash, wort, or wash, as aforesaid, whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages sold by them and who truthfully use the words "distillery," "distilleries," "distillers," or "distilling" as a part of their corporate or trade names and on their stationery, and on the labels of the bottles in which they sell and ship such products. There are also among such competitors corporations, firms, partnerships and individuals engaged in the business of purchasing, rectifying, blending, and bottling whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages who do not use the words "distillery," "distilleries," "distilling," or "distillers" as a part of their corporate or trade names, nor on their stationery, nor on the labels attached to the bottles in which they sell and ship their said products.

PAR. 5. Representation by respondent, as set forth in paragraph 3 hereof, is calculated to and has the capacity and tendency to and does mislead and deceive dealers and the purchasing public into the belief that the whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages sold by the respondent are manufactured and distilled by it from mash, wort, or wash, as aforesaid, and is calculated to and has the capacity and tendency to and does induce dealers and the purchasing public, acting in such belief, to purchase the whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages bottled and sold by the respondent, thereby diverting trade to respondent from its competitors who do not by their corporate or trade name or in any other manner misrepresent that they are manufacturers by distillation from mash, wort, or wash of whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages, and thereby respondent does substantial injury to substantial competition in interstate commerce.

PAR. 6. The acts and things above alleged to have been done and the false representations alleged to have been made by respondent are to the prejudice of the public and the competitors of respondent and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of An Act of Congress entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914.

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled, "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, on June 5, 1935, issued and served its complaint in this proceeding upon respondent, James Van Dissen Distilling Company, charging it with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of the provisions of said act. After the issuance of said complaint, and the filing of respondent's answer thereto, testimony and other evidence in support of the allegations of said complaint were introduced by Edward W. Thomerson, attorney for the Commission, before W. W. Sheppard, an examiner of the Commission theretofore duly designated by it; and by P. B. Morehouse, attorney for the Commission, before John W. Addison, an examiner of the Commission theretofore by the Commission duly substituted to take testimony and other evidence in the place and stead of said W. W. Sheppard; and in opposition to the allegations of the complaint of D. H. McDonald, attorney for the respondent; and said testimony and other evidence were duly recorded and filed in the office of the Commission. Thereafter the proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on the said complaint, the answer thereto, testimony and other evidence, briefs in support of the complaint and in opposition thereto, oral arguments of counsel aforesaid having been waived; and the Commission, having duly considered the same and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public, and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. James Van Dissen Distilling Company is a corporation organized, existing, and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of California, as a rectifier and wholesaler of spirituous liquors, with its principal office and place of business at 1401 Boyd St., Los Angeles, Calif. It purchases and bottles whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages, and sells the same at wholesale in constant course of trade and commerce between and among the various States of the United States. It estimates its average sales at $6,000 or $7,000 per month. In the course and conduct of its said business, it causes its said products, when sold, to be transported from its place of business aforesaid into and through various States of the United States to the purchasers thereof, consisting of wholesalers and retailers located in States of the United States other than the State of California. In the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid, respondent is now, and for more than one year last past has been, in substantial competition with other corporations and with individuals, partnerships, and firms engaged in the manufacture by distillation of whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages and in the sale thereof in trade and commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia; and in the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid, respondent is, and for more than one year last past has been, in substantial competition with other corporations, and with individuals, firms, and partnerships engaged in the business of purchasing, rectifying, blending, and bottling whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages and in the sale thereof in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 2. Rectifying, in the distilled spirits rectifying industry, means the mixing of whiskies of different ages or types, or the mixing of other ingredients with whiskies, but reducing proof of whiskey by adding water is not rectifying. Rectifiers also blend whiskies with neutral spirits (grain alcohol).

A distiller, in the sense ordinarily understood by the liquor industry, is one who prepares distilled spirits by a process of original and continuous distillation from mash, wort, or wash, through continuous closed pipes and vessels until the manufacture thereof is complete. Many distillers operate a separate establishment 600 feet or more away from their distillery, known as a rectifying plant, wherein they operate in the same manner as described above, for a rectifier—sometimes exclusively with spirits of their own distillation, and sometimes with spirits purchased from other distillers, or both. Some distilleries have a tax-paid bottling room on the distillery bonded premises wherein their distilled spirits are bottled straight as they come from the still, or in a bonded warehouse after aging, or after reduction of proof. Any rectifying by a distiller, however, must be done in his rectifying plant under his rectifier's permit. On all bottled liquors, whether bottled at a distillery rectifying plant, or at any other rectifying plant, appear the words "Bottled" or "Blended" (as the case may be) "by the ----- Company." If the distilled spirits therein contained are bottled by a distiller either in his distillery or are spirits of his own distillation bottled in his rectifying plant, the distiller may, and does, put "Distilled and Bottled by ----- Company." If, in the distillery's rectifying plant, other spirits have been blended or rectified, he puts "Blended and Bottled by ----- Company." Finally, blown (usually in the bottom) in each bottle is a symbol, consisting of a letter followed by a number, identifying the bottler, viz, a "D" for a distillery and "R" for rectifier, the number following said letter corresponding with the distiller's or rectifier's permit. Thus "R-443" designates this respondent. A distiller who also operates a rectifying plant, having both kinds of permits, may use either symbol, depending upon whether the liquor contained in the bottle was produced and bottled under his distiller's permit.

It is not always possible to determine from the presence of the phrase "Blended and Bottled by" or the phrase "Bottled by" on the label whether the package was bottled by a rectifier who is a distiller or by a rectifier who is not a distiller.

PAR. 3. In the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid, respondent uses its name printed on its stationery, invoices, and labels. The name on the labels is preceded by the words "Distilled . . . by" in the case of redistilled gins; by the words "Manufactured . . . by" in the case of its sloe gins and cordials; and by the words "Bottled by" in the case of its brandies. The name on its invoices is followed by the word "rectifiers." The Commission finds that by the use which respondent makes of the word "Distilling" in its corporate name printed on its stationery and on the labels attached to the bottles in which it sells and ships its said products, and in various other ways, respondent represents to its customers, and furnishes them with the means of representing to their vendees, both retailers and the ultimate consuming public, that the whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages therein contained were by it manufactured through the process of distillation from mash, wort, or wash, as aforesaid, when, as a matter of fact, respondent is not a distiller, does not distill the said whiskies, gins, or other spirituous beverages by it so bottled, labeled, sold, and transported, and does not own, operate, or control any place or places where such beverages are manufactured by the process of distillation from mash, wort, or wash.

Respondent has a still which it uses in making gin by redistillation of purchased alcohol, not produced by it, over juniper berries and other aromatics, but this redistillation does not make respondent a distiller as defined by United States Code, Title 26, Section 241, regulating internal revenue, nor as commonly understood by the public and the liquor industry. As shown by the testimony of many witnesses who for long periods of time had been, and still were, actively engaged in the liquor industry, including distillers, wholesalers, and retailers, and by the testimony of representative members of the consuming public, for a long period the word "distilling," when used in connection with the liquor industry and with products thereof, has had, and still has, the definite significance and meaning to the minds of wholesalers and retailers in such industry and to the ultimate purchasing public of the making of beverages by original distillation from grain, fruit, or vegetable mash.

In general, the investment and expenses of the distiller are greater than those of the rectifier.

Much of the "distilled" gin on the market is produced by companies who do distill their own alcohol and produce gin therefrom by redistillation in exactly the same manner that respondent produces its gins—not under any distillery permit, but under a rectifying permit. These distiller-rectifiers place on their gin labels: "Distilled by ----- Distillers". There are distilleries which produce gin by the same process in the distillery by one continuous process and the tax is paid at the completion of the process, that is, after the alcohol becomes gin, so that although the final redistillation process is the same as that of respondent, yet it is all done in a distillery, and the distiller has control over the process from the mash to the gin. Thus it includes original or primary distillation through closed pipes and vessels, as well as the final process of redistillation over the juniper berries.

Section 5 of the Federal Alcohol Administration Act, approved August 29, 1935, dealing with unfair competition and unlawful practices in the industry, provides that it shall be unlawful to sell in bottles any distilled spirits in interstate or foreign commerce unless they are bottled, packaged, and labeled in conformity with such regulations, to be prescribed by the Administrator, as will prohibit deception of the consumer with respect to such products.

Existing regulations under this act define "distilled gin" as the distillate by original distillation or redistillation of neutral spirits with aromatics.

The regulations further provide that on labels of domestic distilled spirits bottled by or for the actual distiller thereof, there shall be stated the words "distilled by" and immediately thereafter the name of such distiller and the place where distilled.

PAR. 4. There are among the competitors of respondent engaged in the sale of spirituous beverages as mentioned in paragraph 1 hereof corporations, firms, partnerships, and individuals who manufacture and distill from mash, wort, or wash whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages sold by them and who truthfully use the words "distillery," "distilleries," "distillers," or "distilling" as a part of their corporate names and on their stationery, and on the labels of the bottles in which they sell and ship such products. There are also among such competitors corporations, firms, partnerships, and individuals engaged in the business of purchasing, rectifying, blending, and bottling whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages who do not use the words "distillery," "distilleries," "distilling," or "distillers" as a part of their corporate names, nor on their stationery, nor on the labels attached to the bottles in which they sell and ship their products.

PAR. 5. A substantial portion of the purchasing public does prefer to buy spirituous liquors bottled by the actual distillers and manufacturers thereof, and such representation is a misrepresentation in fact, and has a tendency to mislead and deceive dealers and the purchasing public, with the resultant tendency to induce them to buy respondent's products in preference to the products of truthful competitors.

The testimony clearly showed, and the Commission finds, that a prestige attaches in the minds of the wholesale trade to the distiller, and that this prestige is an advantage in overcoming sales resistance; that in the minds of the wholesale trade and the public, the belief that a distiller's controlling the making of such products from start to finish, with all the ingredients going into them within its own establishment, is an advantage to the seller; and that the use of the word "distilling" or "distiller" in a trade or corporate name of a concern gives it a competitive advantage over concerns which do not pursue or practice such characterizations, and which do not purport to be manufacturers when they are not.

The Commission, therefore, finds that the representation of respondent, through use of the word "Distilling" in its corporate name as aforesaid, is calculated to, and has the capacity and tendency to, and does, mislead and deceive dealers and the purchasing public into the belief that the whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages sold by the respondent are manufactured and distilled by it from mash, wort, or wash, and is calculated to, and has the capacity and tendency to, and does, induce dealers and the purchasing public, acting in such belief, to purchase the whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages bottled and sold by the respondent, thereby diverting trade to respondent from its competitors who do not by their corporate names or in any other manner misrepresent that they are manufacturers by distillation from mash, wort, or wash of whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages, and thereby respondent does substantial injury to substantial competition in interstate commerce.

PAR. 6. Because of existing regulations, under the Federal Alcohol Administration Act approved August 29, 1935 (49 Stat. 977), which regulations became effective August 15, 1936, providing that rectifiers who redistill purchased alcohol over juniper berries and other aromatics may sell such resulting product as "distilled gin," and requiring that the labels state who distilled it, the Commission has excepted gins produced by respondent by redistillation of alcohol over juniper berries and other aromatics from the prohibitions of its order.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondent, James Van Dissen Distilling Company, are to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled, "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

It is ordered, That James Van Dissen Distilling Company, a corporation, its officers, representatives, agents, and employees, in connection with the offering for sale, sale, and distribution by it of whiskies, gins, or other spirituous beverages in interstate commerce or in the District of Columbia (except gins produced by it through a process of rectification whereby alcohol purchased, but not produced, by respondent is redistilled over juniper berries and other aromatics), do cease and desist from:

Representing, through the use of the word "Distilling" in its corporate name, on its stationery, advertising, or on the labels attached to the bottles in which it sells and ships its said products, or in any other way by word or words of like import, (a) that it is a distiller of whiskies, gins, or other spirituous beverages; or (b) that the said whiskies, gins, or other spirituous beverages were by it manufactured through the process of distillation; or (c) that it owns, operates, or controls a place or places wherein such products are by it manufactured by a process of original and continuous distillation from mash, wort, or wash, through continuous closed pipes and vessels until the manufacture thereof is complete, unless and until respondent shall actually own, operate, or control such a place or places.

It is further ordered, That the said respondent, within 60 days from and after the date of the service upon it of this order, shall file with the Commission a report or reports in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which it is complying, and has complied, with the order to cease and desist hereinabove set forth.

IN THE MATTER OF

PREMIER PEAT MOSS CORPORATION

Docket 2793. Complaint, Apr. 29, 1936—Decision, Dec. 7, 1936

Where a corporation, engaged as principal importer and distributor of Swedish peat moss, in importing said product and selling same to wholesalers and retailers in substantial competition with those engaged in the importation, sale, and distribution of such product from Germany and other foreign countries, for use as soil conditioner, stable litter, and stable bedding, and in competition with many who import and sell in interstate commerce peat moss for the same general purpose as the Swedish product sold by it, but rightfully and truthfully represent the qualities and virtues possessed by their product and in no manner misrepresent the qualities or virtues thereof—

- (a) Featured on a circular published and widely distributed by it, in connection with the offer and sale of its said product, the quoted caption "United States Department of Agriculture," together with quoted matter ascribed to said Department's official circular, setting forth certain characteristics of said product, of good quality, and followed by schedule which purported to give results of comparative tests of Swedish and German peat moss, to the advantage of the former and disadvantage of the latter in numerous respects, and including results, or purported results, of various State experiment stations and of the Bureau of Weights and Measures of New York City, notwithstanding fact said circular was not an official report or bulletin of such Department, did not contain any comparisons or analyses made or authenticated by it or by any branch of the United States Government, and was never promulgated by said Government and did not have its approval or sanction, and no such comparisons or analyses respecting and affecting such Swedish and German peat moss, as represented or shown in such circular, had ever been made by Department in question, and said purported tests and measurements afforded no bases in fact for the representations made relative to the comparative absorbent capacity, moisture content, and weight and bulk advantage, and comparisons shown to the advantage of such Swedish moss did not have the approval or endorsement of any Department of the United States Government, Bureau or Branch of the United States, or of any municipal or State Government;

With intent and effect of creating erroneous impression upon purchasing public generally that said circular presented an analysis and comparison of Swedish and German peat moss, as made and promulgated by the United States Department of Agriculture in a Government report, and that said circular had the approval and sanction of such Department; and with capacity and tendency to mislead and deceive its customers and prospective customers and the public generally into the purchase of said Swedish moss in preference to German peat moss, in aforesaid erroneous beliefs, and that analyses of said State experiment stations and of said municipal bureau proved and demonstrated conclusively advantages of former over latter in respect of absorbent capacity, moisture content, and weight saving and bulk per unit, as set forth in circular in question;

- (b) Inserted in a published and widely distributed copy of a letter received by it from a State experiment station, and over the signature of said station's chief in research chemistry, and in which letter were given results of analyses of four samples of peat moss, words "Swedish" and "German"; with intent of disclosing to public the identity of the two brands of peat moss covered by such analyses, notwithstanding fact that analysis set forth in such letter was not complete, exhaustive and independent, and did not demonstrate relative absorbent capacity of the two peat mosses, as therein, in effect, misleadingly represented and implied; With capacity and tendency to mislead and deceive its customers and prospective customers and the purchasing public generally into the erroneous belief that figures shown therein were result of complete, exhaustive and independent analysis, and demonstrated the relative absorbent capacity of said respective products; and

- (c) Published and issued a circular distributed to dealers throughout the United States, wherein was set forth under caption "Results," that "Figures from the Custom House records of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce" showed the volume of its import of Swedish peat moss for the period therein set forth, "had reached over 93% of the total peat moss imports from Central Europe"; facts being representations therein contained were inaccurate, false, and misleading in that a greater volume of peat moss was not imported from Sweden than from Central Europe during months in question;

With capacity and tendency to mislead and deceive purchasing public into buying the Swedish peat moss in the erroneous belief that a greater volume of article in question was imported from Sweden than from the remainder of Central Europe during months in question; and with results of placing in the hands of Swedish peat moss retailers, wholesalers and distributors an instrument and means whereby they might be and were encouraged and caused to, and did, misrepresent to a substantial portion of the consuming public the evidence as to the relative merits of such and German and other peat moss, and with capacity and tendency to, and with effect of, unfairly diverting trade to it from competitors engaged in the sale in commerce of German and other imported peat moss; to the substantial injury of competition in commerce:

Held, That such acts and practices were to the prejudice of the public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition.

Before Mr. Edward M. Averill, trial examiner.

Mr. Astor Hogg for the Commission.

Mr. Emerich Kohn and Mr. Mitchell Salem Fisher, of New York City, for respondent.

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that Premier Peat Moss Corporation, hereinafter referred to as respondent, has been and now is using unfair methods of competition in commerce as "Commerce" is defined in said act, and it appearing to the Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint, stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent, Premier Peat Moss Corporation, is a corporation organized, existing, and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of New York, with its principal office and place of business at 150 Nassau Street, New York, N. Y., and is now, and has been for a period of more than three years, engaged in the business of importing and selling to wholesalers and retailers for resale, in commerce as herein set out, Swedish Peat Moss.

PAR. 2. The respondent, being engaged in business as aforesaid, causes said Swedish Peat Moss, when sold by it, to be transported from its office and principal place of business in the State of New York to purchasers thereof located in the various States of the United States other than the State of New York, and in the District of Columbia. There is now, and has been at all times since the organization of respondent corporation, a constant current of trade in commerce in said Swedish Peat Moss so distributed and sold by the respondent, between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 3. The respondent, in the course and conduct of its business, is now and has been at all times mentioned herein, engaged in substantial competition with other corporations and with individuals and partnerships engaged in commerce among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia in the importation, sale, and distribution of peat moss imported from Germany and other foreign countries.

PAR. 4. Peat Moss consists of a vegetable matter partially decomposed in water, which, in the earlier stages of decomposition, is extensively used as a soil conditioner due to the fact that it has great water-absorbing and moisture-retaining capacities. It is also extensively used as a stable litter and for stable bedding. Germany and Sweden are the principal countries from which peat moss is imported. The respondent is the principal importer and distributor of Swedish Peat Moss in the United States.

PAR. 5. In such competition between the sellers of Swedish Peat Moss and sellers of German Peat Moss and peat moss from other countries, one of the controlling influences upon the purchasing public is the public opinion as to the comparative weight, quality, absorbing capacity, ash content, and moisture content of peat moss obtained from various sources.

PAR. 6. In the course and conduct of its business, as hereinbefore set out, in offering for sale and selling Swedish Peat Moss, respondent has published and distributed widely among its customers and prospective customers and among the purchasing public generally, a circular bearing the following caption:

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE, WASHINGTON, D. C.

states in its official circular No. 167

Moss Peat of good quality is light in weight, porous, spongy, fairly elastic, of yellow brown color, must have a high water absorbing capacity, a relatively low amount of woody material and ash.

The above quotation was and is followed by a schedule purporting to give results of tests wherein Swedish Peat Moss and German Peat Moss were compared, and a summary of the alleged advantages of Swedish Peat Moss over the German Peat Moss, as follows:

PREMIER PEAT MOSS CORPORATION,

Complaint

The respondent further caused the circulation in various States of the United States, among customers, prospective customers, and the public generally a purported copy of a letter from Arthur W. Clark, Chief in Research Chemistry of the New York State Experiment Station at Geneva, N. Y., which copy of letter so circulated and distributed reads as follows:

March 17, 1933.

PREMIER PEAT MOSS CORPORATION,
 150 Nassau Street, New York, New York.

GENTLEMEN: Analyses of the four samples of peat moss are as follows:

No. 1—Horticultural Grade

Swedish:

Ash -----	1.02%
Nitrogen-----	0.88%
Organic matter -----	95.06%

No. 1—Poultry Litter

Ash -----	1.03%
Nitrogen-----	0.83%
Organic matter -----	91.12%

No. 2—Horticultural Grade

German:

Ash -----	1.84%
Nitrogen-----	0.94%
Organic matter -----	94.95%

No. 2—Poultry Litter

Ash -----	1.52%
Nitrogen-----	0.91%
Organic matter -----	91.36%

Sample No. 1—Horticultural Grade and Poultry Litter show an absorption of 13.5 parts of water to one part of peat moss, while sample No. 2 both Horticultural Grade and Poultry Litter show an absorption of 10.8 parts of water to one part of peat moss.

Very truly yours,

(Signed) ARTHUR W. CLARK,
 Chief in Research Chemistry.

The two words "Swedish" above, and "German" below, which appeared in the copy of the letter hereinabove set out, were not in the original letter but were written in by said respondent and the presence of those two words discloses to the public the identity of the two brands of peat moss covered by the analysis.

The circular published and distributed as first hereinabove set out was, and is, for the purpose and effect of creating, and it does create, the impression with the respondent's customers and prospective customers and the purchasing public generally that it presented a fair compilation, analysis and comparison of Swedish peat moss and German peat moss, and that, as such, it was, and had been, duly promulgated by the United States Department of Agriculture as a Government report, and that such circular had the approval and sanction of the United States Department of Agriculture.

In truth and in fact, the circular widely distributed, as aforesaid, is not an official report or bulletin of the United States Department of Agriculture. It does not contain any comparisons, analyses, or compilations that have been made or authenticated by the United States Department of Agriculture or by any branch of the Government and was never promulgated by the United States Government and it does not have the approval or sanction of the United States Government. In fact, the United States Department of Agriculture has never made any such comparisons or analyses between Swedish peat moss and German peat moss as is represented or shown on said circular.

In the course and conduct of its business, as aforesaid, respondent published and issued a circular which it distributed to its dealers throughout the United States which circular stated and represented, among other things,

"RESULTS. Figures from the Custom House Records of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce show that the volume of our import of Swedish peat moss for the months of October, November, and December 1933, had reached over 93% of the total volume of all peat moss imports from central Europe."

In truth and in fact, the representation of the respondent that during the months of October, November, and December 1933, 93% of the total volume of all peat moss imported from central Europe came from Sweden is inaccurate, false and misleading.

PAR. 7. In and by the use of the circular, first hereinabove set out, which is entitled "United States Department of Agriculture, Washington, D. C.", respondent represents that Swedish peat moss is more spongy and loose than German peat moss; that the absorbing capacity of Swedish peat moss is 25% higher than German peat moss and that the analysis of the New York State Experiment Station, Geneva, N. Y., proves that the absorbing capacity of Swedish peat moss is 25% higher than German peat moss; that the ash content of Swedish peat moss is 40% less than German peat moss; that Swedish peat moss has 33% less moisture than German peat moss as shown by the analysis of State Experiment Stations, New Haven, Conn., and Amherst, Mass., and therefore, Swedish peat moss affords savings in weight; that a bale of Swedish peat moss contains from two to three more bushels of peat moss than is contained in a bale of German peat moss and the measurement of Mayor's Bureau of Weights and Measurements, city of New York, demonstrates such to be a fact.

In truth and in fact, Swedish peat moss is not more spongy and loose than German peat moss; the absorbing capacity of Swedish peat moss is not 25% higher than German peat moss or higher to any degree, and the New York State Experiment Station, Geneva, N. Y., made no such analysis as to the absorbing capacity of Swedish peat moss and German peat moss as is represented in said circular. The ash content of Swedish peat moss is not 40% less than German peat moss or less at all. Swedish peat moss does not contain 33% less moisture than German peat moss, or less at all, and affords no savings in weight, and the representations on the circular to the effect that analyses of State Experiment Stations located at New Haven, Conn., and Amherst, Mass., demonstrated that Swedish peat moss contained less moisture are false and misleading. A bale of Swedish peat moss does not contain from two to three bushels more of peat moss than is contained in a bale of German peat moss and Mayor's Bureau of Weights and Measurements, city of New York, did not make and has never made any such a comparison. In fact, no analyses or tests made by any Department of the United States Government or Municipal or State Government afford any basis in fact for the comparisons made on said circular; nor do such comparisons have the approval or endorsement of any Department of the United States or Bureau or branch thereof, or any Department of any Municipal or State Government or bureau or branch thereof.

PAR. 8. The circular entitled "United States Department of Agriculture" circulated and distributed, as hereinabove set out, has the capacity and tendency to mislead and deceive the respondent's customers and prospective customers and the public generally into purchasing Swedish peat moss in preference to German peat moss under the erroneous belief (a) that the circular referred to and the comparisons thereon stated have been issued and promulgated by the United States Government and that it has the sanction and approval of the United States Department of Agriculture and that by reason of the comparisons made on said circular, the United States Department of Agriculture recommends Swedish peat moss in preference to German peat moss; (b) that the analyses of New York State Experiment Station, Geneva, New York, prove and demonstrate the fact that the absorbing capacity of Swedish peat moss is 25% higher than German peat moss; (c) that the ash contents of Swedish peat moss is 40% less than the ash contents of German peat moss; (d) that the State Experiment Stations of New Haven, Conn., and Amherst, Mass., have made comparisons and tests of Swedish peat moss and German peat moss and find that Swedish peat moss contains 33% less moisture than German peat moss and affords savings in weight; (e) that a bale of Swedish peat moss contains from two to three bushels more as contained in a bale of German peat moss and that the analyses and tests of the Mayor's Bureau of Weights and Measurements, city of New York, show such to be a fact.

The use and circulation of the copy of letter dated March 17, 1933, as hereinabove set out, has the capacity and tendency to mislead and deceive the respondent's customers and prospective customers, and the purchasing public generally, into the erroneous belief that the analysis shown in said letter is a true analysis of Swedish peat moss and German peat moss.

The use and circulation of the circular containing the expression that the records of the Custom House of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce reveal that the volume of imports into the United States of Swedish peat moss for the months of October, November, and December 1933, had reached over 93% of the total volume of all peat moss imports from central Europe has had the capacity and tendency to mislead and deceive the public into purchasing said Swedish peat moss under the erroneous belief that Swedish peat moss is more in demand in the United States than German peat moss.

PAR. 9. The false and misleading misrepresentations hereinabove set out made by the respondent place in the hands of said retail dealers, wholesale dealers, and distributors an instrument and means whereby said dealers and distributors may commit a fraud upon a substantial portion of the consuming public by enabling such dealers to represent, offer for sale and sell Swedish peat moss as much to be preferred over German peat moss on account of the alleged fact that Swedish peat moss is more spongy and loose, has 25% higher absorbent capacity, 40% less ash content, 33% less moisture, and a bale contains two to three bushels more peat moss and that Swedish peat moss is more in demand in the United States than German peat moss and is recommended by various Departments of National, State, or municipal Governments.

PAR. 10. There are among the competitors of the respondent many who import and sell in interstate commerce German peat moss which is for the same use and purpose as Swedish peat moss, but which competitors rightfully and truthfully represent the qualities and virtues possessed by said German peat moss and in no manner misrepresent the qualities or virtues thereof, and in no manner unfairly or untruthfully make comparisons of Swedish peat moss with German peat moss.

The above false and misleading representations and comparisons have the capacity and tendency to, and do, unfairly divert trade to respondent from said competitors engaged in the sale in interstate commerce of peat moss used for the same general purpose.

PAR. 11. The acts and practices of the respondent above set forth are all to the prejudice of the public and respondent's competitors and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, on April 29, 1936, issued and served its complaint in this proceeding upon respondent, Premier Peat Moss Corporation, charging it with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of the provisions of said act. After the issuance of said complaint, and the filing of respondent's answer thereto, testimony and other evidence in support of the allegations of said complaint were introduced by Astor Hogg, attorney for the Commission, before Edward M. Averill, an examiner of the Commission theretofore duly designated by it, and in opposition to the allegations of the complaint by Mitchell Salem Fisher, attorney for the respondent; and said testimony and other evidence were duly recorded and filed in the office of the Commission. Thereafter, the proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on the said complaint, the answer thereto, testimony and other evidence, briefs in support of the complaint and in opposition thereto, and the oral arguments of counsel aforesaid; and the Commission, having duly considered the same and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public, and makes this, its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent, Premier Peat Moss Corporation, is a corporation organized, existing, and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of New York, with its principal office and place of business located at 150 Nassau Street, New York, N. Y. It is now, and has been for a period of more than three years, engaged in the business of importing and selling Swedish Peat Moss to wholesalers and retailers, for resale in commerce as herein set out.

PAR. 2. The respondent, being engaged in business as aforesaid, causes said Swedish Peat Moss, when sold by it, to be transported from its office and principal place of business in the State of New York to purchasers thereof located in the various States of the United States other than the State of New York, and in the District of Columbia. There is now, and has been at all times since the organization of respondent corporation, a constant current of trade and commerce in said Swedish Peat Moss so distributed and sold by the respondent, between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 3. The respondent, in the course and conduct of its business, is now, and has been at all times mentioned herein, engaged in substantial competition with other corporations and with individuals and partnerships engaged in commerce among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia in the importation, sale, and distribution of peat moss imported from Germany and other foreign countries.

PAR. 4. Peat Moss consists of a vegetable matter partially decomposed in water, which, in the earlier stages of decomposition, is extensively used as soil conditioner, due to the fact that it has great water-absorbing and moisture-retaining capacities. It is also extensively used as a stable litter and for stable bedding. Germany and Sweden are the principal countries from which peat moss is imported. PAR. 6. In the course and conduct of its business, as hereinbefore set out, in offering for sale and selling Swedish Peat Moss, respondent has published and distributed widely among its customers and prospective customers, and among the purchasing public generally, in the various States of the United States, a circular bearing the following caption:

Very truly yours,

(Sgd) ARTHUR W. CLARK,
Chief in Research Chemistry.

The two words, "Swedish" and "German," which appeared in the copy of the letter hereinabove set out, were not in the original letter, but were written in by said respondent, and the presence of those two words is intended to disclose to the public the identity of the two brands of peat moss covered by the analyses. The respondent further published and issued a circular, which was distributed to dealers throughout the United States, which circular stated and represented, among other things:

RESULTS: Figures from the Custom House records of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce show the volume of our import of Swedish peat moss for the months of October, November, and December, 1933, had reached over 93% of the total peat moss imports from Central Europe.

PAR. 7. The publication and distribution of the circular first herein set out was, and is for the purpose of creating, and it does create the impression upon the purchasing public generally that said circular presented an analysis and comparison of Swedish peat moss and German peat moss as made and promulgated by the United States Department of Agriculture in a government report, and that such circular had the approval and sanction of the United States Department of Agriculture.

In truth and in fact, the circular first set out in paragraph 6 hereof is not an official report or bulletin of the United States Department of Agriculture. It does not contain any comparisons or analyses that have been made or authenticated by the United States Department of Agriculture, or by any branch of the Government, and was never promulgated by the United States Government, and it does not have the approval or sanction of the United States Government. As a matter of fact, the United States Department of Agriculture has never made any such comparisons or analyses between Swedish peat moss and German peat moss as is represented or shown in said circular.

The representations of the circular letter dated March 17, 1933, set out in paragraph 6 hereof, are misleading, in that, under all the circumstances, the publication and circulation of copies of the letter, making comparisons between an analysis of Swedish peat moss and an analysis of German peat moss, amount to representations, and imply that the figures therein given are the result of a complete, exhaustive, and independent analysis, and demonstrate the comparative absorbent capacity of Swedish and German peat moss, when, as a matter of fact, the analysis therein referred to and reported was not complete, exhaustive, and independent, and does not demonstrate the relative absorbent capacity of the two peat mosses.

The representations in the other circular in paragraph 6 hereof set out, that during the months of October, November, and December, 1933, 93% of the total volume of all peat moss imported from Central Europe came from Sweden, is inaccurate, false, and misleading, in that a greater volume of peat moss was not imported from Sweden than from Central Europe during said months.

PAR. 8. In and by the use of the circular first set out in paragraph 6 hereof, respondent represents that the analyses of New York Experiment Stations, Geneva, N. Y., prove that the absorbent capacity of Swedish peat moss is 25% higher than German peat moss; that the analyses of the State Experiment Stations of Connecticut and Massachusetts prove that Swedish peat moss has 33% less moisture than German peat moss, thereby effecting a saving in weight; and that the measurements of the Mayor's Bureau of Weights and Measurements of New York City demonstrate that a bale of Swedish peat moss contains from two to three more bushels of peat moss than is contained in a bale of German peat moss.

As a matter of fact, the analysis of New York Experiment Stations, Geneva, N. Y., does not prove that the absorbent capacity of Swedish peat moss is 25% higher than German peat moss; the analyses of the Experiment Stations of Connecticut and Massachusetts do not prove that Swedish peat moss contains less moisture than German peat moss or affords a saving in weight; the measurements of the Mayor's Bureau of Weights and Measurements do not prove that a bale of Swedish peat moss contains from two to three bushels more peat moss than is contained in a bale of German peat moss. Said purported tests and measurements afford no bases in fact for the representations made, and such comparisons therein shown do not have the approval or indorsement of any department of the United States Government, Bureau, or Branch thereof, or of any department of any municipal or State Government, or bureau or branch thereof.

PAR. 9. The circulation of the circular first set out in paragraph 6 hereof has the capacity and tendency to mislead and deceive the respondent's customers and prospective customers, and the public generally, into purchasing Swedish peat moss in preference to German peat moss under the erroneous beliefs that:

(a) The circular referred to and the comparisons therein stated were issued, made and promulgated by the United States Government, and had the sanction and approval of the United States Department of Agriculture, and that the United States Department of Agriculture recommended Swedish peat moss in preference to German peat moss;

(b) The analysis of New York Experiment Stations, Geneva, N. Y., proved and demonstrated conclusively that the absorbing capacity of Swedish peat moss is 25% higher than German peat moss;

(c) The analysis of the said Experiment Stations at New Haven, Conn., and Amherst, Mass., proved and demonstrated conclusively that Swedish peat moss contains 33% less moisture than German peat moss, and thereby afforded a saving in weight.

(d) The measurements and tests of the Mayor's Bureau of Weights and Measurements of the city of New York proved and demonstrated conclusively that a bale of Swedish peat moss contains from two to three bushels more of peat moss than is contained in a bale of German peat moss.

The aforesaid circulation of copies of the letter set out in paragraph 6 hereof, dated March 17, 1933, has the capacity and tendency to mislead and deceive the respondent's customers and prospective customers, and the purchasing public generally, into the erroneous belief that the figures shown in said letter are the result of a complete, exhaustive, and independent analysis, and demonstrate the relative absorbent capacity of the two peat mosses.

The aforesaid use and circulation of the circular, containing the statement that the records of the Custom House of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce revealed that the volume of imports into the United States of Swedish peat moss for the months of October, November, and December, 1933, had reached over 93% of the total volume of all peat moss from Central Europe, has the capacity and tendency to mislead and deceive the purchasing public into purchasing Swedish peat moss under the erroneous belief that a greater volume of peat moss was imported from Sweden than from the remainder of Central Europe during said months.

PAR. 10. The false and misleading representations hereinabove set out, made by the respondent, placed in the hands of Swedish peat moss retail dealers, wholesale dealers, and distributors an instrument and means whereby said dealers and distributors may be, and are encouraged and caused to, and do misrepresent, to a substantial portion of the consuming public, the evidence as to the relative merits of Swedish peat moss and German and other peat moss.

PAR. 11. There are, among the competitors of the respondent, many who import into the United States, and sell in interstate commerce, peat moss which is for the same general purpose as Swedish peat moss sold by respondent, but which competitors rightfully and truthfully represent the qualities and virtues possessed by such peat moss, and in no manner misrepresent the qualities or virtues thereof.

The above false and misleading representations and comparisons have the capacity and tendency to, and do, unfairly divert trade to the respondent from competitors engaged in the sale, in interstate commerce, of German and other imported peat moss, and thereby substantial injury is done to competition in interstate commerce.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondent, Premier Peat Moss Corporation, are to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce, within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

This proceeding having been heard by the Federal Trade Commission upon the complaint of the Commission, the answer of respondent, testimony and other evidence taken before Edward M.

Order

24 F. T. C.

Averill, an examiner of the Commission theretofore duly designated by it, in support of the allegations of said complaint and in opposition thereto, briefs filed herein, and oral arguments by Astor Hogg, counsel for the Commission, and by Mitchell Salem Fisher, counsel for the respondent, and the Commission having made its findings as to the facts and its conclusion that said respondent has violated the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

It is ordered, That the respondent, Premier Peat Moss Corporation, its officers, representatives, agents, and employees, in connection with the offering for sale, sale, and distribution of peat moss in interstate commerce or in the District of Columbia, do forthwith cease and desist from:

(1) The use, in its advertising, of analyses or tests, of the merits of its own and competing peat moss, with the representation, express or implied, that said analyses or tests were made by, or under the supervision of, or have the sanction or approval of the United States Government, or any Bureau, or Branch thereof, when such is not the fact;

(2) Using the results of comparative analyses and other tests of its own and competing peat moss under such circumstances and with such representations as to induce the belief that said analyses and tests were complete and exhaustive, and that they demonstrate the comparative qualities and merits of respondent's and competing peat moss, when such are not the facts;

(3) Misrepresenting statistics of the United States Government, or statistics contained in reports of the United States Government, with respect to the supply of, or demand for, or the comparative quality or merits of respondent's peat moss as compared with competing peat moss;

It is further ordered, That the respondent shall, within 30 days after the service upon it of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing, setting forth in detail the manner and form in which it has complied with this order.

LUMBER MILLS COMPANYCOMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 26, 1914*Docket 2796. Complaint, May 4, 1936—Decision, Dec. 7, 1936*

Where a corporation engaged in the distribution and sale of sash, windows, doors, molding, and mill work, in substantial competition with others likewise thus engaged, and also with those engaged in manufacturing, distributing and selling such products, and including among its said competitors many who do not manufacture the products dealt in by them or in any way represent themselves as manufacturers of such products, and many who manufacture, distribute, and sell such products made from the botanical "Pinus ponderosa," and who do not in any way represent said products as actually made from the botanical "Pinus strobus," or white pine, but truthfully represent the same as made from the wood of and from which they are in fact made—

- (a) Represented, through use of word "Mills" in its corporate name, displayed and featured in its catalogs and price lists and on its letterheads, order blanks, invoices, and other literature, and through a design displaying and featuring said word, and statement that it was "offering these remarkable values at this time to keep our factory busy during the winter months," etc., that it owned, operated, or controlled a mill wherein lumber products were converted or made into sash, windows, doors, molding, and similar mill work, notwithstanding fact it was not, as understood by trade and purchasing public generally, such a manufacturer, with which a substantial portion of wholesale and retail purchasers of such products prefer to deal direct, as thereby securing them, in their belief, closer prices, superior quality and other advantages, as compared with dealing through a selling agency or middleman; and
- (b) Made use of words "white pine" in catalogs and price lists to designate wood from which many of the products sold by it were made, notwithstanding fact wood in question was the botanical "Pinus ponderosa," obtained from the species native to the mountainous region of the Pacific Coast, and was not the substantially more costly and generally preferred commercial white pine, or botanical "Pinus strobus," to which, in softness, ease of working, ability to stay in place, relative freedom from resinous substances, durability under exposure, and uniformity, it was inferior;

With capacity and tendency to mislead and deceive a substantial portion of the purchasing public into the erroneous belief that said various representations were true, and with the result that, induced by such false and misleading statements and representations, and as a consequence of the mistaken and erroneous beliefs thus induced, the consuming public purchased a substantial volume of its said products and trade was unfairly diverted to it from its competitors likewise engaged in distributing and selling similar products made from wood, and who truthfully advertise and represent the nature and character of their business and of the wood from which their said products are actually made; to the substantial injury of competition in commerce:

Complaint

Held, That such acts and practices were to the prejudice of the public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition.

Before Mr. John J. Keenan, trial examiner.

Mr. J. T. Welch for the Commission.

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that Lumber Mills Co., a corporation, hereinafter referred to as respondent, has been and now is using unfair methods of competition in commerce as "commerce" is defined in said act, and it appearing to the Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent, Lumber Mills Co., is a corporation organized, existing, and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Illinois, with its principal office and place of business located at 11 So. La Salle Street in the city of Chicago, State of Illinois. Respondent is now, and has been for some years, engaged in the business of distributing and selling, in commerce as herein set out, sash, windows, doors, molding, and mill work made from wood.

PAR. 2. Said respondent, being engaged in business as aforesaid, causes said sash, windows, doors, molding, and mill work, when sold, to be transported from its office and principal place of business in the State of Illinois or from the place of origin of said shipment to the purchasers thereof located at various points in States of the United States other than the State of Illinois or the State of the origin of said shipment and there is now, and has been at all times since the organization of respondent corporation, a constant current of trade and commerce in said sash, windows, doors, molding, and mill work so distributed and sold by the respondent, between and among the various States of the United States and the District of Columbia.

PAR. 3. In the course and conduct of its business, respondent is now, and has been, in substantial competition with other corporations and with firms and individuals likewise engaged in the business of distributing and selling or of manufacturing, distributing and selling sash, windows, doors, molding, and mill work in commerce among and between the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 4. In the course of the operation of said business, and for the purpose of inducing individuals, firms, and corporations to purchase its sash, windows, doors, molding, and mill work, respondent has caused catalogs and price lists to be printed and circulated throughout the various States of the United States to customers and prospective customers. In all of said catalogs and price lists the respondent has caused its corporate name "Lumber Mills Co." to be prominently and conspicuously displayed. Said corporate name containing the word "Mills," is also prominently displayed on respondent's letterheads, order blanks, invoices, and other business literature. Respondent has also adopted a design, the same consisting of the word "Lumber" in cut-out letters with a black background and the letters "MILLS CO." in considerably larger type directly thereunder, the entire design being shaped somewhat like a shield and having the general appearance of a trademark. In some of its advertising literature the respondent has also made use of the following statement: "Prices are going higher. In the face of a rising market we are offering these remarkable values at this time to keep our factory busy during the winter months, to help employment and to help our dealer customers in combatting mail order competition."

The use of the word "Mills" in its corporate name and in the design above referred to, together with the use of statements identical with or similar to the hereinabove quoted statement serve as representations to the respondent's customers, prospective customers and the general buying public that the respondent owns, operates, or controls a mill wherein lumber products are converted or manufactured into sash, windows, doors, molding, and similar mill work.

PAR. 5. Respondent does not, in fact, own, operate, or control any mill or mills for the manufacture from lumber of mill work such as windows, sash, doors, and moldings. Respondent is not engaged in the business of manufacturing and is not itself a manufacturer as those terms are understood by the trade and the purchasing public generally, but is engaged solely in a business of distributing and selling sash, windows, doors, molding, and mill work manufactured from lumber by others.

PAR. 6. A substantial portion of the wholesale and retail purchasers of sash, windows, doors, molding, and mill work have expressed, and have, a preference for dealing direct with the manufacturer of products being purchased. Such purchasers believe that they secure closer prices, superior quality and other advantages in dealing direct with the manufacturer rather than a selling agency or middleman.

PAR. 7. In the course of the operation of said business, and for the purpose of inducing individuals, firms, and corporations to purchase its sash, windows, doors, molding, and mill work, the respondent, in its aforementioned catalogs and price lists, has made extensive use of the words "white pine" to designate the wood from which many of the wood products sold by it are made. The designation of said products by use of the words "white pine" in describing them serves as a representation to customers, prospective customers and the purchasing public generally that said products, to wit, sash, windows, doors and moldings are actually made of and from white pine.

The wood from which said sash, windows, doors, and moldings, designated by the respondent as "white pine," are actually produced, is obtained from that certain species of tree native to the mountainous regions of the Pacific slope, botanically designated as "Pinus ponderosa." Said Pinus ponderosa does not, either botanically or by common name or in the character of lumber made therefrom, belong to that group of pine species known as white pine as set forth in Paragraph Eight.

PAR. 8. There is a certain group of pine species known both popularly and botanically as "white pines." They are a species of the genus Pinus, having certain botanical marks of distinction from other pines, and are further characterized by light, close-grained, soft wood in which the early- and late-formed portions of the annual rings or layers are not sharply defined and have thin and nearly white sap wood. Among the species of pine belonging to said described white pine groups is that botanically known as "Pinus strobus." For many years Pinus strobus has been known as a building wood, has proved its remarkable value and has gained universal esteem among the trade and the purchasing public generally under its common designation of "white pine."

The wood of Pinus strobus is commonly characterized by its softness, ease of working, its ability to stay in place after being fitted, its comparative freedom from resinous substances, its durability in uses where exposed to influences of decay and by its exceptionally high degree of uniformity of quality both locally and throughout its range and in individual specimens of the species. In each of these respects, and especially as regards uniformity of quality, the said Pinus strobus excels Pinus ponderosa. By reason of the above described characteristics and excellence products made from the Pinus strobus have a general tendency in lumber markets to command, and in general have commanded, a substantially higher price than products made from Pinus ponderosa. A substantial portion of the purchasing public have expressed, and have, a preference for products made from genuine white pine over products made from Pinus ponderosa or any other species of wood.

PAR. 9. Many of the respondent's competitors who manufacture, distribute and sell sash, windows, doors, and molding and other wood products, including lumber, made from Pinus ponderosa do not in any way represent that said products are actually made from Pinus strobus or white pine but truthfully represent said products to be made from the wood of and from which they are actually made.

Many of respondent's competitors who distribute and sell sash, windows, doors, moldings and similar mill work do not manufacture the products sold by them and do not in any way represent that they are the manufacturer of said products.

PAR. 10. Each and all of the false and misleading statements and representations made by the respondent in designating itself as a manufacturer by use of the word "Mills" in its corporate name and otherwise and in designating or describing the wood from which its sash, windows, doors, and moldings are made as being white pine or Pinus strobus, as hereinabove set out, in its catalogs, price lists and other advertising literature, in offering for sale and in selling its products was, and is, calculated to, and had, and now has, a tendency and capacity to mislead and deceive a substantial portion of the purchasing public into the erroneous belief that all of said representations are true. Further, as a direct consequence of the mistaken and erroneous beliefs, induced by the acts, advertisements and misrepresentations of the respondent, as hereinabove detailed, a number of the consuming public have purchased a substantial volume of respondent's products such as sash, windows, doors and molding with the result that trade has been unfairly diverted to the respondent from its competitors likewise engaged in the business of distributing and selling similar products made from wood who truthfully advertise and represent the nature and character of their business and the nature and character of the wood from which said products are actually made. As a result thereof, substantial injury has been, and is now being, done by respondent to competition in commerce among and between the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 11. The above and foregoing acts, practices, and representations of the respondent have been and are, all to the prejudice of the public and respondent's competitors as aforesaid, and have been, and are, unfair methods of competition within the meaning and intent of Section 5 of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

sion, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, on May 4, 1936, issued and served its complaint in this proceeding upon respondent, Lumber Mills Co., charging it with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of the provisions of said Act. After the issuance of said complaint, and the filing of respondent's answer thereto, testimony and other evidence in support of the allegations of said complaint were introduced by James T. Welch, attorney for the Commission, before John J. Keenan, an examiner of the Commission theretofore duly designated by it, and in opposition to the allegations of the complaint by Edward M. Meany, for the respondent; and said testimony and other evidence were duly recorded and filed in the office of the Commission. Thereafter, the proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on the said complaint, the answer thereto, testimony and other evidence; and the Commission having duly considered the same, and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public, and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. The respondent, Lumber Mills Co., was organized on January 4, 1904 under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Illinois. Its principal office and place of business is located at 11 South La Salle Street, in the city of Chicago, State of Illinois. It is now, and has been, since its incorporation, engaged in the business of distributing and selling sash, windows, doors, molding, and mill work made from wood.

When orders are received for any of the products made from wood which it sells, it causes said products to be shipped and transported from its principal place of business in the State of Illinois, or from some other point where said products are manufactured or stored, to the purchasers thereof located at various points, in States of the United States other than the State of Illinois, or the State from which said shipments originate. The respondent has, at all times, maintained a constant current of trade in said products made from wood, in commerce among and between the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

At all times since its incorporation, respondent has been in substantial competition with other corporations and with firms and individuals likewise engaged in the business of distributing and selling, or of manufacturing, distributing and selling sash, windows, doors, molding, and mill work made from wood, in commerce among and between the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 2. In order to induce the purchase of the products made from wood which it sells, respondent has caused to be printed and circulated throughout the various States of the United States to customers and prospective customers, various catalogues and price-lists. In all of said catalogues and price-lists, its corporate name, "Lumber Mills Co.," has been prominently and conspicuously displayed. The corporate name containing the word "Mills" is also prominently displayed on respondent's letterheads, order blanks, invoices and other business literature. The respondent has also adopted a design consisting of the word "Lumber" in cut-out letters with a black background and the letters "Mills Co." in considerably larger type directly thereunder. The entire design is shaped like a shield and has a general appearance of a trade-mark. In some of its advertising literature, respondent has also made use of the following statement:

Prices are going higher. In the face of a rising market we are offering these remarkable values at this time to keep our factory busy during the winter months, to help employment and to help our dealer customers in combatting mail order competition.

The use of the word "Mills" in its corporate name and in the design above referred to, together with the use of statements identical with or similar to the statement, hereinabove quoted, serve as representations to the respondent's customers and the general buying public that the respondent owns, operates, or controls a mill wherein lumber products are converted or manufactured into sash, windows, doors, molding, and similar mill work.

PAR. 3. Respondent does not, in fact, own, operate or control any mill or mills for the manufacture from lumber of mill work such as windows, sash, doors, and molding. Respondent is not engaged in the business of manufacturing and is not itself a manufacturer as those terms are understood by the trade and the purchasing public generally, but is engaged solely in a business of distributing and selling sash, windows, doors, molding, and mill work manufactured from lumber by others.

PAR. 4. A substantial portion of the wholesale and retail purchasers of sash, windows, doors, molding and mill work have expressed, and have, a preference for dealing direct with the manufacturer of products being purchased. Such purchasers believe that they secure closer prices, superior quality and other advantages in dealing direct with the manufacturer rather than a selling agency or middleman.

PAR. 5. In its catalogues and price-lists, the respondent has also used the words "white pine" to designate the wood from which many of the wood products sold by it are made. This designation serves as a representation to customers, prospective customers and the purchasing public generally that said products are actually made of, and from, white pine.

The wood used in making said sash, windows, doors, and molding, designated by the respondent as being "white pine," is obtained from that certain species of tree native to the mountainous regions of the Pacific slope which is botanically designated as "Pinus ponderosa." Said Pinus ponderosa does not, either botanically or by common name, or in the character of lumber made therefrom, belong to that group of pine species known as white pine.

PAR. 6. There is a certain group of pine species known both popularly and botanically as "white pines." They are a species of the genus Pinus, having certain botanical marks of distinction from other pines, and are further characterized by light, close-grained, soft wood in which the early and late formed portions of the annual rings or layers are not sharply defined and have thin and nearly white sap wood. Among the species of pine belonging to said described white pine groups is that botanically known as "Pinus strobus." For many years Pinus strobus has been known as a building wood, has proved its remarkable value and has gained universal esteem among the trade and the purchasing public generally under its common designation of "white pine."

The wood of Pinus strobus is commonly characterized by its softness, ease of working, its ability to stay in place after being fitted, its comparative freedom from resinous substances, its durability in uses where exposed to influences of decay and by its exceptionally high degree of uniformity of quality both locally and throughout its range and in individual specimens of the species. In each of these respects, and especially as regards uniformity of quality, the said Pinus strobus excels Pinus ponderosa. By reason of the above described characteristics and excellence, products made from the Pinus strobus have a general tendency in lumber markets to command, and in general have commanded, a substantially higher price than products made from Pinus ponderosa. A substantial portion of the purchasing public have expressed, and have, a preference for products made from genuine white pine over products made from Pinus ponderosa or any other species of wood.

PAR. 7. Many of the respondent's competitors who manufacture, distribute and sell sash, windows, doors, and molding and other wood products, including lumber, made from Pinus ponderosa do not in any way represent that said products are actually made from Pinus strobus or white pine but truthfully represent said products to be made from the wood of and from which they are actually made.

Many of respondent's competitors who distribute and sell sash, windows, doors, moldings and similar mill work do not manufacture the products sold by them and do not in any way represent that they are the manufacturers of said products.

PAR. 8. The false and misleading statements and representations made by the respondent in designating itself as a manufacturer by use of the word "Mills" in its corporate name and in its advertising literature, and in designating or describing the wood from which its wood products are made as being white pine, in its catalogues, price-lists and other advertising literature, in offering for sale and selling its products, were, and are, calculate to, and had, and now have, a capacity and tendency to mislead and deceive a substantial portion of the purchasing public into the erroneous belief that all of said representations are true. As a direct consequence of the mistaken and erroneous beliefs, induced by the false and misleading statements and representations above referred to, the consuming public has purchased a substantial volume of respondent's products with the result that trade has been unfairly diverted to the respondent from its competitors likewise engaged in the business of distributing and selling similar products made from wood, who truthfully advertise and represent the nature and character of their business and the nature and character of the wood from which said products are actually made. As a result thereof, substantial injury has been, and is now being, done by respondent to competition, in commerce among and between the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondent, Lumber Mills Co., are to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce, within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST¹

This proceeding having been heard by the Federal Trade Commission upon the complaint of the Commission, the answer of respondent

ent, testimony and other evidence taken before John J. Keenan, an examiner of the Commission theretofore duly designated by it, in support of the allegations of said complaint and in opposition thereto, and the Commission having made its findings as to the facts and its conclusion that said respondent has violated the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled, "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

It is ordered, That the respondent, Lumber Mills Co., its officers, representatives, agents, and employees, in connection with the offering for sale, sale and distribution of sash, windows, doors, molding, and mill work made from wood in interstate commerce or in the District of Columbia, do forthwith cease and desist from:

1. Using the words "white pine," or the letters "w. p." alone or in conjunction with any other word or words of similar meaning to designate any lumber product made from the trees of the species Pinus Ponderosa;

2. Representing, directly or indirectly, through the use of the words "white pine" or the letters "w. p.," alone or in conjunction with any other word or letters, that sash, windows, doors, molding and mill work made from wood of the tree species Pinus Ponderosa are made from white pine;

3. Representing, directly or indirectly, through the use of the word "Mills" or any word or words of similar import and meaning in its business or advertising literature that it is the manufacturer of the products which it sells or that it owns, operates or controls any mills wherein said products are manufactured;

4. Using the word "Mills," alone or in conjunction with other words of similar import and meaning in its corporate or trade name, unless there appear in close proximity thereto and in letters of equal prominence other words clearly indicating that it is not the manufacturer of the products which it sells and does not own, operate or control the mills wherein said products are actually made.

It is further ordered, That the respondent shall, within 60 days after service upon it of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which it has complied with this order.

Docket 2817. Complaint, May 21, 1936—Decision, Dec. 7, 1936

Where a corporation engaged in the distribution and sale of a certain acetyl salicylic acid product under the designation "St. Joseph Aspirin," in substantial competition with those likewise engaged in the distribution and sale of such products, and including many who manufacture, distribute, and sell aspirin without misrepresenting the quality or character of their respective products or the effectiveness thereof in use for the treatment of various conditions of the body, and who do not falsely disparage such products of their respective competitors; in advertising the same in newspapers and periodicals of general circulation throughout the United States, together with featured display of the aforesaid name of its said product—

(a) Represented that same gave quicker relief than, and was superior to, other aspirin and was fully effective for pains and colds and always brought prompt relief to those suffering therefrom, and that it exceeded in purity and accuracy of ingredients the rigid standards set by the United States Government, through such statements, in substance, as thus indicated, and "Brings quicker relief", etc.;

Facts being that it does not give quicker relief than other aspirin of standard quality that meets requirements of United States Pharmacopoeia, is not fully effective for treatment of pains and colds and has no effect on the causative factors thereof, its use does not always bring prompt relief to those suffering from conditions named, Government has no stipulated standards for aspirin, and specifications of the said Pharmacopoeia are minimum, with no upper limit, and its aforesaid representations and statements, with respect to nature and effect of its said product, were exaggerated, misleading and untrue, and unfairly disparaged such products of its competitors; and

(b) Represented that the cellophane wrappings of the containers of its said aspirin protected the purity of said product and were materially beneficial thereto, and that such a product required such wrapping under usual and normal conditions of sale to protect it from deterioration caused by moisture, and that failure so to wrap such products decreased their value or potency, through such statements as "Purity further protected by moisture-proof cellophane wrapping," and "to guard this purity further, each package is wrapped and sealed in moisture-proof cellophane;"

Facts being aspirin does not dissolve or deteriorate under usual and customary methods of merchandising, and wrapping of the containers of such product in moisture proof cellophane wrapping does not add to or protect the purity thereof and is not materially beneficial thereto, and failure of manufacturer or distributor of such products thus to wrap same does not decrease their value or potency;

With capacity and tendency to mislead and deceive a substantial portion of purchasing public into erroneous belief that its said "St. Joseph Aspirin"

Complaint

gave quicker relief than other aspirin and had the properties thus claimed and implied therefor as above set forth, and that aspirin requires such cellophane wrapping as above indicated, and further to mislead and deceive a substantial portion of such public into erroneous and mistaken beliefs that aspirin products of competitors were inferior to and less effective than its said products for the reason they were not thus enclosed and for other reasons, and with result that a substantial number of the consuming public bought a substantial volume of its said product, and trade was unfairly diverted to it from competitors likewise engaged in distribution and sale of aspirin and who truthfully advertise and represent their products and the effectiveness thereof in use; to the injury of competition in commerce:

Held, That such acts and practices were to the prejudice of the public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition.

Lake-Spiro-Cohn and Goodman & Galella, of Memphis, Tenn., for respondent.

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that Plough, Inc., a corporation, hereinafter referred to as respondent, has been and now is using unfair methods of competition in commerce as "commerce" is defined in said act, and it appearing to the Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent, Plough, Inc., is a corporation, organized, existing, and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Delaware, with its principal office and place of business located in the city of Memphis, State of Tennessee. Respondent is now, and has been for some years, engaged in the business of distributing and selling, in commerce as herein set out, a certain acetyl salicylic acid product known as "St. Joseph Aspirin."

PAR. 2. Said respondent, being engaged in business as aforesaid, causes said aspirin, when sold, to be transported from its principal place of business in the State of Tennessee to purchasers thereof located at various points in other States of the United States and in the District of Columbia. Respondent now maintains, and has maintained at all times, a constant current of trade and commerce in said aspirin so distributed and sold by it, among and between the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 3. In the course and conduct of its said business, respondent is now, and has been, in substantial competition with other corporations, firms, and individuals likewise engaged in the business of distributing and selling acetyl salicylic acid products such as aspirin, in commerce among and between the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 4. In the course and operation of said business, and for the purpose of inducing individuals, firms, and corporations to purchase said St. Joseph aspirin, respondent has caused advertisements to be inserted in newspapers and periodicals of general circulation throughout the United States. In all of said advertisements, respondent has caused the name of said product to wit: St. Joseph aspirin, to be prominently and conspicuously displayed, together with the following statements:

- (1) Brings quicker relief.
Fully effective for pains and colds.
Challenges the world in prompt pain relief.
Stops pain promptly.
It always brings prompt relief from pain and colds.
- (2) Even exceeds in purity the rigid standards of the United States Government.
So pure and accurate that it exceeds the rigid standards of the United States Government.
- (3) Purity further protected by moisture proof cellophane wrapping.
And to guard this purity further, each package is wrapped and sealed in moisture proof cellophane.

All of said statements, together with many similar statements, appearing in respondent's advertisements purport to be descriptive of its product. In all of its advertising literature, the respondent represents, through the statements and representations herein set out and other statements of similar import and effect, that (1) St. Joseph aspirin gives quicker relief than, and is superior to, other aspirin; (2) that St. Joseph aspirin is fully effective for pains and colds and its use always brings prompt relief to those suffering from pain and colds; (3) that St. Joseph aspirin exceeds in purity and accuracy of ingredients rigid standards set by the United States Government; (4) that wrapping of containers for St. Joseph aspirin in cellophane wrappings protects the purity of, and is materially beneficial to, said aspirin; and (5) that aspirin requires wrapping in cellophane, under usual and normal conditions of sale, to protect it from deterioration caused by moisture and failure to so wrap aspirin products decreases their value or potency.

PAR. 5. The representations made by respondents with respect to the nature and effect of its aspirin when used are grossly exaggerated, false, misleading, and untrue. In addition, said representations and statements serve to, directly and by inference, disparage aspirin products of respondent's competitors. In truth and in fact, St. Joseph aspirin does not give quicker relief than other aspirin of standard quality and is not superior to other aspirin of standard quality. It is not fully effective for the treatment of pains and colds and has no effect on the causative factors of such conditions of the human body and its use does not always bring prompt relief to those suffering from the conditions named. The United States Government has not established standards for aspirin and such specifications for aspirin as are set out in the United States Pharmacopoeia are minimum specifications and there is no upper limit thereof. In truth and in fact, aspirin does not dissolve or deteriorate under the usual and customary methods of merchandising and the wrapping of the container of said product in a cellophane wrapping does not add to or protect the purity of said product and is not materially beneficial to said product. Failure to wrap aspirin in cellophane wrapping does not decrease the value or potency thereof.

Complaint

PAR. 6. There are among respondent's competitors many who manufacture, distribute and sell aspirin who in no way misrepresent the quality or character of their respective aspirin or its effectiveness in use for the treatment of various conditions of the human body and who do not falsely disparage the aspirin products of their respective competitors.

PAR. 7. Each and all of the false and misleading statements and representations made by the respondent in designating and describing its product and the effectiveness of its product, as hereinabove set out, in offering for sale and selling St. Joseph aspirin was, and is, calculated to, and had, and now has, the tendency and capacity to mislead and deceive a substantial portion of the purchasing public into the erroneous belief that all of said representations are true, and to the further erroneous belief that aspirin products of its competitors are inferior to and less effective than St. Joseph aspirin for the reason that said products are not enclosed in cellophane wrappings and for other reasons. Further, as a direct consequence of the mistaken and erroneous beliefs, induced by the acts and misrepresentations of the respondent, as hereinabove detailed, a substantial number of the consuming public has purchased a substantial volume of respondent's St. Joseph aspirin with the result that trade has been unfairly diverted to the respondent from competitors likewise engaged in the business of distributing and selling aspirin who truthfully advertise and represent their products and the effectiveness of said products in use. As a result thereof, injury has been, and is now being, done by respondent to competition in commerce among and between the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 8. The above and foregoing acts, practices, and representations of the respondent have been, and are, all to the prejudice of the public and respondent's competitors as aforesaid, and have been, and are, unfair methods of competition within the meaning and intent of Section 5 of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, on May 21, 1936, issued and served its complaint in this proceeding upon respondent Plough, Inc., charging it with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of the provisions of said act. After the issuance of said complaint, and the filing of respondent's answer thereto, testimony and other evidence in support of the allegations of said complaint were introduced by James T. Welch, attorney for the Commission, before John J. Keenan, an examiner of the Commission theretofore duly designated by it, and in opposition to the allegations of the complaint by Leo Goodman, attorney for the respondent; and said testimony and other evidence were duly recorded and filed in the office of the Commission. Thereafter, the proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on the said complaint, the answer thereto, testimony and other evidence; and the Commission having duly considered the same, and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public, and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent Plough, Inc., is a corporation, organized and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of Delaware. Its principal office and place of business is located in the city of Memphis, State of Tennessee. It has been, and is now, engaged in the business of distributing and selling, in commerce among and between the various States of the United States, a certain acetyl salicylic acid product designated by it as "St. Joseph Aspirin."

PAR. 2. When orders are received for said aspirin, the respondent causes said product to be shipped from its place of business in the State of Tennessee to the purchasers thereof located at various points in other States of the United States and in the District of Columbia. Respondent has at all times maintained a constant current of trade in the aspirin distributed and sold by it, in commerce among and between the various States of the United States.

PAR. 3. In the sale of said St. Joseph aspirin, Plough, Inc., is now, and has been, in substantial competition with other corporations and with firms and individuals likewise engaged in the business of distributing and selling acetyl salicylic acid products, such as aspirin, in commerce among and between the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 4. For the purpose of inducing the purchase of St. Joseph aspirin, respondent has caused various advertisements to be inserted in newspapers and periodicals of general circulation throughout the United States. In all of said advertisements, it has caused the name of said product, to wit: St. Joseph Aspirin, to be prominently and conspicuously displayed, together with the following and many similar statements:

- (1) Brings quicker relief.
Fully effective for pains and colds.
Challenges the world in prompt pain relief.
Stops pain promptly.
It always brings prompt relief from pain and colds.
- (2) Even exceeds in purity the rigid standards of the United States Government.
So pure and accurate that it exceeds the rigid standards of the United States Government.
- (3) Purity further protected by moisture proof cellophane wrapping.
And to guard this purity further, each package is wrapped and sealed in moisture proof cellophane.

All of said statements, together with many similar statements, appearing in respondent's advertisements, purport to be descriptive of its product. In all of its advertising literature, the respondent represents, through the statements and representations herein set out and other statements of similar import and effect, that (1) St. Joseph aspirin gives quicker relief than, and is superior to, other aspirin; (2) that St. Joseph aspirin is fully effective for pains and colds and its use always brings prompt relief to those suffering from pain and colds; (3) that St. Joseph aspirin exceeds in purity and accuracy of ingredients rigid standards set by the United States Government; (4) that wrapping of containers for St. Joseph aspirin in cellophane wrappings protects the purity of, and is materially beneficial to, said aspirin; and (5) that aspirin requires wrapping in cellophane, under usual and normal conditions of sale, to protect it from deterioration caused by moisture and that failure to so wrap aspirin products decreases their value or potency.

PAR. 5. The aforesaid representations made by respondent with respect to the nature and effect of its aspirin product are exaggerated, misleading and untrue. In addition, said representations and statements serve to, directly or by inference, unfairly disparage aspirin products of respondent's competitors. St. Joseph aspirin does not give quicker relief than other aspirin of standard quality that meets the requirements of the United States Pharmacopoeia. It is not fully effective for the treatment of pains and colds and has no effect on the causative factors of either pains or colds, but does possess analgesic properties. Its use does not always bring prompt relief to those suffering from the conditions named. The United States Government has no stipulated standards for aspirin. Such specifications for aspirin as are set out in the United States Pharmacopoeia are minimum specifications and there is no upper limit thereof. The requirements of the United States Pharmacopoeia are as follows:

Acetyl salicylic acid when dried to constant weight over sulphuric acid contains not less than 99.5 per cent of acetyl salicylic acid. (Page 14, Pharmacopoeia of the United States, 11 Decennial Revision.)

St. Joseph aspirin does exceed the requirements of the United States Pharmacopoeia in that it contains more than 99.5% of acetyl salicylic acid. Aspirin does not dissolve or deteriorate under usual and customary methods of merchandising the product and the wrapping of the container of said product in a moisture proof cellophane wrapping does not add to or protect the purity of the product and is not materially beneficial to said product. The failure of the manufacturer or distributor of aspirin products to wrap said products in cellophane wrapping does not decrease the value or potency of said products.

PAR. 6. There are among respondent's competitors many who manufacture, distribute and sell aspirin who in no way misrepresent the quality or character of their respective aspirin or its effectiveness in use for the treatment of various conditions of the human body and who do not falsely disparage the aspirin products of their respective competitors.

PAR. 7. The various statements and representations made by the respondent in describing its product, St. Joseph aspirin, and the effectiveness of said product in use, have the capacity and tendency to mislead and deceive a substantial portion of the purchasing public into the erroneous and mistaken beliefs (1) that St. Joseph aspirin gives quicker relief than other aspirin; (2) that St. Joseph aspirin is fully effective for pains and colds and its use always brings prompt relief to those suffering from pains and colds; (3) that St. Joseph aspirin exceeds in purity and accuracy of ingredients the rigid standards set by the United States Government; (4) that the wrapping of containers of St. Joseph aspirin in cellophane wrappers protects the purity of and is materially beneficial to said aspirin; and (5) that aspirin requires wrapping in cellophane under usual and normal conditions of sale to protect it from deterioration caused by moisture and that failure to so wrap aspirin products decreases their value or potency. Said representations and statements have also had the capacity and tendency to mislead and deceive a substantial portion of the purchasing public into the erroneous and mistaken beliefs that aspirin products of its competitors are inferior to and less effective than St. Joseph aspirin for the reason that said products are not enclosed in cellophane wrappings and for other reasons.

As a direct consequence of these mistakes and erroneous beliefs, a substantial number of the consuming public have purchased a substantial volume of St. Joseph aspirin with the result that trade has been unfairly diverted to the respondent from competitors likewise engaged in the business of distributing and selling aspirin who truthfully advertise and represent their products and the effectiveness of said products in use. As a result of the acts and practices, herein set out, injury has been, and is now being, done by respondent to competition in commerce among and between the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondent, Plough, Inc., are to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce, within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

This proceeding having been heard by the Federal Trade Commission upon the complaint of the Commission, the answer of respondent, testimony and other evidence taken before John J. Keenan, an examiner of the Commission theretofore duly designated by it, in support of the allegations of said complaint and in opposition thereto, and the Commission having made its findings as to the facts and its conclusion that said respondent has violated the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

It is ordered, That the respondent, Plough, Inc., its officers, representatives, agents, and employees, in connection with the offering for sale, sale, and distribution of a certain acetyl salicylic acid product known as "St. Joseph Aspirin," in interstate commerce or in the District of Columbia, do forthwith cease and desist from representing either directly or by inference, through advertisements inserted in newspapers, magazines, and periodicals of general circulation, radio announcements, booklets, pamphlets, or other advertising literature, or through any other means:

1. that St. Joseph aspirin gives quicker relief than other aspirin;
2. that St. Joseph aspirin is fully effective for pains and colds, and is the best thing in the world to stop pain, and its use always brings prompt relief to those suffering from pains and colds;
3. that St. Joseph aspirin exceeds in purity and accuracy of ingredients, rigid standards set by the United States Government;
4. that wrapping of containers for St. Joseph aspirin in transparent cellulose film, commonly designated as cellophane, preserves or adds to the purity or the freshness of aspirin, or is materially beneficial to said aspirin;
5. that aspirin requires wrapping in transparent cellulose film, commonly designated as cellophane, under usual and normal conditions of sale, to protect it from deterioration caused by moisture;
6. that failure to wrap aspirin products in moisture-proof transparent cellulose film, commonly designated as cellophane, decreases the value or potency of said aspirin.

It is further ordered, That the respondent shall, within 60 days after service upon it of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which it has complied with this order.

JEAN VIVADOU AND HENRY G. LUBIN, DOING BUSINESS AS JEAN VIVADOU COMPANY

COMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION
OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 26, 1914

Docket 2820. Complaint, May 26, 1936—Decision, Dec. 8, 1936.

Where two partners engaged in the manufacture and sale of toilet sundries, and with principal and only office or place of business in New York City—

- (a) Represented, through use of the word "Paris" in their letterheads, circulars, containers, and advertising matter, that they maintained offices in said city, notwithstanding fact they had no office, factory, or branch in said city, or in any other city or town so named, with result that a substantial portion of purchasing public was led to believe that their said products were made in or imported from France, for the toilet articles of which there is a well-known and marked preference on the part of many members of said public;
- (b) Described a certain toilet article, in invoices, literature, advertising and correspondence, as "Lagoona" and "Sea Sponge," and in circulars accompanying the same and in its advertising describing the same as therapeutic, ultra-violet ray treated, and a great health discovery, etc., referred thereto as a "sponge," "Sea Sponge," "Wonder Sponge," "natural sea growth," "spawned in the romantic far away depths of the South Pacific waters, plucked by adventurous men," and subjected to the "alchemy of the waters of the Pacific Ocean," facts being said article was a vegetable which resembled an elongated gourd, grown on bushes or shrubs on land and known and described as a "loofa," and aforesaid various statements were false; and
- (c) Described a certain toilet article, in its invoices, correspondence, circulars and advertising, as a "Swansdown Puff," facts being said article was not made from that especially grown and treated goose down or swansdown, as known to trade and consuming public and as long thus designated and known, but was made from loose feathers or Marabou and was a decidedly cheap and inferior imitation of the article known and designated by trade as "Swansdown;"

With effect of misleading and deceiving a substantial portion of purchasing and consuming public into erroneous belief that all said representations were true, and into purchase of their said products in reliance thereon, and of unfairly diverting trade to them from competitors engaged in the sale in commerce of similar toilet sundries, who truthfully represent the nature and facts of their respective businesses, and character and quality of their respective products, to the substantial injury of the purchasing public and of other dealers and manufacturers of such sundries in competition with them, and with effect of placing in the hands of wholesalers, jobbers, and retailers the means of making such false and misleading representations to the purchasing public, and of thereby increasing their own sales of such dishonestly advertised or represented articles, and lessening market for similar goods sold by other merchants, true nature of which is honestly stated:

Held, That such acts and practices were to the prejudice of the public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition.

Before Mr. John W. Norwood, trial examiner.

Mr. James M. Hammond for the Commission.

Mr. Stephen M. Bell, of New York City, for respondents.

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to a provision of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that Jean Vivadou and Henry G. Lubin, copartners doing business under the firm name and style of Jean Vivadou Company, hereinafter referred to as respondents, have been and are using unfair methods of competition in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in said act, and it appearing to the Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint, stating its charges in that respect, as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondents, Jean Vivadou and Henry G. Lubin, are copartners, doing business under the firm name and style of Jean Vivadou Company, with their office and principal place of business located at 135 West 20th Street, New York City, in the State of New York. They are now, and have been, for a long time last past, engaged in the business of manufacturing toilet sundries in the State of New York, and shipping said products, when sold, to the purchasers thereof, some located in the State of New York, and others located in various States of the United States, and in the District of Columbia, and there is now, and has been for more than one year last past, a constant current of trade and commerce by respondents in the aforesaid toilet sundries. In the course and conduct of their business the respondents are now, and for more than one year last past have been, in substantial competition with other individuals, and with corporations, firms, and partnerships engaged in the sale of toilet sundries between and among the various States of the United States and the District of Columbia.

PAR. 2. Respondents market their products under the trade name "De Marsay," which name is printed on the containers in which their products are sold, in circulars accompanying the same, and on its letterheads and other advertising matter.

PAR. 3. In the course and conduct of their business as described in paragraphs 1 and 2 hereof, and for a long time last past, respondents herein, in soliciting the sale of and selling their merchandise in commerce, as defined in said act, make use on their letterheads, circulars, trade literature, and advertising matter, in making and promoting the sales of their products as defined in paragraphs 1 and 2 hereof, of the word "Paris" in a manner calculated, or tending to show, and to represent, either directly or by implication, that they maintain offices at Paris, France, it being well known to respondents that many members of the purchasing public have a marked preference for toilet articles made in and imported from France. By means of which statements or representations a substantial portion of the purchasing public are led to believe that respondents' products are made in or imported from France.

Complaint

In truth and in fact respondents have or maintain no office, factory, or plant, in Paris, France, or any other city or town by the name of Paris, and their principal and only office or place of business is located in New York City, State of New York.

PAR. 4. In the course and conduct of their business, and for a long time last past, respondents herein are and have been soliciting the sale of and selling in commerce, as defined in paragraph 1 hereof, a toilet article described in their invoices, literature, advertising and correspondence, as:

LAGOONA

SEA SPONGE

In the circulars accompanying said article and in its advertising, statements are made in reference to the same, such as:

THERAPEUTIC

Ultra-Violet Ray Treated.

Sea Sponge for Young and Old.

A great health discovery—LAGOONA, Spawned in the romantic far away depths of the South Pacific waters, plucked by adventurous men—LAGOONA is then taken to the laboratories of a nationally known chemist. The alchemy of the waters of the Pacific Ocean is within this Natural sea growth. LAGOONA by itself is a Wonder Sponge, but, with its further treatment and additional life-giving forces of Ultra-Violet Rays, it becomes an aid to good health.

In truth and in fact, the article described above is not a "Sea Sponge," is not "Therapeutic," is not "Ultra-Violet Ray Treated," is not "Spawned in the far away depths of the South Pacific waters," is not "plucked by adventurous men," has never been subjected to the "alchemy of the waters of the Pacific Ocean," and is not "taken to the laboratories of a nationally known chemist," is not a "Natural sea growth," is not a "Wonder sponge," or a "sponge," but is a vegetable, resembling an elongated gourd, which grows on bushes or shrubs on land, and is a vegetable known and described as a loofah.

PAR. 5. In the course and conduct of their business, and for a long time last past, respondents have been and are now soliciting the sale of and selling in commerce, as defined in paragraph 1 hereof, a toilet article described in its invoices, correspondence, circulars, and advertising as a "Swansdown Puff."

In truth and in fact, the toilet article designated by respondent as a "Swansdown Puff" is not Swansdown as that article is known to the trade and to the consuming public, but consists of a puff made and manufactured from the feathers of the Marabou, a species of stork.

PAR. 6. The acts and practices of respondent in falsely representing, advertising, marking and branding their products, or containers thereof, in such a manner as to indicate, or to import or imply, that they have an office or branch in the city of Paris, and the practice of falsely marking, branding or representing in their circulars, advertising, or invoices, a toilet article known as a "loofah" as being a "sponge," "Sea Sponge," a "Wonder sponge" which is "Therapeutic," "Ultra-Violet Ray Treated," "A great health discovery," "Spawned in South Pacific waters," and in the other ways described in paragraph 4 hereof, and the further practice of the respondents in falsely marking, branding, advertising, and selling puffs manufactured from stock feathers as "Swansdown," are all, or any of such representations are, calculated to mislead and deceive, and have and have had the capacity, tendency and effect of misleading and deceiving, and have misled and deceived a substantial portion of the purchasing and consuming public into the erroneous belief that all of said representations are true and to purchase respondents' products in reliance on said representations. Because of such erroneous beliefs, trade is diverted to respondents from competitors engaged in the sale in interstate commerce of similar toilet sundries. As a result thereof, substantial injury has been and is now being done by respondents to the purchasing public, and other dealers and manufacturers of toilet sundries who truthfully represent their respective products, in competition with respondents, in commerce among and between the various States of the United States and the District of Columbia.

Respondents have also placed in the hands of wholesalers, jobbers, and retailers, the means of making such false and misleading representations as above described, to the purchasing public, by which means, or any of them, they have increased their own sales of said toilet articles so dishonestly advertised or represented, thereby lessening the market for similar goods sold by other merchants, the true nature of which is honestly stated.

PAR. 7. There are among the competitors of respondents, engaged in the sale of toilet sundries, as set forth in paragraph 1 hereof, individuals, corporations, firms, and partnerships, who do have offices or branches in Paris, and who do sell "sponges" or "sea sponges," and who do sell "swansdown" puffs in interstate commerce and so represent their products; and there are likewise other firms, corporations, partnerships, and individuals likewise engaged in interstate commerce, who do not have offices or branches in Paris, who do sell the article known and described as a loofah, and who do sell puffs made from marabou or stork feathers, which competitors do not in any manner misrepresent the location, nature, or extent of their business, or the nature, source or composition of their products.

PAR. 8. The above and foregoing acts, practices and representations of the respondents have been and are all to the prejudice of the public and respondents' competitors, as aforesaid, and have been, and are, unfair methods of competition within the meaning and intent of Section 5 of an Act of Congress entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled, "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, on May 26, 1936, issued and served its complaint in this proceeding upon the respondents Jean Vivadou and Henry G. Lubin, copartners doing business under the firm name and style of Jean Vivadou Company, charging them with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of the provisions of said act. After the issuance of said complaint, and the filing of respondents' answer thereto, testimony and other evidence in support of the allegations of said complaint were introduced by James M. Hammond, attorney for the Commission, before John W. Norwood, an examiner of the Commission theretofore duly designated by it, and in opposition to the allegations of the complaint by Stephen M. Bell, attorney for the respondents; and said testimony and other evidence were duly recorded and filed in the office of the Commission.

Thereafter the proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on the said complaint, the answer hereto, testimony and other evidence and brief in support of the complaint; and the Commission having duly considered the record, and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPHS 1. Respondents, Jean Vivadou and Henry G. Lubin, are copartners doing business under the firm name and style of Jean Vivadou Company, with their office and principal place of business located at 135 West 20th Street, New York, in the State of New York. They are now, and have been, for a long time last past, engaged in the business of manufacturing toilet sundries in the State of New York and shipping said products, when sold, to the purchasers thereof, some located in the State of New York, and others located in various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia. There is now, and has been for more than one year last past, a constant current of trade and commerce by respondents in the aforesaid toilet sundries. In the course and conduct of their business the respondents are now, and for more than one year last past have been in substantial competition with other individuals, and with corporations, firms, and partnerships, likewise engaged in the sale of toilet sundries, in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of their business, respondents herein, in soliciting the sale of and selling their merchandise in commerce, as herein set out, make use in their letterheads, circulars, containers, and advertising matter of the word "Paris" in a manner calculated to, and having the effect of serving as a representation that they maintain offices at Paris, France. It is well known to respondents and to the trade generally, that many members of the purchasing public have a marked preference for toilet articles made in and imported from France. By means of said statements or representations, a substantial portion of the purchasing public is led to believe that respondents' products are made in, or imported from, France.

In truth and in fact, respondents have or maintain no office, factory, or branch, in Paris, France, or any other city or town by the name of Paris. Their principal and only office or place of business is located in New York, State of New York.

PAR. 3. In the course and conduct of their business, respondents herein are now, and have been, soliciting the sale of and selling in commerce as defined in paragraph 1 hereof, a toilet article described in their invoices, literature, advertising and correspondence, as:

Findings

24 F. T. C.

LAGOONA

SEA SPONGE

In the circulars accompanying said article and in its advertising, statements are made in reference to the same, such as:

THERAPEUTIC

Ultra-Violet Ray Treated

Sea Sponge for Young and Old

A great health discovery—LAGOONA, Spawned in the romantic far away depths of the South Pacific waters, plucked by adventurous men—LAGOONA is then taken to the laboratories of a nationally known chemist. The alchemy of the waters of the Pacific Ocean is within this Natural sea growth. LAGOONA by itself is a Wonder Sponge, but, with its further treatment and additional life-giving forces of Ultra-Violet Rays, it becomes an aid to good health.

The article described above is not a "Sponge," a "Sea Sponge," or "Wonder Sponge," or a "Natural sea growth," was not "Spawned in the romantic far away depths of the South Pacific waters," was not "plucked by adventurous men," and has never been subjected to the "Alchemy of the waters of the Pacific Ocean," but is a vegetable resembling an elongated gourd which grows on bushes or shrubs on land, and is known and described as a "loofah."

PAR. 4. In the course and conduct of their business, respondents have been, and are now, soliciting the sale of and selling in commerce as defined in paragraph 1 hereof, a toilet article described in its invoices, correspondence, circulars and advertising as a "Swansdown Puff."

This toilet sundry designated by respondents as a "Swansdown Puff" is not made from Swansdown as that article is known to the trade and to the consuming public but consists of a puff made and manufactured from Marabou, a trade name for loose feathers of various types, usually used for trimming women's clothing.

Swansdown is now, and for many years past has been, a trade name used to designate especially grown and treated goose down, and by such name it is known to the trade and the purchasing public. It is procured principally from France and is obtained by plucking the large feathers from geese while growing so that when mature the birds' skin is covered only with down. The geese are then killed and skinned, the skin being tanned with the down attached in the same manner as a fur. It is from this skin, with the down attached, that Swansdown Puffs are manufactured, by cutting out circular disks of the size desired and sewing them together with the down on the outside. The respondents' alleged Swansdown puffs were not made from this material, but from loose feathers stitched together, and are a decidedly cheap and inferior imitation of the article known and designated by the trade name "Swansdown".

PAR. 5. The acts and practices of respondents in falsely representing, advertising, marking and branding their products, or containers thereof, in such a manner as to indicate, or to import or imply, that they have an office or branch in the city of Paris, and the practice of falsely marking, branding, or representing in their circulars, advertising, or invoices, a toilet article known as a "Loofah" as being a "Sponge," "Sea Sponge," or a "Wonder Sponge," or a "Natural Sea Growth," and the further practice of the respondents in falsely marking, branding, advertising, and selling puffs manufactured from Marabou feathers as "Swansdown," are calculated to mislead and deceive, and have the capacity, tendency, and effect of misleading and deceiving, and have misled and deceived a substantial portion of the purchasing and consuming public into the erroneous belief that all of said representations are true, and into the purchase of respondents' products in reliance on said representations. Because of such erroneous beliefs, trade is unfairly diverted to respondents from competitors engaged in the sale in interstate commerce of similar toilet sundries, who truthfully represent the nature and size of their respective businesses and the character and quality of their respective products. As a result thereof, substantial injury has been, and is now being, done by respondents to the purchasing public, and to other dealers and manufacturers of toilet sundries in competition with respondents, in commerce among and between the various States of the United States and the District of Columbia.

Respondents have also placed in the hands of wholesalers, jobbers and retailers, the means of making such false and misleading representations as above described, to the purchasing public, by which means, or any of them, they have increased their own sales of said toilet articles so dishonestly advertised or represented, thereby lessening the market for similar goods sold by other merchants, the true nature of which is honestly stated.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondents, Jean Vivadou and Henry G. Lubin, copartners doing business under the firm name and style of Jean Vivadou Company, are to the prejudice of the public and of respondents' competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce, within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes.”

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

It is ordered, That the respondents Jean Vivadou and Henry G. Lubin and each of them, as individuals and as copartners doing business under the firm name and style of Jean Vivadou Company, or under any other trade name, their representatives, agents, and employees, in connection with the offering for sale, sale and distribution of their products, including toilet sundries, in interstate commerce or in the District of Columbia, do forthwith cease and desist from:

(1) Representing through the use of the word “Paris”, alone or in conjunction with any other word or words, or through any means whatsoever, that they own, operate, or maintain offices, branches or factories at Paris, France, or at any place other than in the city of New York, State of New York, or where such offices, branches, or factories are actually maintained;

(2) Designating or representing in any manner that the vegetable growth known as a “Loofah” is a Sponge, a Sea Sponge, a Wonder Sponge, or a Natural Sea Growth, or making any similar representations;

(3) Using the term “Swansdown” in connection with the word “Puff”, or any other word to designate or describe an article unless said article is manufactured from the down of a swan or from the specially prepared skin of a goose with its original down attached;

(4) Representing an article made from Marabou feathers as being Swansdown.

It is further ordered, That the respondents shall, within 60 days after service upon them of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which they have complied with this order.

IN THE MATTER OF

FALL RIVER WHOLESALE GROCERS' ASSOCIATION
ET AL.

COMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION
OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 28, 1914

Docket 2677. Complaint, Jan. 4, 1936—Decision, Dec. 9, 1936.

Where a wholesale grocers association, and the members thereof, serving a trade area in certain States contiguous to a Massachusetts city; in pursuance of a policy, agreed upon and adopted by such members, of refusing to deal with manufacturers of grocery products who had sold, or sold, their products to retailers in the region in question—

- (a) Informed manufacturers of policy of such association and its members, and threatened to refuse, and refused, to purchase from such manufacturers as failed or refused to comply with their wishes that they do not distribute their products to retailers thereof;
- (b) Placed on the unfair list of the association, for selling to large retailers in region in question, name of a large milk product manufacturer, and warned its members to cease handling products thereof under penalty of forfeiting their association deposits, and advised manufacturer of such action and that association members would no longer be allowed to do business with it;
- (c) Issued and distributed a letter announcing that its members had "decided definitely to cooperate only with those producers, packers, or manufacturers who will confine themselves to selling their merchandise to wholesale grocers," and requested that the recipients thereof advise as to whether or not they would cooperate in the matter;
- (d) Reached an agreement between their said wholesalers' association and that of the retail grocers in the region in question, working to the prevention and restraint of purchases by retailers direct from manufacturers, and threatened to suspend any wholesaler member who refused to sign and subscribe thereto; and
- (e) Took, at different times, course of action similar to that hereinabove indicated against large sugar and coffee manufacturers;

With result that manufacturers were coerced into refusing to sell their products direct to retailers, including large retailer competitors of association members, sales and distribution by manufacturers to retailers in region in question were restrained and prevented, and interstate commerce in groceries was unduly restrained and hindered, and there was an undue tendency to substantially lessen, restrict, and suppress competition in interstate sale of such products therein:

Held, That such acts and practices were to the prejudice of the public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition.

Complaint

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that each and all of the parties named in the caption hereof have been and now are using unfair methods of competition in commerce as "commerce" is defined in said act, and it appearing to the Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint and states its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent Fall River Wholesale Grocers' Association is a corporation organized, existing, and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Massachusetts, for the asserted purpose of furthering harmonious relations between the wholesale and the retail grocery dealers of Fall River in said State, and has its principal place of business at said Fall River. Said respondent had and has as its particular avowed purpose to cooperate with the independent retail grocery stores in said Fall River and contiguous region in offering special sales and inducements to customers in an effort to meet the competition of the chain grocery stores. For brevity and convenience this respondent will be hereinafter designated as the "Wholesalers' Association."

Each of the respondents American Wholesale Grocery Company, Allen Slade & Company, Chabot Brothers, and Portuguese Wholesale Grocery Company, is a corporation organized, existing, and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Massachusetts.

Respondents Abraham I. Yamins and Samuel Levin are copartners doing business in the name of New England Wholesale Grocery Company; and respondents Murray S. Olinick and George Feinberg are copartners doing business in the name of Economy Wholesale Grocery Company.

Respondent Morris Horovitz is an individual trading as Fall River Paper & Supply Company; respondent Joseph Horovitz is an individual trading as Joseph Horovitz & Company; and respondent Philip J. Roy is an individual trading as Roy Paper Company.

Each of said respondents has its, their and his principal place of business in said city of Fall River, State of Massachusetts, and each of them except the Wholesalers' Association is engaged in the business of selling and distributing food and grocery products at wholesale in the region of said Fall River. Said Fall River region comprises not only said city of Fall River but also the trade area contiguous to it in the State of Massachusetts and also in the State of Rhode Island.

Each of said corporations, partnerships, and individuals was at all the times hereinafter mentioned and is a member of said Fall River Wholesale Grocers' Association for the purpose of promoting and protecting its, their and his common interests and business affairs, and said respondents will for brevity and convenience be hereinafter designated as "member respondents" when differentiation of them from respondent Wholesalers' Association is necessary. Said member respondents purchased and purchase in interstate commerce the food and grocery products sold and distributed by them in the said Fall River region from manufacturers and producers in other States than the State of Massachusetts and which products so purchased were and are shipped from such other States into the State of Massachusetts to said member respondents and were and are there sold and distributed by each of said member respondents to retailers in the States of Massachusetts and Rhode Island.

Respondent Wholesalers' Association is an organization which has provided and does provide a means or channel for its members acting in concert and in the name of said association to further their common interests in their businesses mentioned above, and each of the member respondents utilizes it for its, their or his private purposes. The acts of said association, therefore, have represented and do represent and have been and now are the acts of such members resulting from agreements, express or implied, between and among, and concerted action and conspiracy of all of, said respondents in their said common interests and in the furtherance of their said private purposes.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of the business and activities of respondent Wholesalers' Association and of the concerted action and conspiracy above stated of all the respondents, and at various times during the past three years, respondent Wholesalers' Association in behalf of itself and of each and all of said member respondents, and in pursuance of a policy agreed upon and adopted by said member respondents of refusing to deal with manufacturers of food and grocery products who have sold or sell such products to retailers thereof in the said Fall River region, or to wholesalers of such products in said region who are not members of respondent Wholesalers' Association, by the use of unlawful threats, intimidations, and boycotts has restrained and prevented and does restrain and prevent various manufacturers of such products selling and distributing the same in interstate commerce from making sales and distributions thereof in said Fall River region to any individual, partnership, or corporation in said region engaged in the sale and distribution of such products other than the member respondents above named, and specifically has by such unlawful means restrained and prevented and does restrain and prevent and has sought and does seek to restrain and prevent all such sales and distributions in said Fall River region by such manufacturers to retailers of such products and to wholesalers thereof who are not members of respondent Wholesalers' Association; and solely as a result of such unlawful threats, intimidations, and boycotts, various manufacturers of such products selling and distributing same in interstate commerce who have been ready, willing, and able to make sales and distributions thereof in said Fall River region to retailers of such products and to wholesalers thereof who are not members of respondent Wholesalers' Association, have been and are restrained and prevented from making any sales and distributions in interstate commerce of such products to certain of said retailers and to certain of said wholesalers who are not members of respondent Wholesalers' Association, and in some instances where some restricted sales and distributions in interstate commerce have been made to certain other of said retailers and of said wholesalers who are not members of respondent Wholesalers' Association by certain manufacturers, the member respondents have by agreement and concerted action among themselves and with respondent Wholesalers' Association discontinued making purchases in interstate commerce from such manufacturers of such products theretofore purchased in interstate commerce by them from such manufacturers and have thereupon and thereafter declined and refused to make any purchases whatever of such products from such manufacturers while and so long as such manufacturers continued to make sales and distributions in said Fall River region of such products to such retailers or to such wholesalers who are not members of respondent Wholesalers' Association.

In the course and conduct of the business and activities of respondent Wholesalers' Association and of the concerted action and conspiracy above stated of all the respondents, certain manufacturers of food and grocery products sold and distributed in interstate commerce have been compelled by respondents to accept pooled orders for such products for shipment in carload lots in order that the member respondents might obtain the advantage of the lower freight rate and incidental expenses applicable to carload shipments when the total of such pooled orders has been less than a carload lot, have been compelled in connection with such shipments to carry for their own account the unsold residuum of such carload shipments, but have been restrained and prevented in such instances from selling any part of such residuum in said Fall River region to retailers of such products or to wholesalers thereof who are not members of respondent Wholesalers' Association and instead have been required and compelled by boycotts and threats of boycott and other unlawful means to store said residuum in the custody of some one of the member respondents until such residuum has been purchased and absorbed by the member respondents in the due course of their businesses. In consequence of such action on the part of respondent Wholesalers' Association and of the member respondents, such manufacturers were obliged to and did actually discontinue selling their said products to such wholesalers who were not members of respondent Wholesalers' Association when and although said non-member wholesalers were ready, willing, and able to purchase said products.

In the course and conduct of the business and activities of the respondent American Wholesale Grocery Company and in furtherance of the concerted action and conspiracy above stated of all the respondents, said respondent threatened to boycott a certain manufacturer by refusal to continue handling its product if said manufacturer delivered to a public warehouse in Fall River the unsold residuum of its shipment in pooled cars.

In the course and conduct of the business and activities of respondent Wholesalers' Association and of the concerted action and conspiracy above stated of all the respondents, the member respondents in their status as members of the Wholesalers' Association frequently held and hold general and special meetings for the interchange of information concerning the furtherance of their efforts to prevent and restrain sales by manufacturers to retailers and to wholesalers who are not members of the respondent Wholesalers' Association, concerning any sales of such character that are made by manufacturers, and concerning the action necessary to be taken to prevent and restrain further sales of such character and to effectuate their policy of preventing and restraining such transactions; and thereupon all of said respondents have concerted and agreed and do concert and agree upon a course of common action to that end, consisting of bringing pressure to bear upon any such manufacturer to cease making such sales and of attempting by personal intimidation, threats of boycott and actual boycott to coerce such manufacturer to refrain thereafter from making any such sales and from supplying retail dealers with such products direct and from supplying wholesale dealers who are not members of the Wholesalers' Association with such products out of pooled car shipments. Respondents used and use other concerted and coercive means to effectuate their said conspiracy to restrain and prevent such sales.

In the course and conduct of the business and activities of the respondent Wholesalers' Association and of the concerted action and conspiracy above stated of all the respondents, an agreement was reached between respondent Wholesalers' Association and the association of retail grocers in the Fall River region looking to the prevention and restraint of purchases by retailers direct from manufacturers, and the respondent Wholesalers' Association threatened to suspend or expel any member refusing to sign and subscribe to such agreement.

In the course and conduct of the business and activities of respondent Wholesalers' Association and of the concerted action and conspiracy above stated of all the respondents, respondent Wholesalers' Association actually placed upon its "unfair list" for boycott a particular manufacturer who had not conformed to the demands and requirements of the respondent Wholesalers' Association above alleged and obliged all of its members to cease handling the products of said manufacturer on penalty of forfeiture of deposits of said members held by respondent Wholesalers' Association as a guaranty of their conformity to its requirements, and said manufacturer was notified by said respondent Wholesalers' Association that it had been placed on said respondent's "unfair list" and that Association members would discontinue handling the merchandise of said manufacturer "because of unfair and unethical business methods" and respondent Wholesalers' Association also at the same time voted that similar action would be taken in respect of certain other manufacturers if said manufacturers did not cease selling their products direct to retailers. Solely in consequence of such action of respondent Wholesalers' Association, the manufacturer first above referred to discontinued selling its products direct to large retailers in the Fall River region and continued under such restraint for a considerable period of time. Solely in consequence of such action by respondent Wholesalers' Association all of the member respondents except the New England Wholesale Grocery Company ceased making purchases from one of the other manufacturers above referred to.

PAR. 3. The above alleged acts and things done by respondents, including specifically among them the blacklisting and boycotting of manufacturers, the threatening of boycott and the conspiracy to do those acts and things, have tended and do tend and will continue to tend unduly and unreasonably to restrain trade and commerce between and among the several States of the United States, in that they have tended and do tend to close certain of the outlets within the States of Massachusetts and Rhode Island for the direct and immediate sale by manufacturers and producers in other States of products shipped by them into said State of Massachusetts, to deprive manufacturers and producers in other States of the right and opportunity freely to trade with and make sales to all wholesalers and retailers and prospective purchasers in said State of Massachusetts and to deprive certain wholesalers and retailers and prospective purchasers in said State of Massachusetts of the right and opportunity freely to trade with and make purchases and obtain shipments from manufacturers and producers in other States, and to deprive such last mentioned wholesalers and retailers and prospective purchasers in said State of Massachusetts of the right and opportunity and advantage secured and exercised and enjoyed by respondents in respect of the lower freight rates and incidental expenses on shipments from manufacturers in other States in carload lots or pooled cars and thereby depriving such last mentioned wholesalers and retailers in the State of Massachusetts from passing on to the purchasing and consuming public in said Fall River region the advantages and savings of such lower freight rates and incidental expenses and other competitive benefits flowing from such lower freight rates; and have also tended and do tend by such limitation and restriction of the total number of wholesalers and retailers in the Fall River region securing and exercising and enjoying such advantage of lower freight rates to limit and restrict the benefits to said purchasing and consuming public flowing therefrom. Such acts and things substantially and unduly and unreasonably lessen, restrain, and suppress free and open competition in the sale and distribution in interstate commerce of said food and grocery products in the said Fall River region, obstruct the free and natural flow of interstate commerce in said region and deny to consumers of said products in said Fall River region the advantages in price and otherwise which they would obtain from the free and natural flow of commerce in said products under conditions of free and unobstructed competition. Consequently said acts have been and are and will continue to be to the prejudice and injury of the public and of the competitors of respondents and of the manufacturers and producers both those who do and particularly those who do not, comply with and adhere to the limitations of trade and commerce imposed by the respondents above mentioned.

PAR. 4. There were and are among the competitors of respondent in the said Fall River region other wholesalers who are not members of respondent Wholesalers' Association who would freely purchase from manufacturers in other states similar and substantially identical products to the products hereinabove mentioned as being purchased by respondents, as well as retailers who would also freely make such purchases, and to which said other wholesalers and said retailers said manufacturers would freely sell such similar and substantially identical products and to whom said manufacturers would freely make shipments in pooled cars as had been and are made to the member respondents, were it not for the aforesaid acts and restraints of respondents above mentioned. Such acts and things done by respondents substantially and unduly and unreasonably lessen, restrain and suppress free and open competition in the sale and distribution in interstate commerce of said food and grocery products in said Fall River region, obstruct the free and natural flow of interstate commerce in said region and deny to said other wholesalers, to said retailers and to the public in said Fall River region the advantages in price and otherwise which they would obtain from the free and natural flow of commerce in said products under conditions of free and unobstructed competition and have diverted and do divert and have tended and do tend to divert business from said other wholesalers. Consequently said acts have been and are and will continue to be to the prejudice and injury of said competitors of respondents. The member respondents would also, except for the acts and things done by them in pursuance of their concerted action and agreements and conspiracy as hereinabove stated, be naturally and normally in competition with each other in price and otherwise; and consequently said acts have been and are and will continue to be to the prejudice and injury of said member respondents as competitors each with the others.

PAR. 5. The above acts and things done and caused to be done by the respondents were and are each and all to the prejudice of the public and of respondents' competitors and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the meaning and intent of Section 5 of an Act of Congress entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914.

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

sources of supply of wholesale grocers as alleged in the complaint, and waiving the taking of further evidence and all other intervening procedure, which substitute answer was duly filed in the office of the Commission.

Thereafter, this proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on the said complaint and the substitute answer, briefs and oral arguments of counsel having been waived, and the Commission having duly considered the same and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent, Fall River Wholesale Grocers' Association, is a voluntary association with its principal place of business located at Fall River, Mass. Said respondent association membership consists of the following respondent corporations, copartnerships, and individuals:

Allen Slade and Company, a corporation organized under the laws of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts;

American Wholesale Grocery Company, a corporation organized under the laws of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts;

Chabot Brothers, a corporation organized under the laws of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts;

Fall River Economy Wholesale Grocery Company, a corporation organized under the laws of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts;

Fall River Paper and Supply Company, a corporation organized under the laws of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts;

Joseph Horvitz, an individual trading under the name and style of Joseph Horvitz and Company;

Abraham I. Yamins and Samuel Levin, copartners trading under the firm name and style of New England Wholesale Grocery Company;

Portuguez Wholesale Grocery Company, a corporation organized under the laws of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts;

Philip J. Roy, an individual trading under the name and style of Roy Paper Company.

Each of the above named corporations, copartnerships, and individuals have been engaged for some time past, as wholesalers in groceries and in the sale and distribution of said products in the region of the city of Fall River, State of Massachusetts. Said Fall River region comprises not only said city of Fall River, but also the trade area contiguous to it in the State of Massachusetts, and also in the State of Rhode Island. Said member respondents purchase said groceries sold and distributed by them in the said Fall River region from manufacturers and producers in other States than the State of Massachusetts, and which products so purchased are shipped from such other States into the State of Massachusetts to said member respondents, and are then sold and distributed by each of said member respondents to retailers in the States of Massachusetts and Rhode Island.

In the course and conduct of their respective businesses, said corporations, copartnerships, and individuals were and are in competition with other corporations, copartnerships, and individuals, who are not members of respondent Wholesalers Associations, but who were likewise engaged in the sale and distribution in interstate commerce of similar products in competition with such members.

The respondent Wholesalers Association and its members as a result of agreements, express or implied, have acted in concert and conspiracy between and among themselves for the advancement of their common interests and private purposes.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of the business and activities of respondent Wholesalers Association and of the concerted action and conspiracy above stated of all the respondents, and at various times during the past three years, respondent Wholesalers Association in behalf of itself and of each and all of said member respondents, and in pursuance of a policy agreed upon and adopted by said member respondents of refusing to deal with manufacturers of grocery products who have sold or sell such products to retailers thereof in the said Fall River region, informed various such manufacturers of the policy of the respondent association and its members that they should not distribute said grocery products to retailers of such products and threatened that such members would and they did refuse to purchase from manufacturers who failed or refused to comply with their wishes in that respect. Respondent association and its members by the use of such unlawful threats and boycotts have restrained and prevented sales and distributions in the said Fall River region by such manufacturers to retailers of such products. Carrying out such policy, said association wrote to a large manufacturer of milk products that surplus evaporated milk shipped in pool cars must not be delivered by it to a public warehouse and that, if this were done, its members would refuse to deal further in its products. The company addressed, in order to save itself from loss of business, was obliged to and did discontinue selling its products to two competitors of said members of said respondent Wholesalers Association, and to warehouse surplus milk with a member thereof.

On February 27, 1935, at a meeting of said respondent Wholesalers Association, the manufacturer referred to was placed on the association's unfair list on account of its selling to large retailers in the Fall River region and all members of the association were warned to cease handling said company's products on penalty of forfeiting their deposits made with said association for the purpose of securing their compliance with its rules. The association also informed the manufacturer of this action, and that its members would no longer be allowed to do any business with it. Said manufacturer was thereupon obliged to discontinue selling its products to several large retailers, who were competitors of the association's members, and said manufacturer requested that its name be removed from the association's unfair list. On May 26, 1936, the association issued and distributed a letter announcing that its members had "decided definitely to cooperate only with those producers, packers, or manufacturers who will confine themselves to selling their merchandise to wholesale grocers," and asked for replies showing whether the concerns so addressed would or would not cooperate in the matter.

In the course of the activities of the respondents as above stated, an agreement was reached between respondent Wholesalers Association and the Association of Retail Grocers in the Fall River region working to the prevention and restraint of purchases by retailers direct from manufacturers, and the respondent Wholesalers Association threatened to suspend any member refusing to sign and subscribe to such agreement.

At different times, similar course of action was taken against large manufacturers of sugar and of coffee with the result that manufacturers were coerced into refusing to sell their products direct to retailers, whereby interstate commerce in groceries was unduly restrained and hindered.

PAR. 3. The results of the acts of the said respondents, as herein before set out in paragraph 2, have been to unduly tend to substantially lessen, restrict, and suppress competition in the interstate sale of grocery products particularly in the above described Fall River region.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondents, Fall River Wholesale Grocers' Assn. et al., are to the prejudice of the public and of respondents' competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce, within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

It is ordered, That the respondents, Fall River Wholesale Grocers' Assn. and Allen Slade & Company, American Wholesale Grocery Co., Chabot Brothers, Fall River Economy Wholesale Grocery Co., Fall River Paper & Supply Co., Joseph Horvitz and Company, New England Wholesale Grocery Company, Portuguez Wholesale Grocery Company, and Roy Paper Company, their officers, representatives, agents, and employees, in connection with the offering for sale, sale and distribution of grocery products in interstate commerce or in the District of Columbia, do forthwith cease and desist from:

(1) Adopting, enforcing or attempting to put into effect any understanding, agreement, combination, or conspiracy among and between themselves to restrict, restrain, suppress, and eliminate competition in the sale and distribution of grocery products in interstate commerce, by interfering with the source of supply of retailers;

(2) Persuading, threatening or coercing manufacturers to distribute their products only through wholesalers, and to cease and refrain from dealing with retailers;

(3) Any other similar means or methods of coercing manufacturers into distributing their products through wholesalers exclusively.

It is further ordered, That within 60 days from the date of the service of this order upon said respondents that they file with the Commission a report in writing, setting forth in detail the manner and form in which this order has been complied with.

COMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 26, 1914, AND OF SEC. 3 OF TITLE I OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED JUNE 16, 1933¹

Docket 2317. Complaint, Mar. 6, 1935—Decision, Dec. 11, 1936.

Where a corporation engaged in the manufacture of air seal and of mechanically sealed and closing burial vaults, made of one of the highest grade and quality of non-ferrous metals obtainable for such purpose and also of a non-ferrous metal which would corrode in some soils of the United States, and in the sale of said products to jobbers, funeral directors, and undertakers, in substantial competition with those engaged in the sale and distribution of metal, stone, concrete, and other burial vaults in and between the various States—

- (a) Represented, in certificates of warranty and in advertising the same in periodicals of wide interstate circulation and in booklets, circulars, pamphlets, letters, and through photographs and testimonials, and in other advertising media, circulated among its customers and prospective customers in the several States, that its said air seal vaults were waterproof and airtight at time of interment and after, and that its said vaults, generally were made of rust resisting metal and would endure as waterproof under all conditions for fifty years, and afforded absolute protection against water and other external elements, buried, for twenty-five or fifty years or more, and that its said vaults gave insurance that the processes of change would be undefiled by the action of water, earth, or other foreign elements, gave permanent burial protection and greater resistance than the bronze of the ancients, and were practically indestructible and would not crush in; and
- (b) Made use of certificates of warranty, in connection with the sale and offer of its said vaults, which guaranteed against damage to the contents thereof through water or other elements admitted because of the failure of the same due to rust or corrosion, and undertook, in such event, to replace such vaults without cost;

The facts being that, while its said vaults were made with great care by skilled workmen, and the ferrous metal of which made was one of the highest grades and quality obtainable for such purpose, impervious and impenetrable by air, moisture, and living organisms within the earth during the life of the metal, it was not rust or corrosion-proof to the extent that it would never rust or corrode after burial, and, once rusted or corroded to a certain extent during a period of years, it would, like all other material, crumble and disintegrate; non-ferrous metal, corrosive in some soils as aforesaid, was impervious to water only until penetration through corrosion or other causes; corrosive qualities, present in all soils, vary greatly, so that, while in many sections throughout the United States in which soil corrosion is not a problem a twelve-gauge metal vault, buried, would resist penetration thereby for more than one hundred years, in other soils its said ferrous metal vaults would pit through and cease to be waterproof in from eight to ten years; conjunction of conditions, which does not always exist, must obtain in case of said air seal vaults in order to provide protection from entering water, its said vaults and materials from which made had not been tested under ground for full period of fifty years, or been manufactured or advertised for such length of time, and its said ferrous metal vaults would not, in some of the more corrosive soils, remain waterproof for such a period, and its vaults, buried, would and often do permit entrance of air, vermin, and water; disinterment is rare and it had rarely been called upon to replace the same;

With capacity and tendency, as a result of such misleading acts and practices, to induce the public to purchase and use said products in the belief that such statements and representations, which were each and all to the prejudice of the public, were true, and to divert unfairly trade to it from competitors engaged in sale and distribution of metal burial vaults:

Held, That such acts and practices were to the prejudice of the public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition.

Mr. E. J. Hornibrook for the Commission.

Mr. Herman L. Weisman, of New York City, and Waite, Schindel & Bayless, of Cincinnati, Ohio, for respondent.

COMPLAINT

Acting in the public interest and pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission charges that the Galion Metallic Vault Company, a corporation, hereinafter referred to as respondent, has been and is now using unfair methods of competition in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in said act, and in violation of an Act of Congress approved June 16, 1933, known and designated as the "National Industrial Recovery Act," and it appearing to said Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, states its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. The respondent, the Galion Metallic Vault Company, is a corporation organized and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Ohio, with its factory and principal place of business located in the city of Galion in said State. It is now, and for several years last past, has been engaged in the business of manufacturing and selling metal grave vaults used to encase a coffin in the burial of the dead, to purchasers thereof, many of whom reside outside the State of Ohio, and when orders are received therefor, they are filled by respondent by shipping the same from the said city of Galion, State of Ohio, into and through other States of the United States to the respective places of business or residences of such purchasers.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of its said business, respondent is in competition with other individuals, copartnerships, and corporations engaged in the sale and transportation of metal, stone, concrete, cement, and other grave vaults between and among various States of the United States.

PAR. 3. Respondent sells and ships said grave vaults as aforesaid, to jobbers, funeral directors, and undertakers, the last two of which sell the same to ultimate purchasers thereof for use in the burial of their dead.

PAR. 4. (A) In magazines having a wide interstate circulation, and in booklets, circulars, pamphlets, letters, and in and through the use of photographs, testimonials, and in other advertising media, all of which is circulated among its customers and prospective customers residing in the several States of the United States and which respondent's said customers use and are authorized by respondent to use in the sale and promotion of the sale of its said vaults, the following and similar false and misleading claims, statements, and representations as to respondent's said vaults are made:

That said grave vaults will remain waterproof and airtight when placed underground; that the function of these said vaults is to insure that the process of change be undefiled by the action of water, earth, or other foreign elements; that the metal of which said vaults are made is impervious to water and to chemical elements and living organisms usually present in the ground; that the weight of covering earth cannot crush its unyielding dome; that the body which is entrusted to the keeping and protection of respondent's said vaults is protected from uncleanness, contamination, and violation; that the respondent's said vaults are the ultimate in burial protection; that casket and contents are placed beyond the reach of external agency of change in the protection found in respondent's said vaults; that human affection can provide no worthier tribute with which to safeguard and to honor the mortal part of the beloved dead; that only within comparative recent years has science been successful in making permanent burial protection of those with moderate means; that prior thereto, the materials used were porous and quickly perishable and that rain and melting snow went through the ground and often stood for months in the graves and that this water necessarily seeping through envelops the casket and contents in a mass of organic and inorganic conglomerate; that the metals used in the manufacture of respondent's said vaults are not only impervious to water but they possess enormous strength; that such appearances of corrosion as may develop on the surfaces of such vaults are superficial and act as a protective coating to retard pitting and rusts; that metallurgical chemists estimate that respondent's vaults will retain their protective agency, unimpaired for at least fifty years; that respondent's vaults are practically indestructible under all normal conditions of earth burial; that the resistance of respondent's vaults to the elements is presumably greater than that of the bronze used by the ancients for the production of weapons, vessels, and works of art which have been recently brought to light by archeologists dating back thousands of years before the beginning of the Christian Era. Respondent has also advertised its said vaults as absolute protection against water and other external elements even though buried underground for a period of twenty-five to fifty years or more.

(B) Respondent issues with each vault for delivery to ultimate purchasers thereof and they are so delivered, a written purported warranty which provides in substance, that each of its said vaults has been tested by being submerged in water, inspected, found to be free from defects in material or workmanship and to be airtight and waterproof and that when properly closed it will protect its contents from water and other elements from external sources and if the contents of any vault are damaged by water or other elements, admitted because of the failure of the same, due to rust, corrosion, defective materials, or workmanship, respondent will replace said vault without cost, except in cases of damage to the casket or contents caused by dehydration of the elements.

PAR. 5. The statements and representations described in subdivision A of the preceding paragraph are false and misleading in that respondent's said grave vaults will not remain waterproof and airtight indefinitely when buried in the ground; that respondent's said vaults when buried in the ground do not insure that process of change be undefiled by the action of water, earth or other foreign elements; that respondent's said vaults are not impervious to water and to chemical elements or living organisms usually present in the ground; that a coffin when buried in respondent's vault is not protected at all times from uncleanness, contamination, and violation; that science has not in comparatively recent years or at all been successful in making permanent protection through the use of metal vaults to the bodies or coffins encased therein when buried underground; the metals used in the construction of respondent's vaults are not impervious to water or corrosion or rust and the surface rust coating which at times appears upon the respondent's vault does not act as a protective coating to retard pitting and rust; respondent's vaults will not retain their protective agencies unimpaired for at least fifty years; respondent's vaults are made of metals which will corrode; there is a vast difference in the corrosive properties of soils throughout the United States; in some soils, respondent's said vaults will corrode and pit in a period of from three to ten years and in others from ten to twenty years; in many soils respondent's said vaults will corrode and pit so as to let water in them; in many instances they will corrode and rust so as to cave in or collapse; respondent's said vaults have never been tested as to their corroding for a period of fifty years, nor has the metal of which they are made been so tested; respondent's said vaults when buried underground are not airtight or waterproof and will, and often do, permit air and water to enter therein. Either air or water entering respondent's vaults, when buried underground, promote and cause disintegration of the coffin and body encased in said vaults. Water often enters the graves of the dead. The mechanism provided by respondent for sealing their said vaults will not at all times prevent the entrance of water into said vaults.

The statements and representations described in the subdivision B of paragraph 4 hereof are false, misleading and deceptive in that the terms "waterproof" and "airtight" as used by respondent as aforesaid, mean to the ultimate purchasers thereof a watertight airtight vault, a vault which will not permit water or air to enter the same. The respondent's said vaults are not waterproof or airtight as the terms are understood by ultimate purchasers thereof. Water or air may seep into or enter the said vaults through the joints, holes, fastenings of flange thereof or through pit holes due to rust or corrosion.

These said purported warranties contain a clause in which respondent offers to replace without cost to the purchaser any such vault failing to meet the warranty as to being waterproof or airtight because of failure due to rust, corrosion, defective material, or workmanship. The exhumation of bodies after burial is so rare as to make these certificates of warranty worthless to a vast majority of purchasers of these vaults for the reason that no opportunity is afforded them in which to ascertain whether such vaults are or have been airtight or waterproof. These said purported warranties are not warranties, but are merely sales persuaders under the terms of which respondent will rarely, if ever, be called upon to replace said vaults. It is false and misleading for respondent to call them warranties or to issue them at all.

24 F. T. C.

PAR. 6. Each and all of the said false and misleading statements and representations used by respondent as set out in paragraph 4 hereof have and have had the capacity and tendency to induce the public to purchase and use respondent's said grave vaults in the belief that they are true, and have and have had the tendency and capacity to divert trade from said competitors of respondent.

PAR. 7. The acts and practices of respondent above set forth are all to the prejudice of the public and to respondent's said competitors and constitute unfair methods of competition in interstate commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent is a corporation organized and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Ohio, with its factory and principal place of business located in the city of Galion, in said State. Respondent is now and, for several years last past, has been engaged in the business of manufacturing, selling, and distributing metal grave vaults, used to encase a coffin in the burial of the dead, to purchasers thereof, located at points in the State of Ohio and at points in various other States of the United States, and causes said products when so sold to be transported from its principal place of business in the city of Galion, Ohio, to the purchasers thereof in the State of Ohio and to other purchasers thereof in other States of the United States and in the District of Columbia at their respective places of business, and there is now and has been for several years last past a course of trade and commerce by the said respondent in said products in the State of Ohio and between and among the States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 2. As grounds for this paragraph of this complaint, the Federal Trade Commission reiterates, adopts, and relies upon all matters and things set out in paragraphs 2 to 7, inclusive, of count 1 hereof to the same extent as though each and all of the allegations thereof were set out at length and in full in this paragraph.

PAR. 3. On November 4, 1933, under and pursuant to the provisions of the National Industrial Recovery Act, the President of the United States made, issued, and approved a Code of Fair Competition for the Funeral Supply Industry, which became effective on the tenth day thereafter. The respondent herein was a party to and signatory of such Code of Fair Competition, and such Code is now in full force and effect as to this respondent.

The said National Industrial Recovery Act, Section (3), Paragraph (B) provides:

If the President shall have approved any such Code, the provisions of such Code shall be the standards of Fair Competition for such trade or industry, or supervision thereof. Any violation of such standards in transaction in or effecting interstate or foreign commerce shall be deemed an unfair method of competition of commerce within the meaning of the Federal Trade Commission Act, as amended; but nothing in this title shall be constituted to impair the powers of the Federal Trade Commission under such Act, as amended.

In Article IX, under the heading of "Trade Practice," of said Code appears the following:

1. The following practices constitute unfair methods of competition and are prohibited: To resort to or indulge in practices which are prejudicial to the public interest such as

Misbranding,
Misrepresentation in branding, Labeling, Selling, and Advertising.

(W) Nothing in this Code shall limit the effect of any adjudication by the courts or holdings by the Federal Trade Commission on complaint, finding and order, that any practice or method is unfair providing that such adjudication herewith is not inconsistent of any provision of the Act or of this Code.

Notwithstanding the said provisions of said Code of Fair Competition respondent has continued to and does, use said methods of competition hereinabove alleged and described, and has resorted to or indulged in the practice of misrepresentation in branding, labeling, selling, and advertising its said vaults in the manner hereinabove set forth.

PAR. 4. The above alleged methods, acts, and practices of the respondent are and have been in violation of the standards of fair competition as set forth in said Code of Fair Competition for the said Funeral Supply Industry of the United States. Such violation of such standards in the aforesaid transactions in interstate commerce and in other transactions which affect interstate commerce in the manner set forth above are in violation of Section (3) of the National Industrial Recovery Act and they are unfair methods of competition in commerce within the meaning of the Federal Trade Commission Act, as amended.

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Findings

24 F. T. C.

the Federal Trade Commission, on the 6th day of March 1935, issued and thereafter served its complaint in this proceeding upon respondent, the Galion Metallic Vault Company, a corporation, charging it with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of the provisions of said act. After the issuance of said complaint, and the filing of respondent's answer thereto, a stipulation as to the facts was agreed upon by and between W. T. Kelley, Chief Counsel for the Federal Trade Commission, and respondent, by which it was stipulated and agreed that, subject to the approval of the Commission, the statement of facts so agreed upon should be taken as the facts in this proceeding and in lieu of testimony in support of the charges stated in the complaint, or in opposition thereto; and that the Commission may proceed upon said statement of facts, including inferences drawn from said stipulated facts, to issue its report, stating its findings as to the facts and its conclusion based thereon and enter its order disposing of the proceeding without the presentation of argument or the filing of briefs. Said stipulation as to the facts has been duly filed in the offices of the Commission and approved by it. Thereafter this proceeding came on for final hearing before the Commission on said complaint, answer thereto, and statement of facts as agreed upon in lieu of testimony, briefs and arguments having been waived, and the Commission having duly considered the same and being fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. The respondent, the Galion Metallic Vault Company, is and has been for the past thirty years, a corporation duly organized and existing under the laws of the State of Ohio, with its factory and principal place of business located in the city of Galion in the State of Ohio.

Respondent is now and for the past thirty years has been engaged in the business of manufacturing and selling metal burial vaults, called Cryptorium; said vaults are intended to be and are actually used to enclose coffins or caskets in the burial of the human dead.

Respondent sells and ships its vaults to jobbers, funeral directors, and undertakers, the last two of which sell the same to ultimate purchasers thereof for use in the burial of their dead. Respondent does now and has so sold and shipped its vaults to such purchasers thereof to be used in the State of Ohio and other States of the United States; when orders are received by it therefor, they are filled by respondent, either causing said vaults to be shipped from the city of Galion in the State of Ohio, into and through other States of the United States to the respective places of business or the residence of such purchasers, or by shipping said vaults to branch warehouses in other States of the United States from which deliveries are made to such purchasers.

PAR. 2. In magazines having wide interstate circulation, and in booklets, circulars, pamphlets, letters, and in and through the use of photographs, testimonials and in other advertising media all of which are circulated among its customers and prospective customers residing in the several States of the United States, and which respondent's said customers use and are authorized by respondent to use in the sale and in the promotion of the sale of its said vaults, respondent has made prior to and in 1932, but not since said year, the following claims, statements, and representations as to its said vaults, to wit:

The metal of which said vaults are made is impervious to water and to chemical elements and living organisms usually present in the ground.

The metals used in the manufacture of respondent's vaults are not only impervious to water, but they possess enormous strength.

They will remain waterproof and airtight when placed under ground.

The body which is entrusted to the keeping and protection of respondent's said vaults is protected from uncleanness, contamination and violation.

The function of these said vaults is to insure that the process of change be undefiled by the action of water, earth or other foreign elements.

Only within comparatively recent years has science been successful in making permanent burial protection for those with moderate means.

Prior thereto, the materials used were porous and quickly perishable and rain and melting snow went through the ground and often stood for months in the graves and this water necessarily seeping through envelops the casket and its contents in a mass of organic and inorganic conglomerate.

The resistance of respondent's vaults to the elements is presumably greater than that of the bronze used by the ancients for the production of vessels, weapons and works of art which have been recently brought to light by archeologists dating back thousands of years before the beginning of the Christian Era.

Respondent's vaults are practically indestructible under all normal conditions of earth burial.

Such appearances of corrosion as may develop on the surfaces of such vaults are superficial, and act as a protective coating to retard pitting and rusts.

The casket and contents are placed beyond the reach of external agency of change in the protection found in respondent's said vaults.

Metallurgical chemists estimate that respondent's vaults will retain their protective agency, unimpaired for at least fifty years.

Its vaults are absolute protection against water and other external elements, even though buried underground for a period of 25 to 50 years or more.

The weight of covering earth cannot crush its unyielding dome.

Respondent's said vaults are the ultimate in burial protection.

Human affection can provide no worthier tribute with which to safeguard and to honor the mortal part of the beloved dead.

PAR. 3. Respondent, prior to and in 1932, but not since then, issued with each vault, for delivery to ultimate purchasers thereof, and they were usually so delivered, a written certificate of warranty that each of its vaults had been tested by being submerged in water, inspected, found to be free from defects in material or workmanship and to be airtight, and waterproof, and when properly closed it will protect its contents from water and other elements from external sources; that if the contents of any vault are damaged by water or other elements, admitted because of the failure of the same, due to rust, corrosion, defective materials, or workmanship, respondent will replace said vault without cost, except in cases of damage to the casket or contents caused by dehydration of the remains.

PAR. 4. In 1932, respondent adopted, and since then and now issues with each vault, for delivery to ultimate purchasers thereof, and they are usually so delivered, a written certificate of warranty in words and figures as follows:

WARRANTY

THE GALION METALLIC VAULT COMPANY OF GALION, OHIO, MANUFACTURERS OF THE GALION CRYPTORIUM, WARRANTS:

(1) That every Gallion Cryptorium is manufactured of Armco Ingot Iron Copper, or Everdur Bronze, is built by skilled workmen, has been tested by being submerged in water, inspected and found to be free from defects in material or workmanship.

(2) The Gallion Metallic Vault Company will replace this Gallion Cryptorium without cost if its contents are damaged by water or other elements admitted from the grave because of the failure of the Cryptorium due to rust, corrosion, defective material or workmanship. Damage to the casket or contents caused by dehydration of the remains is excepted.

This warranty has been issued by duly authorized officers of the Company, whose signatures are hereto affixed, and has been counter-signed by the funeral director at the time of the delivery.

THE GALION METALLIC VAULT COMPANY
 By ----- President.
 By ----- Secretary.

PAR. 5. The ferrous metal used by respondent in the manufacture of its burial vaults is Armco Ingot Iron, manufactured by the American Rolling Mill Company of Middletown, Ohio.

This metal is purchased by the respondent in sheets of extra dimensions, of 12 United States Standard Gauge and heavier thicknesses, specially processed and rolled for the purpose of the manufacture of burial vaults. The cost of this material is considerably higher than the cost of ordinary commercial steel.

This material is one of the highest grade and quality of metals that are now in the market in the United States, which can be obtained by respondent for the purpose of the manufacture of its burial vaults.

This metal, purchased by the respondent and used in the manufacture of its vaults is a highly refined grade of steel, carefully made under the best, modern scientifically controlled steel making process; it is a high quality metal made as carefully, accurately and thoroughly as it can be made by exact control of furnacing operations to make the best metal that will resist, but not prevent, corrosion, in the sense that the high purity and quality of the metal tends to retard and slow the rate of corrosion and tends to increase its durability underground for a longer period of time than if the impurities were not removed from the metal, and if the metal has not been so highly refined and freed from those impurities which facilitate the process of rusting or corrosion.

The above steel manufacturing company, from which respondent purchases this metal, represents in its advertising and otherwise to the respondent that said metal is rust resisting. It is a manufacturer of recognized responsibility and integrity. This company makes rigid inspection and testing of each sheet of said metal before it is shipped to the respondent.

This metal is by its very nature impervious and impenetrable by air, moisture, water and living organisms within the earth and will exclude them from seeping or going through or between any pores or molecules of said metal during the life of said metal, which terminates when a hole has been punctured or has penetrated through the metal from rust or corrosion.

This metal is not rustproof or corrosionproof, but will rust and corrode after it has been buried underground. It is not rust-resisting or corrosion-resisting to the extent or degree that it will never rust or corrode after burial underground. When it has rusted and corroded to a certain degree and extent during the period of years after burial underground, it will crumble and disintegrate, just as all other materials will ultimately decay and disintegrate.

Respondent also uses in the manufacture of the Galion Cryptorium, Everdur Bronze, 12 gauge and heavier. This is a non-ferrous metal and will corrode in some soils of the United States. It is by nature impervious to water, moisture and the living organisms within the earth, and also to the usual chemical elements within the earth, until a hole is penetrated through this metal due to corrosion or other causes. It is purchased from the American Brass Company of Waterbury, Conn., and similar representations as to the quality and physical characteristics of this metal are given by the seller to this respondent.

PAR. 6. Respondent's vaults are manufactured with great care by skilled workmen. Respondent so manufactures and sells three types of the said Cryptorium vaults, to wit, the air seal, the quick closing and the bolted end.

PAR. 7. Respondent's air seal vaults are constructed on the air seal principle. The vault consists of two parts, (1) a pan or base, and (2) a dome (hood or top).

The outside measurements of said vault are: length $88\frac{15}{16}$ inches; width 32 inches; and height $30\frac{3}{16}$ inches. It weighs empty and without a casket in it, 440 pounds. Its inside dimensions are: length 86 inches; width 30 inches; side height $29\frac{9}{16}$ inches; center height $25\frac{15}{16}$ inches above the top of the pan.

The entire dome consists of three pieces, two ends and one piece which forms the rounded top and both sides. The ends are electrically fused to the top on standard sizes, so as to then make the dome airtight and watertight in the sense that no air or water can then get through the metal or welds of the top, sides, and ends of the dome from the outside of the dome to the inside of the dome. Of course, water and air can go in and out of the dome from the bottom of it, as the dome itself has no bottom to it.

The pan is made of one piece and the ends are electrically welded. The pan is flat on top and the four edges are turned down so as to raise the top of the pan $3\frac{1}{8}$ inches above the plane of the lower surface of the flange as it rests on the ground or support. The edges of the pan are turned outward approximately $\frac{7}{8}$ th inch wide to form this flange, which extends entirely around the bottom of the vault. This flange itself has approximately a total of 3 square feet and 8 square inches, which includes a strip 4 inches wide across each end on the under part of the base. The entire base resembles an inverted pan. At each of the four corners of the pan is a hole, pierced through it near its top edge. Circulation of air from the hollow space under the pan into the hood is provided by these holes, thereby making one single column of air.

Projecting $\frac{1}{2}$ inch above the top of the pan are four small raised portions or bosses or casket rests, which support the bottom of the casket when it is placed in the vault. Thus, the bottom of the casket is raised $4\frac{3}{8}$ inches above the bottom of the grave or grave floor.

The bottom rim or flange of the hood rests on this outside flange of the pan, the thickness of the metal from the grave floor.

The principles of construction of respondent's air seal vault are such that it operates on the principle of the diving bell, by which the pressure of the confined air in the inside of the inverted airtight and watertight dome, when the lower edge of the dome is covered all around with outside water, resists the pressure of the water head to cause the surface of the water level to rise within the dome above the lower edge of the dome. The dome of this vault is sealed when the water level in the ground completely surrounds the edge or rim of the dome on its four sides. The air within the vault is not sealed until then. As the water level rises in the ground surrounding the vaults, its pressure forces the air from the empty space underneath the raised portion of the pan, through the holes at each corner of the pan, into the hood where it is added to the air within the dome, thereby increasing the pressure and resistance of the air to the pressure of the water level in the ground, and so adding to the effectiveness of the operation of the air seal principle of the vault. And as the pressure of the outside water level increases, the resistance of the compressed air within the dome increases and resists the entrance of water rising from below.

Water and air will go in and out of the space underneath the raised portion of the pan of said air seal vault at the time of its burial underground. Air will go in and out of the open bottom of the dome of the vault, except when the principle of the air seal vault is in operation, to wit, when the edges on the four sides of the dome are sealed all around by the water head in the ground rising above the edges of the dome on its four sides. The water level will rise upwards within the dome, above the lower edge of the dome, to the extent that it is not resisted by the pressure of the confined air within the dome.

The dome of each air seal burial vault manufactured by respondent is tested, before it is shipped, by submerging in water the dome in an upright position, without the pan being placed under it. The dome, containing air inside it, is forced down into the water by mechanical apparatus similar to a baling press. It operates on a screw and exerts pressure on top of the dome and thereby forces the dome under the water. The pressure necessary and actually used in order to put the dome down so that the top of the dome is under the water and thus submerged, is two and one-half tons or 5,000 pounds. This pressure is applied so as to equally distribute it over the top of the vault.

The purpose of making this test is to find any defect in the material of the dome or in the welds in the dome. If any air bubbles rise to the surface of the water, it indicates that air is escaping from the inside of the dome through a hole in the material or a defect in the welding; then the dome so found to be defective would be returned to the production line and this defect would be repaired and the dome would be given a second test. If the defect is in the metal itself, the unit is rejected and not used thereafter. If no air bubbles rise to the surface of the water, it indicates that no air is escaping from the inside of the dome and that the dome is airtight; then the dome is approved for shipment, and it is waterproofed and airtight at the time of the shipment. No vault is shipped by respondent until the dome of said vault has been so tested and proved to have no defect in its material or in its welds, and the dome is waterproof and airtight at the time of shipment. No test is made of the material or welds of the pan.

Respondent's air seal vault is not airtight as a vault when the air seal principle is not in operation, as air from the ground can enter the vault through the open joint where the dome rests on the pan and also through the four holes near the top of the pan, because of the absence of water sealing the lower edge of the dome on its four sides. When the air seal principle is in operation because of the presence of water above the lower edge of the dome on the four sides of the vault, then the vault is airtight.

According to the recognized principles of mechanical engineering applied in the construction of respondent's air seal vault, the confined air within the airtight dome of respondent's air seal vault, buried level on the bottom of the grave, containing a corpse in an ordinary casket, or one not hermetically sealed, estimated at 5 cubic feet, will resist the pressure of a water column in the ground 5 feet or 60 inches above the lower edge of the hood, and under such conditions the water in the vault will rise only to the top of the pan or one-half inch below the rests for the bottom of the casket. It would require a water column in the ground 6.1 feet or 73.2 inches above the lower edge of the hood for the water in the vault to rise so as to submerge the bottom of the casket.

In some instances under actual burial conditions the results outlined in the preceding paragraph are not obtained. The said vaults when buried underground are not impervious to corrosion or rust. Respondent's vaults are made of materials which will corrode and rust and if there is water in the grave at the time that such metal has sufficiently corroded or rusted to cause holes or punctures through the metal, the water will be permitted to enter the vault through holes occasioned by such rust or corrosion; there is a vast difference in the corrosive property of soils throughout the United States; in some instances said vaults will corrode and rust so as to cave in and collapse. Respondent's said vaults have never been tested for corrosion for a period of fifty years, nor has the metal of which they are made been so tested; respondent's said vaults when buried underground will, and often do, permit air, vermin and water to enter them. Water entering respondent's said vaults, when buried underground, to such a height as to touch the casket, has a tendency to promote and in some instances cause disintegration of the body and casket therein. Water often enters the graves of the dead. In many cemeteries of the United States, water rises in some graves to a depth of 6 feet. The mechanical principles provided by respondent for sealing said air seal vaults will not under all burial conditions prevent the entrance of water into said vaults to such a height as to damage the coffin and body placed therein.

In order for said air seal vaults to provide protection for the casket and body placed therein from the effect of water entering said air seal vaults of the respondent from the grave, they must be buried and remain buried under conditions, which are:

No. 1. The hood of the air seal vault must not be defective and the metal and welds must be airtight.

No. 2. The vault should be buried level.

No. 3. The vault should be buried on the surface of the bottom of the grave and have no earth or other material which occupies the empty space underneath the pan.

No. 4. There should be no change in temperature after its burial.

No. 5. There should be no change in barometric pressure after its burial.

These said conditions do not obtain in all cases of burial where said air seal vaults are used.

Condition No. 1 is essential for the operation of the air seal principle. A change in conditions Nos. 2 or 3 affect the air seal vault unfavorably to a more or less degree in that they reduce the amount of confined air within the dome and also its pressure, when the vault is sealed by water rising above the lower edge of the hood, and thus the water within the hood tends to rise higher. A change in conditions Nos. 4 and 5 may affect the air seal vault favorably and make the air seal vault resist a higher level of water than stated in the first paragraph of this section or may affect the air seal vault unfavorably and make the water rise higher within the hood of the vault sealed with water on its four sides. When such changes in conditions 2, 3, 4, and 5 are sufficient to cause water to enter said vault to touch the casket therein, then such changes tend to damage the casket and the body contained therein.

The term "waterproof" and "airtight" and "verminproof" used by respondent as described herein, mean in fact, and are understood by many ultimate purchasers of said vaults to mean a watertight, airtight, verminproof vault, a vault which will not permit water, nor air, nor vermin to enter the same, and that will endure as such under burial conditions for a period of twenty-five to fifty years or more. Water, vermin and air do enter these said air seal vaults through the bottom holes in the pan, and the open joint thereof, or through pit holes due to corrosion, or when there is so much water in the graves in which they are contained that the water touches the casket, or because of the absence of one or more of the conditions described in paragraph 7 above. In dry graves these vaults are not verminproof or airtight.

PAR. 8. As aforesaid, respondent manufactures two types of mechanically sealed and closing vaults, the quick closing type and the bolted end type. In these types, the ends are stamped out of sheet metal by powerful presses, using special dies to bend to form at the same operation. The bottoms are stamped in like manner. Side walls and dome are formed by bending the metal sheets in great presses. The vault is electrically welded on the inside. The ends, except the door, are electrically welded to the side walls and dome on the inside. The door at the open end of the mechanically closed types is hinged on one side wall or the top.

In the quick closing type, this door is equipped with powerful mechanical clamps and closes tightly against a gasket. When the operating mechanism on the outside of the door is turned the clamping plates on its inner side engage behind a flange inside the wall and seals the vault.

In the bolted end type, the door is removable in its entirety and has no hinges. When the door is placed in position against the gasket, it is then bolted securely all the way around the edge of the door; this door can be opened and removed only by releasing these bolts.

Each of the respondent's mechanically sealed types of vaults, bolted end and quick closing type, is placed upon the surface of the ground, the casket is placed inside the vault, and the door is closed and the vault is sealed, before it is lowered into the grave.

A corpse, either embalmed or not embalmed, is in the process of decay and disintegration at the time of its burial. The process of embalming is the method of injecting certain fluids into the corpse for the purpose of delaying such decay and disintegration of the corpse for a temporary period of time after burial. The delay in disintegration thus brought about is temporary and not permanent.

Each of the two mechanically sealed types of Galion vaults manufactured by respondent is tested before it is shipped by locking the open end as above described, then drilling a small hole in the door, and attaching an air compression line at this hole; then completely submerging the vault under water in the same manner as the respondent tests its air seal vaults; then compressed air is forced into the submerged vault through the air line so connected with the vault. The remainder of the test, inspection and rewelding is identical as in the case of the air seal vault, except that after the test has been completed and the vault is found to be airtight, the hole for the introduction of the compressed air is closed by welding.

The above described use of the two types of end-closing vaults of the respondent is intended, by the respondent, for the purpose of protecting the corpse against accelerated decay and disintegration through damage by water, the admission of vermin, air and other elements from the ground. The actual protection of the corpse by respondent's vaults will depend upon the actual burial conditions of the locality in which they are buried.

PAR. 9. Each of the mechanically sealed types of vaults manufactured by respondent is airtight, watertight, and waterproof before and at the time it is shipped, after it has been properly closed and sealed, and it will not permit any water to enter it from the ground at the time it is buried underground, it will remain waterproof so long as the life of the metal, and the life of the seal, and the vault will cease to be waterproof when a hole has been punctured through the thickness of the metal by rust or corrosion or other causes or the seal has ceased to function during the course of the years after its burial.

Disinterment after burial is rare and respondent has seldom been called upon to replace any of said vaults.

PAR. 10. Respondent's vaults which are made of Armco Ingot Iron will rust after burial underground. Rust is an oxidation of iron, the union of iron and oxygen and its presence means that to some extent the metal has corroded. No ferrous metal has an absolute rate of corrosion, but it depends on local conditions, so that the rate of corrosion cannot be determined with a great deal of precision.

The corrosive qualities of different soils vary. In some soils the corrosion is practically negligible.

There are some sections throughout the United States where soil corrosion is not a problem. In some soils in the United States a 12 U. S. Standard gauge metal vault buried underground would resist penetration by corrosion for a period of more than 100 years in such soils.

As one goes down in the ground, the strata in contact with the burial vault changes, and it may be a more corrosive or less corrosive strata, depending on the location.

The life of a metal burial vault until punctured by rust or corrosion in terms of years after burial, depends upon the character of the soil in which it is buried and upon the climatic and other conditions prevailing in the territory where interment is made.

All soils are more or less corrosive and in the course of years in the future, will cause all ferrous metals to pit or corrode.

Corrosion, in the course of years in the future, will cause the failure of respondent's ferrous metal vaults.

Respondent's vaults, and the metal of which they are manufactured, have not been tested underground for the full period of fifty years nor have they been manufactured or so advertised as long as fifty years.

Respondent's ferrous metal vaults will not remain waterproof for a period of fifty years, when buried in some of the more corrosive soils in the United States.

There are some soils in the United States where respondent's ferrous metal vaults will pit through and cease to be waterproof in a period of from eight to ten years.

Metal grave vaults of 12 gauge ferrous metal have been disinterred, in good condition, with no water in them, no holes in them, and no damage to the caskets and the corpses in them from water entering or ever having entered these vaults from the grave in 26 States and the District of Columbia, after being buried 48 years, 37 years, 33 years, 30 years, 27 years, 26 years, 25 years, 24 years, 23 years, 22 years, 21 years, 20 years, 19 years, 18 years, 17 years, 16 years, 15 years, 14 years, 13 years, 12 years, 11 years, 10 years, 9 years, 8 years, 7 years, 6 years, 5 years, 4 years, 3 years, 2 years, and one year or less.

Other metal grave vaults of 12 gauge ferrous metal have been disinterred and found to be in bad condition, with water in them, with holes in them, and the caskets and corpses therein in a damaged condition due to water having entered these vaults from the grave in which they were contained.

PAR. 11. In the course and conduct of said business, respondent is in substantial competition with other individuals, copartnerships, and corporations engaged in the sale and distribution of metal, stone, concrete, cement and other burial vaults, in and between the various States of the United States.

PAR. 12. Respondent is and has been financially able, ready and willing to comply fully with and perform the full terms of its written certificate of warranty, by replacing without cost any one of its vaults which has been damaged by water admitted from the grave because of the failure of the vault due to rust, corrosion, defective material or workmanship; respondent has made and issued said certificates of warranty in good faith.

PAR. 13. All of the said ferrous metal burial vaults so manufactured by the respondent are useful, proper and suitable receptacles for the burial of the dead and are transported in interstate commerce for such purpose. In certificates of warranty and in other advertising material used by the respondent, its agents, employees and representatives, in offering for sale or selling the various types of air seal or end closing ferrous metal burial vaults manufactured by it, the respondent has represented:

1. That its air seal vaults are airtight either at the time of interment or after burial underground;
2. That its air seal vaults are waterproof;
3. That they will endure as waterproof under all burial conditions for a period of 50 years, or for any fixed or stated period of time;
4. That any of its said vaults are made of rust-resisting metal;
5. That they insure that the processes of change will be undefiled by the action of water, earth, or other foreign elements, when buried underground;
6. That they give permanent burial protection when buried underground;
7. That they give greater resistance than that of the bronze used by the ancients, when buried underground;
8. That they are practically indestructible after burial underground;

Order

24 F. T. C.

9. That they are beyond the reach of external agency of change, after burial underground;

10. That they will give absolute protection against water and other external elements for a period of 25 to 50 years or more, when buried underground;

11. That the weight of the covering earth cannot crush its unyielding dome, after burial underground.

In connection with the sale of its vaults, the respondent has also made use of certificates of warranty which guarantee such vaults to be airtight, verminproof, and waterproof, when used for burial purposes.

All of the aforementioned representations, together with the acts and practices of the respondent, hereinabove set out, are deceptive and misleading and have and have had the capacity and tendency to induce the public to purchase and use respondent's vaults in the belief that said statements and representations are true, and each and all of them are to the prejudice of the public, and have the capacity and tendency to unfairly divert trade to the respondent from its said competitors.

CONCLUSION

The acts and practices of the respondent under the conditions described in the foregoing findings, are to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors; they are unfair methods of competition in commerce and constitute violations of Section 5 of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

This proceeding having been heard by the Federal Trade Commission upon the complaint of the Commission, the answer of respondent, the stipulated facts filed herein, and the Commission having made its findings as to the facts and its conclusions that said respondent has violated the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled, "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

It is ordered, That respondent, Galion Metallic Vault Company, a corporation, its officers, representatives, agents and employees, in connection with the offering for sale, sale, and distribution of metal burial vaults in interstate commerce or in the District of Columbia, forthwith cease and desist from:

1. Representing in purported certificates of warranty, or guarantees, in advertising, or in any other manner, that:

(a) Its Air Seal vaults are airtight, either at the time of interment, or after burial underground,

(b) Its Air Seal vaults are waterproof;

(c) Any of its vaults will endure as waterproof under all burial conditions for a period of fifty years, or for any fixed or stated period of time;

(d) Any of its vaults are made of rust resisting metal;

(e) Any of its vaults insure that the processes of change will be undefiled by the action of water, earth, or other foreign elements, when buried underground;

(f) Any of its vaults give permanent burial protection when buried underground;

(g) Any of its vaults give greater resistance than those of bronze used by the ancients, when buried underground;

(h) Any of its vaults are practically indestructible after burial underground;

(i) Any of its vaults are beyond the reach of external agencies of change, after burial underground;

(j) Any of its vaults will give absolute protection against water and other external elements for a period of twenty-five to fifty years, or more, or for any fixed or stated period of time;

(k) The weight of the covering earth cannot crush the unyielding dome of any of its vaults after burial underground;

2. And from so making other statements or representations of like import;

3. And from using certificates of "Warranty" or "Guaranty" in connection with the sale, or offering for sale of such vaults, unless it clearly appears therein that such certificates refer to the care, skill, mechanism, and materials used in the construction of said vaults, and to tests made to determine whether they leak, and not to their durability as to remaining airtight, verminproof, or waterproof when used for burial purposes.

It is further ordered, That respondent shall within 60 days after service upon it of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing, setting forth in detail the manner and form in which it has complied with this order.

IN THE MATTER OF
ROBERT R. DUNN, JR. AND TOM KECK, TRADING AS IOKELP COMPANY

COMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION
 OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 26, 1914

Docket 2373. Complaint, Apr. 22, 1935—Decision, Dec 11, 1936

Where two individuals engaged in the offer and sale of an alleged remedial preparation which consisted of a kelp or seaweed product compressed into tablet form, with an iodine content of about one-fourth of one percent, and other constituent elements such as those usually found in vegetables ordinarily used for food in the United States, and in approximately the same quantities and proportions—

Represented in advertisements of their said preparation, through pamphlets, circulars, and other printed matter, and through newspapers and radio broadcasts, that the same was a remedy or cure for constipation, nervous anemic conditions, prostate, pituitary, and thyroid gland troubles, including simple goiter, and was a preventative of such last-named troubles, and of indigestion, neuritis, rheumatism, and periodic irregularity in women, and was essential to the health of the thyroid gland and to that of adolescent girls and of women under certain conditions, and to health in general; facts being it did not possess the therapeutic efficacy represented by them, and their said various representations and implications were false;

With effect of misleading and deceiving many persons desiring to purchase a remedy for or preventative of, or preparation essential to, one or more of the conditions in question, and of causing a substantial portion thereof erroneously to believe that such representations and implications were true and, because of such erroneous beliefs, to buy said "Iokelp," and of thereby diverting unfairly and illegally trade to them from their competitors, many of whom truthfully represent their products and do not misrepresent their therapeutic efficacy or use such acts and practices in connection with sale thereof; to the substantial injury of such competitors and that of the public;

Held, That such acts and practices were to the prejudice of the public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition.

COMPLAINT ¹

to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that Robert R. Dunn, Jr., and Tom Keck, copartners, trading under the name and style of Iokelp Company, hereinafter referred to as respondent, have been and are using unfair methods of competition in commerce as "commerce" is defined in said act, and it appearing to said Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint, stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondents, Robert R. Dunn, Jr., and Tom Keck, are copartners trading as the Iokelp Company, with their office and principal place of business in the city of San Diego in the State of California. Respondents are now, and for a considerable period of time immediately heretofore have been, engaged in manufacturing, offering for sale, selling, and distributing in commerce among or between the various States of the United States, and between the United States and foreign countries, a prepared product called "Iokelp," sometimes called "Iokelp Tablets," described as a vegetable food supplement containing iodine and other mineral properties and represented as a remedy for constipation, nervous anemic conditions, prostate, and other glandular troubles, including pituitary and thyroid; as a preventive of thyroid trouble and of indigestion, neuritis, rheumatism, and periodic irregularity; and as being essential to the health of the thyroid gland and to health in general. Respondents have caused and now cause said product when sold to be transported from the aforesaid place of business in the city of San Diego in the State of California to purchasers thereof located in various States of the United States and in foreign countries. In the course and conduct of their said business respondents have been and now are engaged in substantial competition with corporations, firms, other partnerships and with individuals offering for sale and selling in commerce between and among the various States of the United States, preparations, compounds and/or medicines for use in the treatment of the same or similar ailments or diseases, or for the same purposes as aforesaid.

PAR. 2. Respondents have offered for sale and now offer for sale and sell their said prepared product called "Iokelp" in interstate and foreign commerce, as set forth in paragraph 1 hereof, by use of the mails, by use of interstate carriers and other channels of said interstate and foreign commerce, by means of radio broadcasts, newspapers, and other periodicals which have had or have a circulation in and through various States of the United States and foreign countries, and also in circulars, letters, pamphlets, and literature which have been and are distributed by respondents to customers and prospective customers in various States of the United States and foreign countries, in the course and conduct of which respondents have made and now make false and misleading statements and representations to the injury of the public and to competitors in like commerce.

In the course and conduct of the business and advertising as aforesaid, respondents imply and represent that their product is a remedy for constipation, nervous anemic conditions, prostate and other glandular troubles, including pituitary and thyroid; that the same is a preventive of thyroid trouble and of indigestion, neuritis, rheumatism, and periodic irregularity, and that the same is essential to the health of the thyroid gland, to adolescent, pregnant and lactating women, and to health in general. Said advertising of respondents contains among other things the following numerous statements and representations, to wit:¹

PAR. 3. In truth and in fact the above and foregoing statements and representations by Respondents have been and are false and misleading in the following respects:

(1) That respondents' claims for said product grossly exceed the uses which may be beneficially, therapeutically and/or safely made of such products.

¹The representations referred to, as allegedly made by respondents, and quoted at length in the complaint at this point, are also, with the exceptions below noted, set forth in the findings, infra, at page 172, and are, for such reasons, omitted here in the interest of brevity.

Exceptions referred to follow:

"IOKELP Tablets contain many times the amount of iodine of land vegetables."

"One girl wrote the IOKELP Company that her savings in manicure costs alone since using IOKELP, the natural food iodine, more than paid for the cost of the treatment. Brittle nails may seem trivial but they are usually a symptom of calcium deficiency in the blood. Either the diet is lacking in calcium or the body is unable to assimilate the calcium that is in the diet because the thyroid gland is not functioning properly. By supplying the thyroid with needed iodine, Iokelp makes its own calcium and that contained in other foods available to the body to build strong bones, teeth and nails, and aid in resistance to disease."

"IOKELP succeeds in preventing and correcting simple goiter where other treatments have failed. That is because of the special process by which the kelp leaves are processed. Therefore, accept no substitute."

"If you already have simple goiter, the easily assimilated natural iodine supplied by IOKELP will correct the condition or the full purchase price will be immediately refunded. Otherwise, protect yourself from this disease of the thyroid gland and its accompanying disorders. Reinforce your diet with the food iodine which is supplied in abundance by Iokelp."

"Eating demineralized and devitalized foods year after year, as most of us do, produces a condition that is very difficult to overcome but which IOKELP tablets can often correct in time. IOKELP made from fresh kelp, highly concentrated, contains liberal quantities of iodine, iron, copper and other minerals absolutely essential for bodily health."

"Goiter Handicaps Washington Children

"Due to iodine deficiency in food and water of this region, a high percentage of children and adults are affected by goiter. Iokelp, a concentration of sea kelp, makes available abundant organic iodine and is a successful preventive of simple goiter. Ask your druggist or write Iokelp Co., San Diego, California. IOKELP—33-day supply in $1.25 bottle."

"Government statistics show that an alarmingly large number of the population in this region suffer from simple goiter. Guard yourself with Iokelp, the concentrated kelp food,

(2) That the mineral ingredients present in said products are therapeutically insufficient and otherwise insufficient to benefit purchasers thereof or to accomplish the purposes or results claimed by said respondents for their product.

(3) That, while said product does contain iron, to consume a sufficient quantity of said product to get any beneficial effect from such iron, or of the other mineral ingredients of said product, would generally create a toxic condition from over dosage of other mineral ingredients of said product.

(4) That the internal or oral use of iodine has a very narrow range of usefulness because of its effect on metabolism and associated thyroid gland activities, for which reason its internal or oral use requires the medical diagnosis of the condition of persons making such internal or oral use of it, and its internal or oral use is not beneficial except under limited conditions.

(5) That said product is not a food.

(6) That said product is not a remedy for constipation, nervous anemic conditions, prostate, pituitary or other glandular troubles; and is not a remedy or useful in the treatment of thyroid troubles.

which supplies abundant organic iodine to check this disease. Ask your druggist, or write the Iokelp Co., San Diego, California. IOKELP—33-day supply in $1.25 bottle."

"Because the food and water of this region are deficient in iodine, an alarmingly large percentage of the population suffer from simple goiter. Fight this disease with Iokelp, a concentration of the giant sea kelp, rich in the organic iodine which prevents goiter. At your druggists. Iokelp—33-day supply in $1.25 bottle."

"Dangerous drugs and cathartics never brought anybody permanent relief from constipation and if taken regularly generally make this condition worse. Iokelp, a vegetable food supplement, stimulates the glandular secretions and gastric juices gradually promoting natural elimination. At your druggist or write Iokelp Co., San Diego, Calif. Iokelp 33-day supply in $1.25 bottle."

A HEALTHFUL PRODUCT FROM THE SEA

"The giant kelp grown off the coast of Southern California is rich in organic minerals necessary for perfect health. Several of these minerals—especially Iodine and Iron—are lacking in sufficient quantities in every day foods, with the result that many people suffer from the so-called deficiency diseases.

"IOKELP is a pure 100% concentration of the giant kelp—scientifically dried, milled into powder and pressed into convenient tablets. If you are in ailing health and believe that mineral deficiency may be the cause of it; try Iokelp today. For sale at the Owl and other good druggists, or write the Iokelp Co., San Diego, California."

MINERALS

Necessary to Health

"Did you ever realize how essential minerals are to your health? Science has established that there should be at least 14 different minerals present in the human body. Deficiency of these minerals in the diet may lead to many serious ailments.

"Land grown vegetables and other foods are generally deficient in minerals but kelp and other marine plants contain liberal quantities of Iodine, Iron and other organic minerals necessary for health. IOKELP, a product made from the giant kelp, supplies these minerals in great abundance. If you believe mineral deficiency may be the cause of your ill health try Iokelp today. For sale at the Owl and other good druggists, or write the Iokelp Co., San Diego, California."

(7) That said product is not a preventative of indigestion, neuritis, rheumatism, periodic irregularity in women, or thyroid troubles, nor is it essential to the health of thyroid glands, adolescent, pregnant, or lactating women or to the health of the public in general. Respondents' claims, representations and statements relative to the composition and beneficial and therapeutic efficacy and uses of their said product are unwarranted and false and misleading.

PAR. 4. The statements and representations of respondents, as aforesaid, have had and have a capacity and tendency to mislead and deceive and/or have misled and deceived the purchasing public into the belief that respondents' so-called "Iokelp Tablets" are a remedy and preventive for the ailments, diseases and physical troubles as set forth in paragraph 1 hereof, and that the same are beneficial and essential to the health of the thyroid gland and to individual health in general. Said statements and representations have tended to induce and have induced the purchase of respondent's product in reliance upon such erroneous belief, and have tended to divert trade from, and have diverted trade from, and otherwise injured competitors of respondents. By such statements and representations substantial injury has been done by respondents to substantial competition in interstate commerce.

PAR. 5. The above acts and things done by said respondents, as aforesaid, are all to the prejudice of the public and of respondents' competitors and constitute unfair methods of competition in interstate and foreign commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

been offered by the respondents in opposition to the allegations of the complaint, although the respondents were duly represented at said hearings by Daniel Daugherty, attorney for the respondents; and said testimony and other evidence were duly recorded and filed in the office of the Commission. Thereafter, the proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on the said complaint, the answer thereto, testimony and other evidence in support of the allegations of said complaint, brief in support of the complaint, and the oral arguments of counsel aforesaid; and the Commission, having duly considered the same and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public and makes this its findings as to the facts, and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondents, Robert R. Dunn, Jr., and Tom Keck, are individuals, trading as the Iokelp Company, with their office and principal place of business located in the city of San Diego, State of California. Respondents are engaged in the business of offering for sale and selling an alleged remedial preparation under the name of "Iokelp."

Respondents market their said product through dealers in drugs and medicines for resale to the public and by sales direct to persons desiring remedies, treatments or preventives of the ailments, diseases and conditions for which the respondents advertise said product. The respondents offer for sale and sell said preparation "Iokelp" in interstate commerce, and make sales in many of the States of the United States other than the State of California, and when sales are made respondents cause the preparation "Iokelp" to be transported from their place of business in the city of San Diego, or from other points in the State of California, to the purchasers thereof located in States other than California.

The respondents are in substantial competition in commerce between and among the several States of the United States, and in the District of Columbia, with individuals, firms, and corporations who are engaged in the business of offering for sale and selling remedies, preparations and products for use for the same purposes as those for which the respondents advertise their said preparation, in said commerce.

PAR. 2. The preparation "Iokelp" is produced by dehydrating and grinding kelp or seaweed, scientifically known as "Macrocystis Pyrifera," which is compressed into tablet form, bottled and ready for sale to consumers. The preparation is sold to ultimate consumers for $1.25 per bottle of 200 tablets and the dosage recommended by the respondents is two tablets three times per day. The gross business of the respondents in the preparation "Iokelp" was approximately $18,000 in 1933 and $30,000 in 1934.

Respondents represent that a typical analysis of the ash in "Iokelp" tablets is as follows:

Iodine.....	0.25%
Acid Insoluble Matter.....	0.70%
Iron.....	0.68%
Calcium.....	1.08%
Magnesium.....	0.57%
Sodium.....	1.66%
Potassium.....	7.20%
Carbonate.....	1.64%
Sulphur.....	0.69%
Phosphorus.....	0.92%
Manganese.....	Trace
Copper.....	40.0 ppm

An analysis made by the Department of Agriculture of the produce is as follows:

Average weight—0.33 gram.
 Taste: Salty and mucilaginous.
 Iodine total—0.28% by weight.
 Identity: Seaweed.
 Reducing sugars; trace.

The iodine content of the tablet is practically the same in both analyses, and is approximately one-fourth of one percent. The other constituent elements of the preparation are the same as those usually found in vegetables ordinarily used for food in the United States, and are found in said preparation in approximately the same quantities and proportions.

PAR. 3. The respondents, in the course and conduct of their business, advertise their said preparation through pamphlets, circulars and other printed matter, and by advertisements in newspapers and through radio broadcasts from stations located in the city of San Diego, State of California.

In the course and conduct of their business, and by the means and in the manner aforesaid, the respondents make many statements concerning the curative qualities of their preparation. Among others, the following statements are made:

Probably few people except Doctors realize the tremendous importance of the thyroid gland. Proper functioning of the thyroid is absolutely necessary for the proper functioning of the other glands and organs of the body. Lack of iodine in the daily diet is the commonest cause of thyroid trouble, and this trouble can only be corrected by taking iodine in concentrated form to make up

Iodine for Simple Goiter

Lack of iodine in everyday food causes nervousness, palpitations and simple goiter. A successful treatment is Iokelp, a natural product containing abundant organic iodine and other minerals that the body needs to correct these conditions.

Kelp Preventive of Simple Goiter

The giant kelp plant is a naturally iodized food unusually rich in iodine, the preventive and corrective of simple goiter. Iokelp, a concentration of this kelp, makes available organic iodine in palatable and easily digestible form.

IOKELP succeeds in preventing and correcting simple goiter where other treatments have failed. * * *

If you already have simple goiter, the easily assimilated natural iodine supplied by IOKELP will correct the condition or the full purchase price will be immediately refunded. Otherwise, protect yourself from this disease of the thyroid gland and its accompanying disorders. * * *

An insidious feature of simple goiter, the iodine deficiency disease of the thyroid gland, is that it is often not recognized in its incipient stages. Preventive measures are therefore advised and urged, especially with adolescent girls and pregnant and lactating women. The daily diet should include a sufficient quantity of food iodine to maintain the thyroid gland in good health. This might be difficult or costly if it were not for the giant kelp plant of the ocean. Rich in iodine, kelp makes it available in abundance when processed into Iokelp Tablets which are palatable and inexpensive.

If you are already suffering from simple goiter, you may take IOKELP with assurance that it has proven effective in many other cases.

If your thyroid, pituitary and other glands do not receive enough minerals through daily diet, sickness is almost sure result. Iokelp is a food supplement, not a drug, made from sea plants rich in organic minerals.

Don't Drug Constipation

Dangerous drugs or cathartics never protect anybody from constipation * * * Iokelp, a vegetable food supplement, stimulates the glandular secretion and gastric juices, gradually promoting natural elimination.

Nervous Anemic Conditions

If your thyroid, pituitary and other glands do not receive enough minerals through daily diet, sickness is almost sure result.

Pregnant and lactating women, and adolescent girls, are especially in need of an extra supply of natural iodine in their diets. In their condition, the thyroid gland is under abnormal strain and a deficiency in iodine may work untold injury. A sufficient supply of iodine is not always to be had from ordinary foods. But the giant kelp plant of the Pacific Ocean, when specifically processed into IOKELP Tablets yields an abundance of this vital mineral.

Iokelp, made from fresh sea kelp, highly concentrated, is one of the richest sources of organic iodine.

IOKELP is unusually rich in organic iodine and supplies the deficiency of iodine that exists in every day foods in almost all parts of the country.

Without sufficient iodine the all-important thyroid gland cannot function properly, and this condition may lead to nervousness, anemia, indigestion, neuritis, periodic irregularity and finally to simple gotter.

One of the principal causes of certain types of rheumatism and neuritis is lack of sufficient minerals in the daily diet.

Don't suffer the agonies of Neuritis, and Rheumatism any longer without giving IOKELP a trial.

Probably few people who are not physicians or other students of the human body realize the tremendous importance of the thyroid gland, the master gland as it has been correctly nicknamed. It is said that the thyroid gland is to the human body what the draught is to fire and furthermore that iodine is the match that kindles it.

Nearly everyone now knows that organic iodine is vitally necessary to the health of the thyroid gland.

Proper functioning of the thyroid gland is absolutely necessary for effective metabolism, healthy lungs and breathing organs and physical growth. It is required for mental development and in fact, for proper functioning of all the organs of the body.

The principal source of organic iodine today is the sea and ocean vegetation such as the giant kelp which grows off the coast of Southern California.

Good morning, friends, how is your thyroid today? That is not such a silly question at that, when you stop to consider how important science has found the thyroid gland to be in matters of health. It doesn't always take expert knowledge to answer the question either, at least if you feel perfectly well you know your thyroid gland is functioning correctly. You wouldn't feel at all well if it weren't. Your vitality would be low and you would probably have more definite symptoms, which might be anything from nervousness and anemia to gotter.

"Mineral—Element—Starvation"—means absence or deficiency in the human system of those mineral elements (iron, iodine, calcium, sulphur, magnesium, potassium, sodium and manganese) absolutely necessary to maintain the equilibrium essential between all the physiological processes of the body.

"Mineral—Element—Starvation"—strikes directly at the thyroid gland, for scientific experiments and observations prove the most alarming of all physiological process disturbances in the body center around the thyroid gland. Natural iodine, such as in Iokelp Tablets, is rated as the vitally important and essential element in maintaining and restoring the proper functioning of the thyroid gland.

PAR. 4. By the means and in the manner above set out the respondents represent and imply that the preparation "Iokelp" is a remedy for constipation, nervous anemic conditions, and prostate, pituitary and thyroid gland troubles, including simple goiter; that the preparation is a preventive of thyroid gland troubles, including simple goiter, indigestion, neuritis, rheumatism, and periodic irregularity in women; and that the preparation is essential to the health of the thyroid gland, to the health of adolescent, pregnant, and lactating women, and to health in general.

In truth and in fact the above and foregoing representations and implications are false, for said preparation "Iokelp" is not a remedy for constipation, nervous anemic conditions, and prostate, pituitary and thyroid gland troubles, including simple goiter, and is not a preventive of thyroid gland troubles, including simple goiter, indigestion, neuritis, rheumatism, and periodic irregularity in women, and is not essential to the health of the thyroid gland, to the health of adolescent, pregnant, and lactating women, and to health in general, nor does it possess the therapeutic efficacy represented by the respondents.

PAR. 5. The acts and practices of the respondent hereinabove set out have the tendency and capacity to and do mislead and deceive many persons desiring to purchase a remedy for, a preventive of, or a preparation that is essential to one or more of the conditions above mentioned, and cause a substantial portion of such persons erroneously to believe that the representations and implications made by the respondents are true and that said preparation is a remedy for constipation, nervous anemic conditions, and prostate, pituitary and thyroid gland troubles, including simple goiter; that the preparation is a preventive of thyroid gland troubles, including simple goiter, indigestion, neuritis, rheumatism, and periodic irregularity in women; and that the preparation is essential to the health of the thyroid gland, to the health of adolescent, pregnant, and lactating women, and to health in general, and possesses the therapeutic efficacy represented and implied by said respondents; and cause a substantial portion of such persons, because of such erroneous beliefs, to purchase said preparation "Iokelp," thereby unfairly and illegally diverting trade to the said respondents from their competitors who truthfully represent their products, to the substantial injury of such competitors in said commerce and to the injury of the public.

PAR. 6. Among the competitors of the said respondents are many who truthfully represent their products and who do not misrepresent the therapeutic efficacy possessed by such products and who do not, in connection with the sale of their products in said commerce, use the acts and practices used by the said respondents as above set out.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondents Robert R. Dunn, Jr., and Tom Keck are to the prejudice of the public and of respondents' competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce, within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

This proceeding having been heard by the Federal Trade Commission upon the complaint of the Commission, the answer of the respondents, testimony and other evidence taken before W. W. Shepard, an examiner of the Commission theretofore duly designated by it, in support of the allegations of the complaint, brief filed herein by counsel for the Commission, and oral argument by Edw. W. Thomerson, counsel for the Commission, and by Daniel Daugherty, counsel for the respondents, and the Commission having made its findings as to the facts and its conclusion that said respondents have violated the provisions of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled, "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

It is ordered, That the respondents, Robert R. Dunn, Jr., and Tom Keck, their representatives, agents, and employees, in connection with the offering for sale, sale and distribution of that certain preparation now sold by the said respondents under the name "Iokelp," or any tablet, powder, or other preparation, under whatever name sold, composed of similar ingrediepts and possessing therapeutic properties similar to the preparation now known and sold by the respondents under the name of "Iokelp," in interstate commerce or in the District of Columbia, forthwith cease and desist from representing:

(1) That said preparation is a remedy for, or will cure, constipation, nervous anemic conditions, prostate, pituitary, or thyroid gland troubles including simple goiter;

(2) That said preparation is a preventative of thyroid gland troubles, including simple goiter, indigestion, neuritis, rheumatism, or periodic irregularity in women;

(3) That said preparation is essential to the health of the thyroid gland, or to the health of adolescent, pregnant, or lactating women, or to the health in general.

It is further ordered, That the respondents shall, within 60 days after service upon them of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which they have complied with this order.

IN THE MATTER OF
BONOMO CANDY AND NUT CORPORATION

COMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION
OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 26, 1914

Docket 2776. Complaint, Apr. 21, 1936—Decision, Dec. 11, 1936

Where a corporation engaged in manufacture and sale of "straight" goods candy and of so-called "break and take," "draw," or "deal" assortments, one of the principal trade demands for which comes from the small retailers with stores, in many instances, near schools and patronized by the school children, and sale and distribution of which, or similarly sold candy, offering opportunity of obtaining a prize or becoming a winner by lot or chance, teaches and encourages gambling among children, largest class by far of purchasers and consumers of such type of candy, who buy same in preference to so-called "straight" goods when displayed side by side by reason of lottery or gambling feature connected with former, and selling of which in the market of the other, i. e., the "straight" goods, sold exclusively by many manufacturers, has been followed by a market decrease in sales of such "straight" candy, due to gambling or lottery feature connected with so-called "break and take," "draw," or "deal" merchandise—

Sold, to wholesalers and jobbers, assortments consisting of a number of penny pieces of uniform size and shape, together with a number of boxes of candy secured as prizes by chance purchasers of those uniform penny pieces, the enclosed concealed centers of which differed from that of the majority; so packed and assembled that such assortments could be displayed and offered by the numerous retailer purchasers thereof, and with knowledge and intent that such assortments would and could be sold, without alteration or rearrangement, to the consuming or purchasing public by lot or chance, in accordance with such arrangement, in violation of public policy and in competition with many who regard such methods of sale and distribution as morally bad and as encouraging gambling, and especially among children, as injurious to the industry through resulting in the merchandising of a chance or lottery instead of candy, and as providing retail merchants with the means of violating the laws of the several States, and some of whom, for such reasons, refuse to sell candy so packed and assembled that it can be resold to the public by lot or chance;

With the result that such refusing competitors, who can compete on even terms only by furnishing the same or similar assortments, were put to a disadvantage in competing and their sales of "straight" candy showed a continued decrease, some competitors began the sale and distribution of candy for resale to the public by lot or chance, for which, thus sold, there is demand, public and competitors were prejudiced and injured and trade was diverted to it from its said competitors, and there was a restraint upon and a detriment to the freedom of fair and legitimate competition in industry concerned:

Held, That such acts and practices were to the prejudice of the public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition.

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that Bonomo Candy and Nut Corporation, a corporation, hereinafter referred to as respondent, has been and is using unfair methods of competition in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in said act of Congress, and it appearing to said Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent is a corporation organized under the laws of the State of New York, with its principal office and place of business located at 649 Morgan Avenue, in the city of Brooklyn, State of New York. It is now, and for several years last past has been, engaged in the manufacture of candies and in the sale and distribution thereof to wholesale dealers, jobbers, and retail dealers, located at points in the various States of the United States, and causes and has caused its products, when so sold, to be transported from its principal place of business in the city of Brooklyn, N. Y., to purchasers thereof in other States of the United States at their respective places of business; and there is now, and has been for several years last past, a course of trade and commerce by said respondent in such candy between and among the States of the United States. In the course and conduct of said business, respondent is in competition with other corporations and with partnerships and individuals engaged in the manufacture of candy and in the sale and distribution thereof in commerce between and among the various States of the United States.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of its business, as described in paragraph 1 hereof, respondent sells and has sold since on or about December 1935, to wholesale and retail dealers, packages or assortments of candy so packed and assembled as to involve the use of a lottery scheme when sold and distributed to the consumers thereof.

One of said assortments consists of a number of pieces of candy of uniform size and shape, together with a number of boxes of candy, which boxes of candy are to be given as prizes to purchasers of said pieces of candy of uniform size and shape in the following manner:

The majority of the said pieces of candy of uniform size and shape have centers of the same color, but a small number of said pieces of candy have centers of a different color. The said pieces of candy of uniform size and shape in said assortment, retail at the price of 1¢ each, but the purchaser who procures one of said candies having a center colored differently from the majority is entitled to receive, and is to be given free of charge, one of the said boxes of candy heretofore referred to. The color of the centers of said pieces of candy of uniform size and shape is effectively concealed from the purchaser and prospective purchaser until a selection has been made and the piece of candy broken up. The aforesaid purchasers of said candies, who procure a candy having a center colored differently from the majority of said pieces of candy of uniform size and shape in said assortment, thus procure one of the said boxes of candy wholly by lot or chance.

PAR. 3. The wholesale dealers and jobbers, to whom respondent sells its assortment, resell said assortment to retail dealers, and said retail dealers, and the retail dealers to whom respondent sells direct, expose said assortment for sale and sell said candy to the purchasing public in accordance with the aforesaid sales plan. Respondent thus supplies to and places in the hands of others the means of conducting lotteries in the sale of its product in accordance with the sales plan hereinabove set forth, as a means of inducing purchasers thereof to purchase respondent's said product in preference to candy offered for sale and sold by its competitors.

PAR. 4. The sale of said candy to the purchasing public in the manner above alleged involves a game of chance or the sale of a chance to procure boxes of candy.

The use by respondent of said method in the sale of candy, and the sale of candy by and through the use thereof and by the aid of said method, is a practice of the sort which the common law and criminal statutes have long deemed contrary to public policy; and is contrary to an established public policy of the Government of the United States. The use by respondent of said method has the dangerous tendency unduly to hinder competition or create monopoly in this, to wit: that the use thereof has the tendency and capacity to exclude from the branch of the candy trade involved in this proceeding competitors who do not adopt and use the same method or an equivalent or similar method involving the same or an equivalent or similar element of chance or lottery scheme.

Many persons, firms, and corporations who make and sell candy in competition with the respondent, as above alleged, are unwilling to offer for sale or sell candy so packed and assembled as above alleged, or otherwise arranged and packed for sale to the purchasing public so as to involve a game of chance, and such competitors refrain therefrom.

PAR. 5. Many dealers in, and ultimate purchasers of, candy are attracted by respondent's said method and manner of packing said candy, and by the element of chance involved in the sale thereof in the manner above described, and are thereby induced to purchase said candy so packed and sold by respondent, in preference to candy offered for sale and sold by said competitors of respondent who do not use the same or equivalent methods. The use of said method by respondent has the tendency and capacity, because of said game of chance, to divert to respondent trade and custom from its said competitors who do not use the same or an equivalent method; to exclude from said candy trade all competitors who are unwilling to and who do not use the same or an equivalent method because the same is unlawful; to lessen competition in said candy trade, and to tend to create a monopoly of said candy trade in respondent and such other distributors of candy as use the same or an equivalent method, and to deprive the purchasing public of the benefit of free competition in said candy trade. The use of said method by the respondent has the tendency and capacity to eliminate from said candy trade all actual competitors, and to exclude therefrom all potential competitors, who do not adopt and use said method or an equivalent method.

PAR. 6. Many of said competitors of respondent are unwilling to adopt and use said method or any method involving a game of chance or the sale of a chance to win something by chance or any other method that is contrary to public policy.

PAR. 7. In the course and conduct of its business, as described in paragraph 1 hereof, respondent has caused and causes the representation to be made on labels and containers for one of its candy products, as follows:

Minty Chocs. 20 Count—10 Cents

Petite Chocolate Peppermints

The effect of the use of the words, as above indicated, is to falsely represent to the public that the candy to be purchased from respondent is peppermint candy. There are among members of the purchasing public a substantial number who have a preference for peppermint candy. In truth and in fact, the candy sold and offered for sale by the respondent, under the above-stated representations, is not peppermint candy, but is principally of the type known as marshmallow candy.

PAR. 8. In the course and conduct of its business, as described in paragraph 1 hereof, respondent has advertised and offered for sale, and distributed as premiums packages of candy, falsely representing them to have a content weight of three ounces, when in truth and in fact such packages do not contain contents of the net weight of three ounces.

PAR. 9. There are among the competitors of the respondent corporation a substantial number of persons, partnerships, and corporations who do not falsely represent the type and flavor of candy offered by them for sale, or who do in fact sell and offer for sale peppermint candy and marshmallow candy, each truthfully represented and designated as such.

There are among the competitors of the respondent a substantial number of persons, partnerships and corporations who offer for sale merchandise of a like nature and character with that in which the respondent deals, offering the same for sale to the members of the purchasing public and truthfully representing the proper net weight of the candy so offered for sale, offering the same in packages similar to those used by the respondent but truthfully representing the exact and correct weight of the merchandise so offered.

Respondent's false representations have had, and now have the tendency and capacity to mislead and deceive a substantial portion of the purchasing public into the erroneous belief that such representations are true, causing them to purchase respondent's product in reliance on same. Said false representations have the tendency and capacity to, and do, divert trade to respondent from its competitors who truthfully label their products, thereby causing substantial injury to substantial competition in commerce.

PAR. 10. The aforementioned method, acts and practices of the respondent are all to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors as hereinabove alleged. Said method, acts, and practices constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914.

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

tion, charging that the respondent had been and was using unfair methods of competition in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in said act of Congress. Respondent filed answer thereto on May 12, 1936. Thereafter testimony and other evidence in support of the allegations of the complaint were introduced by Henry C. Lank and P. C. Kolinski, attorneys for the Commission, before Miles J. Furnas, an examiner of the Commission theretofore duly designated by it, and said testimony and other evidence were duly recorded and filed in the office of the Commission. Respondent was represented by counsel but offered no testimony or other evidence in opposition to the charges of the complaint. Thereafter the proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on said complaint, the testimony and other evidence in support thereof, and on the brief of counsel for the Commission, respondent through its counsel having advised that it did not desire to file brief nor present oral argument, and the Commission, having duly considered the matter and being fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent is a corporation organized under the laws of the State of New York, with its principal office and place of business located at 649 Morgan Avenue, in the city of Brooklyn, State of New York. Respondent is now, and for several years last past has been, engaged in the manufacture of candies and in the sale and distribution thereof to wholesale dealers, jobbers, and retail dealers located at points in the various States in the eastern part of the United States, and causes and has caused its products, when so sold, to be transported from its principal place of business in the State of New York to purchasers thereof in other States of the United States at their respective places of business, and there is now, and has been for several years last past, a course of trade and commerce by said respondent in such candy between and among the States of the United States. In so carrying on said business, respondent is and has been engaged in interstate commerce and is and has been in active competition with other corporations and with partnerships and individuals engaged in the manufacture of candy and in the sale and distribution thereof between and among the various States of the United States.

PAR. 2. Beginning about December 1935, the respondent manufactured and distributed to wholesale dealers and jobbers an assortment containing a number of pieces of candy of uniform size and shape, together with a number of boxes of candy, which boxes of candy were to be given as prizes to purchasers of said pieces of candy of uniform size and shape in the following manner: The majority of the said pieces of candy of uniform size and shape had centers of the same color but a small number of said pieces of candy had centers of a different color. The said pieces of candy of uniform size and shape in said assortment retailed at the price of 1¢ each but the purchaser, who procured one of said candies having a center colored differently from the majority, was entitled to receive, and was to be given free of charge, one of the said boxes of candy heretofore referred to. The color of the centers of said pieces of candy of uniform size and shape was effectively concealed from the purchaser and prospective purchaser until a selection had been made and the piece of candy broken open. The aforesaid purchasers of said candies, who procured a candy having a center colored differently from the majority of the said pieces of candy of uniform size and shape in said assortment, thus procured one of the said boxes of candy wholly by lot or chance.

PAR. 3. The lottery or prize assortments, similar to the assortment described in paragraph 2 hereof, are generally referred to in the candy industry as "break and take," "draw," or "deal" assortments, and packages or assortments of candy without the gaming device or lottery feature in connection with their resale to the public are generally referred to in the candy trade or industry as "straight" goods. These terms will be used hereafter in these findings to describe these respective types of candy.

PAR. 4. Numerous retail dealers purchase assortments, as described in paragraph 2 above, from wholesale dealers or jobbers who in turn have purchased said assortments from respondent, and such retail dealers display said assortments for sale to the public as packed by the respondent, and the candy contained in said assortments is sold and distributed to the consuming public in the manner described.

PAR. 5. All sales made by respondent to wholesale dealers and jobbers are absolute sales and respondent retains no control in any manner over the goods after they are delivered to the wholesale dealers or jobbers. The assortments are assembled and packed in such manner that they are sold and may be sold by the retail dealers to the purchasing public in the manner described.

The respondent has knowledge that said assortments will be resold to the purchasing public by retail dealers by lot or chance, and it packs and assembles such candy in the way and manner described so that, without alteration, addition, or rearrangement, it may be resold to the public by lot or chance by retail dealers.

PAR. 6. The sale and distribution of candy by the retail dealers in the manner described in paragraph 2 hereof is a sale and distribution of candy by lot or chance and constitutes a lottery or gaming device.

Competitors of respondent appeared as witnesses in this proceeding and testified, and the Commission finds as a fact, that many competitors regard such methods of sale and distribution as morally bad and as encouraging gambling, especially among children; as injurious to the candy industry, because it results in the merchandising of a chance or lottery instead of candy; and as providing retail merchants with the means of violating the laws of the several States. Because of these reasons, some competitors of respondent refuse to sell candy so packed and assembled that it can be resold to the public by lot or chance. These competitors are thereby put to disadvantage in competing. Certain retailers, who find that they can dispose of more candy by the "break and take," or "draw," or "deal" methods, buy respondent's products and the products of others employing the same or similar methods of sale, and thereby trade is diverted to respondent and others using similar methods from said competitors. Said competitors can compete on even terms only by furnishing the same or similar assortments, and this they are unwilling to do and their sales of "straight" goods show a continued decrease.

There is a demand for candy which is sold by lot or chance, and in order to meet the competition of manufacturers who sell and distribute candy which is sold by such methods, some competitors of respondent have begun the sale and distribution of candy for resale to the public by lot or chance. The use of such methods by respondent in the sale and distribution of its candy is prejudicial and injurious to the public and to respondent's competitors and has resulted in the diversion of trade to respondent from its said competitors and is a restraint upon and a detriment to the freedom of fair and legitimate competition in the candy industry.

PAR. 7. One of the principal demands in the trade for the "break and take," or "draw," or "deal" candy comes from the small retailers. The stores of these small retailers are in many instances located near schools and attract the trade of school children. The consumers or purchasers of the lottery or prize package candy are principally children, and because of the lottery or gambling feature connected with the "break and take," or "draw" package, and the possibility of becoming a winner, children purchase candy from such packages in preference to the "straight" goods candy, when the two types of assortments are displayed side by side. The sale and distribution of "break and take," or "draw" packages of candy, or of candy which has connected with its sale to the public the means or opportunity of obtaining a prize or becoming a winner by lot or chance, teaches and encourages gambling among children, who comprise by far the largest class of purchasers and consumers of this type of candy.

PAR. 8. There are in the United States many manufacturers of candy who do not manufacture and sell lottery or prize assortments of candy, and who sell their "straight" goods candy in interstate commerce in competition with the "break and take," or "draw," or "deal" candy, and manufacturers of the "straight" goods type of candy have noted a marked decrease in the sales of their products whenever and wherever the lottery or prize candy has appeared in their markets. This decrease in the sales of "straight" goods candy is principally due to the gambling or lottery features connected with the "break and take," "draw," or "deal" candy.

PAR. 9. In addition to the assortment described in paragraph 2 hereof, respondent manufactures candy which it sells without any lottery or chance feature in connection with its resale to the public. Such assortments are sold to syndicate and retail accounts and to wholesale dealers and jobbers. The sale of the "break and take," or "draw," or "deal" assortments, as described in paragraph 2 hereof, is confined to wholesale dealers and jobbers. An officer of the respondent corporation was called as a witness and testified that the respondent's annual volume of business was approximately $700,000, but the proportion represented by "straight" assortments and "break and take," or "draw," or "deal" assortments was not shown.

PAR. 10. The Commission further finds that the sale and distribution in interstate commerce of assortments of candy, as described in paragraph 2 hereof, are contrary to public policy.

PAR. 11. The complaint, in paragraph 7, charged the respondent with falsely representing that certain of its packages of candy were peppermint flavored. The Commission finds that the testimony and other evidence introduced do not support this allegation.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondent, Bonomo Candy and Nut Corporation (excluding the acts and practices referred to in paragraph 11 hereof), are to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

It is ordered, That the respondent, Bonomo Candy and Nut Corporation, a corporation, its officers, agents, representatives and employees, in the offering for sale, sale, and distribution in interstate commerce of candy, do cease and desist from:

(1) Selling and distributing to jobbers and wholesale dealers for resale to retail dealers candy so packed and assembled that sales of such candy to the general public are to be made or may be made by means of a lottery, gaming device, or gift enterprise.

(2) Supplying to or placing in the hands of wholesale dealers and jobbers packages or assortments of candy which are used or which may be used without alteration or rearrangement of the contents of such packages or assortments to conduct a lottery, gaming device, or gift enterprise, in the sale or distribution of the candy contained in said packages or assortments to the public.

(3) Packing or assembling in the said packages or assortments of candy for sale to the public at retail pieces of candy of uniform size and shape having centers of a different color, together with a number of small boxes of candy, which said small boxes of candy are to be given as prizes to the purchaser procuring a piece of candy with a center of a particular color.

It is further ordered, That the respondent shall, within 30 days after the service upon it of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which it has complied with this order.

OF TITLE I OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED JUNE 16, 1933¹

Where an individual engaged as wholesaler and rectifier of distilled spirits in blending and bottling cordials, brandies, liqueurs, rums, gins, and other spirituous beverages, in a rectifying plant and under rectifier's permit, and in selling his aforesaid various products to wholesalers and distributors in substantial competition with those engaged in the manufacture, by true distillation, of gins, rums, and other spirituous beverages from mash, wort, or wash, and in selling same in trade and commerce among the various States and in the District of Columbia, and with those engaged in purchasing, rectifying, blending, and bottling cordials, brandies, liqueurs, rums, gins, and other spirituous beverages in rectifying plants and under rectifiers' permits, and in similarly selling the same, and including among said competitors those who, as manufacturers and distillers from mash, wort, or wash of gins, rums, and other spirituous beverages sold by them, truthfully use words "distillery," "distilleries," "distillers," or "distilling," as a part of their corporate or trade names and on their stationery and advertising, and on the labels of the bottles in which they sell and ship such products, and those who, engaged in purchasing, rectifying, blending, and bottling cordials and other spirituous beverages as hereinbefore set forth, do not, as hereinbefore set forth, use said words—

Represented, through use of word "Distilling" in his trade name, printed on his stationery and on the labels attached to the bottles in which he sold and shipped his said products, and in various other ways, to his customers, and furnished them with the means of thus representing to their vendees, both retailers and ultimate consuming public, that the said cordials, brandies, liqueurs, rums, gins, and other spirituous beverages contained in such bottles were by him made through process of distillation from mash, wort, or wash, notwithstanding fact he did not thus distill said various beverages, thus bottled, labeled, sold, and transported by him, by original and continuous distillation, as above set forth, and through continuous closed pipes and vessels until manufacture is complete, as long definitely understood and implied to trade and ultimate purchasing public from word "Distilling," and did not own, operate, or control any place or places where alcoholic beverages are thus made, and was not a distiller, for the purchase of the bottled liquors of which there is a preference on the part of a substantial portion of the purchasing public;

With effect of misleading and deceiving dealers and purchasing public into the belief that the cordials, brandies, liqueurs, gins, rums, and other spirituous beverages sold by him were by him made and distilled from mash, wort, or

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent is an individual, Nat D. Goldberg, doing business under the trade name Sunset Distilling Company, with principal office and place of business at 125 North Racine Avenue, in the city of Chicago, in the State of Illinois. He is now, and for more than one year last past, has been engaged in the business of blending and bottling cordials, brandies, liqueurs, rums, gins, and other spirituous beverages in a rectifying plant under a rectifier's permit, and in the sale thereof in constant course of trade and commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia. In the course and conduct of his said business he causes his said products when sold to be transported from his place of business aforesaid into and through various States of the United States to the purchasers thereof, consisting of wholesalers and distributors, some located within the State of Illinois and some located in other States of the United States and the District of Columbia. In the course and conduct of his business as aforesaid, respondent is now, and for more than one year last past has been, in substantial competition with corporations and with other individuals, partnerships, and firms engaged in the manufacture by true distillation of gins, rums, and other spirituous beverages from mash, wort, or wash, and in the sale thereof in trade and commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia; and in the course and conduct of his business as aforesaid respondent is, and for more than one year last past has been, in substantial competition with corporations and with other individuals, firms, and partnerships engaged in the business of purchasing, rectifying, blending, and bottling cordials, brandies, liqueurs, rums, gins, and other spirituous beverages in rectifying plants under rectifiers' permits and in the sale thereof in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 2. For a long period of time the word "distilling" when used in connection with the liquor industry and with the products thereof has had and still has a definite significance and meaning to the minds of wholesalers and retailers in such industry and to the ultimate purchasing public, to wit, the manufacture of spirituous beverages by an original and continuous distillation from mash, wort, or wash, through continuous closed pipes and vessels until the manufacture thereof is complete, and a substantial portion of the purchasing public prefers to buy spirituous liquors bottled and prepared by the actual distillers and manufacturers thereof.

PAR. 3. In the course and conduct of his business as aforesaid, by the use of the word "Distilling" in his trade name, printed on his stationery and on the labels attached to the bottles in which he sells and ships his said products, and in various other ways, respondent represents to his customers and furnishes them with the means of representing to their vendees, both retailers and the ultimate consuming public, that the said cordials, brandies, liqueurs, rums, gins, and other spirituous beverages therein contained were by him manufactured through the process of distillation from mash, wort, or wash, when, as a matter of fact, respondent is not a distiller, does not distill the said spirituous beverages by him so bottled, labeled, sold, and transported. Respondent does not own, operate, or control any place or places where alcoholic beverages are manufactured by process of original and continuous distillation from mash, wort, or wash.

"distilleries," "distillers," or "distilling" as a part of their corporate or trade names and on their stationery, advertising and on the labels of the bottles in which they sell and ship such products. There are also among such competitors corporations, firms, partnerships and individuals engaged in the business of purchasing, rectifying, blending, and bottling cordials, brandies, liqueurs, rums, gins, and other spirituous beverages in rectifying plants under rectifiers' permits who do not use the words "distillery," "distilleries," "distilling," or "distillers" as a part of their corporate or trade names, nor on their stationery, advertising nor on the labels attached to the bottles in which they sell and ship their said products.

PAR. 5. The representation by respondent as set forth in paragraph 3 hereof, is calculated to and has a capacity and tendency to and does mislead and deceive dealers and the purchasing public into the belief that the cordials, brandies, liqueurs, gins, rums, and other spirituous beverages sold by the respondent are manufactured or distilled by him from mash, wort, or wash by one continuous process and is calculated to and has the capacity and tendency to and does induce dealers and the purchasing public, acting in such belief, to purchase the spirituous beverages rectified and bottled by the respondent, thereby diverting trade to respondent from his competitors who do not by their corporate or trade name or in any other manner misrepresent that they are manufacturers by distillation from mash, wort, or wash of spirituous beverages, and thereby respondent does substantial injury to substantial competition in interstate commerce.

PARAGRAPHS 1. Respondent is an individual, Nat D. Goldberg, doing business under the trade name Sunset Distilling Company, with principal office and place of business at 125 North Racine Avenue, in the city of Chicago, in the State of Illinois. He is now, and for more than one year last past has been, engaged in the business of blending and bottling cordials, brandies, liqueurs, rums, gins, and other spirituous beverages in a rectifying plant under a rectifier's permit, and in the sale thereof in constant course of trade and commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia. In the course and conduct of his said business he causes his said products when sold to be transported from his place of business aforesaid into and through various States of the United States to the purchasers thereof, consisting of wholesalers and distributors, some located within the State of Illinois and some located in other States of the United States and the District of Columbia. In the course and conduct of his business as aforesaid, respondent is now, and for more than one year last past has been, in substantial competition with corporations and with other individuals, partnerships, and firms engaged in the manufacture by true distillation of gins, rums, and other spirituous beverages from mash, wort, or wash, and in the sale thereof in trade and commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia; and in the course and conduct of his business as aforesaid respondent is, and for more than one year last past has been, in substantial competition with corporations and with other individuals, firms, and partnerships engaged in the business of purchasing, rectifying, blending, and bottling cordials, brandies, liqueurs, rums, gins, and other spirituous beverages in rectifying plants under rectifiers' permits and in the sale thereof in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PARS. 2, 3, 4, and 5. As grounds for these paragraphs of this complaint, the Federal Trade Commission relies upon the matters and things set out in paragraphs 2, 3, 4, and 5 of count 1 of this complaint to the same extent as though the several allegations thereof were set out at length and in separate paragraphs herein, and the said paragraphs 2, 3, 4, and 5 of count 1 of this complaint are incorporated herein by reference and adopted as the allegations of paragraphs 2, 3, 4, and 5, respectively, of this count, and are hereby charged as fully and as completely as though the several averments of the said paragraphs of count 1 were separately set out and repeated verbatim.

PAR. 6. Under and pursuant to Title I of the National Industrial Recovery Act, approved June 16, 1933 (48 Stat. 195 C. 90), the President of the United States, by Executive Order No. 6182, of June 26, 1933, as supplemented by Executive Order No. 6207, of July 21, 1933, and Executive Order No. 6345, of October 20, 1933, delegated to H. A. Wallace as Secretary of Agriculture certain of the powers vested in the President of the United States by the aforesaid Act.

Under and pursuant to the delegation of such powers, the said Secretary of Agriculture pursuant to Section 3 (d) of the Act and Executive Orders under the Act, upon his own motion presented a Code of Fair Competition for the Distilled Spirits Rectifying Industry after due notice and opportunity for hearing in connection therewith had been afforded interested parties, including respondent, in accordance with Title I of the National Industrial Recovery Act and applicable regulations issued thereunder, to the President of the United States who approved the same on the 9th day of December 1933, thereby constituting the said code a Code of Fair Competition within the meaning of the said National Industrial Recovery Act, for the regulation of the aforesaid industry.

In his written report to the President, the said Secretary of Agriculture made, among others, the following findings with respect to the said Code in the following words, to wit:

That said Code will tend to effectuate the declared policy of Title I of the National Industrial Recovery Act as set forth in Section 1 of said Act in that the terms and provisions of such Code tend: (a) to remove obstructions to the free flow of foreign commerce, which tend to diminish the amount thereof; (b) to provide for the general welfare by promoting the organization of industry for the purpose of cooperative action among trade groups; (c) to eliminate unfair competitive practices; (d) to promote the fullest possible utilization of the present productive capacity of industries; (e) to avoid undue restriction of production (except as may be temporarily required); (f) to increase the consumption of industrial and agricultural products by increasing purchasing power; and (g) otherwise to rehabilitate industry.

By his approval of the said code on December 9, 1933, the President of the United States, pursuant to the authority vested in him by Title I of the National Industrial Recovery Act aforesaid, made and issued his certain written Executive Order, wherein he adopted and approved the report, recommendations and findings of the said Secretary of Agriculture, and ordered that the said Code of Fair Competition be, and the same thereby was approved, and by virtue of the National Industrial Recovery Act aforesaid, the following provision of Article V of said Code became and still is one of the standards of fair competition for the Distilled Spirits Rectifying Industry and is binding upon every member of said Industry and this respondent:

The following practices constitute unfair methods of competition and shall not be engaged in by any member of the industry:

Section 1. False Advertising.—To publish or disseminate in any manner any false advertisement of any rectified product. Any advertisement shall be deemed to be false if it is untrue in any particular, or if directly or by ambiguity, omission or inference it tends to create a misleading impression

PAR. 7. The use by respondent of the word "Distilling" in his trade name, printed on his stationery and on the labels attached to the bottles in which he sells and ships such products and in various other ways, constitutes false advertising within the meaning of the aforesaid provision of said Article V and tends to and does create the misleading impression that respondent is engaged in the business of distilling gins, rums, and other spirituous beverages from mash, wort, or wash, and that the cordials, brandies, liqueurs, gins, rums, and other spirituous beverages by him so sold and transported have been bottled by the original distillers thereof and that the gins and rums rectified, blended and sold by respondent have been produced by a true process of distillation, all contrary to the provisions of Section 1, Article V, of the Code aforesaid.

PAR. 8. The above alleged methods, acts and practices of the respondent are and have been in violation of the standard of fair competition for the Distilled Spirits Rectifying Industry of the United States. Such violation of such standard in the aforesaid transactions in interstate commerce and other transactions which affect interstate commerce in the manner set forth in paragraph 5 of count 1 hereof, are in violation of Section 3 of Title I of the National Industrial Recovery Act and they are unfair methods of competition in commerce within the meaning of the Federal Trade Commission Act as amended.

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission on May 27, 1935, issued and served its complaint in this proceeding upon respondent Nat D. Goldberg, trading as Sunset Distilling Company, charging him with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of the provisions of said act. After the issuance of said complaint, and the filing of respondent's answer, the Commission, by order entered herein granted respondent's motion for permission to withdraw said answer and to substitute therefor an answer admitting all the material allegations of the complaint to be true, and waiving the taking of further evidence and all other intervening procedure, which substitute answer was duly filed in the office of the Commission. Thereafter, this proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on the said complaint and the substituted answer, briefs and oral arguments of counsel having been waived, and the Commission, having duly considered the same and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent is an individual trading under the name and style of Sunset Distilling Company, with principal office and place of business at 125 North Racine Avenue, in the city of Chicago, in the State of Illinois. He is now, and for more than one year last past has been, engaged in business under a basic permit from the United States Government, which permit is designated "R-526," as a wholesaler and rectifier of distilled spirits, blending and bottling cordials, brandies, liqueurs, rums, gins, and other spirituous beverages in a rectifying plant under a rectifier's permit, and in the sale thereof in constant course of trade and commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia. In the course and conduct of his said business he causes his said products, when sold, to be transported from his place of business aforesaid into and through various States of the United States to the purchasers thereof, consisting of wholesalers and distributors, some located within the State of Illinois, and some located in other States of the United States and the District of Columbia. In the course and conduct of his business as aforesaid, respondent is now, and for more than one year last past has been, in substantial competition with corporations and with other individuals, partnerships, and firms engaged in the manufacture by true distillation of gins, rums, and other spirituous beverages from mash, wort, or wash, and in the sale thereof in trade and commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia; and in the course and conduct of his business as aforesaid respondent is, and for more than one year last past has been, in substantial competition with corporations and with other individuals, firms, and partnerships engaged in the business of purchasing, rectifying, blending, and bottling cordials, brandies, liqueurs, rums, gins, and other spirituous beverages in rectifying plants under rectifiers' permits and in the sale thereof in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 2. For a long period of time the word "distilling" when used in connection with the liquor industry and with the products thereof has had and still has a definite significance and meaning to the minds of wholesalers and retailers in such industry and to the ultimate purchasing public, to wit, the manufacture of spirituous beverages by an original and continuous distillation from mash, wort, or wash, through continuous closed pipes and vessels until the manufacture thereof is complete, and a substantial portion of the purchasing public prefers to buy spirituous liquors bottled and prepared by the actual distillers and manufacturers thereof.

PAR. 3. In the course and conduct of his business as aforesaid, by the use of the word "Distilling" in his trade name, printed on his stationery and on the labels attached to the bottles in which he sells and ships his said products, and in various other ways, respondent represents to his customers and furnishes them with the means of representing to their vendees, both retailers and the ultimate consuming public, that the said cordials, brandies, liqueurs, rums, gins, and other spirituous beverages therein contained were by him manufactured through the process of distillation from mash, wort, or wash, when as a matter of fact, respondent is not a distiller, does not distill the said spirituous beverages by him so bottled, labeled, sold, and transported. Respondent does not own, operate, or control any place or places where alcoholic beverages are manufactured by process or original and continuous distillation from mash, wort, or wash.

PAR. 4. There are among the competitors of respondent engaged in the sale of spirituous beverages as mentioned in paragraph 1 hereof corporations, firms, partnerships, and individuals who manufacture and distill from mash, wort or wash, gins, rums, and other spirituous beverages sold by them, and who truthfully use the words "distillery," "distilleries," "distillers," or "distilling" as a part of their corporate or trade names and on their stationery, advertising and on the labels of the bottles in which they sell and ship such products. There are also among such competitors, corporations, firms, partnerships and individuals engaged in the business of purchasing, rectifying, blending, and bottling cordials, brandies, liqueurs, rums, gins, and other spirituous beverages in rectifying plants under rectifiers' permits who do not use the words "distillery," "distilleries," "distilling," or "distillers" as a part of their corporate or trade names, or on their stationery, advertising or on the labels attached to the bottles in which they sell and ship their said products.

PAR. 5. The representation by respondent as set forth in paragraph 3 hereof, is calculated to and has a capacity and tendency to and does mislead and deceive dealers and the purchasing public into the belief that the cordials, brandies, liqueurs, gins, rums, and other spirituous beverages sold by the respondent are manufactured or distilled by him from mash, wort, or wash by one continuous process and is calculated to and has the capacity and tendency to and does induce dealers and the purchasing public, acting in such belief, to purchase the spirituous beverages rectified and bottled by the respondent, thereby diverting trade to respondent from his competitors who do not by their corporate or trade name or in any other manner misrepresent that they are manufacturers by distillation from mash, wort, or wash of spirituous beverages, and thereby respondent does substantial injury to substantial competition in interstate commerce.

PAR. 6. The complaint herein was issued May 27, 1935, on the same day that the decision of the United States Supreme Court in the case of A. L. A. Schechter Poultry Corporation vs. U. S., 295 U. S. 495, was handed down, but before notice of it had been received by the Commission. Count 2 of the complaint charged violation of Section 3 of Title I of the National Industrial Recovery Act which was invalidated by the aforesaid decision. For that reason the Commission has ordered the complaint dismissed as to count 2 thereof.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondent Nat. D. Goldberg, trading as Sunset Distilling Company, are to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce, within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

This proceeding having been heard by the Federal Trade Commission upon the complaint of the Commission and the answer filed herein, dated October 27, 1936, by respondent admitting all the material allegations of the complaint to be true and waiving the taking of further evidence and all other intervening procedure, and the Commission having made its findings as to the facts and its conclusion that said respondent has violated the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

It is ordered, That the respondent, Nat D. Goldberg, trading as Sunset Distilling Company, his officers, representatives, and employees, and his agents, corporate or individual, in connection with the offering for sale, sale and distribution of whiskies, gins, or other spirituous beverages, in interstate commerce or in the District of Columbia, do forthwith cease and desist from:

Representing, through the use of the word "Distilling" in his trade name, on his stationery, advertising or on the labels attached to the bottles in which he sells and ships said products, or in any other way by word or words of like import, (a) that he is a distiller of whiskies, gins, or other spirituous beverages; or (b) that the said whiskies, gins, or other spirituous beverages were by him manufactured through the process of distillation; or (c) that he owns, operates, or controls a place or places where such products are by him manufactured by a process of original and continuous distillation from mash, wort, or wash, through continuous closed pipes and vessels until the manufacture thereof is completed, unless and until respondent shall actually own, operate, or control such a place or places.

It is further ordered, That the said complaint be and it is hereby dismissed as to count 2 thereof.

It is further ordered, That the said respondent within 60 days from and after the date of the service upon him of this order, shall file with the Commission a report or reports in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which he is complying and has complied with the order to cease and desist hereinabove set forth.

COMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION
OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 26, 1914

Docket 2734. Complaint, Feb. 29, 1936—Decision, Dec. 14, 1936

Where an individual engaged in distributing and selling, from his place of business in a Michigan city, correspondence courses in butchering and meat packing, and in selling books, booklets, and pamphlets to those subscribing to and purchasing his said courses, in substantial competition with those similarly engaged and with those engaged in the business of teaching butchering and meat packing, etc., in ways other than through correspondence courses, in commerce among and between the various States and in the District of Columbia, and including among such competitors many who distribute and sell their courses without in any way misrepresenting the character, quality, size, scope, or connection with the United States Government, of their respective businesses, demand for pupils who have successfully completed their courses, or degree of proficiency that will be acquired by their pupils upon successful completion of the course—

- (a) Featured in his various advertising literature, including advertisements printed and circulated throughout the various States to pupils and prospective pupils, and extensively used questionnaires, circular letters, enrollment blanks, etc., his trade name, including words "Federal Institute," and made use of such words as "Chief of Examiners," "Board of Examiners," "Examiners," "Assistant Examiners," and "Divisional Director," notwithstanding fact neither said individual nor the business conducted by him under aforesaid name was in any way connected with, licensed, or approved by any branch or bureau of the United States Government;
- (b) Included along with his aforesaid trade name, words "Washington, D. C.," and followed his own name with term "Divisional Director," and made use of words "Central States Office," and made such statements therein as "This survey * * * now being conducted in Wisconsin, is part of a nationwide project, Wisconsin being the first state in the middle-west section (Central States Division) to be contacted," and "Due to the limited time allotted for the completion of this survey, we are resorting to the mails," etc., and depicted in certain portions of his advertising a large building, together with his aforesaid trade name, facts being the business thus conducted by him was not operated on a nation-wide or wide-spread basis covering many States, or conducted on a large and substantial basis, pupils and prospective pupils had been contacted only in a very few States, so-called "Central States Office" in said Michigan city was in reality the home and sole office of the business, which rented only a comparatively small office space in building depicted as aforesaid, and said individual or business did not, as represented, have Washington office; and
- (c) Represented, in his aforesaid advertising literature, that "The field of operation in this industry is nation-wide," and that "among many opportunities indicated are those of: buyer-shipper-inspection," etc., and that, as a result of the survey hereinbefore referred to, and use of the mails "to reach quickly a list of men from whom we will select a limited number for personal interviews," "We will be able to select this limited number of men who through the facilities of our various departments will quickly qualify for the branches of service outlined herein," notwithstanding fact course in question was not a complete one in butchering and meat packing, and successful completion thereof did not, of itself, qualify the pupil taking same to fill various positions in the meat slaughtering and packing industry, in which there were not many openings, and in which need and demand for trained men was not greater than actual supply thereof, and in which there were skilled men with long experience in the industry waiting the return of normal conditions for reemployment therein;

With capacity and tendency to mislead and deceive a substantial portion of the purchasing public into the beliefs that aforesaid business, thus conducted, was a branch or bureau of the Government, or connected or affiliated in some way therewith, or licensed and approved by some branch or bureau thereof, and was operated and conducted on a nation-wide and large and substantial basis covering many States, and that there were many openings for various positions in said industry, with need for trained men in excess of the actual supply, as above set forth, and that its course constituted a competent one, upon the completion of which the student would be qualified adequately to fill various positions therein, and with the result that a substantial number of the consuming public, as a direct result of such mistaken and erroneous beliefs, purchased his said courses, and trade was unfairly diverted to him from those similarly engaged in the distribution and sale of such or other correspondence courses and who truthfully advertised the same; to the injury of competition in commerce among and between the various States and in the District of Columbia:

Held, That such acts and practices were to the prejudice of the public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition.

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that H. E. Martindale, an individual, trading as Federal Institute of Meats & Marketing, hereinafter referred to as respondent, has been and now is using unfair methods of competition in commerce as "commerce" is defined in said act, and it appearing to the Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent, H. E. Martindale, is an individual trading as Federal Institute of Meats & Marketing with its principal office and place of business located at 805½ Sheridan Road, Menominee, in the State of Michigan. Respondent is now, and has been for some time past, engaged in the business of distributing and selling correspondence courses of instruction in the art of butchery and meat packing to persons hereinafter referred to as pupils and in selling to such pupils severally, as incidental and accessory to the instructions in and to the learning, use, and practice of such science and art, certain merchandise consisting of books, booklets, pamphlets, and other articles in commerce as herein set out.

PAR. 2. Said respondent, being engaged in business as aforesaid, when a prospective pupil enters into a contract with him, enrolls said pupil, in consideration of the agreed charge or tuition paid or agreed to be paid by such pupil, undertakes to sell and deliver to such pupil, through the United States mails or otherwise, a complete course of written, mimeographed or printed information and instruction in the particular course or courses of said instruction chosen by such pupil and causes said correspondence courses of instruction, when sold, to be transported from his office and principal place of business in the State of Michigan to purchasers thereof located at various points in other States of the United States and in the District of Columbia, and there is now, and has been at all times mentioned herein, a constant current of trade in commerce in said correspondence courses of instruction in the art of butchery and meat packing so distributed and sold by the respondent between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 3. In the course and conduct of his said business, respondent is now, and has been, in substantial competition with other individuals and with firms and corporations likewise engaged in the business of distributing and selling correspondence courses of instruction in various arts, including the art of butchery and meat packing, and also with persons, firms, and corporations engaged in the business of teaching or giving instruction in the art of butchery and meat packing and other arts in ways other than through correspondence courses, in commerce among and between the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 4. In the course of the operation of said business, and for the purpose of inducing individuals to purchase and pay for said correspondence course of instruction, respondent has caused advertisements to be inserted in newspapers of general circulation throughout the United States, and has printed and circulated throughout the various States to pupils and prospective pupils, through the United States mails and otherwise, circular letters, questionnaires, enrollment blanks, and other advertising literature. In all of said questionnaires, circular letters, enrollment blanks, and advertising literature, the respondent has caused his trade name to be prominently and conspicuously displayed with the following addresses and designations:

Central States Division
Federal Institute—Meats—Marketing
Washington, D. C.
H. E. Martindale, Divisional Director
Central States Office
Menominee, Michigan

In other advertising literature, the respondent has made use of the following statements:

This survey sponsored by the F. I. M. M. now being conducted in Wisconsin is part of a nation-wide project, Wisconsin being the first state in the middle-west section (Central States Division) to be contacted.

Due to the limited time allotted for the completion of this survey, we are resorting to the mails in order to reach quickly a list of men from whom we will select a limited number for personal interviews.

The field of operation in this industry is nation-wide—among the many opportunities indicated are those of: buyer—shipper—inspection—managing—supervising; also grading—slaughter—dressing of cattle—likewise sausage making, etc. As a result of this survey, we will be able to select this limited number of men who through the facilities of our various departments will quickly qualify for the branches of service outlined herein.

In all of said literature and enrollment blanks, hereinabove referred to, the respondent also makes use of such terms as “Chief of Examiners,” “Board of Examiners,” “Examiners,” “Assistant Examiners,” and “Divisional Director” to designate certain of his employees or associates, those terms being generally used by various branches, divisions, and bureaus of the United States Government to designate certain classes of their respective employees. In certain portions of the advertising literature, hereinabove referred to, respondent displays a picturization of a large building under which there appears the designation:

FEDERAL INSTITUTE OF MEATS & MARKETING

Menominee, Michigan

All of said statements, together with many similar statements appearing in respondent's advertising literature, purport to be descriptive of the business conducted by him under the trade name Federal Institute of Meats & Marketing. In all of his advertising literature and through representations and statements made by the respondent acting through agents and representatives, the respondent has represented, and now represents, that (1) the business conducted by him under the trade name Federal Institute of Meats & Marketing is a branch or bureau of the United States Government, has some connection or affiliation with some branch or bureau of the United States Government or is licensed and approved by some branch or bureau of the United States Government; (2) that the business operated under the trade name Federal Institute of Meats & Marketing is operated on a nation-wide basis, or is operated on a widespread basis covering many states and is conducted on a large and substantial basis; and (3) that there are many openings for various positions in the meat slaughtering and packing industry and that the need and demand for men trained in the art of butchery and meat packing is much greater than the actual demand therefor and that the course of instruction sold by the respondent is a competent course upon the completion of which the pupil will be adequately qualified to fill various positions in the meat slaughtering and meat packing industry.

PAR. 5. The representations made by the respondent as to any connection between the business conducted by him under the trade name Federal Institute of Meats & Marketing and any branch or bureau of the United States Government are, in fact, untrue. Neither the respondent nor the business conducted, as aforesaid, is in any way connected with a bureau or branch of the United States Government and neither the respondent nor the business conducted under the name of Federal Institute of Meats & Marketing maintains an office of any kind in Washington, D. C.

The business operated by the respondent is not operated on a nation-wide basis or on a widespread basis covering many states and is not conducted on a large and substantial basis. In truth and in fact, pupils and prospective pupils have been contacted in only a very few states and the so-called "Central States Office" located at Menominee, Mich., is in reality the home and sole office of the business. The Federal Institute of Meats & Marketing does not operate or completely occupy the building depicted, as hereinabove indicated, but actually rents only a comparatively small office space in said building. In truth and in fact, there are not many openings for various positions in the meat slaughtering and packing industry and the need and demand for men trained in the art of butchery and meat packing is not greater than the actual demand therefor. In truth and in fact, the course of instruction offered by the respondent is not a complete course in butchery and meat packing and a successful completion of said course does not, of itself, qualify the pupil taking said course to fill various positions in the meat slaughtering and packing industry.

PAR. 6. There are among the competitors of the respondent many who distribute and sell either correspondence courses or other courses in butchery and meat packing, or other correspondence courses of instruction, who do not, in any way, misrepresent the character, quality, size, scope, or connection with the United States Government, of their respective businesses and do not, in any way, misrepresent the demand for pupils who have successfully completed their respective courses of instruction or the degree of proficiency that will be acquired by the pupil upon a successful completion of the course.

PAR. 7. Each and all of the false and misleading statements and representations made by the respondent, as hereinabove set out, in his advertising, in newspapers, questionnaires, circular letters, enrollment blanks, and other advertising literature, in offering for sale and selling his courses of instruction was, and is, calculated to, and had, and now has, a tendency and capacity to mislead and deceive a substantial portion of the purchasing public into the erroneous belief that all of said representations are true. Further, as a direct consequence of the mistaken and erroneous beliefs, induced by the acts, advertisements, and misrepresentations of respondent, as hereinabove detailed, a substantial number of the consuming public has purchased a substantial volume of respondent's courses of instruction with the result that trade has been unfairly diverted to the respondent from individuals, firms and corporations likewise engaged in the business of distributing and selling correspondence courses or other courses in the art of butchery and meat packing, or other correspondence courses, and who truthfully advertise their courses of instruction. As a result thereof, substantial injury has been, and is now being done, by respondent to substantial competition in commerce among and between the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 8. The above and foregoing acts, practices and representations of the respondent have been, and are, all to the prejudice of the public and respondent's competitors as aforesaid, and have been, and are, unfair methods of competition within the meaning and intent of Section 5 of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

mission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission on February 29, 1936, issued and served its complaint in this proceeding upon the respondent, H. E. Martindale, trading as Federal Institute of Meats & Marketing, charging him with the use of unfair methods of competition in violation of the provisions of said act. After the issuance of said complaint, testimony and other evidence in support of the allegations of said complaint were introduced by J. T. Welch, attorney for the Commission, before John J. Keenan, an examiner of the Commission theretofore duly designated by it, and in opposition to the allegations of the complaint by Wentworth T. Durant, attorney for the respondent, and said testimony and other evidence were duly recorded and filed in the office of the Commission. Thereafter, the proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on the said complaint and testimony and other evidence; and the Commission having duly considered the same, and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent, H. E. Martindale, is an individual, trading as Federal Institute of Meats & Marketing. His place of business was formerly located at 805½ Sheridan Road, Menominee, Mich. He is now located at 647 State Street, Marinette, in the State of Wisconsin. Respondent is engaged in the business of distributing and selling correspondence courses of instruction in the art of butchery and meat packing. As incidental and accessory to the instruction in the art of butchery and meat packing, he also sells certain merchandise consisting of books, booklets, and pamphlets to those persons subscribing to and purchasing his correspondence courses of instruction.

When a prospective pupil enters into a contract with the respondent, he is enrolled in consideration of the agreed tuition charge which is paid or agreed to be paid by said pupil. The respondent delivers to such pupil, through the United States mail or otherwise, a course of written, mimeographed, or printed instructions in the particular course or courses chosen by such pupil. Respondent causes such courses of instruction, when sold, to be transported from his principal place of business in the State of Michigan to purchasers thereof located at various points in other States of the United States. The respondent has maintained, at all times for a period of more than one year last past, a constant current of trade and commerce in said correspondence courses of instruction in the art of butchery and meat packing, between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of his said business, respondent is now, and has been, in substantial competition with other individuals and with firms and corporations likewise engaged in the business of distributing and selling correspondence courses of instruction in various arts, including the art of butchery and meat packing, and also with persons, firms, and corporations engaged in the business of teaching or giving instruction in the art of butchery and meat packing and other arts in ways other than through correspondence courses, in commerce among and between the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 3. For the purpose of inducing individuals to purchase and pay for said correspondence courses of instruction, the respondent has made use of advertisements which had been printed and circulated throughout the various States of the United States to pupils and prospective pupils through the United States mail and otherwise. The respondent has also made extensive use of questionnaires, circular letters, enrollment blanks, and advertising literature which has been circulated in the same way to prospective pupils. In all of his advertising literature, the respondent causes his trade name to be prominently and conspicuously displayed with the following addresses and designations:

Central States Division

Federal Institute—Meats—Marketing
Washington, D. C.

H. E. Martindale, Divisional Director

Central States Office
Menominee, Michigan

In other advertising literature, the respondent has made use of statements such as the following:

This survey sponsored by the F. I. M. M. now being conducted in Wisconsin is part of a nation-wide project, Wisconsin being the first state in the middle-west section (Central States Division) to be contacted.

Due to the limited time allotted for the completion of this survey, we are resorting to the mails in order to reach quickly a list of men from whom we will select a limited number for personal interviews.

The field of operation in this industry is nation-wide—among the many opportunities indicated are those of: buyer—shipper—inspection—managing—supervising; also grading—slaughter—dressing of cattle—likewise sausage making, etc. As a result of this survey, we will be able to select this limited number of men who through the facilities of our various departments will quickly qualify for the branches of service outlined herein.

In all of said advertising literature, including questionnaires, circulars and enrollment blanks, the respondent makes extensive use of such terms as "Chief of Examiners," "Board of Examiners," "Examiners," "Assistant Examiners," and "Divisional Director" to designate certain of his employees or associates. In certain portions of his advertising literature, the respondent displays a picturization of a large building under which there appears the designation:

FEDERAL INSTITUTE OF MEATS & MARKETING
Menominee, Michigan

In all of his advertising literature and through representations and statements made by the respondent acting through agents and representatives, the respondent has represented and now represents that (1) the business conducted by him under the trade name Federal Institute of Meats and Marketing is a branch or bureau of the United States Government, has some connection or affiliation with some branch or bureau of the United States Government or is licensed and approved by some branch or bureau of the United States Government; (2) the business operated under the trade name Federal Institute of Meats & Marketing is operated on a nation-wide basis, or is operated on a widespread basis covering many states and is conducted on a large and substantial basis; (3) there are many openings for various positions in the meat slaughtering and packing industry and that the need and demand for men trained in the art of butchery and meat packing is much greater than the actual demand therefor; and (4) the course of instruction sold by the respondent is a competent course upon the completion of which the pupil will be adequately qualified to fill various positions in the meat slaughtering and meat packing industry.

PAR. 4. The terms "Chief of Examiners," "Board of Examiners," "Examiners," "Assistant Examiners," and "Divisional Director" are terms generally used by various branches, divisions, and bureaus of the United States Government to designate certain classes of their respective employees. The representations made by the respondent as to any connection between him or the business conducted by him under the trade name Federal Institute of Meats & Marketing and any branch or bureau of the United States Government are, in fact, untrue. Neither the respondent nor the business conducted by him under said trade name is in any way connected with, affiliated with, licensed or approved by, any branch or bureau of the United States Government. The respondent, neither individually nor under the trade name Federal Institute of Meats & Marketing, conducts or maintains an office of any kind in the city of Washington, District of Columbia. The business operated by the respondent is not operated on a nation-wide basis or on a widespread basis covering many States and is not conducted on a large and substantial basis. As a matter of fact, pupils and prospective pupils have been contacted only in a very few States. The so-called "Central States Office" located at Menominee, Mich., is in reality the home and sole office of the business. The Federal Institute of Meats & Marketing does not completely occupy the building depicted in respondent's advertising matter but actually rents only a comparatively small office space in said building. The course of instruction sold by the respondent is not a complete course of butchery and meat packing and a successful completion of said course does not, of itself, qualify the pupil taking such course to fill various positions in the meat slaughtering and packing industry. There are not many openings of various positions in the meat slaughtering and packing industry and the need and demand for men trained in the art of butchery and meat packing is not greater than the actual supply therefor. There are skilled men with long experience in the industry who are waiting a return of normal conditions for reemployment in the meat packing industry.

PAR. 5. There are among the competitors of the respondent many who distribute and sell either correspondence courses or other courses in butchery and meat packing, or other correspondence courses of instruction, who do not, in any way, misrepresent the character, quality, size, scope, or connection with the United States Government, of their respective businesses and do not, in any way, misrepresent the demand for pupils who have successfully completed their respective courses of instruction or the degree of proficiency that will be acquired by the pupil upon a successful completion of the course.

PAR. 6. Each and all of the false and misleading statements and representations made by the respondent in his advertising literature in offering for sale and selling his correspondence courses of instruction were, and are, calculated to, and had, and now have, a capacity and tendency to mislead and deceive a substantial portion of the purchasing public into the beliefs that the business conducted under the trade name of Federal Institute of Meats & Marketing is a branch or bureau of the United States Government or has some connection or affiliation with some branch or bureau of the United States Government or is licensed and approved by some branch or bureau of the United States Government; that the business is operated on a nation-wide basis covering many States and is conducted on a large and substantial basis; that there are many openings for various positions in the meat slaughtering and packing industry and that the need for men trained in the art of butchery and meat packing is much greater than the actual supply therefor; and that the respondent's course of instruction constitutes a competent course upon the completion of which a student will be adequately qualified to fill various positions in the meat slaughtering and meat packing industry. As a direct consequence of these mistaken and erroneous beliefs, a substantial number of the consuming public has purchased respondent's courses of instruction with the result that trade has been unfairly diverted to the respondent from individuals, firms, and corporations likewise engaged in the business of distributing and selling correspondence courses or other courses in the art of butchery and meat packing, or other correspondence courses and who truthfully advertise their respective courses of instruction. As a consequence thereof, injury has been done by respondent to competition in commerce among and between the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondent, H. E. Martindale, trading as Federal Institute of Meats & Marketing, are to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce, within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

This proceeding having been heard by the Federal Trade Commission upon the complaint of the Commission, testimony and other evidence taken before John J. Keenan, an examiner of the Commission theretofore duly designated by it, in support of the allegations of said complaint, and the Commission having made its findings as to the facts and conclusion that said respondent has violated the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled, "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

It is ordered, That the respondent, H. E. Martindale, individually and trading and doing business as Federal Institute of Meats and Marketing, or trading under any other trade name, his representatives, agents, and employees, in connection with the offering for sale, sale, and distribution of correspondence courses of instruction in interstate commerce or in the District of Columbia, do forthwith cease and desist from:

1. Representing, through the use of the words "Chief of Examiners," "Board of Examiners," "Examiners," "Assistant Examiner," "Divisional Director," and "Federal Institute," alone or in conjunction with any other word or words, or through any other means, or in any other manner, that the respondent or the business conducted by him is a branch or bureau of the United States Government, or is in any way connected or affiliated with, or is licensed and approved by, any branch or bureau of the United States Government;

2. Representing that the business operated by the respondent is operated on a nation-wide basis or is operated on a widespread basis covering many states, or is conducted on a large and substantial basis, when such is not the fact;

3. Representing that there are many openings for various positions in the meat slaughtering and packing industry, or that the need and demand for men trained in the art of butchery and meat packing is much greater than the actual demand therefor;

4. Representing that the respondent's course of instruction is a competent course, upon the completion of which the pupil will be adequately qualified to fill various positions in the meat slaughtering and packing industry;

5. Representing that the respondent or the business conducted by him maintains offices in the city of Washington, District of Columbia;

6. Using the term "Federal Institute" in the name under which respondent's business is conducted, or using any other word or expression which implies or suggests any connection with any branch or bureau of the United States Government.

It is further ordered, That the respondent shall, within 30 days after service upon him of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which he has complied with this order.

COMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 26, 1914

Docket 2329. Complaint, Mar. 15, 1935—Decision, Dec. 15, 1936

Where the corporate manufacturers of practically the entire supply of pin tickets in the United States, which they theretofore offered at prices determined by competition among them and, in many instances, at varying prices—

Met, discussed and compared, and came to an agreement and understanding to fix, and did fix, and thereafter charge and maintain uniform prices for their said products;

With result that they were thereby caused to offer and sell such competitive products at uniform prices, and of substantially restricting price competition among them and maintaining artificial price level:

Held, That such acts and practices were to the prejudice of the public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition.

Before Mr. John L. Hornor and Mr. William C. Reeves, trial examiners.

Mr. Robt. M. McMillen for the Commission.

Mr. Abraham A. Silberberg, of New York City, for respondents.

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that A. Kimball Company, a corporation, The Reyburn Manufacturing Company, a corporation, Waterbury Buckle Company, a corporation, American Tag Company, a corporation, Dancyger Safety Pin Ticket Company, a corporation, Adam Sutcliffe Company, a corporation, and Noesting Pin Ticket Company, a corporation, hereinafter referred to as respondents, have been and are using unfair methods of competition in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in said act, and it appearing to the Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. A. Kimball Company is a corporation organized and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the State of New York, with its principal place of business at 307 West Broadway, New York City.

The Reyburn Manufacturing Company is a corporation organized and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Pennsylvania, with its principal place of business at Allegheny Avenue and Thirty Second Street in the city of Philadelphia in said State.

Waterbury Buckle Company is a corporation organized and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Connecticut, with its principal place of business at Waterbury in said State.

American Tag Company is a corporation organized and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Illinois, with its principal place of business at 6151 South State Street in the city of Chicago in said State.

Dancyger Safety Pin Ticket Company is a corporation organized and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Ohio, with its principal place of business at 4707 Detroit Avenue in the city of Cleveland in said State.

Adam Sutcliffe Company is a corporation organized and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Rhode Island, with its principal place of business at Central Falls in said State.

Noesting Pin Ticket Company is a corporation organized and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the State of New York, with its principal place of business at Mount Vernon in said State.

PAR. 2. All of the above named respondents are and for a number of years past have been engaged in the manufacture of pin tickets. These are small tickets for temporary attachment to clothing, fabrics, and like materials, by pin-like fasteners. Upon these tickets the dealer customarily endorses cost and selling price, stock number, and other information and identifying marks. Respondents sell this product to and through jobbers and direct to users located throughout the United States, and pursuant to such sales, and as a part thereof, shipment is regularly made to customers from the respective places of business of respondents through and into other States of the Union. These respondents represent practically the entire source of supply of pin tickets in the United States and their annual sales aggregate about $750,000. But for the matters and things hereinafter set out, said respondents would be in active competition with one another for business.

PAR. 3. In or about the year 1931 respondents entered into an understanding, combination, and conspiracy among themselves for the purpose of restricting and restraining competition in the sale of their said product. Pursuant to such understanding, combination and conspiracy, respondents did and performed and still do and perform the following acts and things:

(a) Met and discussed and compared prices at which they were selling their said product and came to an understanding that they would quote uniform prices to the using public, and pursuant to such understanding and agreement did quote uniform prices and did sell to the public at such prices.

(b) By understanding and agreement from time to time changed said prices but continued to make the same uniform throughout the industry.

(c) Conferred and cooperated with one another for the purpose and with the effect of ascertaining when and by whom prices so fixed were departed from, and used persuasive and other methods to compel offending manufacturers to resume the uniform schedule of prices.

(d) Used other cooperative methods and means for making and keeping prices uniform and for preventing any price competition among themselves.

PAR. 4. The result of the formation of said understanding, combination and conspiracy has been and is to restrict and restrain competition among the manufacturers of pin tickets; to constrain all such manufacturers to sell at a price uniform with every other manufacturer and to keep prices at an artificial level.

PAR. 5. The acts and practices charged are to the prejudice of the public, and the formation of said understanding, combination and conspiracy and the things done thereunder, as herein charged, constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of the Act of Congress hereinabove entitled.

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

which it is agreed that the statement of facts therein contained may be taken as the facts in this proceeding, and in lieu of testimony in support of the charges stated in the complaint, and in opposition thereto; and that the Commission may proceed on said statement of facts to make its report, stating its findings as to the facts (including inferences which it may draw from said stipulated facts) and its conclusion based thereon, and enter its order disposing of the proceedings without presentation of argument or the filing of brief; which said stipulation has been by the Commission approved. Thereafter the proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on the said complaint, the answer thereto, and the said stipulation and statement of facts, and the Commission having duly considered the same and being now fully advised in the premises finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public, and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom :

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. All of the respondents above named are now, and were at all times hereinafter mentioned, corporations duly organized under the laws of the States of New York, Pennsylvania, Connecticut, Illinois, Ohio, Rhode Island, and New York, respectively, and each of them is and has been engaged in the manufacture and sale of pin tickets. Pursuant to such sales and as a part thereof respondents have regularly made shipments of said products from their respective places of business through and into States of the United States other than the States of the points of origin of such shipments. The pin tickets manufactured and sold by each respondent have been and are similar to and for the same or similar use and purpose as the pin tickets of all other respondents; they seek and have sought to sell the same to the same trade; and all dealers in and users of pin tickets in the various States are and have been customers or potential customers of each and all of the respondents. Respondents manufacture and have manufactured practically the entire supply of pin tickets in the United States.

PAR. 2. Prior to the year 1931 these respondents had been offering for sale and selling competitive pin tickets at prices determined by competition among them, and these prices in many instances varied as among said respondents. In the years 1931, 1932, and into 1933 these respondents held a series of meetings from time to time at which they discussed and compared prices at which they were offering for sale and selling competitive pin tickets, and at and by means of said meetings and discussions came to an agreement or understanding to fix the prices at which they would, and did thereafter, offer for sale and sell competitive pin tickets, which prices were uniform as among respondents. From time to time thereafter, pursuant to such understanding, they uniformly changed said prices.

PAR. 3. The result of said meetings and discussions and understandings, and the things done pursuant thereto, as above stated, has been to cause and to tend to cause respondents to offer for sale and sell competitive pin tickets at prices uniform among them, and to substantially restrict price competition among them, and to keep prices at an artificial level.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondents are to the prejudice of the public and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

This proceeding having been heard by the Federal Trade Commission upon the complaint of the Commission, the answers of respondents, and a stipulation and statement of facts in support of the allegations of the complaint and in opposition thereto, and the Commission having made its findings as to the facts and its conclusion that said respondents have violated the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

It is ordered, That the respondents, A. Kimball Company, The Reyburn Manufacturing Company, Waterbury Buckle Company, American Tag Company, Dancyger Safety Pin Ticket Company, Adam Sutcliffe Company and Noesting Pin Ticket Company, their officers, representatives, agents, and employees, in connection with the offering for sale and sale and distribution of pin tickets in interstate commerce, or in the District of Columbia, do forthwith cease and desist:

1. From entering into any agreement or understanding among themselves, or between any two or more of them, or between any one or more and others, to fix the prices at which they would offer for sale or sell pin tickets;

2. From entering into any agreement or understanding among themselves, or between any two or more of them, or between any one or more and others, fixing the prices at which they would offer for sale or sell pin tickets;

Order

24 F. T. C.

3. From restricting or suppressing competition among themselves or any of them, or with others by any other similar concert of action;

It is further ordered, That the respondents shall, within 60 days after service upon them of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing, setting forth in detail the manner and form in which they have complied with this order.

Syllabus

IN THE MATTER OF

THE LEADER NOVELTY CANDY COMPANY, INC.

Docket 2789. Complaint, Apr. 28, 1936—Decision, Dec. 15, 1936

Where a corporation engaged in sale and distribution of candy and candy products, and in manufacture, sale, and distribution of novelty toys to wholesale dealers, including so-called "break and take," "draw" or "deal" assortments, sale of which type, in competition with the exclusively "straight" merchandise of many candy manufacturers and distributors, has been followed by a marked decrease in latter, due to gambling or lottery feature connected with former, and which assortments consisted of (1) package of individually wrapped penny pieces of uniform size and shape, color of a few of which differed from that of the majority, and (2) package of novelty toys such as water pistols and rubber return balls, ordinarily sold and billed by it separately to wholesaler and jobber vendees, but not separately at same price assigned each package for sale together, and usually identical in number, so that such respective packages might be displayed side by side as a single unit and sold under a plan by which chance purchaser of one of said penny pieces, concealed color of which differed from that of majority, additionally received, for his penny, one of aforesaid toys—

Sold to wholesalers or jobbers said "break and take," "draw," or "deal" assortments, so assembled and packed by it that they were and might be sold by retail dealers to purchasing public as single unit, as hereinbefore set forth, and as a lottery or gaming device, for resale to their numerous retailer purchasers thereof, by whom the respective packages, as packed by it and as a single unit, were displayed and candy involved sold and distributed to consuming public as hereinbefore set forth, and by lot or chance; contrary to public policy, and in competition with many who regard such methods of sale and distribution as morally bad and as encouraging gambling, and especially among children, as injurious to the candy industry in resulting in the merchandising of a chance or lottery instead of candy, and as providing retail merchants with the means of violating the laws of the several States, and some of whom, for such reasons, refuse to sell candy so packed and assembled that it can be resold to public by lot or chance;

With result that sales of "straight" goods of such unwilling and refusing competitors, who could compete on even terms only by furnishing the same or similar assortments, showed a continued decrease and they were put to a competitive disadvantage, and trade was diverted from them to it and others using similar methods:

Held, That such acts and practices were to the prejudice of the public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition.

Before Mr. Miles J. Furnas, trial examiner.

Mr. Henry C. Lank and Mr. P. C. Kolinski for the Commission.

Mr. Victor Warren Milch, of New York City, for respondent.

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that The Leader Novelty Candy Co., Inc., a corporation, hereinafter referred to as respondent, has been and is using unfair methods of competition in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in said act of Congress, and it appearing to said Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent is a corporation organized under the laws of the State of New York, with its principal office and place of business located at 23 Marcy Avenue, in the city of Brooklyn, State of New York. It is now, and for several years last past has been, engaged in the sale and distribution of candy to wholesale dealers, jobbers, and retail dealers, located at points in the various States of the United States, and causes the said product, when so sold, to be transported from its principal place of business in the city of Brooklyn, New York, to purchasers thereof in other States of the United States at their respective places of business; and there is now, and has been for several years last past, a course of trade and commerce by said respondent in such candy between and among the States of the United States. In the course and conduct of said business, respondent is in competition with other corporations and with partnerships and individuals engaged in the sale and distribution of candy in commerce between and among the various States of the United States.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of its said business, respondent has caused and causes the representation to be made to its customers and prospective customers by its salesmen and agents, and has caused and causes said representation to be set forth on its business stationery, billheads, invoices, catalogues, labels, and other trade literature, to the effect that it controls and operates factories and is the manufacturer of said candy in which it deals. A substantial portion of the purchasing public, including retail dealers in candy, have expressed, and have, a preference for dealing direct with the manufacturer of products being purchased, such purchasers believing that they secure closer prices, superior quality, and other advantages that are not obtained when they purchase from a selling agency or middleman.

PAR. 3. The use by respondent of said representation that it is a manufacturer of candy has the capacity and tendency to and does mislead and deceive many of respondent's said customers and prospective customers into the erroneous belief that respondent is a business concern which controls and operates a factory in which aforesaid candy sold by respondent is manufactured, and that persons dealing with respondent are buying said candy directly from the manufacturer thereof, thereby eliminating the profits of middlemen and obtaining various advantages, including advantages in service, delivery, and adjustment of account that are not obtained by persons purchasing goods from middlemen. The truth and fact is that respondent neither owns, controls, nor operates any factory whatsoever and does not manufacture said candy sold by it, but on the contrary only purchases and repacks the candy which it sells.

PAR. 4. There are among the competitors of respondent referred to in paragraph 1 hereof, many who manufacture the candy which they sell and who rightfully represent that they are the manufacturers thereof. There are others of said competitors who purchase the candy in which they deal and resell the same at a profit to themselves over and above the cost of said candy to said competitors, and who in no wise represent that they manufacture said candy. The above alleged acts and practices of respondent as set out in paragraphs 2 and 3 hereof tend to and do divert business from and otherwise injure and prejudice said competitors.

PAR. 5. In the course and conduct of its business, as described in paragraph 1 hereof, respondent sells and has sold to wholesale dealers, jobbers and retail dealers a package or assortment of candy so packed and assembled as to involve the use of a lottery scheme when sold and distributed to the consumers thereof, and is as follows:

The said assortment is composed of a number of pieces of candy of uniform size, shape, and quality, together with a number of articles of merchandise, which articles of merchandise are to be given as prizes to purchasers of said pieces of candy of uniform size, shape, and quality, in the following manner: The majority of the said pieces of candy of uniform size, shape, and quality are of the same color, but a small number of said pieces of candy are of a different color. The said pieces of candy of uniform size, shape, and quality retail at the price of one cent each, but the purchaser who procures one of the said candies of a different color than the majority is entitled to receive, and is to be given free of charge, one of the said articles of merchandise heretofore referred to. Said pieces of candy of uniform size, shape and quality are contained in individual wrappers, and the color thereof is effectively concealed from purchasers and prospective purchasers until a selection has been made and the wrapper removed. The aforesaid purchasers who procure a piece of candy colored differently from the majority thus procure one of the said articles of merchandise wholly by lot or chance.

PAR. 6. The jobbers and wholesale dealers to whom respondent sells its assortment resell said assortment to retail dealers, and said retail dealers, and the retail dealers to whom respondent sells direct, expose said assortments for sale and sell said candy to the purchasing public in accordance with the aforesaid sales plan. Respondent thus supplies to and places in the hands of others the means of conducting lotteries in the sale of its product in accordance with the sales plan hereinabove set forth, as a means of inducing purchasers thereof to purchase respondent's said product in preference to candy offered for sale and sold by its competitors.

PAR. 7. The sale of said candy to the purchasing public in the manner above alleged involves a game of chance or the sale of a chance to procure articles of merchandise.

The use by respondent of said method of the sale of candy, and the sale of candy by and through the use thereof and by the aid of said method is a practice of the sort which the common law and criminal statutes have long deemed contrary to public policy; and is contrary to an established public policy of the Government of the United States. The use by respondent of said method has the dangerous tendency unduly to hinder competition or create monopoly in this, to wit: that the use thereof has the tendency and capacity to exclude from the branch of the candy trade involved in this proceeding competitors who do not adopt and use the same method or an equivalent or similar method involving the same or an equivalent or similar element of chance or lottery scheme.

Wherefore, many persons, firms, and corporations who make and sell candy in competition with the respondent, as above alleged, are unwilling to offer for sale or sell candy so packed and assembled as above alleged, or otherwise arranged and packed for sale to the purchasing public so as to involve a game of chance, and such competitors refrain therefrom.

PAR. 8. Many dealers in and ultimate purchasers of candy are attracted by respondent's said method and manner of packing said candy, and by the element of chance involved in the sale thereof in the manner above described, and are thereby induced to purchase said candy so packed and sold by respondent, in preference to candy offered for sale and sold by said competitors of respondent who do not use the same or equivalent methods. The use of said method by respondent has the tendency and capacity, because of said game of chance, to divert to respondent trade and custom from its said competitors who do not use the same or an equivalent method; to exclude from said candy trade all competitors who are unwilling to and who do not use the same or an equivalent method because the same is unlawful; to lessen competition in said candy trade, and to tend to create a monopoly of said candy trade in respondent and such other distributors of candy as use the same or an equivalent method, and to deprive the purchasing public of the benefit of free competition in said candy trade. The use of said method by the respondent has the tendency and capacity to eliminate from said candy trade all actual competitors, and to exclude therefrom all potential competitors, and who do not adopt and use said method or an equivalent method.

PAR. 9. Many of said competitors of respondent are unwilling to adopt and use said method or any method involving a game of chance or the sale of a chance to win something by chance or any other method that is contrary to public policy.

PAR. 10. The aforementioned methods, acts and practices of the respondent are all to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors as hereinabove alleged. Said methods, acts and practices constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914.

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, on April 28, 1936, issued and served its complaint in this proceeding upon the respondent, The Leader Novelty Candy Co., Inc., charging it with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of the provisions of said act. After the issuance of said complaint and the filing of respondent's answer thereto, testimony and other evidence in support of the allegations of said complaint were introduced by Henry C. Lank, attorney for the Commission, before Miles J. Furnas, an examiner of the Commission theretofore duly designated by it, and in opposition to the allegations of the complaint by Victor W. Milch, Esquire, attorney for the respondent. For the purpose of eliminating the taking of certain additional testimony, counsel for the Commission and counsel for the respondent stipulated (Tr. p. 12) concerning the substance of such testimony and agreeing that the Commission might consider such testimony as actually having been offered in this case. The said testimony and other evidence, including the stipulation of counsel, were duly recorded and filed in the office of the Commission. Thereafter the proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on the said complaint and answer thereto, testimony and other evidence, including the stipulation of counsel, brief in support of the complaint, respondent having waived filing of any brief and not having requested oral argument; and the Commission, having duly considered the matter and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent, The Leader Novelty Candy Co., Inc., is a corporation organized under the laws of the State of New York, with its office and principal place of business located at 23 Marcy Avenue, Brooklyn, N. Y. Respondent is now, and for several years last past has been, engaged in the sale and distribution of candy and candy products and in the manufacture, sale and distribution of novelty toys to wholesale candy dealers and jobbers located throughout the United States but the majority of whom are located in New York State, in Connecticut and in the New England States. It causes the said candy and novelty toys when sold to be shipped and transported from its principal place of business in New York State to the purchasers thereof in the other States of the United States. In so carrying on said business, respondent is and has been engaged in interstate commerce and is and has been in active competition with other corporations and with partnerships and individuals engaged in the manufacture, sale, and distribution of candy and novelty toys between and among the various States of the United States.

PAR. 2. Respondent designates its business as "novelty candy business", and among the assortments which respondent assembles, sells and distributes is an assortment containing a number of small pieces of candy of uniform size and shape, each contained within wrappers, and a number of other articles of merchandise. The small pieces of candy of uniform size and shape are each contained within wrappers and the majority thereof are of the same color but a small number of said pieces of candy are of a different color. The purchaser who procures one of the small pieces of candy of a color different from the majority is entitled to receive, and is to be given free of charge, one of the other articles of merchandise. These articles of merchandise are novelty toys and among such toys are water pistols and rubber return balls. The purchaser who procures one of the candies of the color of the majority of the small pieces of candy receives only that piece of candy for his money. The small pieces of candy of uniform size and shape retail at the price of 1¢ each and the color of the said pieces of candy is effectively concealed from purchasers and prospective purchasers until a selection or purchase has been made and the wrapper removed therefrom. The other articles of merchandise in said assortment are thus distributed to purchasers of the small pieces of candy of uniform size and shape wholly by lot or chance.

PAR. 3. The candy contained in the above described assortment is contained in one package and the other articles of merchandise or novelty toys are contained in a separate package. The two packages are ordinarily sold and billed separately to the wholesale dealers and jobbers to whom respondent sells its merchandise, but the packages of each which respondent sells to its customers are generally identical in number, and the said assortments are so packed and assembled that the same may be displayed side by side as a single unit and sold in accordance with the above described sales plan. The president of the respondent corporation was called as a witness and testified that the separate packages were sold and billed to wholesale dealers and jobbers at 40¢ each or 80¢ for the two packages; that the respondent did not and would not sell the package containing the other articles of merchandise at this price except in connection with the sale of the package containing the candy; that the other articles of merchandise actually cost him more than 40¢, but that by selling the two packages for 80¢ he was able to realize a profit on the transaction.

PAR. 4. The lottery or prize assortments described in paragraph 2 hereof are generally referred to in the candy trade as "break and take," "draw," or "deal" assortments, and packages or assortments of candy without any gaming device or lottery feature in connection with their resale to the public are generally referred to in the candy trade as "straight" goods. These terms will be used hereafter in these findings to describe these respective types of candy.

PAR. 5. Numerous retail dealers purchase the packages of candy and toy novelties described in paragraph 2 above from wholesale dealers or jobbers who in turn have purchased said packages from respondent, and such retail dealers display one of each of said packages for sale to the public as packed by respondent and as a single unit, and the candy contained in said packages is sold and distributed to the consuming public in the manner described.

PAR. 6. All sales made by respondent are absolute sales, and respondent retains no control in any manner over the merchandise after it is delivered to the wholesale dealer or jobber. The assortments are assembled and packed in such manner that they are sold, and may be sold, by the retail dealers to the purchasing public as a single unit in the manner described.

PAR. 7. The sale and distribution of assortments of candy and toy novelties by retail dealers by the method described in paragraph 2 above is a sale and distribution by lot or chance and constitutes a lottery or gaming device.

PAR. 8. It was stipulated and agreed by counsel for the Commission and for respondent that various witnesses were available to the Commission and that if called would testify, and that the Commission might consider their testimony as having been offered to the effect that the sale of assortments similar to those sold and distributed by respondent injure the sale of "straight" candy assortments having no lottery or chance feature connected therewith; that the sale of such assortments is injurious to the candy trade generally and to the general public; that the resale of such assortments by retail dealers to the consuming public is violative of the statutes of the several States and is contrary to good morals; that such practices and methods are an unfair method of competition; and in accordance with said stipulation the Commission finds as a fact that many competitors regard such methods of sale and distribution as morally bad and as encouraging gambling, especially among children; as injurious to the candy industry because it results in the merchandising of a chance or lottery instead of candy; and as providing retail merchants with the means of violating the laws of the several States. Because of these reasons some competitors of respondent refuse to sell candy so packed and assembled that it can be resold to the public by lot or chance. These competitors are thereby put to a disadvantage in competing and trade is diverted to respondent and others using similar methods from said competitors. Said competitors can compete on even terms only by furnishing the same or similar assortments to retailers and this they are unwilling to do and their sales of "straight" goods show a continued decrease.

PAR. 9. There are in the United States many manufacturers and distributors of candy who do not sell lottery or prize assortments of candy and who sell their "straight" merchandise in interstate commerce in competition with the "break and take" or "draw" or "deal" assortments, and manufacturers of the "straight" type of candy have noted a marked decrease in the sales of their product whenever and wherever the lottery or prize candy has appeared in their market. This decrease in sales of "straight" candy is principally due to the gambling or lottery feature connected with the "break and take," "draw," or "deal" assortments.

PAR. 10. The exact annual volume of respondent's business was not shown but it consists principally in the sale of assortments similar to that described in paragraph 2 hereof.

PAR. 11. The Commission further finds that the sale and distribution in interstate commerce of assortments as described in paragraph 2 hereof are contrary to public policy.

PAR. 12. The complaint in this case contains an allegation that the respondent represents that it is the manufacturer of the candy in which it deals; that this representation is false; and that it is an unfair method of competition, diverts trade from respondent's competitors, and is contrary to public interest. The evidence offered concerning this allegation of the complaint is meager and indefinite, and the Commission finds that the said allegation is not supported by the testimony.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondent, The Leader Novelty Candy Co., Inc., except as referred to in paragraph 12 above, are to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

It is ordered, That the respondent, The Leader Novelty Candy Co., Inc., its officers, representatives, agents, and employees, in the sale, offering for sale, and distribution in interstate commerce of candy and candy products and of toy novelties, do cease and desist from:

(1) Selling and distributing to jobbers and wholesale dealers for resale to retail dealers candy and other articles of merchandise so packed and assembled that sales of such candy and of other articles of merchandise to the general public are to be made, or may be made, by means of a lottery, gaming device, or gift enterprise.

(2) Supplying to or placing in the hands of wholesale dealers and jobbers packages or assortments of candy and other articles of merchandise which are used, or which may be used, without alteration or rearrangement of the contents of such packages or assortments to conduct a lottery, gaming device, or gift enterprise in the sale or distribution of the candy and other articles of merchandise contained in said packages or assortments to the public.

(3) Packing or assembling in the same package or in separate packages for sale to the public at retail pieces of candy of uniform size and shape having centers of different colors and other articles of merchandise, which other articles of merchandise are to be given as prizes to the purchaser procuring a piece of candy of a particular color.

It is further ordered, That the respondent, The Leader Novelty Candy Co., Inc., shall, within 30 days after the service upon it of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which it has complied with this order.

Complaint

IN THE MATTER OF

HELENA RUBINSTEIN, INC.

Docket 2939. Complaint, Oct. 2, 1936—Decision, Dec. 15, 1936

Where a corporation engaged in the advertisement, sale, and distribution of a line of cosmetics, facial creams, and toilet preparations, including some fifteen separate products and, among others, "Youthifying Hand Cream," "Grecian Anti-Wrinkle Cream," "Golden Automatic Lipstick," "Youthful Herbal Mask," "Herbal Eye Tissue Oil," "Marienbad Slenderizing Bath Salts," "Eyelash Grower and Darkener," "Eye Lotion," "Hormone Scalp Food," "Hormone Beauty Mask," and "Hormone Twin Youthifier" creams "No. 1" and "No. 2," for day and night use respectively, in substantial competition with others engaged in distribution and sale of similar preparations in commerce among various States and the District of Columbia—
 Misrepresented, in advertising said line of cosmetics, creams, and preparations in newspapers and periodicals of general circulation throughout the various States, and in advertising literature and folders printed and similarly circulated to customers and prospective customers, and through statements on the labels and containers thereof, the composition, properties and results of aforesaid various fifteen or sixteen preparations, and falsely represented that they would, as the case might be, serve as a food for or nourish the skin, muscles, or tissues, and prevent crows feet and wrinkles, and revitalize skin tissues, and contained living sparks of life which increased their therapeutic value, and that they would rebuild worn out cells and restore youth to dry, lined, wrinkled skin, and would dissolve fatty tissues and act as effective fat reducers, and strengthen the eye nerves:

Held, That such acts and practices were to the prejudice of the public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition.

Mr. Morton Nesmith for the Commission.

Mr. Henry M. Flateau, of New York City, for respondent.

COMPLAINT ¹

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission having reason to believe that Helena Rubinstein, Inc., hereinafter referred to as respondent, has been and is now using unfair methods of competition in commerce as "commerce" is defined in said act, and it appearing to the Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. The respondent, Helena Rubinstein, Inc., is a corporation, organized, existing, and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of New York with its principal office and place of business located at 8 East 57th Street in the city of New York, State of New York. It is now and for more than one year last past has been engaged in advertising, selling, and distributing a line of cosmetics, facial creams, and toilet preparations hereinafter more particularly described. Respondent has caused and still causes said cosmetics, facial creams, and toilet preparations when sold, to be transported from its place of business in the State of New York to purchasers thereof, some located in the State of New York and others located in various States of the United States and the District of Columbia, and there is now, and has been for more than one year last past, a constant current of trade in commerce in cosmetics, facial creams, and toilet preparations sold by respondent between and among the various States of the United States and the District of Columbia.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of its said business, respondent is now, and has been in substantial competition with other individuals, firms, and corporations likewise engaged in the business of distributing and selling similar cosmetics, facial creams, and toilet preparations in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and the District of Columbia.

PAR. 3. In the course and conduct of its said business in soliciting the sale of and selling said cosmetics, facial creams, and toilet preparations, and for the purpose of inducing the purchase of said preparations, respondent has caused and still causes advertisements to be inserted in newspapers and magazines of general circulation throughout the various States of the United States, and has printed and circulated advertising folders and literature to customers and prospective customers in the same manner. In all of its advertising literature, through statements and representations herein set out, and through statements and representations of similar import and effect displayed on the labels and containers of said preparations the respondent represents among other things the following:²

²The quoted matter set forth at length in the complaint at this point, in which respondent purports to describe the properties, nature and effect of fifteen items of cosmetics, facial creams and toilet preparations offered and sold by it, is also set forth in the findings, infra, at page 231, and for that reason is here omitted in the interest of brevity.

PAR. 4. The representations made by the respondent with respect to the properties, nature and effect of said cosmetics, facial creams, and toilet preparations, are grossly exaggerated, false, misleading, and untrue. In truth and in fact, said preparations do not possess properties or contain ingredients that will feed or nourish the skin or lips, revitalize or restore youth to the skin, or prevent crows feet, wrinkles, or lines about the eyes. Said preparations do not contain hormones or living sparks of life which increase the therapeutic value of the products. Respondent's "Marienbad Slenderizing Bath Salts" will not dissolve fatty tissues, nor are they effective weight reducers. Respondent's "Eye Lotion" will not relieve eye strain or strengthen eye nerves. Respondent's "Eyelash Grower and Darkener" will not grow or promote the growth of eyelashes in all cases, nor will respondent's "Hormone Scalp Food" improve the growth and texture of the hair in all cases. Respondent's "Youthful Herb Mask" does not contain the juices of 23 different herbs.

PAR. 5. There are among the competitors of the respondent, many who distribute and sell similar cosmetics, facial creams, and toilet preparations in commerce, who do not misrepresent the properties, qualities, therapeutic virtues, functions, uses or effects of their said competing products.

PAR. 6. The representations of respondent as aforesaid, have had and have the capacity and tendency to confuse, mislead, and deceive a substantial portion of the purchasing public, into the erroneous belief that all of said representations are true, and that the results claimed by respondent will be obtained by the purchasers thereof from the use of said products in the treatment of various conditions named therein. Said representations of respondent have had and have the capacity and tendency to induce members of the public to purchase said preparations because of the erroneous beliefs engendered by said representations, and to unfairly divert trade to respondent from competitors engaged in the sale in interstate commerce of cosmetics, facial creams and toilet preparations similar to those sold by respondent, and substantial injury has been and is being done by respondent to substantial competition in commerce among and between the various States of the United States and the District of Columbia.

PAR. 7. The above alleged acts and practices of respondent are all to the prejudice of the public and respondent's competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914.

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission on October 2, 1936, issued and on October 5, 1936, served its complaint upon the respondent, Helena Rubinstein, Inc., a corporation, charged with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of the provisions of said Act.

Thereafter the respondent through its attorney, Henry M. Fleteau, executed a stipulation as to the facts in and by which stipulation, the respondent consented that the Commission may, without trial and without further evidence and without any intervening procedure, make, enter and issue and serve upon respondent its findings as to the facts and conclusion based thereon, and an order to cease and desist from the methods of competition alleged in the complaint as therein stipulated. The facts so stipulated embrace substantially all of the material allegations of the complaint. Thereafter the proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on the complaint and the stipulation as to the facts; and the Commission having duly considered the same and being fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. The respondent, Helena Rubinstein, Inc., is a corporation organized, existing and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of New York, with its principal office and place of business located at 8 East 57th Street, in the city of New York, State of New York. It is now, and for more than one year last past, has been engaged in advertising, selling, and distributing a line of cosmetics, facial creams, and toilet preparations, hereinafter more particularly set out. The respondent has caused and still causes said cosmetics, facial creams, and toilet preparations, when sold, to be transported from its place of business in the State of New York, to purchasers thereof, some located in the State of New York, and others located in the various States of the United States and the District of Columbia, and there is now, and has been for more than one year last past, a constant current of trade in commerce in cosmetics, facial creams, and toilet preparations sold by respondent between and among the various States of the United States and the District of Columbia.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of its said business, respondent is now, and has been, in substantial competition with other individuals, firms, and corporations likewise engaged in the business of distributing and selling similar cosmetics, facial creams, and toilet preparations in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and the District of Columbia.

PAR. 3. In the course and conduct of its said business in soliciting the sale of and selling said cosmetics, facial creams and toilet preparations, and for the purpose of inducing the purchase of said preparations, respondent has caused and still causes advertisements to be inserted in newspapers and magazines of general circulation throughout the various States of the United States, and has printed, and circulated advertising literature and folders to customers and prospective customers in the same manner. In all of its advertising literature, and through statements and representations herein set out, and through statements and representations of similar import and effect displayed on the labels and containers of said preparations the respondent represents among other things the following:

(1) Youthifying Hand Cream.

Keeps hands lovely, overcomes roughness, redness and chapping, youthifies age betraying hands.

Restores youth to age betraying hands.

Wonderful nourisher of dry lined or shriveled hands, restores youth to scrawny ageing hands.

(2) Grecian Anti-Wrinkle Cream.

A nourishing skin food; corrects and prevents crows feet, lines and wrinkled lids, nourishes their dry skins.

It contains nourishing ingredients the tissues need.

A rich nourishing cream that is unusually effective.

(3) Golden Automatic Lipstick.

Actively nourishes the lip tissues; contains biological ingredients; produces youthful moisture.

(4) Youthful Herbal Mask.

Contains the juices of twenty-three different herbs which replenish the skin with the elements of youth and loveliness; irons out lines and wrinkles.

(5) Herbal Eye Tissue Oil.

Its nourishing biological ingredients smooth and soften the delicate eye area.

Prevents and corrects crows feet, lines and under eye wrinkles.

(6) Marienbad Slenderizing Bath Salts.

Marienbad Slenderizing Bath Salts dissolving the fatty particles in the body, their beneficial action dries out layer after layer of fatty tissue, until excess fat disappears; they stimulate the skin, increase the metabolism and restore the normal weight of the body without the depressing effects of severe reducing methods. The pores are thoroughly cleansed and the skin becomes firm and silky smooth.

This amazing new scientific discovery dissolves fatty tissue, reducing the weight by one to three pounds in one week; process is as simple as it is safe, swift.

Findings

24 F. T. C.

(7) Novena Cerate. (a rich feeding night cream).

A remarkable nourisher and rebuilder.

Excellent for very fine dry sensitive skins.

(8) Eyelash Grower and Darkener.

(9) Herbal Cream.

Ideal nutritive for dry, harsh, wrinkled and sensitive skins.

An absolutely unique tissue creation compounded of rare and nourishing herbs.

It quickly restores satiny smoothness and exquisite texture to wrinkled weather beaten and prematurely aged skin.

(10) Anti-Wrinkle Lotion.

Youthifies dry, lined skin and tired eyes.

Corrects and prevents fine lines and crows feet.

(11) Eye Lotion.

Cleanses, refreshes, relieves strain; strengthens the eye nerves.

(12) Herbal Muscle Oil.

Contains the nourishing ingredients that the tissues need in a form easily assimilated by the skin cells; rounds out hollows under the eyes.

Restores lined, stringy throats to youthful smoothness.

(13) Hormone Scalp Food.

Improves growth and texture of hair; smoothes irritated scalps.

(14) Hormone Beauty Mask.

Contains living hormones—those "sparks of life", the youth giving powers of hormones—those "sparks of life" are directly responsible for the marvelous effect Hormone Tissue Mask has on the skin.

Absorbs lines and drabness; firms the contour, revitalizes the skin tissues.

Resculptures, youthifies and beautifies fatigued skin.

(15) Hormone Twin Youthifier #1 Day Cream.

Hormone Twin Youthifier #2 Night Cream.

The Hormone Twin Youthifiers, which contain the elements used by nature herself—hormones—are "sparks of life." The Hormone Twin Youthifiers are two creams so compounded that the glandular substances which they contain are richly assimilated by the skin. They penetrate deeply, stimulating skin metabolism, rebuilding worn out cells. Shrunken tissues are quickly rebuilt; relaxed muscles are tightened and the dull, weather beaten look of age vanishes. They restore youth to dry, lined, wrinkled skin. You will marvel at the instantaneous youthifying action of these two creams—the day cream or awakening cream, and the night cream or feeding cream. They work together in marvelous harmony, literally lifting the years from you, actually feeding the return of youth.

PAR. 4. Respondent's Youthifying Hand Cream does not restore youth to scrawny, ageing hands. Respondent's Grecian Anti-Wrinkle Cream is not a nourishing skin food; does not correct and prevent crows feet, lines and wrinkled lids, neither does it nourish dry skin nor contain nourishing ingredients the tissues need, nor is it a rich nourishing cream that is unusually effective. Respondent's Golden Automatic Lipstick does not actively nourish the lip tissues. Respondent's Youthful Herbal Mask does not contain the juices of 23 different herbs which replenish the skin with elements of youth and loveliness. Respondent's Herbal Eye Tissue Oil does not contain nourishing ingredients, nor does it prevent and correct crows feet, lines and under-eye wrinkles. The respondent's bath salts "Marienbad Slenderizing Bath Salts," will not dissolve the fatty particles in the body, nor will their beneficial action dry out layer after layer of fatty tissues until excess fat disappears; nor will they stimulate the skin, increase the metabolism and restore the normal weight of the body without the depressing effects of severe reducing methods; nor will this amazing new scientific discovery dissolve fatty tissues, reduce the weight by one to three pounds in one week, and neither is its process as simple as it is safe, swift. Respondent's Novena Cerate is not a remarkable nourisher and builder of skin. Respondent's Eyelash Grower and Darkener will not grow or promote the growth of eyelashes except in cases where the present eyelashes have living follicles. Respondent's Herbal Cream is not an ideal nutritive for the skin. Respondent's Anti-Wrinkle Lotion will not prevent fine lines and crows feet in the skin. Respondent's Eye Lotion will not strengthen eye nerves. Respondent's Herbal Muscle Oil does not contain nourishing ingredients that the tissues need in a form easily assimilated by the skin cells. The respondent's product, "Hormone Scalp Food" is not a scalp food, and will not improve growth and texture of the hair or soothe irritated scalps. Respondent's Hormone Beauty Mask does not contain living "sparks of life,"—those "sparks of life" are directly responsible for the marvelous effect Hormone Beauty Mask has on the skin nor will it absorb lines and drabness; firm the contour, or revitalize the skin tissues; and neither will it resculpture and youthify fatigued skin. Respondent's Hormone Twin Youthifier #1, Day Cream and Hormone Twin Youthifier #2, Night Cream do not contain "sparks of life," neither do they rebuild worn out cells; nor do they quickly rebuild shrunken tissues nor restore youth to dry, lined, or wrinkled skin. Neither will they literally lift the years from one, or actually feed the return of youth.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondent, Helena Rubinstein, Inc., a corporation are to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

Order

24 F. T. C.

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

This matter coming on to be heard by the Commission upon the complaint filed herein on the 2nd day of October, 1936, and a stipulation as to the facts in lieu of testimony heretofore entered into by and between the respondent and the Federal Trade Commission in which stipulation the respondent admits without further evidence and without intervening procedure the Commission may make, enter, issue and serve upon respondent its findings as to the facts and conclusion and an order to cease and desist from the violations of law charged in the complaint, and the Commission having considered the complaint and the facts so stipulated and having made its findings as to the facts and conclusion that respondent has violated the provisions of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

It is ordered, That the respondent, Helena Rubinstein, Inc., a corporation, its directors, officers, agents, and representatives and employees, in connection with the distribution and sale of cosmetics, facial creams, and toilet preparations in interstate commerce cease and desist from:

Advertising or representing directly or indirectly, in newspapers, magazines, radio broadcasts, circulars, display cards, on cartons or any other form of advertising literature or in any other way, that any of said cosmetics, facial creams and toilet preparations

(1) will serve as a food for or nourish the human skin, muscles, or tissues;

(2) will prevent crow's feet and wrinkles and revitalize the skin tissues;

(3) will strengthen the eye nerves;

(4) contain living sparks of life which increase the therapeutic value of the products;

(5) will rebuild worn-out cells;

(6) will restore youth to dry, lined, wrinkled skin;

(7) will dissolve fatty tissues or act as effective weight reducers;

It is further ordered, That the respondent, Helena Rubinstein, Inc., a corporation, its directors, officers, agents, and representatives and employees shall within 90 days from the date of service upon it of a copy of this order file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth the manner and form in which it has complied with the order herein set forth.

IN THE MATTER OF

ALBERT F. COOLEY, DOING BUSINESS UNDER THE NAMES AND STYLES OF RANGO TABLET COMPANY, A. F. RANGO, DADDY RANGO, ETC.

COMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION
 OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 26, 1914

Docket 2641. Complaint, Nov. 29, 1935—Decision, Dec. 18, 1936

Where an individual, engaged in sale and distribution of various medicinal preparations, including four sold under name of "Daddy Rango's," namely, his thus designated "Laxative Herb Tablets," "Sunshine Kelp Tablets," "Asthma and Hay Fever Remedy," and "H and H Tablets"—

Represented, in advertisements of his said preparations in newspapers and periodicals circulated to the purchasing public in the various States, and in radio broadcasts to the general public, and through circulars and other advertising material distributed to such purchasing public, that said four preparations constituted cures, remedies, or competent and adequate treatments, as the case might be, for constipation, headaches, dizzy spells, neuritis, rheumatism, over-acid condition, etc., and for removing poisons from the system, or for goiter and run-down conditions, or for asthma and hay fever, or for neuritis, dizzy spells, headache, backache, rheumatism, and ulcers, and for the removal of impurities from the body, and that said Kelp Tablets likewise would promote growth and build sturdy bones and teeth in children, and supply all the minerals necessary for the body and assure buoyant and vigorous health, and prevent goiter, and that they possessed and imparted to those taking them the therapeutic, medicinal, and beneficial effects of natural sunshine, etc.;

Facts being the formulae of said remedies or medicines were not such that they could be considered a cure, remedy, or competent and adequate treatment for the conditions and ailments for which thus represented and offered, and they did not have the properties and would not produce the results claimed, and were not proper and efficient remedies, treatments, or palliatives for the various maladies, diseases, and conditions for which they were thus represented by him, and had little or no therapeutic value;

With effect of confusing, misleading, and deceiving members of the public into the erroneous belief that said products constituted cures, or satisfactory and adequate remedies or treatments, for said various ailments, diseases, etc., as above set forth, and into the purchase of the same on account of such erroneous beliefs, and of thereby diverting trade unfairly to him, and to those selling his products, from individuals and concerns engaged in the sale of other medicinal preparations, designed and intended or used and recommended for the treatment or relief of the same diseases, maladies, and conditions, without making similar false and misleading representations as to the character of their respective products or the extent of the effectiveness thereof when used; to the injury of competition in commerce:

Held, That such acts and practices were to the prejudice of the public and competitors, and constituted unfair methods of competition.

Mr. John W. Hilldrop for the Commission.

Reames-Lake & Mulvihill, of Los Angeles, Calif., for respondent.

COMPLAINT

PARAGRAPH 1. That said respondent, Albert F. Cooley, doing business under the names and styles of Rango Tablet Company, A. F. Rango, Daddy Rango, Daddy Rango Tablet Company, Rango Company, and Daddy Rango Company, is now and has been engaged for more than two years last past in the sale and distribution in interstate commerce of various medicinal preparations with his office and principal place of business in the city of Los Angeles, in the State of California. Among the medicinal preparations, so sold and distributed by respondent, are the following:

Daddy Rango's H and H Tablets,
Daddy Rango's Laxative Herb Tablets,
Daddy Rango's Sunshine Kelp Tablets,
Daddy Rango's Asthma and Hay Fever Remedy.

Said respondent, in the course and conduct of his said business, causes the medicines sold by him, including those above named, to be transported in interstate commerce from his said place of business in California to, into and through States of the United States other than California to various and numerous persons in such other States to whom such medicines are or have been sold.

PAR. 2. That, during the time above mentioned, other individuals, firms, and corporations in various States of the United States are and have been engaged in the sale and distribution in interstate commerce of preparations similar in kind to those of respondent as above named or of the same general therapeutic properties or adapted to and used for the purposes for which respondent's said preparations are recommended to be used in the advertising matter hereinafter referred to, and such other individuals, firms, and corporations have caused and do now cause their said preparations, when sold by them, to be transported from various States of the United States to, into and through States other than the State of the origin of the shipment thereof. Said respondent has been, during the aforesaid time, in competition in interstate commerce in the sale of his said preparations with such other individuals, firms, and corporations.

PAR. 3. That said respondent, in advertising his said preparations, causes advertisements to be inserted in newspapers and magazines circulated to the purchasing public in the various States of the United States and also causes broadcasts to be made by means of the radio to the general public in the various States of the United States. He also advertises his said preparations by means of circulars and other advertising materials distributed to the purchasing public in various States of the United States by mail or otherwise.

By one or more of the aforesaid means, respondent represents that said Daddy Rango's H and H Tablets are a cure, remedy, or competent and adequate treatment for an "over-acid condition" of the system, neuritis, stomach disorders generally, dizzy spells, headache, backache, rheumatism, stomach ulcers, gastric ulcers, duodenal ulcers, and for the removal of all impurities from the body.

By one or more of the aforesaid means, respondent represents that said Daddy Rango's Laxative Herb Tablets are a cure, remedy, or competent and adequate treatment for constipation, headaches, dizzy spells, neuritis, rheumatism, "over-acid condition" of the system, back troubles, liver and kidney troubles, and for removing poisons from the system.

By one or more of the aforesaid means, respondent represents that said Daddy Rango's Sunshine Kelp Tablets are a cure, remedy or competent and adequate treatment for goiter and for a run-down condition. It is further represented that said preparation promotes growth and builds sturdy bones and teeth in children; that it will supply all the minerals to assure "buoyant, vigorous health"; that it supplies the need of the body for minerals; that it will produce health and happiness; that it will remedy a run-down condition; and that it will prevent goiter.

By one or more of the aforesaid means, respondent represents that said Daddy Rango's Asthma and Hay Fever Remedy is a cure, remedy or competent and adequate treatment for asthma and hay fever.

PAR. 4. That, in truth and in fact, respondent's said medicines, respectively, do not constitute a cure, remedy, or competent and adequate treatment for the several and various diseases, ailments, and bodily conditions aforesaid for which they are recommended, respectively, by respondent in his advertising as aforesaid. Respondent's said representations are misleading in that they are either false and beyond the therapeutic effects of the said medicines or they are grossly exaggerated and inaccurate or only true to a limited extent or under certain conditions.

PAR. 5. That respondent, in effecting the sale of his preparations, as aforesaid, makes various false, inaccurate, and misleading representations by one or more of the means aforesaid, among which are those that represent or imply that Daddy Rango's Laxative Herb Tablets are not habit forming regardless of how long they are used; that the "stomach is the most important organ of the body"; that "Impurities must be removed" (from the system) "as fast as they accumulate"; that "It is now known that the basic cause of almost every case of illness is an over-acid condition"; that "As long as these acids and poisons remain in the system there will be trouble with dizzy spells, headache, backache, rheumatism, neuritis, stomach ulcers, etc."; that "Sluggish action of the stomach causes it to become seriously afflicted, weakening the entire body. Loss of vigor and vitality results. Illness is liable in other parts of the body"; that "The various named ulcers" (in the stomach and small intestine) "all come under the common name 'stomach ulcers'"; that "A clean healthy stomach means you are generally well, full of vigor with an active body and mind to successfully carry on your life plans in the business and social world"; that "The stomach is the seat of a large percentage of all ills"; that Daddy Rango's Sunshine Kelp Tablets possess and impart to those taking them, the therapeutic, medicinal and beneficial effects of natural sunshine; that said Kelp Tablets are "rich in organic minerals" and bring to the "daily diet abundant supply of iodine, copper, iron . . ."; that said tablets "are an ideal food supplement"; that "A lot of you no doubt need minerals in your body. If you had the same you probably would not be sick today"; that "If your body needs minerals", said Kelp tablets should be tried to supply the deficiency; and that "When any one has plenty of minerals there should be no worry over goiter."

That, in truth and in fact, said representations are inaccurate, deceptive and misleading and do not correctly and properly set forth the true facts in the particulars involved.

PAR. 6. That the representations of respondent as aforesaid have had and do have the tendency and capacity to confuse, mislead and deceive members of the public in the particulars as aforesaid and to cause and induce them to buy and use respondent's said medicines because of the erroneous beliefs engendered as above set forth, and to divert trade to respondent from competitors engaged in the sale of medical preparations in interstate commerce of the same or similar kind as those sold by respondent or of those beneficial in or adapted to and used for the treatment of the various diseases and bodily ailments and conditions for which respondent recommends his said medicines as aforesaid. There are, among the competitors of respondent, those who in no wise make the same or similar false and misleading representations as made by respondent and as herein set out.

PAR. 7. The above acts and things done by respondent are all to the injury and prejudice of the public and the competitors of respondent in interstate commerce, within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914.

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission on November 29, 1935, issued and served its complaint in this proceeding upon respondent Albert F. Cooley, doing business under the names and styles of Rango Tablet Company, A. F. Rango, Daddy Rango, Daddy Rango Tablet Company, Rango Company, and Daddy Rango Company, charging him with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of the provisions of said act. After the issuance of said complaint, and the filing of respondent's answer thereto, testimony and other evidence in support of the allegations of said complaint were introduced by John W. Hilldrop, attorney for the Commission, before W. W. Shepard, an examiner of the Commission, theretofore duly designated by it, and in defense of the allegations of the complaint by Leroy Reames, attorney for the respondent; and said testimony and other evidence were duly recorded and filed in the office of the Commission. Thereafter, the proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on the said complaint, the answer thereto, testimony and other evidence, brief of counsel for the Federal Trade Commission in support of the complaint; and the Commission having duly considered the same and now being fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public, and makes this its findings as to the facts and conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. The respondent, Albert F. Cooley, doing business under the names and styles of Rango Tablet Company, A. F. Rango, Daddy Rango, Daddy Rango Tablet Company, Rango Company, and Daddy Rango Company, is now, and has been for more than two years last past engaged in the sale and distribution in commerce as herein set out of various medicinal preparations. His office and principal place of business are located in the city of Los Angeles, in the State of California. Among the medicinal preparations, so sold and distributed by respondent, are the following:

Daddy Rango's II and II Tablets;
Daddy Rango's Laxative Herb Tablets;
Daddy Rango's Sunshine Kelp Tablets;
Daddy Rango's Asthma and Hay Fever Remedy.

Said respondent in the course and conduct of his business, causes said medicines when sold by him to be transported in commerce from his said place of business in California to, into, and through States of the United States other than California to the various persons located in such other States to whom such medicines are or have been sold.

PAR. 2. During the time above mentioned, other individuals, firms, and corporations located in various States of the United States have been engaged in the sale and distribution, in commerce among and between the various States of the United States of preparations similar in kind to those of respondent above named or of the same general therapeutic properties or adapted to and used for the purposes for which respondent recommends his said preparations. Such other individuals, firms, and corporations have caused and do now cause their said preparations when sold by them to be transported from various States of the United States to, into, and through States other than the State of the origin of the shipment thereof to the purchasers thereof. Said respondent has been during the aforesaid time in competition in such commerce in the sale of his said preparations with such other individuals, firms, and corporations.

PAR. 3. Respondent in advertising his said preparations, causes advertisements to be inserted in newspapers and magazines circulated to the purchasing public in the various States of the United States and also causes broadcasts to be made by means of the radio to the general public in the various States of the United States. He also advertises his said preparations by means of circulars and other advertising material distributed to the purchasing public in the various States of the United States by mail or otherwise.

By one or more of the aforesaid means, respondent represents that said Daddy Rango's H and H Tablets are a cure, remedy, or competent and adequate treatment for an "over-acid condition" of the system, neuritis, stomach disorders generally, dizzy spells, headache, backache, rheumatism, stomach ulcers, gastric ulcers, duodenal ulcers, and for the removal of all impurities from the body.

By one or more of the aforesaid means, respondent represents that said Daddy Rango's Laxative Herb Tablets are a cure, remedy or competent and adequate treatment for constipation, headaches, dizzy spells, neuritis, rheumatism, "over-acid condition" of the system, back troubles, liver and kidney troubles, and for removing poisons from the system.

By one or more of the aforesaid means, respondent represents that said Daddy Rango's Sunshine Kelp Tablets are a cure, remedy, or competent and adequate treatment for goiter and for a run-down condition. It is further represented that said preparation promotes growth and builds sturdy bones and teeth in children; that it will supply all the minerals to assure "buoyant, vigorous health"; that it supplies the need of the body for minerals; that it will produce health and happiness; that it will remedy a run-down condition; and that it will prevent goiter.

By one or more of the aforesaid means, respondent represents that said Daddy Rango's Asthma and Hay Fever Remedy is a cure, remedy, or competent and adequate treatment for asthma and hay fever.

PAR. 4. The formula of respondent's remedy or medicine known and designated as "H and H Tablets" is as follows:

Magnesium Oxide.....	Grams.....	0.648
Sodium Bicarbonate.....	"	0.648
Calcium Carbonate.....	"	0.324
Bismuth Subcarbonate.....	"	0.324
Corn Starch.....	"	0.2805
Pancreatin.....	"	0.065
Tertrazine.....	"	0.001
Oil Peppermint.....	CC	0.006

The formula for said product, as above set out, is not such that the product can be considered a cure, remedy or competent and adequate treatment for an over-acid condition of the system, neuritis, stomach disorders, dizzy spells, headache, backache, rheumatism, stomach ulcers, gastric ulcers, duodenal ulcers and for the removal of all impurities from the human body.

The formula of respondent's remedy or medicine known and designated as "Kelp Tablets" is as follows:

Kelp.....	Grams.....	0.324
Acacia.....	"	0.0259

Findings

24 F. T. C.

The formula for said product as above set out, is not such that the product can be considered a cure, remedy or competent and adequate treatment for goiter or run-down condition of the human body. The use of this preparation does not promote growth or build sturdy bones and teeth in children. Its use will not supply all the minerals necessary to assure buoyant and vigorous health. It does not supply the need of the body for minerals and its use will not produce health and happiness. It will not remedy a run-down condition and its use will not prevent goiter.

The formula of respondent's remedy or medicine known and designated as "Herb Tablets" is as follows:

Sugar.....	Grams..	0.13
Corn Starch.....	"	-- 0.0974
Aloin.....	"	-- 0.0324
Extract Licorice.....	"	-- 0.0324
Cascarin.....	"	-- 0.0162
Podophyllin.....	"	-- 0.012
Oleoresin Ginger.....	"	-- 0.004

The formula for said product, as above set out is not such that the product can be considered a cure, remedy or competent and adequate treatment for constipation, headaches, dizzy spells, neuritis, rheumatism, over-acid condition of the system, back troubles, liver and kidney troubles, and for the removal of poisons from the system.

The respondent's remedy or medicine known and designated as "Daddy Rango's Asthma and Hay Fever Remedy" is not composed of such ingredients as to make it a satisfactory remedy or competent and adequate treatment for asthma and hay fever.

None of the respondent's medicines or remedies, herein referred to, are proper and efficient remedies, treatments or palliatives for the various maladies, diseases and conditions of the human body represented by the respondent to be cured, remedied, or benefited by the use of said products. The remedies and medicines herein described have little or no therapeutic value.

PAR. 5. The representations made by the respondent with respect to the nature and effectiveness in use of the various remedies and medicines, herein referred to, have had, and do now have, the capacity and tendency to, and do, confuse, mislead, and deceive members of the public into the erroneous belief that said products are cures or satisfactory and adequate remedies or treatments for the various ills, diseases, maladies, and conditions of the human body as set out herein, and into the purchase of respondent's said medicines on account of said erroneous beliefs. As a result, trade has been unfairly diverted to the respondent and to those selling his products from corporations, firms and individuals engaged in the sale of other medicinal preparations designed and intended or used and recommended for the treatment or relief of the same diseases, maladies and conditions for which the respondent recommends his products, and who do not make similar false and misleading representations as to the character of their respective products or the extent of the effectiveness of said products when used. Injury has therefore been done by respondent to competition in commerce among and between the various States of the United States.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondent, Albert F. Cooley, doing business under the names and styles of Rango Tablet Company, A. F. Rango, Daddy Rango, Daddy Rango Tablet Company, Rango Company, and Daddy Rango Company, are to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce, within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

It is ordered, That the respondent, Albert F. Cooley, doing business under the names and styles of Rango Tablet Company, A. F. Rango, Daddy Rango, Daddy Rango Tablet Company, Rango Company, and Daddy Rango Company, or under any other name, style or designation; his representatives, agents, and employees in connection with the offering for sale, sale, and distribution in interstate commerce or in the District of Columbia, of the products known as Daddy Rango's "H and H Tablets," Daddy Rango's "Laxative Herb Tablets," Daddy Rango's "Sunshine Kelp Tablets," or Daddy Rango's "Asthma, Hay Fever Remedy," or any products of substantially the same composition and ingredients, sold under the above-mentioned names or under any other names, do forthwith cease and desist from representing directly or indirectly through handbills, circular letters, labels, radio broadcasts, or through any other method of advertising, means, or device:

(a) That Daddy Rango's Laxative Herb Tablets or any other products of substantially the same composition and ingredients are a cure, remedy, or competent and adequate treatment for constipation, headaches, dizzy spells, neuritis, rheumatism, over-acid condition of the system, back troubles, liver and kidney troubles, and for removing poison from the system; or that said tablets are not habit forming no matter how long taken;

(b) That Daddy Rango's Sunshine Kelp Tablets or any other products of substantially the same composition and ingredients are a cure, remedy, or competent and adequate treatment for goiter and for a run-down condition; that they promote growth and build sturdy bones and teeth in children; that they will supply all the minerals necessary to the human body, and assure buoyant and vigorous health; that they produce health and happiness; that they will prevent goiter; that said tablets possess and impart to those taking them the therapeutic, medicinal, and beneficial effects of natural sunshine; that said tablets are rich in organic minerals and bring to the daily diet an abundant supply of iodine, copper, and iron, and that said tablets are an ideal food supplement;

(c) That Daddy Rango's Asthma and Hay Fever Remedy or any other product of substantially the same composition and ingredients is a cure, remedy, or competent and adequate treatment for asthma and hay fever;

(d) That Daddy Rango's II and II Tablets or any other products of substantially the same composition and ingredients are a cure, remedy, or competent and adequate treatment for over-acid condition of the system, neuritis, dizzy spells, headache, backache, rheumatism, stomach ulcers, gastric ulcers, duodenal ulcers, and for the removal of impurities from the body;

(e) That any of said products have such therapeutic value to constitute a proper, competent, and adequate treatment or remedy for the diseases, ailments, maladies, and conditions of the human body named herein.

It is further ordered, That the respondent shall, within 60 days after service upon him of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which he has complied with this order.

IN THE MATTER OF
CHARLES ELISCO, TRADING AS MAYWOOD CANDY COMPANY

COMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION
OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 26, 1914

Docket 2970. Complaint, Nov. 6, 1936—Decision, Dec. 18, 1936

Where an individual, engaged in packing and assembling candy into assortments, including those which were so packed and assembled as to involve the use of a lottery scheme when sold and distributed to the consumers thereof, and which were composed of a number of small penny packages of candy, within the majority of which there were concealed articles of merchandise or prizes of equal value and amounting to a small fractional part of a cent, and within a few of which there were similarly concealed a one cent coin, thus distributed to purchasers wholly by lot or chance—

Sold to wholesalers and to retailers, for display and resale to purchasing public in accordance with aforesaid sales plan, said assortments, and thereby supplied to and placed in the hands of others the means of conducting lotteries in the sale of his said products in accordance with such plan, and contrary to public policy long recognized by the common law and criminal statutes, and to the established public policy of the United States Government, and in competition with many who, unwilling to offer or sell candy so packed and assembled, or otherwise arranged and packed, to the purchasing public as to involve a game of chance or sale of a chance to win something by chance, or any other method contrary to public policy, refrained therefrom;

With result that many dealers in and ultimate purchasers of candy were attracted by said method and manner of packing said products and by element of chance involved in sale thereof as aforesaid, and thereby induced to purchase such candy thus packed and sold by him in preference to that offered and sold by competitors who do not use the same or equivalent methods, and with tendency and capacity to induce such preferential purchase and to divert to him trade and custom from his said competitors who do not use such methods, exclude from said trade all competitors who are unwilling to and do not use such or an equivalent practice because unlawful, lessen competition therein and tend to create a monopoly thereof in him and such other distributors as use such or an equivalent practice, deprive purchasing public of benefit of free competition in trade involved, and eliminate from said trade all actual, and exclude all potential, competitors who do not use such or equivalent methods.

Held, That such acts and practices were to the prejudice of the public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition.

Mr. Henry C. Lank and Mr. P. C. Kolinski, for the Commission.

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that Charles Elisco, individually, and trading as Maywood Candy Company, hereinafter referred to as respondent, has been and is using unfair methods of competition in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in said act of Congress, and it appearing to said Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent, Charles Elisco, is an individual doing business under the trade name Maywood Candy Company, with his principal office and place of business located at 415 Lake Street, Maywood, Ill. Respondent is now and for six months' last past has been engaged in the business of packing and assembling candy into assortments and selling and distributing such assortments of candy to wholesale and retail dealers located at points in various States of the United States, and causes and has caused his said products when so sold, to be transported from his principal place of business in the city of Maywood, State of Illinois, to purchasers thereof in the State of Illinois and in other States of the United States, at their respective places of business; and there is now and has been for six months last past, a course of trade and commerce by said respondent in such candy between and among the States of the United States. In the course and conduct of said business respondent is in competition with other individuals and with partnerships and corporations engaged in the sale and distribution of candy in commerce between and among the various States of the United States.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of his business as described in paragraph 1 hereof, respondent sells and has sold to wholesale and retail dealers assortments of candy so packed and assembled as to involve the use of a lottery scheme when sold and distributed to the consumers thereof.

Said assortments, sold and distributed by respondent, are composed of a number of small packages of candy which said packages retail at the price of one cent each. Each of said small packages of candy contains, in addition to the candy, an article of merchandise or a one cent coin. The majority of these articles of merchandise or prizes contained within the said packages have a value of a small fractional part of one cent, but a small number of the said packages contain a one cent coin. The articles of merchandise or prizes or the one cent coin are concealed from the consuming public within the small packages of candy until after a selection has been made and the particular package selected broken open. The articles of merchandise, although having value of only a fractional part of a cent, are, nevertheless, of unequal value and are of a much lesser value than the one cent coins. The articles of merchandise or prizes of unequal value and the one cent coins are thus distributed to purchasers of the small packages of candy wholly by lot or chance.

PAR. 3. The wholesale dealers to whom respondent sells his assortments resell said assortments to retail dealers, and said retail dealers and the retail dealers to whom respondent sells direct expose said assortments for sale and sell said candy to the purchasing public in accordance with the aforesaid sales plan. Respondent thus supplies to and places in the hands of others the means of conducting lotteries in the sale of his products, in accordance with the sales plan hereinabove set forth and said sales plan has the capacity and tendency of inducing purchasers thereof to purchase respondent's said products in preference to candy offered for sale and sold by his competitors.

PAR. 4. The sale of said candy to the purchasing public in the manner above alleged involves a game of chance or the sale of a chance to procure an article of merchandise of greater value or a one cent coin.

The use by respondent of said method in the sale of candy, and the sale of candy by and through the use thereof and by the aid of said method, is a practice of the sort which the common law and criminal statutes have long deemed contrary to public policy; and is contrary to an established public policy of the Government of the United States. The use by respondent of said method has the dangerous tendency unduly to hinder competition or create monopoly in this, to wit: that the use thereof has the tendency and capacity to exclude from the branch of the candy trade involved in this proceeding competitors who do not adopt and use the same method or an equivalent or similar method involving the same or an equivalent or similar element of chance or lottery scheme.

Many persons, firms, and corporations who make and sell candy in competition with the respondent, as above alleged, are unwilling to offer for sale or sell candy so packed and assembled as above alleged, or otherwise arranged and packed for sale to the purchasing public so as to involve a game of chance and such competitors refrain therefrom.

PAR. 5. Many dealers in and ultimate purchasers of candy are attracted by respondent's said method and manner of packing said candy, and by the element of chance involved in the sale thereof in the manner above described, and are thereby induced to purchase said candy so packed and sold by respondent, in preference to candy offered for sale and sold by said competitors of respondent who do not use the same or equivalent methods. The use of said method by respondent has the tendency and capacity, because of said game of chance, to divert to respondent trade and custom from said competitors who do not use the same or an equivalent method; to exclude from said candy trade all competitors who are unwilling to and who do not use the same or an equivalent method because the same is unlawful; to lessen competition in said candy trade, and to tend to create a monopoly of said candy trade in respondent and such other distributors of candy as use the same or an equivalent method, and to deprive the purchasing public of the benefit of free competition in said candy trade. The use of said method by the respondent has the tendency and capacity to eliminate from said candy trade all actual competitors, and to exclude therefrom all potential competitors, who do not adopt and use said method or an equivalent method.

PAR. 6. Many of said competitors of respondent are unwilling to adopt and use said method or any method involving a game of chance or the sale of a chance to win something by chance or any other method that is contrary to public policy.

PAR. 7. The aforementioned method, acts and practices of the respondent are all to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors, as hereinabove alleged. Said method, acts, and practices constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914.

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

said complaint and consented that, without further evidence or other intervening procedure, the Commission might issue and serve upon him findings as to the facts and conclusion and an order to cease and desist from the violations of law charged in the complaint. Thereafter the proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on the said complaint and answer thereto, and the Commission, having duly considered the same and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom :

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent, Charles Elisco, is an individual doing business under the trade name Maywood Candy Company, with his principal office and place of business located at 415 Lake Street, Maywood, Ill. Respondent is now and for six months last past has been engaged in the business of packing and assembling candy into assortments and selling and distributing such assortments of candy to wholesale and retail dealers located at points in various States of the United States, and causes and has caused his said products, when so sold, to be transported from his principal place of business in the city of Maywood, State of Illinois, to purchasers thereof in the State of Illinois and in other States of the United States, at their respective places of business; and there is now and has been for six months last past a course of trade and commerce by said respondent in such candy between and among the States of the United States. In the course and conduct of said business respondent is in competition with other individuals and with partnerships and corporations engaged in the sale and distribution of candy in commerce between and among the various States of the United States.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of his business as described in paragraph 1 hereof, respondent sells and has sold to wholesale and retail dealers assortments of candy so packed and assembled as to involve the use of a lottery scheme when sold and distributed to the consumers thereof.

Said assortments sold and distributed by respondent are composed of a number of small packages of candy which said packages retail at the price of one cent each. Each of said small packages of candy contains, in addition to the candy, an article of merchandise or a one cent coin. The majority of these articles of merchandise or prizes contained within the said packages have a value of a small fractional part of one cent, but a small number of the said packages contain a one cent coin. The articles of merchandise or prizes or the one cent coin are concealed from the consuming public within the small packages of candy until after a selection has been made and the particular package selected broken open. The articles of merchandise, although having value of only a fractional part of a cent, are nevertheless of unequal value and are of a much lesser value than the one cent coins. The articles of merchandise or prizes of unequal value and the one cent coins are thus distributed to purchasers of the small packages of candy wholly by lot or chance.

PAR. 3. The wholesale dealers to whom respondent sells his assortments resell said assortments to retail dealers, and said retail dealers and the retail dealers to whom respondent sells direct expose said assortments for sale and sell said candy to the purchasing public in accordance with the aforesaid sales plan. Respondent thus supplies to and places in the hands of others the means of conducting lotteries in the sale of his products in accordance with the sales plan hereinabove set forth, and said sales plan has the capacity and tendency of inducing purchasers thereof to purchase respondent's said products in preference to candy offered for sale and sold by his competitors.

PAR. 4. The sale of said candy to the purchasing public in the manner above alleged involves a game of chance or the sale of a chance to procure an article of merchandise of greater value or a one cent coin.

The use by respondent of said method in the sale of candy, and the sale of candy by and through the use thereof and by the aid of said method, is a practice of the sort which the common law and criminal statutes have long deemed contrary to public policy; and is contrary to an established public policy of the Government of the United States. The use by respondent of said method has the dangerous tendency unduly to hinder competition or create monopoly in this, to wit: that the use thereof has the tendency and capacity to exclude from the branch of the candy trade involved in this proceeding competitors who do not adopt and use the same method or an equivalent or similar method involving the same or an equivalent or similar element of chance or lottery scheme.

Many persons, firms and corporations who make and sell candy in competition with the respondent as above alleged are unwilling to offer for sale or sell candy so packed and assembled as above alleged, or otherwise arranged and packed for sale to the purchasing public so as to involve a game of chance, and such competitors refrain therefrom.

PAR. 5. Many dealers in and ultimate purchasers of candy are attracted by respondent's said method and manner of packing said candy, and by the element of chance involved in the sale thereof in the manner above described, and are thereby induced to purchase said candy so packed and sold by respondent in preference to candy offered for sale and sold by said competitors of respondent who do not use the same or equivalent methods. The use of said method by respondent has the tendency and capacity, because of said game of chance, to divert to respondent trade and custom from said competitors who do not use the same or an equivalent method; to exclude from said candy trade all competitors who are unwilling to and who do not use the same or an equivalent method because the same is unlawful; to lessen competition in said candy trade and to tend to create a monopoly of said candy trade in respondent and such other distributors of candy as use the same or an equivalent method; and to deprive the purchasing public of the benefit of free competition in said candy trade. The use of said method by the respondent has the tendency and capacity to eliminate from said candy trade all actual competitors and to exclude therefrom all potential competitors who do not adopt and use said method or an equivalent method.

PAR. 6. Many of said competitors of respondent are unwilling to adopt and use said method or any method involving a game of chance or the sale of a chance to win something by chance or any other method that is contrary to public policy.

PAR. 7. The Commission further finds that the sale and distribution in interstate commerce of assortments of candy as described in paragraph 2 hereof are contrary to public policy.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondent, Charles Elisco, individually, and trading as Maywood Candy Company, are to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

This proceeding having been heard by the Federal Trade Commission upon the complaint of the Commission and the answer of respondent, in which answer respondent admits all the material allegations of the complaint to be true and states that he waives hearing on the charges set forth in said complaint and consents that, without further evidence or other intervening procedure, the Commission may issue and serve upon him findings as to the facts and conclusion and an order to cease and desist from the violations of law charged in the complaint, and the Commission having made its findings as to the facts and conclusion that said respondent has violated the provisions of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

It is ordered, That the respondent, Charles Elisco, individually, and trading as Maywood Candy Company, his agents, representatives, and employees, in the sale, offering for sale, and distribution in interstate commerce of candy, do cease and desist from:

(1) Selling and distributing to jobbers and wholesale dealers for resale to retail dealers, and to retail dealers direct, candy so packed and assembled that sales of such candy to the general public are to be made, or may be made, by means of a lottery, gaming device, or gift enterprise.

(2) Supplying to or placing in the hands of wholesale dealers and jobbers and retail dealers packages or assortments of candy which are used, or which may be used, without alteration or rearrangement of the contents of such packages or assortments, to conduct a lottery, gaming device, or gift enterprise in the sale or distribution of the candy contained in said assortments to the public.

(3) Packing or assembling in the same assortment of candy for sale to the public at retail small packages of candy of uniform appearance, a few of which small packages of candy have concealed within them a one cent coin in addition to the candy contained in said small packages.

It is further ordered, That the respondent, Charles Elisco, individually, and trading as Maywood Candy Company, shall, within 30 days after service upon him of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which he has complied with this order.

RITTENHOUSE CANDY COMPANY

COMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION
OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 20, 1914

Docket 2071. Complaint, May 15, 1936¹—Decision, Dec. 19, 1936

Where two partners engaged in manufacture and sale of "straight" goods candy and of so-called "break and take," "draw," or "deal" assortments, one of the principal trade demands for which comes from the small retailers with stores, in many instances, near schools and patronized by the school children, and sale and distribution of which, or of candy carrying with sale thereof to public opportunity of obtaining a prize or becoming a winner by lot or chance, teaches and encourages gambling among children, largest class by far of purchasers and consumers of such type of candy, who buy same in preference to so-called "straight" candy when displayed side by side by reason of lottery or gambling feature connected with former, and selling of which in the market of the other, i. e., the "straight" goods sold exclusively by many manufacturers, has been followed by a marked decrease in sales of such "straight" candy, due to gambling or lottery feature connected with so-called "break and take," "draw," or "deal" merchandise—

Sold, to wholesalers and jobbers, assortments which were so packed and assembled as to involve use of a lottery scheme when sold and distributed to the consumers thereof and the consuming public in grocery stores, candy stores, drug stores, stores in vicinity of schools selling candy, and in practically all retail outlets where such product is sold, and which consisted of a number of penny pieces of candy of uniform size, shape, and quality, together with a small number of larger pieces of candy, a small number of one-cent coins inserted in an aluminum "lucky piece," and a punch board, for sale and distribution to purchasers under a plan by which penny purchasers secured one of said small uniform pieces only, or, additionally, one of the larger pieces, or a one-cent coin in the "lucky piece," in accordance with the particular number punched and procured by chance, as set forth on board's explanatory legend; so assembled and packed that such assortments were and might be sold by retailers to purchasing public, and with knowledge and intent that such assortments might be thus sold, as hereinbefore set forth, without alterations, addition, or rearrangement, to public by lot or chance by aforesaid retail dealers, in violation of public policy and in competition with many who regard such methods of sale and distribution as morally bad and as encouraging gambling and especially among children, as injurious to the industry through resulting in the merchandising of a chance or lottery instead of candy, and as providing retail merchants with the means of violating the laws of the several

Whereas, the Federal Trade Commission did heretofore, to wit on October 24, 1932, issue its complaint herein charging and alleging that respondents herein are and have been guilty of unfair methods of competition in interstate commerce within the meaning and intent of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914, and

Whereas, this Commission having reason to believe that respondents herein have been and are using unfair methods of competition in commerce as "commerce" is defined in said act, other than and in addition to those in relation to which the Commission issued its complaint as aforesaid, and it appearing to said Commission that a further proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest:

Now, therefore, acting in the public interest, pursuant to the provisions of the act of September 26, 1914, aforesaid, the Federal Trade Commission charges that Sol Block & Sidney Blumenthal, individually and as copartners trading under the name and style of Rittenhouse Candy Company, have been and now are using unfair methods of competition in commerce as "commerce" is defined in said act, and states its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. The respondents are copartners trading under the name and style of Rittenhouse Candy Company, with their principal office and place of business located at Worth and Herbert Streets, in the city of Philadelphia, State of Pennsylvania. Respondents are engaged in the manufacture, sale, and distribution of candy and in the sale and distribution of candy specialties and punch board devices for use in the sale of their candy products. Respondents sell their products to wholesale dealers and jobbers and to retail dealers located at points in the various States of the United States, and cause said products when so sold to be transported from their said principal place of business in the city of Philadelphia, in the State of Pennsylvania, to purchasers thereof in other States of the United States at their respective places of business; and there is now, and has been for several years last past, a course of trade and commerce by said respondents in such candy between and among the States of the United States. In the course and conduct of their said business, respondents are in competition with other individuals, partnerships, and corporations engaged in the manufacture of candy and in the sale and distribution thereof in commerce between and among the various States of the United States.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of their business, as described in paragraph 1 hereof, respondents sell and have sold to wholesale and retail dealers, various packages or assortments of candy, so packed and assembled as to involve the use of a lottery scheme when sold and distributed to the consumers thereof.

One of said assortments is composed of a number of pieces of candy of uniform size, shape, and quality, a smaller number of larger pieces of candy, some penny coins, and an article of merchandise, together with a device commonly called a punchboard. The candy and article of merchandise contained in said assortment are distributed to purchasers of punches from said punchboard in the following manner: Punches from said board are 1¢ each, and when a punch is made a number is disclosed. There are as many separate numbers as there are punches on said board. The board bears statements or legends informing the prospective purchaser as to which numbers entitle him to receive a small piece of candy, and which numbers entitle him to receive a penny and a larger piece of candy. All purchasers of punches from said board receive a piece of candy, but certain punches, namely those disclosing a number specified in the legend, entitle the purchaser to a penny and a larger piece of candy. The purchaser of the last punch on the board receives a small piece of candy and the article of merchandise. The numbers on said punchboard are effectively concealed from purchasers or prospective purchasers until a punch has been made and the particular number separated from the punchboard. The additional article of merchandise, penny coins and larger pieces of candy contained in said assortment are thus distributed to purchasers of punches from said punchboards wholly by lot or chance.

PAR. 3. The wholesale dealers and jobbers, to whom respondents sell their assortment, resell said assortment to retail dealers, and said retail dealers, and the retail dealers to whom respondents sell direct, expose said assortment for sale and sell said candy to the purchasing public in accordance with the aforesaid sales plan. Respondents thus supply to and place in the hands of others the means of conducting lotteries in the sale of their product in accordance with the sales plan hereinabove set forth, and with the capacity and tendency of inducing purchasers thereof to purchase respondents' said product in preference to candy offered for sale and sold by their competitors.

PAR. 4. The sale of said candy to the purchasing public in the manner above alleged involves a game of chance or the sale of a chance to procure penny coins, larger pieces of candy, or an article of merchandise.

The use by respondents of said method in the sale of candy, and the sale of candy by and through the use thereof and by the aid of said method, is a practice of the sort which the common law and criminal statutes have long deemed contrary to public policy; and is contrary to an established public policy of the Government of the United States. The use by respondents of said method has the dangerous tendency unduly to hinder competition or create monopoly in this, to wit: that the use thereof has the tendency and capacity to exclude from the branch of the candy trade involved in this proceeding competitors who do not adopt and use the same method or an equivalent or similar method involving the same or an equivalent or similar element of chance or lottery scheme.

Many persons, firms and corporations who make and sell candy in competition with the respondents, as above alleged, are unwilling to offer for sale or sell candy so packed and assembled as above alleged, or otherwise arranged and packed for sale to the purchasing public so as to involve a game of chance, and such competitors refrain therefrom.

PAR. 5. Many dealers in and ultimate purchasers of candy are attracted by respondents' said method and manner of packing said candy, and by the element of chance involved in the sale thereof in the manner above described, and are thereby induced to purchase said candy so packed and sold by respondents, in preference to candy offered for sale and sold by said competitors of respondents who do not use the same or equivalent methods. The use of said method by respondents has the tendency and capacity, because of said game of chance, to divert to respondents trade and custom from their said competitors who do not use the same or an equivalent method; to exclude from said candy trade all competitors who are unwilling to and who do not use the same or an equivalent method because the same is unlawful; to lessen competition in said candy trade, and to tend to create a monopoly of said candy trade in respondents and such other distributors of candy as use the same or an equivalent method, and to deprive the purchasing public of the benefit of free competition in said candy trade. The use of said method by the respondents has the tendency and capacity to eliminate from said candy trade all actual competitors, and to exclude therefrom all potential competitors, who do not adopt and use said method or an equivalent method.

PAR. 6. Many of said competitors of respondents are unwilling to adopt and use said method or any method involving a game of chance or the sale of a chance to win something by chance or any other method that is contrary to public policy.

PAR. 7. The aforementioned method, acts, and practices of the respondents are all to the prejudice of the public and of respondents' competitors, as hereinabove alleged. Said method, acts and practices constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914.

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, on October 24, 1932, issued and served a complaint upon the respondents, Sol Block and Sidney Blumenthal, individually and as copartners trading under the name and style of Rittenhouse Candy Company, charging that the respondents had been and were using unfair methods of competition in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in said act of Congress. Thereafter on May 15, 1936, the Commission issued and served its amended and supplemental complaint on the respondents, charging them with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce other than and in addition to those in relation to which the Commission issued its complaint on October 24, 1932, as aforesaid. No answer was filed by respondents; nevertheless hearings were had and testimony and other evidence in support of the said complaint were introduced by Henry C. Lank and P. C. Kolinski, attorneys for the Commission, before Miles J. Furnas, an examiner of the Commission theretofore duly designated by it, and said testimony and other evidence were duly recorded and filed in the office of the Commission. No testimony or other evidence was introduced or offered by respondents.

Thereafter the proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on the said amended and supplemental complaint, testimony and other evidence in support of the allegations of said complaint, the respondents having offered no testimony or other evidence in opposition thereto; and the Commission, having duly considered the matter and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondents are individuals trading as a partnership under the firm name and style of Rittenhouse Candy Company, having their principal office and place of business at Worth and Herbert Streets in the city of Philadelphia, State of Pennsylvania. They are now, and for several years last past have been, engaged in the manufacture of candies and in the sale and distribution thereof to wholesale dealers and jobbers located at points in the various States of the United States, and cause their said products, when so sold, to be transported from their principal place of business in the State of Pennsylvania to purchasers thereof in other States of the United States at their respective places of business, and there is now and has been for several years last past a course of trade and commerce by said respondents in such candy between and among the States of the United States. In the course and conduct of such business, respondents are in competition with other partnerships and with corporations and individuals engaged in the manufacture of candy and in the sale and distribution thereof in commerce between and among the various States of the United States.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of their business, as described in paragraph 1 hereof, respondents sell and have sold to wholesale dealers and jobbers various packages or assortments of candy so packed and assembled as to involve the use of a lottery scheme when sold and distributed to the consumers thereof.

One of said assortments is composed of a number of pieces of candy of uniform size, shape, and quality, a small number of larger pieces of candy, and a small number of one cent coins inserted in an aluminum "lucky piece," together with a device commonly called a punchboard. The candy and the one cent coins inserted in the lucky pieces are distributed to purchasers of punches from said punchboard in the following manner: Punches from said board are 1¢ each, and when a punch is made a number is disclosed. There are as many separate numbers as there are punches on said board. The punch-board bears statements or legends informing customers and prospective customers as to which numbers entitle them to receive a small piece of candy, which numbers entitle them to receive a small piece of candy and one of the larger pieces of candy, and which numbers entitle them to receive the one cent coin in the lucky piece and a small piece of candy. All purchasers of punches from said board receive one of the small pieces of candy, but certain punches, namely, those disclosing a number specified in the legends, entitle the purchaser to a larger piece of candy or a one cent coin inserted in the lucky piece in addition to the small piece of candy. The numbers on said punch-board are effectively concealed from purchasers and prospective purchasers until a punch or selection has been made and the particular number separated from the board. The larger pieces of candy and the one cent coins inserted in the lucky piece are thus distributed to purchasers of punches from said punchboard wholly by lot or chance.

PAR. 3. The lottery or prize assortment, as described in paragraph 2 hereof, is generally referred to in the candy industry as "break and take," "draw," or "deal" assortment, and packages or assortments of candy without any gaming device or lottery feature in connection with their resale to the public are generally referred to in the candy industry as "straight" goods. These terms will be used hereafter in these findings to describe these respective types of candy.

PAR. 4. Numerous retail dealers purchase the assortment described in paragraph 2 above from wholesale dealers or jobbers who in turn have purchased said assortment from respondents, and such retail dealers display said packages or assortments for sale to the public as packed by the respondents, and the candy contained in said assortments is sold and distributed to the consuming public in the manner described.

PAR. 5. All sales made by respondents are absolute sales and respondents retain no control in any manner over the goods, after they are delivered to the wholesale dealer or jobber. The assortments are assembled and packed in such manner that they are sold, and may be sold, by retail dealers to the purchasing public in the manner described.

The respondents have knowledge that said assortments will be resold to the purchasing public by retail dealers by lot or chance, and they pack and assemble such candy in the way and manner described so that, without alteration, addition or rearrangement, it may be resold to the public by lot or chance by said retail dealers.

PAR. 6. The sale and distribution of candy by retail dealers by the method described in paragraph 2 hereof is a sale and distribution of candy by lot or chance and constitutes a lottery or gaming device.

Respondents' candy is sold to the consuming public in grocery stores, candy stores, drug stores, stores in the vicinity of schools selling candy, and in practically all retail outlets where candy is sold.

Competitors of respondents appeared as witnesses in this proceeding and testified, and the Commission finds as a fact, that many competitors regard such methods of sale and distribution as morally bad and as encouraging gambling, especially among children; as injurious to the candy industry because it results in the merchandising of a chance or lottery instead of candy; and as providing retail merchants with the means of violating the laws of the several States. Because of these reasons some competitors of respondents refuse to sell candy so packed and assembled that it can be resold to the public by lot or chance. These competitors are thereby put to a disadvantage in competing. Certain retailers who find that they can dispose of more candy by the "break and take" or "draw" methods buy respondents' products and the products of others employing the same methods of sale, and thereby trade is diverted to respondents and others using similar methods from said competitors. Said competitors can compete on even terms only by giving the same or similar devices to retailers. This they are unwilling to do and their sales of "straight" goods show a continued decrease.

There is a demand for candy which is sold by lot or chance, and in order to meet the competition of manufacturers who sell and distribute candy which is sold by such methods some competitors of respondents have begun the sale and distribution of candy for resale to the public by lot or chance. The use of such methods by respondents in the sale and distribution of their candy is prejudicial and injurious to the public and to respondents' competitors and has resulted in the diversion of trade to respondents from their said competitors and is a restraint upon and a detriment to the freedom of fair and legitimate competition in the candy industry.

PAR. 7. One of the principal demands in the trade for the "break and take" or "draw" or "deal" candy comes from the small retailers. The stores of these small retailers are in many instances located near schools and attract the trade of school children. The consumers or purchasers of the lottery or prize package candy are principally children and because of the lottery or gambling feature connected with the "break and take" or "draw" package and the possibility of becoming a winner, children purchase candy from such packages in preference to the "straight" goods candy, when the two types of assortments are displayed side by side. The sale and distribution of "break and take" or "draw" packages of candy, or of candy which has connected with its sale to the public the means or opportunity of obtaining a prize or becoming a winner by lot or chance, teaches and encourages gambling among children, who comprise by far the largest class of purchasers and consumers of this type of candy.

PAR. 8. There are in the United States many manufacturers of candy who do not manufacture and sell lottery or prize assortments of candy, and who sell their "straight" goods candy in interstate commerce in competition with the "break and take" or "draw" or "deal" candy, and manufacturers of the "straight" goods type of candy have noted a marked decrease in the sales of their products whenever and wherever the lottery or prize candy has appeared in their markets. This decrease in the sales of "straight" goods candy is principally due to the gambling or lottery features connected with the "break and take," "draw," or "deal" candy.

PAR. 9. In addition to the assortment described in paragraph 2 hereof, the respondents manufacture candy which they sell to wholesale dealers and jobbers without any lottery or chance features. The annual volume of respondents' business is approximately $250,000 or $275,000 and while at the time of taking testimony the portion of respondents' business represented by the lottery or prize assortment, as described in paragraph 2 hereof, was comparatively small yet the evidence shows, and the Commission finds, that it has until recently constituted the major portion of respondents' total volume of business.

PAR. 10. The Commission further finds that the sale and distribution in interstate commerce of assortments of candy as described in paragraph 2 hereof are contrary to public policy.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of respondents, Sol Block and Sidney Blumenthal, individually and as copartners trading under the name and style of Rittenhouse Candy Company, are to the prejudice of the public and of respondents' competitors and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

Order

24 F. T. C.

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

This proceeding having been heard by the Federal Trade Commission upon the amended and supplemental complaint of the Commission, the testimony and other evidence in support of the allegations of said complaint taken before Miles J. Furnas, an examiner of the Commission theretofore duly designated by it, the respondents having offered no testimony or other evidence in opposition to the allegations of said complaint, and the Commission having made its findings as to the facts and its conclusion that said respondents have violated the provisions of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

It is ordered, That the respondents, Sol Block and Sidney Blumenthal, individually and as copartners trading under the name and style of Rittenhouse Candy Company, their representatives, agents, and employees, in the offering for sale, sale and distribution in interstate commerce of candy and candy products, do cease and desist from:

(1) Selling and distributing to jobbers and wholesale dealers for resale to retail dealers candy so packed and assembled that sales of such candy to the general public are to be made, or may be made, by means of a lottery, gaming device, or gift enterprise.

(2) Supplying to or placing in the hands of wholesale dealers and jobbers packages or assortments of candy which are used, or which may be used, without alteration or rearrangement of the contents of such package or assortments, to conduct a lottery, gaming device, or gift enterprise in the sale or distribution of the candy or candy products contained in said assortments to the public.

(3) Supplying to or placing in the hands of wholesale dealers and jobbers assortments of candy, together with a device commonly called a punchboard, for use, or which may be used, in distributing said candy to the public at retail.

(4) Furnishing to wholesale dealers and jobbers a device commonly called a punchboard, either with assortments of candy or separately, bearing a legend or legends or statements informing the consuming public that the candy is being sold by lot or chance or in accordance with a sales plan which constitutes a lottery, gaming device, or gift enterprise.

It is further ordered, That the respondents shall, within 30 days after service upon them of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which they have complied with this order.

IN THE MATTER OF

C. G. HYRE, TRADING AS THE PEPSOTALIS COMPANY

COMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION
OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 26, 1914

Docket 2977. Complaint, Nov. 10, 1936—Decision, Dec. 19, 1936

Where an individual engaged in the compounding of a medicinal preparation called "Pepsotalis," and in the sale thereof to the drug trade—

Represented, on the containers thereof and in radio broadcasts, that his said preparation was an intestinal antiseptic and very helpful in cases of indigestion, acidity, and stomach disorders in general, and afforded quick relief in such cases, and had brought relief to countless numbers suffering from stomach trouble, and read and caused to be read purported letters from users thereof in which they were represented as stating that it had cured them or given them permanent relief from different forms of such trouble, notwithstanding fact it was nothing more than an antacid, whose only therapeutic effect was to decrease, temporarily, gastric hyperacidity;

With capacity and tendency to mislead and deceive purchasers into the erroneous and mistaken belief that said product was a competent intestinal antiseptic, and adequate and satisfactory remedy or treatment for indigestion and stomach troubles, and into the purchase thereof by reason of such belief, and with result that trade was unfairly diverted to him from those competitors who do not misrepresent the quality and character or effectiveness of their respective products; to the injury of competition in commerce:

Held, That such acts and practices were to the prejudice of the public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition.

Mr. Robt. N. McMillen for the Commission.

COMPLAINT

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent, C. G. Hyre is now, and has been for more than one year last past, doing business under the name and style of the Pepsotalis Company, with his principal place of business at Morgantown, W. Va. He is and has been engaged in the business of compounding and selling to the drug trade a medicinal preparation called Pepsotalis. Pursuant to such sales, and as a part thereof, respondent ships and has shipped said preparation from his place of business aforesaid through and into various States of the United States to the purchasers thereof.

PAR. 2. On the container in which such medicinal preparation is packed by respondent it is represented that it is an intestinal anti-septic and that it will be found very helpful in cases of indigestion, gas, acidity, belching, heart burn, sour stomach, and stomach disorders in general; that it is a quick relief for indigestion.

For the purpose and with the effect of creating consumer demand for his said preparation and induce the wholesalers and retailers of drugs and remedies to purchase the same for resale to the public, respondent has, in radio broadcasts over various stations, during the year 1936, represented and caused to be represented, in substance, that his said medicinal preparation gives relief in cases of stomach trouble in any form; that it has brought relief to countless numbers suffering from stomach trouble. That during such radio broadcasts he has read and caused to be read what purported to be letters from users of said medicinal preparation, in which they were represented to state that Pepsotalis had cured them, or had given them permanent relief, from different forms of stomach trouble.

PAR. 3. In truth and in fact respondent's said medicinal preparation is nothing more than an antacid and its only therapeutic effect can be and is to decrease temporarily gastric hyperacidity. It is not and cannot be of benefit in any other form of stomach ailment. It is not of benefit in cases of indigestion and is not a corrective in cases of stomach trouble except as an antacid as above alleged.

PAR. 4. There are, and have been at all times hereinabove mentioned, in the United States other persons, partnerships, and corporations engaged in the sale to the drug trade and public of remedies for various stomach ailments and, pursuant to such sales and as a part thereof, in shipping the same to purchasers thereof in States other than the States of the origin of such shipments. With such persons, partnerships, and corporations respondent is and has been in active, substantial competition, and respondent's said misrepresentations have had and have the capacity, tendency, and effect of diverting business to respondent from such competitors, to the substantial injury of said competitors and to the prejudice of the public interest.

PAR. 5. The said misrepresentations made by respondent in the sale of his medicinal preparation, as aforesaid, constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of the Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, on the 10th day of November 1936, issued and served its complaint in this proceeding upon respondent, C. G. Hyre, trading as The Pepsotalis Company, charging him with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of the provisions of said act. On December 5, 1936, the respondent filed his answer in which answer he admitted all the material allegations of the complaint to be true and stated that he waived hearing on the charges set forth in the said complaint and consented that, without further evidence or other intervening procedure, the Commission might issue and serve upon him findings as to the facts and conclusion and an order to cease and desist from the violations of law charged in the complaint. Thereafter, the proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on the said complaint and the answer thereto, and the Commission having duly considered the same, and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public, and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. The respondent, C. G. Hyre is now, and for more than one year last past has been, doing business under the name and style of The Pepsotalis Company, with his principal place of business at Morgantown, W. Va. He is, and has been, engaged in the business of compounding and selling to the drug trade for resale a medicinal preparation called "Pepsotalis." Pursuant to such sales, and as a part thereof, he ships and has shipped said preparation from his place of business at Morgantown to the purchasers thereof located in various States of the United States.

PAR. 2. During all the time respondent has offered for sale and sold his said medicinal preparation there have been in the United States other persons, partnerships, and corporations engaged in the sale, to the drug trade and to the public, of remedies for various stomach ailments, and who, pursuant to such sales and as a part thereof, have shipped the same to purchasers thereof located in various States of the United States other than the States of the origin of such shipments. With these persons, partnerships, and corporations respondent has been and is in active and substantial competition.

Conclusion

24 F. T. C.

PAR. 3. The container in which such medicinal preparation is packed by respondent carries the representation that it is an intestinal antiseptic and that it will be found very helpful in cases of indigestion, gas, acidity, belching, heartburn, sour stomach, and stomach disorders in general, and that it is a quick relief for indigestion.

PAR. 4. For the purpose and with the effect of creating consumer demand for his said preparation and of inducing wholesalers and retailers of drugs and remedies to purchase his said preparation for resale to the public, respondent has, during the year 1936, represented and caused to be represented in radio broadcasts over various broadcasting stations that his said medicinal preparation gives relief in cases of stomach trouble in any form; and that it has brought relief to countless numbers suffering from stomach trouble. As a part of such radio broadcasts he had read and caused to be read, from time to time, what purported to be letters from users of said medicinal preparation in which they were represented to state that "Pepsotalis" had cured them or had given them permanent relief from different forms of stomach trouble.

PAR. 5. Respondent's medicinal preparation is nothing more than an antacid whose only therapeutic effect is to decrease, temporarily, gastric hyperacidity. It cannot be a corrective to any extent except to reduce, temporarily, gastric hyperacidity.

PAR. 6. The acts and practices of the respondent in falsely representing that said product "Pepsotalis" is a competent intestinal antiseptic and that it constitutes an adequate treatment in cases of indigestion and stomach disorders in general have had, and now have, the capacity and tendency to mislead and deceive the purchasers into the erroneous and mistaken belief that said product is a competent intestinal antiseptic and is an adequate and satisfactory remedy or treatment for indigestion and stomach disorders, and into the purchase of respondent's said product on account of such belief. As a result thereof, trade has been unfairly diverted to the respondent from those competitors who do not misrepresent the quality and character or effectiveness of their respective products. In consequence thereof, injury has been done by the respondent to competition in commerce among and between the various States of the United States.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondent, C. G. Hyre, are to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce, within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

This proceeding having been heard by the Federal Trade Commission upon the complaint of the Commission and the answer filed herein on December 5, 1936, by respondent admitting all the material allegations of the complaint to be true and waiving the taking of further evidence and all other intervening procedure, and the Commission having made its findings as to the facts and its conclusion that said respondent has violated the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

It is ordered, That the respondent, C. G. Hyre, his representatives, agents, and employees, in connection with the offering for sale, sale, and distribution of a medicinal preparation designated by respondent as "Pepsotalis," or any other product of substantially the same composition and ingredients, or having the same therapeutic properties, in interstate commerce or in the District of Columbia, do forthwith cease and desist from representing, directly or indirectly, either in the form of assertions by himself or by repeating the words or statements, or what purport to be the words or statements, of others:

1. That said preparation is an intestinal antiseptic;
2. That said product constitutes a relief for indigestion;
3. That the use of said product will be beneficial in cases of stomach disorders in general;
4. That said product will bring relief or has brought relief to sufferers from stomach trouble;
5. That said product possesses any therapeutic qualities which beneficially affect any maladies or conditions of the human body except a temporary reduction of gastric hyperacidity.

It is further ordered, That the respondent shall, within 60 days after service upon him of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which he has complied with this order.

IN THE MATTER OF

D. GOLDENBERG, INC., AND FRANK RABINOWITZ, TRADING AS NOVELTY SWEETS COMPANY.¹

Docket 2808. Complaint, May 16, 1936—Decision, Dec. 21, 1936

Where an individual engaged in purchase of various types of candies and in assembling thereof into assortments which involved a lottery or chance feature when sold and distributed to ultimate consumers, and which consisted of a number of penny pieces of chocolate-covered candy of uniform size and shape, some of the enclosed concealed centers of which had colors differing from color of the majority thereof, and chance selection of which entitled recipient to certain larger pieces of candy and other articles of merchandise included therewith—

Sold said assortments to wholesalers, jobbers, and retailers, together with explanatory display cards for retailers' use, so assembled and packed that they might be and were displayed and sold by retail dealers to the consuming and purchasing public as hereinbefore described, and with knowledge and intent that, without alteration, addition or rearrangement, they might thus be resold to public by lot or chance by such retail dealers, and through use of such a lottery or gaming device, in violation of public policy:

Held, That such practices were to the prejudice of the public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition.

Before Mr. Miles J. Furnas, trial examiner.

Mr. Henry C. Lank and Mr. P. C. Kolinski for the Commission.

Mr. Alfred M. Roth and Mr. Isaac Ash, of Philadelphia, Pa., for D. Goldenberg, Inc.

Mr. Lester L. Dolfman, of Philadelphia, Pa., for Frank Rabinowitz.

COMPLAINT

¹ Dismissed as to D. Goldenberg, Inc.

PARAGRAPH 1. D. Goldenberg, Inc., is a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Pennsylvania, with its principal office and place of business located at I and Ontario Streets in the city of Philadelphia, State of Pennsylvania. The respondent, Frank Rabinowitz, is an individual, with his principal office and place of business located at 2019 East Arizona Street, in the city of Philadelphia, State of Pennsylvania. The above-named respondents are engaged in business at 2019 East Arizona Street, in the city of Philadelphia, State of Pennsylvania, and are doing business under the trade name of Novelty Sweets Company. They are now, and for some time last past have been, engaged in the sale and distribution of candy to wholesale dealers, jobbers, and retail dealers located at points in the various States of the United States, and cause and have caused their products when so sold to be transported from their place of business in the city of Philadelphia, Pa., to purchasers thereof in other States of the United States at their respective places of business; and there is now and has been for some time last past a course of trade and commerce by said respondents in such candy between and among the States of the United States. In the course and conduct of said business, respondents are in competition with other corporations, partnerships, and individuals engaged in the manufacture of candy and in the sale and distribution thereof in commerce between and among the various States of the United States.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of their business, as described in paragraph 1 hereof, respondents sell and have sold to wholesale and retail dealers packages or assortments of candy so packed and assembled as to involve the use of a lottery scheme when sold and distributed to the consumers thereof. The following detailed description of certain of said packages or assortments is not an all inclusive list of the packages sold and distributed by respondents, but illustrates the sales plan involved in the several assortments sold and distributed by respondents.

One of said assortments consists of a number of pieces of chocolate coated candy of uniform size and shape, together with a number of larger pieces of candy and other articles of merchandise, which larger pieces of candy and other articles of merchandise are to be given as prizes to purchasers of said pieces of candy of uniform size and shape, in the following manner: The majority of the said pieces of candy of uniform size and shape have centers of the same color, but a small number of said pieces of candy have centers of a different color, and a still smaller number of said pieces of candy have centers of a still different color. The said pieces of candy of uniform size and shape in said assortment retail at the price of 1¢ each, but the purchaser who procures one of said candies colored differently from the majority is entitled to receive and is to be given free of charge one of the said larger pieces of candy, or one of the other articles of merchandise heretofore referred to. The purchaser of the last piece of candy of uniform size and shape in said assortment is entitled to receive and is to be given free of charge one of the said other articles of merchandise. The color of the centers of said pieces of candy of uniform size and shape is effectively concealed from the purchasers and prospective purchasers until a selection has been made and the piece of candy broken open. The aforesaid purchasers of said candies, who procure a candy having a center colored differently from the majority of said pieces of candy of uniform size and shape in said assortment, thus procure one of the said larger pieces of candy or one of the other articles of merchandise wholly by lot or chance.

The respondents sell and distribute several variations of the above assortment, but all involving the same principle or sales plan. Some of the assortments which respondents sell by the above sales plan are named and designated: "Bullseye," "Knockout Punch," "Movies," "Pen and Pencil," "Harmony," "Easy Sailing," "Champion," "Good Scout," "Rainbow Eggs."

Respondents also furnish with certain of said assortments a display card to be used by the retailer in offering said assortments to the consuming public.

PAR. 3. The wholesale dealers and jobbers, to whom respondents sell their assortments, resell the same to retail dealers, and said retail dealers and the retail dealers to whom respondents sell direct expose said assortments for sale and sell the same to the purchasing public in accordance with the aforesaid sales plan. Respondents thus supply to and place in the hands of others the means of conducting lotteries in the sale of its product in accordance with the sales plan hereinabove set forth, and said sales plan has the capacity and tendency of inducing purchasers thereof to purchase respondents, said product in preference to candy offered for sale and sold by their competitors.

PAR. 4. The sale of said candy to the purchasing public, in the manner above alleged, involves a game of chance or the sale of a chance to procure larger pieces of candy or other articles of merchandise.

The use by respondents of said method in the sale of candy, and the sale of candy by and through the use thereof and by the aid of said method, is a practice of the sort which the common law and criminal statutes have long deemed contrary to public policy; and is contrary to an established public policy of the Government of the United States. The use by respondents of said method has the dangerous tendency unduly to hinder competition or create monopoly in this, to wit: that the use thereof has the tendency and capacity to exclude from the branch of the candy trade involved in this proceeding competitors who do not adopt and use the same method or an equivalent or similar element of chance or lottery scheme.

Many persons, firms, and corporations who make and sell candy in competition with the respondents, as above alleged, are unwilling to offer for sale or sell candy so packed and assembled as above alleged, or otherwise arranged and packed for sale to the purchasing public so as to involve a game of chance, and such competitors refrain therefrom.

PAR. 5. Many dealers in and ultimate purchasers of candy are attracted by respondents' said method and manner of packing said candy, and by the element of chance involved in the sale thereof in the manner above described, and are thereby induced to purchase said candy so packed and sold by respondents, in preference to candy offered for sale and sold by said competitors of respondents who do not use the same or equivalent methods. The use of said method by respondents has the tendency and capacity, because of said game of chance, to divert to respondents trade and custom from their said competitors who do not use the same or an equivalent method; to exclude from said candy trade all competitors who are unwilling to and who do not use the same or an equivalent method because the same is unlawful; to lessen competition in said candy trade, and to tend to create a monopoly of said candy trade in respondents and such other distributors of candy as use the same or an equivalent method, and to deprive the purchasing public of the benefit of free competition in said candy trade. The use of said method by the respondents has the tendency and capacity to eliminate from said candy trade all actual competitors, and to exclude therefrom all potential competitors, who do not adopt and use said method or an equivalent method.

PAR. 6. Many of said competitors of respondents are unwilling to adopt and use said method or any method involving a game of chance or the sale of a chance to win something by chance or any other method that is contrary to public policy.

PAR. 7. The aforementioned method, acts and practices of the respondent are all to the prejudice of the public and of respondents' competitors as hereinabove alleged. Said method, acts, and practices constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914.

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, on May 16, 1936, issued and served a complaint upon the respondents, D. Goldenberg, Inc., a corporation, and Frank Rabinowitz, an individual, trading as Novelty Sweets Company, charging that the respondents had been and were using unfair methods of competition in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in said act of Congress. Respondent, D. Goldenberg, Inc., was represented by Isaac Ash, Esq., and Alfred M. Roth, Esq., and filed answer dated June 1, 1936, denying the material allegations of the complaint. Respondent, Frank Rabinowitz, was represented by Lester L. Dolfman, Esq., and subsequent to the hearings herein filed answer dated December 15, 1936, admitting all the material allegations of the complaint except those which the said respondent denied when he was called as a witness in this matter on July 7, 1936. Hearings were held and testimony and other evidence were introduced by Henry C. Lank and P. C. Kolinski attorneys for the Commission, before Miles J. Furnas, an examiner of the Commission theretofore duly designated by it. Said testimony and other evidence were duly recorded and filed in the office of the Commission.

Thereafter the proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on said complaint, the answers thereto, testimony and other evidence in support thereof and on the brief of counsel for the Commission respondents through their counsel having advised that they did not desire to file brief nor to present oral argument; and the Commission, having duly considered the matter and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent, D. Goldenberg, Inc., is a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Pennsylvania, with its principal office and place of business located at I and Ontario Streets, Philadelphia, Pa., and is and has been for several years last past engaged in the manufacture, sale, and distribution of candy and candy products to wholesale dealers and jobbers located at points in the various States in the eastern part of the United States, and has caused such products, when so sold, to be transported from its principal place of business in the State of Pennsylvania to the purchasers thereof at their respective points of location.

Respondent, Frank Rabinowitz, is an individual with his place of business located at 2019 East Arizona Street, Philadelphia, Pa., and has been engaged in the sale and distribution of candy and candy products to wholesale dealers, jobbers, and retail dealers located at points in the various States of the eastern part of the United States, and has caused such products, when so sold, to be transported from his principal place of business to the purchasers thereof at their respective points of location.

PAR. 2. Respondent, Frank Rabinowitz, was called as a witness by counsel for the Commission and testified, and the Commission finds, that he is an individual and was doing business under the trade name Novelty Sweets Company; that he began such business on or about November 15, 1935, purchasing various types of candies from the respondent, D. Goldenberg, Inc., and assembling such candies into assortments; and that he sold and distributed such assortments to wholesale dealers, jobbers, and retail dealers in the State of Pennsylvania and in the several States of the United States bordering on or surrounding the State of Pennsylvania.

The respondent, Frank Rabinowitz, trading as Novelty Sweets Company, before reselling said candy, assembled the same into assortments involving a lottery or chance feature when sold and distributed to the ultimate consumers thereof, as follows: Said assortments consisted of a number of pieces of chocolate covered candy of uniform size and shape, together with a number of larger pieces of candy and other articles of merchandise. The majority of the said pieces of candy of uniform size and shape had centers of the same color, but a small number of said pieces of candy had centers of a different color, and a still smaller number of said pieces of candy had centers of a still different color. The said pieces of candy of uniform size and shape in said assortments retailed at the price of 1¢ each, but the purchaser who procured one of the said candies colored differently from the majority was entitled to receive, and was to be given free of charge, one of the said larger pieces of candy or one of the other articles of merchandise heretofore referred to. The purchaser of the last piece of candy of uniform size and shape in said assortments was entitled to receive, and was to be given free of charge, one of the said other articles of merchandise. The color of the centers of the said pieces of candy of uniform size and shape was effectively concealed from purchasers and prospective purchasers until a selection had been made and the piece of candy broken open. The aforesaid purchasers of said candies, who procured a candy having a center colored differently from the majority of said pieces of candy of uniform size and shape in said assortments, thus procured one of the said larger pieces of candy or one of the other articles of merchandise wholly by lot or chance.

The respondent, Frank Rabinowitz, assembled, sold and distributed several variations of the above assortment but all involving the same principle or sales plan. Some of the assortments which the respondent, Frank Rabinowitz, sold and distributed, and which involved the above described sales plan, were named and designated: "Bull's Eye," "Knockout Punch," "Movies," "Pen and Pencil," "Harmony," "Easy Sailing," "Champion," "Good Scout," and "Rainbow Eggs."

Respondent, Frank Rabinowitz, also included and furnished with certain of said assortments a display card to be used by the retail dealer in offering said assortments to the consuming public, which display cards bore legends or statements informing the consuming public that the said assortments were being sold and distributed in accordance with the above sales plan.

PAR. 3. The lottery or prize assortments, as described in paragraph 2 above, are generally referred to in the candy industry as "break and take" assortments, and assortments of candy without any gaming device or lottery features in connection with their resale to the public are generally referred to in the candy trade or industry as "straight" goods. These terms will be used hereafter in these findings to describe these respective types of candy.

PAR. 4. Numerous retail dealers purchased the assortments described in paragraph 2 above direct from the respondent, Frank Rabinowitz, or from wholesale dealers or jobbers who in turn had purchased said assortments from respondent, Frank Rabinowitz, and such retail dealers displayed said packages for sale to the public as packed by said respondent, and the candy contained in said assortments were sold and distributed to the consuming public in the manner described.

PAR. 5. All sales made by respondent, Frank Rabinowitz, whether to wholesale dealers and jobbers or to retail dealers, were absolute sales and said respondent retained no control in any manner over the goods after they were delivered to the wholesale dealer or jobber or retail dealer. The assortments, as described in paragraph 2 hereof, were assembled and packed in such a manner that they might be sold by retail dealers to the purchasing public in the manner described.

The respondent, Frank Rabinowitz, had knowledge that said assortments would be resold to the purchasing public by retail dealers by lot or chance, and he packed and assembled such candy in the way and manner described so that, without alteration, addition or rearrangement, they might be resold to the public by lot or chance by said retail dealers.

PAR. 6. The sale and distribution of candy by retail dealers by the methods described in paragraph 2 above is a sale and distribution of candy by lot or chance and constitutes a lottery or gaming device.

PAR. 7. The respondent, Frank Rabinowitz, when called as a witness denied that the business conducted by him under the trade name Novelty Sweets Company was in any way a partnership or joint enterprise with the respondent, D. Goldenberg, Inc., but stated that the said business was his business exclusively, and he did not deny any of the facts hereinabove set forth.

PAR. 8. The Commission further finds that the sale and distribution in interstate commerce of assortments of candy, as described in paragraph 2 hereof, are contrary to public policy.

PAR. 9. The respondent, Frank Rabinowitz, commenced business as described in paragraph 1 hereof, on or about November 15, 1935, and, according to his testimony, discontinued said business on or about June 15, 1936, said discontinuance being subsequent to the issuance of the complaint herein but prior to the date when hearings were held. The Commission further finds that the use of the trade name or style, Novelty Sweets Company, was used by respondent, Frank Rabinowitz, and was not a trade name or style also adopted by respondent, D. Goldenberg, Inc.

PAR. 10. The testimony is to the effect, and the Commission finds, that for several years last past the respondent, D. Goldenberg, Inc., has not manufactured and distributed, in its own name and right or by any trade name or style, any candy assortments involving the lottery or chance feature and described in these finds as "break and take" assortments; said testimony is further to the effect, and the Commission finds, that the respondent, D. Goldenberg, Inc., has packed and sold all of its candy products as "straight" merchandise. The Commission further finds that the evidence adduced fails to support the allegation of the complaint that the business carried on under the trade name, Novelty Sweets Company, was a joint enterprise of D. Goldenberg, Inc., a corporation, and Frank Rabinowitz, an individual; and finds that the business carried on under the trade name, Novelty Sweets Company, was the exclusive business of the respondent, Frank Rabinowitz.

Order

24 F. T. C.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid practices of the said respondent, Frank Rabinowitz, individually, and trading as Novelty Sweets Company, are to the prejudice of the public and respondent's competitors and are unfair methods of competition in interstate commerce and constitute a violation of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST, ETC.

It is ordered, That the complaint issued herein be and the same hereby is dismissed as to the respondent, D. Goldenberg, Inc., for the reason that the evidence fails to establish the allegations of the complaint as to said respondent.

It is further ordered, That the respondent, Frank Rabinowitz, individually, and trading as Novelty Sweets Company, his agents, representatives, and employees, in the offering for sale, sale, and distribution in interstate commerce of candy and candy products, do cease and desist from:

1. Selling and distributing to retail dealers, and to jobbers and wholesale dealers for resale to retail dealers, candy so packed and assembled that sales of such candy to the general public are to be made, or may be made, by means of a lottery, gaming device, or gift enterprise.

2. Supplying to or placing in the hands of retail dealers and wholesale dealers and jobbers assortments of candy which are used, or which may be used, without alteration or rearrangement of the contents of such packages or assortments, to conduct a lottery, gaming device, or gift enterprise in the sale or distribution of candy or candy products contained in said assortments to the public.

3. Packing or assembling in the same package or assortment of candy for sale to the public at retail pieces of candy of uniform size and shape but having centers of different colors, together with larger pieces of candy or other articles of merchandise, which said larger pieces of candy or other articles of merchandise are to be given as prizes to the purchaser procuring a piece of candy of a particular color.

4. Furnishing to retail dealers and wholesale dealers and jobbers display cards, either with assortments of candy or separately, bearing a legend or legends or statements informing the purchaser that the candy is being sold to the public by lot or chance, or in accordance with a sales plan which constitutes a lottery, gaming device, or gift enterprise.

And it is further ordered, That the respondent Frank Rabinowitz, individually, and trading as Novelty Sweets Company, shall, within 30 days after the service upon him of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which he has complied with this order.

Docket 2949. Complaint, Oct. 16, 1936—Decision, Dec. 21, 1936

Where a corporation engaged, as rectifier and wholesaler of distilled spirits, in purchasing and bottling whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages, including product by it branded as "Prescription Whiskey," and in making gin with a still which it used therefor by redistillation of purchased alcohol, not produced by it, over juniper berries and other aromatics, and in selling its aforesaid various products in trade and commerce among the various States and in the District of Columbia, in substantial competition with those engaged in manufacture by true distillation of whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages from mash, wort, or wash, and in sale thereof as aforesaid, and with those engaged in purchasing, rectifying, blending, and bottling such various beverages and in similarly selling same, and including among said competitors those who, as manufacturers and distillers from mash, wort, or wash of whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages sold by them, truthfully use words "distillery," "distilleries," "distillers," or "distilling" as a part of their corporate or trade names and on their stationery, advertising, and labels of the bottles in which they sell and ship such products, and those who, engaged in purchasing, rectifying, blending, and bottling such various products, do not use aforesaid words as above set forth, and also with those who do not misrepresent the strength, quality, or purity of their whiskies nor that such products are specially produced for medicinal use—

- (a) Represented, through use of word "Distilleries" in its corporate name, printed on its stationery and on the labels attached to the bottles in which it sold and shipped its said products, and in various other ways to its customers, and furnished the same with the means of representing to their vendees, both retailers and ultimate consuming public, that whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages contained in such bottles were by it made through process of distillation from mash, wort, or wash, notwithstanding fact it did not distill such various beverages thus bottled, labeled, sold, and transported by it, and did not own, operate, or control any place where alcoholic liquors are made by original and continuous distillation from mash, wort, or wash through continuous closed pipes and vessels until manufacture thereof is complete, as long definitely understood in trade and by ultimate purchasing public from word "distillery," and was not a distiller, for the purchase of the bottled products of which there is a preference on the part of a substantial portion of the purchasing public; and
- (b) Represented and implied, by various references to its "Prescription" Brand whiskey and to physicians, hospitals, and nurses and the United States Pharmacopoeia, in advertising booklets attached to each bottle, that its aforesaid whiskey conformed to the requirements thereof or was of a kind, nature, and quality superior to the standard of whiskey specified therein for medicinal use, and that it had been endorsed by the medical profession generally and was a superior brand of such product, specially distilled and prepared for distribution for medicinal use, through such statements, among others, as that its said "Prescription" Brand was "prepared for nurses, hospitals, and physicians," and through statements stressing purity and requirements of the physician, compliance with the Food and Drug Act, specifications of the Pharmacopoeia, potability, uniformity, etc., "the purest money can buy," etc., notwithstanding fact that content of said product in esters did not meet specifications of the Pharmacopoeia, had not been aged for four years or more in the wood, as required thereby, but, on the contrary, was made from new beverage whiskey treated in charred wood containers under a certain process for about five days only, prior to bottling for sale, and in no wise conformed to the standards of strength, quality or purity of so-called medicinal whiskey, and in various other ways was not the kind or quality of said product represented by it, and was adulterated and inferior to the standards referred to;

With effect of misleading and deceiving dealers and purchasing public into the beliefs that the whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages sold by it were by it made and distilled from mash, wort, or wash by one continuous process, and that its aforesaid "Prescription" Brand whiskey was of the strength, quality, and purity specified by the Pharmacopoeia for medicinal whiskey, and of inducing dealers and purchasing public, acting in such beliefs, to buy its said whiskies, etc., rectified and bottled by it, and of thereby diverting trade to it from its competitors who do not, by their corporate or trade name or in any other manner, misrepresent that they are manufacturers by distillation from mash, wort, or wash of whiskies, gins, or other such beverages, or misrepresent the strength, quality, or purity of their whiskies; to the substantial injury of substantial competition in commerce:

Held, That such acts and practices were to the prejudice of the public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition.

Mr. PGad B. Morehouse for the Commission.

Miller, Elliott & Westervelt, of Peoria, Ill., for respondent.

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that Fort Clark Distilleries, Inc., a corporation, hereinafter referred to as respondent, has been and is using unfair methods of competition in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in said act, and it appearing to the said Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent is a corporation organized, existing, and doing business under the laws of the State of Illinois, with its office and principal place of business at 915 Forsythe Street, in the city of Peoria, in said State. It is now, and since the 24th day of June 1935, has been, engaged in the business of manufacturing and bottling whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages, including a product by it branded as "Prescription" Whiskey, in a rectifying plant under a rectifier's permit, and in the sale thereof and constant course of trade in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

In the course and conduct of its said business, respondent causes its said products, when sold, to be transported from its place of business aforesaid into and through the various States of the United States to the purchasers thereof, consisting of wholesalers and retailers located in States of the United States other than the State of Illinois, and in the District of Columbia.

In the course and conduct of its business, as aforesaid, respondent is now, and since the 24th day of June 1935, has been, in substantial competition with other corporations and with individuals, partnerships, and firms engaged in the manufacture by true distillation of whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages from mash, wort, or wash and in the sale thereof in trade and commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia; and in the course and conduct of its business, as aforesaid, respondent is, and since the 24th day of June 1935, has been, in substantial competition with other corporations and with individuals, firms, and partnerships engaged in the business purchasing, rectifying, blending, and bottling whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages in rectifying plants under rectifiers' permits and in the sale thereof in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 2. Upon the premises of respondent's place of business aforesaid, there is a still for use in the production of gins by a process of rectification whereby alcohol, purchased but not produced by respondent, is redistilled over juniper berries and other aromatics. Such rectification of alcoholic spirits does not make or constitute respondent a distillery or a distiller, as defined by Section 3247 of the Revised Statutes regulating Internal Revenue, nor as commonly understood by the public and the liquor industry. For a long period of time the word "distillery" when used in connection with the liquor industry and with the products thereof has had and still has a definite significance and meaning to the minds of wholesalers and retailers in such industry and to the ultimate purchasing public, to wit, a place where such alcoholic liquors are manufactured by an original and continuous distillation from mash, wort, or wash, through continuous closed pipes and vessels until the manufacture thereof is complete, and a substantial portion of the purchasing public prefers to buy spirituous liquors bottled and prepared by the actual distillers and manufacturers thereof.

PAR. 3. In the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid, by the use of the word "Distilleries" in its corporate name printed on its stationery and on the labels attached to the bottles in which it sells and ships its said products, and in various other ways, respondent represents to its customers, and furnishes them with the means of representing to their vendees, both retailers and the ultimate consuming public, that the said whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages therein contained were by it manufactured through the process of distillation from mash, wort, or wash, when, as a matter of fact, respondent is not a distiller, does not distill the said whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages by it so bottled, labeled, sold, and transported, and merely by the use of a still operated by it, as aforesaid, in the rectification of alcoholic spirits by redistillation over juniper berries and other aromatics, does not distill the whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages by it so bottled, labeled, sold, and transported in the sense in which the word "distilled" is commonly accepted and understood by those engaged in the liquor trade and the public. Respondent does not own, operate, or control any place or places where such alcoholic beverages are manufactured by a process of original and continuous distillation from mash, wort, or wash.

PAR. 4. In the course and conduct of its business, as aforesaid, in connection with the sale and distribution of its so-called "Prescription" Brand Whiskey, respondent caused to be attached to each bottle thereof an advertising booklet, in which respondent represents to its vendees, and thereby furnishes them with the means of so representing to the ultimate purchasers and consumers of said whiskey, in part as follows:

(BOTTLE LABEL): PRESCRIPTION BRAND STRAIGHT BOURBON WHISKEY "CHEMICALLY ASSAYED"

Prescription Brand Whiskey is * * * standardized straight bourbon whiskey, prepared for nurses, hospitals, and physicians.

(BOOKLET): PRESCRIPTION WHISKEY (Chemically Assayed)

PRESCRIPTION WHISKEY for the MEDICAL PROFESSION Rx

* * * U. S. Food and Drug Acts have been complied with in the manufacture of this Prescription Whiskey.

PURITY: The Physician requires that his Digitals be physiologically tested and standardized. Why not the same caution for the Doctor's Prescription Whiskey?

* * *

Complaint

24 F. T. C.

Spirits Frumenti, U. S. P. specifically state that whiskey shall be aged in charred oak barrels for a period of four years, but they forget to specify from what proofed distilled spirits distillate, reduced to proper proof, should be used. Should the requirements be that of 110° proof spirits distillate or any degree of proof spirits distillate up 159° reduced to proper proof? (Any distillate distilled above 159° proof is classified as alcohol and cannot be called whiskey.)

* * *

POTABILITY: The Nurse is desirous of all pharmaceuticals that are to be administered, to be highly potable, thus eliminating all possibility of nausea and stomach disturbance, so as not to cause any discomfort of her patient. Why not the same caution for the Doctor's Prescription Whiskey?

* * *

159° proof spirit distillate of the proper kind is the starting point in the making of Prescription Whiskey.

* * *

Prescription Whiskey, which is the result of this technique, is recognized by the Medical Profession.

Do not confuse Prescription Whiskey with whiskies of U. S. P. requirements in purity.

Controlled purity and standardized constituents make it a pharmaceutical for the physician's use.

UNIFORMITY: The Pharmacist is required to use discretion in dispensing U. S. P. and C. P. drugs and chemicals. Why not the same caution for the Doctor's Prescription Whiskey?

THE PUREST MONEY CAN BUY

PRESCRIPTION WHISKEY is prepared especially for the use of the physician who recognizes the need for combining purity of product with accessibility of price. Its standards of excellence, going beyond U. S. P. requirements for purity, make it the ideal stipulation for the physician who wishes to direct his patient to the best.

The physician knows how essential is purity in the use of whiskey as a specific. He knows the lack of scruple which has characterized the manufacture of many products intended to be taken into the body.

In Prescription Whiskey he finds the ideal answer to his problem. It is well flavored and palatable, it is not priced at the excessive figure established for other whiskies approaching it in purity. It is chemically assayed for your protection.

For Your Patients: Prescription Whiskey superior to U. S. P. requirements for PURITY

By means of the foregoing statements and representations, respondent in substance and effect represents that the said "Prescription" Brand Whiskey is of a kind, nature and quality superior to the standard of whiskey specified for medicinal use in the United States Pharmacopoeia, whereas, in truth and in fact, the whiskey is adulterated, is inferior to, and does not conform to, the standards of whiskey there specified, in that, to wit, the United States Pharmacopoeia specifies that whiskey contains in 50 cc. esters equivalent to not less than 1.7 cc. of tenth-normal sodium hydroxide, and respondent's said "Prescription" brand contains esters in 50 cc. equivalent to 1 cc. of tenth-normal sodium hydroxide. Also, the standard of the whiskey specified for medicinal use in the United States Pharmacopoeia aforesaid requires such article to be aged in the wood for four years or more, and respondent's "Prescription" brand Whiskey has not been aged in the wood for four years or more.

By its aforesaid references to "Prescription" Brand and to physicians, hospitals, nurses, and the United States Pharmacopoeia (U. S. P.), respondent directly and impliedly represents that its whiskey conforms to the requirements of the Pharmacopoeia, has been endorsed by the medical profession generally, and is a superior brand of whiskey specially distilled and prepared for distribution for medicinal use, when, as a matter of fact, the article is made from new beverage whiskey, treated in charred wood containers at an elevated temperature for a period of approximately five days, after which it is bottled for sale and sold, and in no wise conforms to the standards of strength, quality or purity of so-called medicinal whiskey, and in various and divers other ways is not the kind or quality of whiskey as represented by respondent.

PAR. 5. There are among the competitors of respondent engaged in the sale of spirituous beverages, as mentioned in paragraph 1 hereof, corporations, firms, partnerships, and individuals who manufacture and distill from mash, wort, or wash whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages sold by them, and who truthfully use the words "distillery," "distilleries," "distillers," or "distilling" as a part of their corporate or trade names and on their stationery, advertising and on the labels of the bottles in which they sell and ship such products. There are also among such competitors corporations, firms, partnerships and individuals engaged in the business of purchasing, rectifying, blending, and bottling whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages in rectifying plants under rectifiers' permits who do not use the words "distillery," "distilleries," "distilling," or "distillers" as a part of their corporate or trade names, nor on their stationery, advertising nor on the labels attached to the bottles in which they sell and ship their said products.

There are also among such competitors corporations, firms, partnerships, and individuals who do not misrepresent the strength, quality, or purity of whiskies by them sold in interstate commerce, nor that such whiskies are specially produced for medicinal use.

PAR. 6. The representations by respondent, as hereinbefore set forth, are calculated to and have the capacity and tendency to and do mislead and deceive dealers and the purchasing public into the beliefs that the whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages sold by the respondent are manufactured and distilled by it from mash, wort, or wash by one continuous process, and that its "Prescription" Brand Whiskey is of the strength, quality, and purity specified by the United States Pharmacopoeia for whiskey designed to be used medicinally, and are calculated to and have the capacity and tendency to and do induce dealers and the purchasing public, acting in such beliefs, to purchase the whiskeys, gins, and other spirituous beverages rectified and bottled by the respondent, thereby diverting trade to respondent from its competitors who do not by their corporate or trade name or in any other manner misrepresent that they are manufacturers by distillation from mash, wort, or wash of whiskeys, gins, or other spirituous beverages, or misrepresent the strength, quality or purity of their whiskeys, and thereby respondent does substantial injury to substantial competition in interstate commerce.

PAR. 7. The acts and things above alleged to have been done and the false representations alleged to have been made by respondent are to the prejudice of the public and the competitors of respondent and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914.

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, on October 16, 1936, issued and served its complaint in this proceeding upon respondent, Fort Clark Distilleries, Inc., charging it with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of the provisions of said act. After the issuance of said complaint respondent's answer, dated November 25, 1936, was duly filed in the office of the Commission by which said answer respondent admitted all the material allegations of the complaint to be true and waived the taking of further evidence and all other intervening procedure. Thereafter, this proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on the said complaint and answer, briefs and oral arguments of counsel having been waived, and the Commission having duly considered the same and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent is a corporation organized, existing and doing business under the laws of the State of Illinois, with its office and principal place of business at 915 Forsythe Street in the city of Peoria in said State. It is now, and since June 24, 1935, has been, engaged in business as a rectifier and wholesaler of distilled spirits, operating since November 23, 1935, under a basic permit, No. R-643, issued by the Federal Alcohol Administration. Its business consists of purchasing and bottling whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages, including a product by it branded as "Prescription Whiskey," in a rectifying plant under a rectifier's permit, and in the sale thereof in constant course of trade and commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

In the course and conduct of its said business, respondent causes its said products, when sold, to be transported from its place of business aforesaid into and through the various States of the United States to the purchasers thereof, consisting of wholesalers and retailers located in States of the United States other than the State of Illinois, and in the District of Columbia.

In the course and conduct of its business, as aforesaid, respondent is now, and since the 24th day of June 1935, has been, in substantial competition with other corporations and with individuals, partnerships, and firms engaged in the manufacture by true distillation of whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages from mash, wort, or wash and in the sale thereof in trade and commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia; and in the course and conduct of its business, as aforesaid, respondent is, and since the 24th day of June 1935, has been, in substantial competition with other corporations and with individuals, firms, and partnerships engaged in the business of purchasing, rectifying, blending, and bottling whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages in rectifying plants under rectifiers' permits and in the sale thereof in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 2. Upon the premises of respondent's place of business aforesaid, there is a still for use in the production of gins by a process of rectification whereby alcohol, purchased but not produced by respondent, is redistilled over juniper berries and other aromatics. Such rectification of alcoholic spirits does not make or constitute respondent a distillery or a distiller, as defined by Section 3247 of the Revised Statutes regulating Internal Revenue, nor as commonly understood by the public and the liquor industry. For a long period of

PAR. 3. In the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid, by the use of the word "Distilleries" in its corporate name printed on its stationery and on the labels attached to the bottles in which it sells and ships its said products, and in various other ways, respondent represents to its customers, and furnishes them with the means of representing to their vendees, both retailers and the ultimate consuming public, that the said whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages therein contained were by it manufactured through the process of distillation from mash, wort, or wash, when, as a matter of fact, respondent is not a distiller, does not distill the said whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages by it so bottled, labeled, sold, and transported, and merely by the use of a still operated by it, as aforesaid, in the rectification of alcoholic spirits by redistillation over juniper berries and other aromatics, does not distill the whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages by it so bottled, labeled, sold, and transported in the sense in which the word "distilled," is commonly accepted and understood by those engaged in the liquor trade and the public. Respondent does not own, operate or control any place or places where such alcoholic beverages are manufactured by a process of original and continuous distillation from mash, wort, or wash.

PAR. 4. In the course and conduct of its business, as aforesaid, in connection with the sale and distribution of its so-called "Prescription" Brand Whiskey, respondent caused to be attached to each bottle thereof an advertising booklet, in which respondent represents to its vendees, and thereby furnishes them with the means of so representing to the ultimate purchasers and consumers of said whiskey, in part as follows:

For your Patients: Prescription Whiskey superior to U. S. P. requirements for PURITY.

By means of the foregoing statements and representations, respondent in substance and effect represents that the said "Prescription" Brand Whiskey is of a kind, nature and quality superior to the standard of whiskey specified for medicinal use in the United States

Pharmacopoeia, whereas, in truth and in fact, the whiskey is adulterated, is inferior to, and does not conform to, the standards of whiskey there specified, in that, to wit, the United States Pharmacopoeia specifies that whiskey contains in 50 cc. esters equivalent to not less than 1.7 cc. of tenth-normal sodium hydroxide, and respondent's said "Prescription" brand contains esters in 50 cc. equivalent to 1 cc. of tenth-normal sodium hydroxide. Also the standard of the whiskey specified for medicinal use in the United States Pharmacopoeia aforesaid requires such article to be aged in the wood for four years or more, and respondent's "Prescription" Brand Whiskey has not been aged in the wood for four years or more.

By its aforesaid references to "Prescription" Brand and to physicians, hospitals, nurses, and the United States Pharmacopoeia (U. S. P.), respondent directly and impliedly represents that its whiskey conforms to the requirements of the Pharmacopoeia, has been endorsed by the medical profession generally and is a superior brand of whiskey specially distilled and prepared for distribution for medicinal use, when, as a matter of fact, the article is made from new beverage whiskey, treated in charred wood containers at an elevated temperature for a period of approximately five days, after which it is bottled for sale and sold, and in no wise conforms to the standards of strength, quality or purity of so-called medicinal whiskey, and in various and divers other ways is not the kind or quality of whiskey as represented by respondent.

PAR. 5. There are among the competitors of respondent engaged in the sale of spirituous beverages, as mentioned in paragraph 1 hereof, corporations, firms, partnerships, and individuals who manufacture and distill from mash, wort, or wash whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages sold by them, and who truthfully use the words "distillery," "distilleries," "distillers," or "distilling" as a part of their corporate or trade names and on their stationery, advertising and on the labels of the bottles in which they sell and ship such products. There are also among such competitors corporations, firms, partnerships, and individuals engaged in the business of purchasing, rectifying, blending, and bottling whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages in rectifying plants under rectifiers' permits who do not use the words "distillery," "distilleries," "distilling," or "distillers" as a part of their corporate or trade names, nor on their stationery, advertising nor on the labels attached to the bottles in which they sell and ship their said products.

There are also among such competitors corporations, firms, partnerships, and individuals who do not misrepresent the strength, quality, or purity of whiskies by them sold in interstate commerce, nor that such whiskies are specially produced for medicinal use.

PAR. 6. The representations by respondent, as hereinbefore set forth, are calculated to and have the capacity and tendency to and do mislead and deceive dealers and the purchasing public into the beliefs that the whiskies, gins and other spirituous beverages sold by the respondent are manufactured and distilled by it from mash, wort or wash by one continuous process, and that its "Prescription" Brand Whiskey is of the strength, quality, and purity specified by the United States Pharmacopoeia for whiskey designed to be used medicinally, and are calculated to and have the capacity and tendency to and do induce dealers and the purchasing public, acting in such beliefs, to purchase the whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages rectified and bottled by the respondent, thereby diverting trade to respondent from its competitors who do not by their corporate or trade name or in any other manner misrepresent that they are manufacturers by distillation from mash, wort, or wash of whiskies, gins, or other spirituous beverages, or misrepresent the strength, quality, or purity of their whiskies, and thereby respondent does substantial injury to substantial competition in interstate commerce.

PAR. 7. Because of existing regulations, under the Federal Alcohol Administration Act approved August 29, 1935 (49 Stat. 977), which regulations became effective August 15, 1936, providing that rectifiers who redistill purchased alcohol over juniper berries and other aromatics may sell such resulting product as "distilled gin," and requiring that the labels state who distilled it, the Commission has excepted gins produced by respondent by redistillation of alcohol over juniper berries and other aromatics from the prohibitions of its order.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondent Fort Clark Distilleries, Inc., are to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce, within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

hearing on the charges set forth in said complaint and agrees that, without further evidence or other intervening procedure, the Commission may issue and serve upon it findings as to the facts and conclusion and an order to cease and desist from the violations of law charged in the complaint, and the Commission having made its findings as to the facts and conclusion that said respondent has violated the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "an Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purpose."

It is ordered, That the respondent, Fort Clark Distilleries, Inc., its officers, representatives, agents, and employees, in connection with the offering for sale, and distribution of whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages in interstate commerce and in the District of Columbia (except gins produced by it through a process of rectification whereby alcohols purchased, but not produced, by respondent are redistilled over juniper berries and other aromatics), do forthwith cease and desist from:

1. Representing, through the use of the word "Distilleries" in its corporate name, on its stationery, advertising, or on the labels attached to the bottles in which it sells and ships said products, or in any other way by word or words of like import, (a) that it is a distiller of whiskies, gins, or other spirituous beverages; or (b) that the said whiskies, gins, or other beverages were by it manufactured through the process of distillation; or (c) that it owns, operates, or controls a place or places where any such products are by it manufactured by a process of original and continuous distillation from mash, wort, or wash, through continuous closed pipes and vessels until the manufacture thereof is completed, unless and until respondent shall actually own, operate, or control such a place or places;

2. Representing that any of its whiskey is of the kind, nature, or quality usually or ordinarily prescribed by physicians for medicinal treatment; or is of the kind, nature, and quality especially prepared for nurses, hospitals, or physicians; or that any of said whiskey is the kind, nature, and quality of whiskey of the standard specified for medicinal use in the United States Pharmacopoeia; or that any of said whiskey is aged in the wood for four years or more, when such are not the facts.

It is further ordered, That the said respondent within 60 days from and after the date of the service upon it of this order, shall file with the Commission a report or reports in writing, setting forth in detail the manner and form in which it is complying, and has complied, with the order to cease and desist hereinabove set forth.

PRATT FOOD COMPANY

COMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION
OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 26, 1914

Docket 2964. Complaint, Nov. 2, 1936—Decision, Dec. 23, 1936

Where a corporation engaged in the manufacture, sale and distribution of "Pratt's 'Split-Action' N-K Capsules" for poultry—

Falsely represented, in pamphlets, labels attached to containers of product, and in advertisements in newspapers and periodicals and otherwise, that said product, fed to fowls, would destroy all worms or parts thereof and tapeworm heads with which the fowls were infested, through such statements as "* * * worms your bird as thoroughly as though you gave each fowl two treatments," "Stop wasting money on treatments that get only a few * * ," and " * * the best tapeworm destroyer";

With capacity and tendency to mislead and deceive purchasers of its product into the belief that the same, bought by them, would accomplish aforesaid results, and with effect of causing a substantial number of the purchasing public to buy its said product on account of the mistaken and erroneous belief thus induced, and of unfairly diverting thereby trade to it from many competitors who make and distribute products designed for similar uses without misrepresenting the capacities or effects thereof:

Held, That such acts and practices were to the prejudice of the public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition.

as "commerce" is defined in said act, and it appearing to said Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof will be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint, stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. The respondent is a corporation organized, existing, and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Pennsylvania with its principal place of business at 126 Walnut Street in the city of Philadelphia in said State. Respondent is now and for more than three years last past has been engaged in the compounding and manufacture for sale of the product designated by it

Complaint

24 F. T. C.

"Pratt's 'Split-Action' N-K Capsules," and in the sale thereof in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and the District of Columbia, and causes and has caused said product when sold by it to be transported in interstate commerce from its place of business in the State of Pennsylvania and from other States of the United States to purchasers thereof located in various States of the United States other than the State of origin of the shipment and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of its said business respondent is now and has for more than three years last past been in substantial competition with other corporations and with individuals, partnerships, and firms engaged in the manufacture for sale, sale, and distribution of products in interstate commerce between and among the various States of the United States and the District of Columbia used for purposes similar to purposes for which respondent's "Pratt's 'Split-Action' N-K Capsules" are represented by respondent to be efficacious, and competitors in interstate commerce have truthfully represented and now truthfully represent the properties, capacities and effects of their said products.

PAR. 3. In the course and conduct of its said business as hereinabove described the respondent in soliciting the sale of and selling in interstate commerce "Pratt's 'Split-Action' N-K Capsules," in advertising said product by pamphlets, labels attached to the containers thereof, newspapers, periodicals, magazines, and otherwise, has made many extravagant, deceptive, misleading and false statements regarding the therapeutic value, efficacy, and effect of its said product among which is the following:

One "Split-Action" capsule worms your bird as thoroughly as though you gave each fowl two treatments * * * Stop wasting money on treatments that get only a few of the worms * * * Kamala is the best tapeworm destroyer.

PAR. 4. In truth and in fact respondent's representations as set forth in paragraph 3 hereof, and respondent's advertisements and representations in pamphlets, labels attached to containers of respondent's said product, newspapers, periodicals, magazines, and otherwise, are extravagant, false, misleading, and deceptive in the following respects:

The representations quoted in paragraph 3 are made in such a way that purchasers and prospective purchasers of respondent's product are led to believe that respondent's said product when fed to fowls will destroy all worms and all parts of worms, including tapeworm heads, with which the fowls may be infested, whereas respondent's said product "Pratt's 'Split-Action' N-K Capsules" will not when fed to fowls destroy all worms or all parts of worms, including tape-worm heads, with which the fowls may be infested.

PAR. 5. Respondent's advertising and representations hereinabove described have had and still have a tendency and capacity to and do mislead and deceive the purchasing public regarding the therapeutic value, efficacy, and effect of "Pratt's 'Split-Action' N-K Capsules," and further, as a direct consequence of the deceptive acts and representations of respondent and mistaken beliefs induced by said acts, as herein set out, the purchasing public has purchased respondent's "Pratt's 'Split-Action' N-K Capsules" with the result that trade has been unfairly diverted to respondent from competitors engaged in the business of distributing or selling products designed for similar usage who truthfully advertise and represent the properties of their respective products and the results which may be expected to be obtained from the use thereof. As a result thereof substantial injury has been and now is being done by respondent to substantial competition in commerce among and between the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 6. The acts, practices and representations of the respondent hereinabove set forth have been and are all to the injury and prejudice of the public and to the competitors of the respondent in interstate commerce, and have constituted and now constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914.

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

answer was duly filed in the office of the Commission. Thereafter this proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on the said complaint and the substitute answer, briefs and oral arguments of counsel having been waived, and the Commission having duly considered the same and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. For more than three years last past the respondent, Pratt Food Company, a corporation, has been organized and existing as a corporation under the laws of the State of Pennsylvania, and has maintained during all of said time, and now maintains, its principal place of business at 126 Walnut Street, in the city of Philadelphia, Pa.

PAR. 2. For more than three years last past the respondent has been engaged in the manufacture, sale, and distribution of a product sold by it under the trade name "Pratt's 'Split-Action' N-K Capsules." This product has been sold by the respondent to various firms, persons, associations, or corporations located not only in the State of Pennsylvania but in other States of the United States, and after sales have been consummated the respondent has shipped the purchased goods, or caused them to be shipped, from respondent's place of business in Philadelphia, Pa., or from other States, to purchasers thereof located in States other than the State of Pennsylvania or other than the State of origin of the shipment. The respondent has maintained a constant current of trade and commerce between and among various States of the United States and the District of Columbia in the sale and distribution of its said product during all of the time referred to herein.

PAR. 3. The respondent, during all of the time herein referred to, has represented that its product, "Pratt's 'Split-Action' N-K Capsules" is an efficient remedy for certain diseases of poultry, and has recommended that its said product be fed to poultry, and has represented that when it is so used results will be achieved, as hereinafter more fully set forth, which will be greatly beneficial to the purchasers of said product.

PAR. 4. There are other corporations, individuals, associations, and partnerships engaged in similar business to that of the respondent, to wit: the sale and distribution of products which will relieve poultry from worm infestation. Said other corporations, individuals, associations, and partnerships have been and are engaged in commerce among and between the various States of the United States in said business. The respondent, during all of the aforesaid time, was, and still is, in competition in such commerce in the sale of the said "Pratt's 'Split-Action' N-K Capsules" with such other corporations, individuals, associations, and partnerships likewise engaged in the sale and distribution of products having an efficacy similar to that claimed by the respondent for "Pratt's 'Split-Action' N-K Capsules."

PAR. 5. In soliciting the sale of its product respondent has continuously, during all of the aforesaid time, represented by pamphlets, labels attached to containers of the product, advertisements inserted in newspapers, periodicals and magazines, and otherwise, as follows: "One 'Split-Action' Capsule worms your bird as thoroughly as though you gave each fowl two treatments"; "Stop wasting money on treatments that get only a few of the worms"; and "Kamala is the best tapeworm destroyer." These representations have been made through advertising mediums and otherwise, and have been caused by respondent to be circulated to customers and prospective customers residing in the various States.

PAR. 6. As a matter of fact, respondent's said product, "Pratt's 'Split-Action' N-K Capsules," when fed to fowls, will not destroy all worms or all parts of worms, including tapeworm heads, with which the fowls are infested.

PAR. 7. There is a preference among members of the purchasing public, located in various States of the United States, of a product that will, when fed to fowls, destroy all worms and all parts of worms, including tapeworm heads, with which the fowls may be infested, and the foregoing representations by the respondent describe a product that members of the public desire to purchase. The representations made by the respondent above referred to have the capacity and tendency to mislead and deceive the purchasers of its product into believing that when they purchase said product they will obtain a product that will, when fed to fowls, destroy all worms and all parts of worms, including tapeworm heads, with which the fowls may be infested.

PAR. 8. The representations of the respondent as aforesaid have had, and do have, the tendency and capacity and effect of causing a substantial number of the purchasing public to buy respondent's product on account of the mistaken and erroneous belief induced by respondent's representations.

PAR. 9. There are many of the competitors of respondent who manufacture and distribute products designed for similar usage to that sold and distributed by the respondent in various States of the United States who do not misrepresent the capacities or effects of their products.

Respondent's acts and practices are hereinabove set forth tend to, and do, unfairly divert trade to respondent from such competitors, to the substantial injury and prejudice of competition in commerce among and between the various States of the United States.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondent, Pratt Food Company, are to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

This proceeding having been heard by the Federal Trade Commission upon the complaint of the Commission and the answer filed herein on December 21, 1936, by respondent admitting all the material allegations of the complaint to be true and waiving the taking of further evidence and all other intervening procedure, and the Commission having made its findings as to the facts and its conclusion that said respondent has violated the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

It is ordered, That the respondent, Pratt Food Company, a corporation, its officers, representatives, agents, and employees, in connection with the offering for sale, sale and distribution of a product designated as "Pratt's 'Split-Action' N-K Capsules," or any product of substantially the same composition and ingredients or of substantially the same therapeutic effect sold under the name "Pratt's 'Split-Action' N-K Capsules" or under any other name, in interstate commerce or in the District of Columbia, do forthwith cease and desist from:

Representing, through statements such as

One "Split-Action" Capsule worms your bird as thoroughly as though you gave each fowl two treatments;

Stop wasting money on treatments that get only a few of the worms;

Kamala is the best tapeworm destroyer;

Order

or other statements of similar import and effect, or through any other device or in any other manner, that said product will destroy all worms and all parts of worms (including tapeworm heads) with which poultry may be infested.

It is further ordered, That the respondent shall, within 60 days after service upon it of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which it has complied with this order.

COMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION
OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 26, 1914

Docket 2515. Complaint, Aug. 14, 1935—Decision, Dec. 29, 1936

Where a corporation engaged in manufacturing, compounding, selling, and distributing a line of toiletries and cosmetics including perfumes, toilet water, face powder, lipstick, rouge, and similar products, to purchasers in the various States, and including a line of toiletries sold and distributed by an American concern in interstate commerce under trade name or brand "Drury Lane English Lavender"—

Caused its aforesaid products or line of toiletries to be labeled and branded with aforesaid words and words "Distributed by Worthall, Ltd., London, Montreal, New York", notwithstanding fact said American corporation thus referred to was not a limited corporation as commonly understood by the public, nor an English company, and had no operating branch or office in London, or Montreal, and products sold and distributed by it in interstate commerce were not made or compounded in London or imported from England or made from English materials, but were all made or compounded in the United States and principally of materials produced therein, and were in no sense products of English manufacture nor English in origin;

With effect of misleading and deceiving dealers and purchasing public into erroneous and mistaken belief that the said toilet preparations and supplies made, compounded and sold by it and marketed by said American distributor, were genuine English products and that its said distributor was an English company with offices in London and Montreal, and that its said products were of English origin and manufacture or were imported from England, and of inducing dealers and purchasing public, acting in such beliefs, to buy such imitation toilet preparations, and thereby unfairly divert trade to it from its competitors who do not thus, or otherwise, misrepresent the nature and kind of their products, and from competitors who actually do sell and distribute toilet products and cosmetics of English origin which, as genuine English toiletries long compounded, blended and made in England by English companies of English materials and imported and appropriately labeled and branded for sale and distribution in the United States, are bought by a substantial portion of the purchasing public in preference to imitations thereof not of English origin or manufacture; to injury of competition in commerce among the various States:

Held, That such acts and practices were to the prejudice of the public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition.

COMPLAINT

PARAGRAPH 1. B. H. Krueger, Inc., is a corporation organized, existing and doing business under the laws of the State of New York, with its office and principal place of business at 151 West 19th Street in the city of New York, N. Y. The officers of said respondent B. H. Krueger, Inc. are Bernard H. Krueger, president and treasurer, and Max Krueger, secretary. Respondent Lightfoot Schultz Company is a corporation organized, existing, and doing business under the laws of the State of New York, with its office at 389 Fifth Avenue, New York City, and a factory at 1412 Park Avenue, Hoboken, N. J. The officers of said Lightfoot Schultz Company are Milton Dammann, president, Marshall Mundheim, vice president and secretary, and Jules B. deMesquite, treasurer.

PAR. 2. Respondent B. H. Krueger, Inc., since prior to September 1934, has been and now is engaged in the business of manufacturing, compounding, selling, and distributing a line of toiletries and cosmetics, including perfumes, toilet water, face powder, lip stick, rouge, and similar products to purchasers in the various States of the United States. Respondent Lightfoot Schultz Company since prior to September 1934, has been and now is engaged in manufacturing, compounding, selling, and distributing a line of toilet soaps to purchasers in the various States of the United States. Both of said respondents ordinarily sell and distribute their said products at wholesale and cause the said products to be transported from the States of New York and New Jersey into other States of the United States and the District of Columbia, and in the course and conduct of their said businesses said respondents were and are in competition with other individuals, firms, partnerships, and corporations likewise engaged in the manufacture, compounding, sale, and distribution in interstate commerce of similar products.

PAR. 3. During the time above mentioned respondent B. H. Krueger, Inc. in the course and conduct of its said business manufactured and compounded, wrapped, packed, and delivered to the order of one Worthall, Ltd., a corporation, a line of toiletries which were sold and distributed by said Worthall, Ltd. in interstate commerce under the trade name or brand of "Drury Lane English Lavender." Respondent Lightfoot Schultz Company during the time above mentioned manufactured and compounded, wrapped, packed, and delivered to the order of Worthall, Ltd. a line of toilet soaps, which was sold and distributed in interstate commerce by said Worthall, Ltd. under the trade name or brand of "Drury Lane English Lavender." The labels attached to the containers and packages in which said toiletries and soaps were packed, sold, and distributed were furnished to said respondents by said Worthall, Ltd., but said labels were attached to said packages or containers and the packaging and bottling of said products were done by the respondents, who thereupon delivered the finished products to destinations and consignees in the several States designated by said Worthall, Ltd.

PAR. 4. For a long period of time the terms "English," "Made in England" and "Imported from England" and similar terms when used in connection with toilet articles such as perfumes, soaps, toilet water, face powder, rouge, and similar articles, have had and still have a definite significance in the minds of wholesalers and retailers and the ultimate purchasing public, to wit: Such toiletries and products have for many years been compounded, blended and manufactured in England by English companies of English materials and imported into the United States, and where so compounded, produced and imported have been appropriately labelled and branded for sale and distribution in the various States of the United States. Such terms as the above when applied to toilet products not made of English materials or manufactured by an English company or imported from England are false and misleading, and a substantial portion of the purchasing public prefers to buy genuine English toiletries produced as aforesaid, rather than imitations thereof which are not of English origin or manufacture.

PAR. 5. In the course and conduct of their said businesses, as aforesaid, respondents have caused their products so sold and distributed in interstate commerce, to be labeled and branded with the words "Drury Lane," "English Lavender," and "Distributed by Worthall, Ltd., London, Montreal, New York," when in truth and in fact the said Worthall, Ltd. is not a limited corporation nor is it an English company, it had no branch or office in London or Montreal, none of the products which it so sold and distributed in interstate commerce were manufactured or compounded in London nor were the same imported from England or made from English materials. On the contrary, Worthall, Ltd. is a New York corporation; all of said products were manufactured or compounded in the United States, principally of materials produced in this country, and same were in no sense products of English manufacture nor English in origin.

PAR. 6. The representations so made by respondents, as above set forth, and the use of the word "Limited" instead of incorporated; by said corporation, in combination with the words "London, Montreal, New York," of the trade name "Drury Lane" and the words "English Lavender," are calculated to and have the capacity and tendency to and do mislead and deceive dealers and the purchasing public into the belief that the toilet articles and supplies manufactured, compounded, and sold by respondents are genuine English products, and that respondents' distributor Worthall, Ltd. is an English company with offices in London and Montreal, and that said products are imported from England, when such is not the fact. Said representations have the capacity and tendency to and do induce dealers and the purchasing public, acting on such beliefs, to purchase the said imitation toilet articles, thereby diverting trade to respondents from their competitors who do not by their corporate trade names or by false and misleading advertising or in any other manner misrepresent the nature and kind of their products, and from competitors who actually do sell and distribute toilet products and cosmetics of English origin and manufacture, and thereby respondents do substantial injury to competitors and to the purchasing public in interstate commerce.

PAR. 7. The acts and things above alleged to have been done and the false representations alleged to have been made by respondents are to the prejudice of the public and the competitors of respondents and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914.

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

visions of said act. After the issuance of said complaint, and the filing of respondents' answers thereto, testimony and other evidence in support of the allegations of said complaint were introduced by Allen C. Phelps, attorney for the Commission, before John W. Addison, an examiner of the Commission theretofore duly designated by it, and in opposition to the allegations of the complaint by the respondent B. H. Krueger, Inc., and by Milton Dammann, attorney for respondent Lightfoot Schultz Company; and said testimony and other evidence were duly recorded and filed in the office of the Commission. Thereafter, the proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on the said complaint, the answers thereto, testimony and other evidence, and briefs in support of the complaint and in opposition thereto (no oral argument having been applied for); and the Commission having duly considered the same, and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public, and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1: B. H. Krueger, Inc., is a corporation organized, existing, and doing business under the laws of the State of New York, with its office and principal place of business at 151 West Nineteenth Street in the city of New York, N. Y. The officers of said respondent B. H. Krueger, Inc., are Bernard H. Krueger, president and treasurer, and Max Krueger, secretary.

PAR. 2. Respondent B. H. Krueger, Inc., since prior to September 1934, has been, and now is, engaged in the business of manufacturing, compounding, selling, and distributing a line of toiletries and cosmetics, including perfumes, toilet water, face powder, lipstick, rouge, and similar products to purchasers in the various States of the United States. Said respondent ordinarily sells and distributes its said products at wholesale and causes the said products to be transported from the State of New York into other States of the United States and the District of Columbia. In the course and conduct of its said business, said respondent was, and is, in competition with other individuals, firms, partnerships, and corporations likewise engaged in the manufacture, compounding, sale, and distribution in interstate commerce of similar products.

merce under the trade name or brand of "Drury Lane English Lavender." The labels attached to the containers and packages in which said toiletries and soaps were packed, sold, and distributed were furnished to said respondent by said Worthall, Ltd., but said labels were attached to said packages or containers, and the packaging and bottling of said products were done by the respondent, who thereupon delivered the finished products to destinations and consignees in the several States designated by said Worthall, Ltd.

PAR. 4. For a long period of time the terms "English," "Made in England," and "Imported from England" and similar terms of English connotation or derivation, when used in connection with toilet preparations such as perfumes, soaps, toilet water, face powder, rouge, and similar articles, have had, and still have, a definite significance in the minds of wholesalers and retailers and the ultimate purchasing public, to wit: that such toiletries and products have for many years been compounded, blended, and manufactured in England by English companies of English materials and imported into the United States, and where so compounded, produced, and imported, have been appropriately labelled and branded for sale and distribution in the various States of the United States. A substantial portion of the purchasing public prefers to buy genuine English toiletries produced as aforesaid, rather than imitations thereof which are not of English origin or manufacture. Such terms as the above, when applied to toilet products not made of English materials or manufactured by an English company or imported from England, are false and misleading.

PAR. 5. In the course and conduct of its said business, as aforesaid, respondent has caused its products so sold and distributed in interstate commerce, to be labelled and branded with the words "Drury Lane," "English Lavender," and "Distributed by Worthall, Ltd., London, Montreal, New York," when in truth and in fact the said Worthall, Ltd., is not a limited corporation as such term is commonly understood by the public, nor is it an English company. It has no operating branch or office in London or Montreal. None of the products which it sold and distributed in interstate commerce was manufactured or compounded in London, nor were the products imported from England or made from English materials. On the contrary, Worthall, Ltd., is a New York Corporation; all of said products were manufactured or compounded in the United States, principally of materials produced in this country, and said products were in no sense products of English manufacture nor English in origin.

PAR. 6. The representations so made by respondent, as above set forth, and the use on labels placed on its said products by respondent-ent of the word "Limited" instead of "Incorporated" for said Worthall corporation, in combination with the words "London" or "Montreal"; of the trade name "Drury Lane" and the words "English Lavender"; are calculated to, and have the capacity and tendency to, and do, mislead and deceive dealers and the purchasing public into the erroneous and mistaken belief that the toilet preparations and supplies manufactured, compounded, and sold by respondent and marketed by said distributor Worthall, Ltd., are genuine English products, and that respondent's distributor Worthall, Ltd., is an English company with offices in London and Montreal, and that said products are of English origin and manufacture or are imported from England. Said representations have the capacity and tendency to, and do, induce dealers and the purchasing public, acting on such beliefs, to purchase the said imitation toilet preparations, thereby unfairly diverting trade to respondent from its competitors who do not by the means above set forth, or in any other manner, misrepresent the nature and kind of their products, and from competitors who actually do sell and distribute toilet products and cosmetics of English origin and manufacture, to the injury of competition in commerce among and between the various States of the United States.

PAR. 7. The testimony and evidence recorded and filed in this proceeding have failed to establish the allegations of the complaint herein as against respondent Lightfoot Schultz Company.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondent B. H. Krueger, Inc., are to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce, within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

This proceeding having been heard by the Federal Trade Commission upon the complaint of the Commission, the answers of respondents, testimony and other evidence taken before John W. Addison, an examiner of the Commission theretofore duly designated by it, in support of the allegations of said complaint and in opposition thereto, and briefs filed herein, and the Commission having made its findings as to the facts and its conclusion that respondent B. H. Krueger, Inc., a corporation, has violated the provisions of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," and that the allegations of the complaint have not been established as against respondent Lightfoot Schultz Company by the testimony and evidence herein;

It is ordered, That the respondent, B. H. Krueger, Inc., a corporation, its officers, representatives, agents, and employees, in connection with the offering for sale, sale, and distribution of cosmetics and toilet preparations, including perfumes, soaps, toilet water, face powder, and similar articles in interstate commerce or in the District of Columbia, by the use of labels, or otherwise, do forthwith cease and desist from representing:

1. That said products are of English manufacture or origin, or are imported from England;

2. That said products contain ingredients of English origin, when such is not the fact;

3. That said products are manufactured or prepared for, or distributed by, an English company or a company with offices and places of business in England or Canada, when such is not the fact;

4. That any of said products manufactured for, or sold to, Worthall, Ltd., a New York corporation, are offered for sale, sold, or distributed by an English company, or by a company with offices in England or Canada;

5. That any of said products manufactured for, or sold to, Worthall, Ltd., a New York corporation, are of English manufacture or origin, or have been imported from England.

It is further ordered, That the respondent, B. H. Krueger, Inc., a corporation, shall within 60 days after service upon it of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which it has complied with this order.

It is further ordered, That the complaint herein be, and the same hereby is, dismissed without prejudice as against respondent Lightfoot Schultz Company, a corporation.

COMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION
OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 26, 1914

Docket 2565. Complaint, Nov. 16, 1935¹—Decision, Dec. 29, 1936

Where corporations engaged in (1) the manufacture of various kinds of power cable and of rubber covered building wire, largest consumers of which products were privately and publicly owned public utilities, municipal, State, and Federal Governments, and large industrial plants and office buildings, and in (2) soliciting, selling, and delivering such various products directly to the larger consumers, and in supplying the smaller requirements of such consumers and the entire requirements of the smaller consumers by selling and placing stocks of goods in the hands of jobbers and retailers, and (3) controlling a large, valuable and continuous trade and commerce among the several States, and transporting and delivering or causing to be transported and delivered, in the course thereof, large quantities of material and finished products across State lines, and (4) in a position, to the extent that they acted collectively and collusively in the production and pricing of their goods, to dominate the markets in which unorganized consumers must buy the same, and, but for the matters hereinbelow set forth, in active competition with one another as to price and otherwise; acting in combination and agreement with one another and through their association and subsidiary groups and sectional organizations thereof, promoted in aid of such agreements and combinations directed to avoiding, frustrating and suppressing price competition, both prior to and during the role as Code Authority under the National Industrial Recovery Act, of said association, in using, interpreting and applying various provisions of said Code with intent and effect of supporting, supplementing and reinforcing such agreements, understandings, policies, and methods; and making use of frequent meetings and conferences among the members of the various groups, sections, and subdivisions of the association, and systematic exchange of price information among the members; and acting in pursuance thereof—

- (a) Entered into agreements and understandings to quote, sell, and deliver their goods according to identical delivered prices, terms, and sales conditions, determined by joint or cooperative action of the members' groups, etc., as above indicated, and systematically prepared, circulated, exchanged, adopted, and used certain price lists promulgated by three of the said member manufacturers, with the assurance that such lists and changes thereof, with due notice, would be observed by the promulgating manufacturers if respected by the others, with intent and effect of avoiding and suppressing price competition among all, and with the understanding of all that purchase on a delivered price basis only would be permitted, and with inclusion of formula through which such delivered prices were to be calculated, whether for the entire United States and possessions, or within various price zones, as the case might be; and

- (b) With intent and effect of further suppressing price competition among themselves, supplemented said uniform delivered price lists by imposing uniform charge for the large wooden reels on which cable is wound for delivery and uniform allowance for return thereof, together with uniform charge for return freight, which, in some cases, was in excess of and, in other cases, less than actual cost of such return freight to plant of a given manufacturer, and adopted uniform terms of sale, including uniform discounts for quantity and for prompt payment and uniform grades and specifications and methods of calculating prices on goods which varied therefrom; and
- (c) With intent and effect aforesaid and, more specifically, to ascertain if, when and to what extent any of such manufacturers had deviated in actual transactions from any such aforesaid identical delivered prices or any factor required by their agreements and understandings, adopted and carried on a system with the advice, assistance and cooperation of their said association, under which they agreed to and did report to each other, upon request of any member of the respective groups, detailed information as to the prices and all factors entering into or affecting the prices quoted on particular transactions, and with similar intent and effect exchanged communications and held meetings and conferences at which investigations were made into cases of alleged price cutting and criticized or otherwise disciplined offender competitors;

With result, necessarily, by reason of said delivered price policy, that said manufacturers habitually and systematically discriminated in price among their various customers after making due allowance for cost of transportation, exacted higher prices from customers having little or no transportation expense and accepted lower prices from those having heavy transportation expense, and with further result that competitors at or near the place of manufacture and shipment were deprived of the advantage of such location and were required to contribute to the cost of transportation of more distant customers, notwithstanding fact that such customers frequently were in competition with each other, and further result that such manufacturers charged and collected from many of their customers, in the guise of transportation and delivery charges, more, and from other of their customers, less, than the actual cost thereof; and

- (d) Fixed, through cooperative group activities within the association, the selling price of a certain patented rubber covered building wire, under cover of a licensing contract between themselves as licensees and one of their number and competitor as owner of the patent and licensor, by first jointly determining upon and then having named in such license contract the identical price which they desired to obtain from their respective customers; and
- (e) Adopted identical discounts from their published list prices to cover sales to jobbers, and required of jobbers that they resell commodities in question at list price in order to avoid any price competition among the respective jobbers or between the jobbers and manufacturers respectively, and supported their said requirement by jointly determining status and eligibility of jobbers, detecting failures on part of jobbers to maintain prescribed resale price, and refusing supplies to such jobbers;

With the result that, through such agreements, understandings, rules, policies, and cooperative methods, they took away from purchasers of power cable and rubber covered building wire, advantages of normal competition which formerly existed, and would otherwise exist among them, compelled unorganized purchasers to buy commodities involved at prices and on terms determined collectively and collusively by them, and artificially enhanced amounts exacted from such purchasers above those obtainable, absent such determination, which, in some instances and insofar as exacted from public utilities and the Government as an incident to the transmission of electric light and power, became a part of the permanent investment on which consumers of electricity are called upon to pay a continual return, or, where publicly owned, at least sufficient to retire the investment therein, and in other instances became a part of utility and Government operating expenses which must be borne by consumers and rate payers, and with intent and effect of unduly and unreasonably restricting, restraining and obstructing competition in the sale of power cable and rubber covered building wire through said wrongful and unlawful combination, conspiracy and agreement thus engaged in:

Held, That such acts and things and methods of competition were all to the injury and prejudice of the public engaged in purchase or purchase and resale of electric power cable and rubber covered building wire, of competitors engaged in production and sale thereof, and of consumers of electricity, and constituted unfair methods of competition.

AMENDED COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that the respondents named and represented in the caption hereof have been and are using unfair methods of competition in commerce as "commerce" is defined in said act, and it appearing to the Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its amended complaint, stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. The members of respondent association and of its various groups, sections, and divisions, consist of several hundred corporations, individuals, firms, and partnerships, their number varying from time to time by the separation of some and the addition of others, so that it is impracticable at any given time to name as respondents and to bring before the Commission each and all the members without manifest delay and inconvenience. Therefore, the Commission names and includes as respondents in this proceeding, the National Electrical Manufacturers Association, both separately and as representatives of all the members of the association the following officers: F. C. Jones, president, and member of board of governors; W. J. Donald, managing director; T. W. Howard, director uniform accounting and statistical department; C. M. Cogan, director engineering department; the board of governors (whose present membership is not known to the Commission) and the following members of respondent association: American Electrical Works, Philadelphia, Pa. (a Rhode Island corporation), American Steel and Wire Co., Worcester, Mass. (a New Jersey corporation); Anaconda Wire and Cable Co., New York, N. Y. (a Delaware corporation); Bishop Wire and Cable Corporation, New York, N. Y. (a New York corporation); Boston Insulated Wire and Cable Co., Boston, Mass. (a Massachusetts corporation); Crescent Insulated Wire and Cable Co., Trenton, N. J. (a New Jersey corporation); General Cable Corporation, New York, N. Y. (a New Jersey corporation); General Electric Company, Schenectady, N. Y. (a New York corporation); Habirshaw Cable and Wire Corporation, New York, N. Y. (a New York corporation); National Electrical Products Corporation, Pittsburgh, Pa. (a Delaware corporation); The Okonite Company, Passaic, N. J. (a New Jersey corporation); Phelps-Dodge Copper Products Corporation, New York, N. Y. (a New York corporation); John A. Roebling's Sons Company, Trenton, N. J. (a New Jersey corporation); Simplex Wire and Cable Company, Boston, Mass. (a Massachusetts corporation); Triangle Conduit and Cable Company, Brooklyn, N. Y. (a New York corporation); United States Rubber Products, Inc., New York, N. Y. (a New Jersey corporation).

PAR. 2. The power cable and wire with which this proceeding is chiefly concerned are used for the transmission of electric current of large voltages. Much of it is copper wire insulated by various processes to meet the special needs of various classes of customers. Impregnated paper cable is used for transmitting current from the power house to substations and other outlets, where, depending on the use to which it is to be put, the current is diverted into varnished cambric, rubber power, or parkway cable. Where used in buildings for lighting purposes, the current is distributed through what is known as building wire. Bare and weatherproofed wires are used for overhead transmission across long stretches of country and among other uses, for overhead trolleys on electric railways.

Among the largest consumers of these commodities are public utilities, whether privately or publicly owned; municipal, State, and Federal Governments for use in the lighting of streets, parks, highways, and public buildings; and large industrial plants and office buildings in carrying current for power and light.

Respondent manufacturers solicit, sell, and deliver these commodities directly to the larger consumers. They supply the smaller requirements of such consumers and the entire requirements of the smaller consumers by selling and placing stocks of goods in the hands of jobbers and retailers.

Respondent manufacturers have control of a large, valuable, and continuous trade and commerce among the several States in the goods with which this proceeding deals, and in the course of such trade and commerce ship, transport and deliver large quantities of material and finished products across State lines, or cause them to be so transported and delivered. To the extent that respondent manufacturers act collectively and collusively in the production and pricing of their goods they are in position to dominate and manipulate the markets in which unorganized consumers must buy such goods.

PAR. 3. Respondent National Electrical Manufacturers Association is a voluntary, unincorporated organization composed of the principal manufacturers of copper cable and wire for electrical transmission. It also includes in its membership manufacturers of electric tools, and a large variety of electrical equipment and apparatus. For each of the commodities with which this amended complaint deals the members of respondent association collectively produce, sell, and distribute the major part, and in some cases all, of the output of such commodities in the United States.

In order to accomplish more effectively the purposes of the combination and conspiracy hereinafter alleged, respondent association, its officers, board of governors, and members, have promoted, established and conducted within said association, a number of separate groups and sections, each of which is composed of manufacturers who produce and sell similiar and competing kinds of electrical wire and cable or similar and competing kinds of electric tools and of electrical equipment and apparatus. A number of respondent members are manufacturers of more than one kind of the commodities referred to and accordingly affiliate themselves with more than one of the group and sectional organizations within respondent association, making separate contributions to the support of each such group. Among such groups are the respective manufacturers which produce impregnated paper cable, varnished cambric cable, rubber power cable, parkway cable, rubber covered building wire, bare and weather-proofed wire, rigid steel conduit, fibre underground conduit, outlet boxes, and electric tools.

PAR. 4. The aforesaid respondent association, its officers, board of governors, and members, have been and are engaged in a wrongful and unlawful combination, conspiracy, and agreement in and affecting trade and commerce in power cable, copper wire for electrical transmission, and various kinds of electrical apparatus and equipment throughout the United States and its possessions, for the purpose and with the effect of unduly and unreasonably restricting, restraining, and obstructing competition in the sale of such goods. To that end the respondents by concerted action and agreement among themselves have adopted and put into effect the following policies, rules, practices, and methods of competition:

(a) As the first step in their plan to suppress or restrain price competition, respondents have created, organized and conducted subsidiary group and sectional organizations composed of manufacturers which, but for the activities herein alleged, would be in active competition with each other as to price and otherwise.

(b) Respondents have promoted and held frequent meetings and conferences among the members of the various groups, sections, and subdivisions of the associations, and have systematically exchange price information among such members. In the course of such activities respondents have entered into agreements and understandings that they would quote, sell, and deliver their goods according to identical prices, terms, and sales conditions determined by the joint or cooperative action of the members of the respective groups, sections or subdivisions of respondent association organized to have jurisdiction over such goods.

PAR. 5. As instances and illustrations of the methods used in carrying out the above alleged conspiracy the Federal Trade Commission alleges the following:

(a) Respondent manufacturers of impregnated paper cable, of varnished cambric cable, of parkway cable, and of rubber power cable, respectively, have concertedly adopted and maintained fixed and uniform selling prices on said commodities, under the leadership of and in cooperation with respondents The Okonite Co., the General Electric Co., and the Habirshaw Cable and Wire Corporation. The last named respondents compiled, printed, and circulated among the other respondent manufacturers of said commodities exceedingly complex and detailed price lists, offering and assuring such other respondent manufacturers, their competitors, that if the latter would not quote and sell at less than the list prices of the respective compilers, then said compilers would maintain the prices in their respective lists and would immediately notify their said competitors of all proposed changes in price or in the methods of calculating same. Acting upon said offers and assurances respondent manufacturers of said commodities systematically prepared, circulated, exchanged, adopted, and used, the price lists so compiled as the amount to be quoted to and obtained from their customers, for the purpose and with the effect of avoiding and suppressing price competition among all of respondent manufacturers of said commodities.

(b) In the compilation, adoption, and use of said price lists, it was understood and agreed among said respondent manufacturers that no customer should be allowed to purchase except on a delivered price basis. Pursuant to such understanding and agreement, said price lists embodied and contained only delivered prices and the formula by which such prices were to be calculated. As to some products the price lists specified a single delivered price to be paid by all customers throughout the United States and including Panama Canal Zone, Puerto Rico, Hawaiian Islands, and Alaska. As to other products the price lists specified a single delivered price to be paid by all customers throughout and within each of a number of price zones, each composed of a number of States or parts of States. The purpose of said delivered price policy was to prevent respondent manufacturers from allowing differences in the proximity of any given customer to their respective plants, to create any difference in the amount to be paid by him delivered from any source of supply.

(c) For the purpose and with the effect of further suppressing price competition among themselves, respondent manufacturers of said commodities supplemented said uniform delivered price lists by imposing a uniform charge for the large wooden reels on which cable is wound for delivery and a uniform allowance for the return of such reels. Said price lists included a uniform charge for the return freight on such reels, which charge, in some cases, was more and in other cases less than the actual cost of such return freight to the plant of a given manufacturer.

(d) For the purpose and with the effect of further suppressing price competition among themselves, respondent manufacturers of said commodities adopted uniform terms of sale, including uniform discounts for quantity and for prompt payment, uniform grades and specifications, and uniform methods of calculating prices on goods which varied from such uniform grades and specifications.

(e) For the purpose and with the effect of further suppressing price competition among themselves and specifically for the purpose of ascertaining if, when, and to what extent any of respondent manufacturers had deviated in actual transactions from the identical delivered price or from any factor therein which their conspiracy and combination demanded, respondent manufacturers of said commodities, with the advice, assistance, and cooperation of respondent association, adopted and carried on a system under which they agreed to report and did report to each other upon the request of any member of their respective groups, detailed information as to the prices and all factors entering into or affecting the prices which they had quoted on particular transactions. For a similar purpose and effect, respondent manufacturers have exchanged communications and held meetings and conferences at which investigations were made into cases of alleged price cutting and where any such offenders were criticized or otherwise disciplined by their competitors.

(f) As an incident to and a necessary result of said delivered price policy respondent manufacturers habitually and systematically discriminated in price, after making due allowance for the cost of transportation, among their various customers, exacted higher prices from customers having little or no transportation expense, and accepted lower prices from those having heavy transportation expense. As a further result of said delivered price policy, customers located at or near the place of manufacture and shipment were deprived of the advantage of such location and were required to contribute to the cost of transportation of more distant customers, notwithstanding that such customers frequently were in competition with each other. As a further result of such policy, respondent manufacturers charged and collected from many of their customers, in the guise of transportation and delivery charges, more, and from others of their customers, less, than the actual cost thereof.

PAR. 6. Respondent manufacturers of rubber covered building wire, through cooperative group activities within respondent association, have fixed the selling price of a patented kind of such wire under cover of a so-called licensing contract between themselves as licensees and respondent National Electrical Products Company as owner of the patent and licensor. Said contract is not a valid licensing contract under the patent laws in that, among other things, the licensees and licensor, being competitors of each other, jointly determine the identical price which they desire to obtain from their customers and then go through the formality of having same named and imposed by the licensor on the licensees under said agreement.

PAR. 7. Respondent manufacturers of the commodities named in paragraphs 5 and 6 have adopted identical discounts from their published list prices to cover sales to jobbers and have required of jobbers that they re-sell said commodities at the list price in order that there may be no price competition among their respective jobbers or between the jobbers and manufacturers respectively, supporting such requirement by jointly determining the status and eligibility of jobbers, by detection of failures by jobbers to maintain the prescribed resale price and by refusal to supply goods to such jobbers.

PAR. 8. Some of the above alleged agreements, understandings, policies, and concerted practice of avoiding and suppressing price competition have been carried on continuously since 1929 or longer, but respondent association, as Code Authority to administer the code adopted by the industry under the National Industrial Recovery Act, used, interpreted, and applied various provisions of said Code for the purpose and with the effect of supporting, supplementing, and reinforcing such agreements, understandings, policies, and practice.

PAR. 9. Respondent members and manufacturers comprising various groups and sections of respondent association other than those whose activities are described in paragraphs 5, 6, 7, and 8 of this amended complaint have engaged in cooperative efforts to eliminate and suppress price competition among themselves by the use of methods and devices similar to but not identical with or confined to those alleged in said paragraphs.

PAR. 10. By means of the aforesaid agreements, understandings, rules, policies, and cooperative practices respondents have taken away from purchasers of power cable and electrical transmission wire, and of other electrical apparatus and equipment the advantages of normal competition which formerly existed and would otherwise exist among respondent manufacturers. Respondents thereby compelled unorganized purchasers to purchase such commodities at prices and on terms determined collectively and collusively by respondents and artificially enhanced the amounts exacted from such purchasers above the amounts obtainable had there been no such determination. The amounts so exacted from public utilities whether publicly or privately owned and from municipalities and the government as an incident to the transmission of electric light and power in some cases become a part of the permanent investment on which consumers of electricity are called upon to pay a continual return or if publicly owned, at least sufficient to retire the investment in such utilities. In other cases the amounts exacted become a part of utility and government operating expenses which must be borne by the consumers and rate payers.

PAR. 11. The above alleged acts and things done by respondents are all to the injury and prejudice of the public engaged in the purchase and resale of electric power cable and wire, electrical equipment and apparatus, of competitors engaged in the production and sale thereof, and of consumers of electricity, and constitute unfair methods of competition in interstate commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914.

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

and to file their substituted answers to the amended complaint, consenting therein that for the purposes of this proceeding, all the material allegations of said complaint might be deemed to be admitted in so far as they relate to the business of selling power cable and "Safecote" rubber covered building wire. Pursuant to permission granted by the Commission said original answers were withdrawn by said respondents and said substituted answers were filed in lieu thereof. Said respondents also consented therein that the Commission might proceed to make its findings of fact without further proceedings and that an order to cease and desist might issue in the terms hereinafter stated.

The said Commission, having duly considered the above and being fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public and makes these its findings as to the facts and its conclusions of fact and law drawn therefrom.

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. At the time the amended complaint was issued and served, the following corporate respondents were among the members of respondent association: American Electrical Works, Philadelphia, Pa. (a Rhode Island corporation), succeeded by Kennecott Wire and Cable Company through change of name; American Steel and Wire Co., Worcester, Mass. (a New Jersey corporation); Anaconda Wire and Cable Co., New York, N. Y. (a Delaware corporation); Bishop Wire and Cable Corporation, New York, N. Y. (a New York corporation); Boston Insulated Wire and Cable Co., Boston, Mass. (a Massachusetts corporation); Crescent Insulated Wire and Cable Co., Trenton, N. J. (a New Jersey corporation); General Cable Corporation, New York, N. Y. (a New Jersey corporation); General Electric Company, Schenectady, N. Y. (a New York corporation); Habirshaw Cable and Wire Corporation, New York, N. Y. (a New York corporation); Kennecott Wire and Cable Company, Philadelphia, Pa. (a Rhode Island Corporation) successor by change of name to American Electrical Works, National Electrical Products Corporation, Pittsburgh, Pa. (a Delaware corporation); The Okonite Company, Passaic, N. J. (a New Jersey corporation); Phelps-Dodge Copper Products Corporation, New York, N. Y. (a New York corporation); John A. Roebling's Sons Company, Trenton, N. J. (a New Jersey corporation); Simplex Wire and Cable Company, Boston, Mass. (a Massachusetts corporation); Triangle Conduit and Cable Company, Brooklyn, N. Y. (a New York corporation); United States Rubber Products, Inc., New York, N. Y. (a New Jersey corporation).

The said respondent members, through the respondent association, have promoted, established, and utilized within said association, a number of separate groups and sections, each of which is composed of manufacturers who produce and sell similar and competing kinds of electrical wire and cable. A number of respondent members are manufacturers of more than one kind of the commodities referred to and accordingly affiliate themselves with more than one of the group and sectional organizations within respondent association making separate contributions to the support of each such group. Among such groups are the respective manufacturers which produce impregnated paper cable, varnished cambric cable, rubber power cable, parkway cable, and rubber covered building wire.

PAR. 2. The power cable and wire to which these findings relate are used for the transmission of electric current of large voltages. Much of it is copper wire insulated by various processes to meet the special needs of various classes of customers. Impregnated paper cable is used for transmitting current from the power house to substations and other outlets, where depending on the use to which it is to be put, the current is diverted into varnished cambric, rubber power, or parkway cable. Where used in buildings for lighting purposes, the current is distributed through what is known as building wire.

Among the largest consumers of these commodities are public utilities, whether privately or publicly owned; municipal, State, and Federal Governments, for use in the lighting of streets, parks, highways, and public buildings; and large industrial plants and office buildings in carrying current for power and light.

The respondent manufacturers specifically named in paragraph 1 generally solicit, sell and deliver these commodities directly to the larger consumers. Some of them supply the smaller requirements of such consumers and the entire requirements of the smaller consumers by selling and placing stocks of goods in the hands of jobbers and retailers.

Said respondent manufacturers have control of a large, valuable and continuous trade and commerce among the several States, and in the course of such trade and commerce ship, transport and deliver large quantities of material and finished products across State lines, or cause them to be so transported and delivered. To the extent that respondent manufacturers act collectively and collusively in the production and pricing of their goods they are in position to dominate the markets in which unorganized consumers must buy such goods.

PAR. 3. The respondent manufacturers specifically named in paragraph 1, by concerted action and agreement among themselves have adopted and put into effect, the following policies, rules, practices, and methods of competition:

(a) As the first step in a plan to frustrate, suppress, or restrain price competition, said respondents have promoted, established, and utilized subsidiary group and sectional organizations within respondent association, composed of manufacturers which, but for the facts herein found, would be in active competition with each other as to price and otherwise.

(b) Said respondents have promoted and held frequent meetings and conferences among the members of the various groups, sections, and subdivisions of the association, and have systematically exchanged price information among such members. In the course of such activities, said respondent manufacturers have entered into agreements and understandings that they would quote, sell and deliver their goods according to identical delivered prices, terms and sales conditions determined by the joint or cooperative action of the members of the respective groups, sections, or subdivisions of respondent association organized to have jurisdiction over such goods.

PAR. 4. As instances and illustrations of the methods used in carrying out the above plan and practice, the Federal Trade Commission finds the following:

(a) Said respondent manufacturers of impregnated paper cable, of varnished cambric cable, of parkway cable, and of rubber power cable, respectively, have concertedly adopted and maintained fixed and uniform selling price on said commodities, under the leadership of and in cooperation with respondents, The Okonite Co., the General Electric Co., and the Habirshaw Cable and Wire Corporation. The last named respondents compiled, printed and circulated among the other respondent manufacturers of said commodities, exceedingly complex and detailed price lists, offering and assuring such other respondent manufacturers, their competitors, that if the latter would not quote and sell at less than the list prices of the respective compilers, then said compilers would maintain the prices in their respective lists and would immediately notify their said competitors of all proposed changes in price or in the methods of calculating same. Acting upon said offers and assurances, respondent manufacturers of said commodities systematically prepared, circulated, exchanged, adopted and used the price lists so compiled as the amount to be quoted to and obtained from their customers, for the purpose and with the effect of avoiding and suppressing price competition among all of respondent manufacturers of said commodities.

(b) In the compilation, adoption, and use of said price lists, it was understood and agreed among said respondent manufacturers that no customer should be allowed to purchase except on a delivered price basis. Pursuant to such understanding and agreement, said price lists embodied and contained only delivered prices and the formula by which such prices were to be calculated. As to some products, the price lists specified a single delivered price to be paid by all customers throughout the United States and including Panama Canal Zone, Puerto Rico, Hawaiian Islands, and Alaska. As to other products, the price lists specified a single delivered price to be paid by all customers throughout and within each of a number of price zones, each composed of a number of States of the United States or parts of such States. The purpose of said delivered price policy was to prevent respondent manufacturers from allowing differences in the proximity of any given customer to their respective plants, to create any difference in the amount to be paid by him delivered from any source of supply.

(c) For the purpose and with the effect of further suppressing price competition among themselves, respondent manufacturers of said commodities supplemented said uniform delivered price lists by imposing a uniform charge for the large wooden reels on which cable is wound for delivery and a uniform allowance for the return of such reels. Said price lists included a uniform charge for the return freight on such reels, which charge, in some cases, was more and in other cases less than the actual cost of such return freight to the plant of a given manufacturer.

(d) For the purpose and with the effect of further suppressing price competition among themselves, respondent manufacturers of said commodities adopted uniform terms of sale, including uniform discounts for quantity and for prompt payment, uniform grades and specifications, and uniform methods of calculating prices on goods which varied from such uniform grades and specifications.

(e) For the purpose and with the effect of further suppressing price competition among themselves, and more specifically for the purpose of ascertaining if, when, and to what extent any of respondent manufacturers had deviated in actual transactions from the identical delivered price or from any factor therein which their agreements and understandings required, respondent manufacturers of said commodities, with the advice, assistance and cooperation of respondent association, adopted and carried on a system under which they agreed to report and did report to each other upon the request of any member of their respective groups, detailed information as to the prices and all factors entering into or affecting the prices which they had quoted on particular transactions. For a similar purpose and with a similar effect, respondent manufacturers have exchanged communications and held meetings and conferences at which investigations were made into cases of alleged price cutting and where any such offenders were criticized or otherwise disciplined by their competitors.

(f) As an incident to and a necessary result of said delivered price policy, respondent manufacturers habitually and systematically discriminated in price among their various customers after making due allowance for the cost of transportation, exacted higher prices from customers having little or no transportation expense, and accepted lower prices from those having heavy transportation expense. As a further result of said delivered price policy, customers located at or near the place of manufacture and shipment were deprived of the advantage of such location and were required to contribute to the cost of transportation of more distant customers, notwithstanding that such customers frequently were in competition with each other. As a further result of such policy, respondent manufacturers charged and collected from many of their customers, in the guise of transportation and delivery charges, more, and from other of their customers, less than the actual cost thereof.

PAR. 5. Said respondent manufacturers of rubber covered building wire, through cooperative group activities within respondent association have fixed the selling price of a patented kind of such wire known as "Safecote," under cover of a licensing contract between themselves as licensees and respondent National Electrical Products Company as owner of the patent and licensor. Said respondents, including both the licensees and licensor, are competitors of one another. They have first jointly determined upon an identical price which they desired to obtain from their respective customers and then went through the formality of having such price named and imposed by respondent licensor on respondent licensees under said contract.

PAR. 6. Said respondent manufacturers of the commodities named in paragraphs 4 and 5 herein have adopted identical discounts from their published list prices to cover sales to jobbers and have required of jobbers that they re-sell said commodities at the list price in order that there may be no price competition among their respective jobbers or between the jobbers and manufacturers respectively, supporting such requirement by jointly determining the status and eligibility of jobbers, by detection of failures on the part of jobbers to maintain the prescribed resale price, and by refusal to supply goods to such jobbers.

PAR. 7. Some of the above described agreements, understandings, policies, and methods of avoiding, frustrating and suppressing price competition have been carried on continuously since 1929 or longer, but respondent association, as Code Authority to administer the code adopted by the industry under the National Industrial Recovery Act, used, interpreted, and applied various provisions of said code for the purpose and with the effect of supporting, supplementing, and reinforcing such agreements, understandings, policies, and methods.

PAR. 8. By means of the agreements, understandings, rules, policies, and cooperative methods described above in paragraphs 4 to 7, inclusive, respondents have taken away from purchasers of power cable and rubber covered building wire, the advantages of normal competition which formerly existed and would otherwise exist among respondent manufacturers. Respondents thereby compelled unorganized purchasers to purchase such commodities at prices and on terms determined collectively and collusively by respondents and artificially enhanced the amounts exacted from such purchasers above the amounts obtainable had there been no such determination. The amounts so exacted from public utilities whether publicly or privately owned and from municipalities and the Government as an incident to the transmission of electric light and power, in some cases became a part of the permanent investment on which consumers of electricity are called upon to pay a continual return, or if publicly owned, at least sufficient to retire the investment in such utilities. In other cases, the amounts exacted become a part of utility and Government operating expenses which must be borne by the consumers and rate payers.

CONCLUSION

By reason of the admitted agreements, understandings, rules, policies and cooperative methods described above in paragraphs 4 to 7, inclusive, the respondent association and members named in paragraph 1 have been and are engaged in a wrongful and unlawful combination, conspiracy and agreement in and affecting trade and commerce throughout the United States and its possessions, in power cable and rubber covered building wire, for the purpose and with the effect of unduly and unreasonably restricting, restraining and obstructing competition in the sale of such goods; which acts and things and methods of competition are all to the injury and prejudice of the public engaged in the purchase or purchase and resale of electric power cable and rubber covered building wire, of competitors engaged in the production and sale thereof, and of consumers of electricity; and constitute unfair methods of competition in interstate commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914.

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

This matter coming on to be heard by the Commission on the complaint filed herein on September 26, 1935, the amended complaint filed herein on November 16, 1935, and the proposed substituted answers of the respondents, National Electrical Manufacturers Association, F. C. Jones, as president and member of the board of governors, W. J. Donald, as managing director and C. M. Cogan, as director of the engineering department of National Electrical Manufacturers Association and American Electrical Works (now known as Kennecott Wire and Cable Company), American Steel and Wire Co., Anaconda Wire and Cable Co., Bishop Wire and Cable Corporation, New York N. Y., (a New York corporation), Boston Insulated Wire and Cable Co., Crescent Insulated Wire and Cable Co., General Cable Corporation, General Electric Company, Habirshaw Cable and Wire Corporation, National Electrical Products Corporation, The Okonite Company, Phelps-Dodge Copper Products Corporation, John A. Roebling's Sons Company, Simplex Wire and Cable Company, Triangle Conduit and Cable Company, United States Rubber Products, Inc., in which they state that they desire to and have hereby waived hearing on the charges set forth in the amended complaint insofar as the same refer to alleged unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of the Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," and that they and each of them for the sole purpose of avoiding the trouble and expense incident to further continuation of this proceeding, refrain from contesting the proceeding, and that they and each of them consent that all the material facts alleged in said amended complaint in so far as the same are connected with the business of selling or offering for sale impregnated paper cable, varnished cambric cable, rubber power cable, parkway cable and "Safe-cote" rubber covered building wire may be deemed to be admitted as alleged unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of said Federal Trade Commission Act but not within the intent and meaning of any other law of the United States, such proposed substituted answers not constituting an admission of any conclusions of law and not constituting an admission of fact for any other purpose nor to be used against them in any other proceeding, suit, or action, and that they and each of them consent that the Commission may without trial and without further evidence and without any intervening proceeding make and enter its findings as to the facts and issue and serve upon them and each of them an order to cease and desist from any methods of competition alleged in the amended complaint which constitute violations of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

Now therefore, it is hereby ordered, That the respondents above named be and hereby are permitted to withdraw the answers heretofore filed by them, and to file their proposed substituted answers in lieu thereof, and the substitute answers tendered are received and filed.

It is further ordered, That said respondent corporations American Electrical Works (now known as Kennecott Wire and Cable Company), American Steel and Wire Co., Anaconda Wire and Cable Co., Bishop Wire and Cable Corporation, Boston Insulated Wire and Cable Co., Crescent Insulated Wire and Cable Co., General Cable Corporation, General Electric Company, Habirshaw Cable and Wire Corporation, National Electrical Products Corporation, The Okonite Company, Phelps-Dodge Copper Products Corporation, John A. Roebbling's Sons Company, Simplex Wire and Cable Company, Triangle Conduit and Cable Company, and United States Rubber Products, Inc., and their successors, officers, agents, and employees, and the respondent, National Electrical Manufacturers Association, cease and desist, in connection with the business of selling and offering for sale impregnated paper cable, varnished cambric cable, rubber power cable, parkway cable and "Safecote" rubber covered building wire in interstate commerce, from doing and performing, by agreement, combination or conspiracy between or among any two or more of said respondent corporations acting directly or by or through the respondent, National Electrical Manufacturers Association, the following acts and things:

1. Fixing, maintaining, or enhancing prices, special charges, discounts, transportation charges or any terms or conditions of sale which terms or conditions constitute a substantial element in competition:

2. Providing that any price lists compiled and distributed by any of them among their competitors are to be adopted and adhered to until modifications thereof are similarly compiled and distributed with the result that such original lists and amendments are so adopted and adhered to by any of them and their competitors;

3. Imposing, attempting or threatening to impose, by any means whatsoever, any penalty on manufacturers who fail or refuse to adopt and adhere to the prices or lists compiled and distributed as stated in paragraphs (1) and (2) hereof.

4. Participating with competitors in initiating or conducting any investigation for the purpose of ascertaining and reporting for their joint benefit if, when and to what extent any competitor has deviated from any price list or any announced or quoted price, or otherwise bringing pressure or persuasion to bear upon competitors not to deviate from any such price list or price, provided that this paragraph shall not prevent the circulation of reports of the prices, terms, conditions and like particulars of closed transactions, when not done for the purpose of policing the activities prohibited in paragraphs (1) or (2);

(5) Compiling and distributing among competitors information as to any discounts from, or terms of sale applicable to, any price or price list agreed to be adopted and adhered to as described in paragraphs (1) and (2), whether for specified quantities for prompt payment or for other reasons, including any means or methods by which to calculate prices on goods that vary in grade or specification from the grades and specifications to which such prices or price lists ordinarily apply, with the understanding that such discounts, terms of sale, or means or methods are to be adopted and adhered to by any of them and their competitors until modifications thereof are distributed among such competitors and with the result that such discounts, terms of sale, or means or methods are so adopted and adhered to;

6. Determining or attempting to determine what concerns shall be recognized as jobbers for the distribution of the products of the industry, refusing to sell concerns not jointly recognized by the manufacturers as jobbers, requiring jobbers to sell their customers at list prices or at other prices, prescribed by the manufacturers detecting and reporting jobbers who fail to maintain the prescribed resale price, and refusing to sell such jobbers, where the effect may be to prevent jobbers from competing with each other as to price on the goods of a particular manufacturer or on the goods of said manufacturers generally;

7. Refusing to sell any buyer who so elects at a price calculated f. o. b. point or place from which the goods purchased are actually shipped;

8. Requiring that customers purchase only on a delivered price basis, whether in the form of a single delivered price throughout the United States or throughout each of any number of price zones;

9. Making any payment or allowance to buyers for the return of reels on which cable or wire is wound for delivery, where such payment or allowance is other than the actual cost of return freight to place of shipment and where as a necessary incident to paying or allowing other than the actual freight, identity of delivered prices is preserved and maintained among the respective respondent manufacturers.

10. Agreeing or attempting to agree with any competing manufacturer when both are selling goods as licensees under the same patent for the purpose and with the effect of fixing a price or prices at which they shall each sell the article covered by their licenses, and for the purpose or with the effect of obtaining from their licensor a requirement that the price so arrived at shall be adhered to under the terms of their respective license agreements; provided that this paragraph shall not abridge any legal rights of a licensor under a patent or patent license agreement;

Provided, however, That the prohibitions of this order shall not apply to any lawful action taken under patents or license agreements relating thereto.

It is further ordered, That the above respondents shall, within 60 days after service upon them of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which they and each of them have complied with this order.

ARROW DISTILLERIES, INC.

COMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 26, 1914, AND OF SEC. 3 OF TITLE I OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED JUNE 16, 1933¹

Docket 2400. Complaint, May 20, 1935—Decision, Dec. 30, 1936

Where a corporation engaged as rectifier and wholesaler of spirituous beverages, in purchasing, rectifying, blending, and bottling whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages and in the making of gin with a still which it used therefor by redistillation of purchased alcohol, not produced by it, over juniper berries and other aromatics, and in selling its aforesaid various products to wholesalers and retailers in substantial competition with those engaged in the manufacture by distillation of whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages, and in selling same in trade and commerce among the various States and in the District of Columbia, and with those engaged in purchasing, rectifying, blending, and bottling such various beverages and in similarly selling same, and including among said competitors those who, as manufacturers and distillers of whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages sold by them, by process of original and continuous distillation from mash, wort, or wash through continuous closed pipes and vessels until manufacture is complete, truthfully use words "distillery," "distilleries," "distillers," or "distilling" as a part of their corporate names and on their stationery, advertising, and on the labels of the bottles in which they sell and ship their said products, and those who, engaged in rectifying, blending, and bottling such various products, do not use aforesaid words as above set forth—

Represented, through use of word "Distilleries" in its corporate name, in advertising matter, on its stationery and invoices, and on the labels attached to the bottles in which it sold and shipped its said beverages, together with words "Distilled by" on labels for gin redistilled by it, "Prepared by" on labels for some of the cordials and other beverages which it compounded, and words "Bottled by" or "Prepared by" on whiskey labels, and with nothing further on the labels of some of its cordials to indicate that they were not distilled by it, and with such prefixes, insofar as reproduced in advertising matter, not legible without use of a magnifying glass, and with words "Peoria, Illinois" in close conjunction with its said corporate name on labels and advertising, and in various other ways represented to its customers, and furnished the same with the means of representing to their vendees, both retailers and ultimate consuming public, that the whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages contained in such bottles were by it made through process of distillation from mash, wort, or wash, notwithstanding fact it did not thus distill said various beverages thus bottled, labeled, sold, and transported by it, as commonly accepted and understood in the trade and by the public, and did not operate or control any place or places where such beverages were made by process of original and continuous distillation from mash, etc., as hereinbefore set forth, and was not a distiller or distillery, for the purchase of the bottled or packaged liquors of which there is a preference on the part of a substantial portion of the liquor purchasing public;

With effect of misleading and deceiving dealers and purchasing public into the belief that the whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages sold by it were by it made and distilled from mash, wort, or wash as hereinabove set forth, and of inducing dealers and purchasing public, acting in such belief, to buy its said whiskies, etc., rectified, blended, and bottled by it, and of thereby diverting trade to it from its competitors who do not, by their corporate name or in any other manner, misrepresent that they are distilleries or that they manufacture by distillation from mash, etc., as above set forth, whiskies, gins and other spirituous beverages; to the substantial injury of substantial competition in commerce:

Held, That such acts and practices were to the prejudice of the public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition.

COMPLAINT

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent is a corporation organized, existing, and doing business under the laws of the State of Illinois, with its office and principal place of business in the city of Peoria in said State. It is now, and has been for more than one year last past engaged in the business of purchasing, rectifying, blending, and bottling whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages and in the sale thereof in constant course of trade and commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia. In the course and conduct of its said business, it causes its said products when sold to be transported from its place of business in Peoria aforesaid into and through various States of the United States to the purchasers thereof, consisting of wholesalers and retailers, some located within the State of Illinois and some located in other States of the United States and the District of Columbia. In the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid, respondent is now, and at all times since its organization has been, in substantial competition with other corporations and with individuals, partnerships, and firms engaged in the manufacture by distillation of whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages and in the sale thereof in trade and commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia; and in the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid respondent is, and has been since its organization, in substantial competition with other corporations and with individuals, firms, and partnerships engaged in the business of purchasing, rectifying, blending, and bottling whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages and in the sale thereof in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid respondent has, upon its premises, a still which it uses in the production of gin by a process of rectification whereby alcohol, purchased but not produced by respondent, is redistilled over juniper berries and other aromatics. Such rectification of alcoholic spirits does not make or constitute respondent a distillery, as defined by section 3247 of the Revised Statutes regulating Internal Revenue, nor as commonly understood by the public and the liquor industry. For a long period of time the word "distilleries" when used in connection with the liquor industry and with the products thereof has had and still has a definite significance and meaning to the minds of wholesalers and retailers in such industry and to the ultimate purchasing public, to wit, places where such alcoholic liquors are manufactured by the process of original and continuous distillation from mash, wort, or wash, through continuous closed pipes and vessels until the manufacture thereof is complete, and a substantial portion of the purchasing public prefers to buy spirituous liquors bottled by distilleries.

PAR. 3. In the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid, by the use of the word "Distilleries" in its corporate name, printed on its stationery, advertising and on the labels attached to the bottles in which it sells and ships its said products, and in various other ways, respondent represents to its customers and furnishes them with the means of representing to their vendees, both retailers and the ultimate consuming public, that the said whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages therein contained were by it manufactured through the process of distillation from mash, wort, or wash, when, as a matter of fact, respondent is not a distiller nor a distillery, does not distill the said whiskies, gins, or other spirituous beverages by it so bottled, labeled, sold, and transported, and merely by the use of a still as aforesaid in the rectification of alcoholic spirits by redistillation over juniper berries and other aromatics, respondent does not distill the gins by it so bottled, labeled, sold, and transported in the sense in which the word "distilled" is commonly accepted and understood by those engaged in the liquor trade and the public. Respondent does not own, operate, or control any place or places where such beverages are manufactured by the process of original and continuous distillation from mash, wort, or wash through continuous closed pipes and vessels, until the manufacture thereof is complete.

PAR. 4. There are among the competitors of respondent engaged in the sale of spirituous beverages as mentioned in paragraph 1 hereof corporations, firms, partnerships, and individuals who manufacture and distill from mash, wort, or wash as aforesaid whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages sold by them and who truthfully use the words "distillery," "distilleries," "distillers," or "distilling" as a part of their corporate names and on their stationery, advertising and on the labels of the bottles in which they sell and ship such products. There are also among such competitors corporations, firms partnerships, and individuals engaged in the business of rectifying, blending, and bottling whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages who do not use the words "distillery," "distilleries," "distilling," or "distillers" as a part of their corporate names, nor on their stationery nor on the labels attached to the bottles in which they sell and ship their said products.

PAR. 5. The representation by respondent, as set forth in paragraph 3 hereof, is calculated to and has a capacity and tendency to and does mislead and deceive dealers and the purchasing public into the belief that the whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages sold by the respondent are manufactured and distilled by it from mash, wort, or wash as aforesaid, and is calculated to and has the capacity and tendency to and does induce dealers and the purchasing public, acting in such belief, to purchase the whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages rectified, blended, and bottled by the respondent, thereby diverting trade to respondent from its competitors who do not by their corporate name or in any other manner misrepresent that they are distilleries or that they manufacture by distillation from mash, wort, or wash as aforesaid whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages, and thereby respondent does substantial injury to substantial competition in interstate commerce.

PAR. 6. The acts and things above alleged to have been done and the false representations alleged to have been made by respondent are to the prejudice of the public and the competitors of respondent and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914.

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent is a corporation organized, existing and doing business under the laws of the State of Illinois, with its office and principal place of business in the city of Peoria, in said State. It is now, and has been for more than one year last past, engaged in the business of purchasing, rectifying, blending and bottling whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages and in the sale thereof in constant course of trade and commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia. In the course and conduct of its said business, it causes its said products when sold to be transported from its place of business in Peoria aforesaid into and through various States of the United States to the purchasers thereof, consisting of wholesalers and retailers, some located within the State of Illinois and some located in other States of the United States and the District of Columbia. In the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid, respondent is now, and at all times since its organization has been, in substantial competition with other corporations and with individuals, partnerships, and firms engaged in the manufacture by distillation of whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages and in the sale thereof in trade and commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia; and in the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid respondent is, and has been since its organization, in substantial competition with other corporations and with individuals, firms, and partnerships engaged in the business of purchasing, rectifying, blending, and bottling whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages and in the sale thereof in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PARS. 2, 3, 4 and 5. As grounds for these paragraphs of this complaint, the Federal Trade Commission relies upon the matters and things set out in paragraphs 2, 3, 4, and 5 of count 1 of this complaint to the same extent as though the allegations thereof were separately, by like numbered paragraphs, set out at length herein, and said paragraphs 2, 3, 4, and 5 of count 1 of this complaint are incorporated herein by reference and adopted as the allegations of paragraphs 2, 3, 4, and 5 respectively of this count and are hereby charged as fully and as completely as though the several averments of each of the said paragraphs of count 1 were here repeated verbatim.

PAR. 6. Under and pursuant to Title I of the National Industrial Recovery Act, approved June 16, 1933 (48 Stat. 195 C 90), the President of the United States, by Executive Order No. 6182, of June 26, 1933, as supplemented by Executive Order No. 6207, of July 21, 1933, and Executive Order No. 6345, of October 20, 1933, delegated to H. A. Wallace as Secretary of Agriculture, certain of the powers vested in the President of the United States by the aforesaid act.

Under and pursuant to the delegation of such powers, the said Secretary of Agriculture, pursuant to Section 3 (d) of the act and Executive orders under the act, upon his own motion presented a Code of Fair Competition for the Distilled Spirits Rectifying Industry after due notice and opportunity for hearing in connection therewith had been afforded interested parties, including respondent, in accordance with Title I of the National Industrial Recovery Act and applicable regulations issued thereunder, to the President of the United States who approved the same on the 9th day of December 1933, thereby constituting the said code a Code of Fair Competition within the meaning of the said National Industrial Recovery Act, for the regulation of the aforesaid industry.

In his written report to the President, the said Secretary of Agriculture made, among others, the following findings with respect to the said code in the following words, to wit:

That said Code will tend to effectuate the declared policy of Title I of the National Industrial Recovery Act as set forth in Section 1 of said Act in that the terms and provisions of such Code tend: (a) to remove obstructions to the free flow of foreign commerce, which tend to diminish the amount thereof; (b) to provide for the general welfare by promoting the organization of industry for the purpose of cooperative action among trade groups; (c) to eliminate unfair competitive practices; (d) to promote the fullest possible utilization of the present productive capacity of industries; (e) to avoid undue restriction of production (except as may be temporarily required); (f) to increase the consumption of industrial and agricultural products by increasing purchasing power; and (g) otherwise to rehabilitate industry.

By his approval of the said code on December 9, 1933, the President of the United States, pursuant to the authority vested in him by Title I of the National Industrial Recovery Act aforesaid, made and issued his certain written Executive order, wherein he adopted and approved the report, recommendations and findings of the said Secretary of Agriculture, and ordered that the said Code of Fair Competition be, and the same thereby was approved, and by virtue of the National Industrial Recovery Act aforesaid, the following provision of Article V of said Code became and still is one of the standards of fair competition for the Distilled Spirits Rectifying Industry and is binding upon every member of said Industry and this respondent:

The following practices constitute unfair methods of competition and shall not be engaged in by any member of the industry:

Section 1. False Advertising.—To publish or disseminate in any manner any false advertisement of any rectified product. Any advertisement shall be deemed to be false if it is untrue in any particular, or if directly or by ambiguity, omission or interinference it tends to create a misleading impression.

PAR. 7. The use by respondent of the word "Distilleries" in its corporate name, printed upon its stationery and on the labels attached to the bottles in which it sells and ships such products and in various other ways, constitutes false advertising within the meaning of the aforesaid provision of said Article V and tends to and does create the misleading impression that respondent operates a place or places where alcoholic spirits are distilled from mash, wort, or wash, and that the spirituous beverages by it so sold and transported have been bottled by a distillery or by the original distillers thereof, all contrary to the provisions of Section 1, Article V, of the Code aforesaid.

PAR. 8. The above alleged methods, acts, and practices of the respondent are and have been in violation of the standard of fair competition for the Distilled Spirits Rectifying Industry of the United States. Such violation of such standard in the aforesaid transactions in interstate commerce and other transactions which affect interstate commerce in the manner set forth in paragraph 5 of count 1 hereof, are in violation of Section 3 of Title I of the National Industrial Recovery Act and they are unfair methods of competition in commerce within the meaning of the Federal Trade Commission Act as amended.

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

John J. Keenan, Edward W. Thomerson, and PGad B. Morehouse, attorneys for the Commission, before W. W. Sheppard, Joseph A. Simpson, and John W. Addison, examiners of the Commission theretofore duly designated by it, and in opposition to the allegations of the complaint by Messrs. Shurtleff and Niehaus, and Lawrence A. Jacobson, attorneys for the respondent; and said testimony and other evidence were duly recorded and filed in the office of the Commission. Thereafter, the proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on the said complaint, the answer thereto, testimony and other evidence, briefs in support of the complaint and in opposition thereto, and the oral arguments of counsel aforesaid; and the Commission having duly considered the same, and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public, and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPHS 1. Respondent is a corporation organized, existing, and doing business under the laws of the State of Illinois, with its principal office and place of business at 401 South Washington Street, in the city of Peoria, in said State. From the date of its organization in November 1933 to February 26, 1936, it was engaged in business solely as a rectifier and wholesaler of spirituous beverages, purchasing, rectifying, blending, and bottling whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages, and in the sale thereof in constant course of trade and commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia, and it still engages in that business under basic permit No. R 224 issued by the Federal Alcohol Administration. In November 1935, respondent applied for, and in December 1935, received, a basic distillers permit from the same authority, contracted for a leased run of four days a month at a Kentucky Distillery producing from 105 to 110 barrels of whiskey per day, and on February 26, 1936, respondent commenced to operate such distillery under said lease. During its four days' run that month, the respondent produced for future use approximately 420 barrels of whiskey.

Respondent's premises consist of a building sixty feet wide and half a block long, having a small office in the front on the first floor, large bottling tanks of different sizes, and the ordinary equipment necessary for the conduct of distilled spirits rectifying operations. It also has upon its premises a duly registered still, which it uses in the production of gin by a process of rectification whereby tax-paid alcohol, purchased, but not produced, by respondent, is redistilled over juniper berries and other aromatics. By this means respondent can produce approximately 550 gallons of gin every four hours, and the gin still has been operated daily since respondent commenced business. On the third floor, respondent has a room where it makes cordials and other products. Attached to the said building is a loading platform and back of it a large warehouse.

From March 1934 to October 8, 1935, the total gallonage handled by respondent was as follows:

Whiskey -----	10,567 gals.
Gin -----	27,930 "
Brandy -----	3,600 "
Cordials -----	11,296 "
Vermouth -----	10 "
	53,403 gals.

From the time when respondent commenced business, up to the present time, it has purchased its entire distilled spirits requirements, both whiskey and alcohol, which it has used in its rectifying business, from distillers who produced it from the raw materials.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of its business, it causes its said products, when sold, to be transported from its place of business in Peoria, aforesaid, into and through various States of the United States to the purchasers thereof, consisting of wholesalers and retailers, some located within the State of Illinois and some located in other States of the United States and the District of Columbia. In the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid, respondent is now, and at all times since its organization has been, in substantial competition with other corporations and with individuals, partnerships, and firms engaged in the manufacture by distillation of whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages, and in the sale thereof in trade and commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia; and in the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid respondent is, and has been since its organization, in substantial competition with other corporations and with individuals, firms, and partnerships engaged in the business of purchasing, rectifying, blending, and bottling whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages, and in the sale thereof in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 3. For a long period of time the word "distilleries," when used in connection with the liquor industry and with the products thereof, has had, and still has, a definite significance and meaning to the minds of wholesalers and retailers in such industry and to the ultimate purchasing public, to wit: places where spirituous liquors are manufactured by the process of original and continuous distillation from mash, wort, or wash, through continuous closed pipes and vessels until the manufacture thereof is complete. Also, there is a substantial portion of the public which does not know that most "distilled" gin is a distillate by redistillation rather than by original distillation, but thinks that it is distilled in the same manner as whiskey. Respondent's plant, premises, and operations, including the aforesaid rectification of tax-paid purchased alcohol not by it distilled (with the exception of its operations as a lessee distiller subsequent to February 26, 1936, as aforesaid), do not make or constitute respondent a distillery in the sense commonly understood by the public or by the liquor industry. Section 3247 of the Revised Statutes regulating Internal Revenue, defines the word "distiller" in the following language:

Every person who produces distilled spirits, or who brews or makes mash, wort, or wash, fit for distillation or for the production of spirits, or who, by any process of evaporation separates alcoholic spirit from any fermented substance, or who, making or keeping mash, wort, or wash, has also in his possession or use a still, shall be regarded as a distiller. (U. S. Code 1934 Edition, Title 26, Section 1158 (a).)

One of the customary methods used in the production of gin by actual distilleries is shown by this record to be as follows: The grain is received in cars, ground, cooked, and turned into a mash which has yeast added to it, and the fermentation takes place by which the alcohol is produced. This fermented liquid runs through the beer still, in which the original evaporation or distillation of the alcohol from the beer takes place. Thereafter the vapor is cooled and dropped into the receiving tank, from where it goes into what is known as the "continuous unit," where it is purified by evaporation, and again the vapors are collected and the liquid drops into another receiving tank. In order to further purify that liquid, it goes through what is known as the "redistillation still," through pipes which are in place all the time, to the gin still. All of the foregoing takes place on the distillery bonded premises. While the final technical redistillation process of distillery produced gin may be exactly similar to respondent's redistillation process, the whole prior course of its manufacture from the grain up to the point where it reaches the redistillation still is a process which respondent does not use. Such a distillery has control over its gin products from the grain to the finished product, and the process is one of original and continuous distillation from mash, wort or wash. In the case of distillery-made gin, the Federal tax is computed and paid, when the manufacture of the gin is completed by the proprietor of the bonded warehouse from which the product is withdrawn and at the time of the withdrawal, whereas in the case of rectifier-made gin, the tax thereon is paid when the alcohol which the rectifier purchased to make the gin was withdrawn from the bonded warehouse of the distiller. A rectifier does not have on his rectifying premises an Internal Revenue bonded warehouse to which the alcohol may be removed in bond prior to the payment of the tax, and the tax on his gin is not paid by him, except in the price which he pays for the alcohol when withdrawn from the distiller's bonded warehouse.

PAR. 4. Rectifying, in the distilled spirits rectifying industry, means the mixing of cordials and whiskies of different ages or types, or the mixing of other ingredients with whiskies, but reducing proof of whiskey by adding water is not rectifying. Rectifiers also blend whiskies with neutral spirits (grain alcohol).

A distiller, in the sense ordinarily understood by the liquor industry, is one who prepares distilled spirits by a process of original and continuous distillation from mash, wort, or wash, through continuous closed pipes and vessels until the manufacture thereof is complete. Many distillers operate a separate establishment 600 feet or more away from their distillery, known as a rectifying plant, wherein they operate in the same manner as described above, for a rectifier—sometimes exclusively with spirits of their own distillation, and sometimes with spirits purchased from other distillers, or both. Some distilleries have a tax-paid bottling room on the distillery bonded premises wherein their distilled spirits are bottled straight as they come from the still, or in a bonded warehouse after aging, or after reduction of proof. Any rectifying by a distiller, however, must be done in his rectifying plant under his rectifier's permit. On some bottled liquors, whether bottled at a distillery rectifying plant, or at any rectifying plant, appear the words "Bottled" or "Blended" (as the case may be) "by the ----- Company." If the distilled spirits therein contained are bottled by a distiller either in his distillery, or are spirits of his own distillation bottled in his rectifying plant, the distiller may, and does, put "Distilled and Bottled by ----- Company." If, in the distillery's rectifying plant, other spirits have been blended or rectified, he puts "Blended and Bottled by ----- Company." Finally, blown (usually in the bottom) in each bottle is a symbol, consisting of a letter followed by a number, identifying the bottler, viz, a "D" for a distillery and "R" for a rectifier the number following said letter corresponding with the distiller's or rectifier's permit. Thus

"R-224" designates this respondent. A distiller who also operates a rectifying plant, having both kinds of permits, may use either symbol depending upon whether the liquor contained in the bottle was produced and bottled under his distiller's or his rectifier's permit.

A distiller has a maximum bond of $100,000, and is permitted to have untaxed liquor; the average bond of the rectifier is about $5,000; the distiller must own the fee title of the premises upon which the business is conducted, or have consent from the owner waiving the owner's interest so that the Government can have a first lien upon that property for taxes; a distillery is under constant general supervision by storekeeper-gaugers, who are always there; absolute supervision is maintained over the bonded warehouse of a distillery. The primary distinction is that one storekeeper-gauger may take care of several rectifying plants, but at the distillery he is in constant supervision, primarily to supervise the tax payments; a rectifier is not permitted to store spirits in bond; a distiller produces spirits from grains, alcohol, molasses, and fruits, but a rectifier produces no distilled spirits whatever; but must obtain them from the producer or from someone holding warehouse certificates; the requirements are considerably more detailed in the case of a distiller than in the case of a rectifier.

A distiller must have a distillery, which must be a complete building and a warehouse, a separate building; he has to have necessary weighing equipment, a grain hopper, cooker, cooking equipment, mash tubs, fermenters, sufficient distilling equipment to take care of his continuous distillation until the spirits are run through the pipe lines into the receiving tanks; at the warehouse he has to have the weighing and testing instruments for checking and many other things; a rectifier is not required to have a separate building. A rectifying plant may consist of a room within a building. He needs no bonded warehouse. If one room, it would have to be divided into three separate rooms by wire mesh partitions. The regulations for the equipment of a rectifier are not so specific as those for a distiller.

Knowledge of these details is not widespread among the retail trade, and is very limited to the general public. All whiskies, whether emanating from distilleries or rectifiers, are generally in the trade conceded to be "distilled products."

It is not possible to determine from the presence of the phrase "Blended and Bottled by" alone or the phrase "Bottled by" alone, on the label whether the package was bottled by a rectifier who is a distiller or by a rectifier who is not distiller.

PAR. 5. Respondent in the course and conduct of its business uses its name in advertising matter on its stationery, on invoices, and on labels attached to the bottles in which it sells and ships beverages. The name is preceded by the words "Distilled By" on labels for the gin it redistills; by the words "Prepared By" on labels for some of its cordials and other beverages which it compounds; and by the words "Bottled By" or "Prepared By" on labels for whiskies. Labels for some of its cordials carried nothing but the name of the product to indicate that they were not distilled by respondent. The use of a magnifying glass is required to tell what the name is preceded by on the labels on bottles portrayed in some of its advertising matter. Its symbol of an arrow piercing a target, with the legend "A product of Arrow" is reproduced on the illustrations of some of its whiskey bottles. In a September 1935, advertisement of its Clark's Pure Rye, the corporate name is preceded by the words "Distilled and Bottled in Peoria." Respondent nearly always used the words "Peoria, Illinois," long and well known as a whiskey distilling center in plain type in conjunction with, and close juxtaposition to, its corporate name on its labels and in its advertising. In one newspaper advertisement published by respondent, one of its brands was described as follows: "Pride O'Peoria, one of the outstanding products of the whiskey center of the world."

The Commission finds that in the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid, by the use of word "Distilleries" in its corporate name, printed on its stationery, advertising, and on the labels attached to the bottles in which it sells and ships its said products, and in various other ways, respondent represents to its customers, and furnishes them with the means of representing to their vendees, both retailers and the ultimate consuming public, that the said whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages therein contained were by it manufactured through the process of distillation from mash, wort, or wash, when, as a matter of fact, respondent is not a distiller nor a distillery, does not distill the said whiskies, gins, or other spirituous beverages by it so bottled, labeled, sold, and transported, and merely by the use of a still, as aforesaid, in the rectification of alcoholic spirits by redistillation over juniper berries and other aromatics, respondent does not distill the gins by it so bottled, labeled, sold, and transported in the sense in which the word "distilled" is commonly accepted and understood by those engaged in the liquor trade and by the public. Respondent does not own, operate, or control any place or places where such beverages are manufactured by the process of original and continuous distillation from mash, wort, or wash through continuous closed pipes and vessels until the manufacture thereof is complete.

PAR. 6. Twenty-seven lay witnesses, representative of many different professions, trades, and occupations, such as surgeons, contractor, civil engineer, insurance agent, etc., were called to the stand and examined to test the reaction of a representative cross-section of the general public to such terms as "distilleries" and "distillers" when used in connection with whiskey or the distilled spirits industry, and all of them testified in substance that by "distilleries" they understood the place of manufacture of spirits, whiskey, or liquors from raw materials; that by "Arrow Distilleries, Inc." they would naturally assume respondent to be engaged in such manufacturing process; and all but two or three clearly indicated that they would be influenced in the purchase of respondent's products in preference to the products of others, by reason of the word "Distilleries" being included in the respondent's trade or corporate name. These witnesses were fairly representative of the Peoria and Chicago, Ill., and Milwaukee, Wis. public. Some of these witnesses gave reasons for such preference as follows:

Would think such products came from a reputable concern;

For responsibility;

Possibly just the psychology of it;

Would just naturally take it that it was a product you could rely upon;

Would assume that the distillery would be a manufacturer who would stand behind its product from the time the thing started until it was finished;

Where you see the word "distilleries" you know it is genuine;

The testimony of many liquor tradesmen, retailers, and wholesalers was substantially to the same effect, namely, that they had observed, from their contacts in selling the public, a definite preference for distillery packaged products.

Respondent produced seventy members of the public who had no such preference for distillery bottled packages, and it is unquestionably true that there are many drinkers who, in buying liquors, are governed principally by a brand name established by advertising or by long usage, or who are governed by taste and quality which is known to them, without regard to the source of bottling. The Commission finds, however, that there is a substantial portion of the liquor purchasing public which prefers to buy spirituous liquors, including gins, which have been bottled or packaged by distilleries.

PAR. 7. There are among the competitors of respondent engaged in the sale of spirituous beverages as mentioned in paragraph 2 hereof corporations, firms, partnerships, and individuals who manufacture and distill from mash, wort, or wash, as aforesaid, whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages sold by them, and who truthfully use the words "distillery," "distilleries," "distillers," or "distilling" as a part of their corporate names and on their stationery, advertising, and on the labels of the bottles in which they sell and ship such products. There are also among such competitors corporations, firms, partnerships, and individuals engaged in the business of rectifying, blending, and bottling whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages who do not use the words "distillery," "distilleries," "distilling," or "distillers" as a part of their corporate names, nor on their stationery, nor on the labels attached to the bottles in which they sell and ship their said products.

PAR. 8. This record contains evidence of undisputed instances where liquor dealers purchased beverages in substantial quantities from this respondent under the erroneous belief, induced by respondent's name, that respondent was the actual distiller of the grain products that it sold, and because their customers preferred to buy whiskey distilled by the firm which bottled it. The representation by respondent as set forth in paragraph 5 hereof is calculated to, has the capacity and tendency to, and does, mislead and deceive dealers and the purchasing public into the belief that the whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages sold by the respondent are manufactured and distilled by it from mash, wort, or wash as aforesaid, and is calculated to, and has the capacity and tendency to, and does, induce dealers and the purchasing public, acting in such belief, to purchase the whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages rectified, blended, and bottled by the respondent, thereby diverting trade to respondent from its competitors who do not, by their corporate name, or in any other manner, misrepresent that they are distilleries, or that they manufacture by distillation from mash, wort, or wash as aforesaid, whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages, and thereby respondent does substantial injury to substantial competition in interstate commerce.

PAR. 9. The Commission's complaint in this case was issued prior to the decision of the United States Supreme Court in the case of A. L. A. Schechter Poultry Corporation, et al. vs. United States (295 U. S. 495), and contained two counts. Count one specifically charged a violation of the Federal Trade Commission Act, and count two charged that the practices of respondent, as hereinbefore set out, were unfair methods within the meaning of the Federal Trade Commission Act because they were in violation of Section 3 of Title I of the National Industrial Recovery Act, which was invalidated by the aforesaid decision. For that reason the Commission is dismissing the complaint as to count two thereof.

PAR. 10. Existing regulations promulgated under the Federal Alcohol Administration Act approved August 29, 1935 (49 Stat. L. 977), which regulations became effective August 15, 1936, provide that rectifiers who redistill tax-paid purchased alcohol over juniper berries and other aromatics may call such resulting product "distilled gin," and require that the labels shall state thereon who distilled it. For this reason the Commission has excepted from the application of its order herein gins so produced by this respondent.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondent Arrow Distilleries, Inc., are to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce, within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

This proceeding having been heard by the Federal Trade Commission upon the complaint of the Commission, the answer of respondent, testimony and other evidence taken before W. W. Shepard, Joseph A. Simpson, and John W. Addison, examiners of the Commission theretofore duly designated by it, in support of the allegations of said complaint and in opposition thereto, briefs filed herein, and oral arguments by John J. Keenan, Edward W. Thomserson, and PGad B. Morehouse, counsel for the Commission, and by Shurtleff and Niehaus, and Lawrence A. Jacobson, counsel for the respondent, and the Commission having made its findings as to the facts and its conclusion that said respondent has violated the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled, "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

It is ordered, That the respondent, Arrow Distilleries, Inc., its officers, representatives, agents, and employees, in connection with the offering for sale, sale, and distribution of whiskies, gins, or other spirituous beverages, in interstate commerce or in the District of Columbia, (except gins produced by it through a process of rectification whereby alcohols purchased, but not produced, by respondent are redistilled over juniper berries and other aromatics), do forthwith cease and desist from:

Representing, through the use of the word "Distilleries" in its corporate name, on its stationery, advertising, or on the labels attached to the bottles in which it sells and ships said products, or in any other way by word or words of like import, (a) that it is a distiller of whiskies, gins, or other spiritous beverages; or (b) that the said whiskies, gins, or other spirituous beverages were by it manufactured through the process of distillation; or (c) that it owns, operates, or controls a place or places where any such products are by it manufactured by a process of original and continuous distillation from mash, wort, or wash, through continuous closed pipes and vessels until the manufacture thereof is completed, unless and until respondent shall actually own, operate, or control such a place or places.

It is further ordered, That the aforesaid complaint be and the same is hereby dismissed as to count 2 thereof.

It is further ordered, That the said respondent within 60 days from and after the date of the service upon it of this order, shall file with the Commission a report or reports in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which it is complying, and has complied, with the order to cease and desist hereinabove set forth.

IN THE MATTER OF SWEET CANDY COMPANY

COMPLAINT, AND MODIFIED FINDINGS AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 20, 1914

Docket 2621. Complaint, Nov. 11, 1935—Decision Dec. 31, 1936

Where a corporation engaged in manufacture and sale of candy, including both "straight" or "staple" goods and "draw" or "deal" push card and punch board assortments, in one of which number of bars received in return for five-cent punch depended on chance selection of legend concealed within partially perforated disk and upon making of last sale, and in other of which chance five-cent punch from 200-hole board determined, in accordance with number punched, whether one of several sixty-cent boxes, one of a number of thirty-cent boxes, or nothing other than chance to punch, was secured by purchaser—

Sold said assortments, with cards and boards, to jobbers and to retailers, so packed and assembled, with its knowledge, that they might be used for distribution to purchasing public by lot or chance without alteration or rearrangement by retailer, by whom they were thus resold by lot or chance to public, in competition with concerns who regard such a method of sale and distribution as morally bad and one which encourages gambling and especially among children, who constitute substantial number of the consumers purchasers of the "draw" or "deal," and particularly, such push card candy, and as injurious to the industry in merchandising a chance or lottery rather than candy, and as providing retailers with the means of violating the laws of the several States, and who refuse to sell candy so packed and assembled that it can be resold to public by lot or chance;

With result of putting at a disadvantage, by reason of their said refusal to adopt such practice, said competitors, who can compete on even terms only through following same to meet demand and preference for such candy from retailers, who find "draw" or "deal" candy more salable than the "straight" or "staple" candy, sale of which showed a marked decrease, some competitors began sale and distribution of candy to public by lot or chance, public and competitors were prejudiced and injured, trade was diverted from them to it and to others employing similar methods of sale, and there was a restraint upon and a detriment to the freedom of fair and legitimate competition in the industry, and a violation of public policy in such sale to consuming public:

Held, That such acts and practices, under the conditions and circumstances set forth, were to the prejudice of the public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition.

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that Sweet Candy Company, a corporation, hereinafter referred to as respondent has been and is using unfair methods of competition in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in said act of Congress, and it appearing to said Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent is a corporation, organized under the laws of the State of Utah, with its principal place of business in the city of Salt Lake City, State of Utah. Respondent is now, and for several years last past has been engaged in the manufacture of candy and the sale and distribution thereof to wholesale and retail dealers located at points in the various States of the United States, and causes said products, when so sold, to be transported from its place of business in Salt Lake City, State of Utah, to purchasers thereof in other States of the United States, at their respective places of business, and there is now, and has been for several years last past, a course of trade and commerce by said respondent in such candy, between and among the States of the United States. In the course and conduct of the said business, respondent is in competition with other corporations and with individuals and partnerships engage in the sale and distribution of candy and candy products in commerce between and among the various States of the United States.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of its business, as described in paragraph 1 hereof, respondent sells and has sold to wholesale and retail dealers, various packages or assortments of candy, so packed and assembled as to involve the use of a lottery scheme when sold and distributed to the consumers thereof. Certain of said packages are hereinafter described for the purpose of showing the methods used by respondent, but this list is not all inclusive of the various packages, nor does it include all the details of the several sales plans which respondent has been or is using in the distribution of candy by lot or chance:

(a) One of said assortments is designated and described by respondent as "Play Ball," and consists of a number of candy bars together with a device commonly called a push card. The candy contained in said assortment is distributed to purchasers in the following manner:

The push card has a number of partially perforated discs, and when a push is made and the disc separated from the card, a legend is disclosed. Sales are 5¢ each, and the card bears statements informing customers and prospective customers as follow:

ALL WINNERS	NO BLANKS
HOME RUN-----	Receives 5 Candy Bars
3 Base Hit-----	Receives 4 Candy Bars
2 Base Hit-----	Receives 3 Candy Bars
1 Base Hit-----	Receives 2 Candy Bars
Base on Balls-----	Receives 1 Candy Bar
Foul Ball-----	Receives 1 Candy Bar
Out-----	Receives 1 Candy Bar
Last Sale receives 6 Candy Bars

The legends on the discs or pushes are effectively concealed from the purchaser and prospective purchaser until a selection has been made and the disc separated from the card. The fact as to whether a purchaser receives one candy bar, two candy bars, three candy bars, four candy bars, five candy bars or six candy bars for the price of 5¢, is thus determined wholly by lot or chance.

(b) Another assortment manufactured and distributed by the respondent is described as "See-Pak Assortment or Deal." This assortment consists of fifteen small packages of candy, eight larger packages of candy, a display easel and tray, together with a 200-hole punch board. The packages of candy in said assortment are distributed in the following manner:

Punches from said board are 5¢ each, and when a punch is made a number is disclosed. The board bears the statements or legends informing the customer and prospective customer as to which numbers receive one of the small packages of candy and which numbers receive one of the larger packages of candy. The numbers on said board are effectively concealed from the purchasers and prospective purchasers until a selection has been made and the particular punch separated from the board. A purchaser who does not qualify by obtaining a number calling for one of the small packages of candy or one of the larger packages of candy receives nothing for his money other than the privilege of pushing a number from the board. The fact as to whether a purchaser receives no merchandise, or receives one of the small packages of candy or one of the larger packages of candy for the price of 5¢, is thus determined wholly by lot or chance.

(c) Another assortment manufactured and distributed by respondent is designated and described as "Sweet's Sportsman's Delight." This assortment consists of fifteen small packages of candy, eighteen larger packages of candy, one fishing rod, one fishing basket, and one portable refrigerator, together with a device commonly called a punch board. The said packages of candy and the other articles of merchandise are to be given as prizes to purchasers of punches from said punch board, in the following manner:

The punch board has 800 punches, and is divided into 40 sections. Punches are 5¢ each, except that the last five punches in each section are free. The numbers run from 1 to 800, but are not arranged in numerical sequence, and the numbers are effectively concealed from the purchaser until a selection has been made and the punch separated from the board. The said punch board bears legends or statements informing the purchaser and prospective purchaser that the last five numbers in each section are free, and that certain numbers receive one of the small packages of candy, certain other numbers receive one of the larger packages of candy, and that number 333 receives the fishing pole and number 666 receives the fishing basket, and that the last punch receives the portable refrigerator. Purchasers of punches who do not qualify by purchasing one of the numbers referred to on said card receive nothing for their money other than the privilege of punching a number from the board. The fact as to whether a purchaser receives one of the small packages of candy, one of the larger packages of candy, the fishing pole or the fishing basket, or receives nothing of value for his money, is thus determined wholly by lot or chance.

PAR. 3. The wholesale dealers to whom respondent sells its assortments, resell said assortments to retail dealers, and said retail dealers, and the retail dealers to whom respondent sells direct, expose said assortments for sale, and sell said candy to the purchasing public in accordance with the aforesaid sales plans. Respondent thus supplies to and places in the hands of others the means of conducting lotteries in the sale of its products in accordance with the sales plans hereinabove set forth, as a means of inducing purchasers thereof to purchase respondents said products in preference to candy offered for sale and sold by its competitors.

PAR. 4. The sale of said candy to the purchasing public, as above alleged, involves a game of chance or the sale of a chance to procure additional bars of candy or packages of candy or other articles of merchandise in the manner alleged, are contrary to the established public policy of the several States of the United States and of the Government of the United States, and in many of the States of the United States are contrary to local criminal statutes.

By reason of said facts many persons, firms, and corporations who make and sell candy in competition with respondent, as above alleged, are unwilling to offer for sale or sell candy so packed and assembled as above alleged, or otherwise arranged and packed for sale to the purchasing public so as to involve a game of chance, or the sale with such candy of a chance to procure additional bars of candy or packages of candy or other articles of merchandise by chance; and such competitors refrain therefrom.

PAR. 5. Many dealers in and ultimate purchasers of candy are attracted by respondent's said methods and manner of packing said candy, and by the element of chance involved in the sale thereof in the manner above described, and are thereby induced to purchase said candy so packed and sold by respondent, in preference to candy offered for sale and sold by said competitors of respondent who do not use the same or equivalent methods. Many dealers in candy are induced to purchase said candy so offered for sale and sold by respondent, in preference to all others, because said ultimate purchasers give preference to respondent's said candy on account of the said game of chance involved therein. The use of said methods by respondent has the tendency and capacity unfairly, and because of said game of chance alone, to divert to respondent trade and custom from its said competitors who do not use the same or equivalent methods, to exclude from said candy trade all competitors who are unwilling to and who do not use the same or equivalent methods; to lessen competition in said candy trade, and to tend to create a monopoly of said candy trade in respondent and such other distributors of candy as use the same or equivalent methods, and to deprive the purchasing public of the benefit of free competition in said candy trade. The use of said methods by the respondent has the tendency and capacity unfairly to eliminate from said candy trade all actual competitors, and to exclude therefrom all potential competitors who do not adopt and use said methods or equivalent methods that are contrary to public policy and to criminal statutes as above alleged.

PAR. 6. Many of said competitors of respondent are unwilling to adopt and use said method or any method involving a game of chance or the sale of a chance to win something by chance, because such methods are contrary to the public policy or to the criminal statutes of certain of the States of the United States, or because they are of the opinion that such methods are detrimental to public morals and to the morals of the purchasers of said candy, or because of any or all of said reasons.

PAR. 7. The aforementioned methods, acts and practices of the respondent are all to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors as hereinabove alleged. Said methods, acts and practices constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914.

REPORT, MODIFIED FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, on November 11, 1935, issued and served a complaint upon the respondent, Sweet Candy Company, charging that respondent has been and was using unfair methods of competition in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in said act of Congress.

After the issuance of said complaint and the filing of respondent's answer thereto, testimony and evidence in support of the allegations of the complaint were introduced by Henry C. Lank and P. C. Kolinski, attorneys for the Commission, and in defense of the allegations of the complaint by Messrs. Dey, Hoppaugh, Mark & Johnson and F. W. James, attorneys for the respondent, before Miles J. Furnas, an examiner of the Commission, theretofore duly designated by it, and said testimony and evidence were duly recorded and filed in the office of the Commission. Thereafter the proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on said complaint, the answer thereto, testimony and evidence, briefs in support of the complaint and in opposition thereto, and the oral arguments of the counsel aforesaid, and the Commission having duly considered the same and being fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public, and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom.

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent, Sweet Candy Company, is a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Utah, with its principal office and place of business in Salt Lake City, State of Utah. Respondent is now, and for several years last past has been engaged in the manufacture of candy in Salt Lake City and in the sale and distribution thereof to retail dealers and jobbers located in the State of Utah and other States of the United States. It causes the said candy when sold to be shipped or transported from its principal place of business in the State of Utah to purchasers thereof in Utah and in the States of the United States other than the State of Utah. In so carrying on said business, respondent is and has been engaged in interstate commerce and is and has been engaged in active competition with other corporations and with partnerships and individuals engaged in the manufacture of candy and in the sale and distribution thereof in commerce between and among the various States of the United States.

PAR. 2. Among the candy manufactured and sold by respondent are several assortments composed of a number of bars of candy of uniform size, shape and quality, together with a device commonly called a "push card," and in addition thereto, are several assortments composed of a number of packages of candy of varying size, together with a device commonly called a "punch board." In one of the last mentioned assortments, the respondent also includes several articles of merchandise other than packages of candy. The respondent manufactured and distributed several assortments with which a "push card" or "punch board" was included, involving the same lot or chance feature in the distribution to the ultimate consumer and varying only in detail.

Illustrative of the sales method involved, where a "push card" was included with the assortment, was one which the respondent designated "Play Ball." This assortment contained a number of bars of candy of uniform size, shape and quality. The "push card" included with this assortment bore legends at the top thereof stating the manner in which the bars in said assortment were to be distributed to the ultimate purchaser. These legends were as follows:

5¢ a SALE	PLAY BALL	5¢ a SALE
ALL WINNERS		NO BLANKS
HOME RUN.....	-----	Receives 5 Candy Bars
3 Base Hit.....	-----	Receives 4 Candy Bars
2 Base Hit.....	-----	Receives 3 Candy Bars
1 Base Hit.....	-----	Receives 2 Candy Bars
Base on Balls.....	-----	Receives 1 Candy Bar
Foul Ball.....	-----	Receives 1 Candy Bar
Out.....	-----	Receives 1 Candy-Bar

Last Sale receives 6 Candy Bars

The "push card" also had, immediately below the legends quoted, 110 partially perforated discs and under each disc was a legend corresponding to one of the legends above. Such legend was effectively concealed from the purchaser and prospective purchaser until a purchase or selection had been made and the partially perforated disc separated from the card. The candy contained in said assortment was distributed to the consuming public in accordance with the legends at the top of said "pushcard." Sales were 5¢ each and by the use of said "push card," the fact as to whether a purchaser received more than one bar of candy contained in said assortment for the price of 5¢ was thus determined wholly by lot or chance.

Findings

Illustrative of the sales method involved, where a "punch board" was included, was an assortment which the respondent designated "See-Pak Assortment." This assortment contained a number of packages of candy which the respondent stated retailed for 60¢ each and a number of packages of candy which the respondent stated retailed at the price of 30¢ each. The "punch-board" included with this assortment bore legends at the top thereof stating the manner in which the several packages of candy in said assortment were to be distributed to the various purchasers. These legends were as follows:

5¢	SEE-PAK ASSORTMENT	5¢
Numbers 5, 10, 20, 30, 40, 50
Receive 60¢ SEE-PAK
Numbers 60, 70, 80, 90, 100, 110, 120, 130, 140, 150, 160, 170, 180, 190, 195
Receive 30¢ SEE-PAK

LAST PUNCH IN EACH SECTION RECEIVES 60¢ SEE-PAK

The "punch board" also had, immediately below the legends quoted, 200 holes in which slips of paper bearing numbers were secreted. The slips of paper and the numbers thereon were effectively concealed from the purchaser and the prospective purchaser until a punch or selection had been made and the particular slip of paper separated from the board. The packages of candy contained in said assortment were distributed to the consuming public in accordance with the legends at the top of said "punch board." Sales were 5 cents each, and by the use of said "punch board," the facts as to whether a purchaser received one of the 30¢ boxes of candy, one of the 60¢ boxes of candy or merely the privilege of punching a number from the board, for the price of 5¢ was thus determined wholly by lot or chance.

PAR. 3. The candy assortments involving the lot or chance feature as above described, are generally referred to in the candy trade or industry as "draw" or "deal" assortments. Assortments of candy without lot or chance features in connection with their resale to the public, are generally referred to in the candy trade or industry as "straight" or "staple" goods. These terms will be used hereafter in these findings to distinguish these separate types of assortments.

PAR. 4. The wholesale dealers or jobbers to whom respondent sells its assortments resell the same to retail dealers. Respondent also sells its said assortments direct to retail dealers. Numerous retail dealers purchase the assortments described in paragraph 2 above either from respondent or from wholesale dealers or jobbers, who in turn have purchased said assortments from the respondent and such retail dealers, display said assortments for sale to the public, as packed by the respondent, and the candy contained in the majority of said assortments is sold and distributed to the consuming public by means of said "push cards" and "punch boards" in the manner shown by the legends at the top of such "push cards" and "punch boards."

PAR. 5. All sales made by respondent, whether to wholesalers and jobbers or to retail dealers, are absolute sales and respondent retains no control over said assortments after they are delivered to the wholesale dealer or jobber or retail dealer. The assortments are assembled and packed in such manner that they may be used and are used by the retail dealer for distribution to the purchasing public by lot or chance without alteration or rearrangement.

In the sale and distribution to jobbers and wholesale dealers for resale to retail dealers and to retail dealers direct of the assortments of candy, described in paragraph 2, respondent has knowledge that said candy will be resold to the purchasing public, by retail dealers by lot or chance, and it packs such candy in the way and manner described so that without alteration, addition or rearrangement thereof it may be resold to the public by lot or chance by said retail dealers.

PAR. 6. There are in the United States and in the territory served by this respondent many manufacturers of candy who do not manufacture and sell "draw" or "deal" assortments of candy and who sell their "straight" or "staple" goods in interstate commerce, in competition with the "draw" or "deal" candy and manufacturers of "straight" and "staple" goods have noted a marked decrease in the sales of their products whenever or wherever the "draw" or "deal" assortments have appeared in their markets. This decrease in the sale of "straight" or "staple" candy is due to the gambling or lottery feature indicated with the "draw" or "deal" candy.

Witnesses from several branches of the candy industry testified in this proceeding to the effect that consumers preferred to purchase the "draw" or "deal" candy because of the gambling feature connected with its sale. The sale and distribution of "draw" or "deal" packages or assortments of candy or of candy which has connected with its sale to the public the means or opportunity of obtaining a prize or becoming a winner by lot or chance, teaches and encourages gambling among children who comprise a substantial number of the purchasers and consumers of this type of candy, particularly the assortments of candy bars which are sold and distributed to the consumers by means of "push cards."

PAR. 7. The sale and distribution of candy by the retailers by the methods described herein, is the sale and distribution of candy by lot or chance and constitutes a lottery or gaming device.

Competitors of respondent appeared as witnesses in this proceeding and testified, and the Commission finds that many competitors regard such sale and distribution as morally bad and as encouraging gambling, especially among children; as injurious to the candy industry, because it results in the merchandising of a chance or lottery instead of candy; and as providing retail merchants with a means of violating the laws of the several states. Because of these reasons, some competitors of respondent refuse to sell candy so packed and assembled that it can be resold to the public by lot or chance. These competitors are thereby put to a disadvantage in competing. The retailers, finding that they can dispose of more candy by the "draw" or "deal" method, buy from respondent and others employing the same methods of sale, and thereby trade is diverted to respondent and others using similar methods from said competitors. Such competitors can compete on even terms only by giving the same or similar devices to retailers. This, they are unwilling to do and their sales of "straight" or "staple" candy show a marked decrease. The sale and distribution of candy by lot or chance provides an easy means of disposing of such products. There is a constant demand for candy which is sold by lot or chance and in order to meet the competition of manufacturers who sell and distribute candy which is sold by such methods, some competitors have begun the sale and distribution of candy to the public by lot or chance. The use of such methods by respondent, in the sale and distribution of its candy, is prejudicial and injurious to the public and its competitors, and has resulted in the diversion of trade to respondent from its said competitors, and is a restraint upon and a detriment to the freedom of fair and legitimate competition in the candy industry.

PAR. 8. Respondent sells its merchandise in the States of Utah, Idaho, Nevada, Wyoming, Colorado, Washington, Oregon, New Mexico, and California. The majority of its candy is sold as "straight" merchandise, less than 10% being assortments with which a "push card" or "punch board" is furnished. While the annual volume of business of the respondent was not shown exactly, an officer for the respondent testified, and the Commission finds that the respondent's annual volume is substantial.

PAR. 9. The Commission finds that the sale and distribution in interstate commerce of assortments or packages of candy so packed and assembled as to enable retail dealers, without alteration, addition or rearrangement, to resell the same to the consuming public by lot or chance, is contrary to public policy.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of respondent, Sweet Candy Company, a corporation, under the conditions and circumstances set forth in the foregoing findings of fact are all to the prejudice of the public and respondent's competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce, and constitute violation of Section 5 of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

MODIFIED ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

It is hereby ordered, That the respondent, Sweet Candy Company, a corporation, its officers, directors, agents, representatives, and employees, in the offering for sale, sale and distribution in interstate commerce of candy and candy products, cease and desist from:

1. Selling and distributing to wholesale dealers and jobbers, for resale to retail dealers and to retail dealers direct, candy so packed and assembled that sales of said candy to the general public are to be made, or may be made by means of a lottery, gaming device or gift enterprise;
2. Supplying to, or placing in the hands of, retail and wholesale dealers and jobbers, packages or assortments of candy which are used, or may be used, without alteration or rearrangement of the contents, of such packages or assortments, to conduct a lottery, gaming device or gift enterprise in the sale or distribution of the candy or candy products contained in said assortments to the public;
3. Supplying to, or placing in the hands of, retail and wholesale dealers and jobbers, assortments of candy, together with a device com-only called a "push card," or a device commonly called a "punch board," for use or which may be used in distributing or selling said candy to the public at retail;

4. Furnishing to retail and wholesale dealers and jobbers a device, commonly called a "push card," or a device commonly called a "punch board" either with packages or assortments of candy or candy products, or separately bearing a legend or legends, or statements, informing the purchasing public that the candy or candy products are being sold to the public by lot or chance or in accordance with a sales plan which constitutes a lottery, gaming device or gift enterprise.

It is further ordered, That the respondent, Sweet Candy Company, a corporation within 30 days after the service upon it of this order, shall file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which it has complied with the order to cease and desist hereinabove set forth.

IN THE MATTER OF

STERNHEIMER BROS., INC., TRADING AS ARMY & NAVY SUPPLY COMPANY AND ARMY GOODS STORE

COMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION
OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 26, 1914

Docket 2756. Complaint, Apr. 3, 1936—Decision, Dec. 31, 1936

Where a corporation engaged in the operation of a number of retail stores in the District of Columbia and in the State of Virginia, and maintaining also a mail order business through which it solicited and accepted orders for merchandise out of its stock from persons in the various States other than that aforementioned, and successor to a concern long theretofore engaged chiefly in the purchase of goods from the Army and Navy Departments of the United States Government and in the offer thereof for resale, and in competition, as such successor to aforesaid business, with those engaged in the marketing of goods similar to its own and who do not use words "Army" or "Navy," or either of them, in connection with their corporate or trade names or their advertisements or representations as to source or origin of merchandise sold by them—

Made use of words "Army" and "Navy" in its corporate and various trade names under which it operated its various stores and branches of its said business, and including such names as "Army Goods Store," "Army Store," "Navy Store," and "The Army and Navy Supply Company," and featured its aforesaid various names in large signs affixed to its mercantile establishments, and in trade journals, catalogs, circulars, and advertisements in daily newspapers and other periodicals, with words "Army" or "Navy" of equal prominence with other portions of the name, notwithstanding fact that a substantial portion of its inventory had been drawn from the common marts of trade, and the theretofore sales by the Army and Navy Departments of large quantities of surplus and condemned material had been so sharply curtailed that, for a number of years last past, almost no goods had been sold;

With result that various members of the purchasing public formed the conclusion or received the impression and belief from use of aforesaid words, that goods to be purchased in store in question were substantially all, if not all, procured from aforesaid departments of the Government, and were of the quality and nature used by them, and that a substantial bargain, with reference to price and quality, would be obtained in such store, and with the result that a substantial number of such members of said public were induced, by virtue of such belief or impression, to make purchases of and from it, and with capacity and tendency to, and effect of, misleading and deceiving members of purchasing public into such false impression and belief and of causing an unfair diversion of trade from competitors who offer merchandise identical with the bulk of its inventory and procured, like its own, from same source and ordinary marts of trade, without making use of such misleading and deceptive practice; to the substantial injury of competition in commerce:

Complaint

Held, That such acts and practices were to the prejudice of the public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition.

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that Sternheimer Bros., Inc., trading as Army and Navy Supply Co. and Army Goods Store, hereinafter referred to as respondent, has been and now is using unfair methods of competition in commerce as "commerce" is defined in said act, and it appearing to the Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Said respondent, Sternheimer Bros., Inc., is a corporation organized and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Virginia and having its principal office and place of business in the city of Richmond and State of Virginia. The respondent maintains a mercantile establishment owned and controlled by it located in the city of Washington within the District of Columbia.

The respondent has, during its entire corporate existence and for more than three years last past, maintained within the city of Richmond, State of Virginia and the city of Washington, District of Columbia a general mercantile business and has sold and caused to be sold and still causes merchandise in which it deals to be sold and transported from its place of business in the city of Richmond into and through the District of Columbia and the various States of the United States other than the State of Virginia, to purchasers of the same; has sold and caused and still causes merchandise in which it deals to be transported from its place of business in the District of Columbia into and through the various States of the United States; and has sold and caused and still causes merchandise in which it deals to be sold and transported from its place of business in the city of Washington, District of Columbia throughout the said District of Columbia, in commerce, within the intent and meaning of "commerce" appearing in the act hereinabove set forth.

In the course and conduct of its business, respondent is in competition with other individuals, copartnerships and corporations engaged in the sale and distribution of like merchandise throughout the various States of the United States and throughout the District of Columbia.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of the business of the respondent, it has operated continuously in the city of Richmond and State of Virginia under the trade name "Army and Navy Supply Co." and in the city of Washington under the trade name "Army Goods Store." By the implied representation of the trade names related, purchasers are led to believe that the stock of merchandise held out to the purchasing public by the respondent was made for, or purchased from the Army or Navy Departments of the United States Government but virtually none of the merchandise is purchased at any Army or Navy surplus or refuse goods sales. The small amount of such Army or Navy goods carried by the respondent, if any, is bought from jobbers, wholesalers and others who buy at such Army or Navy reject or refuse goods sales. The remainder of the respondent's stock of merchandise consists of the usual stock found generally in ordinary mercantile establishments and is procured from the common marts of trade. It is purchased from those sources from which the general merchant buys his stock of goods and is not purchased from the Army or Navy or from those who purchase merchandise at any Army or Navy surplus or refuse sales. The respondent is in no way connected with the Army or Navy and has no affiliation, association, or working agreement with such Departments.

PAR. 3. There are among the members of the purchasing public, a substantial number thereof who have a preference for the purchase of goods, wares, and merchandise actually procured from the United States Army or Navy Departments in the belief that they thereby secure goods of superior quality to those of like price and design to be procured from other sources.

There are among the competitors of said respondent, as referred to in paragraph 1 above, individuals, copartnerships, firms, and corporations engaged in the sale and distribution of like and similar merchandise within the areas wherein the respondent trades, who do not falsely misrepresent the source of origin of their merchandise by the use of a false and misleading corporate or trade name.

The above acts and practices of the respondent have and had the capacity and tendency to mislead and deceive and have misled and deceived a substantial number of the members of the purchasing public into the false belief that in purchasing from the respondent they were purchasing goods secured from the Army or Navy Departments of the United States Government and were actually securing a superior quality of goods for the price paid therefor. Such acts and practices of the respondent have diverted trade to the respondent from its competitors engaged in the sale of merchandise of a similar quality and kind with that sold and offered for sale by the respondent in interstate commerce, as aforesaid, and which said competitors refrain from falsely representing that the goods so sold and offered for sale by them are derived from the Army or Navy Departments of the United States Government and who do not use a false or misleading corporate or trade name in such business.

PAR. 4. The alleged acts and things done by the respondent are all to the injury and prejudice of the public and the competitors of respondent in interstate commerce and constitute unfair methods of competition in interstate commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914.

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, on April 3, 1936, issued, and on April 6, 1936, served, its complaint in this proceeding upon respondent, Sternheimer Bros., Inc., trading as Army and Navy Supply Company and Army Goods Store, charging it with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of the provisions of said act. After the issuance of said complaint and the filing of respondent's answer, the Commission, by order entered herein, granted respondent's motion for permission to withdraw said answer and to substitute therefor an answer admitting all the material allegations of the complaint to be true and waiving the taking of further evidence and all other intervening procedure, and said substitute answer was duly filed in the office of the Commission. Thereafter, this proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on the said complaint and the substitute answer, briefs and oral arguments of counsel having been waived, and the Commission having duly considered the same and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. The respondent was organized in 1868 as the "L. Rose Company" as a copartnership and was engaged chiefly in the business of purchasing goods from the Army and Navy Departments of the United States Government and offering them for resale. Sternheimer Bros., Inc., is a Virginia corporation, successor to said company and such corporation maintains 16 retail stores scattered throughout the State of Virginia, variously operated under the trade names "Army Goods Store," "Army Store," "Navy Store." At the time of the issuance of the complaint, respondent operated two stores in the District of Columbia under the name "Army Goods Store."

PAR. 2. The respondent likewise maintains a mail-order business under the trade name "The Army and Navy Supply Company," which solicits and accepts orders for merchandise out of the stock of the respondent corporation from various firms, persons, partnerships located in the various States of the United States other than the State of Virginia. It transports or causes the commodities so ordered to be transported into and through the various States of the United States and the District of Columbia to such purchasers.

The respondent has maintained and now maintains a constant current of trade and commerce among and between the various States of the United States and the District of Columbia in said goods, wares, and merchandise.

PAR. 3. There are among the competitors of respondent in commerce, among and between the various States of the United States, persons, partnerships, firms, and individuals engaged in the marketing of like merchandise but who do not use the words "Army" or "Navy" or either of them in connection with their corporate or trade name or in connection with their advertisements or representations as to the source of origin of the merchandise which they sell.

PAR. 4. From approximately 1920 until the year 1927, the Army and Navy Department of the United States Government sold large quantities of surplus and condemned material. Subsequent to 1927, these sales have been so sharply curtailed that since the year 1932 almost no goods have been sold.

PAR. 5. Of the inventory of the respondent, a substantial portion thereof has been drawn from the common marts of trade.

PAR. 6. The respondent corporation causes its various trade names to be displayed in large signs affixed to its mercantile establishments, in trade journals, catalogues, circulars, advertisements appearing in daily newspapers and other periodicals with the words "Army" and "Navy" or either of them featured as prominently as other portions of its name.

PAR. 7. Various members of the purchasing public, upon observing the use of the words "Army" and "Navy" in connection with the corporate name of the respondent and in its circulars and advertisements, as hereinabove stated, have formed the conclusion or received the impression and belief, from the use of such words, that the goods to be purchased in said store were substantially all, if not all, procured from the Army and Navy Departments of the United States Government; that the goods were of the quality and nature used by said Departments; that a substantial bargain with reference to price and quality would be obtained in such store; and a substantial number of such members of the purchasing public have been induced, by virtue of such belief or impression, to make purchases of and from the respondent.

PAR. 8. The use by the respondent of the words "Army" and "Navy" in connection with its corporate name and its various trade names in its advertisements and circulars, as above described, had and has the tendency and capacity to, and did and does, in fact, mislead and deceive members of the purchasing public into the false impression and belief as set forth in paragraph 7 hereof.

PAR. 9. The use of the words "Army" and "Navy" in connection with the corporate and trade names, circulars and advertisements of the respondent, has caused and causes an unfair diversion of trade from competitors of the respondent who offer to sell merchandise identical with the bulk of the inventory of the respondent and procured from the same source, i. e., the ordinary marts of trade, but who do not make use of such misleading and deceptive practices, and has caused and now causes substantial injury to competition in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondent, Sternheimer Bros., Inc., trading as Army and Navy Supply Company and Army Goods Store, are to the prejudice of the public and of respondents' competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce, within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

This proceeding having been heard by the Federal Trade Commission upon the complaint of the Commission and the answer filed herein on December 30, 1936, by respondent admitting all the material allegations of the complaint to be true and waiving the taking of further evidence and all other intervening procedure, and the Commission having made its findings as to the facts and its conclusion that said respondent has violated the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes,"

It is ordered, That the respondent, Sternheimer Brothers, Inc., a corporation, also trading as Army & Navy Supply Company and Army Goods Store, or under any other trade name, its officers, representatives, agents, and employees, in connection with the offering for sale, sale, and distribution of goods, wares and merchandise in interstate commerce or in the District of Columbia, do forthwith cease and desist from:

1. Using in connection with its corporate name or trade names the words "Army" and "Navy" or either of them.

2. Advertising or causing to be advertised in any circulars, catalogues, trade journals, daily newspapers or other periodicals the words "Army" and "Navy" or either of them, descriptive of or in connection with any merchandise sold or offered to be sold to the public unless the said merchandise has been actually procured from the Army or Navy Departments of the United States Government.

Provided, however, That for a period of three years the words "Formerly Army Goods Store," "Formerly Navy Goods Store," and "Formerly The Army & Navy Supply Company" may be used, and Provided, however, That the terms of Section 2 hereof shall not apply to such contracts for advertising as may have been entered into prior to the issuance and service of this order.

It is further ordered, That respondent shall, within 90 days after the service upon it of a copy of this order, file with the Commission an interim report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which this order has been complied with.

And it is further ordered, That respondent shall, within 36 months after the service upon it of a copy of this order, file with the Commission a final report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which this order has been complied with and conformed to.

IN THE MATTER OF
RETAIL FURNITURE DEALERS' ASSOCIATION OF
ST. LOUIS, ET AL.

COMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION
OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 23, 1914

Docket 2757. Complaint, Apr. 9, 1936—Decision, Dec. 31, 1936

Where the retail furniture dealers' association of St. Louis, members of which were engaged in the purchase of furniture and allied products including, usually, electric refrigerators and radios, from various manufacturers, distributors, wholesalers, jobbers, and dealers in many different States, and in reselling such furniture and merchandise at retail to various members of the consuming public in Missouri and Illinois and in other States of the trade area adjacent thereto, and some of the members of which were, during the time herein concerned, engaged in commerce between and among the different States and in trade, business, and commerce which had a direct and substantial effect upon interstate commerce in furniture and allied products, including electric refrigerators and radios, and some of the members of which, thus engaged, were in substantial competition with others similarly engaged in the purchase and sale at retail and distribution of such products; and the officers and executive board members of said association; in pursuance of objects for which created and to enhance and promote the volume of trade, business, and profits of its members, and incident to certain policies, sales methods, and trade practices which they sought to have and, which, to some extent, were put into effect by manufacturers, distributors, wholesalers, and jobbers engaged in interstate commerce and trading in area in question—

- (a) Requested such wholesalers, jobbers, and manufacturers, selling furniture and allied products in area in question, to adopt, follow and adhere to policy and practice that no sales of such products be made by them directly to ultimate consumer or to their own employees, except for latter's personal use, or to contractors, institutions, hotels, apartment-house operators, real-estate dealers, or large industrial plants, and that requests from ultimate consumers to buy merchandise from them, to be billed through some retail dealer, be refused, and such customer be required to purchase from a "regular" retailer, and that no sales or deliveries be made by them to homes of ultimate consumers and no merchandise be sold to salesmen for any furniture retailer unless sold, billed, and delivered to such dealer;
- (b) Requested such wholesalers, etc., to adopt, follow and adhere to policy and practice that no orders for merchandise be accepted by them from dealers in cities other than St. Louis, Mo., or East St. Louis, Ill., where delivery thereof was to be made in said two last-named cities, and that no merchandise at any time be donated by them or placed on consignment basis with anyone, except for short period for window or floor display only;
- (c) Requested such wholesalers, etc., to adopt, follow, and adhere to policy and practice that they do not sell merchandise to concerns who sell at retail and who, in so doing, hold themselves out to public and to their customers as contract home furnishers operating on basis similar to that of whole-salers, and also that they do not go upon the sales floor of any retailer and talk to purchasers or prospective purchasers of line of merchandise offered for sale in particular retail store or department thereof; and

Where said association, in order to make such sales methods, policies and practices effective and require compliance therewith by all such manufacturers, etc., trading in said area, acting through its officers and executive board—

(d) Announced adoption by it of aforesaid selling methods, policies and practices in bulletins and letters distributed among its members and sent to manufacturers and distributors, and set forth, in bulletins or circulars to its members, names of manufacturers and distributors who cooperated or agreed to cooperate in enforcement of such sales methods and policies adopted by it;

(e) Acquainted manufacturers and distributors with names of those who, it asserted, were not entitled and should not be permitted to buy furniture at wholesale prices, and sought and obtained promises and assurances of cooperation by manufacturers, wholesalers and jobbers to the end that all ultimate consumers of merchandise would be refused the advantage of buying at wholesale and would be required to purchase merchandise only through regular retail stores; and

Where some of said association members, following discussion and the advocating of the adoption by the association of the policy that all members impose a carrying charge, in addition to the advertised cash price, for merchandise sold on installments or deferred payment plan, and acting without authority from the association—

(f) Interviewed certain manufacturers, distributors, jobbers, and wholesalers engaged in interstate commerce in trade area in question, in furtherance of their desire that said manufacturers, etc., adopt a policy of selling only to such retailers in said area as impose such a carrying charge, and intimated, in some cases, that they did not intend to purchase products handled by such manufacturers, etc., as later sold or continued to sell the same to those retailers who did not use or impose such charges, with capacity and tendency to instill in the minds of said manufacturers, etc., belief that it, i. e., the association, had adopted and was pursuing practices and policies above set forth and requiring all its members to impose a carrying charge on installment or deferred payment plan merchandise, as above set forth, and was attempting to compel them to desist from selling their respective lines to dealers competing with the members who did not conform in the above respects and to induce some of said manufacturers, etc., to believe that if they persisted in selling their products to such non-conforming furniture dealers, association members would cease buying said lines from them, and with tendency, as result thereof, to impel latter to refuse to sell their said lines to those furniture dealers in and around said named cities and who did not thus conform; and

With capacity and tendency, by reason of said plan, program, and undertaking, and acts and practices and selling methods and policies in pursuance thereof in trade area in and around said cities and in Missouri, Illinois, and adjoining States, to (1) monopolize in certain of said members business of dealing in and distributing furniture and allied products, including electric refrigerators and radios, (2) lessen and restrain competition in said line of products and deprive purchasing and consuming public of advantages in price, service, and other considerations which they would receive and enjoy under conditions of normal, unobstructed, free, and fair competition therein, (3) substantially increase cost to purchasers of such products, (4) discriminate against some business enterprises which were or had been engaged in selling and distributing same, (5) obstruct, hamper, and interfere with normal and natural flow of trade in commerce in furniture and allied products into, through, and from said trade area, and (6) prejudice and fetter the public and manufacturers, producers, distributors, and competing retailers who did not conform to their program or methods or did not desire to do so:

Held, That such acts and practices were to the prejudice of the public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition.

COMPLAINT¹

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that the respondents hereinabove designated, have been and are using unfair methods of competition in commerce as "commerce" is defined in said act, and it appearing to said Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent, Retail Furniture Dealers' Association of St. Louis, is a non-profit corporation organized under the laws of the State of Missouri, by virtue of a certain decree and order made and entered by the Circuit Court of the city of St. Louis, Mo., on December 17, 1923; that said corporation was organized for the expressed purpose of promoting the interest of, and to secure friendly connections between, retail furniture dealers in the city of St. Louis, State of Missouri; to promote and combine the influence and intelligence of its members; for the protection of their trade against imposition, injustice, or encroachment upon their common rights and interests; to foster and interchange thoughts and ideas for their mutual benefit as a result of the experience and ability of all; to urge and encourage national, state, and city legislation for the furtherance of the interest of just laws; to secure for its members equitable treatment in all their business dealings with manufacturers of, and dealers in, furniture supplies; to recommend the abolishment of the practice of some manufacturers and wholesale furniture dealers of peddling and selling goods at retail to the detriment of the retail line of business; to disseminate knowledge and information among its members relating to and in connection with the retail furniture business; to give and hold furniture and household shows and exhibits from time to time; to do such other acts and things as do or may tend to accomplish the purpose of the said corporation and are within the laws of the State of Missouri and the United States; that the principal office and place of business of said Association is located at 926 Chemical Building, St. Louis, Mo.

PAR. 2. That for some years prior to August 1, 1933, said respondent corporation was not active, but on or about said date it was informally recognized by agreement among the respondent members hereinafter named, who theretofore had been members or who, upon said date or subsequent thereto, voluntarily became members of said Association; that on said date certain amended bylaws were adopted for the regulation of said corporation which vested the government and control thereof in the officers, and an executive board composed of the president, vice president, and representatives of six members of said Association elected by the members. The said bylaws provide that the members of said corporation shall be composed of individuals, firms, and corporations who carry a stock of furniture or kindred wares, engaged as principals in retailing the same from their own place of business in the city of St. Louis, Mo.

The following named respondents have been or are members of the executive board of said respondent Association, in addition to the presidents and vice presidents above named, to wit:*

PAR. 5. That the several members of said respondent Association, in the course and conduct of their respective businesses, purchase furniture and allied products, including, in most cases, electric refrigerators and radios, from various manufacturers, distributors, wholesalers, jobbers, and dealers located in many different States of the United States, and cause said commodities so purchased to be transported from the State of origin thereof, being States other than the States of Missouri and Illinois, to, into and through various States of the United States, and into the States of Missouri and Illinois; that said respondent members resell said furniture and merchandise at retail to various members of the consuming public located in the States of Missouri and Illinois and in other States in the trade area adjacent thereto; that said commodities are ordinarily purchased at wholesale or from the manufacturer by said member respondents with the intention and for the purpose of reselling and delivering the same at retail to purchasers located in the States of Missouri and Illinois, and States adjacent thereto, such resales being made from the respective places of business of said respondents, where said goods are assembled and displayed for sale for varying periods of time; that said respondent members, upon sales at retail being made to purchasers, deliver and transport or cause to be delivered and transported said goods so shipped into the States of Missouri and Illinois to the purchasers thereof located in the States of Missouri and Illinois, and other States adjacent thereto; that said respondent members are, and have been during all the time herein mentioned, engaged in commerce between and among different States of the United States, and all of said respondents above named are and have been engaged in trade, business and commerce having a direct effect upon interstate commerce in furniture and allied products, including electric refrigerators and radios.

PAR. 6. That in the course and conduct of their said businesses, said respondent members are in substantial or potential competition with other persons, firms and corporations engaged in the sale at retail and distribution of furniture and allied products, including electric refrigerators and radios, in the States of Missouri and Illinois, and in the trade area extending into other States adjacent thereto; that said competitors likewise purchase their wares, at wholesale or from manufacturers, in various States of the United States, and transport them or cause them to be transported to, into and through States other than the States of Missouri and Illinois to their respective places of business in said trade area and resell and deliver the same at retail to consumers located in the States of Missouri and Illinois, and States other than the State in which said competitors' respective places of business are located; that said competitors are engaged in commerce between and among the different States of the United States and in trade, business and commerce having a direct effect upon interstate commerce in furniture and allied products, including electric refrigerators and radios.

*The various individuals named at this point as past or present members of the executive board of respondent association, are set forth in Par. 4 of the findings, with the exception of two individuals, as to whom case was closed, as set forth in order closing, etc., on page 385, infra, and aforesaid enumeration is accordingly not published here in the interest of brevity.

PAR. 7. That respondents are banded and allied together in said Retail Furniture Dealers' Association of St. Louis to carry into effect the regulations, sales methods, requirements, and trade practices hereinafter described, and to enhance and promote the volume of trade, business and profits of said respondent members. And the respondents, namely, said Association, its officers, executive board, and members, during and in the period of more than three years last past have agreed, conspired, combined and confederated together and with others, and have united in and pursued a common and concerted course of action and undertaking among themselves and with others, to adopt, follow, carry out, enforce, and maintain, in a number of States comprising the trade area in and surrounding the cities of St. Louis, Mo., and East St. Louis, Ill., certain policies, sales methods and trade practices, hereafter described, which respondents attempted to or did, by coercion and compulsion, impose upon and require the adoption and observance of by retail furniture dealers in said trade area who were not members of said Association, and by manufacturers, distributors, wholesalers, and jobbers trading in said area, to the substantial or potential prejudice and injury of ultimate purchasers and consumers generally.

PAR. 8. That said policies, regulations, requirements, sales methods, and trade practices, referred to in the preceding paragraph, specifically consist of the following:

(A) As affecting retail furniture dealers in said trade area, and the purchasing public:

1. The practice and requirement that all retail furniture dealers charge as a cash price to ultimate consumers of merchandise the retail price suggested, set, or required by the manufacturer, distributor, or jobber of such merchandise.

2. The practice and requirement that in all sales of merchandise made to ultimate consumers on deferred time or installment payments there be added and imposed, by retail furniture dealers, a separate uniform carrying charge over the regular advertised retail cash price of such merchandise, for the extension of credit by a retail dealer to the customer and for the privilege extended to the purchaser of paying the purchase price in installments over an agreed period of time.

(B) As affecting manufacturers, distributors, and jobbers selling furniture and allied products in said trade area, and the purchasing public:

1. The practice and requirement that no sales of furniture or allied products be made by manufacturers, distributors, or jobbers, directly to the ultimate consumer thereof, to employees of such manufacturers, distributors, and jobbers, except for the personal use of said employees, or to contractors, institutions, hotels, apartment house operators, real estate dealers, or large industrial plants.

2. The practice and requirement that no orders for merchandise be accepted by such manufacturer, distributor, wholesaler, or jobber from dealers in cities other than St. Louis, Mo., or East St. Louis, Ill., where delivery thereof is to be made in St. Louis or East St. Louis.

3. The practice and requirement that requests from ultimate consumers to buy merchandise from such manufacturer, distributor, wholesaler, or jobber to be billed through some retail dealer be refused, and such ultimate consumer be required to purchase from a "regular" retail dealer.

4. The practice and requirement that no merchandise may at any time be donated by such manufacturers, distributors, wholesalers, or jobbers, or placed on a consignment basis with anyone, except for a short period of time for window or floor display purposes only.

5. The practice and requirement that no sales or deliveries of merchandise shall be made by such manufacturers, distributors, wholesalers, or jobbers to homes of ultimate consumers, and no merchandise shall be sold to salesmen for any retail furniture dealer unless the same is sold to, billed, and delivered to such dealer.

6. The practice and requirement that manufacturers, distributors, wholesalers, and jobbers shall not sell merchandise to concerns who sell at retail, and who in so doing hold themselves out to the public and to their retail customers as contract home furnishers operating on a basis similar to that of wholesalers.

7. The practice and requirement that no manufacturer, distributor, wholesaler, or jobber shall go upon the sales floor of any retail dealer and talk to purchasers or prospective purchasers of the line of merchandise offered for sale in that retail store or department thereof.

PAR. 9. That said so-called carrying charge was and is used by and imposed upon the purchasing public by respondent members, who variously designate the same as a service charge, budget charge, credit charge, time payment plan, and other like terms; but however designated, said carrying charge was and is usually represented to the public by respondent members as being an interest charge on deferred payments of the purchase price, at the rate of one-half of one percent per month, or six percent per annum. Such representations so made to the public by respondent members were and are false and misleading, since in truth and in fact the said carrying charge in no case constitutes an interest charge at said rate upon deferred payments of the purchase price. On the contrary it is either an interest charge on the entire principal amount of said deferred payments for the full installment period, in which case the purchaser is charged interest on installment payments of the principal after the same are liquidated, or it is intended to and does include items other than interest, estimated in advance as to amount, such as office and accounting expense, the expense incident to repossession of chattels in case of default by some purchasers in the payment of deferred installments, loss of or damage to chattels repossessed from defaulting purchasers, legal and collection expense and other items attributable to defaulting purchasers. The true nature and make-up of said carrying charge is not in most cases divulged to the purchaser, and the imposition by respondent members of such carrying charge upon purchasers of furniture and allied products on installment payments as above set forth, substantially prejudices and injures those members of the purchasing public who are unable to pay cash for their purchases for such products and those installment purchasers who do not default in their obligations, and unfairly and unreasonably enhances the price of such commodities to such purchasers, with a resulting discrimination against them.

PAR. 10. That for the purpose of making such sales methods, policies and requirements effective and of requiring compliance therewith by all competing retail dealers in furniture and allied products in the several states constituting the trade area adjacent to St. Louis, by manufacturers, distributors, and jobbers trading therein, and by the ultimate purchasing public located therein, said respondent Association, acting through its officers and executive board, and with the knowledge, consent, approval, and active cooperation and participation of respondent members, did the following things:

1. Issued bulletins, circulars, and other printed matter, and distributed the same among its members, and caused the same to be sent to manufacturers, distributors, and others, in which printed matter the respondent Association announced the adoption by it on behalf of its members of the selling methods, policies, and requirements above described.

2. Issued bulletins and circulars, which it sent to its members and to manufacturers, distributors, and others, in which bulletins and circulars were set forth the names of retail furniture dealers who did not observe, or who failed or refused to follow or abide by the sales methods and policies adopted as aforesaid by the said Association.

3. Issued bulletins and circulars listing the names and products of manufacturers and distributors who did not follow, or who failed or refused to abide by its said sales methods and policies which bulletins and circulars were distributed by it among its members and others, with the result that certain of its members thereafter refused to buy, or threatened not to buy further merchandise from such offending manufacturers and distributors.

4. Issued bulletins and circulars to its said members and to others, setting forth the names of manufacturers and distributors who cooperated, or agreed to cooperate, in the enforcement of the said sales methods and policies adopted by the said Association, which bulletins suggested and proposed that the members of the Association should patronize such manufacturers and distributors who cooperated or agreed to cooperate with the said Association.

5. Appointed a committee of its members, with instructions to inform, and which committee members did inform, manufacturers and distributors that, unless such manufacturers and distributors agreed to and did cooperate with the respondent Association, then the members of the said Association would discontinue buying the line of merchandise sold by such manufacturers and distributors.

6. Acquainted manufacturers and distributors with the names of those persons or concerns engaged in competitive businesses with its members, who, so respondents asserted, were not entitled and should not be permitted to buy furniture at wholesale prices.

7. Sought and obtained promises and assurances of cooperation by manufacturers, wholesalers, and jobbers to the end that all ultimate consumers of merchandise would be refused the advantage of buying at wholesale, and would be required to purchase merchandise only through regular retail stores.

PAR. 11. The capacity, tendency, and effect of said plan, program, agreement, combination, conspiracy, confederation, and undertaking, and the said acts and practices and selling methods and policies of said respondents in pursuance thereof, hereinabove set forth, are and have been in the trade area in and around the cities of St. Louis, Mo. and East St. Louis, Ill., the States of Missouri and Illinois, and adjoining States:

1. To monopolize in said respondent members, and "regular" dealers, the business of dealing in and distributing furniture and allied products, including electric refrigerators and radios.

2. To unreasonably lessen, eliminate, restrain, stifle, hamper, and suppress competition in the said retail furniture and allied products trade and industry, and to deprive the purchasing and consuming public of advantages in price, service, and other considerations which they would receive and enjoy under conditions of normal and unobstructed or free and fair competition in said trade and industry; and to otherwise operate as a restraint upon and a detriment to the freedom of fair and legitimate competition in such trade and industry.

3. To fix prices at which furniture and allied products, including electric refrigerators and radios, are sold at retail in said trade area.

4. To substantially increase the cost to purchasers of such furniture and allied products.

5. To suppress, eliminate and discriminate against small business enterprises which are or have been engaged in selling and distributing furniture and allied products.

6. To obstruct, hamper and interfere with the normal and natural flow of trade and commerce in furniture and allied products, into, through and from said trade area; and to injure respondents' competitors in unfairly diverting business and trade from them, depriving them thereof, and otherwise driving or "freezing" them out of business.

7. To prejudice and injure the public, and manufacturers, producers, dealers, distributors, and others who do not conform to respondents' program or methods, or who do not desire to conform to them, but are compelled to do so by the concerted action of respondents herein alleged.

PAR. 12. The above alleged acts and things done by respondents have a dangerous tendency unduly to hinder competition in the furniture and allied products trade in said trade area, and to create a monopoly thereof in the hands of respondents, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914.

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, on the 9th day of April, A. D., 1936, issued and served its complaint in this proceeding upon respondents, Retail Furniture Dealers Association of St. Louis, and its officers, executive board, and members, as hereinafter particularly designated and enumerated, charging them with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of the provisions of said act. Thereafter, said respondents, after having filed their answers to said complaint, filed herein a certain stipulation as to the facts to be taken as the only facts in this proceeding and in lieu of testimony which might be adduced in support of and in opposition to the complaint and answers herein, which said stipulation has been approved by the Commission. And said respondents, in said stipulation as to the facts so filed by them, consented that the Commission might proceed upon the statements of fact therein contained, including such inferences as it may draw from such facts, to make its findings and its conclusion based thereon and to enter its order disposing of the proceeding without presentation of argument or the filing of briefs. Thereafter, the proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on the said complaint, the answers thereto and said stipulation as to the facts, and the Commission having duly considered the same and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent, Retail Furniture Dealers Association of St. Louis, is a non-profit corporation organized under the laws of the State of Missouri, by virtue of a certain decree and order made and entered by the Circuit Court of the city of St. Louis, Mo., on December 17, 1923; that said corporation was organized for the following expressed purposes: Promoting the interest of, and to secure friendly connections between retail furniture dealers in the city of St. Louis, State of Missouri; to promote and combine the influence and intelligence of its members; for the protection of their trade against imposition, injustice, or encroachment upon their common rights and interests; to foster and interchange thoughts and ideas for their mutual benefits as a result of the experience and ability of all; to urge and encourage national, State, and city legislation for the furtherance of the interest to just laws; to secure for its members equitable treatment in all their business dealings with manufacturers of, and dealers in, furniture supplies; to recommend the abolishment of the practice of some manufacturers and wholesale furniture dealers of peddling and selling goods at retail to the detriment of the retail line of business; to disseminate knowledge and information among its members relating to, and in connection with, the retail furniture business; to give and hold furniture and household shows and exhibits from time to time; to do such other acts and things as do or may tend to accomplish the purpose of the said corporation and are within the laws of the State of Missouri and the United States; that the principal office and place of business of said association is located at 926 Chemical Building, St. Louis, Mo.

James A. Mosley, representing respondent, Mosley-Thuner Furniture Co., 2122 South Broadway, St. Louis, Mo.

PAR. 5. That some of the several members of said respondent association, in the course and conduct of their respective businesses, purchase furniture and allied products, including, in most cases, electric refrigerators and radios, from various manufacturers, distributors, wholesalers, jobbers, and dealers located in many different States of the United States and cause said commodities so purchased to be transported from the State of origin thereof, including States other than the States of Missouri and Illinois, to, into and through various States of the United States, and into the States of Missouri and Illinois; that some of said members resell said furniture and merchandise at retail to various members of the consuming public located in the States of Missouri and Illinois and in other States of the trade area adjacent thereto; that said commodities are ordinarily purchased at wholesale or from the manufacturer by some of said members with the intention and for the purpose of reselling and delivering the same at retail to purchasers located in the States of Missouri and Illinois, and States adjacent thereto, such resales being made from the respective places of business of said members, where said goods are assembled and displayed for sale for varying periods of time; that some of said members, upon sales at retail being made to purchasers deliver and transport or cause to be delivered and transported said goods so sold into the States of Missouri and Illinois to the purchasers thereof located in the States of Missouri and Illinois, and other States adjacent thereto; that some of said members of said respondent association are, and have been during all the time herein mentioned, engaged in commerce between and among different States of the United States, and some of said members above named are and have been engaged in trade, business and commerce having a direct and substantial effect upon interstate commerce in furniture and allied products, including electric refrigerators and radios.

PAR. 6. That in the course and conduct of their said businesses, some of said members of said respondent association are in substantial competition with other persons, firms and corporations engaged in the sale at retail and distribution of furniture and allied products, including electric refrigerators and radios, in the States of Missouri and Illinois, and in the trade area extending into other States adjacent thereto; that said competitors likewise purchase their wares, at wholesale or from manufacturers in various States of the United States, and transport them or cause them to be transported to, into and through States other than the States of Missouri and Illinois to their respective places of business in said trade area and resell and deliver the same at retail to consumers located in the States of Missouri and Illinois, and States other than the State in which said competitors' respective places of business are located; that said competitors are engaged in commerce between and among the different States of the United States and in trade, business and commerce having a direct and substantial effect upon interstate commerce in furniture and allied products, including electric refrigerators and radios.

PAR. 7. That in pursuance of the objects for which said respondent association was incorporated, and for the purpose of enhancing and promoting the volume of trade, business and profits of its members in the course and conduct of its activities, the said Retail Furniture Dealers Association of St. Louis, acting through its officers, executive board, and agents has sought to put into effect, and has to some extent put into effect, certain policies, sales methods and trade practices hereafter described. That said respondent association has for the period from August 1, 1933 to May 27, 1935, pursued a course of action to adopt, follow, carry out, enforce, and maintain in a number of States comprising the trade area in and surrounding the cities of St. Louis, Mo. and East St. Louis, Ill., certain policies, sales methods and trade practices, hereafter described, which said respondent association attempted to or did by persuasion require the adoption and observance of by manufacturers, distributors, wholesalers, and jobbers engaged in interstate commerce and trading in said area.

PAR. 8. That said policies, requirements, sales methods, and trade practices, referred to in the preceding paragraph, specifically consist of the following:

Requests to wholesalers, jobbers, and manufacturers selling furniture and allied products in said trade area that they adopt, follow, and adhere to:

1. The policy and practice that no sales of furniture or allied products be made by manufacturers, distributors, or jobbers, directly to the ultimate consumer thereof, to employees of such manufacturers, distributors, and jobbers, except for the personal use of said employees, or to contractors, institutions, hotels, apartment house operators, real estate dealers, or large industrial plants.

2. The policy and practice that no orders for merchandise be accepted by such manufacturer, distributor, wholesaler, or jobber from dealers in cities other than St. Louis, Mo., or East St. Louis, Ill., where delivery thereof is to be made in St. Louis or East St. Louis.

3. The policy and practice that requests from ultimate consumers to buy merchandise from such manufacturer, distributor, wholesaler, or jobber to be billed through some retail dealer be refused, and such ultimate consumer be required to purchase from a "regular" retail dealer.

4. The policy and practice that no merchandise may at any time be donated by such manufacturers, distributors, wholesalers, or jobbers, or placed on a consignment basis with anyone, except for a short period of time for window or floor display purposes only.

5. The policy and practice that no sales or deliveries of merchandise shall be made by such manufacturers, distributors, wholesalers, or jobbers to homes of ultimate consumers, and no merchandise shall be sold to salesmen for any retail furniture dealer unless the same is sold to, billed and delivered to such dealer.

6. The policy and practice that manufacturers, distributors, wholesalers, and jobbers shall not sell merchandise to concerns who sell at retail, and who in so doing hold themselves out to the public and to their retail customers as contract home furnishers operating on a basis similar to that of wholesalers.

7. The policy and practice that no manufacturer, distributor, wholesaler, or jobber shall go upon the sales floor of any retail dealer and talk to purchasers or prospective purchasers of the line of merchandise offered for sale in that retail store or department thereof.

PAR. 9. That for the purpose of making such sales methods, policies and practices effective and of requiring compliance therewith by all manufacturers, distributors, and jobbers trading therein, said respondent association, acting through its officers and executive board, did the following things:

(1) Issued bulletins and letters and distributed the same among its members, and caused the same to be sent to manufacturers and distributors, in which printed matter the respondent association announced the adoption by it of the selling methods, policies, and practices above described.

(2) Issued bulletins or circulars to its said members, setting forth the names of manufacturers and distributors who cooperated, or agreed to cooperate in the enforcement of the said sales methods and policies adopted by the said association.

(3) Acquainted manufacturers and distributors with the names of those persons or concerns who respondent association asserted were not entitled and should not be permitted to buy furniture at wholesale prices.

(4) Sought and obtained promises and assurances of cooperation by manufacturers, wholesalers, and jobbers to the end that all ultimate consumers of merchandise would be refused the advantage of buying at wholesale, and would be required to purchase merchandise only through regular retail stores.

PAR. 10. That in addition to the foregoing, some of the said members of respondent association, at association meetings, discussed and advocated the adoption by the association of the policy that all members thereof impose a carrying charge in addition to the advertised cash price for merchandise sold on installments or deferred payment plan; that without authority from such association said members interviewed certain manufacturers, distributors, jobbers, and wholesalers engaged in interstate commerce in said trade area in furtherance of their desire that manufacturers, wholesalers, and jobbers adopt a policy of selling only to retail dealers in said area who impose such a carrying charge; that in some cases during said interviews some of said members did intimate that they did not intend to purchase products handled by such manufacturer, distributor, jobber, or wholesaler if the latter sold or continued to sell such products to those retail dealers who did not use or impose such carrying charges.

PAR. 11. The Commission concludes from the foregoing that the capacity and tendency of the aforesaid activities of respondents, as set forth in paragraphs 8, 9, and 10 above, was to instill into the minds of some of said manufacturers, distributors, jobbers, and wholesalers the belief that said respondent association had adopted and was pursuing the practices and policies above set forth and was requiring all its members to impose a carrying charge in addition to the advertised cash price for merchandise sold on installments or deferred payment plan, and the belief that respondent association was attempting to compel such manufacturers, distributors, jobbers, and wholesalers to desist from selling their respective lines of merchandise to dealers competing with respondent members, who did not conform to such practices and policies and who did not impose such carrying charges upon their customers; that the capacity and tendency of said activities was to induce some of said manufacturers, distributors, jobbers, and wholesalers to believe that if they persisted in selling their said merchandise to furniture dealers who did not conform to such policies and practices or who did not impose such carrying charges, the members of respondent association would cease buying such lines of merchandise from said manufacturers, distributors, jobbers, and wholesalers, and as a result had the tendency to impel the latter to refuse to sell their lines of merchandise to furniture dealers in and around St. Louis, Mo., and East St. Louis, Ill., who did not conform to such practices and policies and who did not impose said carrying charges upon their respective customers.

PAR. 12. The Commission further concludes that the capacity and tendency of said plan, program, and undertaking, and the said acts and practices and selling methods and policies of said respondents in pursuance thereof, are and have been in the trade area in and around the cities of St. Louis, Mo., and East St. Louis, Ill., the States of Missouri and Illinois, and adjoining States:

(1) To monopolize in certain respondent members, the business of dealing in and distributing furniture and allied products, including electric refrigerators and radios.

(2) To lessen and restrain competition in the said line of commerce, and to deprive the purchasing and consuming public of advantages in price, service and other considerations which they would receive and enjoy under conditions of normal, unobstructed, free and fair competition in said line of commerce.

(3) To substantially increase the cost to purchasers of such furniture and allied products.

(4) To discriminate against some business enterprises which are or have been engaged in selling and distributing furniture and allied products.

(5) To obstruct, hamper and interfere with the normal and natural flow of trade and commerce in furniture and allied products, into, through, and from said trade area.

(6) To prejudice and fetter the public and manufacturers, producers, distributors and competing retail dealers who do not conform to respondents' program or methods, or who did not desire to do so.

Mosley, as officers or executive board members of said association, in connection with the purchase, sale and distribution of furniture and allied products, including radios and electric refrigerators in interstate commerce in and around St. Louis, Mo., and East St. Louis, Ill., and elsewhere, in pursuance of any agreement or understanding forthwith cease and desist from:

I. Adopting, following, carrying out, enforcing, maintaining, or attempting to put into effect any of the following policies, standards, sale methods, practices, requirements, or usage, to wit:

1. The collective policy and practice that retail furniture dealers require on all sales of merchandise made to ultimate consumers on deferred time or installment payments that there be added and imposed a separate uniform carrying charge over the regular advertised retail cash price of such merchandise, for the extension of credit by such retail dealers to customers and for the privilege extended to purchasers of paying the purchase price in installments over an agreed period of time.

2. The policy and practice that no sales of furniture or allied products shall be made by manufacturers, distributors, wholesalers or jobbers directly to employees of such manufacturers, distributors, wholesalers or jobbers, except for the personal use of said employees, or to contractors, institutions, hotels, apartment house operators, real estate dealers, or large industrial plants.

3. The policy and practice that no orders for merchandise shall be accepted by such manufacturers, distributors, wholesalers, or jobbers from dealers in cities other than St. Louis, Mo., or East St. Louis, Ill., where delivery thereof is to be made in St. Louis or East St. Louis.

Order

24 F. T. C.

4. The policy and practice that requests from ultimate consumers to buy merchandise from such manufacturers, wholesalers, distributors, or jobbers to be billed through some retail dealer be refused, and such ultimate consumer be required to purchase from a "regular" retail dealer.

5. The policy and practice that no merchandise may at any time be donated by such manufacturers, distributors, wholesalers or jobbers or placed on a consignment basis with anyone, except for a short period of time for window or floor display purposes only.

6. The policy and practice that no sales or deliveries of merchandise shall be made by such manufacturers, distributors, wholesalers or jobbers to homes of ultimate consumers, and no merchandise shall be sold to salesmen for any retail furniture dealer unless the same is sold to, billed and delivered to such dealer.

7. The policy and practice that manufacturers, distributors, wholesalers and jobbers shall not sell merchandise to concerns who sell at retail, and who in so doing hold themselves out to the public and to their retail customers as contract home furnishers operating on a basis similar to that of wholesalers.

8. The policy and practice that no manufacturer, distributor, wholesaler, or jobber shall go upon the sales floor of any retail dealer and talk to prospective purchasers of the lines of merchandise offered for sale in that retail store or a department thereof.

II. Collectively advocating, recommending, or requiring by persuasion, competitive pressure, compulsion or any other method of any description, the adoption, use or maintenance of either or any of the policies or practices set forth in Paragraph I hereof, by retail furniture dealers, or by manufacturers, jobbers, distributors, wholesalers, or dealers, to be used or put into effect in the course and conduct of their business.

III. Publishing or distributing circulars, bulletins, advertisements, or printed matter of any description announcing the adoption of or advocating the use of the policies and practices set forth in Paragraph I above.

IV. Publishing or distributing circulars, bulletins, advertisements, or printed matter of any description setting forth either the names of retail furniture dealers who have, and do, or those who have not or do not use, observe, or abide by the policies and practices set forth in paragraph I above, or listing the names and products of manufacturers and distributors who have and do, or those who have not and do not follow and use the sales methods and policies set forth in said paragraph.

V. Publishing or distributing circulars, bulletins, advertisements, or printed matter of any description setting forth the names and products of manufacturers and distributors who have cooperated or agreed to cooperate in the enforcement of the said policies and practices set forth in Paragraph I above, or suggesting or proposing that the members of the respondent Association shall patronize such manufacturers and distributors who so cooperate or agree to cooperate with said Association.

VI. Informing, manufacturers, jobbers, wholesalers, or distributors, by the use of any means whatsoever, that unless they or any of them agree to, and will adopt and use the policies and practices set forth in Paragraph I above, the members of respondent Association or any of them will discontinue buying the line of merchandise sold by such manufacturers, jobbers, wholesalers, or distributors.

VII. Informing manufacturers, jobbers, wholesalers or distributors by the use of any means whatsoever, of the names of those persons or concerns who are engaged in competitive business with members of the respondent Association who refuse to follow the policies and practices set forth in Paragraph I above, or notifying or advising any such manufacturer or distributor that any such person or concern should not be permitted to buy furniture or allied products at wholesale prices.

VIII. Seeking or obtaining promises or assurances of cooperation from manufacturers or distributors to the end that all ultimate consumers of merchandise be refused the advantage of buying at wholesale and that they be required to purchase merchandise only through regular retail stores.

It is further ordered, That said respondents named herein shall within 90 days from notice hereof file with the Commission, a report in writing, stating in detail the manner in which this order is being complied with and conformed to by them.

ORDER CLOSING PROCEEDING AS TO CERTAIN RESPONDENTS¹

IN THE MATTER OF
GIACOMO LAGUARDIA TRADING AS HERBA MEDICINAL LABORATORY

COMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 26, 1914

Docket 2878. Complaint, July 15, 1936—Decision, Jan. 5, 1937

Where an individual engaged in the sale of various liquids, compounds, solutions, and other matter represented by him as derived from, compiled of, or concocted from, herbs of various kinds—

Represented, in advertisements in periodicals of interstate circulation and in advertising literature circulated throughout the various States and in other ways, that he was a great specialist on herbs, and that the commodities or various medicaments, liquids, etc., prepared by him under various trade names, such as "Stomatic Tea," "Rheumatic Tea," "Renal Tea," "Pile-Aid," and "Vegetoliva Liniment," constituted competent treatments or effective remedies for stomach and digestive disorders, and numerous ailments and conditions, including excess weight, skin ailments, pains in arms, etc., and that only at his store would herbs be found that were adapted for such various maladies, etc.;

Facts being he was not a great specialist in herbs, and herbs of like nature to those blended by him could readily be procured, and curative or therapeutic value of his various liquids, compounds, etc., was not as efficacious as represented by him, either in treatment, relief, or cure of such various ailments or diseases, and such various liquids, etc., would not reduce weight, clear skin of impurities, etc., or cure diseases of the stomach or intestines, and were not a competent or effective treatment for any diseases, etc., for which named;

With result that various members of the purchasing public throughout the various States were misled and deceived by such statements into the false belief that the same were true, and that his said various preparations had a definite curative and therapeutic effect in treatment of maladies and diseases of the body, as represented by him, and were induced to use his course of treatment rather than that of a pathologist or other physician, and of thereby causing a substantial and unfair diversion of trade to him from competitors, among whom there are those engaged in the preparation, sale and transportation in commerce of compounds and toxins and solutions for treatment, cure and remedy of diseases and ailments similar to or identical with those listed by said individual, and who do not falsely represent or exaggerate the curative or therapeutic value thereof; to the substantial injury of competition in commerce:

Held, That such acts and practices were to the prejudice of the public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition.

Before Mr. John J. Keenan, trial examiner.

Mr. Alden S. Bradley for the Commission.

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that Giacomo LaGuardia, trading as Herba Medicinal Laboratory, hereinafter referred to as respondent, has been and now is using unfair methods of competition in commerce as "commerce" is defined in said act, and it appearing to the Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent is an individual doing business under the name of Herba Medicinal Laboratory, and maintains his office and principal place of business at 537 Broadway, in the city of New York, State of New York.

PAR. 2. Respondent is now and for more than five years last past has been engaged in the sale and distribution of various liquids, compounds, solutions, and other matter represented by him to be derived from, compiled of, or concocted from, herbs of various kinds and nature, and represented to have a medicinal and therapeutic value, and respondent causes said commodities, when sold, to be transported from its place of business in the city and State of New York to the purchasers thereof located in States of the United States other than the State of New York and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 3. In the course and conduct of his business respondent is in competition with other persons, firms, copartnerships, and corporations selling herb remedies and drugs, liquids, compounds, solutions, and medicaments for like use and purpose, and who likewise sell and transport the same to purchasers thereof into and through the various States of the United States other than the State in which such persons, firms, copartnerships, and corporations are located.

PAR. 4. In the course and conduct of the business of the respondent he has, without regard to underlying causes, represented by advertisements published in various articles having interstate circulation, by advertising literature circulated throughout the various States of the United States, by radio broadcasts, and in other manners that:

(a) LaGuardia's Herbs are a competent treatment or an effective remedy for—

(b) That the respondent is "a great specialist" in herbs;

(c) That only at respondent's store will herbs be found adapted for anyone of your troubles;

(d) That respondent's Rejuvenatic Tea or Rejuvenating Tea is an effective treatment for the above-named ailments, or that it will enable persons to get thin or to reduce weight, or that it corrects the cause of excessive weight acquired by indiscretions in eating, by lack of exercise, or by any other means;

(e) That respondent's Clear Skin Tea is a competent treatment for all diseases of the skin, or that it effectively combats disorders of the skin, irritations, small boils, pimples or other eruptions caused by irregular eliminations or otherwise;

(f) That respondent's Scol Diuretic Renal Tea would be of value in eliminating residues or that it absorbs the minor irritations of the urethral and vesical canals;

(g) That respondent's Pile-Aid is a competent treatment or an efficacious remedy for the various forms of hemorrhoids or that it completely dries up hemorrhoids or eradicates burns, pruritus, loss of blood or inflammations; or that these conditions will disappear as if by magic;

(h) That respondent's Vegetolina Liniment is a proper remedy for pains in the arms, legs, back or shoulders caused by intemperance, or that a single application when applied to affected joints would cause the pains to disappear as if by magic;

and many other statements of like nature and effect.

PAR. 5. Respondent sells the commodities prepared by him under various trade names, such as:

Stomatic Tea and Tonic,
Rheumatic Tea,
Renal Tea,
Pile-Aid,
Vegetolina Liniment,

and various other names applied to commodities vended by him.

PAR. 6. In truth and in fact the compounds, solutions, and concoctions of the respondent are not so efficacious as represented by him, either in the treatment, relief, or cure of the various symptoms, ailments, or diseases listed under number (1) through (28) of paragraph

Complaint

4 of this complaint, and the same do not have the therapeutic or medical value as represented by respondent in reducing the weight of the person taking the same, clearing the skin of impurities, of small boils, pimples, and other eruptions; will not cure diseases of the stomach and intestines, is no competent or effective treatment for acid regurgitation, gas, swelling of the stomach, vertigo, headache, coated tongue, constipation, kidney or liver disorders, or any other ailments and diseases above set forth. Respondent is not a great specialist in herbs and herbs of like nature can be procured at places other than the respondent's store. The preparations concocted and compounded by the respondent are not an effective cure for "any of the ailments concerning the digestive system."

Customers and potential customers throughout the various States of the United States have been deceived and misled by the statements of the respondent as above related into the false beliefs that the statements of the respondent were and are true, and that, as represented by the respondent, the preparations concocted by him as above stated had and have a definite and valuable therapeutic effect in the treatment of the maladies and diseases of the human body as represented by him. The said statements and representations also had and have a tendency and capacity to and do cause members of the consuming public, in reliance upon the erroneous beliefs as above set forth, to purchase and use the course of treatment of respondent instead of purchasing and using the remedies and products of competitors of the respondent for the treatment of the maladies, diseases and pathological conditions of the human body, including those set forth in the statements of the respondent and in other statements by the respondent as being conditions for which the use of one or more of respondent's products have a curative value.

PAR. 7. There are among the competitors of respondent persons, firms, copartnerships, and corporations engaged in the preparation, sale, and transportation in interstate commerce of compounds, concoctions, and solutions for the treatment, cure, and remedy of diseases and ailments similar to or identical with those listed in paragraph 4 of this complaint and who do not falsely represent or exaggerate the curative or therapeutic values of the same.

PAR. 8. The acts and practices of the respondent in representing the curative and therapeutic claims of the commodities prepared and sold by him, serve as inducements to purchasers and prospective purchasers to purchase substantial quantities of the commodity or commodities prepared and sold by the respondent, and have a tendency and capacity to and do divert a substantial volume of trade from the competitors of the respondent to respondent, with the result that substantial injury was and is done by respondent to substantial competition in commerce as hereinabove set out.

PAR. 9. The above acts and practices of the respondent are all to the injury and prejudice of the public and a substantial number of competitors of the respondent in interstate commerce, and constitute unfair methods of competition in interstate commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an act of Congress entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914.

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, on July 15, 1936, issued and served its complaint in this proceeding upon respondent, Giacomo LaGuardia, trading as Herba Medicinal Laboratory, charging him with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of the provisions of said act. After the issuance of said complaint and the filing of respondent's answer, the Commission, by order entered herein, granted respondent's motion for permission to withdraw said answer and to substitute therefor an answer admitting all the material allegations of the complaint to be true and waiving the taking of further evidence and all other intervening procedure, which substitute answer was duly filed in the office of the Commission. Thereafter, this proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on the said complaint and the substitute answer, briefs and oral arguments of counsel having been waived, and the Commission having duly considered the same and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent is an individual, doing business under the name of Herba Medicinal Laboratory, at 537 Broadway, New York, N. Y. He is now and for more than five years last past has been engaged in the sale of various liquids, compounds, solutions, and other matter represented by him to be derived from, compiled of, or concocted from, herbs of various kinds, and represented to have a medicinal and therapeutic value. The respondent causes such commodities, when sold, to be transported from his place of business in the city and State of New York to the purchasers thereof located in States of the United States other than the State of New York and maintains a constant current of trade and commerce in said product among and between the various States of the United States.

PAR. 2. The respondent is in competition with other persons, firms, copartnerships, and corporations selling herb remedies and drugs, liquids, compounds, solutions, and medicaments for like or similar use and purpose, and who likewise sell, transport or cause to be transported their respective commodities into and through the various States of the United States other than the State wherein they are located.

PAR. 3. Respondent represents and has represented by advertisements published in various periodicals having an interstate circulation, by advertising literature circulated throughout the various States of the United States, and in other manners; (1) that his various liquids, compounds, solutions, and medicaments constitute competent treatments or effective remedies for stomach acid, swollen or painful stomach, indigestion, inflammation of the liver, headache, coated tongue, tiredness, nervous disturbances, backaches, rheumatism, purification of blood, eczema, asthma, hay fever, cough, bronchitis, colds, pains, bad digestion, swellings, constipation, inflammation of the kidneys, kidney trouble, intestinal catarrh, head pains, sleepiness, bad breath, and "any of the ailments concerning the digestive system"; (2) that the respondent is "a great specialist" in herbs; (3) that only at respondent's store will herbs be found that are adapted for the various maladies, ills, and conditions of the human body above named; (4) that respondent's Rejuvenatic Tea or Rejuvenating Tea is an effective treatment for the above named ailments, and that it will enable persons to get thin or to reduce weight, and that it corrects the cause of excessive weight acquired by indiscretions in eating, by lack of exercise, or by any other means; (5) that respondent's Clear Skin Tea is a competent treatment for all diseases of the skin, and that it effectively combats disorders of the skin, irritations, small boils, pimples, or other eruptions caused by irregular elimination or otherwise; (6) that respondent's Scol Diuretic Renal Tea is of value in eliminating residues and that it absorbs the minor irritations of the urethral and vesical canals; (7) that respondent's Pile-Aid is a competent treatment and efficacious remedy for the various forms of hemorrhoids and that it completely dries up hemorrhoids or eradicates burns, pruritus, loss of blood or inflammations; and that these conditions will disappear as if by magic; (8) that respondent's Vegetolina Liniment is a proper and competent remedy for pains in the arms, legs, back, or shoulders caused by intemperance, and that a single application when applied to affected joints will cause the pains to disappear as if by magic; and respondent has made many other statements and representations of like nature and effect.

PAR. 4. Respondent sells the commodities prepared by him under various trade names, such as:

Stomatic Tea and Tonic,
Rheumatic Tea,
Renal Tea,
Pile-Aid,
Vegetolina Liniment,

and various other names applied to commodities vended by him.

PAR. 5. The curative or therapeutic value of the various liquids, compounds, concoctions, and solutions of the respondent are not so efficacious as represented by him, either in the treatment, relief, or cure of the various ailments or diseases named hereinabove. They will not reduce weight, clear the skin of impurities, or small boils, pimples, and other eruptions, will not cure diseases of the stomach and intestines, and they are not a competent or effective treatment for any of the diseases, maladies, or conditions of the body above named. Respondent is not a great specialist in herbs, and herbs of like nature to those vended by respondent can be readily procured.

PAR. 6. Various members of the purchasing public throughout the various States of the United States have been misled and deceived by the statements of the respondent as above related into the false belief that such statements were and are true, and that the preparations concocted by respondent, as herein stated, had and have a definite curative and therapeutic effect in the treatment of maladies and diseases of the human body as represented by him. Various members of the purchasing public likewise have been induced to use the course of treatment of the respondent rather than a course of treatment of a pathologist or other physician, thereby causing a substantial diversion of trade to the respondent from competitors in commerce among and between the various States of the United States.

PAR. 7. Among the competitors of the respondent are persons, firms, partnerships, and corporations engaged in the preparations, sale, and transportation in commerce, as herein set out, of compounds, concoctions, and solutions for the treatment, cure, and remedy of diseases and ailments similar to or identical with those listed herein in paragraph 3 and who do not falsely represent or exaggerate the curative or therapeutic value of said products.

The acts and practices of the respondent in misrepresenting the curative and therapeutic claims of the commodities prepared and sold by him, serve as inducements to purchasers and prospective purchasers to purchase substantial quantities of the commodity or commodities prepared and sold by the respondent, and have a tendency and capacity to and do unfairly divert a substantial volume of trade from such competitors of the respondent to respondent, with the result that substantial injury was and is done by respondent to competition in commerce as hereinabove set out.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondent, Giacomo LaGuardia, trading as Herba Medicinal Laboratory, are to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce, within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

This proceeding having been heard by the Federal Trade Commission upon the complaint of the Commission and the answer filed herein on December 31, 1936, by respondent admitting all the material allegations of the complaint to be true and waiving the taking of further evidence and all other intervening procedure, and the Commission having made its findings as to the facts and its conclusion that said respondent has violated the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

It is ordered, That the respondent, Giacomo LaGuardia, trading as Herba Medicinal Laboratory or under any other trade name, his representatives, agents, and employees, in connection with the offering for sale, sale and distribution of medicinal products designated by him as Stomach Tea and Tonic Rheumatic Tea, Renal Tea, Pile-Aid, and Vegetolina Liniment or of any other products of substantially the same composition and ingredients sold under the same or any other names, in interstate commerce or in the District of Columbia, do forthwith cease and desist from representing or causing to be represented:

(a) That the said products have an effective, curative, or remedial value in the cure or treatments of the diseases and ailments of the human body, such as stomach acid, swollen or painful stomach, indigestion, inflammation of the liver, headache, coated tongue, tiredness, nervous disturbances, backaches, rheumatism, purification of blood.

eczema, asthma, hay fever, cough, bronchitis, colds, pains, bad digestion, swellings, constipation, inflammation of the kidneys, kidney trouble, intestinal catarrh, head pains, sleepiness, bad breath, or "any of the ailments concerning the digestive system";

(b) That Stomatic Tea and Tonic, Rheumatic Tea, Renal Tea, Pile-Aid and Vegetolina Liniment or other products of the same or substantially the same ingredients, have any effective therapeutic value for the treatment of diseases of the skin, acid regurgitation, gas, swelling of the stomach, vertigo, headache, constipation, and like diseases;

(c) That respondent is a great specialist in the diagnosis or treatment of ailments, maladies, or conditions of the human body.

It is further ordered, That the respondent shall, within 60 days after service upon him of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which he has complied with this order.

COMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION
OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 26, 1914

Docket 2902. Complaint, Aug. 19, 1936—Decision, Jan. 6, 1937

Where two partners engaged in jobbing food stuffs—

Sold a large variety of flavoring extracts, upon the bottle labels of which there were set forth an apparent depiction of an Italian coat of arms and various Italian words indicating and implying to members of purchasing public that said extracts were prepared, compounded and packaged by the National Chemical Laboratory at Milan, Italy, and were imported into the United States, and that they had been awarded first prize at certain expositions in Milan and Florence in competition with other flavoring extracts there exhibited, facts being said extracts were compounded and packaged in the State of New York by an American manufacturer, and said various representations were false;

With effect of misleading and deceiving purchasing public and large number of Italian-Americans included therein, who preferred, as superior to those produced in this country, goods produced abroad, and particularly so in the case of extracts and the like, into the belief that such extracts, thus labeled, were prepared, compounded and packaged abroad and imported into the United States, and of inducing such public, thus composed, misled into believing, by said acts and practices, that they were buying imported extracts of superior merit to domestic product, into purchasing their said products in aforesaid erroneous belief, and of thereby diverting trade to them from their competitors who rightfully and truthfully represent their products; to the substantial injury of competition in commerce:

Held, That such acts and practices were to the prejudice of the public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition.

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that Jacob Needle and Ray Needle, copartners, trading and doing business as the Eldeen Spice Company, hereinafter referred to as the respondents, have been and are using unfair methods of competition in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in said act, and it appearing to the said Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint, stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Said respondents, Jacob Needle and Ray Needle are copartners trading and doing business as the Eldeen Spice Company, with their office and principal place of business at 336 Delancey Street, city of New York and State of New York. Respondents are now, and for more than one year last past, have been engaged in the business of a jobber of foodstuffs, including a variety of flavoring extracts. Respondents sell and distribute said products in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and the District of Columbia; causing said products, when sold, to be shipped from their place of business in the State of New York to purchasers thereof located in a State or States of the United States other than the State of New York.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of their business aforesaid, respondents are now, and for more than one year last past have been, in substantial competition with other corporations, individuals, partnerships, and firms engaged in the business of selling and distributing foodstuffs and flavoring extracts in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and the District of Columbia.

PAR. 3. In the course and conduct of their business, as aforesaid, the respondents sell a large variety of flavoring extracts. To the bottles which contain said flavoring extract are affixed labels, containing a reproduction of what appears to be an Italian coat of arms and the following wording:

Said representations made upon the labels, as aforesaid, indicate and imply to the members of the purchasing public that the said flavoring extracts are prepared, compounded, and packaged by the National Chemical Laboratory at Milan, in Italy, and are imported into the United States. Said language further implies that the said product was awarded first prize at certain expositions in the cities of Milan and Florence, Italy, in competition with other flavoring extracts there exhibited. In truth and in fact, said flavoring extracts are not prepared, compounded and packaged by a National Chemical Laboratory in Milan, Italy, and are not imported into the United States; they were not exhibited at any Italian exposition, and were awarded no medals or other prizes; but, on the contrary, said flavoring extracts are prepared, compounded and packaged in the State of New York by an American manufacturer.

There is a large number of Italian-Americans among the purchasing public who show a preference for goods produced abroad, under the belief that they are superior to those produced in this country, said belief prevailing particularly in extracts and the like. These purchasers are led to believe, because of the statements contained on the label and the fact that said label is printed in the Italian language, that they are buying an imported extract of superior merit to the domestic product. There are among respondents' competitors many who sell both the domestic and imported products, and who, in the course and conduct of their business, honestly and truthfully represent their merchandise.

PAR. 4. The above and foregoing representations, as shown by the labels used by respondents, as described in paragraph 3, have the capacity and tendency to, and do mislead and deceive the purchasing public into the belief that the said flavoring extracts so labeled are prepared, compounded and packaged abroad, and imported into the United States, and have the capacity and tendency to, and do induce the said purchasing public, acting in such erroneous belief, to purchase respondents' product, thereby diverting trade to the respondent.

from those of their competitors who do not misrepresent and falsely label their products; and in this manner respondents do substantial injury to competition in interstate commerce.

PAR. 5. The above acts and things done or caused to be done by the respondents, were and are each and all to the prejudice of the public and of respondents' competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in interstate commerce within the meaning and intent of Section 5 of "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914.

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, on the 19th day of August 1936, issued and served its complaint in this proceeding upon respondents Jacob Needle and Ray Needle, trading as the Eldeen Spice Company, charging them with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of the provisions of said act. On December 31, 1936, the respondents filed their answer, in which answer they admitted all the material allegations of the complaint to be true, and stated that they waived hearing on the charges set forth in the said complaint and consented that without further evidence or other intervening procedure the Commission might issue and serve upon them findings as to the facts and conclusion and an order to cease and desist from the violations of the law charged in the complaint. Thereafter the proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on the said complaint and the answer thereto, and the Commission having duly considered the same and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondents Jacob Needle and Ray Needle are co-partners trading and doing business as the Eldeen Spice Company, with their office and principal place of business located at 336 Delancey Street, city of New York and State of New York. Respondents are now and for more than one year last past have been engaged in the business of jobbing foodstuffs, including a variety of flavoring extracts. They sell and distribute said products in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and the District of Columbia, causing said products when sold to be shipped from their place of business in the State of New York to purchasers thereof located in states of the United States other than the State of New York. In the course and conduct of their business as aforesaid respondents are now and for more than one year last past have been in substantial competition with other partnerships and with corporations, firms, and individuals engaged in the business of selling and distributing foodstuffs and flavoring extracts in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia. There is now and for more than one year last past has been a constant current of trade in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia in said products sold by respondents.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of their business as aforesaid, respondents sell a large variety of flavoring extracts. To the bottles which contain said flavoring extracts are affixed labels containing a reproduction of what appears to be an Italian coat of arms and the following wording:

Brevetto No. C135—Registration 352

PAR. 3. The representations made upon the labels as set forth in paragraph 2 hereof indicate and imply to the members of the purchasing public that the said flavoring extracts are prepared, compounded, and packaged by the National Chemical Laboratory at Milan, Italy, and are imported into the United States. Said language further implies that the said products were awarded first prize at certain exhibitions in the cities of Milan and Florence, Italy, in competition with other flavoring extracts there exhibited. In truth and in fact said flavoring extracts are not and were not prepared, compounded or packaged by a National Chemical Laboratory in Milan, Italy, and are not and were not imported into the United States. They were not exhibited at any Italian exposition and were awarded no medals or other prizes; but on the contrary said flavoring extracts are and were prepared, compounded and packaged in the State of New York by an American manufacturer.

PAR. 4. There are a large number of Italian-Americans among the purchasing public who show a preference for goods produced abroad, under the belief that they are superior to those produced in this country, said belief prevailing particularly in extracts and the like. These purchasers are led to believe, because of the statements contained on the label and the fact that said label is printed in the Italian language, that they are buying imported extract of superior merit to the domestic product. There are among the competitors of respondents, as mentioned in paragraph 1 hereof, many who sell and distribute in commerce flavoring extracts, and who do not misrepresent the origin or place of manufacture of such products.

PAR. 5. The above and foregoing representations, as shown by the labels used by respondents as described in paragraph 2 hereof, have the capacity and tendency to and do mislead and deceive the purchasing public into the belief that the said flavoring extracts so labeled are prepared, compounded and packaged abroad, and imported into the United States; and have the capacity and tendency to and do induce the said purchasing public, acting in such erroneous belief, to purchase respondents' products, thereby diverting trade to the respondents from their competitors, who rightfully and truthfully represent their products; and in this manner respondents do substantial injury to competition in interstate commerce among and between the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

Memorandum

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondents, Jacob Needle and Ray Needle, copartners trading as the Eldeen Spice Company, are to the prejudice of the public and of respondents' competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

It is ordered, That the respondents, Jacob Needle and Ray Needle, individually and as copartners trading as the Eldeen Spice Company, their representatives, agents, servants, and employees, in connection with the offering for sale, sale, and distribution of flavoring extracts or compounds in interstate commerce or in the District of Columbia, do cease and desist

1. From directly or indirectly advertising, designating, or representing, through the use of words of any foreign language, or symbols or picturizations, or through any other means or in any manner, that flavoring extracts or compounds manufactured or compounded in the United States are manufactured or produced in Italy or in any other foreign country and imported into the United States.

It is further ordered, That the respondent shall, within 60 days after service upon them of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing, setting forth in detail the manner and form in which they have complied with this order.

MEMORANDUM

The Commission, as of Jan. 7, 1937, made similar findings and orders to cease and desist in three other cases, in which complaints issued as of Aug. 19, 1936, and in which the respondents, with principal places

COMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION
OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 26, 1914

Docket 2652. Complaint, Dec. 10, 1935.—Decision Jan. 12, 1937

Where an individual engaged in the publication of an encyclopedia or reference work designated as "The Progressive Reference Library," and theretofore sold under different names, since its original publication about 1895 as "Teachers' and Pupils' Cyclopedias," and in the sale thereof to purchasers in various states; an individual engaged as agent and manager for said publisher in the transaction and operation of the latter's business; and two individuals engaged, in California, as agents for and under arrangements with said publisher, in the sale of said "Reference Library" and extension service from their places of business in the two California cities involved, and through their own personal solicitation and that of the agents, subagents, or salesmen employed by them, and selling said reference work and service on an installment contract basis; in substantial competition with others who do not represent that they are giving their respective sets free to purchasers of an extension service, or to purchasers of any other service or books, and do not represent that their respective books have been revised, enlarged, and brought up to date, or make other untrue representations similar to those hereinbelow set forth, but accurately and truthfully represent the nature and character of their respective books and the various services rendered by them in connection with the sale thereof—

- (a) Represented, in soliciting and selling such books and service as hereinbefore described, that the purchaser or prospective purchaser was on a preferred list and would be given a ten volume set of said "Library" free, for the reason, ostensibly, that such purchaser or prospective purchaser had exceptional ability in his or her chosen trade, profession, or avocation, and that, in order to take advantage of such pretended free offer, it was only necessary that the particular person approached write the publisher a letter of commendation, after opportunity to study the books, and subscribe to a ten year loose leaf extension service to keep said "Library" current and up-to-date as represented, and at a cost of $49.50, for the payment of which sum, in monthly or other payments, purchaser obligated himself by signed contract; facts being there was no such selection, purchase price of said "Reference Library" was included in the amount purportedly charged for the ten-year extension service, same offer was made to all prospective purchasers alike, without regard to any ability exhibited by them in any particular trade or profession, and aforesaid representations were made solely to induce purchase of said "Progressive Reference Library";
- (b) Represented, as aforesaid, that said "Library," as thus published and sold by them, had been revised, enlarged, and brought down to date, facts being that, while it might contain some slight enlargements and revisions, to all intents and purposes it had not been materially revised and enlarged since its original publication in or about 1895; and

- (c) Made use of the name of the individual hereinbefore referred to, who constituted said publisher's business manager and agent, to advise dissatisfied purchasers complaining of aforesaid and other defects in said encyclopedia to the particular individual making sale, that contract of particular dissatisfied purchaser was in hands of said first-named individual, and that he constituted an innocent purchaser for value without notice and insisted on payment and threatened such purchaser with legal action and forced payment therefor;

With effect of misleading and deceiving members of the purchasing public into the erroneous and mistaken belief that aforesaid misrepresentations were true and into the purchase of said "Progressive Reference Library" and extension service on account of such belief and their reliance on the truthfulness thereof, and with the result that many sales were made by them to purchasers thereof who, induced by aforesaid representations, believed that in purchasing said service for its regular price of $49.50, they were, as members of a limited or selected class, receiving free of charge said set, represented as above set forth, as an enlarged, revised and up-to-date reference work, and trade thereby was unfairly diverted to all and each of them from those competitors who do not make use of same or similar misrepresentations in offer for sale or sale of their respective encyclopedias and reference works:

Held, That such acts and practices were to the prejudice of the public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition.

COMPLAINT

sion that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint, stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent Bernhart P. Holst is an individual trading under the name and style of Holst Publishing Company, with his office and principal place of business in Boone, Iowa, and is engaged in the business of publishing and selling a certain encyclopedia known and designated as "The Progressive Reference Library" to purchasers thereof in various States of the United States of America other than Iowa, and when said encyclopedias are sold by respondent, Bernhart P. Holst, he ships and causes them to be shipped from his place of business at Boone, Iowa, into and through the various States of the United States other than Iowa to the purchasers thereof located in said other States and in the District of Columbia. Respondent Bertram P. Holst is likewise an individual residing and doing business in Boone, Iowa, and is an agent of and manager for respondent Bernhart P. Holst in the transaction of the business of said Bernhart P. Holst as hereinafter set out. Respondent C. M. Sellards is an individual with his place of business at 365 Twenty-fifth Avenue, San Francisco, Calif., and trades and does business under the name and style of Progressive Research Service, and in the conduct of the business as hereinafter set out, said respondent C. M. Sellards is an agent of respondent Bernhart P. Holst. Respondent Charles U. Branch is an individual trading and doing business under the name and style of National Press Service, with his place of business at Room 516, Douglas Building, 257 South Spring Street, Los Angeles, Calif., and said respondent Charles U. Branch is also, in the conduct of the business hereinafter set out, an agent for respondent, Bernhart P. Holst. Respondent S. R. Melching is an individual trading under the name and style of International Press Service, with his place of business at Boone, Iowa, and in the conduct of the business hereinafter set out, said respondent S. R. Melching is likewise the agent for respondent Bernhart P. Holst.

PAR. 2. Respondent Bernhart P. Holst is the publisher of a certain ten-volume encyclopedia which is sold and distributed to the public from the place of business of respondent, Bernhart P. Holst of Boone, Iowa, in and through the various States of the United States of America other than Iowa, under the name of "The Progressive Reference Library." This encyclopedia was originally published in or about the year 1895 as "Teachers' and Pupils' Cyclopedias," and thereafter it was published and sold respectively as "New Teachers' and Pupils' Cyclopedias" and as "International Reference Work," but is now being sold, as aforesaid, as "The Progressive Reference Library." The Commission is advised, believes to be true, and consequently charges that although there have been some revisions and enlargements of the said encyclopedia, yet it is substantially the same as when first issued in or about the year 1895.

PAR. 3. Respondent Bertram P. Holst resides in Boone, Iowa, and in the sale and distribution of the said Progressive Reference Library in interstate commerce, acts in the capacity of business manager and agent for respondent Bernhart P. Holst, publisher of said encyclopedia as aforesaid. Respondent C. M. Sellards, trading under the name and style of Progressive Research Service, has his office and place of business in the City of San Francisco, Calif., and is engaged in the sale and distribution of the encyclopedia known and designated, as aforesaid, as "The Progressive Reference Library," in the State of California and in various States of the United States other than California, and when said encyclopedias are by said respondent C. M. Sellards sold, he ships and causes them to be shipped from his place of business in San Francisco, Calif., into and through other States of the United States than California, to the purchasers thereof located in States other than the State of California.

Respondent Charles U. Branch is an individual with his office and place of business in the city of Los Angeles, Calif., and is engaged in the selling and delivering in commerce of the said "Progressive Reference Library" under the name and style of National Press Service, in the State of California and in divers other States of the United States other than California, causing said encyclopedia when sold to be transported into and through said other States of the United States than California, to the purchasers thereof located in States other than the State of California. Respondent S. R. Melching is an individual trading and doing business in Boone, Iowa, under the name and style of International Press Service, and he likewise is engaged in the sale and distribution of said "Progressive Reference Library" in the State of Iowa, and causes said "Progressive Reference Library" when sold to be transported and delivered into and through various States of the United States other than Iowa to the purchasers thereof located in States other than the State of California.

In the conduct of the said business of selling and distributing the said encyclopedia known and designated, as aforesaid, as "The Progressive Reference Library," the said respondent Bernhart P. Holst, being as aforesaid the publisher thereof at Boone, Iowa, furnishes to co-respondents C. M. Sellards, Charles U. Branch, and S. R. Melching the said encyclopedia, which said respondents Sellards, Branch, and Melching, by personal solicitation and through salesmen and sub-agents, sell to the public. For this encyclopedia respondent Bernhart P. Holst receives from his co-respondents Sellards, Branch, and Melching, $12.50 per set, and respondents Sellards, Branch, and Melching in turn sell said encyclopedia to the buying public at $49.50 per set, in manner and form as hereinafter set out.

The respondents Sellards, Branch, and Melching sell said encyclopedia to the public on monthly payments, and the purchaser executes a contract promising to pay the full sum of $49.50 to the different respondents herein making the sale on monthly payments, and such contracts when signed and executed by the purchaser are sent and transmitted by respondents Sellards, Branch, and Melching to respondent Bernhart P. Holst at Boone, Iowa, and the Commission is advised, believes to be true, and consequently charges that these contracts are by respondents Sellards, Branch, and Melching assigned to respondent Bernhart P. Holst. Respondent Bernhart P. Holst, on receipt of such contracts, advances to respondents Sellards, Branch, and Melching 60 percent of the face value thereof, taking from said Sellards, Branch, and Melching their promissory notes. Therefore and in this behalf, the Commission is advised, believes to be true, and charges that the contracts of purchase by the various purchasers are assigned as collateral security for the loan of 60 percent of the face value of such contracts. If default is made by the purchaser in the payments due under said contracts, the said respondent Bernhart P. Holst personally and through respondent Bertram P. Holst, manager and agent of the aforesaid Bernhart P. Holst, and through his attorneys undertakes to collect the amount due from such defaulted purchases under the claim and pretext that he, respondent Bernhart Holst, is an innocent purchaser for value in due course thereof, and that the purchaser cannot interpose any defenses to the said contract in his hands as such innocent purchaser for value without notice and in due course.

The Commission, acting on information and belief, is advised, believes to be true, and consequently charges that this elaborate and ostensible arrangement existing between and among respondents Bernhart P. Holst, Bertram P. Holst, C. M. Sellards, Charles U. Branch, and S. R. Melching, is a sham and a subterfuge, and that in truth and in fact respondents, Bertram P. Holst, C. M. Sellards, Charles U. Branch, and S. R. Melching are agents for the principal respondent, Bernhart P. Holst, in the sale and distribution in commerce of the said encyclopedia known and designated as "The Progressive Reference Library," and that respondent Bertram P. Holst is resident agent and manager at Boone, Iowa, for his principal, respondent Bernhart P. Holst, and that as principal and agent they are engaged in the acts of unfair competition in commerce hereinafter set out; but in the alternative, should they not occupy to each other the relation of principal and agent, charges and alleges that these respondents are by agreement and conspiracy engaged in a joint enterprise and in acts of unfair competition in commerce, and are properly joined herein as co-respondents.

The method by which respondents sell and offer for sale the said encyclopedia is as follows: The respondents, either in person or by duly constituted and appointed agents, subagents, or salesmen, represent to the purchaser or prospective purchaser that he or she is on a preferred list, and that he or she will be given a ten-volume set of the said encyclopedia free, and this free offer is made to the purchaser or prospective purchaser on the ostensible ground that the purchaser or prospective purchaser has exceptional ability in his or her chosen trade, profession or avocation, such as teacher, preacher, lawyer, etc. The purchasers or prospective purchasers are then told that in order to avail themselves of this alleged free offer it is only necessary that they, (1) write the publisher a letter of commendation after they have had an opportunity to study the books, and (2) subscribed to a ten-year loose leaf extension service, which it is represented will keep the reference library current, at a cost to the purchaser of $49.50, for the payment of which sum the purchaser signs a contract in writing agreeing to pay by monthly or other payments, and said contracts in writing are then sent and delivered to respondent Bernhart P. Holst, as hereinbefore set out in paragraph 3 hereof. These representations and inducements are false and misleading, as the purchaser does not receive a ten-volume set of the said encyclopedia free, but the sum of $49.50 above mentioned is a full, fair and sufficient price for the said encyclopedia and for the ten-year loose leaf extension service, and these statements and representations are made by respondents, their agents and salesmen for the purpose of effectuating the sale of the said encyclopedia.

The respondents in person and through their agents, subagents, and salesmen, represent to purchasers and prospective purchasers that the said encyclopedia, published and sold as aforesaid by respondents, has been revised, enlarged, and brought down to date, when in truth and in fact, while said encyclopedia may contain some slight enlargements and revisions, yet to all intents and purposes it has not been materially revised and enlarged since it was originally published in or about the year 1895. When dissatisfied purchasers complain of this and other defects in said encyclopedia to the respondent making the sale, such dissatisfied purchaser is advised that his or her contract is in the hands of respondent Bernhart P. Holst, an innocent purchaser for value without notice, and payment is insisted on and the dissatisfied purchaser is threatened with legal action and is forced to pay therefor.

In the publication and sale of the said encyclopedia, the respondents, all and each of them, are in competition with other individuals, firms, and corporations and associations engaged in a similar and like business, who do not represent themselves as giving an encyclopedia free and who properly and truthfully represent their commodity, and whose encyclopedia is actually revised, enlarged, and brought down to date.

PAR. 4. By reason of the foregoing acts, exaggerations, misrepresentations, statements, and inducements as above set forth, the said respondents have sold and are now selling their said encyclopedia, including the extension service, to various members of the public throughout the United States who have a right to and do rely on these said statements, representations, and inducements of the respondents and who are induced to purchase said encyclopedia from respondents under the belief that they are actually being presented free with an encyclopedia which is revised, enlarged, and brought down to date, and are only paying for the ten-year extension service, when in truth and in fact they are buying and paying a full price for an encyclopedia and extension service and are not receiving one free, nor one revised, enlarged, and brought down to date.

PAR. 5. All the aforesaid false, deceptive, and misleading statements and representations used by respondents, their agents, subagents, and salesmen are calculated to and do have the tendency and capacity to unfairly divert trade to respondents from competitors who do not use such false, deceptive, and misleading representations in the sale of their publications and to induce the public to purchase said encyclopedias under and because of a mistaken belief that said representations are true.

PAR. 6. The above acts and things done by respondent are all to the injury and prejudice of the public and competitors of respondent in interstate commerce, within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914.

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission on the 10th day of December, A. D., 1935, issued and served its complaint in this proceeding upon respondents, Bernhart P. Holst, an individual trading under the name and style of Holst Publishing Company; Bertram P. Holst, manager for and agent of Bernhart P. Holst; C. M. Sellards, an individual trading under the name and style of Progressive Research Service, and as agent for respondent, Bernhart P. Holst; Charles U. Branch, an individual trading under the name and style of National Press Service and as agent of respondent, Bernhart P. Holst; S. R. Melching, an individual trading under the name and style of International Press Service and as agent of respondent, Bernhart P. Holst; charging them with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of the provisions of said act. After the issuance of said complaint and the filing of respondents' answer thereto, testimony and other evidence in support of the allegations of said complaint were introduced by John W. Hildrop, attorney for the Commission, before W. W. Sheppard, an examiner for the Commission theretofore duly designated by it, and in opposition to the allegations of the Complaint by C. O. Switzer, attorney for respondents, Bernhart P. Holst, an individual trading under the name and style of Holst Publishing Company, and Bertram P. Holst; and said testimony and other evidence were duly recorded and filed in the office of the Commission. Thereafter, this proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the said Commission on the complaint, the answer thereto, testimony and other evidence, briefs in support of the complaint and briefs in opposition thereto by respondents, Bernhart P. Holst and Bertram P. Holst, and the oral arguments of John W. Hildrop, counsel for the Commission and Fred P. Risser, appearing and arguing the case for respondents Bernhart P. Holst, and Bertram P. Holst; and the Commission having duly considered the same and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent Bernhart P. Holst is an individual trading under the name and style of Holst Publishing Company, with his office and principal place of business located in Boone, Iowa. He is engaged in the business of publishing and selling a certain encyclopedia or reference work known and designated as "The Progressive Reference Library," including a loose-leaf extension service, to purchasers thereof located in various States of the United States other than Iowa. When said encyclopedias are sold by respondent, Bern-hart P. Holst, he ships and causes them to be shipped from his place of business at Boone, Iowa, into and through the various States of the United States other than Iowa to the purchasers thereof located in said other States and in the District of Columbia.

Respondent Bertram P. Holst is likewise an individual residing and doing business in Boone, Iowa. He is an agent of, and manager for, respondent Bernhart P. Holst in the transaction and operation of the business of said Bernhardt P. Holst as hereinafter set out.

Respondent C. M. Sellards is an individual having his place of business at 365 Twenty-fifth Avenue, San Francisco, Calif. He trades and does business under the name and style of Progressive Research Service, and the conduct of the business as hereinafter set out, said respondent C. M. Sellards is an agent of respondent Bernhart P. Holst.

Respondent Charles U. Branch is an individual trading and doing business under the name and style of National Press Service, with his place of business at Room 516, Douglas Building, 257 South Spring Street, Los Angeles, Calif., and is also, in the conduct of the business hereinafter set out, an agent for respondent, Bernhart P. Holst.

Respondent S. R. Melching is an individual trading under the name and style of International Press Service, with his place of business located at Boone, Iowa, and in the conduct of the business hereinafter set out, he is likewise the agent for respondent Bernhart P. Holst.

PAR. 2. Respondent Barnhart P. Holst is the publisher of a certain ten-volume encyclopedia which is sold and distributed to the public from the place of business of respondent Bernhardt P. Holst at Boone, Iowa, into and through the various States of the United States of America other than Iowa, under the name of "The Progressive Reference Library." This encyclopedia was originally published in or about the year 1895 under the name "Teachers' and Pupils' Cyclopedia," and thereafter it was published and sold respectively under the name "New Teachers' and Pupils' Cyclopedia" and under the name "International Reference Work," but is now being sold, as aforesaid, as "The Progressive Reference Library." Although there have been some revisions and enlargement of the said reference work from time to time, it is substantially the same as when first issued, in or about the year 1895.

PAR. 3. Respondent Bertram P. Holst resides in Boone, Iowa, and in the sale and distribution of the said Progressive Reference Library in commerce among and between the various States of the United States acts in the capacity of business manager and agent for respondent Bernhart P. Holst, publisher of said Progressive Reference Library. Respondent C. M. Sellards, trading under the name and style of Progressive Research Service, has his office and place of business in the city of San Francisco, Calif., and is engaged in the sale and distribution of the encyclopedia known and designated as "The Progressive Reference Library," in the State of California and in various States of the United States other than California. When said Progressive Reference Libraries are sold by said respondent C. M. Sellards, he ships and causes them to be shipped from his place of business in San Francisco, Calif., into and through States of the United States other than California, to the purchasers thereof located in such other States.

Respondent Charles U. Branch trading under the name and style of National Press Service has his office and place of business in the city of Los Angeles, Calif., and is engaged in the sale and distribution of the said "Progressive Reference Library" in the State of California and in divers States of the United States other than California. When said "Progressive Reference Libraries" are sold by said respondent Charles U. Branch, he ships and causes them to be shipped from his place of business in Los Angeles, Calif., into and through States of the United States other than California to the purchasers thereof located in such other States.

In the conduct of the said business of selling and distributing the said encyclopedia and reference work known and designated as "Progressive Reference Library," including the aforesaid extension service, the said respondent Bernhart P. Holst, being the publisher thereof at Boone, Iowa, furnished to the respondents C. M. Sellards and Charles U. Branch, the said "Progressive Reference Library," which they sell to the public by personal solicitation and through salesmen and sub-agents. For this "Progressive Reference Library" respondent Bernhart P. Holst receives from his co-respondents Sellards and Branch, $12.50 per set, and respondents Sellards and Branch in turn sell said encyclopedia to the buying public at $49.50 per set, in manner and form as hereinafter set out.

The respondents Sellards and Branch sell said "Progressive Reference Library" to the public through installment contracts and the purchaser executes a contract promising to pay the full sum of $49.50 in monthly payments to the respective respondent making the sale. Such contracts, when signed and executed by the purchasers, are sent and transmitted by respondents Sellards and Branch to respondent Bernhart P. Holst at Boone, Iowa, and are by respondents Sellards and Branch assigned to respondent Bernhart P. Holst. Respondent Bernhart P. Holst, on receipt of such contracts, advances to respondents Sellards and Branch 60% of the face value of said contracts and promissory notes. The contracts of purchase executed by the various purchasers are assigned as collateral security for the loan of 60% of the face value of such contracts. Whenever default is made by purchasers in the payments due under said contracts, the said respondent Bernhart P. Holst, personally and through respondent Bertram P. Holst, his manager and agent and through his attorneys, undertakes to collect the amount due from such defaulted purchasers under the claim and pretext that he, Bernhart P. Holst, is an innocent purchaser of said contracts for value in due course and without notice of any possible defenses to the said contracts.

This elaborate arrangement existing between and among respondents Bernhart P. Holst, Bertram P. Holst, C. M. Sellards, and Charles U. Branch, is a sham and a subterfuge, and in truth and in fact, respondents Bertram P. Holst, C. M. Sellards, and Charles U. Branch are agents for the principal respondent Bernhart P. Holst, in the sale and distribution in commerce, as herein set out, of the said "Progressive Reference Library"; respondent Bertram P. Holst is resident agent and manager at Boone, Iowa, for his principal, respondent Bernhart P. Holst; and they are all engaged as principal and agent in the hereinafter described acts of unfair competition in commerce as herein set out.

The method by which the respondents sell and offer for sale the said "Progressive Reference Library" is as follows: The respondents, either in person or by duly constituted and appointed agents, sub-agents, or salesmen, represent to the purchaser or prospective purchaser that he or she is on a preferred list, and that he or she will be given a ten-volume set of the said "Progressive Reference Library" free, and that this free offer is made to the purchaser or prospective purchaser on the ostensible ground that the purchaser or prospective purchaser has exceptional ability in his or her chosen trade, profession or avocation. It is then represented to said purchasers or prospective purchasers that in order to avail themselves of this alleged free offer, it is only necessary that they (1) write the publisher a letter of commendation after they have had an opportunity to study the books, and (2) subscribe to a ten-year loose-leaf extension service at a cost to the purchaser of $49.50, which it is represented will keep the reference library current and up to date, for the payment of which sum the purchaser signs a contract in writing agreeing to pay by monthly or other payments.

The aforesaid representations and inducements are false and misleading as the respective purchasers do not receive the ten-volume set of "Progressive Reference Library" free and at no cost when they purchase the ten-year extension service and execute the contract in connection therewith, and the respective purchasers were not selected for the offer of said "Progressive Reference Library" for the reason that they had exhibited exceptional ability in their chosen trade or profession or for any other similar reason. The aforesaid representations are made solely for the purpose of inducing the purchase of the said "Progressive Reference Library." In truth and in fact, the purchase price of said "Progressive Reference Library" is included in the amount purportedly charged for the ten-year extension service and the same offer is made to all prospective purchasers alike without regard to their having exhibited any particular ability in any particular trade or profession.

The respondents, in person and through their agents, subagents and salesmen, represent to purchasers and prospective purchasers that the said "Progressive Reference Library," published and sold as aforesaid by respondents, has been revised, enlarged, and brought down to date. In truth and in fact, while said "Progressive Reference Library" may contain some slight enlargements and revisions, yet to all intents and purposes it has not been materially revised and enlarged since it was originally published in or about the year 1895. When dissatisfied purchasers complain of this and other defects in said encyclopedia to the respondent making the sale, such dissatisfied purchaser is advised that his or her contract is in the hands of respondent Bernhart P. Holst, an innocent purchaser for value without notice, and payment is insisted on and the dissatisfied purchaser is threatened with legal action and is forced to pay therefor.

In the publication and sale of said "Progressive Reference Library" in commerce as herein described, the respondents, and each of them, are engaged in substantial competition with other individuals and with corporations, firms, partnerships, and associations who sell and distribute other encyclopedia and reference books in commerce as herein described and who do not represent that they are giving their respective sets of books free to the purchasers of an extension service or to the purchasers of any other service or books and who do not represent that their respective books have been revised, enlarged and brought up to date and who do not make other representations similar to those described herein when said representations are not true in fact but who accurately and truthfully represent the nature and character of their respective books and of the various services rendered by them in connection with the sale of said books.

PAR. 4. The acts and practices including the aforesaid misrepresentations and inducements of the respondents, and each of them, as detailed herein, have the tendency and capacity to, and do, mislead and deceive members of the purchasing public into the erroneous and mistaken belief that the misrepresentations above described and referred to were true and into the purchase of "Progressive Reference Library" and the extension service on account of such belief and on account of their reliance in the truthfulness of said representations. Many sales have been made by the respondents to purchasers who, induced by the representations herein described believed that in purchasing said extension service for the price of $49.50 they were, as members of a limited or selected class, receiving free of charge the set of books "Progressive Reference Library" which was represented to be an enlarged, revised and up-to-date reference work. As a result thereof, trade has been unfairly diverted to all and each of the respondents from those competitors who do not make use of the same or similar misrepresentations in the offering for sale or sale of their respective encyclopedias and reference works.

There is no testimony or other evidence in this proceeding connecting respondent S. R. Melching with the acts of unfair competition in commerce alleged in the complaint.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondents, Bernhart P. Holst, an individual trading under the name and style of Holst Publishing Company; Bertram P. Holst, manager for and agent of Bernhart P. Holst; C. M. Sellards, an individual trading under the name and style of Progressive Research Service, and as agent for respondent, Bernhart P. Holst; and Charles U. Branch, an individual trading under the name and style of National Press Service and as agent of respondent, Bernhart P. Holst are to the prejudice of the public and of respondents' competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce, within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

This proceeding having been heard by the Federal Trade Commission upon the complaint of the Commission, the answer of respondents, testimony and other evidence taken before W. W. Shepard, an examiner of the Commission theretofore duly designated by it, in support of the allegations of the said complaint and in opposition thereto, briefs filed herein, and oral arguments by John W. Hilldrop, counsel for the Commission, and by Fred Risser, counsel for respondents Bernhart P. Holst and Bertram P. Holst, and the Commission having made its findings as to the facts and its conclusion that said respondents have violated the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled, "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

It is ordered, That the respondents, Bernhart P. Holst, as an individual, and trading under the name and style of Holst Publishing Company; Bertram P. Holst, manager for and agent of Bernhart P. Holst; C. M. Sellards, an individual, and trading under the name and style of Progressive Research Service, and as agent for respondent Bernhart P. Holst; Charles U. Branch, an individual trading under the name and style of National Press Service and as agent of respondent Bernhart P. Holst; and said individuals trading under any other name or through any other means or any corporate device; their joint or respective representatives, agents and employees, in connection with the offering for sale, sale, and distribution of certain books or reference work now designated and sold under the name "Progressive Reference Library," together with a loose-leaf extension service, or substantially the same books or reference work designated and sold under any other name, in interstate commerce or in the District of Columbia, do forthwith cease and desist from representing:

(a) That the purchaser or prospective purchaser is being given or will be given a set of the said reference work now designated as "Progressive Reference Library" free by reason of the exceptional ability of the purchaser or prospective purchaser in his or her chosen trade, profession or avocation and standing in his or her community, or for any other reason;

(b) That any purchaser or prospective purchaser is on a preferred list to receive a ten-volume set of the said reference work now designated as "Progressive Reference Library" free;

(c) That the purchaser or prospective purchaser is being given or will be given a set of the reference work now designated as "Progressive Reference Library" free, on condition that such purchaser or prospective purchaser writes respondent a letter of commendation concerning the said reference work now designated as "Progressive Reference Library," after such purchaser or prospective purchaser has had an opportunity to study the same;

(d) That any purchaser or prospective purchaser is being given or will be given a set of the reference work now designated as "Progressive Reference Library" free, on condition that such purchaser or prospective purchaser subscribes to a ten-year loose-leaf extension service or any extension service covering any period of time;

Order

24 F. T. C.

(e) That any purchaser or prospective purchaser is receiving, or will receive, any benefit, discount or concession, in any manner or form, or by any pretense; and that any purchaser or prospective purchaser, in paying the sum of $49.50, is paying other than the usual selling price of said reference work now designated as "Progressive Reference Library";

(f) That the reference work now designated as "Progressive Reference Library" has been revised, enlarged and brought down to date, until and unless said reference work has in truth and in fact been substantially revised, enlarged and brought down to date;

(g) That Bernhart P. Holst, or any other of said respondents, or any other person, firm or corporation, is a bona-fide purchaser for value without notice of the contracts executed by purchasers in connection with the purchase of said reference work now designated as "Progressive Reference Library" and the accompanying extension service, when such is not the fact;•

(h) That the purchaser or prospective purchaser of said reference work now designated as "Progressive Reference Library" is only buying or paying for an extension service intended to keep the set of books up to date.

It is ordered, That the case growing out of the complaint hereinbefore issued on the 10th day of December, A. D., 1935, as to said respondent S. R. Melching be, and the same hereby is, closed without prejudice to the right of the Commission to reopen the same should the facts so warrant.

It is further ordered, That the respondents shall, within 60 days after service upon them of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which they have complied with this order.

IN THE MATTER OF
IMPERIAL DISTILLERS COMPANY

COMPLAINT AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION OF SEC. 5 OF
AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 26, 1914, AND OF SEC. 3 OF TITLE I
OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED JUNE 16, 1933¹

Docket 2395.—Complaint, May 17, 1935—Order, Jan. 14, 1937

Consent order requiring respondent corporation, its agents, etc., in connection with sale or offer in interstate commerce of whiskies, gins, and all other alcoholic beverages, but excepting gins produced by it through process of rectification of alcohol purchased, but not produced, by it, as specified, to cease and desist from representing, through use of word "Distillers" in its corporate name and on its stationery, advertising, etc., or in any other way, that it is a distiller of whiskies, gins, or other alcoholic beverages, or that said whiskies, etc., were by it made through process of distillation, or that it owns, operates, or controls a place where such products are thus made, unless and until it shall own, operate, or control a place or places where such products are by it manufactured through a process of original and continuous distillation from mash, wort, or wash, through continuous closed pipes and vessels until manufacture thereof is completed; and, Ordered further, That Count II of complaint as to violation of National Industrial Recovery Act be dismissed.

Mr. PGad B. Morehouse for the Commission.

Mr. Fred A. Caskey and Mr. Briggs C. Simpich, of Washington, D. C. and Schmalzriedt, Frye, Granse & Frye, of Detroit, Mich., for respondent.

COMPLAINT

and principal place of business in the city of Detroit in said State. It is now, and has been since its organization in 1934, engaged in the business of purchasing, rectifying, blending, and bottling whiskies, gins, cordials, and other spirituous beverages and in the sale thereof in constant course of trade and commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia. In the course and conduct of its said business, it causes its said products when sold to be transported from its place of business in Detroit aforesaid into and through various other States of the United States to the purchasers thereof consisting of wholesalers and retailers, some located within the State of Michigan, and some located in other States of the United States and the District of Columbia. In the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid, respondent is now, and at all times since its organization has been, in substantial competition with other corporations and individuals, partnerships, and firms engaged in the manufacture by distillation of whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages and in the sale thereof in trade and commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia; and in the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid respondent is, and has been since its organization, in substantial competition with other corporations and with individuals, firms, and partnerships engaged in the business of purchasing, rectifying, blending, and bottling whiskies, gins, cordials and other spirituous beverages and in the sale thereof in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid respondent has, upon its said premises, a still which it uses in the production of gin by a process of rectification whereby alcohol, purchased but not produced by respondent, is redistilled over juniper berries and other aromatics. Such rectification of alcoholic spirits does not make or constitute respondent a distiller, as defined by section 3247 of the Revised Statutes regulating Internal Revenue, nor as commonly understood by the public and the liquor industry. For a long period of time the word "distillers" when used in connection with the liquor industry and with the products thereof has had and still has a definite significance and meaning to the minds of wholesalers and retailers in such industry and to the ultimate purchasing public, to wit, the manufacture of such liquors by the process of original and continuous distillation from mash, wort, or wash, through continuous closed pipes and vessels until the manufacture thereof is complete, and a substantial portion of the purchasing public prefers to buy spirituous liquors bottled by the actual distillers and manufacturers thereof.

PAR. 3. In the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid, by the use of the word "Distillers" in its corporate name, printed on its stationery, advertising and on the labels attached to the bottles in which it sells and ships its said products, and in various other ways, respondent represents to its customers and furnishes them with the means of representing to their vendees, both retailers and the ultimate consuming public, that the said whiskies, gins, cordials, and other spirituous beverages therein contained were by it manufactured through the process of distillation from mash, wort, or wash, when, as a matter of fact respondent is not a distiller, does not distill the said whiskies, cordials, or other spirituous beverages by it so bottled, labeled, sold, and transported, and merely by the use of a still as aforesaid in the rectification of alcoholic spirits by redistillation over juniper berries and other aromatics, respondent does not distill the gins by it so bottled, labeled, sold, and transported in the sense in which the word "distilled" is commonly accepted and understood by those engaged in the liquor trade and the public. Respondent does not own, operate, or control any place or places where such beverages are manufactured by the process of original and continuous distillation from mash, wort, or wash through continuous closed pipes and vessels until the manufacture thereof is complete.

PAR. 4. There are among the competitors of respondent engaged in the sale of spirituous beverages as mentioned in paragraph 1 hereof corporations, firms, partnerships, and individuals who manufacture and distill from mash, wort, or wash as aforesaid whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages sold by them and who truthfully use the words "distillery," "distilleries," "distillers," or "distilling" as a part of their corporate names and on their stationery, advertising, and on the labels of the bottles in which they sell and ship such products. There are also among such competitors corporations, firms, partnerships, and individuals engaged in the business of rectifying, blending, and bottling whiskies, cordials, gins, and other spirituous beverages who do not use the words "distillery," "distilleries," "distilling," or "distillers" as a part of their corporate names, nor on their stationery, nor on the labels attached to the bottles in which they sell and ship their said products.

PAR. 5. The representation by respondent, as set forth in paragraph 3 hereof, is calculated to and has a capacity and tendency to and does mislead and deceive dealers and the purchasing public into the belief that the whiskies, cordials, gins, and other spirituous beverages sold by the respondent are manufactured and distilled by it from mash, wort, or wash as aforesaid and is calculated to and has the capacity and tendency to and does induce dealers and the purchasing public, acting in such belief, to purchase the whiskies, cordials, gins, and other spirituous beverages rectified, blended and bottled by the respondent, thereby diverting trade to respondent from its competitors who do not by their corporate name or in any other manner misrepresent that they are manufacturers by distillation from mash, wort, or wash as aforesaid of whiskies, cordials, gins, and other spirituous beverages, and thereby respondent does substantial injury to substantial competition in interstate commerce.

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent is a corporation organized, existing and doing business under the laws of the State of Michigan, with its office and principal place of business in the city of Detroit in said State. It is now, and has been since its organization in 1934, engaged in the business of purchasing rectifying, blending, and bottling whiskies, gins, cordials, and other spirituous beverages and in the sale thereof in constant course of trade and commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia. In the course and conduct of its said business, it causes its said products when sold to be transported from its place of business in Detroit aforesaid into and through various other States of the United States to the purchasers thereof consisting of wholesalers and retailers, some located within the State of Michigan, and some located in other States of the United States and the District of Columbia. In the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid, respondent is now, and at all times since its organization has been, in substantial competition with other corporations and individuals, partnerships, and firms engaged in the manufacture by distillation of whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages and in the sale thereof in trade and commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia; and in the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid respondent is, and has been since its organization, in substantial competition with other corporations and with individuals, firms, and partnerships engaged in the business of purchasing, rectifying, blending, and bottling whiskies, gins, cordials, and other spirituous beverages and in the sale thereof in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PARS. 2, 3, 4, and 5. As grounds for these paragraphs of this complaint, the Federal Trade Commission relies upon the matters and things set out in paragraphs 2, 3, 4, and 5 of count 1 of this complaint to the same extent as though the allegations thereof were separately, by like numbered paragraphs, set out at length herein, and said paragraphs 2, 3, 4, and 5 of count 1 of this complaint are incorporated herein by reference and adopted as the allegations of paragraphs 2, 3, 4, and 5 of this count and are hereby charged as fully and as completely as though the several averments of each of the said paragraphs of count 1 were here repeated verbatim.

PAR. 6. Under and pursuant to Title I of the National Industrial Recovery Act, approved June 16, 1933 (48 Stat. 195 C. 90), the President of the United States, by Executive Order No. 6182, of June 26, 1933, as supplemented by Executive Order No. 6207, of July 21, 1933, and Executive Order No. 6345 of October 20, 1933, delegated to H. A. Wallace as Secretary of Agriculture, certain of the powers vested in the President of the United States by the aforesaid Act.

Under and pursuant to the delegation of such powers, the said Secretary of Agriculture pursuant to Section 3 (d) of the Act and Executive Orders under the Act, upon his own motion presented a Code of Fair Competition for the Distilled Spirits Rectifying Industry after due notice and opportunity for hearing in connection therewith had been afforded interested parties, including respondent, in accordance with Title I of the National Industrial Recovery Act and applicable regulations issued thereunder, to the President of the United States who approved the same on the 9th day of December, 1933, thereby constituting the said code a Code of Fair Competition within the meaning of the said National Industrial Recovery Act, for the regulation of the aforesaid industry.

In his written report to the President, the said Secretary of Agriculture made, among others, the following findings with respect to the said code in the following words, to wit:

That said Code will tend to effectuate the declared policy of Title I of the National Industrial Recovery Act as set forth in Section 1 of said Act in that the terms and provisions of such Code tend: (a) to remove obstructions to the free flow of foreign commerce, which tend to diminish the amount thereof; (b) to provide for the general welfare by promoting the organization of industry for the purposes of cooperative action among trade groups; (c) to eliminate unfair competitive practices; (d) to promote the fullest possible utilization of the present productive capacity of industries; (e) to avoid undue restriction of production (except as may be temporarily required); (f) to increase the consumption of industrial and agricultural products by increasing purchasing power; and (g) otherwise to rehabilitate industry.

By his approval of the said code on December 9, 1933, the President of the United States, pursuant to the authority vested in him by Title I of the National Industrial Recovery Act aforesaid, made and issued his certain written Executive order, wherein he adopted and approved the report, recommendations and findings of the said Secretary of Agriculture, and ordered that the said Code of Fair Competition be, and the same thereby was approved, and by virtue of the National Industrial Recovery Act aforesaid, the following provision of Article V of said Code became and still is one of the standards of fair competition for the Distilled Spirits Rectifying Industry and is binding upon every member of said Industry and this respondent:

The following practices constitute unfair methods of competition and shall not be engaged in by any member of the industry:

Section 1. False Advertising.—To publish or disseminate in any manner any false advertisement of any rectified product. Any advertisement shall be deemed to be false if it is untrue in any particular, or if directly or by ambiguity, omission, or inference it tends to create a misleading impression.

PAR. 7. The use by respondent of the word "Distillers" in its corporate name, printed upon its stationery and on the labels attached to the bottles in which it sells and ships such products and in various other ways, constitutes false advertising within the meaning of the aforesaid provision of said Article V and tends to and does create the misleading impression that respondent is engaged in the business of distilling spirits from mash, wort, or wash and that the spirituous beverages by it so sold and transported have been bottled by the original distillers thereof, all contrary to the provisions of Section 1, Article V, of the Code aforesaid.

PAR. 8. The above alleged methods, acts, and practices of the respondent are and have been in violation of the standard of fair competition for the Distilled Spirits Rectifying Industry of the United States. Such violation of such standard in the aforesaid transactions in interstate commerce and other transactions which affect interstate commerce in the manner set forth in paragraph 5 of count 1 hereof, are in violation of Section 3 of Title I of the National Industrial Recovery Act and they are unfair methods of competition in commerce within the meaning of the Federal Trade Commission Act as amended.

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

This proceeding having come on to be heard by the Federal Trade Commission upon the complaint hereinbefore issued and served upon Imperial Distillers Company, a corporation, respondent herein and the said respondent's written answer made thereto, waiving the taking of testimony, findings as to the facts, filing of briefs, oral argument and all other intervening procedure, and consenting that an order shall issue herein for it to cease and desist from the methods of competition charged in the complaint, and the Commission being fully advised in the premises, having thereupon concluded that respondent has violated Section 5 of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled, "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

It is now ordered, That the respondent, Imperial Distillers Company, a corporation, its agents, salesmen, and employees, in connection with whiskies, gins, and all other alcoholic beverages by it in interstate commerce hereafter sold or offered for sale (except gins produced by it through a process of rectification whereby alcohols purchased but not produced by respondent are redistilled over juniper berries and other aromatics), do cease and desist from:

Representing through the use of the word "Distillers" in its corporate name, on its stationery, advertising, or on the labels attached to the bottles in which it sells and ships its said products or in any other way by word or words of like import representing (a) that it is a distiller of whiskies, gins, or any other alcoholic beverages; or (b) that the said whiskies, gins, or other alcoholic beverages were by it manufactured through the process of distillation; or (c) that it owns, operates, or controls a place or places where such products are manufactured by the process of distillation, unless and until the said respondent shall own, operate or control a place of places where such products are by it manufactured through a process of original and continuous distillation from mash, wort, or wash, through continuous closed pipes and vessels until the manufacture thereof is completed.

It is further ordered, That the said complaint be and the same is hereby dismissed as to count 2 thereof.

It is further ordered, That the said respondent within 60 days from and after the date of the service upon it of this order, shall file with the Commission a report or reports in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which it is complying and has complied with the order to cease and desist hereinabove set forth.

COMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION
OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 26, 1914

Docket 1724. Complaint, Nov. 21, 1929—Decision, Jan. 15, 1937

Where a corporation engaged in manufacture and sale of "straight" goods candy and of so-called "break and take" assortments, principal trade demand for which comes from the small retailers with stores, in many instances, near schools and patronized by school children, and sale and distribution of which, or of candy giving, with sale thereof to public, opportunity of obtaining a prize or becoming a winner by lot or chance, teaches and encourages gambling among children, largest class by far and principal consumers or purchasers of such type of candy, who buy same in preference to so-called "straight" candy when displayed side by side by reason of lottery or gambling feature connected with former, and selling of which in the market of the other, i. e., the "straight" goods, has been followed by marked decrease in sales of such "straight" candy, due to gambling or lottery feature connected with so-called "break and take" merchandise—
Sold to wholesalers assortments composed of a number of penny pieces of chocolate covered candy of uniform size and shape, of which the centers of a relatively few were chocolate instead of white, and which the centers of a still smaller number, relatively were pink, together with a number of larger pieces and also a number of still larger pieces, to be given free of charge to those selecting, by chance, chocolate centers or pink centers, as the case might be, and together with explanatory display cards for retailers' use in offering same to public; so assembled and packed that such assortments were and might be displayed and sold by numerous retail dealer purchasers thereof, in accordance with above described plan and display cards, in practically all types of stores where candy is sold, and with knowledge and intent that such assortments might thus be displayed and sold by lot or chance to public by retail dealers as above set forth, in violation of public policy, and in competition with many who regard such methods of sale and distribution as morally bad and as encouraging gambling, and especially among children, as injurious to the industry through resulting in the merchandising of a chance or lottery instead of candy, and as providing retailers with a means of violating laws of the several States, and some of whom, for such reasons, refuse to sell candy so packed and assembled that it can be resold to public by lot or chance;
With result that retailers, finding such candy more salable, purchased its products and those of others employing similar methods, some competitors began sale and distribution of candy for resale to public by lot or chance, "straight" goods sales of such refusing competitors, who can compete on even terms only by giving same or similar devices to retail dealers, showed a continued decrease in their unwillingness to do so, public and

Acting in the public interest pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission charges that the Voneiff-Drayer Company, hereinafter referred to as respondent, has been and is using unfair methods of competition in interstate commerce in violation of the provisions of Section 5 of said Act, and states its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent is a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Maryland, with its principal office and place of business in the city of Baltimore in said State. It is engaged in the manufacture of candies and the sale thereof to wholesale dealers located at points in various States of the United States. It causes its said products when so sold to be transported from its said principal place of business in the city of Baltimore, Md., into and through other States of the United States to said vendees at their respective points of location. In the course and conduct of said business, respondent is in competition with other individuals, partnerships, and corporations engaged in the manufacture of candies and the sale and transportation thereof in commerce between and among the various States of the United States.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of its aforesaid business, respondent sells to aforesaid wholesale dealers certain packages or assortments of candies named and dominated by respondent "Vee-Dee." Said packages or assortments of candies are composed of three assortments, called respectively, "Bar Assortment," "Package Assortment," and "Blank Assortment." Each of said assortments of candies are composed of a number of chocolate covered pieces of candy, of uniform size and shape, which are sold at retail at the uniform price of one cent each, together with a number of larger pieces of candy known as "Bars" or "Patties," which are to be given as prizes to purchasers of said chocolate covered candies, in the following manner:

Among aforesaid chocolate covered candies are a number having colored centers, and when said packages of candies are displayed for sale to the consuming public every purchaser of aforesaid chocolate covered candies at the price of one cent each who procures one of said candies having a colored center is entitled to receive, and is to be given free of charge, one of the "Bars" or "Patties" heretofore referred to. Also included in the assortments known as "Bar Assortment" and "Package Assortment" is a larger piece of candy known as a "Bar" or "Patty," and a 4-ounce box of chocolates, respectively. The purchaser of the last piece of aforesaid chocolate covered candies at the price of one cent each in each of said assortments of candies, respectively, is entitled to receive, and is to be given free of charge, said "Bar" or "Patty," or said 4-ounce box of chocolates. Aforesaid purchasers of said candies who procure candies having a colored center, or who purchase the last piece of candy in each of said assortments, are thus to procure one of said larger pieces of candy, or a box of 4-ounce chocolates, wholly by lot or chance.

The package or assortment of candies known as "Blank Assortment" contains a number of pieces having a colored center, as in the other two assortments aforesaid, but the larger pieces of candy which are to be given as prizes to purchasers of the candy having colored centers, are not supplied by respondent but are supplied to the retailer by the wholesale dealer to whom respondent sells the assortment, and such larger pieces of candy or prizes are wholly within the discretion of said wholesale dealer.

Respondent furnishes with each of said packages or assortments of candies called "Bar Assortment" and "Package Assortment," a display card to be used by the retailer in offering said candies for sale, which display card bears a legend and statement informing the reader that persons purchasing said candies having a colored center, and purchasing the last piece of candy in each of said assortments, will receive one of said larger pieces of candy free of charge.

PAR. 3. Aforesaid wholesale dealers of respondent resell said "Vee-Dee" Assortments to retail dealers in various States of the United States, and said retail dealers expose said assortments for sale in connection with aforesaid explanatory card and sell said candies to the purchasing public according to aforesaid plan, whereby the purchaser of said candies having colored centers and the purchaser of the last piece of candy in said assortments procure and receive free of charge one of said larger pieces of candy, or a 4-ounce box of chocolates, hereinbefore referred to. Respondent thus supplies to and places in the hands of others the means of conducting a lottery wherein said larger pieces of candy and 4-ounce boxes of chocolates are distributed and given to the purchasing public wholly by lot or chance.

PAR. 4. Among the purchasers of respondent referred to in paragraph 1 hereof, are many who sell chocolate and other candies at wholesale at reasonable wholesale prices, and who do not offer and place in the hands of others any additional candy or other merchandise to be given to purchasers by chance or otherwise. Respondent's aforesaid practices thus tend to and do induce many of the consuming public to purchase respondent's said candies in preference to the candies of respondent's said competitors, because of the chance of obtaining certain pieces of candy free of charge.

PAR. 5. For more than two years last past respondent has engaged in the acts and practices under the conditions and circumstances and with the results all hereinbefore set out.

PAR. 6. The above alleged acts and practices of respondent are all to the prejudice of the public and respondent's competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914.

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

On October 16, 1935, the Commission entered and served its order vacating and setting aside the aforesaid order to cease and desist entered on April 3, 1934. Thereafter testimony and other evidence in support of the allegations of the complaint were introduced by Henry C. Lank and P. C. Kolinski, attorneys for the Commission, before Miles J. Furnas, an examiner of the Commission theretofore duly designated by it. Respondent was not represented by counsel and offered no testimony or other evidence in opposition to the charges of the complaint. Said testimony and other evidence were duly recorded and filed in the office of the Commission.

Thereafter this proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on the said complaint, answer of the respondent, the testimony and other evidence duly recorded and filed in the office of the Commission, respondent having indicated that it did not desire to file any brief nor to orally argue the matter, and the Commission having duly considered the matter and being fully advised in the premises finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent, Voneiff-Drayer Company, is a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Maryland, with its principal office and place of business located in the city of Baltimore in said State. Respondent is now, and for several years last past has been, engaged in the manufacture of candy and in the sale and distribution thereof to wholesale dealers located at points in the various States of the United States, and causes said candy, when so sold, to be shipped or transported from its principal place of business in the State of Maryland to purchasers thereof in Maryland and in other States of the United States at their respective places of business. In so carrying on said business, respondent is and has been engaged in interstate commerce and is and has been in active competition with other corporations and with partnerships and individuals engaged in the manufacture of candy, and in the sale and distribution thereof in commerce between and among the various States of the United States.

PAR. 2. Among the candy manufactured and sold by respondent are several assortments known and designated by respondent as "Vee-Dee." Said assortments are composed of a number of pieces of chocolate covered candy of uniform size and shape, together with a number of larger pieces of candy and a number of still larger pieces of candy. These larger pieces of candy are given as prizes to purchasers of said chocolate covered candy of uniform size and shape in the following manner:

The majority of the said pieces of chocolate covered candy in said assortments have white centers, but a small number of said pieces of chocolate covered candy have chocolate centers and a still smaller number of said chocolate covered candy have pink centers. Said pieces of candy of uniform size and shape retail at the price of 1¢ each, but the purchasers who procure one of the said pieces of candy having a chocolate center are entitled to receive, and to be given free of charge, one of the said larger pieces of candy heretofore referred to, and the purchasers who procure one of the said pieces of candy having a pink center are entitled to receive, and are to be given free of charge, one of the still larger pieces of candy heretofore referred to. The color of the center of said pieces of candy of uniform size and shape is effectively concealed from purchasers and prospective purchasers until a selection has been made and the piece of candy selected broken open. The aforesaid purchasers of said candy, who procure a chocolate or a pink center, thus procure one of the said larger pieces of candy or one of the still larger pieces of candy wholly by lot or chance.

Respondent furnishes to said wholesale dealers a display card to be used by the retail dealer in offering said candy for sale to the public. The display card bears a legend or legends informing the prospective purchaser that the said assortment is being distributed in accordance with the above described sales plan.

PAR. 3. The candy assortments involving the lot or chance feature, as described in paragraph 2 above, are generally referred to in the candy trade or industry as "break and take" assortments. Assortments of candy without the lot or chance feature in connection with their resale to the public are generally referred to in the candy trade or industry as "straight" goods. These terms will be used hereafter in these findings to designate these types of assortments.

PAR. 4. Numerous retail dealers purchase and have purchased the said assortments described in paragraph 2 above from wholesale dealers and jobbers who in turn have purchased said assortments from the respondent. Such retail dealers display said assortments for sale to the public as packed and assembled by the respondent, and the candy contained in said assortments is sold and distributed to the consuming public in accordance with the above described sales plan and in accordance with the legends printed on the display card.

PAR. 5. The respondent sells its merchandise to wholesale dealers and jobbers in the various states of the United States. Respondent's assortments, both "straight" and "break and take," are resold in practically all types of stores where candy is sold.

PAR. 6. All sales made by respondent are absolute sales and respondent retains no control in any way over the goods after they are delivered to the wholesale dealer or jobber. The assortments are assembled and packed in such manner that they are and may be displayed by the retail dealer for sale and distribution to the purchasing public in accordance with the above described sales plan.

The respondent has knowledge that said assortments will be resold to the purchasing public by retail dealers by lot or chance and it packs and assembles such candy in the way and manner described so that it may and can be resold to the public by retail dealers in the manner described.

PAR. 7. The sale and distribution of candy by the retail dealers by the method herein described is a sale and distribution of candy by lot or chance and constitutes a lottery or gaming device.

Competitors of respondent appeared as witnesses in this proceeding and testified, and the Commission finds as a fact, that many competitors regard such methods of sale and distribution as morally bad and as encouraging gambling especially among children; as injurious to the candy industry because it results in the merchandising of a chance or lottery instead of candy; and as providing retail merchants with the means of violating the laws of the several States. Because of these reasons some competitors of respondent refuse to sell candy so packed and assembled that it can be resold to the public by lot or chance. These competitors are thereby put to a disadvantage in competing. The retailers, finding that they can dispose of more candy by the "break and take" method, buy from respondent and others employing the same methods of sale and thereby trade is diverted to respondent and others using similar methods from said competitors. Said competitors can compete on even terms only by giving the same or similar device to retail dealers. This they are unwilling to do, and their sales of "straight" candy show a continued decrease.

In order to meet the competition of manufacturers who sell and distribute candy which is resold by such methods, some competitors of respondent have begun the sale and distribution of candy for resale to the public by lot or chance. The use of such methods by respondent in the sale and distribution of its candy is prejudicial and injurious to the public and its competitors and has resulted in the diversion of trade to respondent from said competitors, and is a restraint upon and a detriment to the freedom of fair and legitimate competition in the candy industry.

PAR. 8. There are in the United States many manufacturers of candy who do not manufacture and sell lottery or prize assortments and who sell their "straight" candy in interstate commerce in competition with the "break and take" assortments of respondent and other manufacturers of similar candy. The sale of candy without a lottery or gaming feature in connection therewith is adversely affected by the sale of "break and take" candy, and manufacturers of the former type of candy have noted a marked decrease in the sales of their products whenever and wherever the lottery or prize candy has appeared in their market. This decrease in the sales of "straight" candy is principally due to the gambling or lottery feature connected with the "break and take" candy.

PAR. 9. The principal demand in the trade for the "break and take" candy comes from the small retailers. The stores of these small retailers are in many instances located near schools and attract the trade of school children. The consumers or purchasers of the lottery or prize assortments are principally children, and because of the lottery or gambling feature connected with the "break and take" assortments and the possibility of becoming a winner it has been observed that the children purchase them in preference to the "straight" candy when the two types of assortments are displayed side by side.

The children prefer to purchase the lottery or prize assortments of candy because of the gambling feature connected with their sale. The sale and distribution of "break and take" assortments of candy, or of candy which has connected with its sale to the public the means or opportunity of obtaining a prize or becoming a winner by lot or chance, teaches and encourages gambling among children who comprise by far the largest class of purchasers and consumers of this type of candy.

PAR. 10. An officer of the respondent testified, and the Commission finds, that the gross annual sales of the respondent are approximately $650,000. The evidence does not disclose how much of this annual business is "break and take" assortments nor how much is "straight" candy, but the evidence shows, and the Commission finds, that the "break and take" business of the respondent is and has been a substantial part of its total volume.

PAR. 11. The Commission further finds that the sale and distribution in interstate commerce of assortments so packed and assembled as to enable retail dealers, without alteration, addition, or rearrangement, to resell the same to the consuming public by lot or chance is contrary to public policy.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondent, Voneiff-Drayer Company, a corporation, under the conditions and circumstances set forth in the foregoing findings of fact, are all to the prejudice of the public and respondent's competitors and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce and constitute a violation of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

It is ordered, That the respondent, Voneiff-Drayer Company, a corporation, its officers, representatives, agents, and employees, in the offering for sale, sale, and distribution in interstate commerce of candy, do cease and desist from:

1. Selling and distributing to jobbers and wholesale dealers for resale to retail dealers candy so packed and assembled that sales of such candy to the general public are made by means of a lottery, gaming device, or gift enterprise.

2. Supplying to or placing in the hands of wholesale dealers and jobbers assortments of candy which are used, or which may be used, without alteration or rearrangement of the contents of such packages or assortments, to conduct a lottery, gaming device, or gift enterprise in the sale or distribution of the candy contained in said assortments to the public.

3. Packing or assembling in the same assortment of candy for sale to the public at retail pieces of candy of uniform size and shape having centers of different color, together with larger pieces of candy, which said larger pieces of candy are to be given as prizes to the purchaser procuring a piece of candy with a center of a particular color.

4. Furnishing to wholesale dealers and jobbers display cards, either with assortments of candy or separately, bearing a legend or legends informing the purchaser that the candy is being sold to the public by lot or chance, or in accordance with a sales plan which constitutes a lottery, gaming device, or gift enterprise.

It is further ordered, That the respondent shall, within 30 days after service upon it of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which it has complied with this order.

COMPLAINT

Count 1

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent is a corporation organized, existing and doing business under the laws of the State of Illinois, with its office and principal place of business in the city of Chicago, in said State. It is now, and has been since its organization in February 1934, engaged in the business of a rectifier and wholesaler of liquors, purchasing and bottling whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages and selling the same at wholesale in constant course of trade and commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia. In the course and conduct of its said business, it causes its said products when sold to be transported from its place of business aforesaid into and through various other States of the United States to the purchasers thereof, consisting of wholesalers and retailers, some located within the State of Illinois and some located in other States of the United States and the District of Columbia. In the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid respondent is now, and at all times since its organization has been, in substantial competition with other corporations and with individuals, partnerships, and firms engaged in the manufacture by distillation of whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages and in the sale thereof in trade and commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia; and in the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid, respondent is, and has been since its organization, in substantial competition with other corporations and with individuals, firms, and partnerships engaged in the business of purchasing, rectifying, blending, and bottling whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages and in the sale thereof in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 2. For a long period of time the word "distilling" when used in connection with the liquor industry and the products thereof has had and still has a definite significance and meaning in the minds of the wholesalers and retailers in such industry and to the ultimate purchasing public, to wit, the manufacture of such liquors by the process of original and continuous distillation from mash, wort, or wash, through continuous closed pipes and vessels until the manufacture thereof is completed; and a substantial portion of the purchasing public prefers to buy spirituous liquors bottled by the actual distillers and manufacturers thereof.

PAR. 3. In the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid, by the use of the word "Distilling" in its corporate name, printed on its stationery and on the labels attached to the bottles in which it sells and ships its said products, and in various other ways, respondent represents to its customers and furnishes them with the means of representing to their vendees, both retailers and the ultimate consuming public, that the whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages therein contained were by it manufactured through the process of distillation from mash, wort, or wash, when, as a matter of fact, respondent is not a distiller, does not distill the said whiskies, gins or other spirituous beverages by it so bottled, labeled, sold, and transported, and does not own, operate, or control any place or places where such beverages are manufactured by the process of distillation from mash, wort, or wash.

PAR. 4. There are among the competitors of respondent engaged in the sale of spirituous beverages as mentioned in paragraph 1 hereof corporations, firms, partnerships, and individuals who manufacture and distill from mash, wort, or wash, whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages sold by them and who truthfully use the word "distillery," "distilleries," "distillers," or "distilling" as a part of their corporate names and on their stationery, and on the labels of the bottles in which they sell and ship such products. There are also among such competitors corporations, firms, partnerships, and individuals engaged in the business of purchasing, rectifying, blending, and bottling whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages who do not use the words "distillery," "distilleries," "distilling," or "distillers" as a part of their corporate names, nor on their stationery, nor on the labels attached to the bottles in which they sell and ship their said product.

PAR. 5. Representation by respondent, as set forth in paragraph 3 hereof, is calculated to and has the capacity and tendency to and does mislead and deceive dealers and the purchasing public into the belief that the whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages sold by the respondent are manufactured and distilled by it from mash, wort, or wash and is calculated to and has the capacity and tendency to and does induce dealers and the purchasing public, acting in such belief, to purchase the whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages bottled and sold by the respondent, thereby diverting trade to respondent from its competitors who do not by their corporate name or in any other manner misrepresent that they are manufacturers by distillation from mash, wort, or wash of whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages, and thereby respondent does substantial injury to substantial competition in interstate commerce.

PARAGRAPHS 1. Respondent is a corporation organized, existing, and doing business under the laws of the State of Illinois, with its office and principal place of business in the city of Chicago, in said State. It is now, and has been since its organization in February 1934, engaged in the business of a rectifier and wholesaler of liquors, purchasing and bottling whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages and selling the same at wholesale in constant course of trade and commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia. In the course and conduct of its said business, it causes its said products when sold to be transported from its place of business aforesaid into and through various other States of the United States to the purchasers thereof, consisting of wholesalers and retailers, some located within the State of Illinois and some located in other States of the United States and the District of Columbia. In the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid respondent is now, and at all times since its organization has been, in substantial competition with other corporations and with individuals, partnerships, and firms engaged in the manufacture by distillation of whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages and in the sale thereof in trade and commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia; and in the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid, respondent is, and has been since its organization, in substantial competition with other corporations and with individuals, firms, and partnerships engaged in the business of purchasing, rectifying, blending, and bottling whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages and in the sale thereof in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PARS. 2, 3, 4 and 5. As grounds for these paragraphs of this complaint, the Federal Trade Commission relies upon the matters and things set out in paragraphs 2, 3, 4, and 5 of count 1 of this complaint to the same extent as though the several allegations thereof were set out at length and in separate paragraphs herein, and the said paragraphs 2, 3, 4, and 5 of count 1 of this complaint are incorporated herein by reference and adopted as the allegations of paragraphs 2, 3, 4, and 5 of this count, and are hereby charged as fully and as completely as though the several averments of the said paragraphs of count 1 were separately set out and repeated verbatim.

PAR. 6. Under and pursuant to Title I of the National Industrial Recovery Act, approved June 16, 1933, (48 Stat. 195 C. 90), the President of the United States, by Executive Order No. 6182, of June 26, 1933, as supplemented by Executive Order No. 6207, of July 21, 1933, and Executive Order No. 6345 of October 20, 1933, delegated to H. A. Wallace, as Secretary of Agriculture, certain of the powers vested in the President of the United States by the aforesaid Act.

Under and pursuant to the delegation of such powers, the said Secretary of Agriculture pursuant to Section 3 (d) of the act and Executive orders under the act, upon his own motion presented a Code of Fair Competition for the Distilled Spirits Rectifying Industry after due notice and opportunity for hearing in connection therewith had been afforded interested parties, including respondent, in accordance with Title I of the National Industrial Recovery Act and applicable regulations issued thereunder, to the President of the United States who approved the same on the 9th day of December 1933, thereby constituting the said code a Code of Fair Competition within the meaning of the said National Industrial Recovery Act, for the regulation of the aforesaid industry.

In his written report to the President, the said Secretary of Agriculture made, among others, the following findings with respect to the said Code in the following words, to wit:

That said Code will tend to effectuate the declared policy of Title I of the National Industrial Recovery Act as set forth in Section 1 of said Act in that the terms and provisions of such Code tend: (a) to remove obstructions to the free flow of foreign commerce, which tend to diminish the amount thereof; (b) to provide for the general welfare by promoting the organization of industry for the purposes of cooperative action among trade groups; (c) to eliminate unfair competitive practices; (d) to promote the fullest possible utilization of the present productive capacity of industries; (e) to avoid undue restriction of production (except as may be temporarily required); (f) to increase the consumption of industrial and agricultural products by increasing purchasing power; and (g) otherwise to rehabilitate industry.

By his approval of the said code on December 9, 1933, the President of the United States, pursuant to the authority vested in him by Title I of the National Industrial Recovery Act aforesaid, made and issued his certain written Executive order, wherein he adopted and approved the report, recommendations and findings of the said Secretary of Agriculture, and ordered that the said Code of Fair Competition be, and the same thereby was approved, and by virtue of the National Industrial Recovery Act aforesaid, the following provision of Article V of said Code became and still is one of the standards of fair competition for the Distilled Spirits Rectifying Industry and is binding upon every member of said Industry and this respondent:

The following practices constitute unfair methods of competition and shall not be engaged in by any member of the industry;

Section 1. False Advertising.—To publish or disseminate in any manner any false advertisement of any rectified product. Any advertisement shall be deemed to be false if it is untrue in any particular, or if directly or by ambiguity, omission or inference it tends to create a misleading impression.

PAR. 7. The use by respondent of the word "Distilling" in its corporate name, printed upon its stationery and on the labels attached to the bottles in which it sells and ships such products and in various other ways, constitutes false advertising within the meaning of the aforesaid provision of said Article V and tends to and does create the misleading impression that respondent is engaged in the business of distilling spirits from mash, wort, or wash and that the spirituous beverages by it so sold and transported have been bottled by the original distillers thereof, all contrary to the provisions of Section 1, Article V, of the Code aforesaid.

PAR. 8. The above alleged methods, acts and practices of the respondent are and have been in violation of the standard of fair competition for the Distilled Spirits Rectifying Industry of the United States. Such violation of such standard in the aforesaid transactions in interstate commerce and other transactions which affect interstate commerce in the manner set forth in paragraph 5 of count 1 hereof, are in violation of Section 3 of Title I of the National Industrial Recovery Act and they are unfair methods of competition in commerce within the meaning of the Federal Trade Commission Act as amended.

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, on May 18, 1935, issued and served its complaint on Banner Distilling Company, charging it with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of the provisions of said act. After the issuance of said complaint, and the filing of respondents answer thereto, testimony and other evidence in support of the allegations of said complaint were introduced by John J. Keenan and PGad B. Morehouse, attorneys for the Commission, before John W. Addison, an examiner of the Commission, theretofore duly designated by it, and in defense of the allegations of the complaint by Lawrence A. Jacobson, attorney for the respondent; and said testimony and other evidence were duly recorded and filed in the office of the Commission. Thereafter, the proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on the said complaint, the answer thereto, testimony and other evidence, brief of counsel for the Commission in support of the complaint, (respondent's brief in opposition thereto having been waived) and the oral arguments of counsel aforesaid; and the Commission having duly considered the same, and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public, and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent is a corporation organized February 5, 1934, existing under the laws of the State of Illinois with its principal office and place of business at 2100 South Morgan Street in the city of Chicago in said State. It is now and has been since its commencement of business shortly after its organization, operating as a rectifier and wholesaler of spirituous liquors, purchasing and bottling whiskies and gins and other spirituous beverages and selling the same at wholesale in constant course of trade and commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia. It engages in that business under basic permit No. R-422 issued by the Federal Alcohol Administration.

Respondent's premises consist of two floors and a basement of a four-story building at the above address. It has the usual filter percolators and whiskey tanks constituting the ordinary equipment of a rectifier of spirituous liquors, but has no stills. It combines fruit and fruit flavors with neutral spirits or whiskey for the purpose of making different grades of cordials and also handles whiskey made by different distilleries. Its aggregate business is approximately fifty-five thousand dollars a month in sales. It employs no salesmen but circularizes its customers with direct advertising matter. From the time when respondent commenced its business up to the present time it has purchased its entire distilled spirits requirements of both whiskey and alcohol from distillers who produced it from the raw materials.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of its business, it causes its said products when sold to be transported from its place of business aforesaid into and through various other States of the United States to the purchasers thereof, consisting of wholesalers and retailers, some located within the State of Illinois and some located in other States of the United States and the District of Columbia. In the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid respondent is now, and at all times since its organization has been, in substantial competition with other corporations and with individuals, partnerships, and firms engaged in the manufacture by distillation of whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages and in the sale thereof in trade and commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia; and in the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid, respondent is, and has been since its organization, in substantial competition with other corporations and with individuals, firms, and partnerships engaged in the business of purchasing, rectifying, blending, and bottling whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages and in the sale thereof in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 3. For a long period of time the word "distilling," when used in connection with the liquor industry and with the products thereof, has had, and still has, a definite significance and meaning to the minds of wholesalers and retailers in such industry and to the ultimate purchasing public, to wit: the manufacture of spirituous liquors by the process of original and continuous distillation from mash, wort, or wash, through continuous closed pipes and vessels until the manufacture thereof is complete. Respondent's plant premises and operations do not make or constitute it a distilling company in the sense commonly understood by the public or by the liquor industry. Section 3244 (Second) of the Revised Statutes of the United States (U. S. C. A., Title 26, Sec. 1398-f) defines a rectifier in the following language:

Every person who rectifies, purifies, or refines distilled spirits or wines by any process other than by original and continuous distillation from mash, wort, or wash, through continuous closed vessels and pipes, until the manufacture thereof is complete, and every wholesale or retail liquor dealer who has in his possession any still or leach tub, or who keeps any other apparatus for the purpose of refining in any manner distilled spirits, and every person who, without rectifying, purifying, or refining distilled spirits, shall, by mixing such spirits, wine, or other liquor with any material, manufacture any spurious, imitation, or compound liquors for sale, under the name of whisky, brandy, gin, rum, wine, spirits, cordials, or wine bitters, or any other name, shall be regarded as a rectifier, and as being engaged in the business of rectifying.

Respondent does not now and never has rectified, purified, or refined distilled spirits or wines by a process of original and continuous distillation from mash, wort, or wash through continuous closed vessels and pipes until the manufacture thereof is complete, and is a rectifier and wholesaler only.

PAR. 4. Rectifying, in the distilled spirits rectifying industry, means the mixing of whiskies of different ages or types, or the mixing of other ingredients with whiskies, but reducing proof of whiskey by adding water is not rectifying. Rectifiers also blend whiskies with neutral spirits (grain alcohol).

A distiller, in the sense ordinarily understood by the liquor industry, is one who prepares distilled spirits by a process of original and continuous distillation from mash, wort, or wash, through continuous closed pipes and vessels until the manufacture thereof is complete. Many distillers operate a separate establishment 600 feet or more away from their distillery, known as a rectifying plant, wherein they operate in the same manner as described above, for a rectifier—sometimes exclusively with spirits of their own distillation, and sometimes with spirits purchased from other distillers, or both. Some distilleries have a tax-paid bottling room on the distillery bonded premises wherein their distilled spirits are bottled straight as they come from the still, or in a bonded warehouse after aging, or after reduction of proof. Any rectifying by a distiller, however, must be done in his rectifying plant under his rectifier's permit. On some bottled liquors, whether bottled at a distillery rectifying plant, or at any rectifying plant, appear the words "Bottled" or "Blended" (as the case may be) "by the _____ Company." If the distilled spirits therein contained are bottled by a distiller either in his distillery, or are spirits of his own distillation bottled in his rectifying plant, the distiller may, and does, put "Distilled and Bottled by _____ Company." If, in the distillery's rectifying plant, other spirits have been blended or rectified, he puts "Blended and Bottled by _____ Company." Finally, blown (usually in the bottom) in each bottle is a symbol, consisting of a letter followed by a number, identifying the bottler, viz, a "D" for a distillery and "R" for a rectifier, the number following said letter corresponding with the distiller's or rectifier's permit. Thus "R-422" designates this respondent. A distiller who also operates a rectifying plant, having both kinds of permits, may use either symbol depending upon whether the liquor contained in the bottle was produced and bottled under his distiller's or his rectifier's permit.

A distiller has a maximum bond of $100,000, and is permitted to have untaxed liquor whereas the average bond of the rectifier is about $5,000. A distiller is required either to own the free title of the premises upon which his business is conducted, or have a waiver of the owner's interest so that the Government can have a first lien upon that property for taxes. A distillery is under constant general supervision by storekeeper gaugers, who are always there and absolute supervision is maintained over the bonded warehouse of a distillery. Another difference is that one storekeeper gauger may take care of several rectifying plants, but at a distillery one is in constant supervision, primarily to supervise the tax payments. A rectifier is not permitted to store spirits in bond. A distiller produces spirits from grains, alcohol, molasses, and fruits, but a rectifier, producing no distilled spirits whatever, must obtain them from the producer or from someone holding warehouse receipts. In short, all requirements are considerably more detailed in the case of a distiller than in the case of a rectifier, viz:

A distiller must have a distillery, which must be a complete building and a warehouse, a separate building. He has to have necessary weighing equipment, a grain hopper, cooker, cooking equipment, mash tubs, fermenters, and sufficient distilling equipment to take care of his continuous distillation until the spirits are run through the pipe lines into the receiving tanks. At the warehouse he has to have the weighing and testing instruments for checking and many other things. A rectifier is not required to have a separate building but his plant may consist of a room within a building. If one room, it would have to be divided into three separate rooms by partitions. The regulations for the equipment of a rectifier are not so specific as those for a distiller.

Knowledge of these details is not widespread among the retail trade, and is very limited to the general public. All whiskies, whether emanating from distilleries or rectifiers, are generally in the trade conceded to be "distilled products."

It is not possible to determine from the presence of the phrase "Blended and Bottled by" alone or the phrase "Bottled by" alone, on the label whether the package was bottled by a rectifier who is a distiller or by a rectifier who is not a distiller.

PAR. 5. Respondent in the course and conduct of its business uses its name on labels attached to bottles in which it sells and ships its beverages and on stationery, invoices, and advertising matter. The name is preceded by the words "Bottled By" on some of its labels; "Produced in California and Bottled by" on others; "Prepared And Bottled By" on others; and "Made and Bottled By" on still others. On its stationery, invoices and advertising matter the name is preceded or followed by the words "Rectifiers And Blenders".

The Commission finds that in the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid, by the use of the word "Distilling" in its corporate name, printed on its stationery, advertising, and on the labels attached to the bottles in which it sells and ships its said products, and in various other ways, respondent represents to its customers, and furnishes them with the means of representing, to their vendees, both retailers and the ultimate consuming public, that the said whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages therein contained were by it manufactured through the process of distillation from mash, wort, or wash, when, as a matter of fact, respondent is not a distiller, not a distillery, does not distill the said whiskies, gins, or other spirituous beverages by it so bottled, labeled, sold, and transported in interstate commerce.

PAR. 6. Seventeen lay witnesses, representative of many different professions, trades, and occupations, such as surgeon, contractor, civil engineer, insurance agent, etc., were called to the stand and examined to test the reaction of a representative cross-section of the general public to such terms as "distilling," "distilleries," and "distillers" when used in connection with whiskey or the distilled spirits industry, and all of them testified in substance that by "distilling" they understood the manufacture of spirits, whiskey, or liquors from raw materials; and by "Banner Distilling Company" they would naturally assume respondent to be engaged in such manufacturing process. All but two of them indicated that they would be influenced to purchase respondent's product by reason of the word "distilling" being included in its corporate name. The testimony of many liquor tradesmen, retailers, and wholesalers was substantially to the same effect, namely, that they had observed, from their contacts in selling the public, a definite preference for distillery packaged products. It is unquestionably true that there are many drinkers who, in buying liquors, are governed principally by a brand name established by advertising or by long usage, or who are governed by taste and quality which is known to them, without regard to the source of bottling. The Commission finds, however, that there is a substantial portion of the liquor purchasing public which prefers to buy spirituous liquors, including gins, which have been bottled or packaged by distilleries.

The Commission also finds that a substantial portion of the trade as well as the public has a preference for handling liquors bottled by distillers or distilling companies notwithstanding the fact that sufficient time has now elapsed since repeal for a more widespread knowledge on the part of both retailers and wholesalers as to the exact status of the concerns from whom they buy their bottled goods for resale and such customers and prospective customers of respondent are not likely to be misled by respondent's corporate name alone.

PAR. 7. There are among the competitors of respondent engaged in the sale of spirituous beverages as mentioned in paragraph 2 hereof corporations, firms, partnerships, and individuals who manufacture and distill from mash, wort, or wash, as aforesaid, whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages sold by them, and who truthfully use the words "distillery," "distilleries," "distillers," or "distilling," as a part of their corporate names and on their stationery, advertising, and on the labels of the bottles in which they sell and ship such products. There are also among such competitors corporations, firms, partnerships, and individuals engaged in the business of rectifying, blending, and bottling whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages who do not use the words "distillery," "distilleries," "distilling," or "distillers" as a part of their corporate names, nor on their stationery, nor on the labels attached to the bottles in which they sell and ship their said products.

PAR. 8. The representations by respondent as set forth in paragraph 5 hereof have the capacity and tendency to, and by necessary inference do mislead and deceive dealers and the purchasing public into the belief that the whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages sold by the respondent are distilled by it from mash, wort, and wash as aforesaid and have the capacity and tendency to induce such dealers and the purchasing public acting in such belief to purchase the whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages rectified, blended and bottled by the respondent, thereby diverting trade to respondent from its competitors who do not, by their corporate name, or in any other manner, misrepresent that they are distilleries, or that they manufacture by distillation from mash, wort, or wash as aforesaid, whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages, and thereby respondent does substantial injury to substantial competition in interstate commerce.

PAR. 9. The Commission's complaint in this case was issued prior to the decision of the United States Supreme Court in the case of A. L. A. Schechter Poultry Corporation et al. v. United States (295 U. S. 495), and contained two counts. Count 1 specifically charged a violation of the Federal Trade Commission Act, and count 2 charged that the practices of respondent, as hereinbefore set out, were unfair methods within the meaning of the Federal Trade Commission Act because they were in violation of Section 3 of Title I of the National Industrial Recovery Act, which was invalidated by the aforesaid decision. For that reason the Commission is dismissing the complaint as to count 2 thereof.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondent Banner Distilling Company, are to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce, within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

This proceeding having been heard by the Federal Trade Commission upon the complaint of the Commission, the answer of respondent, testimony and other evidence taken before John W. Addison, an examiner of the Commission theretofore duly designated by it, in support of the allegations of said complaint and in opposition thereto, brief of counsel for the Commission filed herein, (brief on behalf of respondent having been waived), and oral arguments by P. B. Morehouse, counsel for the Commission, and by Lawrence A. Jacobson, counsel for the respondent, and the Commission having made its findings as to the facts and its conclusion that said respondent has violated the provisions of an Act of Congress approved

Order

24 F. T. C.

September 26, 1914, entitled, "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

It is ordered, That the respondent Banner Distilling Company, a corporation, its officers, representatives, agents, and employees, in connection with the offering for sale, sale, and distribution of whiskies, gins, or other spirituous beverages, in interstate commerce or in the District of Columbia do forthwith cease and desist from:

Representing, through the use of the word "Distilling" in its corporate name, on its stationery, advertising, or on the labels attached to the bottles in which it sells and ships said products, or in any other way by word or words of like import, (a) that it is a distiller of whiskies, gins, or other spirituous beverages; or (b) that the said whiskies, gins, or other spirituous beverages were by it manufactured through the process of distillation; or (c) that it owns, operates or controls a place or places where any such products are by it manufactured by a process of original and continuous distillation from mash, wort, or wash, through continuous closed pipes and vessels until the manufacturer thereof is completed, unless and until respondent shall actually own, operate, or control such a place or places.

It is further ordered, That the said complaint be and the same is hereby dismissed as to count 2 thereof.

It is further ordered, That the said respondent within 60 days from and after the date of the service upon it of this order, shall file with the Commission a report or reports in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which it is complying, and has complied, with the order to cease and desist hereinabove set forth.

Complaint

IN THE MATTER OF A. O. LEONARD, INC.

COMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION
OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 28, 1914

Docket 2855. Complaint, June 27, 1936—Decision, Jan. 15, 1937

Where a corporation engaged in manufacture, sale, and distribution of a product sold by it under trade name "Leonard Ear Oil" or "Leonard's Ear Oil"—Represented, through pamphlets, booklets, labels, statements on safety match box containers, and otherwise, that its said product was an ear oil and possessed such therapeutic properties as to relieve deafness, facts being it did not, used as directed or otherwise, accomplish such result and was not an ear oil;

With capacity and tendency to mislead and deceive purchasers of its products into the belief that in buying same they would obtain such oil and a product that possessed such therapeutic value as to relieve deafness, and with effect of causing a substantial number of the purchasing public to buy its said product on account of the mistaken and erroneous belief induced by its representation, and of unfairly diverting trade to it from many competitors engaged in manufacture and distribution of products designed for similar usage, and who do not misrepresent the capacities or effects thereof; to the substantial injury and prejudice of competition in commerce:

Held, That such acts and practices were to the prejudice of the public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition.

Before Mr. William C. Reeves, trial examiner.

Mr. T. H. Kennedy for the Commission.

Rogers, Ramsay & Hoge, of New York City, for respondent.

COMPLAINT

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent, A. O. Leonard, Inc., is a corporation organized and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the State of New York, and at all times herein referred to has maintained and now maintains its principal place of business at 70 Fifth Avenue, New York, N. Y. Respondent is, and for more than two years last past has been.

Complaint

engaged in the manufacture of a preparation composed of an emulsion of mineral oil, soft soap, glycerine, and eucalyptol, and has been engaged in the sale of said preparation under the trade name of "Leonard Ear Oil" between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia. During all of said time it has caused, and still causes, said product, when sold by it, to be transported from its place of business in New York, or other places within the United States, to purchasers thereof, some located in the State of New York and others located in the various States of the United States other than the State of origin of the shipment, and in the District of Columbia. In the course and conduct of its said business respondent is now, and for more than two years last past has been, in constant competition with other corporations, persons, firms, and partnerships engaged in the sale of products having properties, capacities, or effects claimed for the said "Leonard Ear Oil" by the respondent, as herein set forth, in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of its business, described herein, respondent for more than two years last past has, by means of advertisements, testimonials, pamphlets, booklets, labels, statements on safety matchbox containers, and otherwise, represented, and still represents, that its said product is an ear oil and that its said product has such therapeutic properties as to relieve deafness.

Respondent has distributed said advertising matter, testimonials, pamphlets, booklets, labels, and statements on safety matchbox containers among its prospective customers and placed the same in the hands of its agents and distributors in various States of the United States for use by them in advertising its said product.

Said representations have been and are made by respondent in such a way that purchasers and prospective purchasers of respondent's product are led to believe that respondent's product is an ear oil and possesses such therapeutic properties as to relieve deafness.

In truth and in fact said representations have been and are untrue, and respondent's said product is not, nor has it ever been an ear oil, nor does respondent's said product have, nor has it ever had such therapeutic properties as to relieve deafness.

There is a preference by a substantial number of retail dealers in products having properties, capacities, and effects claimed by respondent for its product, as hereinabove described, and by a substantial part of the purchasing public for products that have the properties, capacities, or effects claimed by respondent for its product, as hereinabove set forth.

The aforesaid representations of respondent have had, and still have, a capacity and tendency to mislead and deceive, and have misled and deceived, and still mislead and deceive, retailers and the purchasing public into the erroneous belief that said product of respondent has all the properties, capacities, or effects claimed for it by the respondent, as aforesaid, and the use of said misrepresentations by the respondent causes them to purchase respondent's product in such erroneous belief. The aforesaid misrepresentations by the respondent have placed, and still place, in the hands of retailers of the product of respondent hereinabove described, the means of deceiving and misleading the purchasing public.

PAR. 3. There are among the competitors of respondent manufacturers and distributors of products having properties, capacities, or effects similar to those claimed by the respondent for its product, who truthfully represent the properties, capacities, or effects of their said products; and there are also among the competitors of respondent manufacturers and distributors who do not misrepresent the properties, capacities, or effects of their said products.

By the representations made by the respondent, as set out hereinabove, trade has been, and still is, unfairly diverted to the respondent from such competitors, and thereby substantial injury has been done and still is being done by respondent to competitors in interstate commerce.

PAR. 4. The above acts and things done by the respondent are all to the injury and prejudice of the public and competitors of respondent in interstate commerce within the meaning and intent of Section 5 of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Findings

rial allegations of the complaint to be true and waiving the taking of further evidence and all intervening procedure, which substitute answer was duly filed in the office of the Commission. Thereafter this proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on the said complaint and the substitute answer, briefs and oral arguments of counsel having been waived, and the Commission having duly considered the same and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. For more than two years last past the respondent, A. O. Leonard, Inc., a corporation, has been organized and existing as a corporation under the laws of the State of New York, and has maintained during all of said time, and now maintains, its principal place of business at 70 Fifth Avenue, New York, N. Y.

PAR. 2. For more than two years last past the respondent has been engaged in the manufacture, sale, and distribution of a product sold by it under the trade name "Leonard Ear Oil," or "Leonard's Ear Oil." This product has been sold by the respondent to various firms, persons, associations, or corporations located not only in the State of New York, but in other States of United States, and after sales have been consummated the respondent has shipped the purchased goods, or caused them to be shipped from respondent's place of business in New York, or from other States, to purchasers thereof located in States other than the State of New York, or other than the State of origin of the shipment. The respondent has maintained a constant current of trade and commerce between and among various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia in the sale and distribution of its said product during all of the time referred to herein.

PAR. 3. The respondent, during all of the time herein referred to, has represented that its product, "Leonard Ear Oil," or "Leonard's Ear Oil," is an ear oil and possesses such therapeutic properties as to relieve deafness.

PAR. 4. There are other corporations, individuals, associations, and partnerships engaged in similar business to that of the respondent, to wit: the sale and distribution of products which will relieve deafness. Said other corporations, individuals, associations, and partnerships have been and are engaged in commerce among and between the various States of the United States in said business.

The respondent during all of the aforesaid time, was, and still is, in competition in such commerce in the sale of the said "Leonard Ear Oil," or "Leonard's Ear Oil" with such other corporations, individuals, associations, and partnerships likewise engaged in the sale and distribution of products having an efficacy similar to that claimed by the respondent for "Leonard Ear Oil," or "Leonard's Ear Oil."

PAR. 5. In soliciting the sale of its product respondent has continuously, during all of the aforesaid time, represented by pamphlets, booklets, labels, statements on safety-match box containers and otherwise, that its product is an ear oil and that said product possesses such therapeutic properties as to relieve deafness. These representations have been made through advertising mediums and otherwise, and have been caused by respondent to be circulated to customers and prospective customers residing in the various States.

PAR. 6. As a matter of fact, respondent's said product, "Leonard Ear Oil," or "Leonard's Ear Oil" when used as directed by the respondent or in any other manner does not relieve deafness, nor is said product an ear oil.

PAR. 7. There is a preference among members of the purchasing public, located in various States of the United States for an ear oil and for a product that possesses such therapeutic properties as to relieve deafness and the foregoing representations by the respondent describe a product that members of the public desire to purchase. The representations made by the respondent above referred to have the capacity and tendency to mislead and deceive the purchasers of its product into believing that when they purchase said product they will obtain an ear oil and a product that possesses such therapeutic properties as to relieve deafness.

PAR. 8. The representations of the respondent as aforesaid have had, and do have, the tendency and capacity and effect of causing a substantial number of the purchasing public to buy respondent's product on account of the mistaken and erroneous belief induced by respondent's representations.

PAR. 9. There are many of the competitors of respondent who manufacture and distribute products designed for similar usage to that sold and distributed by the respondent in various States of the United States, who do not misrepresent the capacities or effects of their products.

Respondent's acts and practices as hereinabove set forth tend to, and do, unfairly divert trade to respondent from such competitors, to the substantial injury and prejudice of competition in commerce among and between the various States of the United States.

Order

24 F. T. C.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondent, A. O. Leonard, Inc., are to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

This proceeding having been heard by the Federal Trade Commission upon the complaint of the Commission and the answer filed herein on January 11, 1937, by respondent admitting all the material allegations of the complaint to be true and waiving the taking of further evidence and all other intervening procedure, and the Commission having made its findings as to the facts and its conclusion that said respondent has violated the provisions of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

It is ordered, That the respondent A. O. Leonard, Inc., a corporation, its officers, representatives, agents, and employees, in connection with the offering for sale, sale, and distribution of a product designated as "Leonard Ear Oil," or "Leonard's Ear Oil" or any product of substantially the same composition and ingredients as that now sold by the respondent under the name of "Leonard Ear Oil," or "Leonard's Ear Oil" or under any other name in interstate commerce or in the District of Columbia, do forthwith cease and desist from representing that said product is an ear oil or that said product has such therapeutic properties as to relieve deafness or from making representations of similar import and effect.

It is further ordered, That the respondent shall, within 60 days after service upon it of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which it has complied with this order.

WILLIS, TRADING AS ALVITA PRODUCTS COMPANYCOMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 28, 1914*Docket 2067. Complaint, Nov. 9, 1936¹—Decision, Jan. 19, 1937*

Where a corporation and an individual engaged in sale of various food products in which alfalfa was principal ingredient and which was sold under trade name "Alvita," and included among which was product described as "Alvita Tea"—

Represented, in extensive advertisements of their said last-named product, in various periodicals of interstate circulation, that said tea would supply possible nutritional deficiencies of the user and that it stood at the head of the vegetable list in mineral and vitamin potency, and that use thereof would supply proper alkaline nutrition to help build up vitality, and that thousands of satisfied customers had learned the secret how to revitalize nature's way with "Alvita Tea," which built up vitality and aided digestion and appetite and made the user strong and robust, and that it constituted a reliable and valuable food product composed of ingredients of great therapeutic value, use of which would accomplish results above indicated, and result in great healthful and therapeutic value and effect, the facts being principal ingredient thereof had no beneficial therapeutic value or effect, and use of the product would not accomplish the various results claimed therefor, as above indicated;

With effect of misleading and deceiving public into erroneous belief that said tea was, in truth and in fact, a valuable health food and that through use thereof healthful and therapeutic value and effect would be obtained, and of inducing the consuming public, acting in such erroneous belief, and especially that portion thereof which purchases health foods, to buy said tea in preference to other health products offered by manufacturers, retailers, and distributors, and of unfairly diverting thereby trade to such corporation and individual from such manufacturers, retailers, or distributors who do not misrepresent the character and quality of their respective products or the results obtained from the use thereof:

Held, That such acts and practices were to the prejudice of the public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition.

AMENDED AND SUPPLEMENTAL COMPLAINT¹

Whereas, the Federal Trade Commission did, to wit, on October 21, 1936, issue its amended and supplemental complaint herein charging and alleging that California Alfalfa Products Company, a corporation trading under the name and style of Alvita Products Company was guilty of unfair methods of competition in interstate commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of the Act of Congress entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914; and

Whereas it now appears that Glenn B. Willis, an individual, is trading under the name and style of Alvita Products Company; and

Whereas this Commission having reason to believe that California Alfalfa Products Company, a corporation trading under the name and style of Alvita Products Company, and Glenn B. Willis, an individual trading under the name and style of Alvita Products Company, are and have been using unfair methods of competition in commerce as "commerce" is defined in said act, and it appearing to said Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest:

Now, therefore, acting in the public interest, pursuant to the provisions of the act of September 26, 1914, aforesaid, the Federal Trade Commission charges that California Alfalfa Products Company, a corporation trading under the name and style of Alvita Products Company, and Glenn B. Willis, an individual trading under the name and style of Alvita Products Company, have been and now are using unfair methods of competition in commerce as "commerce" is defined in said act, and states its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. The respondent, California Alfalfa Products Company, trading under the name and style of Alvita Products Company, is a corporation organized and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the State of California, with its principal office and place of business located in the city of Pasadena within the State of California. The respondent, Glenn B. ous food products under the trade name of "Alvita," among which is "Alvita Tea," and in which said products alfalfa is the principal ingredient. Said respondents claim that their food product "Alvita Tea" has healthful and therapeutic value and effect. Said respondents are also engaged in the distribution of their said food product "Alvita Tea" in commerce between and among the various States of the United States. Said respondents cause said "Alvita Tea," when sold, to be transported to purchasers thereof located in the State of California and in various States of the United States other than the State of California. There is now and has been for a long time, to wit, more than two years last past, a constant current of trade and commerce by respondents in said food product "Alvita Tea" between and among the various States of the United States.

In the course and conduct of their said business, said respondents are now and for a long time, to wit, more than two years last past, have been in substantial competition in commerce between and among the various States of the United States with sundry other corporations, partnerships, firms, and individuals engaged in the interstate sale and distribution of other food products which it is claimed have healthful and therapeutic value and effect.

PAR. 2. The preparation "Alvita Tea" is manufactured for the said respondents and respondents' activities in connection therewith are restricted to packaging the said product "Alvita Tea" at their own plant and then distributing said product to retailers located in the various States of the United States.

PAR. 3. Said respondents, in the course and conduct of their said business, as hereinbefore set out in paragraphs 1 and 2, have been and now are engaged in extensive advertisements of their said food product "Alvita Tea" as a means of furthering and aiding in the interstate sale and distribution of said food product, and as media of such advertising they have been and now are using various magazines of interstate circulation. Said respondents also issue booklets and circulars describing their said food product "Alvita Tea" and the various alleged benefits to be derived from the use of the said "Alvita Tea."

¹ Extended quotation of respondents' representations, as alleged, in advertisements, etc., calculated to create the false and erroneous belief that their said preparation is a reliable and valuable food product composed of ingredients of great therapeutic value, etc., and which follows at this point, is also set forth in the findings, infra, at page 460, and is accordingly omitted from the complaint as published in the interest of brevity.

Complaint

Said statements and representations used by said respondents in their said advertisements as hereinabove set out, and many other statements and representations of like import and tenor, which are not set out herein but have been used and are now being used by said respondents, have had and do now have the tendency to, and have and do now create upon the public the false impression and erroneous belief that "Alvita Tea" is a reliable and valuable food product composed of ingredients of great therapeutic value, the use of which will build up vitality, aid digestion, cause the user to become strong and robust, and will result in great healthful and therapeutic value and effect, whereas in truth and in fact it is not a reliable and valuable food product, composed of ingredients of great therapeutic value, and the use of it will not build up vitality, aid digestion, cause the user to become strong and robust and will not result in great healthful and therapeutic value and effect.

PAR. 4. The use by the said respondents, California Alfalfa Products Company, a corporation trading under the name and style of Alvita Products Company, and Glenn B. Willis, an individual trading under the name and style of Alvita Products Company, of the foregoing false, deceptive, and misleading representations has had and does now have the capacity and tendency to and does mislead and deceive the public into the erroneous and untrue belief that "Alvita Tea" is in truth and in fact a valuable health food and that by using the same, healthful and therapeutic value and effect will be obtained. Acting in such erroneous belief, the consuming public, and especially that portion of the public which purchases health foods, have been induced and are now induced to purchase "Alvita Tea" in preference to other health foods offered for sale by manufacturers, retail dealers and distributors. As a result of such false, deceptive, and misleading representations on the part of said respondents, trade is unfairly diverted to respondents from such manufacturers, retail dealers, or distributors of other health foods who do not misrepresent the character and quality of their respective products or the results obtained from the use thereof.

PAR. 5. Said false, deceptive, and misleading representations of said respondents contained in their advertisements have resulted in injury to respondents' competitors and to retail dealers and in prejudice to the buying public and constitutes unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

Findings

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, on November 9, 1936, issued and on November 30, 1936, served its amended and supplemental complaint in this proceeding upon the respondent, California Alfalfa Products Company, a corporation trading under the name and style of Alvita Products Company, and upon the respondent Glenn B. Willis, an individual trading under the name and style of Alvita Products Company, charging said respondents with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of the provisions of said act. After the issuance of said complaint an answer was duly filed by said respondents in the office of the Commission on December 11, 1936, which said answer admitted all the material allegations of the complaint to be true and waived the taking of further evidence and all other intervening procedure. Thereafter, this proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on the said complaint and the said answer, briefs and oral arguments of counsel having been waived, and the Commission having duly considered the same, and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public, and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. The respondent California Alfalfa Products Company, trading under the name and style of Alvita Products Company, is a corporation organized and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the State of California, with its principal office and place of business located in the city of Pasadena, within the State of California. The respondent Glenn B. Willis is an individual trading under the name and style of Alvita Products Company, with his principal office and place of business located in the city of Pasadena, within the State of California. Said respondents are now and for more than two years last past have been engaged in the sale of various food products under the trade name of "Alvita," among which is "Alvita Tea," and in which said products alfalfa is the principal ingredient. Said respondents claim that their food product "Alvita Tea" has healthful and therapeutic value and effect. Said respondents are also engaged in the distribution of their said food product "Alvita Tea" in commerce between and among the various States of the United States. Said respondents cause said "Alvita Tea," when sold, to be transported to the purchasers thereof located in the State of California and in various States of the United States other than the State of California. There is now and has been for a long time, to wit, more than two years last past, a constant current of trade and commerce by respondents in said food product "Alvita Tea" between and among the various States of the United States.

In the course and conduct of their said business, said respondents are now and for a long time, to wit, more than two years last past, have been in substantial competition in commerce between and among the various states of the United States with sundry other corporations, partnerships, firms, and individuals engaged in the interstate sale and distribution of other food products which have healthful and therapeutic value and effect.

PAR. 2. The preparation "Alvita Tea" is manufactured for the said respondents and respondents' activities in connection therewith are restricted to packaging the said product "Alvita Tea" at their own plant and then distributing said product to retailers located in the various States of the United States.

PAR. 3. Said respondents, in the course and conduct of their said business, as hereinbefore set out in paragraphs 1 and 2, have been and are now engaged in extensive advertisements of their said food product "Alvita Tea" as a means of furthering and aiding in the interstate sale and distribution of said food product, and as a media of such advertising they have been and now are using various magazines of interstate circulation. Said respondents also issue booklets and circulars describing their said food product "Alvita Tea" and the various alleged benefits to be derived from the use of said "Alvita Tea."

Among the statements which said respondents have used and are now using in their advertisements in magazines and in their booklets and circulars distributed by them, are the following:

IS: Nutritional Deficiencies the cause of your ill Health?

If so, why deprive yourself of needed benefits?

Thousands of satisfied customers have learned the secret how to Re-vitalize Nature's way with "Alvita Tea". You, too, may have the privilege.

We got some alfalfa and ground it into flour and made some bread, using whole wheat and white flour with the alfalfa. One woman, a popular screen actress of the city, came back next day for another loaf of the bread, saying it was good for her constipation. Dickinson also made a fine candy using the extract of the alfalfa for the flavoring and it seemed to make the candy different, that is more easy to digest.

I gave a quantity of the tea to a boarding house lady to try on her unsuspecting boarders. They drank it without comment, noticing no difference in the taste of the new tea from the old, but in a few days the boarders began to eat. My, how the appetites began to increase. * * *

My attorney friend, Arthur Helliwell, was advised by five doctors in a consultation over his case, to quit his practice and retire to his farm. He might live a year they said. I gave him the tea and the third night he continued his practice in the city.

In St. Paul I met a young newspaper man. He volunteered to have his wife, an expectant mother, use the tea to see what effect it would have on the unborn child. For four months, the mother drank copiously of the tea. A baby was born and it was a wonder child. Its bones were strong, with a large frame, and there was a perfectly normal delivery on the part of the mother. As long as the baby nursed, the mother continued to drink the tea and she had a great abundance of rich milk upon which the child thrived without the usual troublesome times of nursing babies.

There are also several alkaline salts in this alfalfa ash, which, when combined, make a wonderful neutralizant for any condition of the body. They are necessary for growth and are prescribed for many ailments of mankind.

The alfalfa plant also contains a large percentage of the Enzymes or digestive ferments which aid digestion. These ferments join forces with the Vitamins so as to greatly aid in the assimilation of foods and increase the vitality of both man and beast.

The soil, climate and different cuttings bring out a variety of flavors and difference in food and medicinal values.

Nature intends that men, women and children should be strong, robust and enjoy life. Consequently Nature provides in abundance all the elements needed in Natural Foods.

Alvita Tea, comparatively speaking, stands at the head of the Vegetable List in Mineral and Vitamin Potency.

This "Alvita" book has been prepared so that you may know to what extent we have developed the therapeutic value of the Alfalfa Plant.

is in truth and in fact a valuable health food and that by using the same, healthful and therapeutic value and effect will be obtained. Acting in such erroneous belief, the consuming public, and especially that portion of the public which purchases health foods, have been induced and are now induced to purchase "Alvita Tea" in preference to other health foods offered for sale by manufacturers, retail dealers and distributors. As a result of such false, deceptive and misleading representations on the part of said respondents, trade is unfairly diverted to respondents from such manufacturers, retail dealers or distributors of other health foods who do not misrepresent the character and quality of their respective products or the results obtained from the use thereof.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondent California Alfalfa Products Company, a corporation trading under the name and style of Alvita Products Company, and of the respondent Glenn B. Willis, an individual trading under the name and style of Alvita Products, are to the prejudice of the public and of respondents' competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

This proceeding having been heard by the Federal Trade Commission upon the amended and supplemental complaint of the Commission and the answer filed herein on December 11, 1936, by the respondents admitting all the material allegations of the complaint to be true, and waiving the taking of further evidence and all other intervening procedure, and the Commission having made its findings as to the facts and its conclusion that said respondents have violated the provisions of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

It is ordered, That the respondent California Alfalfa Products Company, a corporation trading under the name and style of Alvita Products Company, its officers, representatives, agents and employees, and the respondent Glenn B. Willis, an individual trading under the name and style of Alvita Products Company, his representatives, agents, and employees, in connection with the offering for sale, sale, and distribution of the product called "Alvita Tea," or of any other product of substantially the same ingredients, in interstate commerce or in the District of Columbia, do forthwith cease and desist from representing:

1. That respondents' said product is a reliable and valuable food product composed of ingredients of great therapeutic value;
2. That the use of respondents' said product will build up vitality;
3. That the use of respondents' said product will aid digestion;
4. That the use of respondents' said product will cause the user to become strong and robust;
5. That the use of respondents' said product will result in great healthful and therapeutic value and effect;
6. That the respondents' said product will supply nutritional deficiencies;
7. That thousands of customers have learned the secret how to revitalize Nature's way with the respondents' said product;
8. That the use of respondents' said product will increase the appetite;
9. That the respondents' said product stands at the head of the vegetable list in mineral and vitamin potency;
10. That the use of respondents' said product will supply the proper alkaline nutrition to help build up vitality;
11. That respondents' said product forms a competent and satisfactory cure or remedy or has beneficial therapeutic effects in the treatment of any ills, diseases, maladies, or conditions of the human body; and
12. From making any other similar representations of like import or effect unless and until said representations are true in fact.

OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 26, 1914*Docket 2716. Complaint, Feb. 7, 1936—Decision, Jun. 19, 1937*

Where a corporation engaged in manufacture, distribution, and sale of a depilatory known as "Neet", in widely advertising its said product in newspapers and periodicals of general circulation and in display cards, advertising folders, and literature printed and circulated by it throughout the several States to customers and prospective customers—

- (a) Represented that by careful laboratory control its alkalescence had been so regulated that it never approached causticity, facts being that, while not generally caustic when applied according to its directions, to those portions of the body recommended for treatment with said product for removal of superfluous hair, there are a number of persons whose skin is more susceptible to irritation than that of others and in case of whom it might have caustic effect, as it might also, not applied as directed;
- (b) Represented that use of said product discouraged growth of hair and delayed its appearance for a material length of time, and that hair was much slower in returning and regrowing than when shaved, facts being hair regrowing after use thereof is no slower in returning, etc., than after shaving, allowance made for action of preparation in removing hair farther below surface of skin than razor, and consequent greater delay in reappearance;
- (c) Represented that shaving stimulates hair growth, and that hair returning or regrowing after use of its said product is softer and less than that returning or regrowing after shaving, facts being former is no softer or less coarse than latter, though regrowth with rounded end and less coarse feeling may result from dissolving process thereof;
- (d) Represented that its said product gave results unlike other methods of hair removal, and that it was not an ordinary hair remover, and ended enlarged pores which shaving tended to cause, and would permanently eradicate hair, facts being shaving does not cause such enlarged pores, nor does use of its said product end same, and aforesaid various representations were false; and
- (e) Falsely represented that its said product was used by surgeons to remove hair before operating;

With capacity and tendency to mislead and deceive a substantial portion of purchasing public into the erroneous belief that all said representations were true, and into purchase of a substantial volume of its said product on account of such beliefs, and with result that trade was diverted to it from those engaged in manufacturing, distributing, and selling depilatories or other products designed, intended and sold for purpose of removing superfluous hair, and who truthfully advertised same and effectiveness thereof; to the injury of competition in commerce:

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that Neet, Inc., a corporation, hereinafter referred to as respondent, has been and now is using unfair methods of competition in commerce as "commerce" is defined in said act, and it appearing to the Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent, Neet, Inc., is a corporation, organized, existing, and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of New Jersey, with its principal office and place of business located in the city of Chicago, State of Illinois. Respondent is now, and has been for some years, engaged in the business of manufacturing, distributing, and selling, in commerce as herein set out, a certain depilatory known as "Neet."

PAR. 2. Said respondent, being engaged in business as aforesaid, causes said depilatory, when sold, to be transported from its office and principal place of business in the State of Illinois to purchasers thereof located in various points in other States of the United States and in the District of Columbia and there is now, and has been at all times since the organization of respondent corporation, a constant current of trade and commerce in said depilatory so manufactured, distributed, and sold by the respondent, between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 3. In the course and conduct of its said business, respondent is now, and has been, in substantial competition with other corporations, firms, and individuals likewise engaged in the business of manufacturing, distributing and selling depilatories or other products designed, intended, and sold for the purpose of removing superfluous hair, in commerce among and between the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 4. In the course of the operation of said business, and for the purpose of inducing individuals, firms, and corporations to purchase said depilatory, respondent has caused advertisements to be inserted in newspapers and magazines of general circulation throughout the United States and has printed and circulated throughout the several States to customers and prospective customers, through the United States mails and otherwise, display cards, advertising folders, and literature, in all of which advertisements respondent has caused its corporate name to be prominently and conspicuously displayed, together with the following statements:

Its job is to remove hair and to delay its reappearance indefinitely and to relieve women of the highly stimulated growth of hair bristles, following shaving, that thousands of women are suffering today.

It gives results unlike any other method known to the scientific world in hair removal.

Not an ordinary hair remover.

The hair that regrows after using "Neet" is many times softer and less coarse than the hair that comes back after shaving and the hair itself is much slower in returning.

"Neet" ends, too, the disfigurement of enlarged pores.

By careful laboratory control, the alkalescence of "Neet" is regulated so that its pH never approaches causticity.

All of said statements, together with many similar statements appearing in respondent's advertising literature purport to be descriptive of respondent's product. In all of its advertising literature, respondent represents, through statements and representations herein set out and other statements of similar import and effect, that (1) its product is not caustic; (2) that its product discourages growth of hair, delays its reappearance for a material length of time and that the hair is much slower in returning or regrowing than when the hair is shaved; (3) that shaving stimulates hair growth; (4) that the hair returning or regrowing after using "Neet" is softer and less coarse than the hair returning or regrowing after shaving; (5) that its product gives results unlike other methods of hair removal and that its product is not an ordinary hair remover; (6) that its product ends enlarged pores and that shaving tends to cause enlarged pores; (7) that its product will permanently eradicate hair and (8) that many surgeons use its product to remove hair from patients before operating.

PAR. 5. The representations made by the respondent with respect to the nature and effect of its product when used are grossly exaggerated, false, misleading, and untrue. In truth and in fact, the product is caustic, particularly when the product is introduced into the eye; it does not discourage the growth of hair or delay its reappearance for any material length of time and the hair is not appreciably slower in returning or regrowing than it is following shaving or following the use of other methods of hair removal. Shaving does not stimulate hair growth and the hair that returns after using "Neet" is not softer and less coarse than the hair that regrows following shaving. The product known as "Neet" does not give results unlike other methods of hair removal but the results given are similar to those given by many other depilatories and respondent's product is an ordinary hair remover. Shaving does not cause enlarged pores and the use of respondent's product does not end enlarged pores, nor will it permanently eradicate hair. Surgeons do not use respondent's product for the purpose of removing hair from patients before operating.

PAR. 6. There are among respondent's competitors many who manufacture, distribute and sell depilatories or other products designed, intended, and sold for the purpose of removing superfluous hair and who do not in any way misrepresent the quality or character of their respective product or its effectiveness in removing said hair growth.

PAR. 7. Each and all of the false and misleading statements and representations made by the respondent in designating or describing its product and the effectiveness of said product for removing hair, as hereinabove set out, in its advertising in newspapers, magazines, booklets, pamphlets, display cards, and other advertising literature, in offering for sale and selling its product was, and is, calculated to, and had, and now has, a tendency and capacity to mislead and deceive a substantial portion of the purchasing public into the erroneous belief that all of the said representations are true. Further, as a direct consequence of the mistaken and erroneous beliefs, induced by the acts, advertisements, and misrepresentations of respondent, as hereinabove detailed, a substantial number of the consuming public has purchased a substantial volume of respondent's depilatory with the result that trade has been unfairly diverted to the respondent from individuals, firms, and corporations likewise engaged in the business of manufacturing, distributing, and selling depilatories or other products designed, intended, and sold for the purpose of removing superfluous hair, and who truthfully advertise their products. As a result thereof, substantial injury has been, and is now being done, by respondent to substantial competition in commerce among and between the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 8. The above and foregoing acts, practices, and representations of the respondent have been, and are, all to the prejudice of the public and respondent's competitors as aforesaid, and have been, and are, unfair methods of competition within the meaning and intent of Section 5 of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, on February 7, 1936, issued and served its complaint in this proceeding upon respondent Neet, Inc., charging it with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of the provisions of said act. After the issuance of said complaint, and the filing of respondent's answer thereto, testimony and other evidence in support of the allegations of said complaint were introduced by J. T. Welch, attorney for the Commission, before John J. Keenan, an examiner of the Commission theretofore duly designated by it, and in opposition to the allegations of the complaint by James H. Rogers, attorney for the respondent; and said testimony and other evidence were duly recorded and filed in the office of the Commission. Thereafter, a stipulation was entered into whereby it was stipulated and agreed that a statement of facts signed and executed by the respondent's counsel, Rogers, Woodson & Rogers and W. T. Kelley, Chief Counsel for the Federal Trade Commission, subject to the approval of the Commission, may be taken as facts in this proceeding in addition to the testimony theretofore taken and that the said Commission may proceed upon said statement of facts and upon the testimony and evidence taken to make its report, stating its findings as to the facts and its conclusion based thereon and enter its order disposing of the proceeding without the presentation of argument or the filing of briefs. Thereafter, the proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on the said complaint, the answer thereto, testimony and other evidence and said stipulation as to the facts, said stipulation having been approved and accepted by the Commission, and the Commission having duly considered the same, and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent, Neet, Inc., is a corporation, organized, existing, and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of New Jersey. Its principal office and place of business is located in the city of Chicago, State of Illinois. For some years the respondent has been engaged in the business of manufacturing, distributing, and selling a certain depilatory known as "Neet." When orders are received for said depilatory, respondent ships said product so purchased from its principal place of business in the State of Illinois to the respective purchasers thereof located at various points in other States of the United States and in the District of Columbia. Respondent, has, at all times, maintained a constant current of trade in commerce in said depilatory manufactured, distributed, and sold by it between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia. There are likewise other corporations, firms, and individuals engaged in the business of manufacturing, distributing, and selling depilatories or other products designed, intended, and sold for the purpose of removing superfluous hair, in commerce among and between the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia. Respondent, Neet, Inc., is in substantial competition in the sale of its product "Neet" with said other corporations, firms, and individuals in the sale of their respective products.

PAR. 2. For the purpose of inducing the purchase of its depilatory, respondent has widely advertised said product in advertisements inserted in newspapers and magazines of general circulation throughout the United States. It has also printed and circulated throughout the several States, to customers and prospective customers, display cards, advertising folders, and literature. In all of the advertisements and advertising matter hereinabove mentioned, respondent has caused its corporate name to be prominently and conspicuously displayed, together with such statements as the following:

Its job is to remove hair and to delay its reappearance indefinitely and to relieve women of the highly stimulated growth of hair bristles, following shaving, that thousands of women are suffering today.

It gives results unlike any other method known to the scientific world in hair removal.

Not an ordinary hair remover.

The hair that regrows after using "Neet" is many times softer and less coarse than the hair that comes back after shaving and the hair itself is much slower in returning.

"Neet" ends, too, the disfigurement of enlarged pores.

By careful laboratory control, the alkalescence of "Neet" is regulated so that its pH never approaches causticity.

The statements above set out, together with many similar statements appearing in respondent's advertising literature, purport to be descriptive of its product. Through these statements and other similar statements of similar import and effect, the respondent represents that (1) its product is not caustic; (2) that its product discourages growth of hair, delays its reappearance for a material length of time and that the hair is much slower in returning or regrowing than when the hair is shaved; (3) that shaving stimulates hair growth; (4) that the hair returning or regrowing after using "Neet" is softer and less coarse than the hair returning or regrowing after shaving; (5) that its product gives results unlike other methods of hair removal and that its product is not an ordinary hair remover; (6) that its product ends enlarged pores and that shaving tends to cause enlarged pores; (7) that its product will permanently eradicate hair and (8) that many surgeons use its product to remove hair from patients before operating.

PAR. 3. In truth and in fact, the product designated as "Neet" is not generally caustic when applied according to respondent's directions to those portions of the body recommended to be treated with said product for the removal of superfluous hair. There are a number of persons whose skin is more susceptible to irritation than that of others. The product "Neet" might have a caustic effect when applied to the skin of such persons. It might, also, have a caustic effect when not applied in accordance with the respondent's directions.

The product is caustic to such sensitive portions of the body as the eyes, but is not normally applied to the eyes and is introduced into them only in cases of misapplication. In many cases, the product may produce a sufficient dermatitis to result in a redness of the skin in the area treated, but this dermatitis is not generally of such a character as to be considered a caustic burn.

"Neet" does not discourage the growth of hair and does not delay its reappearance for any material length of time. The hair regrowing after the use of said product is no slower in returning and regrowing than when the hair has been shaved, except that when the hair is removed by the use of said product, it is generally taken off farther below the plane of the surface of the skin than when the hair is removed with a razor. In shaving the hair, the stalk of the hair is generally cut off at a point in line with the plane of the skin surface. In the removal of hair by the respondent's process or any process similar thereto, the product, to some extent, goes down into the pores and dissolves the stalk of the hair below the plane of the skin surface. To the extent that the product goes below the plane of the skin surface in dissolving the hair stalk, the hair will be delayed in reappearing above the plane of the skin surface.

There is no scientific basis for the statement or representation that shaving stimulates the hair growth or causes the regrowing hair to come in faster or coarser. In fact, the shaving of superfluous hair has no effect whatever on the texture or rate of growth of the regrowing hair.

The hair returning or regrowing after the use of "Neet" is no softer or less coarse than the hair returning or regrowing after shaving. By reason of the process by which respondent's product dissolves the hair stalk rather than chopping it off, the hair regrowing or returning after the use of said product may have a rounded end with the result that the returning or regrowing hair feels less coarse.

The use of respondent's said product does not give results unlike other methods of hair removal. On the contrary, the use of the product gives results similar to the results given by other methods of hair removal and respondent's product is an ordinary hair remover.

Shaving does not cause enlarged pores in the skin and the use of respondent's product does not end enlarged pores. In fact, the use of respondent's product will have no effect whatever on the size or character of the pores of the skin.

Respondent's product will not permanently eradicate hair and its use has no effect whatever on the roots of the hair.

Surgeons do not, in fact, use respondent's said product to remove hair from patients before operating on said patients.

PAR. 4. There are among respondent's competitors many who manufacture, distribute and sell depilatories or other products designed, intended and sold for the purpose of removing superfluous hair and who do not in any way misrepresent the quality or character of their respective product or its effectiveness in removing said hair growth.

PAR. 5. The various statements and representations made by the respondent in describing its product and the effectiveness of said product in use had, and now have, a capacity and tendency to mislead and deceive a substantial portion of the purchasing public into the erroneous belief that all of said representations are true and into the purchase of a substantial volume of respondent's depilatory on account of such beliefs induced by respondent's representations contained in its various advertisements. As a result thereof, trade has been diverted to the respondent from individuals, firms, and corporations likewise engaged in the business of manufacturing, distributing and selling depilatories or other products designed, intended, and sold for the purpose of removing superfluous hair, and who truthfully advertise their products and the effectiveness of said products when used. As a consequence thereof, injury has been, and is now being, done by respondent to competition in commerce between and among the various States of the United States.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondent, Neet, Inc., are to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce, within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

It is ordered, That the respondent, Neet, Inc., a corporation, its officers, representatives, agents, and employees, in connection with the offering for sale, sale, and distribution of a depilatory product now known and designated as "Neet," or of a product of substantially the same composition and ingredients sold under the name "Neet" or under any other name, in interstate commerce or in the District of Columbia do forthwith cease and desist from representing:

1. That its product is not caustic, provided that the respondent is not hereby prohibited from representing the said product is not generally caustic;

2. That the use of said product discourages the growth of hair and delays its appearance for a material length of time and that the hair is much slower in returning and regrowing than when it is shaved, provided that the respondent is not hereby prohibited from representing that the hair returns more slowly when removed by respondent's product than when removed by a razor to whatever extent said product penetrates into the pores below the plane of the surface of the skin and dissolves the hair stalk;

3. That shaving stimulates hair growth;

4. That the hair returning or regrowing after using its product is softer and less coarse than the hair returning or regrowing after shaving, provided that the respondent is not hereby prohibited from representing that the hair returning or regrowing after using its product feels less coarse on account of the rounded end thereof;

5. That its product gives results unlike other methods of hair removal and that its product is not an ordinary hair remover;

6. That its product ends enlarged pores or that shaving tends to cause enlarged pores;

7. That its product will permanently eradicate hair;

8. That its product is used by surgeons to remove hair before operating.

It is further ordered, That the respondent shall, within 60 days after service upon it of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which it has complied with this order.

RALADAM COMPANY

COMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION
OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 26, 1914

Docket 2406. Complaint, July 15, 1935¹—Decision, Jan. 21, 1937

Where corporation engaged in offer and sale of weight reducing preparation "Marmola," in substantial competition with others engaged in sale and distribution of medicines, preparations, systems, methods, books of instruction, and other commodities, articles, and means, designed, intended, and used for aforesaid purpose; in promoting sale of said product, active reducing ingredient of which was desiccated thyroid, through advertisements in newspapers and periodicals of general circulation, radio broadcasts, booklets and printed matter and other means—

- (a) Represented that thyroid deficiency was a common cause or the usual cause of obesity or excess fat, and that if a person was overweight it was an indication of such deficiency, and that thyroid should be taken for reducing purposes, facts being most cases of obesity or excess fat are caused by incorrect habits of eating, and only a very small percentage of the total number of cases of obesity are endogenous obesity, in which are included cases resulting from thyroid deficiency, only one qualified by training and experience can determine with any degree of certainty whether case of obesity is result of aforesaid deficiency, and, if so, whether physiological condition of patient is such as to make advisable use of desiccated thyroid, and dosage, and patient taking such substance should be observed and examined at regular intervals by one trained and experienced in such work to determine effects of such procedure, and whether symptoms are apparent indicating possible harmful results or if treatment should be continued further;
- (b) Represented that all modern physicians use such reducing ingredient in its said preparation for treatment of obesity, and that if a prospective purchaser of said preparation were to consult a specialist in obesity he would probably prescribe said ingredient, and that such medication in treating obesity generally is supported by opinions of physicians and scientists the world over, and that physician of prospective purchaser would probably employ same medication, facts being that while, generally speaking, desiccated thyroid is indicated in treatment of obesity occasioned by thyroid deficiency, it is usually only one feature of treatment in such cases, and, while used by many physicians in treatment of such cases, it is not used in others by reason of various pathological conditions which may inhibit administration of such preparation;
- (c) Represented and indicated that its said preparation, or desiccated thyroid, active ingredient thereof, was remedy indicated in and best suited for treatment of obesity or reduction of excess fat in great multitude of such cases, and in average case, and for all persons who are overweight or who wish to reduce, and that such preparation or active ingredient thereof feeds and stimulates the thyroid gland, taken internally, and restores it to normal condition and thus removes cause of obesity or excess fat, facts being that desiccated thyroid is suitable to be taken for reducing purposes only in small proportion of cases and only then under conditions and limitations, not explained and set forth by it, as hereinbefore noted, and said substance does not, as thus represented, feed thyroid gland, etc., but merely acts as a supplement to secretion supplied thereby;

- (d) Represented and implied that certain tables of weights of persons of heights and ages therein indicated, and which it published and circulated, indicated for prospective purchaser of its said preparation his or her correct weight, which should be attained by taking its said preparation, and that any weight in excess thereof was due to abnormal excess fat, and that such table should be used as guide, facts being said tables were not of correct or normal weights, but merely of average weights, and could not be depended upon by average lay person as safe and accurate guide as to his or her weight at a given height and age, many persons whose weights are correct and normal for them vary in weight from such aforesaid figures, many who are overweight by such comparison do not have surplus or excess fat in their physical makeup, and preparation in such cases should not and could not be used without danger of injury to health; and
- (e) Represented and implied that it made a complete and true disclosure of all material facts respecting said preparation and its properties and effects, as well as those of the ingredients thereof, notwithstanding fact it failed to disclose that desiccated thyroid constitutes a powerful and dangerous drug or product, used internally for reducing, and one which attacks and oxidizes or burns not only fatty, but all, body tissues, small proportion of cases of obesity are caused by thyroid deficiency, many people are so constituted that they may not use such preparation safely for physical health, and numerous other facts hereinbefore indicated with respect to true nature and functioning of said preparation and very limited need thereof and necessity for its use and administration under competent medical supervision and observation;

With tendency and capacity to mislead and deceive public and prospective purchasers of said preparation and purchasers and users thereof into erroneous beliefs that such statements and representations were true, facts hereinbefore referred to as not disclosed by it were not true or nonexistent, all cases of obesity were caused by thyroid deficiency, and "Marmola" was indicated as treatment in all such cases and might be used therein without fear of harm, and that it, or desiccated thyroid, its effective reducing medium, was prescribed and used by all modern physicians, etc., in such cases regardless of cause or origin, etc., and that its said preparation was superior to all other remedies, systems, etc., offered and sold for effecting reduction of weight, and to confuse, mislead, and deceive members of public in aforesaid respects, and induce them to purchase and use its said preparation or medicine for reducing purposes because of such erroneous beliefs thus engendered, in preference to and to the exclusion of the products of competitors, and to divert trade to it from competitors engaged in sale in interstate commerce of medicines, preparations, systems, etc., for reducing, and including among their number those who do not make same or similar misleading representations in regard to their products, or otherwise misrepresent the same, and with effect of diverting business to it from its said competitors; to their substantial injury and prejudice:

Held, That such acts and practices were to the prejudice of the public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition.

Before Mr. John W. Norwood, trial examiner.

Mr. E. J. Hornibrook and Mr. Harry D. Michael for the Commission.

Butzel, Eaman, Long, Gust & Bills, of Detroit, Mich., for respondent.

AMENDED COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission having reason to believe that the Raladam Company, a corporation, hereinafter referred to as respondent, has been or is using unfair methods of competition in commerce as "commerce" is defined in said act, and it appearing to said Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its amended complaint stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent, Raladam Company, is a corporation organized and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Michigan, with its office and principal place of business in the city of Detroit, in the State of Michigan.

PAR. 2. Respondent is engaged in offering for sale and selling a certain medical preparation, which it offers for sale and sells under the name and designation of "Marmola." Marmola is put up in tablet form and is to be sold to, and taken orally by, human beings who are afflicted with obesity, or whose bodies carry abnormal excessive fat, or whose bodies are, or are believed by them to be, over-weight as compared with their correct, natural, or normal weight, or who for any reason desire to reduce the weight of their bodies and to rid their bodies of some portion of the bodily tissues and weight which such bodies have or carry.

Respondent sells Marmola to wholesalers and jobbers of drugs located in the several States of the United States, who sell the same to retail druggists, who in turn sell the same to the consuming public which is made up of members of the laity. Respondent, when Marmola is so sold by it, causes the same to be transported from said city of Detroit, in the State of Michigan, into and through the several States of the United States and the District of Columbia to said purchasers thereof at their respective places of business located in said several States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 3. There have been and are other persons, partnerships, associations, and corporations who have been and are engaged in offering for sale and selling in said commerce between and among the several States of the United States and the District of Columbia the same, or like or otherwise competitive products, to wit: preparations, systems, methods, or other means of treatment for obesity, abnormal excessive fat, body weight in excess of that which is correct, natural or normal, or of ridding human bodies of some portion of the fat, other bodily tissues and weight which such bodies have or carry. Said other persons, partnerships, associations, and corporations have been and are engaged in so offering for sale and selling their said products in said commerce in competition with respondent's said Marmola. Respondent has been and is in substantial competition with them all in so offering for sale and selling Marmola in said commerce as above alleged.

PAR. 4. Since April 17, 1929, respondent, in aid of so offering for sale and selling Marmola in said commerce between and among the several States of the United States and the District of Columbia, has advertised the same in newspapers, magazines, and periodicals of general circulation, by means of radio broadcasts and in pamphlets, printed testimonials, and other printed matter, and by and through the use of photographs and other pictures, and on labels attached to and in circulars enclosed in the boxes in which said Marmola is packed when so offered for sale and sold, and by other means. In, by and through each and all of the advertising media above enumerated, respondent has expressly or by implication made, and makes, each and all of the statements and representations hereinafter set forth and alleged.

PAR. 5. Marmola is a product made up of several ingredients, the formula thereof being printed by respondent in circulars, booklets, and other advertising media above enumerated. The active principle incorporated in said product and the ingredient thereof that is powerful and is effective in ridding human bodies of portions of the fat, other bodily tissues and weight which they have, or carry, is dessicated thyroid. The reducing effect produced by the use of Marmola as a treatment to be taken orally is substantially the effect of, and that produced by, dessicated thyroid, which is hereinafter referred to as thyroid.

Dessicated thyroid is made from the thyroid glands of animals such as the sheep, cow, pig, and goat. It is a powerful and dangerous drug. When given to a patient, it increases the burning within the body of the fat, other tissues, and the food. By speeding up the oxidizing and burning processes of the body, dessicated thyroid, when taken, tends to cause a loss of fat. The thyroid gland in the human body controls the combustion of food in the body. It turns portions of food into fuel and energy. Dessicated thyroid taken into the body performs the like function and increases such combustion, turning food into fuel and energy. The use of thyroid taken as an internal remedy always increases within the body the burning up or consumption of food and bodily tissues, excessive fat burning more easily than other tissues of the body. Other bodily tissues are burned and consumed by the use of such thyroid, especially when excessive fat has been consumed, or in a body in which there is no abnormal, excessive fat.

PAR. 6. Some persons have deficient thyroid glands, to wit: thyroid glands which are sub-normally active and which perform their normal functions imperfectly and partially only, turning less than the normal proportion of food into fuel and energy, and permitting more than the normal proportion of food to be deposited in, or added to, the body in the form of fatty or other tissues.

This is the cause of excessive fatty or other tissues in the body of a person whose thyroid gland is deficient as above indicated. Thyroid taken by such a person does not feed or stimulate his thyroid gland, or increase its activity; nor does it tend to restore his thyroid gland to normality and thereby to remove the cause of abnormal excessive fatty or other tissues, or of overweight, in his body. Thyroid taken by such person performs the function ordinarily performed by a normal thyroid gland, duplicates or supplements any such function as is being performed by such deficient thyroid gland, or performs a substitute function, whereby the normal proportion of his food is turned to fuel and energy and the fatty or other tissues, and the weight, of his body tend to be reduced to normality.

PAR. 7. There are persons whose bodies in their natural and normal state are so constituted that such persons may not take or use thyroid without harmful results to their bodies. As to any person the only way in which it may be ascertained whether or not such person may take or use thyroid, without harmful results to his body, is by an examination made by a competent physician, or by experimental use of thyroid by such person under competent medical advice and supervision, or by both such methods combined. Only by the same means may it be ascertained as to any person in how large quantities thyroid may be taken or used by such person without harmful results.

PAR. 8. There are certain conditions of the human body which make it harmful for such persons to take or use thyroid. Among these is pregnancy. Other such conditions are defects or abnormalities of the heart or kidneys. Any defect or abnormality of body is liable to make the taking or use of thyroid harmful to the user.

Complaint

Only by an examination made by a competent physician may it be ascertained of any person whether or not the body of such person has any such condition, defect or abnormality by which it is made harmful for such person to take or use thyroid.

PAR. 9. Obesity, abnormal excess fat, may be the result of more than one cause. One of the causes is a deficient or abnormally inactive thyroid gland. Deficiency of thyroid glands causes obesity or abnormal excess fat in only the rare and exceptional cases, to wit: in a small minority of the total number of such cases. In a large majority of the total number of such cases the persons affected do not have deficient thyroid glands, and such obesity or abnormal excess fat is the result of a cause or of causes other than deficient thyroid glands.

In the case of any person it can be ascertained whether or not his thyroid gland is deficient, and whether or not obesity or abnormal excess fat is the result of thyroid deficiency, only by an examination made by a competent physician.

PAR. 10. In, by and through its advertising media above alleged, respondent states and represents to the public and to prospective purchasers of Marmola that modern medical science has discovered that thyroid deficiency is a common cause of obesity or abnormal, excessive fat, that if a prospective purchaser or other person is abnormal in weight that person's thyroid gland is abnormal, that people who are over-fat generally have an under-active thyroid gland, and that the cause of obesity or abnormal excess fat usually lies in an under-active thyroid gland.

In truth and in fact, as hereinabove alleged, deficiency of the thyroid gland exists only in rare and exceptional cases and is the cause of obesity or abnormal excessive fat in only a small minority of the total number of cases.

PAR. 11. In, by and through its advertising media above alleged, respondent states and represents to the public and to prospective purchasers of Marmola that all modern physicians use thyroid in the treatment of obesity, that, if a prospective purchaser of Marmola were to consult a specialist in obesity, he would probably prescribe about the factors the prospective purchaser is getting in Marmola, that such is the opinion of physicians the world over, and that the prospective purchaser's own physician would probably employ the Marmola factors, now recognized by science the world over.

In truth and in fact, competent physicians prescribe and use thyroid only in the rare and exceptional cases in which obesity, or abnormal excess fat, is caused by deficiency of the thyroid gland, and do not prescribe it in any case unless and until they have ascertained by examination of the patient, that his obesity or abnormal excess fat has been caused by deficiency of the thyroid gland, and also that no bodily conditions, defects or abnormalities exist in his case which are likely to make the taking or using of thyroid harmful to the patient. Competent physicians, after such examination and precautions, prescribe the use of thyroid only under medical advice and observation. In fact and in truth, respondent's preparation, to wit: Marmola, is one which cannot be used generally with safety to physical health, except under medical direction and advice.

PAR. 12. In, by and through its advertising media above alleged, respondent states and represents to the public and to prospective purchasers of Marmola that the use of Marmola as indicated in certain directions printed by respondent upon said labels, pamphlets, and advertising media is best suited to the needs of the multitude, or of the average person, of the normal person, in the average case and in the normal case.

In truth and in fact, Marmola is suited to the needs of only such persons as have obesity or abnormal excess fat caused by deficiency of the thyroid gland. Such persons are rare and exceptional, as above alleged. They are not the multitude or average persons or normal persons nor are theirs average cases, or normal cases within the intent and meaning of said representation.

PAR. 13. In, by and through its advertising media as above alleged, respondent states and represents to the public and to prospective purchasers of Marmola that the object of the use of Marmola is to feed and stimulate the patient's thyroid gland, to restore such gland to normality and thus and thereby to remove the cause of the patient's obesity or abnormal excess fat.

In truth and in fact, as hereinabove alleged, the use of thyroid does not feed or stimulate the patient's thyroid gland, nor does it tend to restore such gland to normality, and thus remove the cause of the patient's obesity or abnormal excess fat.

PAR. 14. In, by and through its advertising media as above alleged, respondent states and represents to the public and to prospective purchasers of Marmola that a certain table of weights of persons respectively of the heights and ages severally indicated in said table indicates for each such prospective purchaser his correct or normal weight, that any weight in excess thereof is abnormal excess fat, and that such prospective purchaser ought to take and use Marmola until his weight has been reduced to said so-called correct or normal weight.

In truth and in fact, said table is not a table of correct or normal weights, but is a table of average weights. By reason of racial or family or individual characteristics or tendencies, the bodies of many persons who have no abnormal or excessive fatty or other tissues weigh substantially more than said so-called correct or normal weight, no part of which may safely be removed from their bodies by the use of Marmola.

PAR. 15. There are many persons in and throughout the several States of the United States and the District of Columbia who are seeking some safe and dependable means whereby they may quickly, easily, certainly, and permanently remove from their bodies obesity, or abnormal excess fat, or overweight of flesh, or some portion of the bodily tissues or weight which such bodies have or carry.

Such persons are unskilled in medical science and depend for their information as to what treatment or remedy or preparation or method or system they may safely purchase, take and use, largely upon statements and representations made by the makers and sellers thereof.

PAR. 16. In, by and through its advertising media as above alleged, respondent prints for the information of the public and prospective purchasers, a statement of its purpose in the printing and distributing its said advertisements, in these words: "We feel a responsibility to those who buy Marmola and wish them to know all the facts at our command," then and thereby giving to the public and to prospective purchasers of Marmola the assurance that in its said advertising media it has published to the public and to all prospective purchasers of Marmola a complete and true disclosure of all material facts relative to Marmola, its properties and therapeutic effects.

In its said advertising media respondent does not disclose any or all of the following facts hereinabove alleged.

1. That dessicated thyroid is a powerful and dangerous drug.
2. That the one effect of such thyroid is to increase the burning within the human body of food and tissues.
3. That by speeding up the oxidizing and burning processes of the body, dessicated thyroid, when taken, tends to cause a loss of fat.
4. That cases in which obesity or abnormal excess fat is caused by deficiency of the thyroid gland are rare and exceptional, constituting only a small minority of the total number of such cases.
5. That medical science and physicians justify the use of thyroid as a treatment for obesity or abnormal excess fat only in cases in which obesity or abnormal excess fat is caused by deficiency of the thyroid gland; and that competent physicians prescribe its use only in such cases.
6. That in cases of obesity or abnormal excess fat not caused by deficiency of the thyroid gland the use of thyroid is not by medical science indicated as proper treatment; and its use therein is harmful to the health of the user.

7. That many persons are so constituted that they may not use Marmola with safety to physical health. That many bodily conditions, defects and abnormalities make the use of Marmola harmful to the health of the user. That in respect of any person it can be ascertained whether or not such person may safely take or use Marmola only by an examination by a competent physician, sometimes to be supplemented by experimental use thereof under medical advice and observation; and that physicians prescribe the use of thyroid only after such examination and other precautionary safeguards.

8. That respondent's preparation, to wit: Marmola, is one which cannot be used generally with safety to physical health, except under medical direction and advice.

9. That the use of thyroid by a patient who has a deficient thyroid gland does not feed or stimulate such deficient gland, does not increase its activity, does not tend to restore such deficient gland to normality, and does not thereby tend to remove the cause of his obesity or abnormal excess fat.

PAR. 17. Said statements and representations so made by respondent, and respondent's said failure to disclose any or all of the facts set forth and referred to in paragraph 16 of this complaint, have the tendency and capacity to mislead and deceive the public and prospective purchasers into the erroneous belief:

1. That all said statements and representations so made by respondent are true.

2. That the facts which respondent is alleged in paragraph 16 of this complaint to have failed to disclose, do not exist.

3. That all cases of obesity or abnormal excess fat are caused by deficiency of thyroid glands.

4. That Marmola is a scientific and safe remedy for all such cases.

5. That Marmola is prescribed and used by all modern physicians in all such cases.

6. That Marmola is superior to all other remedies being offered for sale or sold to the public for use in all such cases.

Said statements and representations so made by respondent have the tendency and capacity to induce the public and prospective purchasers, in and because of such erroneous belief, to purchase Marmola in preference to and to the exclusion of, any and all identical or like or otherwise competitive products, to wit; preparations, systems, methods, or other means of treatment so being offered for sale in said commerce by said competitors of respondent as hereinabove alleged; thereby diverting trade to respondent from its said competitors, to the injury of such competitors, and to the deception and injury of the public.

PAR. 18. The above alleged acts and practices are all to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors and constitute unfair methods of competition within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, entitled, "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914.

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission on July 15, 1935, issued and served its amended complaint in this proceeding upon respondent, Raladam Company, charging it with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of the provisions of said act. After the issuance of said complaint, and the filing of respondent's answer thereto, testimony and other evidence in support of the allegations of said complaint were introduced by Edward J. Hornibrook and Harry D. Michael, attorneys for the Commission before John W. Norwood, an examiner of the Commission theretofore duly designated by it, and in opposition to the allegations of the complaint by Rockwell T. Gust, attorney for the respondent; and said testimony and other evidence were duly recorded and filed in the office of the Commission. Thereafter, the proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on the said amended complaint, the answer thereto, testimony and other evidence, and brief in support of complaint, counsel for respondent having failed to file a brief, although given an opportunity so to do, and having failed to appear at the time and place set for oral argument after due notice thereof; and the Commission having duly considered the same, and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public, and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom.

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent, Raladam Company, is a corporation organized, existing and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Michigan, with its office and principal place of business located in the city of Detroit in said State.

PAR. 2. Respondent is now and has been engaged for more than five years last past in offering for sale and selling a certain medical preparation designated and described as "Marmola," which respondent has sold, during the time aforesaid, and now sells to various purchasers thereof located in the several States of the United States. In the course and conduct of said business, respondent causes its said preparation to be shipped from its place of business in the State of Michigan, or from the place of business of the company that compounds the same, to the purchasers thereof located in several States of the United States other than Michigan as well as in the District of Columbia. Respondent's usual course of business is to sell its said preparation to wholesale druggists and jobbers who in turn sell it to retail druggists through whom it is sold to the consuming public. Said preparation, "Marmola," is sold by respondent and is bought and used by the consuming public for the purpose of effecting reduction in weight.

PAR. 3. During the time above mentioned, other individuals, firms, and corporations in various States of the United States are and have been engaged in the sale and distribution in interstate commerce of medicines, preparations, systems, methods, books of instruction and other commodities, articles, and means designed, intended and used for the purpose of effecting weight reduction. Such other individuals, firms, and corporations have caused and do now cause their said medicines, preparations, systems, methods, books of instruction, and other articles and means when sold by them to be transported from various States of the United States to, into and through States other than the State of origin of the shipment thereof. Respondent has been, during the aforesaid time in substantial competition, in the sale of Marmola, with such other individuals, firms, and corporations. Some of such competing products are sold direct to the consuming public while others are sold to wholesale and retail dealers through whom they are in turn sold to members of the public for their use.

Respondent's preparation is in competition with all medical preparations sold and used for reducing purposes regardless of whether such preparations are of the so-called "patent medicine" type or are pharmaceutical preparations which may be bought by members of the consuming public on their own initiative or on the prescription of a physician. Competing products include also, the following: medical preparations which are used as adjuvants in the treatment of obesity, such as laxative salts; preparations sold and used for the purpose of effecting the lessening of the consumption of fat producing foods; and books of instruction on the subjects of diet or exercise, or both, intended and used for the purpose of effecting reduction by one or both of these means; in general all those preparations, products and articles sold to and used by the consuming public for effecting weight reduction. Among such preparations, products and articles so sold and used are the following:

"Diet and Health with Key to the Calories" by Dr. Lulu Hunt Peters, a book on diet published by Reilly and Lee Co., Chicago, Ill.

"Weight Control" by Dr. William Howard Hay, a book on diet published by The Hay System, Inc., New York City.

"New Health Era" by Dr. William Howard Hay, a book on diet published by The Hay System, Inc., New York City.

"No More Alibis" by Madame Sylvia of Hollywood (Madame Sylvia Leitner), a book on reducing by means of exercise and diet published by McFadden Publishing Co., New York City.

"The Secret of Keeping Fit" by Artie McGovern, a book containing instructions for reducing by diet and exercise, published by Simon & Schuster, New York City.

"Jad Salts" manufactured and sold by Wyeth Chemical Co., Detroit, Mich.

"Welch's Grape Juice," sold and used for reducing purposes by reason of its effect on the consumption of fat-producing foods, prepared and sold by Welch Grape Juice Co., Westfield, N. Y.

"Desiccated Thyroid", a pharmaceutical preparation, prepared and sold by Armour and Company, Chicago, Ill.

"Tabloid Thyroid Gland," a pharmaceutical preparation made and sold by Burroughs-Wellcome Company (U. S. A.) Inc., New York City.

"Thyrovarium," a pharmaceutical preparation made and sold by Burroughs-Wellcome Company (U. S. A.) Inc., New York City

"Tabloid Mixed Glands Number 1," a pharmaceutical preparation made and sold by Burroughs-Wellcome Company (U. S. A.), Inc., New York City.

"Tabloid Mixed Glands Number 2" a pharmaceutical preparation made and sold by Burroughs-Wellcome Company (U. S. A.) Inc., New York City.

"Thyroxin", a pharmaceutical preparation made and sold by E. R. Squibb and Sons, New York City.

"U. S. P. Thyroid," a pharmaceutical preparation made and sold by G. W. Carnrick and Company, Newark, N. J.

"Kellogg Rational Treatment for Obesity," a preparation sold by F. J. Kellogg Company, Battle Creek, Mich.

"C. C. N. T." a preparation sold by F. J. Kellogg Company, Battle Creek, Mich.

"Dr. McCasky's R. X. Tablets," sold by Dispensary Supply Company, New York City.

"Reducoids," sold by Scientific Laboratories of America, Inc., San Francisco, Calif.

"Slendrets," sold by Scientific Medical Product Co., Inc., San Francisco, Calif.

"Van Nay Tablets" sold by Bio-Medico, Inc., New York City.

"Germania Herb Tea Number 14", sold by the Drug Trade Products, Inc., Chicago, Ill.

"Stardom's Hollywood Dietade Number 1," sold by The Hollywood Diet Corporation, Chicago, Ill.

"Eskay's Dextrets," sold by Smith, Klein and French Company, Philadelphia, Pa.

"Dietene," sold by The Dietene Company, Minneapolis, Minn.

"Retardo", sold by The American Clinical Laboratories, Inc., Flushing, Long Island, N. Y.

"Eliphath", sold by Eliphath Laboratories, Detroit, Mich.

Respondent in its advertising matter, recognizes that competing products are not confined to those preparations or products of the same general character as Marmola by specifically advising and urging the use of Marmola for reducing, instead of the use of diet, exercise, purgatives, cathartics, salts, laxatives, and other methods used for effecting reduction.

PAR. 4. Marmola is put up in tablet form and is taken orally. The qualitative and quantitative formula per tablet is as follows:

1 gr.	—Extract Bladderwrack.
½ gr.	—Extract Phytolacca.
¼ gr.	—Extract Cascara Sagrada—RX 87 Spec.
½ gr.	—Desiccated Thyroid.
10/1000 min.	—Oleoresin Ginger.
	Po. Saccharum Special.
3 gr.	—Calcium Carbonate Precipitated.
½ ₂₄ min.	—Methyl Salicylate.
½ ₂₄ min.	—Oil Anise.
½ ₂₄ min.	—Oil Sassafras.
	Talc Brown.
	Ivory Black.
	Aqua for Extracts.
	Po. Burnt Umber.
	Red Oxide of Iron.
	Syrupus Simplex.
	Lubricating Solution.
	Aqua for Granulating.
	Liquid Petroleum—Colorless.

Directions for taking said preparation, as given by respondent for the purpose of effecting reduction are as follows:

Take one tablet after each meal and at bedtime with enough water to swallow easily.

It is further directed by respondent that the taking of the tablets as above stated be continued until the desired reduction is attained, or until "weight comes down to normal," or for "60 to 90 days—unless your weight has approached normal before that time."

The active ingredient in said preparation which effects reduction is desiccated thyroid. Certain other ingredients produce a laxative effect while others have little or no therapeutic effect. Desiccated thyroid is made from the thyroid glands of certain food animals. When taken orally, its effect is the same as that produced by an increase of the secretion of the patient's thyroid gland. This effect is to increase the processes of metabolism or, in other words, the oxidation or burning of the tissues. Dessicated thyroid, when taken internally, acts upon the body tissues generally. Its action is not confined to fatty tissue. When this oxidation or burning up of the tissues exceeds that furnished and restored by the food that is eaten and assimilated, loss of weight results.

The taking of desiccated thyroid does not result in stimulating the patient's thyroid gland so that its secretion is increased. It merely supplements such secretion. It does not restore an inactive or under-active thyroid gland.

PAR. 5. Most cases of obesity or excess fat are caused by incorrect eating habits, such as over-eating, poor selection of foods and improper combinations of fat-producing foods. In some instances, excess fat and obesity result from thyroid deficiency. There are also other indocrine types of obesity as well as other cases due to pathological conditions. All such cases are described as endogenous obesity. However, such cases of endogenous obesity are only a very small percentage of the total number of cases of obesity. Authoritative medical opinion fixes this percentage at less than five percent. It is impossible for the ordinary layman suffering from obesity to determine whether such condition is caused by thyroid deficiency. Generally speaking, desiccated thyroid is indicated in the treatment of obesity occasioned by thyroid deficiency, but it is usually only one feature of the treatment in such cases. Many physicians use desiccated thyroid in the treatment of some such cases, but in other cases of the kind they may not do so and do not do so on account of various pathological conditions that may exist which inhibit the administration of such a preparation. Only one qualified by training and experience can determine with any degree of certainty whether a case of obesity is the result of thyroid deficiency, and if so, whether the physiological condition of the patient is such as to make it advisable for desiccated thyroid to be administered. Likewise, only such a trained person can determine the dosage to be given. A patient taking desiccated thyroid in any case should be observed and examined at regular intervals by one trained and experienced in such work to determine its effects and whether symptoms are apparent indicating possible harmful results or that the treatment should not be continued further. The ordinary layman treating himself or herself is not competent to judge when resulting symptoms indicate harm or to determine whether they indicate that the treatment should cease. Among the bodily conditions where desiccated thyroid is inhibited, are various heart defects as well as kidney diseases, pregnancy and various abnormal and diseased conditions of the the organs of the body.

PAR. 6. Respondent in its published advertising matter circulated to and among the purchasing public in the various States of the United States, makes many statements which represent or imply that thyroid deficiency is a common cause or the usual cause of obesity or excess fat and that if a person is overweight, it is an indication of thyroid deficiency and that thyroid should be taken for reduction purposes. Examples of such statements are the following:

* * * Science has found that a great cause of obesity lies in a defective gland. That gland's secretion has much to do with nutrition. Its main purpose seems to be to change food into fuel and energy.

When that gland is weak, the secretion small, too much food goes to fat. Then the right way of reduction—the doctor's way—is to supply that substance from a sheep gland * * *.

* * * Fat people, it was found, generally suffered from an under-active thyroid * * *.

* * * A common cause of excess fat is an under-active gland * * *.

* * * A great cause of excess fat has been found in a weakened gland * * * Now Doctors, the world over, feed that lacking factor * * *.

* * * Modern medical science has discovered a great cause of excess fat. It lies in a scanty gland secretion * * *.

* * * Many years ago medical science discovered that obesity—when an abnormal condition—is caused by the lack of an important element which the body normally supplies * * *.

* * * excess fat in many cases is caused by a little gland that does not work well * * *.

* * * If you are over-fat, you probably have an under-active thyroid * * *.

Such representations and implications as contained in the above quoted statements are inaccurate and not true statements of the facts as hereinbefore shown.

PAR. 7. Respondent, in its advertising matter, circulated as aforesaid, also makes statements which represent or imply that all modern physicians use thyroid in the treatment of obesity; that, if a prospective purchaser of Marmola were to consult a specialist in obesity, he would probably prescribe the reducing ingredient contained in Marmola; that such medication in treating obesity generally is supported by the opinion of physicians and science the world over; and that the prospective purchaser's own physician would probably employ the same medication. Examples of such statements are the following (all referring to use of thyroid medication):

The modern method of reduction, now used by doctors the world over * * *.

* * * All modern doctors employ it * * *.

* * * this method has been employed by doctors the world over, in a very extensive way * * *.

* * * Now that method has come into world-wide use. Physicians everywhere employ it in obesity * * *.

Findings

24 F. T. C.

* * * doctors the world over have been feeding that gland factor in obesity * * *.

* * * Combat the cause, as all modern doctors do * * *.

Modern doctors, the world over now bring reduction in a new way * * *.

* * * What your doctor prescribes does reduce fat * * *.

* * * a world-famous corrective for abnormal obesity. A corrective prescribed by physicians everywhere.

* * * Physicians know about this element and prescribe it for patients who easily take on fat from their food * * *.

* * * The very element that physicians everywhere prescribe for fat-reducing is the principal element of Marmola * * *.

* * * But he (your doctor) will probably employ the Marmola factors now recognized by science the world over * * *.

As hereinbefore shown, such representations are misleading and inaccurate or only true in part and are not correct statements of the facts.

PAR. 8. Respondent in and by its advertising and printed matter, circulated to the purchasing public, makes many statements which represent or imply that Marmola or desiccated thyroid, the active ingredient of Marmola is the remedy indicated in and best suited for the treatment of obesity or the reduction of excess fat in the great multitude of such cases or in the average case, or for all persons who are over-weight or who wish to reduce. Among such statements are the following:

The Right Way to Reduce

* * * The Marmola prescription made for the multitudes considers the average person simply seeking to reduce * * *

Marmola is for the average case.

The modern method of reduction. * * *

Marmola Prescription Tablets—The Right Way to Reduce.

If you want a slender, lovely figure, try Marmola.

* * * Why be fat when it's so easy to get rid of excess weight by means of a tried and true corrective, * * *

* * * Go try Marmola if you over-weigh. * * *

* * * why should anyone wishing to reduce fail to try this famous remedy * * *

* * * If you are overweight you owe it to yourself to regain your youthful slenderness. * * * All you do is to try four tablets (of Marmola) each day * * *

Go try Marmola if you suffer excess fat, * * * as well as many other representations of the same import as contained in respondent's advertisements when taken as a whole.

In truth and in fact, as heretofore stated, desiccated thyroid is suitable to be taken for reducing purposes only in a small proportion of cases and only then under the conditions and limitations previously set forth. Respondent fails to explain and set forth those limitations and conditions.

PAR. 9. Respondent, in and by its advertising matter, circulated to the purchasing public, makes many statements which represent or imply that Marmola or desiccated thyroid, the active ingredient in Marmola, feeds and stimulates the thyroid gland when taken internally and restores such gland, to a normal condition and thus removes the cause of obesity or excess fat. Examples of such representations are the following:

* * * Doctors correct this condition (thyroid deficiency) by feeding this little gland the substance it lacks—and Marmola Prescription Tablets are based on this same method. * * *

Science Fights Fat Through an Important Gland.

* * * A common cause of excess fat is an under-active gland, which largely controls nutrition. Scientists * * * found that when they corrected that cause (by administering thyroid) fat dropped away. * * *

The chief purpose of Marmola is to feed and stimulate the thyroid gland. * * *

In truth and in fact as heretofore stated, said representations are scientifically inaccurate and not correct statements of the facts involved since neither Marmola nor desiccated thyroid, the ingredient thereof on which such statements are based, feeds the thyroid gland or stimulates or restores it to normal action and condition. Desiccated thyroid merely acts as a supplement to the secretion supplied by the thyroid gland.

PAR. 10. Respondent in and by its advertising matter, circulated to the purchasing public, through the publication of certain tables of weights of persons, respectively, of the heights and ages severally indicated therein, and by various statements in its advertising matter in connection with such tables or referring thereto, represents and implies that such tables indicate for the prospective purchaser of Marmola his or her correct or normal weight, which should be attained by taking Marmola, that any weight in excess thereof is due to abnormal excess fat and that said tables should be used as guides. Some of respondent's statements containing such representations and implications are the following:

Stop Marmola when your weight comes down to normal. A table in this booklet tells you what a person of your height and age should weigh. If, later you start to gain again, take more Marmola tablets until conditions are corrected.

Correct Weight Based on Age and Height.

* * * Simply take four tablets of Marmola daily until weight comes down to normal. * * *

If you overweigh, go try Marmola. * * *

* * * Use it (Marmola) as a treatment—week by week—until you have approached your normal weight. * * *

If you are over-weight, you owe it to yourself to regain your youthful slenderness. * * * A book that you will find in every package gives full details.

Findings

24 F. T. C.

The right rule is to take Marmola until you reach normality. A table in this pamphlet tells your proper weight. * * *

In truth and in fact, the tables of weights given by respondent in its printed literature are not tables of correct or normal weights, but of average weights. Such tables cannot be depended upon by the average lay person as a safe and accurate guide to his or her normal weight at a given height and age. Many persons, whose weights are correct and normal for them, vary in weight from such average figures. Many persons are over-weight when compared with the weights given in such tables, and at the same time do not have surplus or excess fat in their physical makeup. In such cases, Marmola should not be used and cannot be used without danger of injury to health. Such persons are normal as to weight so far as they themselves are concerned, although they are not the average. Such condition may be due to racial, family or individual characteristics or tendencies.

PAR. 11. Respondent in and by its advertising matter circulated to the purchasing public, makes various statements which represent or imply that it makes a complete and true disclosure of all material and relevant facts in regard to Marmola, its properties and effects, as well as those of the ingredients thereof. The prospective purchaser and user of said preparation is thus induced to believe that respondent has set forth and imparted to him or her all the information that one need know before deciding upon the use of the same and before taking the same as a medication for reducing purposes. Examples of such statements are the following:

We feel a responsibility to those who buy Marmola and we wish them to know all the facts at our command. Here we present them, and we urge every user to read them. You should know what to expect, and why to expect it. You should know what you are taking and why. This little booklet will tell you in the best way we know. Please read it.

Here we tell you what to expect.

Herein we try to present a consensus of the best opinion as to why Marmola acts and how. You should read it carefully to learn how to accomplish the best results. Then hand it to some friend who is over-weight—as a favor.

In the 24 years of Marmola many wrong conceptions have developed. That is why we are publishing the facts and the formula. * * *

* * * This will answer all the questions asked about it (Marmola)—all the silly gossip about harmful ingredients and factors to beware of.

No Secrecy.

* * * Ask your druggist for Marmola. Read the book in the box to learn what to expect, and why. * * *

If you over-weigh, go try Marmola. All druggists supply it, and a book in each box tells you all about it. * * *

* * * The book in the Marmola package explains the details of this extraordinary treatment. * * *

No secrets about Marmola. * * *

* * * A booklet in every package gives full details. * * *

In truth and in fact, respondent does not make a complete and true disclosure of all material and relevant facts in regard to Marmola, its properties and therapeutic effects, or those of its ingredients in any or all of its printed matter. Many pertinent facts are not told. Among such facts that respondent does not and has not disclosed to buyers of Marmola and prospective buyers thereof, are the following:

1. That desiccated thyroid is a powerful and dangerous drug or product when used internally for reducing purposes.

2. That desiccated thyroid attacks and oxidizes or burns not only fatty tissue but all bodily tissues.

3. That cases in which obesity or abnormal excess fat is caused by deficiency of the secretion of the thyroid gland are rare and exceptional, constituting only a small minority of the total number of such cases.

4. That medical science and physicians, generally speaking, justify, recommend and prescribe the use of thyroid as a treatment for obesity or abnormal excess fat only in cases in which such condition is caused by a deficiency of the secretion of the thyroid gland.

5. That in cases of obesity or abnormal excess fat not caused by a deficiency of the secretion of the thyroid gland, thyroid is not indicated as a proper treatment and is not the usual treatment used by physicians in such cases, and that its use in such cases is apt to be, and frequently is, harmful to the health of the user.

6. That many persons are so constituted that they may not use Marmola with safety to physical health. That many bodily conditions, defects and abnormalities make the use of Marmola harmful to the user. That, in respect to any person, it can be ascertained whether or not such person may safely take or use Marmola (desiccated thyroid) only by an examination by a competent physician, often to be supplemented by experimental use of such product under medical advice and observation. Also that, generally speaking, physicians prescribe and administer thyroid only after such examinations and precautionary safeguards and that such administration is usually followed by regular observation and examination of the patient.

7. That Marmola (desiccated thyroid) cannot be used generally for reducing purposes by self-medication without the possibility of harmful results.

8. That Marmola (desiccated thyroid) when used by a patient who has a deficiency of the secretion of the thyroid gland, does not feed or stimulate such gland or materially increase its activity or tend to restore it to a normal condition, or, thereby tend to remove the cause of the obesity or abnormal excess fat.

All of the things above enumerated, which respondent fails to make known to users and prospective users of Marmola, are true facts according to the consensus of medical opinion and according to the great weight of the expert testimony presented herein.

PAR. 12. Respondent has made representations such as those alleged and set out herein since April 17, 1929, in promotion of the sale of Marmola throughout the United States, and in urging the use thereof for reducing purposes by members of the public. Such representations have been made either by means of advertisements inserted in newspapers, magazines, and periodicals of general circulation throughout the United States, by radio broadcasts, by booklets and printed matter or by other means, or by one or more of such means. There are and have been among the general consuming public, and especially among those who have seen and read or otherwise have become informed of respondent's representations, as herein set forth, many persons who are seeking or who are by respondent's representations caused to seek some safe and dependable means whereby they may safely, quickly, easily, certainly and permanently remove from their bodies superfluous flesh or excess fat. Many other persons having very little excess fat or superfluous flesh, or being only slightly over average weight or their own normal weights, or even below these, also seek to reduce. These persons, or a great many of them, see and read and are influenced by respondent's representations as herein set out. Such members of the general purchasing public are uninformed and unskilled in medical science, and depend upon the statements and representations, or silence of, or lack of warning by the makers and sellers thereof for information concerning taking or using remedies, preparations, methods or systems to be used in treating bodily conditions, ailments and abnormalities, and for their effects therein and as to their other bodily effects or lack thereof, and as to whether they may safely use the same. The general public including the purchasers and users of Marmola have so depended upon the respondent herein, as to Marmola, and respondent's representations have encouraged and justified such dependence.

Such statements and representations made by respondent, as herein set out and referred to, and respondent's said failure to disclose the facts previously set forth and referred to herein as not having been disclosed, have the tendency and capacity to mislead and deceive the public, prospective purchasers of Marmola, and purchasers and users thereof, into the erroneous beliefs:

1. That all said statements and representations so made by respondent are true.

2. That the facts previously referred to herein as not having been disclosed by respondent, are not true or do not exist.

3. That all cases of obesity or excess fat are caused by thyroid deficiency.

4. That Marmola is indicated as a treatment in all such cases, is the proper and scientific treatment therein, and that it may be used in all such cases without fear of harmful results and with safety to bodily health and physical well being.

5. That Marmola or desiccated thyroid, the effective reducing medium therein, is prescribed and used by all modern physicians in all cases of obesity or excess fat or for reducing purposes in all cases regardless of cause or origin of such condition or of the physical condition of the person concerned.

6. That Marmola is superior to all other remedies, systems, methods or means of effecting reduction that are offered for sale or sold to the purchasing public for use in such cases.

PAR. 13. The representations of respondent as aforesaid have had and do have the tendency and capacity to confuse, mislead, and deceive members of the public in the particulars aforesaid and to induce them to purchase and use respondent's said preparation or medicine for reducing purposes because of such erroneous beliefs engendered as above set forth, in preference to and to the exclusion of the products of competitors, as herein specified and indicated, and to divert trade to respondent from such competitors engaged in the sale in interstate commerce of medicines, preparations, systems, methods, books of instruction, and other articles and means designed, intended and used for the purpose of reducing weight.

PAR. 14. There are among the said competitors of respondent those who do not make the same or similar misleading representations as those made by respondent, as herein set out, in regard to the products sold by them, or who do not otherwise misrepresent them, and respondent's said acts and practices have tended to, and have in fact, diverted business to respondent from its said competitors to the substantial injury and prejudice of such competitors.

PAR. 15. In arriving at the findings and conclusions herein stated, the Commission has carefully considered and weighed the testimony and evidence as presented in support of the complaint and as offered in behalf of respondent. Such testimony and evidence, so considered and weighed, include a considerable volume of expert testimony upon medical and scientific subjects included in the issues and subject matter here involved. Testifying in support of the complaint, were five outstanding medical witnesses, who were called as experts and who qualified as such, and in addition, a famous and distinguished pharmacologist of international reputation. Further, there were four other physicians called to testify primarily as to certain facts involved, who also qualified as experts and who gave testimony of the same general character in support of the complaint as that given by the experts previously referred to.

For respondent, four physicians were called and gave expert medical testimony. Generally speaking, their testimony conflicts with that of the witnesses who testified in support of the complaint.

It is the opinion of the Commission, and it is so found, that the medical and scientific testimony offered in support of the complaint far out-weighs that offered in behalf of respondent, both in respect to the number of such witnesses and as to the character and convincingness of the testimony given. Without intending to detract from respondent's expert witnesses, it is found that the medical and scientific opinions and conclusions of the expert witnesses who appeared in support of the allegations of the complaint are entitled to more weight and are more authoritative than the medical and scientific opinions and conclusions given by respondent's expert witnesses. The expert witnesses who testified in behalf of the complaint, taken as a group, are more outstanding professionally and their opinions entitled to more credit than those who appeared for respondent, taken as a group.

PAR. 16. The answers of respondent to the amended complaint herein pleads res adjudicata of the issues here involved. Evidence was introduced in support of this plea and in opposition thereto. The question is thus raised as a matter of fact and the Commission therefore, makes findings in that regard, and passes upon it herein. The plea of res adjudicata is based on a previous proceeding by the Commission against said respondent and involving the same medicine as here involved. The Commission issued an order to cease and desist in said case on April 13, 1929, and the order was served on respondent on April 17, 1929. Said order was subsequently set aside by the United States Circuit Court of Appeals, Sixth Circuit. This action was later affirmed by the United States Supreme Court, but on the ground of lack of evidence as to competitors and competition. The Supreme Court's opinion sustained the findings of the Commission on the merits in certain other particulars.

The two cases are different. Respondent's representations upon which the two cases are based are entirely different, as are the general issues arising therefrom. The first case was based upon two general classes of direct and specific representations, first, that Marmola is safe for use by the general public for reducing purposes, and second, that said medicine and the method of reducing thereby is scientific. No such direct and specific representations are involved in the present case. The various types of representations upon which the present complaint is based, are those previously set forth herein. They raise distinguishable issues from those involved in the first case. They constitute types of representations used after the service of the order to cease and desist issued in the first case against respondent.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondent, Raladam Company, are to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce, within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

This proceeding having been heard by the Federal Trade Commission upon the amended complaint of the Commission, the answer of respondent, testimony and other evidence taken before John W. Norwood, an examiner of the Commission theretofore duly designated by it, in support of the allegations of said complaint and in opposition thereto, and brief in support of complaint, counsel for respondent having failed to file a brief, although given an opportunity so to do, and having failed to appear at the time and place set for oral argument after due notice of the same, and the Commission having made its findings as to the facts and its conclusion that said respondent has violated the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

It is ordered, That the respondent, Raladam Company, its officers, representatives, agents, and employees, in connection with the offering for sale, sale, and distribution of Marmola, or of a preparation or medicine of the same or substantially the same formula, or of a preparation or medicine containing dessicated thyroid or other form of thyroid, in interstate commerce or in the District of Columbia, do forthwith cease and desist from representing:

1. That thyroid deficiency is a common cause or the usual cause of obesity or excess fat or that, if a person is over-weight, it is necessarily an indication of thyroid deficiency and that thyroid should be taken for reducing purposes.

2. That all modern physicians use the reducing ingredient in Marmola or thyroid in the treatment of obesity, or that they use thyroid in all classes of such cases, and that such method of treatment in all such cases is supported by the opinion of physicians and science the world over, or that if a prospective purchaser of Marmola, one seeking to reduce, would consult a specialist or his or her own physician, such medication would probably be used.

3. That Marmola or thyroid, the reducing ingredient therein, is the remedy indicated in and best suited for the treatment of obesity or the reduction of excess fat in the great multitude of such cases or in the average case, or for all persons who are over-weight or who wish to reduce or for all persons whose weights are above the average for persons of their ages and heights.

4. That Marmola or thyroid, the reducing ingredient therein, feeds the thyroid gland, when taken internally, or stimulates or restores it to normal action or that it removes the cause of obesity or excess fat.

5. That a table of average weights for given ages and heights indicates a person's normal or correct weight at a given age and a given height or that any weight in excess of the average weight so given is due to excess fat and that such person should reduce and should effect the reduction by taking Marmola.

6. That respondent makes a full and complete disclosure of the properties and effects of Marmola or of the ingredients thereof, whether such representation be made directly or indirectly, or by implication, unless and until it does in fact make such disclosure, including the following:

a. That desiccated thyroid is a powerful and dangerous drug or product when used internally for reducing purposes.

b. That desiccated thyroid attacks and oxidizes or burns not only fatty tissues, but all bodily tissues.

c. That cases in which obesity or abnormal excess fat is caused by deficiency of the secretion of the thyroid gland are rare and exceptional, constituting only a small minority of the total number of such cases.

d. That medical science and physicians generally speaking, justify, recommend and prescribe the use of thyroid as a treatment for obesity or abnormal excess fat only in cases in which such condition is caused by a deficiency of the secretion of the thyroid gland.

e. That in cases of obesity or abnormal excess fat not caused by a deficiency of the secretion of the thyroid gland, thyroid is not indicated as a proper treatment or the usual treatment used by physicians, and that its use in such cases is apt to be and frequently is harmful to the health of the user.

f. That many persons are so constituted that they may not use Marmola with safety to physical health. That many bodily conditions, defects and abnormalities make the use of Marmola harmful to the user. That in respect to any person, it can be ascertained whether or not such person may safely take or use Marmola or desiccated thyroid only by an examination by a competent physician, often to be supplemented by experimental use of such product under medical advice and observation. Also that, generally speaking, physicians prescribe and administer thyroid only after such examinations and precautionary safeguards and that such administration is usually followed by regular observation and examination of the patient.

g. That Marmola or desiccated thyroid cannot be used generally for reducing purposes by self-medication without the possibility of harmful results.

h. That Marmola or desiccated thyroid when used by a patient who has a deficiency of the secretion of the thyroid gland, does not feed or stimulate such gland or materially increase its activity or tend to restore it to a normal condition or thereby tend to remove the cause of the obesity or abnormal excess fat.

It is further ordered, That the respondent shall within 60 days after service upon it of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which it has complied with this order.

IN THE MATTER OF
CONSOLIDATED DISTILLERS CORPORATION

COMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION
OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 26, 1914

Docket 2488. Complaint, July 3, 1935—Decision, Jan. 22, 1937

Where a corporation engaged as rectifier and wholesaler of distilled spirits in purchasing, rectifying, blending, and bottling whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages, and in selling same in trade and commerce among the various States and in the District of Columbia, in competition with those engaged in manufacture by distillation of whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages and in sale and distribution thereof in interstate commerce, and with other rectifiers and wholesalers—

Represented, through use of word "Distillers" in its corporate name, printed on its stationery and on the labels attached to the bottles in which it sold and shipped its said products, together with words "Bottled by" or "Blended by," as case might be, to its customers and furnished some with means of representing to their vendees, both retailers and ultimate consuming public, that the said whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages contained in such bottles were by it made through process of distillation, notwithstanding fact it did not distill said whiskies or other spirituous liquors thus bottled, sold, and transported by it, and did not prepare its said distilled spirits from mash, wort, or wash through continuous closed pipes and vessels until manufacture was complete, and was not, in sense ordinarily understood by the industry, an actual distiller, for the purchase of the bottled liquors of which, as from original distiller or manufacturer thereof, there is a substantial preference by both trade and public;

With tendency to mislead and deceive wholesalers, retailers, and ultimate purchasers into the belief that in buying its said spirituous liquors, thus sold, they were purchasing product bottled out of distillery by original distillers thereof, and with effect thereby of unfairly diverting trade to it from its competitors, including those who, engaged in manufacturing spirituous liquors by process of original and continuous distillation from mash, wort, or wash, truthfully designate themselves as distilling company, and also those who, like itself, engaged in that branch of the industry known as the distilled spirits rectifying industry, and as rectifiers, do not untruthfully designate themselves as "distillers" or "distilling" company:

Held, That such acts and practices were to the prejudice of the public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition.

Before Mr. John W. Bennett, trial examiner.

Mr. DeWitt T. Puckett and Mr. P. Gad B. Morehouse for the Commission.

Mr. O. Bowie Duckett, Jr., of Hargest, Leviness, Duckett & McGlannan, of Baltimore, Md., for respondent.

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that Consolidated Distillers Corporation, hereinafter referred to as respondent, has been and is using unfair methods of competition in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in said act, and it appearing to the said Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint, stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent is a corporation organized, existing, and doing business under the laws of the State of Maryland, with its office and principal place of business in the city of Baltimore, in said State. It is now, and for more than one year last past has been engaged in the business of wholesaler and rectifier, purchasing, rectifying, blending, and bottling whiskies, gins and other spirituous beverages and in the sale thereof in constant course of trade and commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia. In the course and conduct of its said business, it causes its said products when sold to be transported from its place of business aforesaid into and through various States of the United States to the purchasers thereof, consisting of wholesalers and retailers located in other States of the United States and the District of Columbia. In the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid, respondent is now, and for more than one year last past has been, in substantial competition with other corporations and with individuals, partnerships, and firms engaged in the manufacture by distillation of whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages and in the sale thereof in trade and commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia; and in the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid, respondent is now, and for more than one year last past has been, in substantial competition with other corporations, and with individuals, firms, and partnerships engaged in the business of purchasing, rectifying, blending, and bottling whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages and in the sale thereof in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 2. For a long period of time the word "Distillers" when used in connection with the liquor industry and the products thereof has had and still has a definite significance and meaning to the minds of the wholesalers and retailers in such industry and to the ultimate purchasing public, to wit: the manufacturers of such liquors by the process of original and continuous distillation from mash, wort, or wash, through continuous closed pipes and vessels until the manufacture thereof is completed; and a substantial portion of the purchasing public prefers to buy spirituous liquors prepared and bottled by distillers.

PAR. 3. In the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid, by the use of the word "Distillers" in its corporate name, printed on its stationery and advertising, and on the labels attached to the bottles in which it sells and ships its said products, and in various other ways, respondent represents to its customers and furnishes them with the means of representing to their vendees, both retailers and the ultimate consuming public, that it is a distiller and that the whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages therein contained were by it manufactured through the process of distillation from mash, wort, or wash, as aforesaid, when, as a matter of fact, respondent is not a distiller, does not distill the said whiskies, gins, or other spirituous beverages by it so bottled, labeled, sold, and transported, and does not own, operate, or control any place or places where such beverages are manufactured by the process of distillation from mash, wort, or wash.

PAR. 4. There are among the competitors of respondent engaged in the sale of spirituous beverages as mentioned in paragraph 1 hereof corporations, firms, partnerships, and individuals who manufacture and distill from mash, wort, or wash, as aforesaid, whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages sold by them and who truthfully use the words "distillery," "distilleries," "distillers," or "distilling" as a part of their corporate or trade names and on their stationery and advertising, and on the labels of the bottles in which they sell and ship such products. There are also among such competitors corporations, firms, partnerships, and individuals engaged in the business of purchasing, rectifying, blending, bottling, and selling whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages who do not use the words "distillery," "distilleries," "distilling" or "distillers" as a part of their corporate or trade names, nor on their stationery or advertising, nor on the labels attached to the bottles in which they sell and ship their said products.

PAR. 5. Representation by respondent as set forth in paragraph 3 hereof, is calculated to and has the capacity and tendency to and does mislead and deceive dealers and the purchasing public into the beliefs that respondent is a distiller and that the whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages sold by the respondent are manufactured and distilled by it from mash, wort, or wash, as aforesaid, and is calculated to and has the capacity and tendency to and does induce dealers and the purchasing public, acting in such beliefs, to purchase the whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages bottled and sold by the respondent, thereby diverting trade to respondent from its competitors who do not by their corporate or trade names or in any other manner misrepresent that they are manufacturers by distillation from mash, wort, or wash, of whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages, and thereby respondent does substantial injury to substantial competition in interstate commerce.

PAR. 6. The acts and things above alleged to have been done and the false representations alleged to have been made by respondent are to the prejudice of the public and the competitors of respondent and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914.

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled, "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, on July 3, 1935, issued and served its complaint in this proceeding, upon respondent Consolidated Distillers Corporation, charging it with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of the provisions of said act. After the issuance of said complaint, and the filing of respondent's answer thereto, testimony and other evidence in support of the allegations of said complaint were introduced by DeWitt T. Puckett and PGad B. Morehouse, attorneys for the Commission, before John W. Bennett, an examiner of the Commission, theretofore duly designated by it, and in opposition to the allegations of the complaint by O. Bowie Duckett, Jr., of Hargest, Leviness, Duckett, and McGlannan, attorneys for the respondent; and said testimony and other evidence were duly recorded and filed in the office of the Commission. Thereafter, the proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on the said complaint, the answer thereto, testimony and other evidence, briefs in support of the complaint and in opposition thereto and the oral arguments of counsel aforesaid; and the Commission having duly considered the same, and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public, and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent is a corporation organized, existing, and doing business under the laws of the State of Maryland, with its principal office and place of business at 38 South Calvert Street, in the city of Baltimore in said State. It was incorporated in October 1933, with a capital stock of seventeen thousand shares of which two thousand are of the par value of $1,000 per share designated as preferred stock and fifteen thousand shares are of the par value of $20 each. Its charter authorizes it to engage among other things in the manufacture, purchase, sale, distribution, storage, and export of alcoholic beverages including whiskies and wines and in the distillation of whiskey.

It is now and has been since shortly after its organization engaged in business as a rectifier and wholesaler of distilled spirits under basic permits from the Federal Government, purchasing, rectifying, blending, and bottling whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages and selling the same in constant course of trade and commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia. Its business is in excess of $100,000 a year and during the six months period from November to April, 1935-36 it doubled its volume of business. Its distilled spirits are purchased in bulk from several distillers in several States of the United States, but principally from distillers in Maryland. This bulk whiskey is bottled by respondent straight or in blends, about 60% of its product being rectified and the remainder being bottled as straight whiskey. About 5% of its business is done outside the State of Maryland, it having customers in the District of Columbia, New York, and South Carolina. Most of its customers are retailers.

In the course and conduct of its business, respondent is, and has been, in competition with other corporations, individuals, and partnerships engaged in the manufacture by distillation of whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages, and in the sale and distribution thereof in interstate commerce; and also in competition with other rectifiers and wholesalers.

Respondent does not now and never did distill alcoholic beverages from raw materials at 38 South Calvert Street or elsewhere. It does not now and never has owned, operated, or controlled any stills or any plant equipped for the distilling of alcoholic beverages.

PAR. 2. Since the repeal of prohibition, there has been, and still is, a sharp distinction in the trade between the processes of distilling and rectifying. Distilling is confined to the manufacture of alcoholic spirits by an original and continuous process from grain, or other raw materials, in a mash to a cistern room, in the case of whiskey. Rectifying deals wholly with subsequent modifications of the product not involving the process of distillation. This distinction in trade significance has been recognized by the Government through its issuance of two separate kinds of basic permits to those engaging in the two respective operations.

Rectifying in the distilled spirits rectifying industry means the mixing of whiskeys of different ages or the mixing of other ingredients with whiskeys, but reducing proof of whiskey by adding water is not rectifying. Rectifiers also blend whiskeys with neutral spirits (grain alcohol).

A distiller, in the sense ordinarily understood by the liquor industry, is one who prepares distilled spirits by a process of original and continuous distillation from mash, wort or wash, through continuous closed pipes and vessels until the manufacture thereof is complete. Many distillers operate a separate establishment 800 feet or more away from their distillery, known as a rectifying plant, wherein they operate in the same manner as described above, for a rectifier—sometimes exclusively with spirits of their own distillation and sometimes with spirits purchased from other distillers or both. Some distilleries have a tax-paid bottling room on the distillery bonded premises wherein their distilled spirits are bottled straight as they come from the still, or in a bonded warehouse after aging, or after reduction of proof. Any rectifying by a distiller, however, must be done in his rectifying plant under his rectifier's permit. On all bottled liquors, whether bottled at the distillery rectifying plant or at any other rectifying plant, appear the words "Bottled" or "Blended" (as the case may be) "by the _____ Company." If the distilled spirits therein contained are bottled by a distiller either in his distillery or are spirits of his own distillation bottled in his rectifying plant, the distiller may and does put "Distilled and bottled by _____ Company." If, in the distiller's rectifying plant, other spirits have been blended or rectified, he puts "Blended and bottled by _____ Company." Finally, blown (usually in the bottom) of each bottle is a symbol, consisting of a letter followed by a number, identifying the bottler, viz., a "D" for a distillery and "R" for a rectifier, the number following said letter corresponding with the distiller's or rectifier's permit. Thus "R-34" designates this respondent. A distiller who also operates a rectifying plant, having both kinds of permits, may use either symbol depending upon whether the liquor contained in the bottle was produced and bottled under his distiller's or rectifier's permit.

Knowledge of these details is not widespread among the retail trade and is very limited to the general public.

It is not possible to determine from the presence of the phrase "Blended and Bottled by" alone, or the phrase "Bottled by" alone, on the label, whether the package was bottled by a rectifier who is a distiller, or by a rectifier who is not a distiller.

PAR. 3. Approximately twenty-two witnesses of whom twenty-one were purchasers of liquor and who had had no connection with the liquor industry were subpoenaed at the instance of the Commission to ascertain whether or not there existed a preference of a substantial portion of purchasers and potential purchasers to buy whiskeys and other alcoholic beverages, bottled at or by a distillery or distilling company. These witnesses were fairly representative and included men from practically every walk of life; namely, a banker, stockroom clerk, sales manager, superintendent of fertilizer plant, salesman, government employee, pastry-shop owner, electrical engineer, telephone man, real-estate broker, postal clerk, department-store manager, paper carrier, insurance man, a professor of anatomy, a syrup salesman, an assistant train yardmaster, coal merchant, and a graduate law student. Their testimony showed that the word "Distillers" or similar words in connection with the liquor industry, meant to them a person or concern which manufactured by distillation, and all of them testified that in a corporate name such as respondent's such a word as "distillers" would imply to them that respondent was such a manufacturer, and they indicated a distinct preference to buy distillery-bottled packages of liquor, usually for the reason that they felt more confidence in the goods, as the manufacturer, in their judgment, was likely to be more trustworthy and had more at stake than any middleman. A liquor dealer with thirty-one years of experience in making contacts with the trade and the public was of the opinion, based upon such experience that, in the majority of cases, the ultimate consumer prefers to buy distillery-bottled goods. The respondent produced approximately ten witnesses who were retail liquor dealers and who, from their experience with the public, stated it as their observation that customers paid no attention to the corporate or trade name of the seller as shown upon the labels, but made their purchases because of other considerations. Such testimony is not contradictory to that given by the twenty-two witnesses as aforesaid, from all of which the Commission concludes it to be true that there is a substantial portion of purchasers which prefers to buy beverages bottled by the original distiller or manufacturer thereof.

PAR. 4. Respondent's labels offered and received in evidence were brand labels. Besides the brand name and the nature of the product these words appeared generally upon the labels: "Bottled by Consolidated Distillers Corporation, Baltimore, Md." The words "bottled by" are in much smaller print than the corporate name as a rule but still are quite legible. Blended whiskey has on the brand label the following inscription: "Blended by Consolidated Distillers Corporation, Baltimore, Md." In this case, too, the words "blended by" are in much smaller type than the name of the respondent corporation, although the words are quite legible.

In the case of "Maryland Hunt Club" whiskey, a blend, there appears as Exhibit No. 9-A, the back or Government label placed on the package by respondent. This label reads as follows: "Maryland Hunt Club Blended Whiskey. The straight whiskey in this product is 20 years old, 20% straight whiskey, 18% neutral spirits. Blended by Consolidated Distillers Corporation, Baltimore, Maryland." There is a similar back label in the record as Commission's Exhibit No. 10-A relating to the brand "Carrollton Club" also a blended whiskey. A similar back label also appears for the "My Maryland" brand.

Respondent also advertised its name and business in the Baltimore Sun and in some trade papers and on billboards.

In the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid, by the use of the word "Distillers" in its corporate name, printed on its stationery, and on the labels attached to the bottles in which it sells and ships such products, respondent represents, and furnishes its customers with the means of representing to the retailer and ultimate purchaser that the said whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages therein contained, were by it manufactured through the process of distillation, when, as a matter of fact, the respondent is not a distiller and did not distill the said whiskies or other spirituous liquors by it so bottled, sold, and transported.

PAR. 5. The Commission finds that because the trade, as well as the public, has a substantial preference to buy liquors bottled by the actual distillers, the tendency to diversion of trade by respondent's use of the word "Distillers" in its name is plain, particularly with reference to any prospective purchaser who does not know from other sources the particular status of respondent, and the name readily lends itself as a tool to any salesman to be used by him for the purpose of gaining an unfair competitive advantage in competing with an actual distilling company for any particular order of whiskey.

The use by respondent of the term "Distillers" in its trade or corporate name upon its invoices, stationery, advertising, and upon the labels attached to the bottles in which it sells and ships its spirituous liquors, has a tendency to mislead and deceive wholesalers, retailers, and the ultimate purchasers into the belief that in purchasing the same they are purchasing a product bottled at a distillery by the original distillers thereof, and this, in turn, tends to, and does, unfairly divert trade from respondent's competitors to the respondent. Among such competitors, there are those who, manufacturing spirituous liquors by process of original and continuous distillation from mash, wort, or wash, do truthfully designate themselves as distilling companies, and also among such competitors are those in the same class with this respondent, to wit: those who are engaged in that branch of the industry known as the distilled spirits rectifying industry, and who, as rectifiers, do not untruthfully designate themselves as "distilleries," "distillers," or "distilling companies."

Order

24 F. T. C.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondent, Consolidated Distillers Corporation, are to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce, within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

It is ordered, That the respondent Consolidated Distillers Corporation, its officers, representatives, agents, and employees, in connection with the offering for sale, sale and distribution of whiskies, gins, and all other spirituous beverages in interstate commerce and in the District of Columbia do forthwith cease and desist from:

Order

Representing through the use of the word "Distillers" in its corporate name, on its stationery, advertising, or on the labels attached to the bottles in which it sells and ships said products or in any other way by word or words of like import, (a) that it is a distiller of whiskies, gins, or any other spirituous beverages; (b) that the said whiskies, gins, or other spirituous beverages are by it manufactured through the process of distillation; or (c) that it owns, operates or controls a place or places where any such products are by it manufactured by a process of original and continuous distillation from mash, wort, or wash, through continuous closed pipes and vessels until the manufacture thereof is complete, unless and until respondent shall actually own, operate, or control such a place or places.

It is further ordered, That the said respondent, within 60 days from and after the date of the service upon it of this order, shall file with the Commission a report or reports in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which it is complying and has complied with the order to cease and desist hereinabove set forth.

IN THE MATTER OF

THE I. T. S. COMPANY, THE NATIONAL FEDERATION OF MASTER SHOE REBUILDERS, ITS OFFICERS AND MEMBERS

COMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION
OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 26, 1914

Docket 2802. Complaint, May 15, 1936—Decision, Jan. 22, 1937

Where a corporation engaged in sale at wholesale of rubber heels and soles to shoe findings jobbers and shoe repairers, but not to 5-and-10 cent stores, in competition with those who sell their products to such stores as well as to or through shoe manufacturers, shoe findings jobbers, and shoe repairers; and a voluntary nonprofit trade association of shoe repairers, and individual shoe-repairer members and officers of said association, acting officially and individually—

- (a) United in a common course of action and entered into an agreement, combination, and conspiracy to close the natural channels of distribution of the products of competitors who sell to aforesaid stores, and cause shoe manufacturers, shoe findings jobbers, shoe repairers, and hardware stores to boycott and refuse to deal with such manufacturers of and wholesale dealers in aforesaid products, who sell same to stores aforesaid, and thereby suppress competition among such manufacturers and wholesalers; and in the accomplishment of said end, severally and jointly, as the case might be—
- (b) Circularized channels of trade involved with literature which was falsely derogatory or defamatory as respects those manufacturers and wholesalers of rubber heels and soles who sell to aforesaid stores, and which designated sources of information as to the identity of such manufacturers and wholesalers who sold and who did not sell to stores in question, and circularized such channels with so-called "white lists" and "black lists" of such non-selling and selling manufacturers and wholesalers, and disseminated similar information to channels involved through and by their missionary men and sales force; and
- (c) Made use of other cooperative and individual means to carry out and make effective their aforesaid undertaking;

With result that trade in rubber heels and soles was unduly restrained among the States, competition among manufacturers and wholesalers, retailers and consumers, and manufacturers and wholesalers in their sales to retailers and among retailers in their sales to consumers was substantially suppressed, and consuming public was deprived of benefits that would naturally flow from normal competition among and between aforesaid wholesalers and other manufacturers, wholesalers, and retailers in aforesaid products:

Held, That such acts and practices were to the prejudice of the public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition.

Complaint

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that each and all of the respondents named in the caption hereof have been and are now using unfair methods of competition in commerce as "commerce" is defined in said act, and it appearing to the Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint, stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent, The I. T. S. Company, is a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Ohio, with its office and principal place of business at 135 Maple Street, Elyria, Ohio. L. P. Tufford, C. H. Ingwer, A. G. Smith, and Helen Schuenemann are respectively president, vice president, and general manager, second vice president, and sales manager and secretary and treasurer of said corporation. The respondent is engaged in selling at wholesale rubber heels and soles to retail dealers located in the various States of the United States. Respondent purchases the aforesaid products in which it deals directly from B. F. Goodrich Company. Respondent, upon resale of the aforesaid products to the retail trade, causes said products to be transported from its place of business in Ohio to vendees at their respective points of location in the various States of the United States.

In the course and conduct of its aforesaid business the respondent has been and now is, in competition with other individuals, firms, partnerships, and corporations engaged in the sale and distribution, in commerce as herein set out, of similar and like products to be used for the same and similar purposes.

The channels of distribution in the trade commence with the wholesaler and flow through (a) shoe manufacturers, (b) shoe findings jobbers, (c) shoe repairers, (d) 5-and-10¢ stores, (e) hardware stores, to the ultimate consumer. The respondent confines practically all of its sales to the shoe findings jobbers and the shoe repairers and does not sell any of its products to the 5-and-10¢ stores. Some competitors of respondent do sell to the 5-and-10¢ stores as well as to the other four outlets aforesaid.

PAR. 2. Respondent, National Federation of Master Shoe Rebuilders, is a voluntary nonprofit trade association of shoe repairers, incorporated in 1924 under the laws of Delaware with a certificate to do business in the State of Ohio. George Benson, C. C. Zeigler, Walter L. Green, and S. L. Orenstein are respectively president, vice president, treasurer, and executive secretary of said association, in charge of and conducting its affairs, and the principal place of business of said association is 1124 Chester Avenue, Cleveland, Ohio. The members of the association are many in number, the membership varying from time to time by the dropping out of old and the addition of new members, so that it is impracticable at any given time to name as parties respondent and bring before the Commission each and all of the members of said association without manifest inconvenience and delay; wherefore, the officers of said association made respondents herein individually and as such officers, are now here made respondents as representing each and all the members of said association.

PAR. 3. In or about the month of January 1935, the respondents, I. T. S. Company, National Federation of Master Shoe Rebuilders, and its officers aforesaid acting individually, united in a common course of action and entered into an agreement, combination and conspiracy to close the natural channels of distribution of the products of competitors of respondent who sell their products to the 5-and-10¢ stores and to cause the natural channels of trade, viz, the shoe manufacturers, the shoe findings jobbers, the repairers, and hardware stores, to boycott and refuse to deal with those manufacturers and wholesale dealers in the aforesaid products who also sell their products to the 5-and-10¢ stores, thereby suppressing competition among manufacturers of, and wholesale dealers in, the products aforesaid, and in such regard have used the following methods and practices:

(a) Respondent, I. T. S. Company, circularized the channels of trade, other than the 5-and-10¢ stores, with letters, pamphlets, literature, and advertisements in trade magazines (all of which it caused to be prepared, published, and distributed) to the following effect, gist, or meaning:

A New Year's resolution every shoemaker and jobber must make for 1935 prosperity: "In 1935 I will not buy rubber heels or soles made by manufacturers selling heels or stick-on soles to the 5-and-10¢ stores." * * * Now is certainly the time to make the New Year's resolution—to refuse to buy any more rubber heels from manufacturers who double-cross you by selling heels and stick-on soles to the 5-and-10¢ stores under some other brand name. You are a swell guy, these manufacturers say, and they are very fond of you and your orders—but they also like those car-load orders from the chain stores. Yet every heel and stick-on sole they sell the 5-and-10¢ stores means that you are cheated out of a heel or tap job. * * * The I. T. S. Company has always been on the side of the shoemaker and jobber. We have never sold to the 5-and-10¢ stores, any chain store, or shoe manufacturer.

* * * * *

Complaint

* * * We know and we'd like to give you the information as to what concerns are selling to the 5-and-10¢ stores, but our legal counsel advises us that it would be unethical for us to do so, that we might be subject to prosecution for unfair competition and instituting a boycott against individual companies. But here's where you can get the information: The secretary, or officers of your local shoe repairers' association, can get this information through—

Mr. S. L. Orenstein, Executive Secretary, The National Federation of Master Shoe Rebuilders, 405 Chester—12th Street Building, Cleveland, Ohio.

* * * Stick to your guns, refuse to buy from any heel manufacturer supplying your worst competition, the 5-and-10¢ stores, with either heels or stick-on soles, and 1935 should be the beginning of more shoe repairing for the repair shops and better profits for you and your fellow shoemakers.

Respondent, I. T. S. Company, also has caused and causes information to the same effect, gist and meaning as that set forth in subsection (a) of this paragraph to be disseminated to the trade in the various States of the United States by its missionary men and sales force.

(b) Respondent, National Federation of Master Shoe Rebuilders, in response to inquiries made of it as the result of the reference to it as a source of information in the printed matter distributed by respondent, I. T. S. Company, and the reference made to it by the missionary men and sales force of I. T. S. Company, as described supra, caused to be prepared and forwarded to said inquirers a list of manufacturers and wholesale rubber heel and sole dealers who do not sell their products to 5-and-10¢ stores.

(c) Respondent, I. T. S. Company, persecutes and harasses the shoe findings jobbers who handle the products of manufacturers or wholesalers who sell to 5-and-10¢ stores by continuously urging them by persuasion, intimidation, threats of boycott, to cease handling the products of such concerns.

(d) Respondents use other cooperative and individual means to carry out and make effective their aforesaid undertaking.

PAR. 4. The said agreement, combination, and conspiracy, and the things done thereunder and pursuant thereto, as hereinabove alleged, have had and have the effect of unduly restraining trade among the States of the Union in rubber heels and soles; of substantially suppressing competition among manufacturers and wholesalers, retailers and consumers, and among manufacturers and wholesalers in their sales to retailers, and among retailers in their sales to consumers; and of depriving the public of benefits that would flow from normal competition among and between the respondent, I. T. S. Company, manufacturers, wholesalers, and retailers; and such agreement, combination, and conspiracy, and the things done thereunder and pursuant thereto, as above alleged, constitute unfair methods of competition within the meaning of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, above entitled, and are to the prejudice of the public interest.

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, on May 15, 1936, issued and served its complaint in this proceeding upon the respondents, The I. T. S. Company, The National Federation of Master Shoe Rebuilders, George Benson, C. C. Zeigler, Walter L. Green, and S. L. Orenstein, individually and as president, vice president, treasurer, and executive secretary respectively, of said association, charging them with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of the provisions of said act. After the issuance of said complaint, and the filing of respondent's answer thereto, testimony and other evidence in support of the allegations of said complaint were introduced by John Darsey, attorney for the Commission, before W. W. Sheppard, an examiner of the Commission theretofore duly designated by it, and in opposition to the allegations of the complaint by G. A. Resek and S. L. Orenstein, attorneys for the respondents; and said testimony and other evidence were duly recorded and filed in the office of the Commission. Thereafter, the proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on the said complaint, the answer thereto, testimony and other evidence, briefs in support of the complaint and in opposition thereto, and the oral arguments of counsel aforesaid; and the Commission having duly considered the same, and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public, and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPHS 1. The respondent, The I. T. S. Company, is an Ohio corporation with an office and principal place of business at 135 Maple Street, Elyria, Ohio. It is engaged in selling at wholesale rubber heels and soles to retail dealers located in the various States of the United States. It purchases its products principally from B. F. Goodrich Company, and upon resale of the same to the retail trade causes them to be transported from its place of business in Ohio to vendees located in the various States of the United States.

In the course and conduct of its business it has been and now is in competition with other individuals, firms, partnerships, and corporations engaged in the sale and distribution in commerce as herein set out, of similar and like products, or products to be used for the same or similar purposes.

The channels of distribution in the trade begin with the wholesaler and flow through the shoe manufacturer, the shoe findings jobbers, the shoe repairers, the 5-and-10¢ stores, and hardware stores, to the ultimate consumers. The respondent confines practically all of its sales to the shoe findings jobbers and the shoe repairers and does not sell any of its products to the 5-and-10¢ stores. There are competitors of respondent who sell some of their products to the 5-and-10¢ stores as well as to the other four channels of trade set forth above.

PAR. 2. The respondent, The National Federation of Master Shoe Rebuilders, is a voluntary nonprofit trade association of shoe repairers. It is a Delaware corporation with a certificate to do business in the State of Ohio. George Benson, C. C. Ziegler, Walter L. Green, and S. L. Orenstein are respectively, president, vice president, treasurer, and executive secretary of said association, and have charge of and conduct its affairs. The present place of business of said association is 1124 Chester Avenue, Cleveland, Ohio. The members of the association are many in number, the membership varying from time to time by the dropping out and the addition of new members, making it impracticable at any given time to name the membership of the association. The officers of said association, named supra this paragraph, are individual shoe repairers, and as such are members of said association.

PAR. 3. In or about the month of January 1935, the respondents, The I. T. S. Company, The National Federation of Master Shoe Rebuilders, and its officers, acting officially and individually, united in a common course of action and entered into an agreement, combination, and conspiracy to close the natural channels of distribution of the products of competitors of respondents who sell their products to the 5-and-10¢ stores, and to cause the natural channels of trade, viz, the shoe manufacturers, the shoe findings jobbers, the shoe repairers, and hardware stores, to boycott and refuse to deal with those manufacturers and wholesale dealers in the aforesaid products who sell their products to the 5-and-10¢ stores, thereby suppressing competition among manufacturers of, and wholesale dealers in the products aforesaid. The following methods and practices were used to accomplish this end:

(a) The respondent, The I. T. S. Company, circularized the channels of trade, other than the 5-and-10¢ stores, with letters, pamphlets, literature, and advertisements in trade magazines (all of which it caused to be prepared, published, and distributed) to the following effect, gist, or meaning:

A New Year's resolution every shoemaker and jobber must make for 1935 prosperity: "In 1935 I will not buy rubber heels or soles made by manufacturers selling heels or stick-on soles to the 5-and-10¢ stores". * * * Now is certainly the time to make the New Year's resolution—to refuse to buy any more rubber heels from manufacturers who double-cross you by selling heels and stick-on soles to the 5-and-10¢ stores under some other brand name. You are a swell guy, these manufacturers say, and they are very fond of you and your orders—but they also like those car-load orders from the chain stores. Yet every heel and stick-on sole they sell the 5-and-10¢ stores means that you are cheated out of a heel or tap job. * * * The I. T. S. Company has always been on the side of the shoemaker and jobber. We have never sold to the 5-and-10¢ stores, any chain store, or shoe manufacturer.

* * * We know and we'd like to give you the information as to what concerns are selling to the 5-and-10¢ stores, but our legal counsel advises us that it would be unethical for us to do so, that we might be subject to prosecution for unfair competition and instituting a boycott against individual companies. But here's where you can get the information: The secretary, or officers of your local shoe repairers' association, can get this information through—

Mr. S. L. Orenstein, Executive Secretary,
The National Federation of Master Shoe Rebuilders, 405 Chester—12th Street Building,
Cleveland, Ohio.

* * * Stick to your guns, refuse to buy from any heel manufacturer supplying your worst competition, the 5-and-10¢ stores, with either heels or stick-on soles, and 1935 should be the beginning of more shoe repairing for the repair shops and better profits for you and your fellow shoemakers.

The respondent, The I. T. S. Company, also caused information to the same effect, gist, and meaning as that set forth in subsection (a) of this paragraph, to be disseminated to the trade in the various States of the United States by its missionary men and sales force.

(b) The respondent, The National Federation of Master Shoe Rebuilders, acting by and through its officers in response to inquiries made of it as a result of the reference to it as a source of information in the printed matter distributed by the respondent, The I. T. S. Company, and the reference made to it and its officers by the missionary men and sales force of The I. T. S. Company, as described supra, caused to be prepared and forwarded to said inquirers a list (so-called white list) of manufacturers and wholesale rubber heel and sole dealers who do not sell their products to 5-and-10¢ stores.

(c) The respondent, The I. T. S. Company, continuously urged shoe findings jobbers by persuasion, intimidation, and threats of boycott, to cease handling the products of manufacturers or wholesalers of rubber heels and soles who sell their products to the 5-and-10¢ stores.

(d) All of the respondents used other cooperative and individual means to carry out and make effective their aforesaid undertaking.

PAR 4. As a result of the aforesaid agreement, combination, and conspiracy, and the things done thereunder and pursuant thereto, as hereinabove set forth, trade in rubber heels and soles was unduly restrained among the States of the Union; competition among manufacturers and wholesalers, retailers and consumers, manufacturers and wholesalers in their sales to retailers, and among retailers in their sales to consumers, was substantially suppressed; and the consuming public was deprived of the benefits that would naturally flow from normal competition among and between the respondent, The I. T. S. Company, and other manufacturers, wholesalers, and retailers, dealing in rubber heels and soles.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondents, The I. T. S. Company, The National Federation of Master Shoe Rebuilders, its officers and members; George Benson, C. C. Zeigler, Walter L. Green, and S. L. Orenstein, are to the prejudice of the public and of respondents' competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce, within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

It is ordered, That the respondents, The I. T. S. Company and its officers; The National Federation of Master Shoe Rebuilders, its officers, both individually and in their official capacity, and its individual members, and their respective agents, representatives, and employees, or any group of such respondents or their agents, either with or without the cooperation of persons not parties hereto, do forthwith cease and desist from:

Order

24 F. T. C.

1. Combining and conspiring or cooperating and confederating together, among themselves or with others, to close natural channels of trade to manufacturers and wholesalers of rubber heels and soles who sell to the 5-and-10¢ stores;

2. Circularizing the channels of trade of the rubber heel and sole industry with literature falsely derogatory or defamatory to manufacturers and wholesalers of rubber heels and soles who sell to the 5-and-10¢ stores, and which designates sources from which information may be obtained disclosing the identity of manufacturers and wholesalers of the said products who sell to the 5-and-10¢ stores, or who do not sell to the 5-and-10¢ stores;

3. Publishing or circularizing the channels of trade of the rubber heel and sole industry with lists (so-called "white lists" or "black lists") containing the names of manufacturers and wholesalers of said products who do or do not sell to the 5-and-10¢ stores;

4. Disseminating information to the channels of trade of the rubber heel and sole industry through and by their missionary men and sales force, that certain manufacturers and wholesalers of the said products sell or do not sell to the 5-and-10¢ stores;

5. Using any other cooperative or coercive means to suppress competition in the sale and distribution of rubber heels and soles, or to close the natural channels of trade in such products to manufacturers and wholesalers who sell to the 5-and-10¢ stores.

It is further ordered, That the respondents shall, within 60 days after service upon them of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which they have complied with this order.

F. L. McWETHY

COMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION
OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 26, 1914

Docket 2853. Complaint, June 26, 1936—Decision, Jan. 22, 1937

Where an individual engaged in the manufacture, sale and distribution of a pharmaceutical preparation which was known as "McWethy's Home Treatment," and was in the form of pills and made up in packages sold for $5.00, but, in some instances, to old customers for $3.50—

Misrepresented, in advertising his said product in newspapers and in periodicals of interstate circulation which, in the main, reached readers in rural communities and small towns, that said preparation was an effective or valuable remedy or treatment for bladder, prostatic, kidney, and bowel troubles, and that it reached the underlying causes thereof and would cure or rid one of all such ailments, and that delay in taking such medicine might make it too late for one to treat his bladder ailment effectively, and misrepresented the functioning thereof through numerous statements of one sort and another of foregoing tenor, such as "Suffered 12 years. Bladder trouble now gone. * * * I have just finished two treatments and after 12 years of suffering, I can truthfully say I am free from bladder trouble," " * * * not only for the bladder, but helps the kidneys, liver, and bowels as well," "Now then why not get after this ailment and get rid of it?," etc., facts being said "Home Treatment" is not an effective remedy for such troubles and does not relieve systemic causes of kidney, bladder, and bowel ailments and troubles as represented, and aforesaid representations with respect to nature, value and effect of preparation in question were grossly exaggerated, misleading, and deceptive, and such product does not and will not accomplish results claimed therefor;

With capacity and tendency to lead purchasers and prospective purchasers of his said so-called "Home Treatment" into the belief that it constituted an effective or valuable remedy or treatment for such various ailments, and would reach the underlying causes of such troubles and cure or rid one of all such ailments, relieve weakened condition of the bladder due to enlarged prostate gland or to deranged condition of the kidneys, be beneficial in effect upon acid or rheumatic conditions of the blood, enable one, through action thereof, to avoid Bright's disease, and that delay might make it too late, etc., and to purchase his said product in substantial quantities in and on account of erroneous belief that his said various representations were true, and with result of thereby unfairly diverting trade to him from competitors, including manufacturers and distributors, and sellers and distributors of like and similar products, who truthfully advertise and represent the character and nature and therapeutic value of their respective products and do not advertise and otherwise represent, as the case may be, that such products have merit or therapeutic value which they do not have; to the injury of competition in commerce among the various States;

Complaint

Nash & Donnelly, of Chicago, Ill., for respondent.

COMPLAINT¹

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that F. L. McWethy, an individual, hereinafter referred to as respondent, has been and is using unfair methods of competition in commerce as "commerce" is defined in said act, and it appearing to said Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent, F. L. McWethy, is an individual with his principal office and place of business located at 329 Michigan Avenue, in the city of Marshall, State of Michigan. Respondent, for more than three years last past, has been, and still is, engaged in the manufacture and sale of a pharmaceutical preparation known as "McWethy's Home Treatment," which he represents to be a diuretic stimulant for the kidneys. In the course and conduct of his business respondent offers said product for sale and sells the same in commerce between the State of Michigan and the several States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

When said product is sold, respondent transported from his place of business in the State of Michigan to the purchasers thereof located in States of the United States other than the State of Michigan and in the District of Columbia. There has been for more than three years last past, and still is, a constant current of trade and commerce in said product so manufactured and sold by respondent, between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia. Respondent is now and for more than three years last past has been engaged in substantial competition with other individuals and with firms, partnerships, and corporations engaged in the manufacture of like and similar products and in the sale thereof in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

¹ As amended by order of Commission on Dec. 30, 1936. Extended enumeration in Par. 2 of the complaint, as thus amended, quoting at length respondent's various representations with respect to the alleged therapeutic value of respondent's product and its effect upon users thereof, is likewise set forth in the findings, infra, at page 524, and for this reason is omitted from the amended complaint as published in the interest of brevity.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of his business, as aforesaid, the respondent, in soliciting the sale of and in selling "McWethy's Home Treatment" and for the purpose of creating a demand upon the part of the consuming public for said product, now causes and for more than three years last past has caused advertisements to be issued, published, and circulated to and among the general public of the United States in various periodicals and publications and in other forms of printed matter, and in other ways. In said ways and by said means, respondent makes and has made to the general public many unfair, false and misleading statements with reference to the alleged therapeutic value of said product and its effect upon the users thereof, a portion of which are as follows:²

PAR. 3. The statements and representations set forth in paragraph 2 hereof, and many others similar thereto, serve as representations on the part of respondent to purchasers and prospective purchasers of respondent's product as to the nature of the product and its effectiveness in use. Said representations are:

- (a) That said Home Treatment is an effective remedy for any bladder trouble;
- (b) That it is an effective or valuable treatment for prostatic trouble of any kind;
- (c) That it is an effective or valuable treatment for kidney trouble;
- (d) That it is an effective or valuable treatment for the bowels;
- (e) That it reaches all of the underlying causes of either bladder or kidney or prostatic or bowel troubles;
- (f) That it will "cure" or "rid" one of all such ailments;
- (g) That it will relieve a weakened condition of the bladder due to enlarged prostate gland or to a deranged condition of the kidneys;
- (h) That it can or should eliminate the cause of bladder or other organic troubles;
- (i) That it will have a beneficial effect upon an acid or rheumatic condition of the blood causing bladder irritations;

² The quotations which follow at length in the complaint at this point, as allegedly made by respondent with respect to the therapeutic value of its preparation and effect upon users thereof, is set forth in the findings, infra, at page 524, and is, for this reason, omitted here in the interest of brevity.

Complaint

24 F. T. C.

(j) That the use of this medicine in preventing retention of urine will enable one to avoid interstitial nephritis or Bright's disease;

(k) That delay in taking this medicine may make it too late for one to treat his bladder ailment effectively;

(l) That the Home Treatment acts directly on the seat of the trouble or that it brings quick relief no matter what the causes are;

(m) That it relieves systemic causes of kidney, bladder and bowel ailment and troubles;

whereas, in truth and in fact, "McWethy's Home Treatment" is not an effective remedy for bladder, bowel, or prostatic irritations or ailments, nor does it relieve the systemic causes of kidney, bladder, and bowel ailments and troubles, as represented. It does not eliminate the cause of such irritations or ailments or relieve a user's weakened physical condition due to a derangement of the kidneys, prostate gland, bladder or bowels. In truth and in fact, the representations made by respondent with respect to the nature, value and effect of his preparation, when used, are grossly exaggerated, false, misleading, and untrue, as said preparation will not accomplish the results claimed for it.

PAR. 4. There are among the competitors of the respondent in interstate commerce, manufacturers and distributors of like and similar products who truthfully advertise and represent the nature, merit, and therapeutic value of their respective products. There are also among such competitors of the respondent, sellers and distributors of like and similar products who do not advertise and otherwise represent that such products have the merit or therapeutic value which they do not have.

PAR. 5. The above alleged acts and practices of respondent have the capacity and tendency to mislead and deceive purchasers and prospective purchasers into the erroneous beliefs that respondent's representations set out in paragraph 3 hereof are true and into the purchase of respondent's product in such beliefs. Thereby trade is unfairly diverted to respondent from respondent's competitors in interstate commerce referred to in paragraph 4 and as a consequence thereof substantial injury is done by respondent to competition in interstate commerce.

PAR. 6. Said acts and practices of respondent are all to the prejudice of the public and respondent's competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914.

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, on June 26, 1936, issued and served its complaint in this proceeding upon the respondent, F. L. McWethy, charging him with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of the provisions of said act. The respondent duly filed his answer on July 27, 1936, in which he denied the material allegations of the complaint. Thereafter, testimony and evidence in support of the allegations of said complaint were introduced in behalf of the Commission before W. W. Sheppard, an examiner of the Commission, theretofore duly designated by it, no testimony and evidence being offered by the respondent; and said testimony and evidence was duly recorded and filed in the office of the Commission. Thereafter, upon the motion of the attorney for the Commission, notice and service of a copy of said motion having been waived in writing by the attorney for the respondent, the Commission, on December 24, 1936, ordered the complaint amended conformable to the testimony and evidence received at the hearing theretofore held, and ordered that said testimony and evidence be received and considered as testimony and evidence under said complaint, as amended. After the issuance of said order amending the original complaint herein, the respondent, through his attorney, John A. Nash, Esq., filed his answer in which said answer the respondent stated that he waived hearing on the charges set forth in the complaint, as amended, that he admitted all of the material allegations of the complaint as amended to be true and that the Commission might, without trial, without further evidence, and without any intervening procedure, make, enter, issue and serve upon him, the said respondent, its findings as to the facts and conclusion based thereon and an order to cease and desist from the methods of competition alleged in the complaint, as amended. Thereafter, the proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on said amended complaint, and the answer of the respondent to the amended complaint, testimony and other evidence, and the Commission having duly considered same and being fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom.

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. The respondent, F. L. McWethy, is an individual with his principal office and place of business located at 329 Michigan Avenue, in the city of Marshall, in the State of Michigan. He is now, and for more than five years last past, has been engaged in the manufacture, sale, and distribution of a pharmaceutical preparation known as "McWethy's Home Treatment." This treatment, in the form of pills, is made up in packages which respondent sells for $5.00, but which, in some instances, he has sold to old customers for $3.50. Respondent represents and has represented this so-called home treatment to be a diuretic stimulant for the kidneys and to be a remedy for bladder and bowel ailments. He offers and has offered said product for sale and distribution in commerce between and among the various States of the United States, and in the District of Columbia.

When said product is sold, respondent transports it from his place of business in Marshall, Mich., to the purchasers thereof, located in various parts of the United States and in the District of Columbia. Respondent is now, and has been at all times hereinafter mentioned, in substantial competition with other individuals, firms, partnerships, and corporations likewise engaged in the manufacture, sale, and distribution in commerce as herein set out of like and similar products.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of his business, as above described, respondent advertises his product by means of advertisements published in newspapers and magazines such as the "National Farm News" and in other periodicals and publications and forms of printed matter having interstate circulation which, in the main, reach readers in rural communities and small towns. Typical of the advertisements which the respondent thus published and circulated prior to November 7, 1932, is the following advertisement which appeared in the "National Farm News" for January 1932:

CAN YOU SLEEP
ALL NIGHT?

Or Must You Get Up Frequently By Reason of Bladder Trouble?

If you are kept awake half the night and get up frequently on account of irritation and weakness of the bladder, or if you are suffering from prostatic trouble, write me at once for a generous free trial of my home treatment for the relief of bladder weakness. I send it free so you can try it in your own case and know how quickly it relieves the irritation and stops the getting up nights. This trial treatment alone will bring you such wonderful relief you will be delighted beyond words. Write me today. F. L. McWethy, 329 Michigan Ave., Marshall, Mich.

In form letters, folders, and circulars, which respondent published prior to November 7, 1932, respondent made many statements and representations concerning his product, of which the following are typical:

* * * The Home Treatment is proving effective in many cases of long standing, and I see no reason why you can not derive the same splendid results, if you will persist in the use of the medicine.

So many reports of cures have been coming in the past two weeks from my customers from all over the United States and Canada that I sometimes feel I do not recommend the medicine half as high as I should.

No matter whether caused by enlarged prostate gland or a deranged condition of the kidneys, the Home Treatment is designed to relieve this condition. (To wit: Weakened condition of the bladder.)

I induced a number of my acquaintances to try it, some of them in such an extremely bad condition they could hardly pass water without artificial means, and the results were so wonderfully satisfactory that I at once arranged for the manufacture of the medicine.

Bladder irritations arise from various sources, a very common one being an acid and rheumatic condition of the blood, but whatever the cause, you can not overestimate the advantage to be gained by giving prompt attention to the trouble.

No matter what the causes are, you want relief quickly. My Home Treatment is prepared to act directly on the seat of your trouble, and you will not have to use the medicine very long to prove its effectiveness.

The object all the way through is not only to relieve the existing local conditions, but as far as possible relieve systemic causes of the trouble.

To everyone afflicted with a disordered condition of the bladder, I say, do not let another day go by, * * * but order a full treatment at once.

McWethy's Combined Home Treatment is not only for the bladder, but the kidneys and bowels.

Why put up with your trouble longer. Others were told their case was incurable, yet after all, see what they say about the medicine after giving it a good fair trial.

In November 1932, the respondent stipulated and agreed with the Federal Trade Commission to discontinue making and advertising the foregoing statements and representations, and other representations and statements equivalent thereto, in form or substance. Since November 7, 1932, the effective date of the aforementioned stipulation, which was approved by the Commission, the respondent has no longer used any of the foregoing advertisements and has discontinued making the specific representations as hereinabove set out. However, among the statements and representations made by the respondent since November 7, 1932, have been the following:

Suffered 12 years. Bladder trouble now gone. * * * I have just finished two treatments and after 12 years of suffering, I can truthfully say I am free from bladder trouble. b-5a

McWethy's Combined Home Treatment is not only for the bladder, but helps the kidneys, liver and bowels as well. b-4d

Now then why not get after this ailment and get rid of it? f-12a

A medicine that has proven wonderfully successful in relieving what is commonly called a weakened condition of the bladder indicated by an unnatural desire to pass water very frequently both day and night, usually accompanied with a feeling of extreme restlessness. No matter what may have caused it, the Home Treatment is designed to relieve this condition * * *.

What you or any other sufferer wants is a treatment that will produce results. No matter what the causes are you want relief quickly. My Home Treatment is prepared to act directly on the irritated parts, and you will not have to use the medicine very long to prove its effectiveness. b-4b

PAR. 3. The statements and representations as set forth in paragraph 2 hereof, and many others similar thereto, serve as representations on the part of respondent to purchasers and prospective purchasers of his product as to the nature thereof, and its effectiveness in use. These statements and representations of respondent hereinabove set out, and others similar thereto, have the capacity and tendency to lead purchasers and prospective purchasers of respondent's so-called home treatment into the belief:

- (a) That said Home Treatment is an effective remedy for any organic bladder trouble;
 - (b) That it is an effective or valuable treatment for prostatic trouble of any kind;
 - (c) That it is an effective or valuable treatment for kidney trouble;
 - (d) That it is an effective or valuable treatment for the bowels;
 - (e) That it reaches all of the underlying causes of either bladder, kidney, prostatic or bowel troubles;
 - (f) That it will "cure" or "rid" one of all such ailments;
 - (g) That it will relieve a weakened condition of the bladder due to enlarged prostate gland or to a deranged condition of the kidney;
 - (h) That it can or should eliminate the cause of bladder or other organic troubles;
 - (i) That it will have a beneficial effect upon an acid or rheumatic condition of the blood causing bladder irritations;
 - (j) That the use of this medicine in preventing retention of urine will enable one to avoid interstitial nephritis or Bright's disease;
 - (k) That delay in taking this medicine may make it too late for one to treat his bladder ailment effectively;
 - (l) That the Home Treatment acts directly on the seat of the trouble or that it brings quick relief no matter what the causes are;
 - (m) That it relieves systemic causes of kidney, bladder and bowel ailments and troubles;
- and to purchase respondent's products in such beliefs.

Conclusion

In truth and in fact, "McWethy's Home Treatment" is not an effective remedy for bladder, bowel, or prostatic troubles, nor does it relieve the systemic causes of kidney, bladder, and bowel ailments and troubles, as represented. It does not eliminate the cause of such irritations or ailments or relieve a user's weakened physical condition due to a derangement of the kidneys, prostate gland, bladder, or bowels. In truth and in fact, the representations made by respondent with respect to the nature, value and effect of his preparation, when used are grossly exaggerated, misleading, and deceptive, as said preparation does not and will not accomplish the results claimed for it.

PAR. 4. There are among the competitors of respondent in commerce as herein set out, manufacturers and distributors of like and similar products who truthfully advertise and represent the nature, merit, and therapeutic value of their respective products. There are also among such competitors of the respondent, sellers and distributors of like and similar products who do not advertise and otherwise represent that such products have merit or therapeutic value which they do not have.

PAR. 5. The use of the statements and representations herein set forth in paragraphs 2 and 3 by the respondent in offering for sale and selling his products in commerce herein set out, have had, and now have the tendency and capacity to mislead and deceive members of the purchasing public into the erroneous belief that said representations are true and into the purchase of substantial quantities of respondent's product on account of such belief induced as aforesaid. As a result thereof, trade has been unfairly diverted to the respondent from competitors referred to in paragraph 4 hereof, who truthfully advertise and represent the character and nature and therapeutic value of their respective products. In consequence thereof, injury has been done by respondent to competition in commerce between and among the various States of the United States.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of said respondent under the conditions and circumstances described in the foregoing findings of facts are to the prejudice of the public and of competitors of respondent and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

It is ordered, That the respondent, F. L. McWethy, his agents, representatives, servants, and employees, in connection with the offering for sale, sale and distribution of a product now designated as "McWethy's Home Treatment" or any product of substantially the same composition and ingredients sold under the name "McWethy's Home Treatment" or under any other name, in interstate commerce, do cease and desist from:

Representing, directly or indirectly, through form letters, folders, circulars, catalogs, or any other form of printed matter, or by radio broadcasting, or in any other manner:

(a) That said Home Treatment is an effective remedy for any bladder trouble;

(b) That it is an effective or valuable treatment for prostatic trouble of any kind;

(c) That it is an effective or valuable treatment for kidney trouble;

(d) That it is an effective or valuable treatment for the bowels;

(e) That it reaches all of the underlying causes of either bladder, kidney, prostatic or bowel troubles;

(f) That it will "cure" or "rid" one of all such ailments;

(g) That it will relieve a weakened condition of the bladder due to enlarged prostate gland or to a deranged condition of the kidneys;

(h) That it can or should eliminate the cause of bladder or other organic troubles;

(i) That it will have a beneficial effect upon an acid or rheumatic condition of the blood causing bladder irritations;

519

Order

(j) That the use of this medicine in preventing retention of urine will enable one to avoid interstitial nephritis or Bright's disease;

(k) That delay in taking this medicine may make it too late for one to treat his bladder ailment effectively;

(l) That the Home Treatment acts directly on the seat of the trouble or that it brings quick relief no matter what the causes are;

(m) That it relieves systemic causes of kidney, bladder and bowel ailments and troubles;

and from making any other representations of similar tenor or import.

And it is hereby further ordered, That the said respondent shall within 60 days from the date of the service upon him of this order file with this Commission a report, in writing, setting forth the manner and form in which he shall have complied with this order.

IN THE MATTER OF
SUN RADIO SERVICE & SUPPLY CORPORATION

COMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION
OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 26, 1914

Docket 3022. Complaint, Dec. 23, 1936—Decision, Jan. 23, 1937

Where a corporation long engaged in the manufacture, sale, and distribution of radio receiving sets and radio tubes and supplies in commerce among the various States and in the District of Columbia, made use of letters "R. C. A." as a mark or brand for its said sets, tubes, and supplies thus made and sold by it and its subsidiaries, and built up and enjoyed a valuable goodwill in said letters as thus applied, which, so used, were generally recognized and understood by trade and purchasing public as meaning products made and sold as aforesaid by it and its said subsidiaries; and where activities above set forth of said corporation and its subsidiaries, as well as those of other well-known manufacturers and distributors of such products, included the new type of metal tube developed by them to meet demand of many purchasers of such sets for such a tube, in which the technical elements are sealed in steel, or in which metal functions instead of glass, and such so-called metal tubes had become popularized and were sold to purchasers in large quantities; and thereafter a corporate retailer engaged in the District of Columbia in selling and distributing radio sets, tubes and supplies, including its so-called "Automatic Radio"—

Displayed letters "R. C. A." over word "Automatic" in representing, designating and referring to its aforesaid set in advertisements in newspapers of wide interstate circulation, together with words "Newest" and "Licensed," and "Featuring the New METAL Tube," and sold said products, thus advertised and represented, in commerce among the various States and in aforesaid District, notwithstanding fact sets in question were not those made by aforesaid corporation and its subsidiaries, nor were the tubes thus featured those products which had become popularized and known to trade and purchasing public as metal tubes, as hereinbefore set forth;

With effect of confusing, misleading and deceiving purchasers and prospective purchasers into the erroneous belief that said various products were those of said corporation and its subsidiaries, and of other competitors who had built up and long enjoyed valuable goodwill, as aforesaid, in manufacture, sale and distribution of their respective products, and with tendency and capacity unfairly to divert trade to it from its competitors, including manufacturers and distributors who do not misrepresent their products and deceive or mislead purchasers or prospective purchasers thereof through use of such letters or simulation, or through use of word "Metal" as descriptive of their tubes, not, in fact, such, as understood as hereinbefore explained, and who truthfully represent nature and merits of their products under their own trade names and brands and as of their own manufacture and design; and to the substantial injury of aforesaid corporation and its subsidiaries and other competitors, and of a substantial portion of public, by inducing purchasers and prospective purchasers to buy products made and sold by it, in and because of the erroneous belief that they were those products of hereinbefore corporation and its subsidiaries, preferred by many purchasers as superior to products competitive therewith, and that its said tubes were metal tubes, as such had become popularly known to trade and purchasing public:

Held, That such acts and practices were to the injury and prejudice of the public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition.

Mr. Joseph C. Fehr for the Commission.

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission having reason to believe that Sun Radio Service & Supply Corporation, a corporation, has been and is using unfair methods of competition in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in said act of Congress, and it appearing to said Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint, stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent, Sun Radio Service & Supply Corporation, is a corporation organized, existing, and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Maryland, with its principal place of business located at 938 F Street N. W., in the city of Washington, in the District of Columbia. It is now, and has been for more than one year last past, engaged in the business of selling and distributing at retail, radio receiving sets and radio tubes and supplies in commerce within the District of Columbia, and among the various States of the United States. In the course and conduct of its business respondent has been at all times referred to herein, in competition with other corporations, firms, partnerships, and individuals likewise engaged in the sale and distribution of similar products in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 2. The Radio Corporation of America is a corporation organized existing and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Delaware, with its principal place of business located at 30 Rockefeller Plaza, in the city of New York and State of New York. It is now, and since 1919, has been engaged in the manufacture, sale and distribution of radio receiving sets and radio tubes and supplies between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia, using the letters "R. C. A." as a mark or brand for said radio receiving sets, radio tubes, and supplies thus manufactured and sold by it and by its owned and controlled subsidiaries, and causing said products when sold to be shipped from its place of business or that of its subsidiaries, to purchasers thereof located in States of the United States other than the State in which such shipments originated. Said Radio Corporation of America has built up and enjoys a valuable goodwill in the said letters "R. C. A." as applied to its said products, particularly radio receiving sets, radio tubes and supplies. Said letters, "R. C. A." when applied to or used in connection with radio receiving sets and radio tubes and supplies, are generally recognized and understood by the trade and purchasing public to signify products manufactured and sold in commerce between and among various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia by the said Radio Corporation of America and its subsidiaries.

PAR. 3. In the course and conduct of its business as described in paragraph 1 hereof, and for the purpose of creating a demand for its products on the part of the purchasing public, the respondent has caused advertisements and advertising matter pertaining to certain of its products to be inserted in newspapers having circulation between and among various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia, and by said means respondent has caused and now causes its said products to be represented, designated and referred to as—and respondent has sold and now sells its products, thus advertised and represented, between and among various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

In truth and in fact, the respondent's said products were not and are not products made or manufactured by the Radio Corporation of America or its subsidiaries referred to in paragraph 2 hereof; nor are the tubes featured in the aforesaid advertising matter those tubes which have become popularized and known to the trade and purchasing public as "metal" tubes, in which the technical elements are sealed in a vacuum in steel, or radio tubes wherein metal functions instead of glass for radio receiving sets.

PAR. 4. The acts and practices of the respondent as set forth in paragraph 3 hereof, and others similar thereto, are false and misleading and have the capacity and tendency to confuse, mislead, and deceive purchasers and prospective purchasers and cause them erroneously to believe that the respondent's said products so described and referred to were and are the products of the Radio Corporation of America and its subsidiaries, when such was not and is not the fact, and erroneously to believe that said glass tubes are metal tubes, in which the technical elements are sealed in a vacuum of steel, when such is not the fact, to the injury of said Radio Corporation of America and its subsidiaries, and to the injury of other competitors of the respondent, and unfairly injures the goodwill of said competitors which they have built up and have had for many years in the manufacture, sale and distribution of their respective products among the purchasing public in the various parts of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 5. There are now, and have been for more than one year last past, among the competitors of respondent, manufacturers and distributors likewise engaged in the business of manufacturing and selling in commerce, as herein set out, radio receiving sets and radio tubes and supplies, and similar products, who do not misrepresent said products and who do not deceive or mislead purchasers or prospective purchasers of their products by simulating or using the letters "R. C. A.," or by simulating or using the trade name or brand of any other competitor, and who do not use the word "metal" as descriptive of tubes offered for sale and sold by them which are not, in fact, tubes in which the technical elements are sealed in a vacuum in steel, or such tubes wherein metal functions instead of glass, and who truthfully represent the nature and merits of their products under their own trade names and brands, and as of their own manufacture and design.

PAR. 6. The use by respondent of said methods, acts and practices as above set forth, have had and now have the tendency and capacity to unfairly divert trade to respondent from its competitors, to the substantial injury of its competitors in said commerce, and also has the tendency and capacity to injure a substantial portion of the public by inducing purchasers and prospective purchasers to purchase the products manufactured and sold by respondent as aforesaid, in and because of the erroneous belief that said products are the products of its competitors or as aforesaid, and that its tubes are "metal" tubes as such tubes have become popularly known to the trade and purchasing public.

PAR. 7 The aforesaid methods, acts and practices of the respondent are all to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors, as hereinabove alleged, and said methods, acts and practices constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress entitled, "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914.

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, on December 23, 1936, issued, and served its complaint in this proceeding upon respondent, Sun Radio Service & Supply Corporation, charging it with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of the provisions of said act. On January 6, 1937, the respondent filed its answer in which answer it admitted all the material allegations of the complaint to be true and stated that it waived hearing on the charges set forth in the said complaint and stated that, without further evidence or other intervening procedure, the Commission might issue and serve upon it findings as to the facts and conclusion and an order to cease and desist from the violations of law charged in the complaint. Thereafter, the proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on the said complaint and the answer thereto, and the Commission having duly considered the same, and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. The respondent, Sun Radio Service and Supply Corporation, is a corporation organized and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Maryland, having its principal office and place of business at 938 F Street, N. W., in the city of Washington, in the District of Columbia. Respondent, for more than one year last past has been, and still is, engaged in the business of selling and distributing at retail radio receiving sets, radio tubes, and supplies. Among these products which respondent sells in commerce within the District of Columbia and among the various States of the United States is the "Automatic Radio." Respondent advertises this particular product with the letters "RCA" immediately above the words "AUTOMATIC." Respondent also advertises the "Automatic Radio" as "featuring the new METAL tube."

Respondent transports its product or causes the same to be transported from its place of business in the city of Washington, in the District of Columbia, to the purchasers thereof located in various States of the United States, and in the District of Columbia. There has been for more than one year last past, and still is, a constant current of trade in said product sold and distributed by respondent, in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia. Respondent is now, and for more than one year last past has been, in substantial competition with other corporations and with individuals, partnerships, and firms engaged in the sale and distribution of like and similar products in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 2. The Radio Corporation of America is a corporation organized, existing and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Delaware, with its principal place of business located at 30 Rockefeller Plaza, in the city of New York and State of New York. It is now, and since 1919 has been, engaged in the manufacture, sale and distribution of radio receiving sets and radio tubes and supplies in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia, using the letters "RCA" as a mark or brand for said radio receiving sets, radio tubes and supplies thus manufactured and sold by it and by its owned and controlled subsidiaries. It causes said products when sold to be shipped from its place of business, or that of its subsidiaries, to purchasers thereof located in States of the United States other than the State in which such shipments originated. Said Radio Corporation of America has built up and enjoys a valuable good will in the said letters "RCA" as applied to its said products, particularly radio receiving sets, radio tubes, and supplies. Said letters, "RCA" as applied to or used in connection with radio receiving sets and radio tubes and supplies, are generally recognized and understood by the trade and purchasing public to signify products manufactured and sold in commerce between and among various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia by the said Radio Corporation of America and its subsidiaries.

Many purchasers of radio receiving sets have come to prefer the comparatively new "metal" tubes for use in radio receiving sets; that is to say, tubes in which the technical elements are sealed in a vacuum in steel, or tubes wherein metal functions instead of glass. To meet this demand the Radio Corporation of America and its subsidiaries and other well known manufacturers and distributors of radio receiving sets and radio tubes and supplies have developed the new type of metal tube hereinabove described and these so-called metal tubes have become popularized and sold to purchasers thereof in large quantities.

PAR. 3. In the course and conduct of its business as described in paragraph 1 hereof, and for the purpose of creating a demand for its products on the part of the purchasing public, the respondent has caused advertisements and advertising matter pertaining to certain of its products to be inserted in newspapers having a wide interstate circulation, and by said means respondent has caused and now causes its said products to be represented, designated and referred to as and respondent has sold and now sells its products, thus advertised and represented in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 4. The statements and representations set forth in paragraph 3 hereof, have a tendency and capacity to deceive and mislead purchasers and prospective purchasers of respondent's said products into the belief:

(a) That the radio receiving sets advertised and represented by respondent as "RCA AUTOMATIC, featuring the New METAL Tube," were and are the products of the Radio Corporation of America and its subsidiaries.

(b) That the tubes thus advertised and represented as "METAL" tubes are tubes that have become popularized and known to the trade and purchasing public as tubes in which the technical elements are sealed in a vacuum in steel, or tubes for radio receiving sets wherein metal functions instead of glass.

In truth and in fact, the respondent's said products were not and are not products made or manufactured by the Radio Corporation of America or its subsidiaries referred to in paragraph 2 hereof; and the tubes featured in the advertising matter above set out are not such tubes as have become popularized and known to the trade and purchasing public as "metal" tubes, i. e., tubes in which the technical elements are sealed in a vacuum in steel, or tubes for radio receiving sets wherein metal functions instead of glass.

The representations made by the respondent as herein above set forth and others similar thereto, are misleading and deceptive and have a tendency and capacity to confuse, deceive and mislead, and have confused, misled, and deceived purchasers and prospective purchasers into the erroneous beliefs herein above described to the injury of said Radio Corporation of America and its subsidiaries and of other competitors of respondent, which said competitors have built up and have for many years enjoyed valuable goodwill as aforesaid, in the manufacture, sale and distribution of their respective products among the purchasing public in various parts of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 5. There are among the public, many purchasers of radio receiving sets, radio tubes and radio supplies, who use the products of the Radio Corporation of America and its subsidiaries in preference to products manufactured and sold by competitors, believing that the products manufactured and sold by said Radio Corporation of America and its subsidiaries are superior in quality to those of competing products.

PAR. 6. There are now, and have been for more than one year last past, among the competitors of respondent, manufacturers and distributors, likewise engaged in the business of manufacturing and selling in commerce, as herein set out, radio receiving sets and radio tubes and supplies, and similar products, who do not misrepresent said products and who do not deceive or mislead purchasers or prospective purchasers of their products by simulating or using the letters "RCA," or by simulating or using the trade name or brand of any other competitor, and who do not use the word "metal" as descriptive of tubes offered for sale and sold by them which are not, in fact, tubes in which the technical elements are sealed in a vacuum in steel, or such tubes wherein metal functions instead of glass, and who truthfully represent the nature and merits of their products under their own trade names and brands and as being of their own manufacture and design.

PAR. 7. The use by respondent of said methods, acts, and practices, as above set forth, have had and now have the tendency and capacity to unfairly divert trade to respondent from its competitors, to the substantial injury of said Radio Corporation of America and its subsidiaries and of other competitors, and also has the tendency and capacity to injure a substantial portion of the public by inducing purchasers and prospective purchasers to purchase the products manufactured and sold by respondent, as aforesaid, in and because of the erroneous beliefs that said products are the products of the Radio Corporation of America and its subsidiaries, as aforesaid, and that its tubes are "metal" tubes as such tubes have become popularly known to the trade and purchasing public.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondent Sun Radio Service and Supply Corporation, are to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce, within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

This proceeding having been heard by the Federal Trade Commission upon the complaint of the Commission and the answer filed on January 6, 1937, by respondent admitting all the material allegations of the complaint to be true and waiving the taking of further evidence and all other intervening procedure, and the Commission having made its findings as to the facts and its conclusion that said respondent has violated the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

It is ordered, That the respondent, Sun Radio Service and Supply Corporation, a corporation, its officers, representatives, agents, and employees, in connection with the offering for sale, sale, and distribution of radio receiving sets and radio tubes and supplies in interstate commerce or in the District of Columbia, do forthwith cease and desist from:

1. Representing, directly or indirectly, through the use of the letters "RCA," or through any other means, that said radio receiving sets, radio tubes and supplies are manufactured by the Radio Corporation of America or any of its subsidiaries;
2. Representing that the radio tubes offered for sale and sold by it, either alone or in connection with its radios, are "new METAL tubes," until and unless said tubes are those known to the trade and purchasing public as "metal" tubes in which the technical elements are sealed in a vacuum in steel, or wherein metal functions instead of glass;
3. Making any other representations of similar tenor or import.

It is further ordered, That the respondent shall, within 60 days after service upon it of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which it has complied with this order.

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that Kelly Brewing & Malting Company, a corporation, trading under the name and style Rosecrest Distillers, hereinafter referred to as respondent, has been and is using unfair methods of competition in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in said act, and it appearing to the said Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint, stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent is a corporation organized, existing, and doing business under the laws of the State of New Jersey, with its principal office and place of business in the city of Paterson, in said State. It is now, and for more than one year last past has been, engaged in the business of purchasing, rectifying, blending, and bottling whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages and in the sale thereof in constant course of trade and commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia. In the course and conduct of its said business, it causes its said products when sold to be transported from its place of business aforesaid into and through various States of the United States to the purchasers thereof, consisting of wholesalers and retailers located in other States of the United States and the District of Columbia. In the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid, respondent is now, and for more than one year last past has been, in substantial competition with other corporations and with individuals, partnerships, and firms engaged in the manufacture by distillation of whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages and in the sale thereof in trade and commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia; and in the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid, respondent is now, and for more than one year last past has been, in substantial competition with other corporations, and with individuals, firms, and partnerships engaged in the business of purchasing, rectifying, blending and bottling whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages and in the sale thereof in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid, respondent has upon its said premises a still which it uses in the production of gin by a process of rectification, whereby alcohol purchased but not produced by respondent is redistilled over juniper berries and other aromatics. Such rectification of alcoholic spirits does not make or constitute respondent a distiller as defined by Section 3247 of the Revised Statutes regulating Internal Revenue, nor as commonly understood by the public or the liquor industry. For a long period of time the word "Distillers" when used in connection with the liquor industry and the products thereof has had and still has a definite significance and meaning to the minds of the wholesalers and retailers in such industry and to the ultimate purchasing public, to wit: those who manufacture such liquors by the process of original and continuous distillation from mash, wort, or wash, through continuous closed pipes and vessels until the manufacture thereof is completed; and a substantial portion of the purchasing public prefers to buy spirituous liquors prepared and bottled by distillers.

PAR. 3. In the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid, by the use of the word "Distillers" in its trade name, printed on its stationery and advertising, and on the labels attached to the bottles in which it sells and ships its said products, and in various other ways, respondent represents to its customers and furnishes them with the means of representing to their vendees, both retailers and the ultimate consuming public, that respondent is a distiller and that the whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages therein contained were by it manufactured through the process of distillation from mash, wort, or wash, as aforesaid, when, as a matter of fact, respondent is not a distiller, does not distill the said whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages by it so bottled, labeled, sold, and transported, and merely by the use of a still operated by it as aforesaid in the rectification of alcoholic spirits by redistillation over juniper berries and other aromatics does not distill the gins by it so bottled, labeled, sold, and transported in the sense in which the word "distilled" is commonly accepted and understood by those engaged in the liquor trade and the public. Respondent does not own, operate, or control any place or places where such beverages are manufactured by the process of distillation from mash, wort, or wash.

PAR. 4. There are among the competitors of respondent engaged in the sale of spirituous beverages, as mentioned in paragraph 1 hereof, corporations, firms, partnerships, and individuals who manufacture and distill from mash, wort, or wash, as aforesaid, whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages sold by them and who truthfully use the word "distillery," "distilleries," "distillers," or "distilling" as a part of their corporate or trade names and on their stationery and advertising, and on the labels of the bottles in which they sell and ship such products. There are also among such competitors corporations, firms, partnerships, and individuals engaged in the business of purchasing, rectifying, blending, bottling, and selling whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages who do not use the word "distillery," "distilleries," "distilling," or "distillers" as a part of their corporate or trade names, nor on their stationery or advertising, nor on the labels attached to the bottles in which they sell and ship their said products.

PAR. 5. Representation by respondent, as set forth in paragraph 3 hereof, is calculated to and has the capacity and tendency to and does mislead and deceive dealers and the purchasing public into the beliefs that respondent is a distiller and that the whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages sold by the respondent are manufactured and distilled by it from mash, wort or wash, as aforesaid, and is calculated to and has the capacity and tendency to and does induce dealers and the purchasing public acting in such beliefs, to purchase the whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages bottled and sold by the respondent, thereby diverting trade to respondent from its competitors who do not by their corporate or trade names or in any other manner misrepresent that they are manufacturers by distillation from mash, wort, or wash, of such products, and thereby respondent does substantial injury to substantial competition in interstate commerce.

PAR. 6. The acts and things above alleged to have been done and the false representations alleged to have been made by respondent are to the prejudice of the public and the competitors of respondent and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914.

Findings

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled, "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, on June 20, 1935, issued and served its complaint in this proceeding upon respondent, Kelly Brewing & Malting Company, a corporation, trading under the name and style Rosecrest Distillers, charging it with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce, in violation of the provisions of said act. After the issuance of said complaint and the filing of respondent's answer thereto, testimony and other evidence in support of the allegations of said complaint were introduced by PGad B. Morehouse, attorney for the Commission, before John L. Hornor, an examiner of the Commission, theretofore duly designated by it, and no testimony was offered by respondent in opposition to the allegations of the complaint; and said testimony and other evidence were duly recorded and filed in the office of the Commission. Thereafter the proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on the said complaint, the answer thereto, testimony and other evidence, brief in support of the complaint (brief in opposition thereto and oral arguments of counsel having been waived); and the Commission having duly considered the same, and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public, and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent is a corporation, organized and existing under the laws of the State of New Jersey, with its office and principal place of business at No. 122 Straight Street, in the city of Paterson in said State, where, from the date of its incorporation in 1923 until about July 1, 1935, it engaged in the business of a rectifier and wholesaler of spirituous liquors under basic permit No. R-394 from the Federal Government. It had a capitalization of $1,000,000, with $346,000 paid in. Its principal products were blended whiskies, distilled gin, apple brandy, and bottled straight whiskies. Except for the production of gin by the redistillation of tax-paid purchased alcohol over juniper berries and other aromatics, it never produced any spirits by distillation, nor had a place therefor. Although chartered to deal in malts and beers, it had no place or brewing house or buildings wherein and by means of which are carried out the customary actual processes of preparing beers or ales, and in fact it never handled such products in any manner, so that this case deals entirely with its use of the word "Distillers" in its trade name.

During the aforesaid period, while it was engaged in business, it purchased its alcohol from the Roseville Commercial Alcohol Corporation, and its entire quantity of other distilled spirits requirements from others. During its business operations it bottled and sold approximately 6,700 gallons of blended and straight whiskies and about 5,000 gallons of gin. In the course and conduct of its said business it caused its said products, when sold, to be transported from its place of business as aforesaid into and through various States of the United States to the purchasers thereof, consisting of wholesalers and retailers located in other States of the United States and the District of Columbia. In the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid, respondent was in substantial competition with other corporations and with individuals, partnerships, and firms engaged in the manufacture by distillation of whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages and in the sale thereof in trade and commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia; and in the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid, respondent was in substantial competition with other corporations, and with individuals, firms, and partnerships engaged in the business of purchasing, rectifying, blending, and bottling whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages and in the sale thereof in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid, respondent had upon its said premises a still which it used in the production of gin by a process of rectification, whereby alcohol purchased but not produced by respondent was redistilled over juniper berries and other aromatics. Such rectification of alcoholic spirits does not make or constitute respondent a distiller, as defined by Section 3247 of the Revised Statutes regulating Internal Revenue, nor as commonly understood by the public or the liquor industry. For a long period of time the word "distillers," when used in connection with the liquor industry and the products thereof, has had and still has a definite significance and meaning to the minds of the wholesalers and retailers in such industry and to the ultimate purchasing public, to wit: the manufacturers of such liquors by the process of original and continuous distillation from mash, wort, or wash, through continuous closed pipes and vessels until the manufacture thereof is completed.

PAR. 3. The attorney for the Commission called a large number of witnesses, ten being members of the trade and twenty-two being members of the purchasing public, and with few exceptions the Commission's witnesses testified that the word "distillers," or similar words such as "distilling," "distilleries," etc., indicate the initial distilling process of producing spirituous and alcoholic liquors from fermented grain mash, etc., the manufacturer thereof or the place of distillation of spirituous and alcoholic liquors. The greater number of these witnesses testified that the use of such words would induce them or did induce them to purchase the products of the concern using such words in their corporate name or on the label of the bottle containing the product, in the belief that a distiller's product would be more uniform and up to certain specifications, and a manufacturer's name should mean something. They testified that they preferred buying in as direct a manner as is practical and considered distillers as having more responsibility than a rectifier or bottler of spirituous liquors. It was testified that the use of the word "Distillers" in the corporate name of the respondent would indicate to them that the respondent was the actual distiller of the product and they would give preference in purchasing a product which bore a label containing such corporate name in competition with a product bearing a label which did not contain the word "distiller" or any word indicating a distilling process in its corporate name or otherwise.

Findings

The Commission finds that there is a substantial portion of the purchasing public which prefers to buy spirituous liquors prepared and bottled by distillers.

PAR. 4. In the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid, by the use of the word "Distillers" in its corporate name, printed on its stationery and advertising, and on the labels attached to the bottles in which it sold and shipped its said products, and in various other ways, respondent represented to its customers and furnished them with the means of representing to their vendees, both retailers and the ultimate consuming public, that respondent was a distiller, and that the whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages therein contained were by it manufactured through the process of distillation from mash, wort, or wash, as aforesaid, when, as a matter of fact, respondent was not a distiller, does not now and never did distill the said whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages by it so bottled, labeled, sold, and transported, and merely by the use of a still operated by it as aforesaid in the rectification of alcoholic spirits by redistillation over juniper berries and other aromatics, did not distill the whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages by it so bottled, labeled, sold, and transported in the sense in which the word "distilled" is commonly accepted and understood by those engaged in the liquor trade and by the public. Respondent does not now and never did own, operate, or control any place or places where such beverages were manufactured by the process of distillation from mash, wort, or wash.

PAR. 5. There were among the competitors of respondent engaged in the sale of spirituous beverages, as mentioned in paragraph 1 hereof, corporations, firms, partnerships, and individuals who manufactured and distilled from mash, wort, or wash, as aforesaid, whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages sold by them and who truthfully used the words "distillery," "distilleries," "distillers," or "distilling" as a part of their corporate or trade names and on their stationery and advertising, and on the labels of the bottles in which they sold and shipped such products. There were also among such competitors, corporations, firms, partnerships, and individuals engaged in the business of purchasing, rectifying, blending, bottling, and selling whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages, who did not use the words "distillery," "distilleries," "distilling," or "distillers" as a part of their corporate or trade names, nor on their stationery or advertising, nor on the labels attached to the bottles in which they sold and shipped their said products.

PAR. 6. Representation by respondent, as set forth in paragraph 3 hereof, was calculated to and had the capacity and tendency to and did mislead and deceive dealers and the purchasing public into the beliefs that respondent was a distiller and that the whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages sold by the respondent were manufactured and distilled by it from mash, wort, or wash, as aforesaid, and was calculated to and had the capacity and tendency to and did induce dealers and the purchasing public, in such beliefs, to purchase the whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages bottled and sold by the respondent, thereby diverting trade to respondent from its competitors who did not by their corporate or trade names or in any other manner misrepresent that they were manufacturers by distillation from mash, wort, or wash, of such products, and thereby respondent did substantial injury to substantial competition in interstate commerce.

About July 1, 1935, respondent went into the hands of receivers and its assets were sold, with the exception of a building in which had been installed its gin still. It has retained its corporate existence, and the Commission can have no assurance that in the absence of a prohibitive order, respondent may not at some future time renew the violations of law charged herein.

PAR. 7. Because of existing regulations, and regulations proposed under the Federal Alcohol Administration Act, approved August 29,

539

Order

1935 (49 Stat. 977), and which regulations became effective as of August 15, 1936, providing that rectifiers who redistill purchased alcohol over juniper berries and other aromatics may label such resulting product "distilled gin," and requiring that the labels state who distilled it, the Commission has excepted gins produced by respondent by redistillation of alcohol over juniper berries and other aromatics from the prohibitions of its order.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of the said respondent, under the conditions and circumstances hereinbefore described, were to the prejudice of the public and respondent's competitors, and were unfair methods of competition in interstate commerce, constituting a violation of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled, "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

This proceeding having been heard by the Federal Trade Commission upon the complaint of the Commission, the answer of respondent, testimony and other evidence taken before John L. Hornor, an examiner of the Commission theretofore duly designated by it, in support of the allegations of said complaint, and no testimony being offered in opposition thereto, brief filed herein by PGad B. Morehouse, counsel for the Commission (brief of counsel for respondent and oral argument having been waived), and the Commission having made its findings as to the facts and its conclusion that said respondent has violated the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled, "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

It is ordered, That the respondent, Kelly Brewing & Malting Company, a corporation, trading under the name and style Rosecrest Distillers, its officers, representatives, agents, and employees, in connection with the sale, offering for sale, and distribution in interstate commerce or in the District of Columbia, of whiskies, gins, and all other spirituous beverages, except gins produced by it through a process of rectification whereby alcohol purchased but not produced by respondent is redistilled over juniper berries and other aromatics, do cease and desist from:

way by word or words of like import, (a) That it is a distiller of whiskies, gins, or any other spirituous beverages; (b) That the said whiskies, gins, or other spirituous beverages were by it manufactured through the process of distillation; or (c) That it owns, operates, or controls a place or places where any such products are by it manufactured by a process of original and continuous distillation from mash, wort, or wash, through continuous closed pipes and vessels until the manufacture thereof is completed, unless and until respondent shall actually own, operate, or control such a place or places.

It is further ordered, That the said respondent, within 60 days from and after the date of the service upon it of this order, shall file with the Commission a report or reports in writing, setting forth in detail the manner and form in which it is complying and has complied with the order to cease and desist hereinabove set forth.

Devine, Kent & Devine, of Detroit, Mich., for respondent.

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that Federal Distillers Corporation, a corporation, hereinafter referred to as respondent, has been and is using unfair methods of competition in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in said act, and it appearing to the said Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint, stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent is a corporation organized, existing, and doing business under the laws of the State of Michigan, with its office and principal place of business in the city of Detroit, in said State. It is now, and for more than one year last past has been, engaged in the business of purchasing, rectifying, blending, and bottling whiskies, gins, and other alcoholic beverages in a rectifying plant, and in the sale thereof in constant course of trade and commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia. In the course and conduct of its said business it causes its said products when sold to be transported from its place of business aforesaid into and through various States of the United States to the purchasers thereof, consisting of wholesalers and retailers, located in other States of the United States and the District of Columbia. In the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid, respondent is now, and for more than one year last past has been, in substantial competition with other corporations and with individuals, partnerships, and firms engaged in the manufacture by true distillation of whiskies, gins, and other alcoholic beverages from mash, wort, or wash, and in the sale thereof in trade and commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia; and in the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid respondent is, and for more than one year last past has been, in substantial competition with other corporations and with individuals, firms, and partnerships engaged in the business of purchasing, rectifying, blending, and bottling whiskies, gins, and other alcoholic beverages in rectifying plants and in the sale thereof in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 2. Upon the premises of respondent's place of business aforesaid there is a still for use in the production of gins by a process of rectification whereby alcohol, purchased but not produced by respondent, is redistilled over juniper berries and other aromatics. Such rectification of alcoholic spirits does not make or constitute respondent a distillery or a distiller, as defined by Section 3247 of the Revised Statutes regulating Internal Revenue, nor as commonly understood by the public and the liquor industry. For a long period of time the word "distillers" when used in connection with the liquor industry and with the products thereof has had and still has a definite significance and meaning to the minds of wholesalers and retailers in such industry and to the ultimate purchasing public, to wit: those who manufacture alcoholic liquors by an original and continuous distillation from mash, wort or wash, through continuous closed pipes and vessels until the manufacture thereof is complete, and a substantial portion of the purchasing public prefers to buy spirituous liquors bottled and prepared by distillers.

PAR. 3. In the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid by the use of the word "Distillers" in its corporate name, printed on its stationery, catalogs, advertising, and on the labels attached to the bottles in which it sells and ships its said products, and in various other ways, respondent represents to its customers and furnishes them with the means of representing to their vendees, both retailers and the ultimate consuming public, that it is a distiller and that the said whiskies, gins, and other alcoholic beverages therein contained were by it manufactured through the process of distillation from mash, wort, or wash, when, as a matter of fact, respondent is not a distiller, does not distill the said whiskies, gins, and other alcoholic beverages by it so bottled, labeled, sold, and transported, and merely by the use of a still operated by it as aforesaid in the rectification of alcoholic spirits by redistillation over juniper berries and other aromatics, does not distill the whiskies, gins, and other alcoholic beverages by it so bottled, labeled, sold, and transported in the sense in which the word "distillers" is commonly accepted and understood by those engaged in the liquor trade and the public. Respondent does not own, operate, or control any place or places where alcoholic beverages are manufactured by a process of original and continuous distillation from mash, wort, or wash.

PAR. 4. There are among the competitors of respondent engaged in the sale of spirituous beverages as mentioned in paragraph 1 hereof corporations, firms, partnerships, and individuals who manufacture and distill from mash, wort, or wash, whiskies, gins, and other alcoholic beverages sold by them and who truthfully use the words "distillery," "distilleries," "distillers," or "distilling" as a part of their corporate or trade names and on their stationery, catalogs, advertising, and on the labels of the bottles in which they sell and ship such products. There are also among such competitors corporations, firms, partnerships, and individuals engaged in the business of purchasing, rectifying, blending, bottling, and selling whiskies, gins, and other alcoholic beverages who do not use the words "distillery," "distilleries," "distilling," or "distillers" as a part of their corporate or trade names, nor on their stationery, catalogs, advertising, nor on the labels attached to the bottles in which they sell and ship their said products.

PAR. 5. The representations by respondent, as set forth in paragraph 3 hereof, are calculated to and have a capacity and tendency to and do mislead and deceive dealers and the purchasing public into the beliefs that respondent is a distiller and that the whiskies, gins, and other alcoholic beverages sold by respondent are manufactured or distilled by it from mash, wort, or wash by one continuous process and are calculated to and have the capacity and tendency to and do induce dealers and the purchasing public, acting in such beliefs, to purchase the whiskies, gins, and other alcoholic beverages rectified and bottled by the respondent, thereby diverting trade to respondent from its competitors who do not by their corporate or trade name or in any other manner misrepresent that they are distillers, and thereby respondent does substantial injury to substantial competition in interstate commerce.

PAR. 6. The acts and things above alleged to have been done and the false representations alleged to have been made by respondent are to the prejudice of the public and the competitors of respondent and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914.

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

This proceeding having come on to be heard by the Federal Trade Commission upon the complaint hereinbefore issued and served upon Federal Distillers Corporation, respondent herein, and the said respondent's written answer made thereto, waiving the taking of testimony, findings as to the facts, filing of briefs, oral argument and all other intervening procedure, and consenting that an order shall issue herein for it to cease and desist from methods of competition charged in the complaint, and the Commission being fully advised in the premises, having thereupon concluded that respondent has violated Section 5 of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled, "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

It is now ordered, That the respondent, Federal Distillers Corporation, its officers, representatives, agents, and employees, in connection with the sale, offering for sale and distribution in interstate commerce and in the District of Columbia of whiskies, gins, and all other alcoholic beverages, except gins by it produced through a process of rectification whereby alcohol purchased but not produced by respondent is redistilled over juniper berries and other aromatics, do cease and desist from:

Representing through the use of the word "Distillers," in its corporate name, on its stationery, advertising, or on the labels attached to the bottles in which it sells and ships its said products, or in any other way by word or words of like import, that (a) it is a distiller of whiskies, gins, and other alcoholic beverages; or (b) the said whiskies, gins, and other alcoholic beverages were by it manufactured through the process of distillation; or (c) it owns, operates, or controls a place or places where such beverages are manufactured by the process of distillation, unless and until the said respondent shall own, operate, or control a place or places where such whiskies, gins, and other alcoholic beverages are by it manufactured through a process of original and continuous distillation from mash, wort, or wash, through continuous closed pipes and vessels until the manufacture thereof is completed.

It is further ordered, That the said respondent within 60 days from and after the date of the service upon it of this order, shall file with the Commission a report or reports in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which it is complying and has complied with the order to cease and desist hereinabove set forth. .

Docket 2410. Complaint, May 24, 1935—Decision, Jan. 28, 1937

Where a corporation engaged as rectifier and wholesaler of spirituous liquors, in purchasing, rectifying, blending, and bottling whiskies, gins, and other such liquors, and in the making of gin, with a still which it used therefor, by redistillation of purchased alcohol, not produced by it, over juniper berries and other aromatics, and in selling its aforesaid various products to wholesalers and retailers in other States and in the District of Columbia, in substantial competition with those engaged in the manufacture by distillation of whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages and in selling same in trade and commerce among the various States and in said District, and with those engaged in purchasing, rectifying, blending, and bottling such various beverages, and similarly selling same, and including among said competitors those who, as manufacturers and distillers of whiskies, gins, and other such beverages sold by them by process of original and continuous distillation from mash, wort, or wash, through continuous closed pipes and vessels until manufacture is complete, truthfully use words "distillery," "distilleries," "distillers," or "distilling" as a part of their corporate or trade names and on their stationery and advertising and on the labels of the bottles in which they sell and ship their said products, and those who, engaged in purchasing, rectifying, blending, bottling, and selling such various products, do not use aforesaid words as above set forth—

Represented, through use of word "Distillers" in its corporate name, printed on its stationery and advertising and on the labels attached to the bottles in which it sold and shipped its said products, and in various other ways to its customers, and furnished same with the means of representing to their vendees, both retailers and ultimate consuming public, that it was a distiller and that the whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages contained in such bottles were by it made through process of distillation as aforesaid, notwithstanding fact it did not thus distill said various beverages, thus bottled, labeled, sold, and transported by it, through aforesaid process of original and continuous distillation as above set forth, as long definitely understood from word "distiller" used in connection with liquor industry and products thereof in the trade and by the ultimate purchasing public, and did not own, operate, or control any place or places where such beverages were made by process of distillation from mash, wort, or wash, and was not a distiller, for the purchase of the bottled liquors of which there is a preference on the part of a substantial portion of the purchasing public;

With effect of misleading and deceiving dealers and purchasing public into the belief that it was a distiller and that the whiskies, gins, and other spirituous

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent is a corporation organized, existing, and doing business under the laws of the State of New Jersey, with its office and principal place of business in the city of Newark, in said State. It is now, and for more than one year last past has been, engaged in the business of a rectifier and wholesaler of liquors, purchasing, retifying, blending, and bottling whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages and selling the same at wholesale in constant course of trade and commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia. ness as aforesaid respondent is now, and for more than one year last past has been, in substantial competition with other corporations and with individuals, partnerships, and firms engaged in the manufacture by distillation of whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages and in the sale thereof in trade and commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia; and in the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid respondent is, and for more than one year last past has been, in substantial competition with other corporations, and with individuals, firms, and partnerships engaged in the business of purchasing, rectifying, blending, and bottling whiskies, gins, and other spiritous beverages and in the sale thereof in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid respondent has, upon its premises, a still which it uses in the production of gin by a process of rectification whereby alcohol, purchased but not produced by respondent, is redistilled over juniper berries and other aromatics. Such rectification of alcoholic spirits does not make or constitute respondent a distiller, as defined by Section 3247 of the Revised Statutes regulating Internal Revenue, nor as commonly understood by the public and the liquor industry. For a long period of time the word "distillers" when used in connection with the liquor industry and with the products thereof has had and still has a definite significance and meaning to the minds of wholesalers and retailers in such industry and to the ultimate purchasing public, to wit, the manufacturers of such liquors by the process of original and continuous distillation from mash, wort, or wash, through continuous closed pipes and vessels until the manufacture thereof is complete, and a substantial portion of the purchasing public prefers to buy spirituous liquors bottled by the actual distillers and manufacturers thereof.

PAR. 3. In the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid, by the use of the word "Distillers" in its corporate name, printed on its stationery and on the labels attached to the bottles in which it sells and ships its said products, and in various other ways, respondent represents to its customers and furnishes them with the means of representing to their vendees, both retailers and the ultimate consuming public, that the whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages therein contained were by its manufactured through the process of distillation from mash, wort, or mash, as aforesaid, when, as a matter of fact respondent is not a distiller, does not distill the said whiskies, gins, or other spirituous beverages by it so bottled, labeled, sold, and transported, and does not own, operate, or control any place or places where such beverages are manufactured by the process of distillation from mash, wort, or wash.

PAR. 4. There are among the competitors of respondent engaged in the sale of spirituous beverages as mentioned in paragraph 1 hereof corporations, firms, partnerships, and individuals who manufacture and distill from mash, wort, or wash, as aforesaid, whiskies, gins and other spirituous beverages sold by them and who truthfully use the words "distillery," "distilleries," "distillers," or "distilling" as a part of their corporate or trade names and on their stationery, and on the labels of the bottles in which they sell and ship such products. There are also among such competitors corporations, firms, partnerships, and individuals engaged in the business of purchasing, rectifying, blending, and bottling whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages who do not use the words "distillery," "distilleries," "distilling," or "distillers" as a part of their corporate or trade names, nor on their stationery, nor on the labels attached to the bottles in which they sell and ship their said products.

PAR. 5. Representation by respondent, as set forth in paragraph 3 hereof, is calculated to and has the capacity and tendency to and does mislead and deceive dealers and the purchasing public into the belief that the whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages sold by the respondent are manufactured and distilled by it from mash, wort, or wash, as aforesaid, and is calculated to and has the capacity and tendency to and does induce dealers and the purchasing public, acting in such belief, to purchase the whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages bottled and sold by the respondent, thereby diverting trade to respondent from its competitors who do not by their corporate or trade name or in any other manner misrepresent that they are manufacturers by distillation from mash, wort, or wash of whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages, and thereby respondent does substantial injury to substantial competition in interstate commerce.

office and principal place of business in the city of Newark, in said State. It is now, and for more than one year last past has been, engaged in the business of a rectifier and wholesaler of liquors, purchasing, rectifying, blending, and bottling whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages and selling the same at wholesale in constant course of trade and commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia. In the course and conduct of its said business, it causes its said products when sold to be transported from its place of business aforesaid into and through various States of the United States to the purchasers thereof, consisting of wholesalers and retailers, some located within the State of New Jersey and some located in other States of the United States and the District of Columbia. In the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid respondent is now, and for more than one year last past has been, in substantial competition with other corporations and with individuals, partnerships, and firms engaged in the manufacture by distillation of whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages and in the sale thereof in trade and commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia; and in the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid respondent is, and for more than one year last past has been, in substantial competition with other corporations, and with individuals, firms, and partnerships engaged in the business of purchasing, rectifying, blending, and bottling whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages and in the sale thereof in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PARS. 2, 3, 4, and 5. As grounds for these paragraphs of this complaint, the Federal Trade Commission relies upon the matters and things set out in paragraphs 2, 3, 4, and 5 of count 1 of this complaint to the same extent as though the several allegations thereof were set out at length and in separate paragraphs herein, and the said paragraphs 2, 3, 4, and 5 of count 1 of this complaint are incorporated herein by reference and adopted as the allegations of paragraphs 2, 3, 4, and 5, respectively, of this count, and are hereby charged as fully and as completely as though the several averments of the said paragraphs of count 1 were separately set out and repeated verbatim.

PAR. 6. Under and pursuant to Title I of the National Industrial Recovery Act, approved June 16, 1933 (48 Stat. 195 C. 90), the President of the United States, by Executive Order No. 6182, of June 26, 1933, as supplemented by Executive Order No. 6207, of July 21, 1933, and Executive Order No. 6345, of October 20, 1933, delegated to H. A. Wallace as Secretary of Agriculture certain of the powers vested in the President of the United States by the aforesaid act.

Under and pursuant to the delegation of such powers, the said Secretary of Agriculture pursuant to Section 3 (d) of the act and Executive orders under the act, upon his own motion presented a Code of Fair Competition for the Distilled Spirits Rectifying Industry after due notice and opportunity for hearing in connection therewith had been afforded interested parties, including respondent, in accordance with Title I of the National Industrial Recovery Act and applicable regulations issued thereunder, to the President of the United States who approved the same on the 9th day of December 1933, thereby constituting the said code a Code of Fair Competition within the meaning of the said National Industrial Recovery Act, for the regulation of the aforesaid industry.

In his written report to the President, the said Secretary of Agriculture made, among others, the following findings with respect to the said Code in the following words, to wit:

That said Code will tend to effectuate the declared policy of Title I of the National Industrial Recovery Act as set forth in Section 1 of said Act in that the terms and provisions of such Code tend: (a) to remove obstructions to the free flow of foreign commerce, which tend to diminish the amount thereof; (b) to provide for the general welfare by promoting the organization of industry for the purposes of cooperative action among trade groups; (c) to eliminate unfair competitive practices; (d) to promote the fullest possible utilization of the present productive capacity of industries; (e) to avoid undue restriction of production (except as may be temporarily required); (f) to increase the consumption of industrial and agricultural products by increasing purchasing power; and (g) otherwise to rehabilitate industry.

By his approval of the said Code on December 9, 1933, the President of the United States, pursuant to the authority vested in him by Title I of the National Industrial Recovery Act aforesaid, made and issued his certain written Executive Order, wherein he adopted and approved the report, recommendations and findings of the said Secretary of Agriculture, and ordered that the said Code of Fair Competition be, and the same thereby was approved, and by virtue of the National Industrial Recovery Act aforesaid, the following provision of Article V of said Code became and still is one of the standards of fair competition for the Distilled Spirits Rectifying Industry and is binding upon every member of said Industry and this respondent;

The following practices constitute unfair methods of competition and shall not be engaged in by any member of the industry:

Section 1. False Advertising—To publish or disseminate in any manner any false advertisement of any rectified product. Any advertisement shall be deemed to be false if it is untrue in any particular, or if directly or by ambiguity, omission or inference it tends to create a misleading impression.

Findings

24 F. T. C.

PAR. 7. The use by respondent of the word "Distillers" in its corporate name, printed upon its stationery and on the labels attached to the bottles in which it sells and ships such products and in various other ways, constitutes false advertising within the meaning of the aforesaid provisions of said Article V and tends to and does create the misleading impression that respondent is engaged in the business of distilling spirits from mash, wort, or wash, that the spirituous beverages by it so sold and transported have been prepared and bottled by the original distillers thereof, and that the whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages sold by respondent have been manufactured and distilled by it from mash, wort, or wash as aforesaid, all contrary to the provisions of Section 1, Article V, of the Code aforesaid.

PAR. 8. The above alleged methods, acts, and practices of the respondent are and have been in violation of the standard of fair competition for the Distilled Spirits Rectifying Industry of the United States. Such violation of such standard in the aforesaid transactions in interstate commerce and other transactions which affect interstate commerce in the manner set forth in paragraph 5 of count 1 hereof, are in violation of Section 3 of Title I of the National Industrial Recovery Act and they are unfair methods of competition in commerce within the meaning of the Federal Trade Commission Act as amended.

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled, "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, on May 24, 1935, issued and served its complaint in this proceeding upon respondent, Reo Distillers, Inc., charging it with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce, in violation of the provisions of said act. After the issuance of said complaint and the filing of respondent's answer thereto, testimony and other evidence in support of the allegations of said complaint were introduced by PGad B. Morehouse, attorney for the Commission, before John L. Hornor, an examiner of the Commission theretofore duly designated by it, and no testimony was offered by respondent in opposition to the allegations of the complaint; and said testimony and other evidence were duly recorded and filed in the office of the Commission. Thereafter the proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on the said complaint the answer thereto, testimony and other evidence, briefs in support of the complaint (brief in opposition thereto and oral arguments of counsel having been waived); and the Commission having duly considered the same, and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public, and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent is a corporation, organized and existing under the laws of the State of New Jersey, with its office and principal place of business at 277 Jellif Avenue in the city of Newark in said State, where it engaged in the business of a rectifier and wholesaler of spirituous liquors from early in the year 1934 until about August 14, 1935. Originally incorporated, prior to the repeal of prohibition, under the name "Reo Chemical Company," it changed to its present corporate name by amendment of its charter, in December 1933.

Its business consisted of purchasing, rectifying, blending, and bottling whiskies, gins, and other spirituous liquors and in the sale thereof in constant course of trade and commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia, doing a business amounting to approximately $800,000 in sales annually. It had the kind of plant and equipment ordinarily incident to that type of business, located in a three-story brick building. The first floor consisted of offices, shipping room, and receiving room; the second floor was the bottling department; and on the third floor was located the mixing room, compounding room, receiving room, laboratory, and a gin still, which still will be hereinafter more fully described.

In the course and conduct of its said business, it caused its said products, when sold, to be transported from its place of business as aforesaid into and through various States of the United States to the purchasers thereof, consisting of wholesalers and retailers located in other States of the United States and the District of Columbia. In the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid, respondent was in substantial competition with other corporations and with individuals, partnerships, and firms engaged in the manufacture by distillation of whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages and in the sale thereof in trade and commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia; and in the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid, respondent was in substantial competition with other corporations, and with individuals, firms, and partnerships engaged in the business of purchasing, rectifying, blending, and bottling whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages and in the sale thereof in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid, respondent had upon its said premises a still which it used in the production of gin by a process of rectification, whereby alcohol purchased but not produced by respondent was redistilled over juniper berries and other aromatics. Such rectification of alcoholic spirits does not make or constitute respondent a distiller as defined by Section 3247 of the Revised Statutes regulating Internal Revenue, nor as commonly understood by the public or the liquor industry. For a long period of time the word "distiller," when used in connection with the liquor industry and the products thereof, has had and still has a definite significance and meaning to the minds of the wholesalers and retailers in such industry and to the ultimate purchasing public, to wit: the manufacturers of such liquors by the process of original and continuous distillation from mash, wort, or wash, through continuous closed pipes and vessels until the manufacture thereof is completed.

PAR. 3. The attorney for the Commission called a large number of witnesses, ten being members of the trade and twenty-two being members of the purchasing public, and with few exceptions the Commission's witnesses testified that the word "distillers," or similar words such as "distilling," "distilleries," etc., indicate the initial distilling process of producing spirituous and alcoholic liquors from fermented grain mash, etc., the manufacturer thereof or the place of distillation of spirituous and alcoholic liquors. The greater number of these witnesses testified that the use of such words would induce them or did induce them to purchase the products of the concern using such words in their corporate name or on the label of the bottle containing the product, in the belief that a distiller's product would be more uniform and up to certain specifications, and a manufacturer's name should mean something. They testified that they preferred buying in as direct a manner as is practical and considered distillers as having more responsibility than a rectifier or bottler of spirituous liquors. It was testified that the use of the word "Distillers" in the corporate name of the respondent would indicate to them that the respondent was the actual distiller of the product and they would give preference in purchasing a product which bore a label containing such corporate name in competition with a product bearing a label which did not contain the word "distiller" or any word indicating a distilling process in its corporate name or otherwise.

The Commission finds that there is a substantial portion of the purchasing public which prefers to buy spirituous liquors prepared and bottled by distillers.

PAR. 4. In the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid, by the use of the word "Distillers" in its corporate name, printed on its stationery and advertising, and on the labels attached to the bottles in which it sold and shipped its said products, and in various other ways, respondent represented to its customers and furnished them with the means of representing to their vendees, both retailers and the ultimate consuming public, that respondent was a distiller and that the whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages therein contained were by it manufactured through the process of distillation from mash, wort, or wash, as aforesaid, when, as a matter of fact, respondent was not a distiller, does not now and never did distill the said whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages by it so bottled, labeled, sold and transported, and merely by the use of a still operated by it as aforesaid in the rectification of alcoholic spirits by redistillation over juniper berries and other aromatics did not distill the whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages by it so bottled, labeled, sold, and transported in the sense in which the word "distilled" is commonly accepted and understood by those engaged in the liquor trade and by the public. Respondent does not now and never did own, operate or control any place or places where such beverages were manufactured by the process of distillation from mash, wort, or wash.

PAR. 5. There were among the competitors of respondent engaged in the sale of spirituous beverages, as mentioned in paragraph 1 hereof, corporations, firms, partnerships and individuals who manufactured and distilled from mash, wort, or wash, as aforesaid, whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages sold by them and who truthfully used the words "distillery," "distilleries," "distillers," or "distilling" as a part of their corporate or trade names and on their stationery and advertising, and on the labels of the bottles in which they sold and shipped such products. There were also among such competitors, corporations, firms, partnerships, and individuals engaged in the business of purchasing, rectifying, blending, bottling, and selling whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages, who did not use the words "distillery," "distilleries," "distilling," or "distillers," as a part of their corporate or trade names, nor on their stationery or advertising, nor on the labels attached to the bottles in which they sold and shipped their said products.

PAR. 6. Representation by respondent, as set forth in paragraph 3 hereof, was calculated to and had the capacity and tendency to and did mislead and deceive dealers and the purchasing public into the beliefs that respondent was a distiller and that the whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages sold by the respondent were manufactured and distilled by it from mash, wort, or wash, as aforesaid, and was calculated to and had the capacity and tendency to and did induce dealers and the purchasing public in such beliefs, to purchase the whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages bottled and sold by the respondent, thereby diverting trade to respondent from its competitors who did not by their corporate or trade names or in any other manner misrepresent that they were manufacturers by distillation from mash, wort, or wash, of such products, and thereby respondent did substantial injury to substantial competition in interstate commerce.

On August 14, 1935, respondent's complete equipment was seized and confiscated by the United States on an income tax levy, and sold at auction in October 1935. On May 5, 1936, two of the respondent's corporate officers were sentenced by a Federal Court to terms in the United States Northeastern Penitentiary at Lewisburg, Pa., and respondent has not engaged in this business since the aforesaid seizure. Respondent's corporate charter, however, is still existent, and the Commission can have no assurance that in the absence of a prohibitive order this respondent may not at some future time renew the violations of law herein charged.

PAR. 7. The complaint herein was issued May 24, 1935 (just prior to the decision of the United States Supreme Court in the case of A. L. A. Schechter Poultry Corporation, et al., v. U. S., 295 U. S. 495), and was in two counts. Count 2 charged violation of Section 3 of Title I of the National Industrial Recovery Act, which was invalidated by the aforesaid decision. For that reason the Commission is dismissing this complaint as to count 2 thereof.

PAR. 8. Because of regulations issued under the Federal Alcohol Administration Act approved August 29, 1935 (49 Stat. 977), which regulations became effective as of August 15, 1936, providing that rectifiers who redistill purchased alcohol over juniper berries and other aromatics may label such resulting product "distilled gin," and requiring that the labels state who distilled it, the Commission has excepted gins produced by respondent by redistillation of alcohol over juniper berries and other aromatics from the prohibitions of its order.

Order

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of the said respondent, under the conditions and circumstances hereinbefore described, were to the prejudice of the public and respondent's competitors, and were unfair methods of competition in interstate commerce, constituting a violation of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

This proceeding having been heard by the Federal Trade Commission upon the complaint of the Commission, the answer of respondent, testimony and other evidence taken before John L. Hornor, an examiner of the Commission theretofore duly designated by it, in support of the allegations of said complaint—no testimony having been offered in opposition thereto—brief filed herein by PGad B. Morehouse, counsel for the Commission (counsel for respondent having failed to file brief or request oral argument); and the Commission having made its findings as to the facts and its conclusion that said respondent has violated the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

It is ordered, That the respondent, Reo Distillers, Inc., its officers, representatives, agents, and employees, in connection with the sale, offering for sale, and distribution in interstate commerce or in the District of Columbia, of whiskies, gins, and all other spirituous beverages, except gins produced by it through a process of rectification whereby alcohol purchased but not produced by respondent is redistilled over juniper berries and other aromatics, do cease and desist from:

Representing, through the use of the word "Distillers" in its corporate name, on its stationery, advertising or on the labels attached to the bottles in which it sells and ships said products, or in any other way by word or words of like import, (a) That it is a distiller of whiskies, gins, or any other spirituous beverages; (b) that the said whiskies, gins, or other spirituous beverages were by it manufactured through the process of distillation; or (c) that it owns, operates, or controls a place or places where any such products are by it manufactured by a process of original and continuous distillation from mash, wort, or wash, through continuous closed pipes and vessels until the manufacture thereof is completed, unless and until respondent shall actually own, operate, or control such a place or places.

It is further ordered, That the said complaint be, and the same hereby is, dismissed as to count 2 thereof.

It is further ordered, That the said respondent, within 60 days from and after the date of the service upon it of this order, shall file with the Commission a report or reports in writing, setting forth in detail the manner and form in which it is complying and has complied with the order to cease and desist hereinabove set forth.

OSTRUCON DISTILLED PRODUCTS COMPANY, INC.

COMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION
OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 26, 1914

Docket 2444. Complaint, June 19, 1935—Decision, Jan. 28, 1937

Where a corporation engaged in purchasing, rectifying, blending, and bottling whiskies, gins, and other spirituous liquors, and in the making of gin with a still which it used therefor by redistillation of purchased alcohol, not produced by it, over juniper berries and other aromatics, and in selling its aforesaid various products to wholesalers and retailers in other States and in the District of Columbia, in substantial competition with those engaged in the manufacture by true distillation of whiskies, gins, and other spirituous liquors from mash, wort, or wash, and in selling same in trade and commerce among the various States and in said District, and with those engaged in purchasing, rectifying, blending, and bottling such various liquors and in similarly selling same, and including among said competitors those who, as manufacturers and distillers of whiskies, gins, and other spirituous liquors sold by them from mash, wort, or wash, truthfully use words "distillery," "distilleries," "distillers," "distilling" or "distilled products" as a part of their corporate or trade names, on their stationery, catalogs, advertising, and labels of the bottles in which they sell and ship their said products, and those who, engaged in purchasing, rectifying, blending, bottling, and selling such various products, do not use aforesaid words as above set forth, nor misrepresent themselves as distillers on their letterheads or invoices used to solicit, obtain and retain customers for sale of said products—

Represented, through use of words "Distilled Products" in its corporate name, printed on its stationery, catalogs, advertising, and labels attached to the bottles in which it sold and shipped its said products, and through express representation upon its letterheads and invoices used to solicit, obtain, and retain customers, and in various other ways, to its customers and furnished same with means of representing to their vendees, both retailers and ultimate consuming public, that it was a distiller and that the whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages contained in such bottles were by it made through process of distillation from mash, wort, or wash, notwithstanding fact it did not distill the said whiskies, gins, and other spirituous liquors, thus bottled, labeled, sold, and transported by it, by process of original distillation from mash, wort, or wash through continuous closed pipes and vessels until manufacture is complete, as long definitely understood from word "distilled" in connection with liquor industry and products thereof, in the trade and by the ultimate purchasing public, and did not own, operate, or control any place or places where such liquors are made by aforesaid process, and was not a distiller, for the purchase of the bottled liquors of which there is a preference on the part of a substantial portion of the purchasing public;

With effect of misleading and deceiving dealers and purchasing public into the belief that it was a distiller and that the whiskies, gins, and other spirituous liquors sold by it were by it made and distilled from mash, wort, or wash

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that Ostrucon Distilled Products Co. Inc., hereinafter referred to as respondent, has been and is using unfair methods of competition in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in said act, and it appearing to the said Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint, stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent is a corporation organized, existing and doing business under the laws of the State of New York, with its office and principal place of business in the city of New York, in said State. It is now, and for more than one year last past has been, engaged in the business of purchasing, rectifying, blending, and bottling whiskies, gins, and other spirituous liquors and in the sale thereof in constant course of trade and commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia. In the course and conduct of its said business it causes its said products when sold to be transported from its place of business aforesaid into and through various States of the United States to the purchasers thereof, consisting of wholesalers and retailers, located in other States of the United States and the District of Columbia. In the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid, respondent is now, and for more than one year last past has been, in substantial competition with other corporations and with individuals, partnerships, and firms engaged in the manufacture by true distillation of whiskies, gins, and other spirituous liquors from mash, wort, or wash, and in the sale thereof in trade and commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia; and in the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid respondent is, and for more than one year last past has been, in substantial competition with other corporations and with individuals, firms, and partnerships engaged in the business of purchasing, rectifying, blending, and bottling whiskies, gins, and other spirituous liquors and in the sale thereof in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 2. Upon the premises of respondent's place of business aforesaid there is a still for use in the production of gins by a process of rectification whereby alcohol, purchased but not produced by respondent, is redistilled over juniper berries and other aromatics. Such rectification of alcoholic spirits does not make or constitute respondent a distillery or a distiller, as defined by Section 3247 of the Revised Statutes regulating Internal Revenue, nor as commonly understood by the public and the liquor industry. For a long period of time the word "distilled" when used in connection with the liquor industry and with the products thereof has had and still has a definite significance and meaning to the minds of wholesalers and retailers in such industry and to the ultimate purchasing public, to wit, spirituous liquors produced by a process of original distillation from mash, wort, or wash, through continuous closed pipes and vessels until the manufacture thereof is complete, and a substantial portion of the purchasing public prefers to buy spirituous liquors bottled and prepared by distillers.

PAR. 3. In the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid by the use of the words "Distilled Products" in its corporate name, printed on its stationery, catalogs, advertising, and labels attached to the bottles in which it sells and ships its said products, together with the express representation upon its letterheads and invoices used to solicit, obtain and retain customers for the sale of its said products, and in various other ways, respondent represents to its customers and furnishes them with the means of representing to their vendees, both retailers and the ultimate consuming public, that it is a distiller and that the said whiskies, gins, and other spirituous liquors therein contained were by it manufactured through the process of distillation from mash, wort, or wash, when, as a matter of fact, respondent is not a distiller, does not distill the said whiskies, gins, and other spirituous liquors by it so bottled, labeled, sold, and transported, and merely by the use of a still operated by it as aforesaid in the rectification of alcoholic spirits by redistillation over juniper berries and other aromatics, does not distill the whiskies, gins, and other spirituous liquors by it so bottled, labeled, sold, and transported in the sense in which the word "distillers" is commonly accepted and understood by those engaged in the liquor trade and the public. Respondent does not own, operate, or control any place or places where spirituous liquors are manufactured by a process of original and continuous distillation from mash, wort, or wash.

PAR. 4. There are among the competitors of respondent engaged in the sale of spirituous beverages, as mentioned in paragraph 1 hereof, corporations, firms, partnerships, and individuals who manufacture and distill from mash, wort, or wash, whiskies, gins, and other spirituous liquors sold by them and who truthfully use the word "distillery," "distilleries," "distillers," "distilling," or "distilled products" as a part of their corporate or trade names and on their stationery, catalogs, advertising, and on the labels of the bottles in which they sell and ship such products. There are also among such competitors corporations, firms, partnerships, and individuals engaged in the business of purchasing, rectifying, blending, bottling and selling whiskies, gins, and other spirituous liquors who do not use the words "distillery," "distilleries," "distilling," "distillers," or "distilled products" as a part of their corporate or trade names, nor on their stationery, catalogs, advertising, nor on the labels attached to the bottles in which they sell and ship their said products, and who do not misrepresent themselves to be distillers on their letterheads or invoices used to solicit, obtain and retain customers for the sale of said products.

PAR. 5. The representations by respondent, as set forth in paragraph 3 hereof, are calculated to and have a capacity and tendency to and do mislead and deceive dealers and the purchasing public into the beliefs that respondent is a distiller and that the whiskies, gins, and other spirituous liquors sold by respondent are manufactured or distilled by it from mash, wort, or wash by one continuous process and are calculated to and have the capacity and tendency to and do induce dealers and the purchasing public, acting in such beliefs, to purchase the whiskies, gins, and other spirituous liquors rectified and bottled by the respondent, thereby diverting trade to respondent from its competitors who do not by their corporate or trade name or in any other manner misrepresent that they are distillers, and thereby respondent does substantial injury to substantial competition in interstate commerce.

PAR. 6. The acts and things above alleged to have been done and the false representations alleged to have been made by respondent are to the prejudice of the public and the competitors of respondent and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914.

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission on June 19, 1935, issued and served its complaint in this proceeding upon respondent Ostrucon Distilled Products Company, Inc., charging it with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of the provisions of said act. After the issuance of said complaint and the filing of respondent's answer, the Commission by order entered herein, granted respondent's motion for permission to withdraw said answer and to substitute therefor an answer admitting all the material allegations of the complaint to be true and waiving the taking of further evidence and all other intervening procedure, which substitute answer was duly filed in the office of the Commission. Thereafter, this proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission the said complaint and the substitute answer, briefs and oral arguments of counsel having been waived, and the Commission having duly considered the same and being fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent is a corporation organized, existing, and doing business under the laws of the State of New York with its principal office and place of business at 601 West 26th Street in the city of New York in said State. It is now and for more than one year last past has been engaged under basic permit from the United States Government, designated as R-242, in the business of purchasing, rectifying, blending, and bottling whiskies, gins and other spirituous liquors and in the sale thereof in constant course of trade and commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia. In the course and conduct of its said business it causes its said products when sold to be transported from its place of business aforesaid into and through various States of the United States to the purchasers thereof, consisting of wholesalers and retailers, located in other States of the United States and the District of Columbia. In the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid, respondent is now, and for more than one year last past has been in substantial competition with other corporations and with individuals, partnerships, and firms engaged in the manufacture by true distillation of whiskies, gins, and other spirituous liquors from mash, wort, or wash, and in the sale thereof in trade and commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia; and in the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid respondent is, and for more than one year last past has been, in substantial competition with other corporations and with individuals, firms, and partnerships engaged in the business of purchasing, rectifying, blending, and bottling whiskies, gins, and other spirituous liquors and in the sale thereof in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 2. Upon the premises of respondent's place of business aforesaid there is a still for use in the production of gins by a process of rectification whereby alcohol, purchased but not produced by respondent is redistilled over juniper berries and other aromatics. Such rectification of alcoholic spirits does not make or constitute respondent a distillery or a distiller, as defined by Section 3247 of the Revised Statutes regulating Internal Revenue, nor as commonly understood by the public and the liquor industry. For a long period of time the word "distilled" when used in connection with the liquor industry and with the products thereof has had and still has a definite significance and meaning to the minds of wholesalers and retailers in such industry and to the ultimate purchasing public, to wit, spirituous liquors produced by a process of original distillation from mash, wort, or wash, through continuous closed pipes and vessels until the manufacture thereof is complete, and a substantial portion of the purchasing public prefers to buy spirituous liquors bottled and prepared by distillers.

PAR. 3. In the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid by the use of the words "Ostrucon Distilled Products" in its corporate name printed on its stationery, catalogs, advertising, and labels attached to the bottles in which it sells and ships its said products, together with the express representation upon its letterheads and invoices used to solicit, obtain, and retain customers for the sale of its said products, and in various other ways, respondent represents to its customers and furnishes them with the means of representing to their vendees, both retailers and the ultimate consuming public that it is a distiller and that the said whiskies, gins, and other spirituous liquors therein contained were by it manufactured through the process of distillation from mash, wort, or wash, when as a matter of fact, respondent is not a distiller, does not distill the said whiskies, gins, and other spirituous liquors by it so bottled, labeled, sold, and transported, and merely by the use of a still operated by it as aforesaid in the rectification of alcoholic spirits by redistillation over juniper berries and other aromatics, does not distill the whiskies, gins, and other spirituous liquors by it so bottled, labeled, sold, and transported in the sense in which the word "distilled" is commonly accepted and understood by those engaged in the liquor trade and the public. Respondent does not own, operate, or control any place or places where spirituous liquors are manufactured by a process of original and continuous distillation from mash, wort, or wash.

PAR. 4. There are among the competitors of respondent engaged in the sale of spirituous beverages, as mentioned in paragraph 1 hereof, corporations, firms, partnerships, and individuals who manufacture and distill from mash, wort or wash, whiskies, gins, and other spirituous liquors sold by them and who truthfully use the words "distillery," "distilleries," "distillers," "distilling," or "distilled products" as a part of their corporate or trade names and on their stationery, catalogs, advertising, and on the labels of the bottles in which they sell and ship such products. There are also among such competitors, corporations, firms, partnerships, and individuals engaged in the business of purchasing, rectifying, blending, bottling, and selling whiskies, gins, and other spirituous liquors who do not use the words "distillery," "distilleries," "distilling," "distillers," or "distilled products" as a part of their corporate or trade names, nor on their stationery, catalogs, advertising, nor on the labels attached to the bottles in which they sell and ship their said products, and who do not misrepresent themselves to be distillers on their letterheads or invoices used to solicit, obtain, and retain customers for the sale of said products.

PAR. 5. The representations by respondent, as set forth in paragraph 3 hereof, are calculated to and have a capacity and tendency to and do mislead and deceive dealers and the purchasing public into the beliefs that respondent is a distiller and that the whiskies, gins, and other spirituous liquors sold by respondent are manufactured or distilled by it from mash, wort or wash by one continuous process and are calculated to and have the capacity and tendency to and do induce dealers and the purchasing public, acting in such beliefs to purchase the whiskies, gins, and other spirituous liquors rectified and bottled by the respondent, thereby diverting trade to respondent from its competitors who do not by their corporate or trade name or in any other manner misrepresent that they are distillers, and thereby respondent does substantial injury to substantial competition in interstate commerce.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondent, Ostrucon Distilled Products, Inc., are to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce, within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

This proceeding having been heard by the Federal Trade Commission upon the complaint of the Commission and the answer filed herein, dated April 13, 1936, by respondent, admitting all the material allegations of the complaint to be true and waiving the taking of further evidence and all other intervening procedure, and the Commission having made its findings as to the facts and its conclusion that said respondent has violated the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

It is ordered, That the respondent, Ostrucon Distilled Products Company, Inc., its officers, representatives, agents, and employees in connection with the offering for sale, sale and distribution of whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages in interstate commerce or in the District of Columbia (except gins by it produced through redistillation of tax-paid purchased alcohol over juniper berries and other aromatics), do forthwith cease and desist from representing:

Through the use of the word "Distilled" in its corporate name, on its stationery, advertising, or on the labels attached to the bottles in which it sells and ships its said products, or in any other way by word or words of like import, (a) that it is a distiller of whiskies, gins, or other spirituous beverages; or (b) that the said whiskies, gins, or other spirituous beverages were by it manufactured through the process of distillation; or (c) that it owns, operates, or controls a place or places wherein such products are by it manufactured by a process of original and continuous distillation from mash, wort, or wash through continuous closed pipes and vessels until the manufacture thereof is complete, unless and until respondent shall actually own, operate, or control such a place or places.

It is further ordered, That the said respondent within 60 days from, and after, the date of the service upon it of this order, shall file with the Commission a report or reports in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which it is complying and has complied with the order to cease and desist hereinabove set forth.

IN THE MATTER OF
IMPERIAL DISTILLERS CORPORATION

COMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION
OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 20, 1914

Docket 2455. Complaint, June 22, 1935—Decision, Jan. 28, 1937

Where a corporation engaged as rectifier and wholesaler of spirituous liquors, in purchasing, rectifying, blending, and bottling whiskies, gins, liquors and other spirituous beverages, and in the making of gin with a still which it used therefor by redistillation of purchased alcohol, not produced by it, over juniper berries and other aromatics, and selling its aforesaid various products to wholesalers and retailers in other States, in substantial competition with those engaged in the manufacture by distillation of whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages and in selling same in trade and commerce among the various States and in the District of Columbia, and with those engaged in purchasing, rectifying, blending, and bottling such various beverages and similarly selling same, and including among said competitors those who, as manufacturers and distillers from mash, wort, or wash of whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages sold by them, truthfully use words "distiller," "distilleries," "distillers," or "distilling" as a part of their corporate names and on their stationery and on the labels of the bottles in which they sell and ship their said products, and those who, engaged in purchasing, rectifying, blending, and bottling such various products, do not use aforesaid words as above set forth—

Represented, through use of its corporate name, including word "Distillers," printed on its stationery, invoices, and labels, together with words "Distilled * * * by" in case of gins and words "Bottled by" in case of whiskies and liquors, and in various other ways to its customers, and furnished same with means of representing to their vendees, both retailers and ultimate consuming public, that the whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages contained in such bottles were by it made through process of original and continuous distillation from mash, wort, or wash, through continuous closed pipes and vessels until manufacture was complete, notwithstanding fact it did not thus distill said various beverages, thus bottled, labeled, sold, and transported by it as above set forth, and as long definitely understood from word "distillers," used in connection with liquor industry and products thereof, in the trade and by the ultimate purchasing public, and did not own, operate, or control any place or places where such beverages are made by process of distillation from mash, wort, or wash, and was not a distiller, investment and expenses of which are, in general, greater than those of the rectifier, and for the purchase of the bottled liquors of which, as products of actual distiller and manufacturer, there is a preference on the part of a substantial portion of the purchasing public, and to which prestige, of competitive advantage in overcoming sales resistance, attaches in the minds of the wholesale trade, and associated with which is belief in trade and public that distiller's control over making of such products from start to finish is of advantage to the seller;

Complaint

24 F. T. C.

With effect of misleading and deceiving dealers and purchasing public into the belief that the whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages sold by it were by it made and distilled from mash, wort, or wash, and of inducing dealers and such public, acting in such belief, to buy its said whiskies, etc., bottled and sold by it, and of thereby diverting trade to it from its competitors who do not, by their corporate names or in any other manner, misrepresent that they are manufacturers by distillation from mash, wort, or wash of such products; to the substantial injury of substantial competition in commerce:

Held, That such acts and practices were to the prejudice of the public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition.

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that Imperial Distillers Corp., a corporation, hereinafter referred to as respondent, has been and is using unfair methods of competition in commerce as "commerce" is defined in said act, and it appearing to the said Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint, stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent is a corporation organized, existing, and doing business under the laws of the State of California, with its office and principal place of business in the city of Los Angeles, in said State. It is now, and for more than one year last past has been, engaged in the business of a wholesaler and rectifier, purchasing, rectifying, blending, and bottling whiskies, gins, liqueurs, and other alcoholic beverages and in the sale thereof in constant course of trade and commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia. In the course and conduct of its said business it causes its said products when sold to be transported from its place of business into and through various States of the United States to the purchasers thereof, consisting of wholesalers and retailers, located in other States of the United States and the District of Columbia. In the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid, respondent is now, and for more than one year last past has been, in substantial competition with other corporations and with individuals, partnerships, and firms engaged in the manufacture by true distillation of whiskies, gins, and other alcoholic beverages from mash, wort, or wash, and in the sale thereof in trade and commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia; and in the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid respondent is, and for more than one year last past has been, in substantial competition with other corporations and with individuals, firms, and partnerships engaged in the business of purchasing, rectifying, blending, and bottling whiskies, gins, liqueurs, and other alcoholic beverages in rectifying plants and in the sale thereof in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 2. Upon the premises of respondent's place of business aforesaid there is a still for use in the production of gins by a process of rectification whereby alcohol, purchased but not produced by respondent, is redistilled over juniper berries and other aromatics. Such rectification of alcoholic spirits does not make or constitute respondent a distillery or a distiller, as defined by Section 3247 of the Revised Statutes regulating Internal Revenue, nor as commonly understood by the public and the liquor industry. For a long period of time the word "distillers" when used in connection with the liquor industry and with the products thereof has had and still has a definite significance and meaning to the minds of wholesalers and retailers in such industry and to the ultimate purchasing public, to wit, those who manufacture spirituous liquors by an original and continuous distillation from mash, wort, or wash, through continuous closed pipes and vessels until the manufacture thereof is complete, and a substantial portion of the purchasing public prefers to buy spirituous liquors bottled and prepared by distillers.

PAR. 3. In the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid by the use of the word "Distillers" in its corporate name, printed on its stationery, catalogs, and on the labels attached to the bottles in which it sells and ships its said products, by express representation on its letterheads used by it to solicit and obtain customers for the sale of its aforesaid liquors, and in various other ways, respondent represents to its customers and furnishes them with the means of representing to their vendees, both retailers and the ultimate consuming public, that it is a distiller and that the said whiskies, gins, liqueurs and other alcoholic beverages therein contained were by it manufactured through the process of distillation from mash, wort, or wash, when, as a matter of fact, respondent is not a distiller, does not distill the said whiskies, gins, and other alcoholic beverages by it so bottled, labeled, sold and transported, and merely by the use of a still operated by it as aforesaid in the rectification of alcoholic spirits by redistillation over juniper berries and other aromatics, does not distill the whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages by it so bottled, labeled, sold, and transported in the sense in which the word "distilled" is commonly accepted and understood by those engaged in the liquor trade and the public. Respondent does not own, operate, or control any place or places where spirituous beverages are manufactured by a process of original and continuous distillation from mash, wort, or wash.

PAR. 4. There are among the competitors of respondent engaged in the sale of spirituous beverages as mentioned in paragraph 1 hereof corporations, firms, partnerships, and individuals who manufacture and distill from mash, wort or wash, whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages sold by them and who truthfully use the words "distillery," "distilleries," "distillers," or "distilling" as a part of their corporate or trade names and on their stationery, catalogs, and on the labels of the bottles in which they sell and ship such products. There are also among such competitors corporations, firms, partnerships, and individuals engaged in the business of purchasing, rectifying, blending, bottling, and selling whiskies, gins, liqueurs, and other alcoholic beverages who do not use the words "distillery," "distilleries," "distilling," or "distillers" as a part of their corporate or trade names, nor on their stationery, catalogs, advertising, nor on the labels attached to the bottles in which they sell and ship their said products.

PAR. 5. The representations by respondent, as set forth in paragraph 3 hereof, are calculated to and have a capacity and tendency to and do mislead and deceive dealers and the purchasing public into the beliefs that respondent is a distiller and that the whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages sold by respondent are manufactured or distilled by it from mash, wort, or wash by one continuous process and are calculated to and have the capacity and tendency to and do induce dealers and the purchasing public, acting in such beliefs, to purchase the whiskies, gins, and other alcoholic beverages rectified and bottled by the respondent, thereby diverting trade to respondent from its competitors who do not by their corporate or trade name or in any other manner misrepresent that they are distillers, and thereby respondent does substantial injury to substantial competition in interstate commerce.

PAR. 6. The acts and things above alleged to have been done and the false representations alleged to have been made by respondent are to the prejudice of the public and the competitors of respondent and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914.

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled, "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, on June 22, 1935, issued and served its complaint, in this proceeding upon respondent Imperial Distillers Corporation, charging it with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of the provisions of said act. After the issuance of said complaint, and the filing of respondent's answer thereto, testimony and other evidence in support of the allegations of said complaint were introduced by Edward W. Thomerson, attorney for the Commission, before W. W. Sheppard, an examiner of the Commission theretofore duly designated by it; and by P. B. Morehouse, attorney for the Commission, before John W. Addison, an examiner of the Commission theretofore by the Commission duly substituted to take testimony and other evidence in the place and stead of said W. W. Sheppard; and in opposition to the allegations of the complaint by Samuel P. Novick, attorney for the respondent; and said testimony and other evidence were duly recorded and filed in the office of the Commission. Thereafter the proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on the said complaint, the answer thereto, testimony and other evidence, and brief in support of the complaint (counsel for respondent having failed to file brief or request oral argument); and the Commission having duly considered the same and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public, and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. Imperial Distillers Corporation is a corporation organized, existing and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of California, as a rectifier and wholesaler of spirituous liquors, with its principal office and place of business at No. 1615 Los Angeles Street, in the city of Los Angeles, State of California. It purchases, rectifies, blends, and bottles whiskies, gins, liquors, and other spirituous beverages, and sells the same at wholesale in constant current of trade and commerce between and among the various States of the United States. It estimated its average sales (as of December 1935) at approximately $30,000 per month. In the course and conduct of its said business it causes its said products, when sold, to be transported from its place of business aforesaid into and through various States of the United States to the purchasers thereof, consisting of wholesalers and retailers located in States of the United States other than the State of California. In the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid, respondent is now, and for more than one year last past has been, in substantial competition with other corporations and with individuals, partnerships, and firms engaged in the manufacture by distillation of whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages, and in the sale thereof in trade and commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia; and in the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid, respondent is, and for more than one year last past has been, in substantial competition with other corporations, and with individuals, firms, and partnerships engaged in the business of purchasing, rectifying, blending, and bottling whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages and in the sale thereof in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 2. Rectifying, in the distilled spirits rectifying industry, means the mixing of whiskies of different ages or types, or the mixing of other ingredients with whiskies, but reducing proof of whiskey by adding water is not rectifying. Rectifiers also blend whiskies with neutral spirits (grain alcohol).

A distiller, in the sense ordinarily understood by the liquor industry, is one who prepares distilled spirits by a process of original and continuous distillation from mash, wort, or wash, through continuous closed pipes and vessels until the manufacture thereof is complete. Many distillers operate a separate establishment 600 feet or more away from their distillery, known as a rectifying plant, wherein they operate in the same manner as described above, for a rectifier—sometimes exclusively with spirits of their own distillation, and sometimes with spirits purchased from other distillers, or both. Some distilleries have a tax-paid bottling room on the distillery bonded premises wherein their distilled spirits are bottled straight as they come from the still, or in a bonded warehouse after aging, or after reduction of proof. Any rectifying by a distiller, however, must be done in his rectifying plant under his rectifier's permit. On all bottled liquors, whether bottled at a distillery rectifying plant, or at any other rectifying plant, appear the words "Bottled" or "Blended" (as the case may be) "by the ----- Company." If the distilled spirits therein contained are bottled by a distiller either in his distillery or are spirits of his own distillation bottled in his rectifying plant, the distiller may, and does, put "Distilled and Bottled by ----- Company." If, in the distillery's rectifying plant, other spirits have been blended or rectified, he puts "Blended and Bottled by ----- Company". Finally, blown (usually in the bottom) in each bottle, is a symbol, consisting of a letter followed by a number, identifying the bottler, viz, a "D" for a distillery and "R" for rectifier, the number following said letter corresponding with the distiller's or rectifier's permit. Thus "R-409" designates this respondent. A distiller who also operates a rectifying plant, having both kinds of permits, may use either symbol, depending upon whether the liquor contained in the bottle was produced and bottled under his distiller's permit.

It is not always possible to determine from the presence of the phrase "Blended and Bottled by" or the phrase "Bottled by" on the label whether the package was bottled by a rectifier who is a distiller or by a rectifier who is not a distiller.

PAR. 3. In the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid, respondent uses its name printed on its stationery, invoices, and labels. The name on the labels is preceded by the words "Distilled * * * by" in the case of redistilled gins; and by the words "Bottled by" in the case of its whiskies and liquors. The Commission finds that by the use which respondent makes of the word "Distillers" in its corporate name printed on its stationery and on the labels attached to the bottles in which it sells and ships its said products, and in various other ways, respondent represents to its customers, and furnishes them with the means of representing to their vendees, both retailers and the ultimate consuming public, that the whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages therein contained were by it manufactured through the process of distillation from mash, wort, or wash, as aforesaid, when, as a matter of fact, respondent is not a distiller, does not distill the said whiskies, gins, or other spirituous beverages by it so bottled, labeled, sold, and transported, and does not own, operate, or control any place or places where such beverages are manufactured by the process of distillation from mash, wort, or wash.

Respondent has a still which it uses in making gin by redistillation of purchased alcohol, not produced by it, over juniper berries and other aromatics, but this redistillation does not make respondent a distiller as defined by United States Code, Title 26, Section 241, regulating internal revenue, nor as commonly understood by the public and the liquor industry. As shown by the testimony of many witnesses who for long periods of time had been, and still were, actively engaged in the liquor industry, including distillers, wholesalers, and retailers, and by the testimony of representative members of the consuming public, for a long period the word "distillers," when used in connection with the liquor industry and with products thereof, has had, and still has, the definite significance and meaning to the minds of wholesalers and retailers in such industry and to the ultimate purchasing public of the making of beverages by original distillation from grain, fruit, or vegetable mash.

In general, the investment and expenses of the distiller are greater than those of the rectifier.

Much of the "distilled" gin on the market is produced by companies who do distill their own alcohol and produce gin therefrom by redistillation in exactly the same manner that respondent produces its gins—not under any distillery permit, but under a rectifying permit. These distiller-rectifiers place on their gin labels: "Distilled by ----- Distillers". There are distilleries which produce gin by the same process in the distillery by one continuous process and the tax is paid at the completion of the process—that is, after the alcohol becomes gin, so that although the final redistillation process is the same as that of respondent, yet it is all done in a distillery, and the distiller has control over the process from the mash to the gin. Thus it includes original or primary distillation through closed pipes and vessels, as well as the final process of redistillation over the juniper berries.

Section 5 of the Federal Alcohol Administration Act, approved August 29, 1935, dealing with unfair competition and unlawful practices in the industry, provides that it shall be unlawful to sell in bottles any distilled spirits in interstate or foreign commerce unless they are bottled, packaged, and labeled in conformity with such regulations, to be prescribed by the Administrator, as will prohibit deception of the consumer with respect to such products.

Existing regulations under this Act define "distilled gin" as the distillate by original distillation or redistillation of neutral spirits with aromatics.

The regulations further provide that on labels of domestic distilled spirits bottled by or for the actual distiller thereof, there shall be stated the words "distilled by" and immediately thereafter the name of such distiller and the place where distilled.

PAR. 4. There are among the competitors of respondent engaged in the sale of spirituous beverages as mentioned in paragraph 1 hereof, corporations, firms, partnerships, and individuals who manufacture and distill from mash, wort, or wash, whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages sold by them and who truthfully use the words

"distiller," "distilleries," "distillers," or "distilling" as a part of their corporate names and on their stationery, and on the labels of the bottles in which they sell and ship such products. There are also among such competitors, corporations, firms, partnerships, and individuals engaged in the business of purchasing, rectifying, blending, and bottling whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages who do not use the words "distillery," "distilleries," "distilling," or "distillers" as a part of their corporate names, nor on their stationery, nor on the labels attached to the bottles in which they sell and ship their products.

PAR. 5. A substantial portion of the purchasing public does prefer to buy spirituous liquors bottled by the actual distillers and manufacturers thereof, and such representation is a misrepresentation in fact, and has a tendency to mislead and deceive dealers and the purchasing public, with the resultant tendency to induce them to buy respondent's products in preference to the products of truthful competitors.

The testimony clearly showed, and the Commission finds, that a prestige attaches in the minds of the wholesale trade to the distiller, and that this prestige is an advantage in overcoming sales resistance; that in the minds of the wholesale trade and the public, the belief that a distiller's controlling the making of such products from start to finish, with all the ingredients going into them within its own establishment, is an advantage to the seller; and that the use of the word "distilling" or "distiller" in a trade or corporate name of a concern gives it a competitive advantage over concerns which do not pursue or practice such characterizations, and which do not purport to be manufacturers when they are not.

The Commission, therefore, finds that the representation of respondent through use of the word "Distillers" in its corporate name as aforesaid is calculated to, and has the capacity and tendency to and does, mislead and deceive dealers and the purchasing public into the belief that the whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages sold by the respondent are manufactured and distilled by it from mash, wort, or wash, and is calculated to and has the capacity and tendency to and does, induce dealers and the purchasing public, acting in such belief, to purchase the whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages bottled and sold by the respondent, thereby diverting trade to respondent from its competitors who do not by their corporate names or in any other manner misrepresent that they are manufacturers by distillation from mash, wort, or wash of whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages, and thereby respondent does a substantial injury to substantial competition in interstate commerce.

Order

24 F. T. C.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondent, Imperial Distillers Corporation, are to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled, "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

It is ordered, That the respondent, Imperial Distillers Corporation, its officers, representatives, agents, and employees, in connection with the sale, offering for sale, and distribution in interstate commerce and in the District of Columbia, of whiskies, gins, and all other spirituous beverages, except gins produced by it through a process of rectification whereby alcohol purchased but not produced by respondent is redistilled over juniper berries and other aromatics, do cease and desist from:

Representing, through the use of the word "Distillers" in its corporate name, on its stationery, advertising, or on the labels attached to the bottles in which it sells and ships said products, or in any other way by word or words of like import,

(a) That it is a distiller of whiskies, gins, or any other spirituous beverages;

(b) That the said whiskies, gins or other spirituous beverages were by it manufactured through the process of distillation; or

(c) That it owns, operates or controls a place or places where such products are by it manufactured by a process of original and continuous distillation from mash, wort, or wash, through continuous closed pipes and vessels until the manufacture thereof is completed, unless and until respondent shall actually own, operate, or control such a place or places.

It is further ordered, That the said respondent, within 60 days from and after the date of the service upon it of this order, shall file with the Commission a report or reports in writing, setting forth in detail the manner and form in which it is complying and has complied with the order to cease and desist hereinabove set forth.

COMPLAINT AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION OF SEC. 5
OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 26, 1914

Docket 2453. Complaint, June 21, 1935—Order, Jan. 30, 1937

Consent order requiring respondent, its officers, etc., in connection with sale or offer, in interstate commerce and in the District of Columbia, of whiskies, gins, and other alcoholic beverages produced by it, but excepting gins produced by it through process of rectification whereby alcohol purchased, but not produced, by it is redistilled, as specified, to cease and desist from representing, through use of word "Distillers" in its corporate name and on its stationery, advertising, etc., or in any other way, that it is a distiller of whiskies, gins, and other alcoholic beverages, or that said whiskies, etc., were by it made through process of distillation, or that it owns, operates, or controls a place where such products are thus made, unless and until it shall own, operate, or control a place or places where such products are by it manufactured through process of original and continuous distillation from mash, wort, or wash, through continuous closed pipes and vessels until manufacture is complete.

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that Paramount Distillers, Inc., hereinafter referred to as respondent, has been and is using unfair methods of competition in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in said act, and it appearing to the said Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint, stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent is a corporation organized, existing and doing business under the laws of the State of Ohio, with its principal office and place of business in the city of Cleveland, in said State. It is now, and for more than one year last past has been, engaged in the business of purchasing, rectifying, blending, and bottling whiskies, gins, and other alcoholic beverages and in the sale thereof in constant course of trade and commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia. In the course and conduct of its said business it causes its said products when sold to be transported from its place of business aforesaid into and through various States of the United States to the purchasers thereof, consisting of wholesalers and retailers located in other States of the United States and the District of Columbia. In the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid, respondent is now, and for more than one year last past has been, in substantial competition with other corporations and with individuals, partnerships, and firms engaged in the manufacture by distillation of whiskies, gins, and other alcoholic beverages and in the sale thereof in trade and commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia; and in the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid, respondent is now, and for more than one year last past has been, in substantial competition with other corporations and with individuals, firms, and partnerships engaged in the business of purchasing, rectifying, blending, and bottling whiskies, gins, and other alcoholic beverages and in the sale thereof in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid, respondent has upon its said premises a still which it uses in the production of gin by a process of rectification, whereby alcohol purchased but not produced by respondent is redistilled over juniper berries and other aromatics. Such rectification of alcoholic spirits does not make or constitute respondent a distiller as defined by Section 3247 of the Revised Statutes regulating Internal Revenue, nor as commonly understood by the public or the liquor industry. For a long period of time the word "Distillers" when used in connection with the liquor industry and the products thereof has had and still has a definite significance and meaning to the minds of the wholesalers and retailers in such industry and to the ultimate purchasing public, to wit, those who manufacture such liquors by the process of original and continuous distillation from mash, wort, or wash, through continuous closed pipes and vessels until the manufacture thereof is completed; and a substantial portion of the purchasing public prefers to buy spirituous liquors prepared and bottled by distillers.

PAR. 3. In the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid, by the use of the word "Distillers" in its corporate name, printed on its stationery and advertising, and on the labels attached to the bottles in which it sells and ships its said products, and in various other ways, respondent represents to its customers and furnishes them with the means of representing to their vendees, both retailers and the ultimate consuming public, that respondent is a distiller, and that the whiskies, gins, and other alcoholic beverages therein contained were by it manufactured through the process of distillation from mash, wort, or wash, as aforesaid, when, as a matter of fact, respondent is not a distiller, does not distill the said whiskies, gins, and other alcoholic beverages by it so bottled, labeled, sold and transported, and merely by the use of a still operated by it as aforesaid in the rectification of alcoholic spirits by redistillation over juniper berries and other aromatics does not distill the gins by it so bottled, labeled, sold, and transported in the sense in which the word "distilled" is commonly accepted and understood by those engaged in the liquor trade and the public. Respondent does not own, operate, or control any place or places where such beverages are manufactured by the process of distillation from mash, wort, or wash.

PAR. 4. There are among the competitors of respondent engaged in the sale of spirituous beverages, as mentioned in paragraph 1 hereof, corporations, firms, partnerships, and individuals who manufacture and distill from mash, wort, or wash, as aforesaid, whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages sold by them and who truthfully use the words "distillery," "distilleries," "distillers," or "distilling" as a part of their corporate or trade names and on their stationery and advertising, and on the labels of the bottles in which they sell and ship such products. There are also among such competitors corporations, firms, partnerships, and individuals engaged in the business of purchasing, rectifying, blending, bottling and selling whiskies, gins, and other alcoholic beverages who do not use the words "distillery," "distilleries," "distilling," or "distillers" as a part of their corporate or trade names, nor on their stationery or advertising, nor on the labels attached to the bottles in which they sell and ship their said products.

PAR. 5. Representation by respondent, as set forth in paragraph 3 hereof, is calculated to and has the capacity and tendency to and does mislead and deceive dealers and the purchasing public into the beliefs that respondent is a distiller and that the whiskies, gins, and other alcoholic beverages sold by the respondent are manufactured and distilled by it from mash, wort, or wash, as aforesaid, and is calculated to and has the capacity and tendency to and does induce dealers and the purchasing public acting in such beliefs, to purchase the whiskies, gins, and other alcoholic beverages bottled and sold by the respondent, thereby diverting trade to respondent from its competitors who do not by their corporate or trade names or in any other manner misrepresent that they are manufacturers by distillation from mash, wort, or wash, of such products, and thereby respondent does substantial injury to substantial competition in interstate commerce.

Order

PAR. 6. The acts and things above alleged to have been done and the false representations alleged to have been made by respondent are to the prejudice of the public and the competitors of respondent and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914.

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

This proceeding having come on to be heard by the Federal Trade Commission upon the complaint hereinbefore issued and served upon Paramount Distillers, Inc., respondent herein, and the said respondent's written answer made thereto, waiving the taking of testimony, findings as to the fact, filing of briefs, oral argument and all other intervening procedure, and consenting that an order shall issue herein for it to cease and desist from methods of competition charged in the complaint, and the Commission being fully advised in the premises, having thereupon concluded that respondent has violated Section 5 of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled, "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

It is now ordered, That the respondent, Paramount Distillers, Inc., its officers, representatives, agents, and employees, in connection with the sale, offering for sale, and distribution in interstate commerce and in the District of Columbia of whiskies, gins, and all other alcoholic beverages, except gins by it produced through a process of rectification whereby alcohol purchased but not produced by respondent is redistilled over juniper berries and other aromatics, do cease and desist from:

Representing, through the use of the word "Distillers," in its corporate name, on its stationery, advertising, or on the labels attached to the bottles in which it sells and ships its said products, or in any other way by word or words of like import, that: (a) It is a distiller of whiskies, gins, and other alcoholic beverages; or (b) The said whiskies, gins, and other alcoholic beverages were by it manufactured through the process of distillation; or (c) It owns, operates, or controls a place or places where such beverages are manufactured by the process of distillation, unless and until the said respondent shall own, operate, or control a place or places where such whiskies, gins and other alcoholic beverages are by it manufactured through a process of original and continuous distillation from mash, wort, or wash, through continuous closed pipes and vessels until the manufacture thereof is completed.

It is further ordered, That the said respondent within 60 days from and after the date of the service upon it of this order, shall file with the Commission a report or reports in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which it is complying and has complied with the order to cease and desist hereinabove set forth.

COMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 26, 1914

Docket 2473. Complaint, June 28, 1935—Decision, Jan. 30, 1937

Where a corporation engaged as wholesaler and rectifier of distilled spirits, in purchasing, rectifying, blending, and bottling whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages, and in the making of gin with a still which it used therefor by redistillation of purchased alcohol, not produced by it, over juniper berries and other aromatics, and in selling its aforesaid various products to wholesalers and retailers in other States and in the District of Columbia, in substantial competition with those engaged in the manufacture by true distillation of whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages and selling same in trade and commerce among the various States and in said District, and with those engaged in purchasing, rectifying, blending, and bottling such various beverages and similarly selling same, and including among said competitors those who, as manufacturers and distillers by original and continuous distillation from mash, wort, or wash, through continuous closed pipes and vessels until manufacture is complete, of whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages sold by them, truthfully use words "distillery," "distilleries," "distillers," or "distilling" as a part of their corporate or trade names and on their stationery and catalogs and on the labels of the bottles in which they sell and ship their said products, and those who, engaged in purchasing, rectifying, blending, bottling, and selling such various products, do not use aforesaid words as above set forth—

Represented, through use of word "Distilling" in its corporate name, printed on its stationery and catalogs and on the labels attached to the bottles in which it sold and shipped its said products, and in various other ways, to its customers, and furnished same with a means of representing to their vendees, both retailers and ultimate consuming public, that it was a distiller and that the whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages contained in such bottles were by it made through process of distillation as aforesaid, notwithstanding fact it did not thus distill said various beverages, thus bottled, labeled, sold, and transported by it, through aforesaid process of original and continuous distillation, as long definitely understood from word "distilling," used in connection with liquor industry and products thereof in the trade and by the ultimate purchasing public, and did not own, operate, or control any place or places where such beverages are made by aforesaid process, and was not a distiller, for the purchase of the bottled liquors of which there is a preference on the part of a substantial portion of the purchasing public;

With effect of misleading and deceiving dealers and purchasing public into the beliefs that it was a distiller and that the whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages sold by it were by it made and distilled from mash, wort, or wash by one continuous process, and of inducing dealers, in such beliefs, to buy its said whiskies and other beverages bottled and sold by it, and of thereby diverting trade to it from its competitors who do not, by their cor-

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that Hercules Products & Distilling Corp., hereinafter referred to as respondent, has been and is using unfair methods of competition in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in said act, and it appearing to the said Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint, stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent is a corporation organized, existing, and doing business under the laws of the State of New York, with its office and principal place of business in the city of Brooklyn, in said State. It is now, and for more than one year last past has been, engaged in the business of a wholesaler and rectifier of distilled spirits, purchasing, rectifying, blending, and bottling whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages and selling the same in constant course of trade and commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia. In the course and conduct of its said business it causes its said products when sold to be transported from its place of business aforesaid into and through various States of the United States to the purchasers thereof, consisting of wholesalers and retailers, located in other States of the United States and the District of Columbia. In the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid, respondent is now, and for more than one year last past has been, in substantial competition with other corporations and with individuals, partnerships, and firms engaged in the manufacture by true distillation of whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages from mash, wort, or wash, and in the sale thereof in trade and commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia; and in the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid, respondent is, and for more than one year last past has been, in substantial competition with other corporations and with individuals, firms, and partnerships engaged in the business of purchasing, rectifying, blending, and bottling whiskies, gins, and other alcoholic beverages and in the sale thereof in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid, respondent has upon its said premises a still which it uses in the production of gin by a process of rectification whereby alcohol, purchased but not produced by respondent, is redistilled over juniper berries and other aromatics. Such rectification of alcoholic spirits does not make or constitute respondent a distiller, as defined by Section 3247 of the Revised Statutes regulating Internal Revenue, nor as commonly understood by the public and the liquor industry. For a long period of time the word "distilling" when used in connection with the liquor industry and with the products thereof has had and still has a definite significance and meaning to the minds of the wholesalers and retailers in such industry and to the ultimate purchasing public, to wit, the manufacturing of spirituous liquors by an original and continuous distillation from mash, wort, or wash, through continuous closed pipes and vessels until the manufacture thereof is complete, and a substantial portion of the purchasing public prefers to buy spirituous liquors bottled and prepared by distillers.

PAR. 3. In the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid, by the use of the word "Distilling" in its corporate name, printed on its stationery and catalogs, and on the labels attached to the bottles in which it sells and ships its said products, and in various other ways, respondent represents to its customers and furnishes them with the means of representing to their vendees, both retailers and the ultimate consuming public, that it is a distiller and that the said whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages therein contained were by it manufactured through the process of distillation from mash, wort, or wash, when, as a matter of fact, respondent is not a distiller, does not distill the said whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages by it so bottled, labeled, sold, and transported. Respondent does not own, operate or control any place or places where alcoholic beverages are manufactured by a process of original and continuous distillation from mash, wort, or wash.

PAR. 4. There are among the competitors of respondent engaged in the sale of spirituous beverages, as mentioned in paragraph 1 hereof, corporations, firms, partnerships, and individuals who manufacture and distill from mash, wort or wash, as aforesaid, whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages sold by them and who truthfully use the words "distillery," "distilleries," "distillers," or "distilling" as a part of their corporate or trade names and on their stationery and catalogs, and on the labels of the bottles in which they sell and ship such products. There are also among such competitors corporations, firms, partnerships, and individuals engaged in the business of purchasing, rectifying, blending, bottling, and selling whiskies, gins and other spirituous beverages who do not use the words "distillery," "distilleries," "distilling," or "distillers" as a part of their corporate or trade names, nor on their stationery or catalogs, nor on the labels attached to the bottles in which they sell and ship their said products.

PAR. 5. The representations by respondent, as set forth in paragraph 3 hereof, are calculated to and have a capacity and tendency to and do mislead and deceive dealers and the purchasing public into the beliefs that respondent is a distiller and that the whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages sold by respondent are manufactured or distilled by it from mash, wort, or wash by one continuous process, and are calculated to and have the capacity and tendency to and do induce dealers and the purchasing public, acting in such beliefs, to purchase the whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages bottled and sold by the respondent, thereby diverting trade to respondent from its competitors who do not by their corporate or trade names or in any other manner misrepresent that they are distillers, and thereby respondent does substantial injury to substantial competition in interstate commerce.

PAR. 6. The acts and things above alleged to have been done and the false representations alleged to have been made by respondent are to the prejudice of the public and the competitors of respondent and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914.

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

said proceeding, and that it admits all of the material allegations of the complaint to be true, and that the Commission might, without further evidence or other intervening procedure, make, issue and serve upon the respondent findings as to the facts and an order to cease and desist from the violations charged in the said complaint; and the Commission having duly considered the same and being fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom.

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPHS 1. Respondent is a corporation organized, existing and doing business under the laws of the State of New York, with its office and principal place of business in the city of Brooklyn, in said State. It is now, and for more than one year last past has been, engaged in the business of a wholesaler and rectifier of distilled spirits, purchasing, rectifying, blending, and bottling whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages and selling the same in constant course of trade and commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia. In the course and conduct of its said business it causes its said products when sold to be transported from its place of business aforesaid into and through various States of the United States to the purchasers thereof, consisting of wholesalers and retailers, located in other States of the United States and the District of Columbia. In the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid, respondent is now, and for more than one year last past has been, in substantial competition with other corporations and with individuals, partnerships, and firms engaged in the manufacture by true distillation of whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages from mash, wort, or wash, and in the sale thereof in trade and commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia; and in the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid, respondent is, and for more than one year last past has been, in substantial competition with other corporations and with individuals, firms, and partnerships engaged in the business of purchasing, rectifying, blending, and bottling whiskies, gins, and other alcoholic beverages and in the sale thereof in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid, respondent has upon its said premises a still which it uses in the production of gin by a process of rectification whereby alcohol, purchased but not produced by respondent, is redistilled over juniper berries and other aromatics. Such rectification of alcoholic spirits does not make or constitute respondent a distiller, as defined by Section 3247 of the Revised Statutes regulating Internal Revenue, nor as commonly understood by the public and the liquor industry. For a long period of time the word "distilling" when used in connection with the liquor industry and with the products thereof has had and still has a definite significance and meaning to the minds of the wholesalers and retailers in such industry and to the ultimate purchasing public, to wit, the manufacturing of spirituous liquors by an original and continuous distillation from mash, wort, or wash, through continuous closed pipes and vessels until the manufacture thereof is complete, and a substantial portion of the purchasing public prefers to buy spirituous liquors bottled and prepared by distillers.

PAR. 3. In the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid, by the use of the word "Distilling" in its corporate name, printed on its stationery and catalogs, and on the labels attached to the bottles in which it sells and ships its said products, and in various other ways, respondent represents to its customers and furnishes them with the means of representing to their vendees, both retailers and the ultimate consuming public, that it is a distiller and that the said whiskies, gins and other spirituous beverages therein contained were by it manufactured through the process of distillation from mash, wort, or wash, when, as a matter of fact, respondent is not a distiller, does not distill the said whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages by it so bottled, labeled, sold, and transported. Respondent does not own, operate or control any place or places where alcoholic beverages are manufactured by a process of original and continuous distillation from mash, wort, or wash.

PAR. 4. There are among the competitors of respondent engaged in the sale of spirituous beverages, as mentioned in paragraph 1 hereof, corporations, firms, partnerships, and individuals who manufacture and distill from mash, wort or wash, as aforesaid, whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages sold by them and who truthfully use the words "distillery," "distilleries," "distillers," or "distilling" as a part of their corporate or trade names and on their stationery and catalogs, and on the labels of the bottles in which they sell and ship such products. There are also among such competitors corporations, firms, partnerships, and individuals engaged in the business of purchasing, rectifying, blending, bottling, and selling whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages who do not use the words "distillery," "distilleries," "distilling," or "distillers" as a part of their corporate or trade names, nor on their stationery or catalogs, nor on the labels attached to the bottles in which they sell and ship their said products.

PAR. 5. The representations by respondent, as set forth in paragraph 3 hereof, are calculated to and have a capacity and tendency to and do mislead and deceive dealers and the purchasing public into the beliefs that respondent is a distiller and that the whiskies, gins and other spirituous beverages sold by respondent are manufactured or distilled by it from mash, wort, or wash by one continuous process, and are calculated to and have the capacity and tendency to and do induce dealers and the purchasing public, acting in such beliefs, to purchase the whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages bottled and sold by the respondent, thereby diverting trade to respondent from its competitors who do not by their corporate or trade names or in any other manner misrepresent that they are distillers, and thereby respondent does substantial injury to substantial competition in interstate commerce.

PAR. 6. Existing regulations promulgated under the Federal Alcohol Administration Act, approved August 29, 1935 (49 Stat. L. 977), provide that rectifiers who redistill purchased alcohol over juniper berries and other aromatics, in the manner in which this respondent produces its gin, may call such resulting product "distilled gin," and require that the labels state thereon who distilled it. This is to enable the rectifier to have the benefit of any distinction between gin produced by such method and "cold" or compound gin prepared by mixing alcohol with essential oils. The Commission has, therefore, excepted gins produced in the aforesaid manner from the application of its order to cease and desist as hereinafter set forth.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondent, Hercules Products & Distilling Corporation, are to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce, within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

tions of the Commission's complaint to be true, stating that it does not contest the said proceeding and waiving all intervening procedure; briefs and oral argument of both counsel having been waived, and the Commission having made its findings as to the facts and its conclusion that said respondent has violated the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

It is ordered, That the respondent, Hercules Products & Distilling Corporation, its officers, representatives, agents, and employees, in connection with the sale, offering for sale, and distribution in interstate commerce or in the District of Columbia, of whiskies, gins and all other spirituous beverages, except gins produced by it through a process of rectification whereby alcohol purchased but not produced by respondent is redistilled over juniper berries and other aromatics, do cease and desist from:

Representing, through the use of the word "Distilling" in its corporate name, on its stationery, advertising or on the labels attached to the bottles in which it sells and ships said products, or in any other way by word or words of like import, (a) that it is a distiller of whiskies, gins, or any other spirituous beverages; (b) that the said whiskies, gins, or other spirituous beverages were by it manufactured through the process of distillation; or (c) that it owns, operates, or controls a place or places where any such products are by it manufactured by a process of original and continuous distillation from mash, wort, or wash, through continuous closed pipes and vessels until the manufacture thereof is completed, unless and until respondent shall actually own, operate, or control such a place or places.

It is further ordered, That the said respondent, within 30 days from and after the date of the service upon it of this order, shall file with the Commission a report or reports in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which it is complying and has complied with the order to cease and desist hereinabove set forth.

Docket 2624. Complaint, Nov. 12, 1935—Decision, Jan. 30, 1937

Where an individual, with one or two employees, limited to a young woman assistant and occasionally a stenographer, and with office or desk space at the addresses shown by him, engaged in sale of ready-made suits, trousers, overcoats, and topcoats direct to the consumer, through salesmen whom he (1) contacted through advertisements in newspapers and periodicals describing his said product as of high quality, with numerous patterns, union-made, and reasonably priced, and (2) supplied, upon receipt of application forms, and without any adequate showing as to their fitness, honesty, or reliability, with "Authorization Certificates," order forms with instructions for and depictions of a tailor taking various measurements, and sample books displaying on each page words "Fine Clothing Reasonably Priced," and whose practice it was, in the case of many, to apply stickers to his said samples, as well as to those procured for their own use, and different from and much superior to those furnished by him, denoting such materials as "Virgin Wool" and the like, and by and of whose various misrepresentations, over the course of years, and encouraged, aided, and abetted by him in the case of many, he knowingly and deliberately benefited and took advantage, without reasonable or adequate measures to rid himself of such dishonest representatives or prevent his customers from being victimized by them, so as to constitute, in effect, a system of business and method of competition—

- (a) Represented that said clothing was all wool or of fine quality, and that it would be of the same material as the samples exhibited to purchasers and prospective purchasers, and that he would fill orders with materials corresponding exactly in quality and color with samples exhibited in swatch books or sample books, facts being clothing with which he filled orders was not all wool, but either cotton or mostly cotton, and was of very poor quality material, and was not, generally speaking, of the same material or equal to samples with which he supplied his salesmen, nor of the same material or equal to those shown by latter in cases where they used samples not furnished by him, but clothing sent out by him, in a great proportion of the orders taken by his said salesmen, was of different material, pattern, or color or of material inferior in quality to that selected, or differed in all or several of such respects from that ordered;
- (b) Represented that said clothing was made to measure or tailor-made, and that there was a choice of styles, and that personal delivery thereof would be made by the salesman or by a tailor who would make necessary alterations, and that fittings would be had before the garment was completed, facts being clothing in question was not tailor-made nor altered to size and fit of wearer, but was ready-made clothing of cheap workmanship, and it was his practice to fill orders for suits from manufacturer's stock in one style of garment only, with no choice, and there were no personal deliveries, nor alterations on delivery, and no fittings, and in many cases he sent out clothing, in filling orders, in sizes widely at variance from those ordered, and so wholly unsuited in size, with variances amounting to as much as four or five sizes too small or too large, to customer ordering same, that clothing could not possibly be used, and filled orders, in many cases, by sending clothing not of the ready-made size indicated by customer's measurements, and, except in special instances, by sending in all cases so-called regular sizes, with no alterations, so as to make it conform as nearly as might be to individual's measurements;

- (c) Represented that two garments were included in price of one, and that extra trousers were furnished without extra charge, and that prices quoted were special introductory, and that the clothing was sold on the installment plan, with discounts given for payment in full at time of order, facts being prices quoted were the regular prices for one suit or garment, with no extra clothing included, extra trousers were furnished only at extra cost, all clothing was sent C. O. D. to the purchaser and no installments were allowed nor any discount given for cash payment; and
- (d) Represented that the business in question was a local one or one well-known locally, and that the salesman was located at a given address, and that his name was that given to the customer, facts being he had no connection with any clothing concern outside of New York City, and was not connected in any way with the named concern in Chicago, and names and addresses given by salesmen were frequently fictitious;

With effect of misleading and deceiving members of the public in the aforesaid various particulars, and of inducing them to give orders for his said clothing and to pay money to him and his salesmen therefor, and of defrauding members of the public by inducing them, as aforesaid, to pay out money for articles of clothing of a kind, quality, and description which they did not order or intend to buy, by reason of the erroneous beliefs engendered as above set forth, and of diverting trade to him from competitors engaged in the sale of men's clothing in commerce among the various States and in the District of Columbia, and including therein those who did not make use of the same or similar misleading or fraudulent methods used by him and his salesmen as above described; to their substantial injury and prejudice:

COMPLAINT

to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that Carlo Van Myers, doing business at various times under the names and styles of North American Clothes Company, National Brand Clothes Company, Sartorial Art Clothes Company, and Society Bond Clothes Company, has been and is using unfair methods of competition in commerce as "commerce" is defined in said act, and it appearing to said Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint, stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. That said respondent, Carlo Van Myers, doing business under the names and styles of North American Clothes Company, National Brand Clothes Company, Sartorial Art Clothes Company, and Society Bond Clothes Company, trading under one or another of the aforesaid trade names, is now and has been for more than three years last past engaged in the sale and distribution in interstate commerce of men's ready-made clothing, with his office and principal place of business in the city of New York, in the State of New York. Said respondent, in the course and conduct of his said business, causes the clothing sold by him, consisting of men's suits, trousers, overcoats, and topcoats, to be transported in interstate commerce from his said place of business in New York to, into, and through States of the United States other than New York to various and numerous persons in such other States to whom such clothing is or has been sold.

PAR. 2. That during the time above mentioned, other individuals, firms, and corporations in various States of the United States are and have been engaged in the sale and distribution in interstate commerce of men's clothing, consisting of suits, trousers, overcoats, and topcoats, and such other individuals, firms, and corporations have caused and do now cause their said clothing, when sold by them, to be transported from the various States of the United States where they are located, to, into and through States other than the State of origin of the shipment thereof. Said respondent has been, during the aforesaid time, in competition in interstate commerce in the sale of his said clothing with such other individuals, firms, and corporations.

PAR. 3. That respondent, in the sale of ready-made clothing, as aforesaid, makes use of salesmen who solicit the general purchasing public in making sales of the same. Such salesmen are respondent's representatives or agents. They are contacted and secured by respondent by inserting advertisements under the heading "Salesman Wanted," and others of like character, in newspapers and magazines published in various parts of the United States and of general circulation therein, of which the following is an example, to wit:

Clothing Men, Direct, Finest Spring Line, Suits, Topcoats, $16.85, Commission $5.00 North American Clothes, 818 Broadway, New York.

Upon replies to such advertisements being received and application forms being filed by those replying, respondent sends each of them what he designates as an "Authorization Certificate," together with order forms and book of samples. No adequate showing is required of those who apply, nor is any adequate investigation made as to their fitness, honesty, or reliability. Said representatives thereupon go about among the purchasing public and take orders for clothing, which said orders are forwarded by them to respondent to be filled. Many of such representatives have been accustomed to, and did and do, make various false and misleading representations, as a result of which they are enabled to and do secure orders for clothing. Among such false and misleading representations made by said representatives are the following:

- (1) That the clothing offered for sale is all wool, or of fine quality.
- (2) That it will be made-to-measure, or tailor-made.
- (3) That two garments are offered for the price of one.
- (4) That extra trousers will be furnished without extra charge.
- (5) That the clothing ordered will be like the samples selected, whether the ones selected are in respondent's sample book, or others secured by the salesman.
- (6) That prices quoted are special introductory prices.
- (7) That a local store is to be opened soon.
- (8) That choice of style of garment could be had, such as choice between single-breasted and double-breasted.
- (9) That personal delivery of the garment ordered will be made by the salesman or by a tailor representing respondent, who will make necessary alterations.
- (10) That fittings will be had before the garment is completed.
- (11) That respondent is a local concern, or one well known locally, such as the North American Tailoring Company, of Chicago, Ill.
- (12) That installment payments can be made on balance due after the down payment.
- (13) That a discount is allowed for payment in full at time order is given.
- (14) That the salesman is located at a given address and that his name is that given to the customer.

PAR. 4. That in truth and in fact, the clothing sold by respondent is not all wool, but is all cotton, or mostly cotton, with a small mixture of wool, or is cotton French back with wool in the facing, or is otherwise of very poor quality material. The clothing delivered by respondent is ready-made and of cheap workmanship. All of it is bought by the respondent after orders are received. The prices quoted are the regular prices for one garment. Extra trousers are furnished only at extra cost. The samples shown are not of the same material as in the clothing shipped by respondent. The prices quoted are regular prices. Respondent neither has local stores nor has he taken steps to establish such. His only place of business is office space with another concern in New York City. He manufactures no clothing and keeps no stock on hand. Generally speaking, customers are not given a choice between single- and double-breasted, but orders are filled in one style of garment only. All garments are sent c. o. d. and there is no personal delivery or alterations on delivery, and no fittings. Respondent has no connection with any local concern outside of New York City and is not connected with the North American Tailoring Company, of Chicago, Ill. No installment payments are allowed, nor is there any discount for full cash payment. The names and addresses given by salesmen to customers are often fictitious.

PAR. 5. That such misrepresentations as hereinbefore stated have been accustomed to be made by many of respondent's salesmen for a period of years. Respondent has been notified and informed by customers of such misrepresentations. Nevertheless, respondent has continued to accept and fill orders sent in by his salesmen after having been thus put upon notice that the orders so accepted were probably procured by means of misrepresentations. No reasonable or adequate measures have been or now are taken by respondent to rid himself of dishonest salesmen, or to prevent customers from being victimized by their misrepresentations. Neither does respondent adequately, fully, and generally make restitution for losses incurred by customers as a result of transactions resulting from such misrepresentations. In some cases substitutions of garments inferior to and unlike those ordered are made. In some cases the c. o. d. payment made for the garment is returned. In only a few cases is the down payment made to the salesman refunded and then only after extended efforts made by the customers. In only rare cases is the amount paid by the customer for postage charges refunded. In nearly all cases dilatory tactics are used, so that the customer becomes discouraged and accepts a bad bargain and lets the matter drop. In such manner respondent has continually profited by the misrepresentation of his salesmen and by such method of business as aforesaid.

PAR. 6. That respondent encourages, aids, and abets some of the aforesaid false and misleading representations of his salesmen and contributes to the misleading of the customer by the means and methods as hereinafter set out. In the advertisements for salesmen he falsely represents that his clothing is of high grade and quality by such phrases as "Finest Spring Line". In his letters to prospective salesmen, paragraphs such as the following appear:

National Brand Clothes Company, has made up a line of samples for spring and summer suits, including topcoats, which are superb in their designs, A-1 in their quality, and at a price to fit the pocketbook of the average customer.

Our line consists of over forty handsome patterns. A fine line of Union Made suits. Great values.

On each page of the sample book sent out is a statement such as the following, which is seen and read not only by the salesman but by the customer:

Fine Clothing Reasonably Priced.

On the order blank forms furnished to salesmen and used in the taking of orders for clothing are nine pictures of a tailor taking different measurements of a man for clothing. The following directions appear under the respective pictures:

- A. Take this measure over vest at breast snugly but not tight.
- B. Take this measure with coat on from collar seam to length wanted.
- C. Take this measure with coat on from seam at armhole to sleeve length wanted.
- D. Take this measure with coat on, from middle of back to armhole seam.
 1. Around waist, over shirt but under vest snug but not tight.
 2. Around fullest part of seat.
 3. From well up in crotch to length desired.
 4. From top of pants to length desired.

In addition, said order form has thereon the following blanks for the furnishing of information relative to the customer's build, size, and general conformation, such as would be required in making clothing to measure, to wit:

Very Important

Age --- Weight ---- Size now wearing ---- Cuffs ---- No cuffs ---

Answer Carefully

Neck measure? -----
 Long, Medium, or Short Neck? -----
 Regular, Sloping, High Shoulders? -----
 Position: Regular, Erect, Stooping? -----
 Vest Opening ----- Vest Length -----
 Width of Knee ----- Width of Bottom -----
 Is customer Regular, Slender or Stout? -----
 Are Suspender Buttons Wanted? -----

Respondent's salesmen use said order form in taking orders from customers. They take the measurements as directed and secure the other information requested. All of this leads the customer to believe that he will get a made-to-measure suit and causes him to accept the salesman's assurance to the same effect.

Complaint

Moreover, respondent furnishes to his salesmen an attractive sample book containing sample swatches, many of which, to the ordinary observer, have the appearance of being all wool, or cloth of very good quality with a considerable portion of wool. Such samples aid the dishonest salesman in carrying on the deception as hereinbefore alleged and tend to mislead the purchasing public, in the absence of any statement by respondent on the sample book as to the materials entering into the makeup of the samples. Some salesmen apply stickers to the samples, denoting them as "virgin wool" and the like.

PAR. 7. That many of respondent's salesmen have been accustomed to use high grade all wool samples in taking orders, totally different from and much superior to the line of goods handled by respondent. Respondent has been informed of this practice by customers and has been well aware of the same at all times. In spite of such knowledge, respondent continues to send out suits of inferior materials to fill orders so taken and to insist on substitution after complaint is made, rather than make full restitution and put the customer in status quo.

PAR. 8. That respondent fills orders for clothing sold by his salesmen in a large number of cases by sending clothing of different material, pattern or color from that ordered, or of material inferior in quality to the samples selected, or differing in several or all of such particulars. In a great number of cases clothing has been sent to purchasers in sizes widely at variance from the sizes ordered and wholly unsuited to the customer. Such variances are as much, in some cases, as four or five sizes too small or too large, and the clothing either so small that the customer cannot get it on, or so large that it is wholly unfit to wear. In many cases orders are filled by sending clothing not of the ready-made size that would be indicated by the customer's measurements. Except in special instances, all orders received by respondent are filled by sending so-called "regular" sizes, and no alterations are made therein to conform as near as may be to measurements submitted.

PAR. 9. That the representations of respondent and his salesmen, as aforesaid, have had and do have the tendency and capacity to mislead, confuse and deceive members of the public in the particulars as aforesaid. That the practices and methods used as hereinbefore set out result in defrauding customers by causing them to pay out money for articles of clothing of a kind, quality and description which they did not order or intend to buy. Such representations, practices and methods have the tendency and capacity to cause and induce, and do in fact cause and induce members of the public to order clothing from respondent and to pay money therefor because of the erroneous beliefs engendered as above set forth, and to divert trade to respondent from competitors engaged in the sale of men's clothing in interstate commerce. There are, among the competitors of respondent, those who do not make use of the said methods used by respondent and who do not make the same or similar false and misleading representations as made by respondent and his salesmen, as herein set out.

PAR. 10. The above acts and things done by respondent are all to the injury and prejudice of the public and the competitors of respondent in interstate commerce, within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress entitled, "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914.

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, on November 12, 1935, issued and served its complaint in this proceeding upon respondent, Carlo Van Myers, doing business under the trade names and styles of North American Clothes Company, National Brand Clothes Company, Sartorial Art Clothes Company, and Society Bond Clothes Company, charging him with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of the provisions of said act. After the issuance of said complaint, and the filing of respondent's answer thereto, testimony and other evidence in support of the allegations of said complaint were introduced by Harry D. Michael, attorney for the Commission, before John J. Keenan, an examiner of the Commission, theretofore duly designated by it, counsel for respondent having failed to introduce testimony and other evidence in opposition to the allegations of the complaint; and said testimony and other evidence were duly recorded and filed in the office of the Commission. Thereafter, the proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on the said complaint, the answer thereto, testimony and other evidence, and brief in support of the complaint, counsel for respondent having failed to file a brief, although given an opportunity so to do, and having failed to appear at the time and place set for oral argument after due notice thereof; and the Commission having duly considered the same, and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public, and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom.

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent, Carlo Van Myers, doing business under the trade names and styles of North American Clothes Company, National Brand Clothes Company, Sartorial Art Clothes Company, and Society Bond Clothes Company, trading under one or another of the aforesaid trade names, was engaged at the time of the issuance of the complaint herein and had been so engaged for more than three years prior thereto, in the sale and distribution in commerce between and among the various States of the United States of men's ready-made clothing, with his office and principal place of business in the city of New York, in the State of New York. Respondent, in the course and conduct of his said business, caused the clothing sold by him consisting of men's suits, trousers, overcoats, and topcoats, to be transported in commerce from his said place of business in New York, to, into, and through States of the United States other than New York to various and numerous persons in such other States to whom such clothing had been sold.

PAR. 2. During the time above mentioned, other individuals, firms, and corporations in various States of the United States were engaged in the sale and distribution in commerce between and among the various States of the United States, and in the District of Columbia, of men's clothing, consisting of suits, trousers, overcoats, and topcoats, and such other individuals, firms and corporations caused their said clothing, when sold by them, to be transported from the various States of the United States where they were located, to, into, and through States other than the States of origin of the shipment thereof. Respondent was, during the aforesaid time, in substantial competition, in the sale of his said clothing, with such other individuals, firms, and corporations.

PAR. 3. Respondent, in the sale of ready-made clothing, as aforesaid, made use of salesmen who solicited the general purchasing public in making sales of the same. Such salesmen were respondent's representatives and agents. They were contacted and secured by respondent by the insertion of advertisements under the heading "Salesmen Wanted," and others of like character, in newspapers and magazines published in various parts of the United States and of general circulation therein, of which the following is an example, to wit:

Clothing Men, Direct, Finest Spring Line, Suits, Topcoats $16.85, Commission $5.00. North American Clothes, 818 Broadway, New York.

Upon replies to such advertisements being received and application forms being filed by those replying, respondent would send each of them what he designated as an "Authorization Certificate," together with order forms and books of samples. No adequate showing was required by respondent, of those who applied, nor was any adequate investigation made, as to their fitness, honesty, or reliability. Upon the receipt of such authorization, samples and other supplies, said representatives, so designated, thereupon went about among the purchasing public taking orders for clothing, which said orders were thereupon forwarded to respondent to be filled. Most of such representatives were accustomed to, and did make various false and misleading representations to those members of the public from whom they received orders, by reason of which said misrepresentations such orders were given, money was paid thereon and contracts entered into for the payment of the remainder due as provided in such contracts. Among such false and misleading representations made by representatives were the following:

(1) That the clothing offered for sale was all wool, or of fine quality.

(2) That it was to be made-to-measure, or tailor-made.

(3) That two garments were offered for the price of one.

(4) That extra trousers were to be furnished without extra charge.

(5) That the clothing ordered was to be like the samples selected, whether the ones selected were in respondent's sample book, or others secured by the salesmen.

(6) That prices quoted were special introductory prices.

(7) That a local store was to be opened soon.

(8) That choice of style of garment could be had, such as choice between single-breasted and double-breasted.

(9) That personal delivery of the garment ordered would be made by the salesman or by a tailor representing respondent, who would make necessary alterations.

(10) That fittings were to be had before the garment was completed.

(11) That respondent was a local concern, or one well known locally, such as the North American Tailoring Company, of Chicago, Illinois.

(12) That installment payments could be made on balance due after the down payment.

(13) That a discount was allowed for payment in full at time order was given.

(14) That the salesman was located at a given address and that his name was that given to the customer.

Findings

PAR. 4. Respondent, in the conduct of his business as aforesaid, had his office at 818 Broadway, New York City. For a time while using the trade name of National Brand Clothes Company he also used the address 105 Fifth Avenue, New York City, as a mailing address, where he rented desk space only. Respondent's place of business at 818 Broadway consisted of a small space partitioned off from a loft space occupied by a manufacturer of boy's clothing. Respondent had no employees except a young lady assistant and at times a stenographer. The furnishings of his office consisted of a desk and a couple of chairs. No stock of goods was kept on hand. As orders came in, respondent went to a manufacturer of men's clothing and selected the clothing to fill the orders. Respondent had no tailors employed either for making clothing or for alterations, nor did he have any interest in any clothing manufacturing concern. The clothing with which respondent filled orders was not all-wool but was either cotton or mostly cotton with a small mixture of wool or a cotton French back with wool in the facing. All of it was of very poor quality material. It was neither tailor-made clothing nor clothing altered to the size and fit of the wearer. It was all ready-made clothing of cheap workmanship. The prices quoted by respondent for his clothing were the regular prices for one suit or garment with no extra clothing at such prices. Extra trousers were furnished only at extra cost. The clothing delivered by respondent, generally speaking, was not of the same material or equal to the samples which he furnished his salesmen, nor was it the same material or equal to the samples shown by salesmen in cases where they used samples not furnished by the respondent. Respondent filled his orders for suits in one style of garment only and gave no choice as between single-breasted and double-breasted garments. All clothing was sent C. O. D. to the purchasers thereof. There were no personal deliveries, no alterations on delivery and no fittings. Respondent had no connection with any clothing concern outside of New York City and was not connected in any way with the North American Tailoring Company of Chicago, Ill. No payments by installments were allowed, nor was any discount given for full cash payment. Names and addresses given by salesmen were frequently fictitious. All such representations by his salesmen, as stated in the preceding paragraph, were false.

PAR. 5. Misrepresentations such as those hereinbefore referred to were made by respondent's salesmen during a period of approximately five years, during which he conducted his business under one or another of the trade names herein referred to. During such time continual complaints were registered by customers who either notified respondent direct or through complaints to the Post Office Department, various Better Business Bureaus, and the Federal Trade Commission. Such complaints were specifically brought to the attention of the respondent from time to time during such period. Regardless of such knowledge and information, the misrepresentations of salesmen continued as long as respondent was in business and respondent continued to accept and fill orders sent in by such salesmen after having been put upon notice that the orders so accepted were probably procured by means of misrepresentations. Respondent took no reasonable or adequate measures to rid himself of dishonest salesmen or to prevent customers from being victimized by their misrepresentations. Neither did respondent adequately, fully and generally make restitution for losses incurred by customers as a result of transactions based upon such misrepresentations. In some cases substitution of garments inferior to and unlike those ordered were made. In a few cases C. O. D. payments were returned, but in only rare instances were down payments made to salesmen refunded and then only after extended efforts made by the customers and others. In only rare cases were the amounts paid by customers for postage charges refunded. In nearly all cases of misrepresentations by salesmen, dilatory tactics were used by respondent so that the customer usually became discouraged and let the matter drop without adequate adjustment or none at all.

PAR. 6. Respondent encouraged, aided and abetted many of the aforesaid false and misleading representations of his salesmen by the means and methods as hereinafter set out. In his advertisements for salesmen he falsely represented that his clothing was of high grade and quality by such phrases as "Finest Spring Line." In his letters to prospective salesmen he represented his clothing as being of fine quality by the following statements:

National Brand Clothes Company, has made up a line of samples for spring and summer suits, including topcoats, which are superb in their designs, A-1, in their quality, and at a price to fit the pocketbook of the average customer.

Our line consists of over forty handsome patterns. A fine line of Union Made suits. Great values.

On each page of the sample book sent out to salesmen the following statement appears, which is seen and read not only by the salesmen but by the customers:

Fine Clothing Reasonably Priced.

Respondent assists in creating the impression that his clothing is tailor-made or made-to-measure by furnishing order blank forms to his salesmen on which are nine pictures of a tailor taking different measurements of a man for clothing. The following directions for measurements appear under the respective pictures:

Findings

- A. Take this measure over vest at breast snugly but not tight.
- B. Take this measure with coat on from collar seam to length wanted.
- C. Take this measure with coat on from seam at armhole to sleeve length wanted.
- D. Take this measure with coat on, from middle of back to armhole seam.
 1. Around waist, over shirt but under vest, snug, but not tight.
 2. Around fullest part of seat.
 3. From well up in crotch to length desired.
 4. From top of pants to length desired.

In addition, said order form had thereon the following blanks for the furnishing of information relative to the customer's build, size, and general conformation, such as would be required in making clothing to measure, to-wit:

Very Important

Age---- Weight---- Size now wearing---- Cuffs---- No Cuffs----

Answer Carefully

Neck measure?-----

Long, Medium, or Short Neck?-----

Regular, Sloping, High Shoulders?-----

Position: Regular, Erect, Stooping?-----

Vest Opening----- Vest Length?-----

Width of Knee----- Width of Bottom?-----

Is customer Regular, Slender or Stout?-----

Are Suspender Buttons Wanted?-----

Respondent's salesmen were accustomed to and did use such order blank forms as those above described in taking orders from customers and took the measurements as directed and secured the other information requested. All of this procedure had the effect of causing customers to believe that they would get made-to-measure clothing and caused them to accept and believe the salesmen's misrepresentations as hereinbefore set out.

Respondent, furthermore, furnished his salesmen with an attractive sample book containing sample swatches of clothing material. Many of such samples, to the ordinary observer, had the appearance of being all-wool or as being material of good quality with a considerable proportion of wool. Such samples aided respondent's dishonest salesmen in carrying on their deception as hereinbefore alleged. Many of respondent's salesmen in furtherance of their deceptive practices and misrepresentations applied stickers to respondent's samples, as well as to samples which they procured for their own use, denoting such materials as "Virgin Wool" and the like.

PAR. 7. Many of respondent's salesmen had been accustomed to use high grade all-wool samples in taking orders, which said samples were totally different from and much superior to the samples furnished by respondent, as well as being far superior to the materials used by him in filling orders. Respondent was well informed of this practice through customer complaints and through other agencies and was well aware of the same during said period in which he conducted said business. In spite of such knowledge, respondent continued to fill orders sent in by salesmen engaging in such practice and to send out suits thereon of inferior materials. Respondent continued to fail to make restitution in many such cases after complaints were made.

PAR. 8. Respondent, in a great proportion of the orders taken by salesmen and filed by him, sent out clothing of different material, pattern or color or of material inferior in quality to that selected, or differing in all or several of such respects from that ordered. In a great many cases, in filling orders, respondents sent out clothing in sizes widely at variance from the sizes ordered and so wholly unsuited in size to the customer ordering the same that it could not possibly be used. Such variances in size were in some cases as much as four or five sizes too small or too large. In many cases orders were filled by sending clothing not of the ready-made size that would be indicated by the customer's measurements. Except in special instances, all orders received by respondent were filled by sending so-called "regular" sizes. No alterations were made in such clothing by respondent so as to make it conform as near as might be to the measurements submitted.

PAR. 9. Respondent's practices as heretofore set out in connection with the misrepresentations of his salesmen and in filling their orders, became so general and continued for such a period of time as to become a system of business and a method of competition. He knowingly and deliberately, over a period of years, took advantage of the misrepresentations and fraudulent practices of his salesmen to the detriment and loss of his customers. He knowingly profited by such transactions and continued to do so after notice of the misrepresentations involved had been specifically brought to his attention by customers and others.

PAR. 10. The representations of respondent through his salesmen and otherwise as aforesaid had the tendency and capacity to confuse, mislead, and deceive members of the public in the particulars aforesaid and did in fact so deceive them and induce them to give orders for respondent's clothing and to pay money to respondent and his salesmen therefor. The practices and methods used as hereinbefore set out resulted in defrauding members of the public as aforesaid by inducing them to pay out money for articles of clothing of a kind, quality, and description which they did not order or intend to buy. Such orders were given by members of the public and money paid thereon because of the erroneous beliefs engendered as above set out. Such practices and methods diverted trade to respondent from competitors engaged in the sale of men's clothing in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia. There were among the competitors of respondent those who did not make use of the same or similar misleading and fraudulent methods used by respondent and his salesmen as herein set out and respondent's said acts and practices tended to and did in fact divert business to respondent from his said competitors, to the substantial injury and prejudice of such competitors.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of respondent, Carlo Van Myers, doing business under the trade names and styles of North American Clothes Company, National Brand Clothes Company, Sartorial Art Clothes Company, and Society Bond Clothes Company, are to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce, within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

It is ordered, That the respondent, Carlo Van Myers, an individual, trading and doing business under the trade names and styles North American Clothes Company, National Brand Clothes Company, Sartorial Art Clothes Company, and Society Bond Clothes Company, or under any other trade names or styles or through any corporate or other device, his representatives, agents, and employees, in connection with the offering for sale, sale, and distribution of men's clothing in interstate commerce or in the District of Columbia, do forthwith cease and desist from representing, directly or by implication, or through salesmen:

1. That said clothing is all-wool or is of fine quality;
2. That said clothing is made-to-measure or is tailor-made;
3. That two garments are included in the price of one;
4. That extra trousers are furnished without extra charge;
5. That the prices quoted are special introductory prices or are other than the regular prices for said clothing, unless said prices are, in fact, lower than the regular prices ordinarily charged for said clothing;
6. That said clothing will be of the same material as the samples exhibited to purchasers and prospective purchasers, unless and until the clothing actually furnished said purchasers is identical with the samples exhibited;
7. That personal delivery of clothing will be made;
8. That a choice of style of garment is offered, such as a choice between single breasted and double breasted;
9. That fittings will be given or that alterations will be made;
10. That said clothing is sold on an installment plan;
11. That discounts are given for payment in full at the time the order for clothing is given;
12. That the business operated by the respondent is a local concern or is one that is well known locally;
13. That the respondent conducts any local retail stores or that any local retail stores will be opened in the purchaser's neighborhood;
14. Through the use of swatch books or sample books wherein various materials are exhibited, or through any other means or in any other manner, that respondent can and will fill orders for clothing ordered from samples so exhibited, with the identical materials of the same quality and color, when such is not the fact.

It is further ordered, That the respondent shall, within 60 days after service upon him of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which he has complied with this order.

IN THE MATTER OF

ISRAEL ZELKIND, TRADING AS LAWRENCE BLANKET MILLS

COMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION
OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 26, 1914

Docket 2984. Complaint, Nov. 17, 1936—Decision, Feb. 1, 1937

Where an individual engaged in the sale and distribution of blankets made by others, and in causing said products to be shipped and transported from the place at which made to purchasers thereof located at various points in other States, in competition with many who manufacture, sell, and distribute blankets without in any way representing the same as actually made from wool, unless in fact so made, and with many who sell and distribute such articles without being the manufacturers thereof and thus representing themselves—

- (a) Featured legend on letterheads and invoices distributed to customers and prospective customers in which was set forth his trade name, including word "Mills," together with words "Manufacturers of All Wool Camp and Institution Blankets" and words "Mill at," aforesaid point from which he caused said articles to be shipped and transported, notwithstanding fact he did not own, operate, or control any mill for manufacture of blankets from the raw materials, was not engaged in manufacturing, and was not a manufacturer as understood by trade and public generally, for direct dealing with which there is a preference on the part of a substantial portion of wholesale and retail purchasers of such goods as securing them, in their belief, closer prices, superior quality, and other advantages, as compared with dealing with broker or middleman; and
- (b) Caused his said blankets to be labeled "all wool" or "woolen," and as "fully shrunk," notwithstanding fact said products, thus labeled, advertised, and sold by him, were not fully shrunk, nor composed wholly of wool, for which there is a preference on the part of a substantial portion of the purchasing public, as compared with such products made from materials other than wool, or products made only in part of wool;

With capacity and tendency to mislead and deceive a substantial portion of the purchasing public into the erroneous belief that all of said representations were true, and with effect of placing in the hands of wholesalers and retailers means whereby said blankets were passed off to said public as all wool goods, and with the result, as a direct consequence of such mistaken and erroneous beliefs thus engendered, that consuming public purchased substantial volume of the said products, and trade was unfairly diverted to him from competitors likewise engaged in selling and distributing such articles, and who truthfully advertise and represent the nature and character of their business and that of the materials used in the manufacture of their products; to the substantial injury of competition in commerce:

Held, That such acts and practices were to the prejudice of the public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition.

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that Israel Zelkind, an individual trading as Lawrence Blanket Mills, hereinafter referred to as respondent, has been, and is now, using unfair methods of competition in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in said act, and if appearing to the said Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint, stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent, Israel Zelkind, is an individual, trading as Lawrence Blanket Mills, whose office and place of business is at 9-13 Winter Street, Worcester, Mass.

Respondent is now, and for several years last past has been, engaged in the sale and distribution of blankets to the purchasing and consuming public located in various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia. Respondent now causes, and for several years last past has caused, his products when sold by him, to be shipped from Wilsonville, Conn., the place at which said blankets are manufactured, to the purchasers thereof, located in the various States of the United States, and in the District of Columbia. There is now, and has been for several years last past, a constant current of trade and commerce, by the respondent, in blankets, between and among the various States of the United States, and in the District of Columbia.

Respondent is, and for several years last past has been, in substantial competition with other individuals, firms, and corporations, engaged in the sale of blankets in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 2. In the cause and conduct of his business, as described in paragraph 1 hereof, respondent offers for sale and sells his blankets labeled "All Wool" or "Woolen" and as "Fully Shrank."

In truth and in fact the blankets so described and represented are not composed wholly of wool and they do not contain wool in amounts sufficient to justify the designation, "All Wool" or "Woolen." Said blankets are not fully shrunk, as alleged.

PAR. 3. Respondent's invoices distributed wherever his blankets were sold, and also his letterheads bore the following legend:

LAWRENCE BLANKET MILLS

Manufacturers of

All Wool Camp and Institution Blankets

Mill at Wilsonville, Conn.

In truth and in fact respondent does not manufacture the said blankets offered for sale and sold by him, nor does he own, operate, or control a factory where blankets are manufactured.

It is a common belief among wholesalers, retailers, and the purchasing public, that a superior grade of merchandise can be purchased direct from the manufacturer thereof at a considerable saving in price. The representations made by respondent, as alleged in paragraph 3 hereof, have the tendency and capacity to mislead and deceive the purchasers of respondent's blankets into the belief that when they purchase said blankets from respondent, they are dealing with the manufacturer of said blankets purchased and thereby are gaining an advantage by saving the middleman's cost.

PAR. 4. The use by respondent of the representations set forth herein has had, and now has, the capacity and tendency to mislead and deceive and does mislead wholesalers, retailers, and a substantial portion of the purchasing public into the erroneous belief that such representations are true and into the purchase of substantial quantities of said blankets on account of such erroneous belief. By said practices, respondent also places in the hands of wholesalers and retailers the means whereby said blankets are passed off to the purchasing public as all wool blankets. There are among the competitors of respondent as mentioned in paragraph 1 hereof, manufacturers and distributors of blankets who do not misrepresent the kind, quality, and character of their products, nor the nature and kind of business they are engaged in, who likewise advertise, sell, and distribute their blankets among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia. By the representations aforesaid, trade is unfairly diverted to respondent from such competitors, thereby substantial injury is being, and has been, done by respondent to competition in commerce as herein set out.

PAR. 5. The above alleged acts and practices of respondent are all to the injury and prejudice of the public and respondent's competitors and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914.

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission on November 17, 1936, issued, and on November 19, 1936, served, its complaint in this proceeding upon respondent Israel Zelkind, an individual trading as Lawrence Blanket Mills, charging him with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of the provisions of said act. After the issuance of said complaint the respondent filed his answer admitting all the material allegations of the complaint to be true and waiving the taking of further evidence and all other intervening procedure. Thereafter, this proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on the said complaint and the substitute answer, briefs, and oral arguments of counsel having been waived, and the Commission having duly considered the same and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. The respondent, Israel Zelkind, is an individual, trading as Lawrence Blanket Mills. His principal office and place of business is at 9-13 Winter Street, Worcester, Mass.

He is now, and for several years last past has been, engaged in the sale and distribution of blankets. When orders are received for respondent's blankets he causes them to be shipped and transported from Wilsonville, Conn., the place at which said blankets are manufactured, to the purchasers thereof located at various points in States of the United States other than the State of Connecticut. The respondent has, at all times during the past several years, maintained a constant current of trade in said blankets, in commerce, among and between the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

At all times during the last several years, the respondent has been in substantial competition with other individuals and with firms and corporations likewise engaged in the business of selling and distributing, or of manufacturing, selling and distributing blankets, in commerce, among and between the several States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 2. On his letterheads and invoices, distributed throughout the various States of the United States to customers and prospective customers, the respondent prominently and conspicuously displays the legend:

LAWRENCE BLANKET MILLS

Manufacturers of

All Wool Camp and Institution Blankets

Mill at Wilsonville, Conn.

Findings

The use of the word "mills" in his trade name together with the statements "Mill at Wilsonville, Conn." and "Manufacturers of" on his letterheads and invoices, serve as representations to respondent's customers and the general buying public that the respondent owns, operates, or controls a mill wherein woolen materials are converted or manufactured into blankets.

PAR. 3. The respondent does not, in fact, own, operate, or control any mill or mills for the manufacture of blankets from the raw materials. Respondent is not engaged in the business of manufacturing and is not himself a manufacturer as those terms are understood by the trade and the purchasing public generally, but is solely in the business of selling and distributing blankets manufactured from the raw materials by others.

PAR. 4. A substantial portion of the wholesale and retail purchasers of blankets have a preference for dealing direct with the manufacturer of the products being purchased. Such purchasers believe that they secure closer prices, superior quality and other advantages in dealing direct with a manufacturer rather than a broker or middleman.

PAR. 5. In order to further induce the purchase of blankets he sells, respondent causes his blankets to be labeled "all wool" or "woolen," and as "fully shrunk." These designations serve as representations to customers, prospective customers, and the purchasing public generally, that said blankets are made of wool and are fully shrunk. The blankets labeled, advertised, and sold by respondent as "all wool" or "woolen" and "fully shrunk," are not composed wholly of wool and are not fully shrunk.

PAR. 6. A substantial portion of the purchasing public has a preference for blankets made wholly of wool over blankets made from materials other than wool or blankets that are only part wool.

PAR. 7. Many of respondent's competitors who manufacture, sell and distribute blankets do not in any way represent that said blankets are actually made from wool unless such is the fact.

Many of respondent's competitors who sell and distribute blankets do not manufacture the products sold by them and do not in any way represent that they are the manufacturers of said products.

PAR. 8. The false and misleading statements and representations made by respondent in designating himself as a manufacturer by the use of the word "Mills" in his trade name, and the expressions "Mill at Wilsonville, Conn." and "Manufacturers of" on his letterheads and invoices, and in labeling or describing the blankets he offers for sale and sells as "all wool" or "woolen" and "fully shrunk," have had and do have the capacity and tendency to mislead and deceive a substantial portion of the purchasing public into the erroneous belief that all of said representations are true. By said practices, respondent also places in the hands of wholesalers and retailers the means whereby said blankets are passed off to the purchasing public as all wool blankets. As a direct consequence of the mistaken and erroneous beliefs, induced by the false and misleading statements and representations above referred to, the consuming public has purchased a substantial volume of respondent's products with the result that trade has been unfairly diverted to the respondent from his competitors likewise engaged in the business of selling and distributing blankets, who truthfully advertise and represent the nature and character of their business and the nature and character of the materials used in the manufacture of their products. As a result thereof substantial injury has been and is now being done by respondent to competition, in commerce, among and between the various States of the United States and of the District of Columbia.

Order

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondent Israel Zelkind, trading as Lawrence Blanket Mills, are to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce, within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

This proceeding having been heard by the Federal Trade Commission upon the complaint of the Commission and the answer filed herein on December 16, 1936, by respondent, admitting all the material allegations of the complaint to be true and waiving the taking of further evidence and all other intervening procedure, and the Commission having made its findings as to the facts and its conclusion that said respondent has violated the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

It is ordered, That the respondent, Israel Zelkind, his representatives, agents, and employees, in connection with the offering for sale, sale, and distribution of blankets in interstate commerce or in the District of Columbia, do forthwith cease and desist from:

Order

1. The use of the word "woolen" or the words "all wool," alone or in conjunction with any other word or words, as descriptive of its blankets not made of wool, and from the use of the word "wool," or "woolen" or of any other word or words of similar meaning, in any way, so as to import or imply that the products to which the said word or words refer are composed of wool, when such is not the fact;

2. Representing that his blankets are "fully shrunk," when such is not the fact;

3. The use of the word "mills" as part of his trade name, and from the use of the word "mill," or "mills," or the words "manufacturers of," or of any other word or words of similar import in his business or advertising literature, or in any other way, so as to import or imply that he makes or manufactures the products which he sells, or that he actually owns and operates, or directly and absolutely controls the mill or mills or factory wherein said products are manufactured, when such is not the fact.

It is further ordered, That the respondent shall, within 60 days after service upon him of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which he has complied with this order.

Mr. PGad B. Morehouse for the Commission.

Mr. Paul Loewenthal, of Los Angeles, Calif., for respondent.

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled, "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that Quality Distillers, Inc., hereinafter referred to as respondent, has been and is using unfair methods of competition in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in said act, and in violation of the Act of Congress approved June 16, 1933, known as the "National Industrial Recovery Act," and it appearing to the said Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint, stating its charges in that respect as follows:

Count 1

PARAGRAPHS 1. Respondent is a corporation organized and existing and doing business under the laws of the State of California, with its office and principal place of business in Los Angeles, in the said

State. It is now, and since its organization in 1934 has been, engaged in the business of purchasing, rectifying, blending, and bottling whiskies, liqueurs, gins, and others spirituous beverages, and in the sale thereof in constant course of trade and commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia. In the course and conduct of its said business, it causes its said products when sold to be transported from its place of business in Los Angeles aforesaid into and through various other States of the United States to the purchasers thereof consisting of wholesalers and retailers, some located within the State of California and some located in other States of the United States and the District of Columbia. In the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid, respondent is now, and at all times since its organization has been, in substantial competition with other corporations and individuals, partnerships, and firms engaged in the manufacture by distillation of whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages and in the sale thereof in trade and commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia; and in the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid respondent is, and has been since its organization, in substantial competition with other corporations and with individuals, firms, and partnerships engaged in the business of purchasing, rectifying, blending, and bottling whiskies, liqueurs, gins, and other spirituous beverages and in the sale thereof in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid respondent has, upon its said premises, a still which it uses in the production of gin by a process of rectification whereby alcohol, purchased but not produced by respondent, is redistilled over juniper berries and other aromatics. Such rectification of alcoholic spirits does not make or constitute respondent a distiller, as defined by Section 3247 of the Revised Statutes regulating Internal Revenue, nor as commonly understood by the public and the liquor industry. For a long period of time the word "distillers" when used in connection with the liquor industry and with the products thereof has had and still has a definite significance and meaning to the minds of wholesalers and retailers in such industry and to the ultimate purchasing public, to wit, the manufacture of such liquors by the process of distillation from mash, wort, or wash, and a substantial portion of the purchasing public prefers to buy spirituous liquors bottled by the actual distillers and manufacturers thereof.

PAR. 3. In the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid, by the use of the word "Distillers" in its corporate name, printed on its stationery and on the labels attached to the bottles in which it sells and ships its said products, and in various other ways, respondent represents to its customers and furnishes them with the means of representing to their vendees, both retailers and the ultimate consuming public, that the said whiskies, gins, liqueurs, and other spirituous beverages therein contained were by it manufactured through the process of distillation from mash, wort, or wash, when, as a matter of fact respondent is not a distiller, does not distill the said whiskies, liqueurs, or other spirituous beverages by it so bottled, labeled, sold, and transported, and merely by the use of a still as aforesaid in the rectification of alcoholic spirits by redistillation over juniper berries and other aromatics, does not distill the gins by it so bottled, labeled, sold, and transported in the sense in which the word "distilled" is commonly accepted and understood by those engaged in the liquor trade and the public. Respondent does not own, operate, or control any place or places where such beverages are manufactured by the process of distillation from mash, wort, or wash.

PAR. 4. There are among the competitors of respondent engaged in the sale of spirituous beverages as mentioned in paragraph 1 hereof corporations, firms, partnerships, and individuals who manufacture and distill from mash, wort, or wash whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages sold by them and who truthfully use the words "distillery," "distilleries," "distillers," or "distilling" as a part of their corporate names and on their stationery and on the labels of the bottles in which they sell and ship such products. There are also among such competitors corporations, firms, partnerships, and individuals engaged in the business of rectifying, blending, and bottling whiskies, liqueurs, gins, and other spirituous beverages who do not use the words "distillery," "distilleries," "distilling," or "distillers" as a part of their corporate names, nor on their stationery, nor on the labels attached to the bottles in which they sell and ship their said products.

PAR. 5. The representation by respondent, as set forth in paragraph 3 hereof, is calculated to and has a capacity and tendency to and does mislead and deceive dealers and the purchasing public into the belief that the whiskies, liqueurs, gins, and other spirituous beverages sold by the respondent are manufactured and distilled by it from mash, wort, or wash and is calculated to and has the capacity and tendency to and does induce dealers and the purchasing public, acting in such belief, to purchase the whiskies, liqueurs, gins, and other spirituous beverages rectified, blended and bottled by the respondent, thereby diverting trade to respondent from its competitors who do not by their corporate name or in any other manner misrepresent that they are manufacturers by distillation from mash, wort, or wash of whiskies, liqueurs, gins, and other spirituous beverages, and thereby respondent does substantial injury to substantial competition in interstate commerce.

PAR. 6. The acts and things above alleged to have been done and the false representations alleged to have been made by respondent are to the prejudice of the public and the competitors of respondent and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress entitled, "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914.

Count 2

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent is a corporation organized and existing and doing business under the laws of the State of California, with its office and principal place of business in Los Angeles, in the said State. It is now, and since its organization in 1934 has been, engaged in the business of purchasing, rectifying, blending, and bottling whiskies, liqueurs, gins, and other spirituous beverages, and in the sale thereof in constant course of trade and commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia. In the course and conduct of its said business, it causes its said products when sold to be transported from its place of business in Los Angeles aforesaid into and through various other States of the United States to the purchasers thereof consisting of wholesalers and retailers, some located within the State of California and some located in other States of the United States and the District of Columbia. In the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid, respondent is now, and at all times since its organization has been, in substantial competition with other corporations and with individuals, partnerships, and firms engaged in the manufacture by distillation of whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages and in the sale thereof in trade and commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia; and in the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid respondent is, and has been since its organization, in substantial competition with other corporations and with individuals, firms, and partnerships engaged in the business of purchasing, rectifying, blending, and bottling whiskies, liqueurs, gins, and other spirituous beverages and in the sale thereof in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 6. Under and pursuant to Title I of the National Industrial Recovery Act, approved June 16, 1933 (48 Stat. 195 C. 90), the President of the United States, by Executive Order No. 6182, of June 26, 1933, as supplemented by Executive Order No. 6207, of July 21, 1933, and Executive Order No. 6345 of October 20, 1933, delegated to H. A. Wallace as Secretary of Agriculture, certain of the powers vested in the President of the United States by the aforesaid Act.

Under and pursuant to the delegation of such powers, the said Secretary of Agriculture pursuant to Section 3 (d) of the Act and Executive orders under the Act, upon his own motion presented a Code of Fair Competition for the Distilled Spirits Rectifying Industry after due notice and opportunity for hearing in connection therewith had been afforded interested parties, including respondent, in accordance with Title I of the National Industrial Recovery Act and applicable regulations issued thereunder, to the President of the United States who approved the same on the 9th day of December 1933, thereby constituting the said code a Code of Fair Competition within the meaning of the said National Industrial Recovery Act, for the regulation of the aforesaid industry.

In his written report to the President, the said Secretary of Agriculture made, among others, the following findings with respect to the said code in the following words, to wit:

That said Code will tend to effectuate the declared policy of Title I of the National Industrial Recovery Act as set forth in Section 1 of said Act in that the terms and provisions of such Code tend: (a) to remove obstructions to the free flow of foreign commerce, which tend to diminish the amount thereof; (b) to provide for the general welfare by promoting the organization of industry for the purposes of cooperative action among trade groups; (c) to eliminate unfair competitive practices; (d) to promote the fullest possible utilization of the present productive capacity of industries; (e) to avoid undue restriction of production (except as may be temporarily required); (f) to increase the consumption of industrial and agricultural products by increasing purchasing power; and (g) otherwise to rehabilitate industry.

By his approval of the said code on December 9, 1933, the President of the United States, pursuant to the authority vested in him by Title I of the National Industrial Recovery Act aforesaid, made and issued his certain written Executive order, wherein he adopted and approved the report, recommendations and findings of the said Secretary of Agriculture, and ordered that the said Code of Fair Competition be, and the same thereby was approved, and by virtue of the National Industrial Recovery Act aforesaid, the following provision of Article V of said Code became and still is one of the standards of fair competition for the Distilled Spirits Rectifying Industry and is binding upon every member of said Industry and this respondent:

The following practices constitute unfair methods of competition and shall not be engaged in by any member of the industry:

Section 1. False Advertising.—To publish or disseminate in any manner any false advertisement of any rectified product. Any advertisement shall be deemed to be false if it is untrue in any particular, or if directly or by ambiguity, omission or inference it tends to create a misleading impression.

PAR. 7. The use by respondent of the word "Distillers" in its corporate name, printed upon its stationery and on the labels attached to the bottles in which it sells and ships such products and in various other ways, constitutes false advertising within the meaning of the aforesaid provision of said Article V and tends to and does create the misleading impression that respondent is engaged in the business of distilling spirits from mash, wort or wash and that the spirituous beverages by it so sold and transported have been bottled at a distillery by the original distillers thereof, all contrary to the provisions of Section 1, Article V, of the Code aforesaid.

PAR. 8. The above alleged methods, acts and practices of the respondent are and have been in violation of the standard of fair competition for the Distilled Spirits Rectifying Industry of the United States. Such violation of such standard in the aforesaid transactions in interstate commerce and other transactions which affect interstate commerce in the manner set forth in paragraph 5 of count 1 hereof, are in violation of Section 3 of Title I of the National Industrial Recovery Act and they are unfair methods of competition in commerce within the meaning of the Federal Trade Commission Act as amended.

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

This proceeding having come on to be heard by the Federal Trade Commission upon the complaint hereinbefore issued and served upon Quality Distillers, Inc., respondent herein, and the said respondent's written answer made thereto, waiving the taking of testimony, findings as to the facts, filing of briefs, oral argument and all other intervening procedure, and consenting that an order shall issue herein for it to cease and desist from methods of competition charged in the complaint, and the Commission being fully advised in the premises, having thereupon concluded that respondent has violated Section 5 of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

It is now ordered, That the respondent, Quality Distillers, Inc., its officers, representatives, agents and employees, in connection with the sale, offering for sale and distribution in interstate commerce and in the District of Columbia of whiskies, gins, and all other alcoholic beverages, except gins by it produced through a process of rectification whereby alcohol purchased but not produced by respondent is redistilled over juniper berries and other aromatics, do cease and desist from:

Representing through the use of the word "Distillers" in its corporate name, on its stationery, advertising, or on the labels attached to the bottles in which it sells and ships its said products, or in any other way by word or words of like import, that (a) It is a distiller of whiskies, gins and other alcoholic beverages; or (b) the said whiskies, gins, and other alcoholic beverages were by it manufactured through the process of distillation; or (c) it owns, operates, or controls a place or places where such beverages are manufactured by the process of distillation, unless and until the said respondent shall own, operate, or control a place or places where such whiskies, gins, and other alcoholic beverages are by it manufactured through a process of original and continuous distillation from mash, wort, or wash, through continuous closed pipes and vessels until the manufacture thereof is completed.

It is further ordered, That the aforesaid complaint be, and the same is hereby dismissed as to count 2 thereof.

It is further ordered, That the said respondent within 60 days from and after the date of the service upon it of this order, shall file with the Commission a report or reports in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which it is complying and has complied with the order to cease and desist hereinabove set forth.

COMPLAINT

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent is an individual, doing business under the name and style West Coast Distilleries Co., with principal office and place of business in the city of San Francisco, in the State of California. He is now, and since April 1934, has been engaged in the business of purchasing, rectifying, blending, and bottling whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages in a rectifying plant, under a rectifier's permit and in the sale thereof in constant course of trade and commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia. In the course and conduct of his said business he causes his said products when sold to be transported from his place of business aforesaid into and through various States of the United States to the purchasers thereof, consisting of wholesalers and distributors, some located within the State of California and some located in other States of the United States and the District of Columbia, and to some located in Waiakea-Hilo, Hawaii. In the course and conduct of his business as aforesaid, respondent is now, and since April 1934, has been in substantial competition with corporations and with other individuals, partnerships, and firms engaged in the manufacture by true distillation of whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages from mash, wort, or wash, and in the sale thereof in trade and commerce between and among the various States of the United States, in the District of Columbia and in Hawaii; and in the course and conduct of his business as aforesaid respondent is, and since April 1934, has been in substantial competition with corporations and with other individuals, firms, and partnerships engaged in the business of purchasing, rectifying, blending, and bottling whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages in rectifying plants under rectifiers' permits and in the sale thereof in commerce between and among the various States of the United States, in the District of Columbia, and in Hawaii.

PAR. 2. Upon the premises of respondent's place of business aforesaid, there is a still for use in the production of gins by a process of rectification whereby alcohol, purchased but not produced by respondent, is redistilled over juniper berries and other aromatics. Such rectification of alcoholic spirits does not make or constitute respondent a distillery or a distiller, as defined by Section 3247 of the Revised Statutes regulating Internal Revenue, nor as commonly understood by the public and the liquor industry. For a long period of time the word "distilleries" when used in connection with the liquor industry and with the products thereof has had and still has a definite significance and meaning to the minds of the wholesalers and retailers in such industry and to the ultimate purchasing public, to wit, places where such alcoholic liquors are manufactured by an original and continuous distillation from mash, wort, or wash, through continuous closed pipes and vessels until the manufacture thereof is complete, and a substantial portion of the purchasing public prefers to buy spirituous liquors bottled and prepared by the actual distillers and manufacturers thereof.

PAR. 3. In the course and conduct of his business as aforesaid, by the use of the word "Distilleries" in his trade name, printed on his stationery and on the labels attached to the bottles in which he sells and ships his said products, and in various other ways, respondent represents to his customers and furnishes them with the means of representing to their vendees, both retailers and the ultimate consuming public, that the said whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages therein contained were by him manufactured through the process of distillation from mash, wort, or wash, when, as a matter of fact, respondent is not a distiller, does not distill the said whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages by him so bottled, labeled, sold, and transported, and merely by the use of a still operated by him as aforesaid in the rectification of alcoholic spirits by redistillation over juniper berries and other aromatics, does not distill the whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages by him so bottled, labeled, sold, and transported in the sense in which the word "distilled" is commonly accepted and understood by those engaged in the liquor trade and the public. Respondent does not own, operate, or control any place or places where such alcoholic beverages are manufactured by a process of original and continuous distillation from mash, wort, or wash.

PAR. 4. There are among the competitors of respondent engaged in the sale of spirituous beverages, as mentioned in paragraph 1 hereof, corporations, firms, partnerships, and individuals who manufacture and distill from mash, wort or wash whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages sold by them and who truthfully use the words "distillery," "distilleries," "distillers," or "distilling" as a part of their corporate or trade names and on their stationery, advertising, and on the labels of the bottles in which they sell and ship such products. There are also among such competitors corporations, firms, partnerships, and individuals engaged in the business of purchasing, rectifying, blending, and bottling whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages in rectifying plants under rectifiers' permits who do not use the words "distillery," "distilleries," "distilling," or "distillers" as a part of their corporate or trade names, nor on their stationery, advertising, nor on the labels attached to the bottles in which they sell and ship their said products.

PAR. 5. The representation by respondent, as set forth in paragraph 3 hereof, is calculated to and has a capacity and tendency to and does mislead and deceive dealers and the purchasing public into the belief that the whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages sold by the respondent are manufactured and distilled by him from mash, wort, or wash by one continuous process and is calculated to and has the capacity and tendency to and does induce dealers and the purchasing public, acting in such belief, to purchase the whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages rectified and bottled by the respondent, thereby diverting trade to respondent from his competitors who do not by their corporate or trade name or in any other manner misrepresent that they are manufacturers by distillation from mash, wort, or wash of whiskies, gins, or other spirituous beverages, and thereby respondent does substantial injury to substantial competition in interstate commerce.

PAR. 6. The acts and things above alleged to have been done and the false representations alleged to have been made by respondent are to the prejudice of the public and the competitors of respondent and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914.

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent is an individual, doing business under the name and style West Coast Distilleries Co., with principal office and place of business in the city of San Francisco, in the State of California. He is now, and since April 1934, has been engaged in the business of purchasing, rectifying, blending, and bottling whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages in a rectifying plant, under a rectifier's permit, and in the sale thereof in constant course of trade and commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia. In the course and conduct of his said business he causes his said products when sold to be transported from his place of business aforesaid into and through various States of the United States to the purchasers thereof, consisting of wholesalers and distributors, some located within the State of California and some located in other States of the United States and the District of Columbia, and to some located in Waiakea-Hilo, Hawaii. In the course and conduct of his business as aforesaid, respondent is now, and since April 1934, has been in substantial competition with corporations and with other individuals, partnerships, and firms engaged in the manufacture by true distillation of whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages from mash, wort, or wash, and in the sale thereof in trade and commerce between and among the various States of the United States, in the District of Columbia, and in Hawaii; and in the course and conduct of his business as aforesaid respondent is, and since April 1934, has been in substantial competition with corporations and with other individuals, firms, and partnerships engaged in the business of purchasing, rectifying, blending, and bottling whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages in rectifying plants under rectifiers' permits and in the sale thereof in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PARS. 2, 3, 4 and 5. As grounds for these paragraphs of this complaint, the Federal Trade Commission relies upon the matters and things set out in paragraphs 2, 3, 4, and 5 of count 1 of this complaint to the same extent as though the several allegations thereof were set out at length and in separate paragraphs herein, and the said paragraphs 2, 3, 4, and 5 of count 1 of this complaint are incorporated herein by reference and adopted as the allegations of paragraphs 2, 3, 4, and 5, respectively, of this count, and are hereby charged as fully and as completely as though the several averments of the said paragraphs of count 1 were separately set out and repeated verbatim.

PAR. 6. Under and pursuant to Title I of the National Industrial Recovery Act, approved June 16, 1933 (48 Stat. 195 C. 90), the President of the United States, by Executive Order No. 6182, of June 26, 1933, as supplemented by Executive Order No. 6207, of July 21, 1933, and Executive Order No. 6345, of October 20, 1933, delegated to H. A. Wallace as Secretary of Agriculture certain of the powers vested in the President of the United States by the aforesaid Act.

Under and pursuant to the delegation of such powers, the said Secretary of Agriculture pursuant to Section 3 (d) of the Act and Executive orders under the Act, upon his own motion presented a Code of Fair Competition for the Distilled Spirits Rectifying Industry after due notice and opportunity for hearing in connection therewith had been afforded interested parties, including respondent, in accordance with Title I of the National Industrial Recovery Act and applicable regulations issued thereunder, to the President of the United States who approved the same on the 9th day of December 1933, thereby constituting the said code a Code of Fair Competition within the meaning of the said National Industrial Recovery Act, for the regulation of the aforesaid industry.

In his written report to the President, the said Secretary of Agriculture made, among others, the following findings with respect to the said Code in the following words, to wit:

That said Code will tend to effectuate the declared policy of Title I of the National Industrial Recovery Act as set forth in Section 1 of said Act in that the terms and provisions of such Code tend: (a) to remove obstructions to the free flow of foreign commerce, which tend to diminish the amount thereof; (b) to provide for the general welfare by promoting the organization of industry for the purposes of cooperative action among trade groups; (c) to eliminate unfair competitive practices; (d) to promote the fullest possible utilization of the present productive capacity of industries; (e) to avoid undue restriction of production (except as may be temporarily required); (f) to increase the consumption of industrial and agricultural products by increasing purchasing power; and (g) otherwise to rehabilitate industry.

By his approval of the said code on December 9, 1933, the President of the United States, pursuant to the authority vested in him by Title I of the National Industrial Recovery Act aforesaid, made and issued his certain written Executive order, wherein he adopted and approved the report, recommendations, and findings of the said Secretary of Agriculture, and ordered that the said Code of Fair Competition be, and the same thereby was approved, and by virtue of the National Industrial Recovery Act aforesaid, the following provision of Article V of said Code became and still is one of the standards of fair competition for the Distilled Spirits Rectifying Industry and is binding upon every member of said industry and this respondent:

The following practices constitute unfair methods of competition and shall not be engaged in by any member of the industry:

Section 1. False Advertising.—To publish or disseminate in any manner any false advertisement of any rectified product. Any advertisement shall be deemed to be false if it is untrue in any particular, or if directly or by ambiguity, omission or inference it tends to create a misleading impression.

PAR. 7. The use by respondent of the word "Distilleries" in his trade name, printed on his stationery and on the labels attached to the bottles in which he sells and ships such products and in various other ways, constitutes false advertising within the meaning of the aforesaid provision of said Article V and tends to and does create the misleading impression that respondent is engaged in the business of distilling whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages from mash, wort or wash and that the whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages by him so sold and transported have been bottled by the original distillers thereof and have been produced by a true process of distillation from mash, wort, or wash, all contrary to the provisions of Section 1, Article V, of the Code aforesaid.

PAR. 8. The above alleged methods, acts, and practices of the respondent are and have been in violation of the standard of fair competition for the Distilled Spirits Rectifying Industry of the United States. Such violation of such standard in the aforesaid transactions in interstate commerce and other transactions which affect interstate commerce in the manner set forth in paragraph 5 of count 1 hereof, are in violation of Section 3 of Title I of the National Industrial Recovery Act and they are unfair methods of competition in commerce within the meaning of the Federal Trade Commission Act as amended.

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

This proceeding having come on to be heard by the Federal Trade Commission upon the complaint hereinbefore issued and served upon Charles B. Trull, trading as West Coast Distilleries Company, respondent herein, and the said respondent's written answer made thereto, waiving the taking of testimony, findings as to the facts, filing of briefs, oral argument and all other intervening procedure, and consenting that an order shall issue herein for him to cease and desist from methods of competition charged in the complaint, and the Commission being fully advised in the premises, having thereupon concluded that respondent has violated Section 5 of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

It is now ordered, That the respondent, Charles B. Trull, trading as West Coast Distilleries Company, his agents and employees, in connection with the sale, offering for sale and distribution in interstate commerce and in the District of Columbia of whiskies, gins, and all other alcoholic beverages, except gins by him produced through a process of rectification whereby alcohol purchased but not produced by respondent is redistilled over juniper berries and other aromatics, do cease and desist from:

Representing through the use of the word "Distilleries," in his trade name, on his stationery, advertising, or on the labels attached to the bottles in which he sells and ships his said products, or in any other way by word or words of like import, that (a) he is a distiller of whiskies, gins, and other alcoholic beverages; or (b) the said whiskies, gins, and other alcoholic beverages were by him manufactured through the process of distillation, unless and until the said respondent shall own, operate, or control a place or places where such whiskies, gins, and other alcoholic beverages are by him manufactured through a process of original and continuous distillation from mash, wort, or wash, through continuous closed pipes and vessels until the manufacture thereof is completed.

It is further ordered, That the said complaint be, and the same is hereby dismissed as to count 2 thereof.

Order

It is further ordered, That the said respondent within 60 days from and after the date of the service upon him of this order, shall file with the Commission a report or reports in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which he is complying and has complied with the order to cease and desist hereinabove set forth.

MOUNT ROSE DISTILLING COMPANY

COMPLAINT AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION OF SEC. 5
OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 26, 1914

Docket 2489. Complaint, July 3, 1935—Order, Feb. 2, 1937

Consent order requiring respondent corporation, its officers, etc., in connection with sale or offer, in interstate commerce and in District of Columbia, of whiskies, gins, and other alcoholic beverages produced by it, but excepting gins produced by it through process of rectification whereby alcohol purchased, but not produced, by it is redistilled as specified, to cease and desist from representing, through use of word "Distilling" in its corporate name and on its stationery, advertising, etc., or in any other way, that it is a distiller of whiskies, gins, or other alcoholic beverages or that said whiskies, etc., were by it made through process of distillation or that it owns, operates, or controls a place where such products are thus made, unless and until it shall own, operate, or control a place or places where such products are by it manufactured through process of original and continuous distillation from mash, wort, or wash through continuous closed pipes and vessels until manufacture is complete.

Mr. PGad B. Morehouse for the Commission.

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled, "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that Mount Rose Distilling Company, a corporation, hereinafter referred to as respondent, has been and is using unfair methods of competition in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in said act, and it appearing to the said Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint, stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent is a corporation organized, existing, and doing business under the laws of the State of New Jersey, with its office and principal place of business in the city of Trenton, in said State. It is now, and for more than one year last past has been, engaged in the business of producing and bottling gins in a rectifying plant and in the sale thereof in constant course of trade and commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia. In the course and conduct of its said business it causes its said products when sold to be transported from its place of business aforesaid into and through various other States of the United States to the purchasers thereof, consisting of wholesalers and retailers located in other States of the United States and the District of Columbia. In the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid, respondent is now, and for more than one year last past has been, in substantial competition with other corporations and with individuals, partnerships, and firms engaged in the manufacture by true distillation of gins from mash, wort, or wash and in the sale thereof in trade and commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia; and in the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid respondent is, and has been for more than one year last past, in substantial competition with other corporations and with individuals, firms, and partnerships engaged in the business of producing and bottling gins and in the sale thereof in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 2. Upon the premises of respondent's place of business aforesaid, there are stills which respondent uses in the production of gins by a process of rectification whereby alcohol, purchased but not produced by respondent, is redistilled over juniper berries and other aromatics. Such rectification of alcoholic spirits does not make or constitute respondent a distiller, as defined by Section 3247 of the Revised Statutes regulating Internal Revenue, nor as commonly understood by the public and the liquor industry. For a long period of time the word "distilling" when used in connection with the liquor industry and with the products thereof has had and still has a definite significance and meaning to the minds of wholesalers and retailers in such industry and to the ultimate purchasing public, to wit, the manufacturing of such liquors by the process of distillation from mash, wort, or wash, and a substantial portion of the purchasing public prefers to buy gins produced by a process of original and continuous distillation from mash, wort, or wash prepared and bottled by the distillers.

PAR. 3. In the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid, by the use of the word "Distilling" in its corporate name printed on its stationery, advertising matter, and on the labels attached to the bottles in which it sells and ships its said products, and in various other ways, respondent represents to its customers and furnishes them with the means of representing to their vendees, both retailers and the ultimate consuming public, that the said gins therein contained were by it manufactured through a true process of distillation from mash, wort, or wash, when, as a matter of fact, respondent is not a distiller, does not distill the said gins by it so bottled, labeled, sold, and transported, and merely by the use of stills operated by it as aforsaid in the rectification of alcoholic spirits by redistillation over juniper berries and other aromatics, does not distill the gins by it so bottled, labeled, sold, and transported in the sense in which the word "distilled" is commonly accepted and understood by those engaged in the liquor trade and the public. Respondent does not own, operate, or control any place or places where such beverages are manufactured by a true process of distillation from mash, wort, or wash, and said gins are not produced and bottled in a distillery.

PAR. 4. There are among the competitors of respondent engaged in the sale of spirituous beverages as mentioned in paragraph 1 hereof corporations, firms, partnerships, and individuals who distill from mash, wort, or wash gins sold by them and who truthfully use the words "distillery," "distilleries," "distillers," or "distilling" as a part of their corporate or trade names and on their stationery, advertising, and on the labels of the bottles in which they sell and ship such products. There are also among such competitors corporations, firms, partnerships, and individuals who manufacture and produce gins by a process of rectification similar to that used by this respondent and who do not use the words "distillery," "distilleries," "distilling," or "distillers" as a part of their corporate or trade names, nor on their stationery, advertising, nor on the labels attached to the bottles in which they sell and ship their said products.

PAR. 5. The representation by respondent, as set forth in paragraph 3 hereof, is calculated to and has a capacity and tendency to and does mislead and deceive dealers and the purchasing public into the belief that respondent is a distiller and that the gins sold by the respondent are produced by a true process of distillation by it from mash, wort, or wash, and is calculated to and has the capacity and tendency to and does induce dealers and the purchasing public, acting in such belief, to purchase the gins manufactured and bottled by the respondent, thereby diverting trade to respondent from its competitors who do not by their corporate or trade name or in any other manner misrepresent that they are distillers, and thereby respondent does substantial injury to substantial competition in interstate commerce.

PAR. 6. The acts and things above alleged to have been done and the false representations alleged to have been made by respondent are to the prejudice of the public and the competitors of respondent, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress entitled, "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914.

Order

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

This proceeding having come on to be heard by the Federal Trade Commission upon the complaint hereinbefore issued and served upon Mount Rose Distilling Company, respondent herein, and the said respondent's written answer made thereto, waiving the taking of testimony, findings as to the facts, filing of briefs, oral argument and all other intervening procedure, and consenting that an order shall issue herein for it to cease and desist from methods of competition charged in the complaint, and the Commission being fully advised in the premises, having thereupon concluded that respondent has violated Section 5 of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled, "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

It is now ordered, That respondent, Mount Rose Distilling Company, its officers, representatives, agents, and employees, in connection with the sale, offering for sale, and distribution in interstate commerce and in the District of Columbia of whiskies, gins, and all other alcoholic beverages, except gins by it produced through a process of rectification whereby alcohol purchased but not produced by respondent is redistilled over juniper berries and other aromatics, do cease and desist from:

Representing through the use of the word "Distilling" in its corporate name, on its stationery, advertising, or on the labels attached to the bottles in which it sells and ships its said products, or in any other way by word or words of like import, that (a) it is a distiller of whiskies, gins, and other alcoholic beverages; or (b) the said whiskies, gins, and other alcoholic beverages were by its manufactured through the process of distillation; or (c) it owns, operates, or controls a place or places where such beverages are manufactured by the process of distillation, unless and until the said respondent shall own, operate, or control a place or places where such whiskies, gins, and other alcoholic beverages are by it manufactured through a process of original and continuous distillation from mash, wort, or wash, through continuous closed pipes and vessels until the manufacture thereof is completed.

It is further ordered, That the said respondent, within 60 days from and after the date of the service upon it of this order, shall file with the Commission a report or reports in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which it is complying and has complied with the order to cease and desist hereinabove set forth.

DANIEL R. HODGDON AND NATIONAL FOOD BUREAU, INC.

COMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION
OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 28, 1914

Docket 2539. Complaint, Aug. 30, 1935—Decision, Feb. 2, 1937

Where an individual, who represented himself as a food expert, and a corporation, which he headed, directed and controlled, engaged in advertising food products through newspaper articles and through radio addresses which were broadcast from a New York station and which were heard and understood by purchasers or prospective purchasers located in various other States and in the District of Columbia, and in thus advertising a certain brand of peanut oil, made in Virginia and distributed and sold by the manufacturer to dealers and the general public among the various States and in the aforesaid District, and constituting, in the conduct of their said advertising campaign, instrumentalities of interstate commerce, by causing, aiding, or assisting in the shipment of the product in question from the aforesaid State to purchasers or prospective purchasers elsewhere located, and, as such, engaged in such commerce, and engaged in the conduct of their said activities in active and open competition with other advertising agencies and advertisers and instrumentalities for advertising in interstate commerce, who do not misrepresent the articles of trade and commerce which they promote and advertise and the professional status of the person or persons delivering radio addresses to the public,—

- (a) Represented, in said radio addresses and other advertising, that corn oil or cottonseed oil or food products made therefrom were cheap commodities which were unwholesome, impure, deleterious to health, and unfit for human consumption, and that peanut oil, or food products made therefrom, were superior, in the matter of digestibility or dietetics, to the others, and delivered such radio lectures in such a manner as would lead a listener to the erroneous belief that the aforesaid individual, referred to frequently by the announcer as "Doctor," was such, and a physician, through such statements, among others, as "It means that the market is flooded today with food concoctions, dietetical monstrosities, and cheap glucose filled candies; cottonseed oil; with stearic acid salad oils; and a lot of other junk * * *, preparing the way to death and destruction * * *," "If food is cooked in cooking oil, it may be that the cooking oil contains a large amount of stearic acid, or is composed chiefly of cottonseed oil * * *," all of which "things tend to destroy the child's appetite * * *"; and
- (b) Referred to competitors who sell articles made from cottonseed oil, corn oil and other vegetable oils as "racketeers," and to persons who sell two oils first mentioned as "cheap food swindlers," and to the products of competitors, including cottonseed oil and corn oil, as containing a substance comparable to a tallow candle, through such statements as that such competitors are "Racketeers * * * who make money * * * out of * * * salad oils which are compounds of sunflower seed oil, cottonseed oil, corn oil," and "These food swindlers had filled these cans cheaply with cottonseed oil which had been produced in the United States," and "It may be saturated with stearic acid, a substance that is so hard that its melting point is far above the temperature of the body. It has not any more value than eating a tallow candle";

Facts being that peanut, cottonseed and corn oils are all pure, wholesome foods of approximately the same chemical consistency and approximately 98% digestible, and, according to chemists, dietitians and experts on home economics, of equal food value and, as sold to public for food purposes, not to be distinguished except through chemical analysis, products of competitors of the manufacturer of the peanut oil thus promoted and advertised were not dietetical monstrosities, cheap concoctions, unfit for human consumption, did not have a large amount of stearic acid, etc., competitors selling articles made from cottonseed, corn and other vegetable oils were not racketeers or cheap food swindlers, such various articles were not comparable to a tallow candle, and aforesaid various other representations were likewise false and misleading, and delivery of such lectures in a way calculated to create the impression on the public that said individual was a physician disseminating medical advice was decidedly unfair to manufacturers and distributors of corn and cottonseed products throughout the United States, and to the other advertising agencies shunning such practices;

With capacity and tendency to mislead and deceive many members of the trade and public through such false, deceptive, misleading, and defamatory statements and representations, and induce them to refrain from buying competing brands of salad or cooking oil made from cottonseed oil, corn oil, and other oils, in the belief that such various statements were true, and with effect of unfairly diverting trade to manufacturers of brand of peanut oil thus advertised and sold from competitors engaged in sale and distribution of other brands of peanut, corn, or cottonseed oils in interstate commerce and who do not make such misleading and disparaging statements, and with capacity to divert unfairly trade to said individual and corporation from competitors who do not make such false, deceptive, disparaging, and misleading statements in referring to the articles advertised or promoted by them, or make misleading statements or representations regarding their professional status; to the substantial injury of competition and substantial competitors in commerce:

Held, That such acts and practices were to the prejudice of the public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition.

Before Mr. John J. Keenan, trial examiner.

Mr. James M. Hammond for the Commission.

Mr. Daniel Jacobson, of New York City, for respondents.

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that Daniel R.

Complaint

Hodgdon, an individual, and the National Food Bureau, Inc., hereinafter referred to as the respondents, have been and are using unfair methods of competition in "commerce" as defined in said act, and it appearing to said Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues this its complaint, stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. One of the respondents herein, Daniel R. Hodgdon, is an individual representing himself to the public to be an expert on the quality and fitness of food for human consumption, having his place of business at 1697 Broadway, in the city of New York. The other respondent, the National Food Bureau, Inc., is a corporation organized in and existing pursuant to the laws of the State of Pennsylvania, having its principal place of business at 1697 Broadway, New York City, N. Y. The respondent, Daniel R. Hodgdon, is, and for a long time last past, has been, president and treasurer of the respondent National Food Bureau, Inc., and is joined herein individually, as it is unknown when and at what times during the continuation of the acts and practices complained of herein he functions or functioned individually and when he functions or functioned as an officer, employee, or agent of the respondent National Food Bureau, Inc. These respondents are now, and have been for a long time last past, jointly or severally engaged for hire in the business of promoting or having promoted the sale of articles of food for human consumption by advertising the sale of the same through the medium of radio addresses, books, newspapers, pamphlets, or circulars, which are circulated among persons, firms, corporations, and partnerships; some of whom are located in the State of New York and others in various other States of the United States and the District of Columbia. The radio addresses made or caused to be made by respondents are susceptible of being heard and are or have been heard and understood by persons who are or have been purchasers or are prospective purchasers of the foods so promoted and advertised, some of whom are located in the State of New York and others located in the various States of the United States and the District of Columbia.

PAR. 2. One of the foods so promoted and advertised by the respondents herein, in the manner described in paragraph 1 hereof, is a peanut oil sold under the trade name of "Planters Hi-Hat Oil," which is manufactured in the State of Virginia and distributed and sold to dealers and to the general public located in and among the various States of the United States and the District of Columbia, and the respondents herein in conducting or having conducted said radio broadcasts and having circulated or caused to be circulated said newspapers, newspaper articles, books, pamphlets, and circulars in interstate commerce in furtherance of the sale of the said "Planters Hi-Hat Oil" are instrumentalities of and engaged or have been engaged in interstate commerce by causing, aiding or assisting in the shipment of this product from the State of Virginia to purchasers or prospective purchasers thereof located in other State or States of the United States, and there has been for a long time last past a constant current of trade and commerce in said product as a result, either wholly or in part, of the representations made by respondents in said radio addresses, books, circulars, newspapers, or pamphlets, and respondents assert or have asserted in said radio talks, books, circulars, newspapers, and other advertisements that other vegetable oils sold in open competition in interstate commerce are inferior to "Planters Hi-Hat Oil" by stating, among other things, words, and utterances to the effect that:

(a) It means that the market is flooded today with food concoctions, dietetical monstrosities and cheap glucose filled candies; cottonseed oil; with stearic acid salad oils; and a lot of other junk made for human consumption and at the same time, preparing the way to death and destruction of human beings.

(b) If food is cooked in cooking oil, it may be that the cooking oil contains a large amount of stearic acid, or is composed chiefly of cottonseed oil, or that irritating fatty acids are present in overabundance. All of these things tend to destroy the child's appetite for his regular meals.

(c) (That competitors are) racketeers * * * who make money * * * out of * * * salad oils which are compounds of sunflower seed oil, cottonseed oil, corn oil.

(d) These food swindlers had filled these cans cheaply with cottonseed oil which had been produced in the United States.

(e) It may be saturated with stearic acid, a substance that is so hard that its melting point is far above the temperature of the body. It has not any more value than eating a tallow candle.

These statements are false and misleading, and tend to disparage and defame the products of competitors in that, either directly or by innuendo, they assert, imply, intimate, or suggest that:

(a) The products of the competitors of "Planters Hi-Hat Oil" are dietetical monstrosities, are cheap concoctions unfit for human consumption and that the consumption of foods made from such products, including cottonseed oil and corn oil, will cause death and destruction to human beings;

(b) If a food is cooked in vegetable oil other than "Planters Hi-Hat Oil," it will contain a large amount of stearic acid or free fatty acid composed chiefly of cottonseed oil, which will destroy a child's appetite for his regular meals;

(c) Competitors who sell articles manufactured from cottonseed oil, corn oil and other vegetable oils are racketeers;

(d) Persons who sell cottonseed oil and corn oil are cheap food swindlers;

When in truth and in fact the products of competitors of "Planters Hi-Hat Oil" are not diatetical monstrosities, are not cheap concoctions unfit for human consumption and that the consumption of foods made from such products including cottonseed oil and corn oil, will not cause death and destruction of human beings; do not have a large amount of stearic acid or free fatty acid and will not destroy a child's appetite for his regular meals; that competitors who sell articles manufactured from cottonseed oil, corn oil and other vegetable oils are not racketeers or cheap food swindlers and that such articles of food, including cottonseed oil and corn oil, are not comparable to a tallow candle.

PAR. 3. In the course and conduct of their said business the respondents are now, and have been for a long time last past, thus advertising and promoting, orally by radio and through the medium of books, newspapers, circulars, and printed articles the vegetable oil or peanut oil known and described as "Planters Hi-Hat Oil," which article is in substantial competition with the products of other individuals, partnerships, and corporations engaged in the sale of vegetable oils between and among the various States of the United States and the District of Columbia.

PAR. 4. There are many competitors of "Planters Hi-Hat Oil," the sale of which is advertised and promoted by respondents, who sell similar salad oils, cottonseed oil, corn oil, and peanut oil, who do not misrepresent their products or disparage the products of their competitors, and the use by respondents of the false, deceptive, misleading, and defamatory statements and representations hereinbefore set out is calculated to, and does, have the capacity and tendency to mislead and deceive many members of the trade and public, and induce them to refrain from buying competing brands of salad or cooking oil made from cottonseed oil, corn oil and other oils, in the belief that the statements made by respondents, as set out in paragraph 2 hereof, are true, and tends to and does unfairly divert trade to the manufacturers of "Planters Hi-Hat Oil" from competitors engaged in the sale and distribution of other brands of peanut oil, corn oil, or cottonseed oil in interstate commerce who do not make such misleading and disparaging statements, whereby substantial injury is done to substantial competition in interstate commerce.

tising agencies and instrumentalities for advertising in interstate commerce who do not misrepresent the articles of trade and commerce which they promote and advertise, and the use by respondents of false, deceptive, disparaging, and misleading statements in connection with the articles which respondents do promote and advertise is calculated to and does have the capacity of unfairly diverting trade to respondents from competitors who do not make such false, deceptive, disparaging, and misleading statements in referring to articles so advertised or promoted, whereby substantial injury is done to substantial competition in interstate commerce.

PAR. 5. The above alleged acts and practices of the respondents are each and all of them to the prejudice of the public and competitors of the article of food known as "Planters Hi-Hat Oil" and competitors of respondent, and constitute unfair methods of competition in interstate commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, on August 30, 1935, issued and on September 3, 1935, served its complaint in this proceeding, upon respondents, Daniel R. Hodgdon, an individual, and National Food Bureau, Inc., a corporation, charging them with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of the provisions of said act.

After the issuance of said complaint, and the filing of respondents' joint answer thereto, testimony and other evidence in support of the allegations on said complaint were introduced by James M. Hammond, attorney for the Commission, before J. J. Keenan, an examiner of the Commission, theretofore duly designated by it, and in opposition to the allegations of the complaint by Daniel Jacobson, attorney for the respondents; and said testimony and other evidence were duly recorded and filed in the office of the Commission. Thereafter, this proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on the said complaint, the answer thereto, testimony and other evidence, brief in support of the complaint and the oral arguments of counsel aforesaid; and the Commission having duly considered the same, and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public, and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH. 1. One of the respondents herein, Daniel R. Hodgdon, is an individual representing himself to the public as being an expert on the quality and fitness of food for human consumption, having his place of business at 328 Greenwich Street, in the city of New York. The other respondent, the National Food Bureau, Inc., is a corporation organized in and existing pursuant to the laws of the State of New York, having its principal place of business at the same address. The respondent, Daniel R. Hodgdon, at the time of filing the complaint in this proceeding, and for a long time prior thereto, was president and treasurer of the respondent, National Food Bureau, Inc., and he directed and controlled its business operations.

It is unknown when and at what times during the continuation of the acts and practices complained of herein the respondent Hodgdon functioned individually and when he functioned as an officer, employee or agent of the respondent, National Food Bureau, Inc. These respondents are now and have been for a long time jointly and severally engaged for hire in the business of promoting the sale of articles of food for human consumption by advertising the sale of the same through the medium of radio addresses and newspaper articles which are directed to or circulated among persons, firms, corporations, and partnerships; some of which are located in the State of New York and others in various other States of the United States. The radio addresses which are the principal matters involved herein, made or caused to be made by respondents, were susceptible of being heard and have been heard and understood by persons who are or have been purchasers or prospective purchasers of the food so promoted and advertised, some of whom are located in the State of New York and others are located in various other States of the United States and the District of Columbia.

PAR. 2. All of the radio talks hereinafter referred to were made over radio station WMCA at New York City. It is operated by the Knickerbocker Broadcasting Company, Inc., of 1697 Broadway, New York City, under license issued by the United States Government. This station has sufficient power and range to permit the matter broadcasted to be heard within a radius of one hundred miles of New York City and into several adjacent States. All of the addresses in question were delivered by the respondent, Hodgdon in person, from this station and all of the addresses containing the disparaging statements referred to herein are in evidence as exhibits in the proceeding.

Some of them consist of the original continuities filed by the respondents with the broadcasting company at the time the lectures were delivered and some were copied into the record from phonograph records made at the time the lectures were being given. All of the lectures relate to the advertisement and promotion of the sale of food or food products of which peanut oil was one of several. The preparation of these lectures was left by the manufacturer of the peanut oil involved entirely to the respondents who functioned as independent contractors for the preparation and sale of advertising matter. During the course of these lectures the respondent Hodgdon was frequently referred to by the announcer as "Doctor" and the lectures were delivered in a manner which would lead a listener to believe that the individual respondent was a medical doctor as the context of the lectures dealt with dietetical matters and the digestibility and fitness of foods for human consumption.

PAR. 3. The brand of peanut oil involved is manufactured in the State of Virginia and distributed and sold by the manufacturer to dealers and to the general public located among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia, and the respondents herein, in conducting said broadcasts in interstate commerce, in furtherance of the sale of said peanut oil and in conducting the advertising campaign pertaining to the same, are instrumentalities of and engaged in interstate commerce by causing, aiding, or assisting in the shipment of this product from the State of Virginia to purchasers or prospective purchasers thereof located in other States of the United States and in the sale of or the dissemination and distribution of the said advertising matter including the radio advertising referred to herein. There has been for a long time last past, a constant current of trade and commerce in said peanut oil and advertising matter, as a result, either wholly or in part, of the representations made by respondents in said radio addresses and advertising matter. The respondents have stated in said radio addresses and other advertising that other vegetable oils sold in open competition in interstate commerce are inferior to the peanut oil advertised and promoted by them, by stating, among other things, words and utterances to the effect that:

It means that the market is flooded today with food concoctions, dietetical monstrosities and cheap glucose filled candies; cottonseed oil; with stearic acid salad oils; and a lot of other junk made for human consumption and at the same time, preparing the way to death and destruction of human beings.

If food is cooked in cooking oil, it may be that the cooking oil contains a large amount of stearic acid, or is composed chiefly of cottonseed oil, or that irritating fatty acids are present in overabundance. All of these things tend to destroy the child's appetite for his regular meals.

(That competitors are) Racketeers * * * who make money * * * out of * * * salad oils which are compounds of sunflower seed oil, cottonseed oil, corn oil.

These food swindlers had filled these cans cheaply with cottonseed oil which had been produced in the United States.

It may be saturated with stearic acid, a substance that is so hard that its melting point is far above the temperature of the body. It has not any more value than eating a tallow candle.

These statements are false and misleading and tend to falsely disparage and defame the products of competitors in that, either directly or by innuendo, they assert, imply, intimate, or suggest that:

(a) The products of the competitors of the manufacturers of the peanut oil so advertised are dietetical monstrosities, are cheap concoctions unfit for human consumption and that the consumption of foods made from such products including cotton seed oil and corn oil will cause death and destruction to human beings;

(b) If a food is cooked in vegetable oil other than the peanut oil so promoted, it will contain a large amount of stearic acid or free fatty acids composed chiefly of cotton seed oil which will destroy a child's appetite for its regular meals;

(c) Competitors who sell articles manufactured from cottonseed oil, corn oil, and other vegetable oils, are racketeers;

(d) Persons who sell cottonseed oil and corn oil are cheap food swindlers;

(e) The products of competitors, including cottonseed and corn oil, contain substances comparable to a tallow candle.

In truth and in fact, the products of competitors of the manufacturers of the peanut oil so promoted and advertised by the respondents are not dietetical monstrosities, are not cheap concoctions unfit for human consumption and the consumption of foods made from such products including cottonseed and corn oil will not cause death and destruction of human beings. Such products do not have a large amount of stearic acid or free fatty acid and will not destroy a child's appetite for his regular meals. Competitors who sell articles manufactured from cottonseed oil, corn oil and other vegetable oils are not racketeers or cheap food swindlers and such articles of food, including cottonseed oil and corn oil are not comparable to a tallow candle. The respondent Hodgdon is not a medical doctor.

Cottonseed oil, corn oil, and peanut oil are all pure wholesome foods; are all of approximately the same chemical consistency and are all approximately 98% digestible. The chemists, dieticians, and experts on home economics, who appeared in this case, state that all of said products are of equal food value and can not be distinguished, as sold to the public for food purposes, except through the medium of a chemical analysis and the action of the respondents in delivering or causing these lectures to be delivered over the radio in a manner calculated to impress the public that the respondent, Hodgdon, was a medical doctor disseminating medical advice, is decidedly unfair to the manufacturers and distributors of corn and cottonseed oil products throughout the United States and to other advertising agencies who shun such practices.

PAR. 4. In the course and conduct of their said business, the respondents are now and have been for a long time last past, thus advertising and promoting by radio or through the medium of other forms of advertising the sale of peanut oil, which article is in substantial competition with the products of other individuals, partnerships, and corporations engaged in the sale of vegetable oils between and among the various States of the United States and the District of Columbia.

PAR 5. There are many competitors of the brand of peanut oil, the sale of which is advertised and promoted by respondents, who sell similar salad oils, cottonseed oil, corn oil, and peanut oil, who do not misrepresent their products or falsely disparage the products of their competitors, and the use by respondents of the false, deceptive, misleading, and defamatory statements and representations hereinbefore set out is calculated to, and does, have the capacity and tendency to mislead and deceive many members of the trade and public, and induce them to refrain from buying competing brands of salad or cooking oil made from cottonseed oil, corn oil, and other oils, in the belief that the statements made by respondents, as set out in paragraph 3 hereof, are true, and tends to and does unfairly divert trade to the manufacturers of the brand of peanut oil so advertised and sold by respondents from competitors engaged in the sale and distribution of other brands of peanut oil, corn oil, or cottonseed oil in interstate commerce who do not make such misleading and disparaging statements, whereby substantial injury is done to substantial competition in interstate commerce.

Likewise, respondents are in active and open competition and have been in active and open competition with other advertising agencies and advertisers and instrumentalities for advertising in interstate commerce who do not misrepresent the articles of trade and commerce which they promote and advertise, and who do not misrepresent the professional status of the person or persons delivering radio addresses to the public, and the use by respondents of false, deceptive, disparaging, and misleading statements in connection with the articles which respondents do promote and advertise is calculated to and does have the capacity of unfairly diverting trade to respondents from competitors who do not make such false, deceptive, disparaging, and misleading statements in referring to articles so advertised or promoted or who do not make misleading statements or representations regarding their professional status, whereby substantial injury is done to substantial competitors in commerce among and between the various States of the United States.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondents, Daniel R. Hodgdon, an individual, and National Food Bureau, Inc., are to the prejudice of the public and to respondents' competitors and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled, "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

It is ordered, That the respondents, Daniel R. Hodgdon, an individual, and National Food Bureau, Inc., and its officers, and their respective representatives, agents, and employees, in connection with the offering for sale, sale, and distribution of advertising matter, food or food products, including peanut oil, do forthwith cease and desist from:

1. Representing that corn oil or cottonseed oil or food products made therefrom are cheap commodities which are unwholesome, impure, or in any way deleterious to health or unfit for human consumption;
2. Representing that peanut oil or food products made therefrom are superior to or have a higher degree of digestibility or dietetical superiority in any way for human consumption than corn oil or cottonseed oil or food products made therefrom;

3. Using any words or phrases calculated to falsely slander, defame, or discredit any person, firm or corporation engaged in selling corn or cottonseed oil or commodities made therefrom because of his, its or their being engaged in the manufacture, offering for sale or sale of said commodities;

4. Using, or authorizing others to use the word "Doctor" or its abbreviation, "Dr.", as descriptive of the professional qualifications of the respondent Daniel R. Hodgdon, in connection with any medical or dietetical topic in any way which has a tendency to import or imply that he is a medical doctor.

It is hereby further ordered, That the respondent Daniel R. Hodgdon, an individual and the respondent National Food Bureau, Inc., shall within 60 days from the date of the serving upon them of this order, file with the Commission, their reports in writing, stating the manner and form in which they shall have complied with this order.

ISADOR SOMMERFELD, TRADING AS DUBINER &
SOMMERFELD

COMPLAINT AND MODIFIED FINDINGS AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT.
26, 1914

Docket 1303. Complaint, April 8, 1925—Decision, Feb. 4, 1937

Where the term "Havana Tobacco" had long meant to cigar tobacco trade and cigar purchasing public of the United States tobacco grown on the Island of Cuba, and where many members of cigar tobacco and cigar trades and of cigar purchasing public had long believed such tobacco to be superior in quality for manufacture of cigars to be sold and consumed in the United States, and such trades and public had long considered that tobacco there grown in the Vuelta Abajo area or district of said Island was of a higher or more desirable quality for aforesaid use than tobacco grown in other countries or grown elsewhere on said Island; and thereafter an individual, engaged in New York in manufacturing and selling cigars which contained no tobacco grown on said Island, and in packing same for display and resale to members of the public who purchase cigars for consumption in and from wooden boxes and other containers, and in transporting such products to wholesale and retail dealer purchasers thereof into and through the District of Columbia and various other States; and never a recipient of any medals, prizes, or awards from any persons or associations on account of cigars made by him—

- (a) Caused words "Havana" and "Vuelta Abajo" to be placed on his cigar boxes and containers, and on the bands of cigars made and sold by him, with effect of misleading and deceiving many of said cigar and tobacco trades and members of cigar purchasing public into the belief that his said cigars were made wholly of Havana tobacco from the aforesaid district;
- (b) Caused to be placed on the boxes or containers of his said cigars certain labels carrying an outline map of the Island of Cuba and certain inscriptions in the Spanish language to the effect that cigars contained therein were made of finest Vuelta Abajo tobacco, and that tobacco in question was guaranteed as of the best Havana, and that anyone representing composition thereof to the contrary would be prosecuted to the fullest extent of the law, and containing also Spanish inscriptions and depictions of Spanish scenes and persons; and
- (c) Placed on his said boxes depictions of medals such as are awarded at World's fairs or conventions by governments, ruling members, manufacturers, trade associations, or others throughout the world, to manufacturers or dealers as prizes, decorations, or honors for the exceptional quality of their products, with effect of misleading and deceiving aforesaid trade and public into purchasing his said cigars as and for such products either imported from Cuba or made of Havana tobacco;

With result that many of the trade and public, relying on such words, labels, and inscriptions thus used by him in the manufacture and sale of said products, were caused to buy the same instead, or in preference to cigars of competitors who were properly labeling, branding, or advertising their products under said names, brands, or labels, "Havana" and "Vuelta Abajo," and also to cigars of competitors who were making and selling such products from domestic tobacco and who properly did not brand, label, or otherwise represent the same as made of Havana tobacco:

Held, That such acts and practices were to the prejudice of the public and competitors, and constituted unfair methods of competition.

Mr. Edward E. Reardon for the Commission.

COMPLAINT

Acting in the public interest pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission charges that Isadore Sommerfeld, hereinafter referred to as respondent, an individual doing business under the trade name and style of Dubiner & Sommerfeld, has been and is using unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of the provisions of Section 5 of said Act, issues this complaint, and states its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent is, and for a number of years immediately prior to the date hereof, has been engaged in the business of manufacturing and selling cigars, with a principal place of business in the city of New York, State of New York. Respondent causes, and during the times above referred to has caused, the cigars sold by him to be packed for display and resale to the members of the public who purchase cigars for consumption, in and from wooden boxes or other containers and to be transported to individuals, firms, and corporations, wholesale and retail dealers, the purchasers thereof, from his said place of business to, into, and through the District of Columbia and various States of the United States other than the State of origin of the shipment of the cigars.

During the times above mentioned, other individuals, firms, and corporations have been, and now are, engaged in manufacturing and selling cigars packed for display and resale in and from wooden boxes or other containers, and who cause and have caused the same, when sold by them, to be transported from without the District of Columbia to the purchasers, individuals, firms, and corporations, wholesale and retail dealers, located in the District of Columbia and in various States of the United States, other than in the State of origin of the shipment, and including those States into which, from other States than those in which his shipments originate, the respondent causes and has caused his said cigars to be transported.

Complaint

24 F. T. C.

The respondent has been during the said times, and now is in competition in commerce with the above individuals, firms, and corporations, in the sale of his said cigars.

PAR. 2. For many years prior to the date hereof, and ever since tobacco has been a commercial export product of the Island of Cuba, the term "Havana" tobacco, has meant and continues to mean tobacco of Cuban growth to the cigar tobacco trade, the cigar trade and the cigar purchasing public of the United States, many of whom have during said times considered and continue to consider Cuban grown or "Havana" tobacco superior in quality, for the manufacture of cigars to be sold and consumed in the United States, to tobacco grown elsewhere. Many of the said trade and public have also during said times considered and continue to believe that cigars made in the United States, for sale and consumption there, of Cuban tobacco, or cigars made of such tobacco in Cuba for sale and consumption in the United States, are likewise superior in quality to cigars made of tobacco grown elsewhere.

PAR. 3. Vuelta Abajo is the name of an area or district in the Island of Cuba, a part of which is in the Province of Pinar del Rio, and in which tobacco is grown which is and has been considered, during the times above referred to, by many of the said tobacco and cigar trade and public, to be of a higher and more desirable quality for use in the manufacture of cigars for sale and consumption in the United States than tobacco grown, not only in countries other than Cuba, but even of a higher and more desirable quality for such purpose than any tobacco grown elsewhere on the Island of Cuba.

Likewise many of the said tobacco and cigar trade and of the said public have also considered during said times, and still believe, that cigars made in Cuba for sale and consumption in the United States of tobacco grown in Cuba either wholly or in part in said Vuelta Abajo district, or cigars made in the United States for sale and consumption there, of tobacco grown in Cuba, either wholly or in part in said Vuelta Abajo district, are and have been superior in quality to cigars made wholly of tobacco grown outside of said district. To the said trade and public Vuelta Abajo tobacco is the most famous tobacco in the world that is used in the manufacture of cigars.

PAR. 4. For a long period of years prior to and at the time respondent engaged in his said business, cigars made wholly of Cuban tobacco were made in Cuba and in the United States for sale and consumption in the United States by manufacturers whose surname was "Garcia" and who, respectively, used and displayed and still use and display their said surname either alone or in combination with the rest of their name or with other words on the bands of the cigars, on the said boxes or containers and on labels thereon.

For a long time prior to the use of the name "Garcia" by the respondent as hereinafter described, many in the said trade and many of the said public, became accustomed to believe and still believe that cigars in connection with the sale of which the name "Garcia" so appeared, were made by manufacturers having that name, of Cuban nationality and of Cuban grown tobacco exclusively and that they were and are of a quality superior to cigars made by many other manufacturers and of tobacco wholly or in part grown elsewhere, and in purchasing cigars became accustomed to and still call for them either by the name "Garcia" alone or in combination with the rest of the name of one of the manufacturers of that surname, and the said manufacturers whose surname is or was "Garcia" have during said times gained a valuable interest and good will in said word when used in connection with the manufacture and sale of cigars in the United States.

PAR. 5. Respondent has caused and still causes the words "Havana", "Vuelta Abajo" and "Garcia" either alone or in combination with one or more other words to be placed on his said cigar boxes or containers and on the labels on said boxes or containers, and the word "Garcia" to be placed on the bands of the cigars made and sold by him.

Respondent has caused and still causes the name M. Garcia y Ca, purporting to be the trade name of an individual or the name of a firm or corporation to be placed on the said boxes or containers of the said cigars as the manufacturer of said cigars.

Respondent causes and has caused certain labels to be placed on the boxes or containers of his said cigars, carrying the outline map of the Island of Cuba and certain inscriptions in the Spanish language that the cigars contained in the said boxes are and were made of the best Vuelta Abajo tobacco and that the tobacco contained in them was guaranteed to be of the best Havana tobacco and that anyone representing to the contrary would be prosecuted to the fullest extent of the law. Respondent during said times has placed labels containing only Spanish inscriptions and Spanish pictures or illustrations on the boxes or containers of his said cigars. Pictures or illustrations of medals, such as are or have been awarded by governments, trade associations, etc., to manufacturers as prizes, decorations or honors for the exceptional qualities of their products, have been and are caused by respondent to be placed on the labels of the boxes or containers of his said cigars.

PAR. 6. The said cigars made and sold by the respondent have never at any time contained more than a very small amount of Cuban grown tobacco, and during most the aforesaid time they have contained no Cuban grown tobacco.

Neither the respondent nor anyone connected with the said business has or ever had the name "Garcia" as part of his name, and the name M. Garcia y Ca is fictitious and does not represent any individual, firm, or corporation engaged in the manufacture of respondent's cigars. Respondent has caused the said words "Havana," "Vuelta Abajo" and "Garcia" and the said name "M. Garcia y Ca" to be used on the boxes or containers and labels thereof, and on the bands of his cigars aforesaid, in order to compete with the long established concerns having the name "Garcia" or the right to use it, who are engaged in the manufacture and sale of cigars, and to divert the latter's trade to respondent by confusing the identity of the products of both, and leading purchasers to buy those of respondent for those of the said established concerns. Respondent chose the names "Garcia" and "M. Garcia y Ca" unnecessarily and for the purpose of unfair competition with those lawfully entitled to use the name "Garcia."

During the aforesaid time, the name M. Garcia y Ca used by respondent, as aforesaid was and is fictitious and by his said use of the same, respondent knowingly, falsely and unlawfully represents and has represented to the said trade and public that his said cigars are made by a business concern properly using the name of "Garcia." By the use of the word "Garcia" alone or with other words as aforesaid respondent knowingly, falsely and unlawfully represents to the said trade and public that his cigars are made by manufacturers having that name, and that they are made of Havana tobacco.

By the use of the said words Havana and Vuelta Abajo, respondent knowingly falsely and unlawfully represents and has represented to the said trade and public that his said cigars were made of Havana tobacco and either partly or wholly of tobacco grown in the district of Vuelta Abajo.

Respondent has knowingly and falsely represented and guaranteed to the said trade and public by the labels that the said cigars are not only of Havana tobacco but are of the best Havana tobacco from the district of Vuelta Abajo, and has knowingly and fraudulently used the aforesaid labels containing only Spanish inscriptions, pictures, and illustrations in further effort and with intent to receive and defraud the trade and members of the public into the belief that his said cigars were and are made of Havana tobacco and have the qualities characteristic of such cigars.

PAR. 7. The acts and practices of respondent, all hereinbefore set out, have the capacity and tendency to and have misled, and deceived many of the trade and consuming public into the belief that respondent's cigars are manufactured by an individual, firm, or corporation named M. Garcia y Ca; that the manufacturer thereof has the name or the right to use the name "Garcia" in connection with the manufacture and sale of cigars; that the tobacco composing his said cigars is Havana tobacco either wholly or in part from the said district of Vuelta Abajo, and that they are made in and imported from Cuba to the United States.

PAR. 8. Among the individuals, firms, or corporations referred to in paragraph 1 hereof, who are and have been in competition with the respondent, are some who manufacture, and sell cigars made of tobacco, part of which only is grown in Cuba, or of tobacco grown wholly elsewhere than in Cuba, and who are not branding or labeling the cigars made by them or the containers thereof with or under the words, "Havana," "Vuelta Abajo," or "Garcia."

Among the individuals, firms, or corporations referred to in said paragraph 1 are some engaged in the manufacture and sale, in commerce, of cigars made wholly of tobacco grown in Cuba, either wholly or in part from the district of Vuelta Abajo, who are properly labeling, branding, and advertising cigars made by them under the name, brand or labels, "Garcia," "Havana," and "Vuelta Abajo."

PAR. 9. The above alleged acts and things done by respondent are each and all to the prejudice of the public and respondent's competitors and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress entitled, "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914.

REPORT, MODIFIED FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, on the 8th day of April 1925, issued and served its complaint in this proceeding upon said respondent, Isador Sommerfeld, doing business under the trade name and style of Dubiner & Sommerfeld, charging him with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of the provisions of said act. Thereafter, a stipulation was entered into whereby it was stipulated and agreed that a statement of facts signed and executed by the respondent, and W. H. Fuller, Chief Counsel of the Federal Trade Commission, subject to the approval of the Commission, might be taken as the facts in this proceeding and in lieu of testimony in support of the charges stated in the complaint and in opposition thereto, and that the said Commission might proceed upon said statement of facts to make its report, stating its findings as to the facts (including inferences which it might draw from said facts) and its conclusion based thereon, and enter its order disposing of the proceeding without presentation of argument or the filing of briefs. Thereafter this proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on said complaint and stipulation, said stipulation having been approved and accepted, and the Commission having duly considered the same and being now fully advised in the premises, makes this its modified findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom :

MODIFIED FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent for a number of years immediately prior to April 9, 1925, had been engaged in the business of manufacturing and selling cigars with his principal place of business in the city, county, and State of New York. During the time above referred to, respondent had caused cigars sold by him to be packed for display and resale to the members of the public who purchase cigars for consumption in and from wooden boxes and other containers, and to be transported to individuals, firms, and corporations, wholesale and retail dealers, the purchasers thereof, from his said place of business to, into and through the District of Columbia and various other States of the United States other than the State of New York.

During the time above mentioned and referred to, other individuals, firms, and corporations had been engaged in manufacturing and selling cigars packed for resale in wooden boxes and other containers, and who caused the same when sold by them to be transported from without the District of Columbia to the purchasers, individuals, firms, and corporations, wholesale and retail dealers located in the District of Columbia and in various States of the United States other than the State of origin of the shipment, and including those States into which from other States the respondent had caused said cigars to be transported. The respondent had been during the said time, in competition in commerce with the above individuals, firms, and corporations in the sale of his said cigars.

PAR. 2. During the time above mentioned and referred to, and ever since tobacco has been a commercial export product of the Island of Cuba, the term "Havana Tobacco" has meant and continues to mean to the cigar tobacco trade and the cigar purchasing public of the United States, tobacco grown on the Island of Cuba. Many members of the cigar tobacco trade, the cigar trade and cigar purchasing public of the United States have, during said times believed, and now believe, Havana tobacco grown on the Island of Cuba to be superior in quality for the manufacture of cigars to be sold and consumed in the United States.

Vuelta Abajo is the name of the area or district in the Island of Cuba in which tobacco is grown which was believed during the times above referred to and is now believed by the said tobacco and cigar trade and the said purchasing public to be of a higher and more desirable quality for use in the manufacture of cigars for sale and consumption than tobacco grown not only in other countries than Cuba, but of higher and more desirable quality for such purposes than any tobacco grown elsewhere than on the Island of Cuba.

PAR. 3. Respondent had caused the words "Havana" and "Vuelta Abajo" to be placed on his cigar boxes and containers and on the bands of cigars made and sold by him.

Respondent had caused certain labels carrying an outline map of the Island of Cuba and certain inscriptions in the Spanish language to be placed on the boxes or containers of his said cigars. The said inscriptions were to the effect that cigars contained in the said boxes were made of the finest Vuelta Abajo tobacco and that the tobacco in the cigars was guaranteed to be of the best Havana tobacco and the said inscriptions stated that anyone representing the composition of the said cigars to be to the contrary would be prosecuted to the fullest extent of the law.

Respondent had placed labels containing only inscriptions in the Spanish language on his cigar boxes or containers and had also placed thereon pictures or illustrations of Spanish scenes and persons on said cigar boxes or containers. Respondent had placed on said cigar boxes pictures or illustrations of medals such as are or have been awarded at World's fairs or conventions, by governments or ruling members thereof, or by manufacturers, trade associations or others throughout the world, to manufacturers or dealers as prizes, decorations or honors for the exceptional quality of their products.

The cigars made and sold by the respondent had never at any time contained any tobacco grown on the Island of Cuba.

The respondent had never received any medals, prizes or awards from any persons or associations on account of cigars manufactured by him.

PAR. 4. Among the individuals, firms, and corporations referred to above who had been in competition with the respondent there were some who manufactured and sold cigars made of tobacco part of which only was grown in Cuba, or of tobacco grown elsewhere than in Cuba,

Order

and who were not branding or labeling the cigars made by them or the containers thereof, with the words "Havana" and "Vuelta Abajo."

PAR. 5. The use, by the respondent, of the terms or words "Havana" and "Vuelta Abajo" on the labels or containers of cigars in connection with their manufacture and sale as above described or in other advertising referred thereto, was false and misleading and had the tendency and capacity to and did mislead and deceive many of said cigar and tobacco trade and members of the public purchasing cigars for consumption into the belief that respondent's said cigars were made wholly of Havana tobacco from the District of Vuelta Abajo.

Respondent's use of labels on the boxes or containers of his cigars having thereon an outline map of Cuba, inscriptions solely in the Spanish language, and the said guarantee that the tobacco composing his cigars was Havana tobacco, had the capacity to mislead and deceive the said trade and public, and said trade and public have been misled and deceived thereby into purchasing respondent's cigars as cigars either imported from Cuba or made of Havana tobacco.

The use by the respondent of the said words "Havana" and "Vuelta Abajo" and the said labels of Cuba and inscriptions in the Spanish language as above set forth, in the manufacture and sale of his cigars, has caused many of the trade and public relying thereon to purchase respondent's cigars instead of or in preference to cigars of competitors of respondent who were properly labeling, branding or advertising their cigars under the said names, brands or labels "Havana" and "Vuelta Abajo," as well as cigars of competitors who were manufacturing and selling cigars made of domestic tobacco and who properly did not brand, label, or otherwise represent their said cigars had been made of Havana tobacco.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of respondent, Isador Sommerfeld, trading as Dubiner & Sommerfeld, were to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors, and constituted unfair methods of competition in commerce, within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

MODIFIED ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

This proceeding having been heard by the Federal Trade Commission upon the complaint of the Commission and the stipulation as to the facts filed herein by respondent on July 16, 1925, admitting all the material allegations of the complaint to be true and waiving

the taking of further evidence and all other intervening procedure, and the Commission having made its modified findings as to the facts and its conclusion that said respondent has violated the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled, "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

It is ordered, That respondent, Isador Sommerfeld, doing business under the trade name and style of Dubiner & Sommerfeld, his officers, representatives, agents, and employees, in connection with the offering for sale, sale, and distribution in interstate commerce or in the District of Columbia of cigars, do forthwith cease and desist from using:

1. The words "Havana" or "Vuelta Abajo," when the said cigars are not composed entirely of Havana tobacco;

2. Words or writing on labels or otherwise solely in the Spanish language, an outline map of Cuba, or pictures or representations of Cuban scenes indicating Cuban origin in the composition of respondent's cigars when the same are not made entirely of Havana tobacco;

3. Words or writing in Spanish language on labels or otherwise to such extent or in such manner as to indicate that the cigars are made of Cuban tobacco when the same are not made entirely of Havana tobacco.

It is further ordered, That the respondent shall, within 60 days after service upon him of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which he has complied with this order.

IN THE MATTER OF
LOFT, INC., AND DR. DANIEL R. HODGDONCOMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 26, 1914*Docket 2496. Complaint, July 10, 1935—Decision, Feb. 4, 1937*

Where a corporation, which was one of the largest candy product manufacturers in the world, and publicly represented itself as the largest, and which owned or operated over two hundred retail stores, in addition to its sales to independent retailers, and expended large annual sums for advertising, and an individual, its agent and employee, entitled to use of word "Doctor", but not as physician, engaged under contract with it in advertising and promoting sale of its products through broadcast of lectures on food, and in lending his recommendation, name, title and photograph in promoting the sale of its said candy products, and for such use in literature advertising the same—

Featured the slogan and representation "Made without Glucose," and contains no glucose, in an extensive advertising campaign initiated and carried on by them through newspapers and radio broadcasts of said individual and through inserts in the boxes and through the labels, seals, and literature distributed through said corporation's stores, and through its store and window displays, and accompanied such slogan and representation generally with words "Seal of Protection" and "Loft Really Pure Candy," and depicted such seals in approximately all of its advertising literature, along with such words as "This Seal is Your Protection," and represented that candy products made with or containing glucose were impure and harmful to health and unsafe, and that the candies of said corporation contained no glucose, and that other candies made therewith were inferior in quality to its own and less wholesome and safe, through such statements as those above set forth and numerous others, asserting its new method of making candies without use of glucose, and purity, etc., of its own said products, and safety and beneficial quality thereof for children, and warnings against use of glucose as an adulterant made through treating starch with sulphuric or hydrochloric acid, etc., and other statements inferring or implying that said substance was a filler, preservative, cheap substitute for sugar, less digestible, etc.;

Fact being that word "Glucose," as a matter of primary definition and meaning, is a name for a certain sugar or group of sugars, glucose is contained in corn syrup, usually employed with cane sugar in the making of candy, was used by corporation in question prior to campaign in question, is regarded by many candy-makers, its competitors, as an absolutely essential ingredient for all or most of their products, has been used in industry in question for approximately fifty years because of its unique combination of values as a candy ingredient, and industrial chemistry incident to use thereof as now practiced is consistent with safe and wholesome candy, and glucose in any form, inclusive of sugar or corn syrup, as used or found in candy, is safe and wholesome and regarded as a natural and essential ingredient thereof in commercial candies, and said product, as sugar or corn syrup, or in any form as used or found in candy, is not an adulterant or cheap substitute, etc., and is not made with sulphuric acid, etc., or dangerous to health, and use of corn syrup affords no basis for such false disparagement of products of competitors, and its own products, while containing no glucose in form of corn syrup as such during period in question, did contain such substance as matter of scientific fact;

With result of placing in the minds of the buying public, to a substantial degree, a consciousness of danger in the use of candy or food made with or containing glucose, and of misleading and deceiving a substantial portion of such public, including purchasers and potential purchasers of candies sold in competition with candy products of said corporation, into false and erroneous belief that said statements and representations were true, that glucose was used or contained in candy in general, but not in its candies, and that it was an ingredient or substance which was impure, harmful to health, and unsafe, and that candies containing same were correspondingly thus affected and inferior to its own products, and that purchase and use of candies other than those of said corporation was in general dangerous and unsafe, and with effect of causing such purchasers and prospective purchasers of competitors to discontinue purchasing therefrom, or refrain from so purchasing, and to buy instead products of said corporation, and of thereby unfairly diverting to it trade from its competitors who do not falsely defame or disparage the products of others, and who do not misrepresent the ingredients of their own products:

Held, That such acts and practices were to the prejudice of the public and competitors, and constituted unfair methods of competition.

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission having reason to believe that Loft, Inc., and Dr. Daniel R. Hodgdon, hereinafter referred to as respondents have been and now are using unfair methods of competition in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in said act, and it appearing to the Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, states its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent, Loft, Inc., is a corporation, organized, existing, and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Delaware, with its principal place of business located at 40th Avenue and 9th Street, Long Island City, in the State of New York. Said respondent is now and since the month of October 1934, has been engaged in manufacturing, selling, offering for sale, and distributing candies, candy and confection products in commerce among and between various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia, and has caused and now causes said products when sold or ordered, to be shipped and transported from the State of origin thereof to various States of the United States other than the State of origin of said shipment, and to the District of Columbia. In the course and conduct of its said business, respondent, Loft, Inc., has been and is now in competition with corporations, firms, partnerships, and with individuals engaged in like commerce.

Respondent, Daniel H. Hodgdon, is an individual and an agent or employee of respondent, Loft, Inc., with his principal place of business located at 1697 Broadway, in the city of New York, in the State of New York, and as such has been and is now engaged in and with the aforesaid business of respondent, Loft, Inc., and in the advertising and promotion thereof.

PAR. 2. Respondent, Loft, Inc., has sold and now sells its said candies, candy and confection products in interstate commerce, as set forth in paragraph 1 hereof, by use of the mails, interstate carriers and other channels of interstate commerce, by means of radio broadcasting, newspapers, pamphlets, periodicals, labels, and other forms of literature and advertising which have had or have a circulation in and through the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia, and also in circulars, candy box and window displays and placards, labels, pamphlets, printed matter, and other forms of advertising and promotion, including radio broadcasts and oral statements by agents and employees, which have been and are circulated and distributed by respondents to customers and prospective customers in and throughout various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia, in the course and conduct of which respondents, Loft, Inc., and Daniel R. Hodgdon, individually and together, have made and now make false and misleading statements and representations, all to the injury of the public and to the injury of competitors of respondent, Loft, Inc.

PAR. 3. In the course and conduct of the business, advertising, promotion and selling of the candies, candy and confection products of respondent, Loft, Inc., as aforesaid, said respondent, Loft, Inc., advertises and makes the following statements and representations, among others, to wit:

LOFT REALLY PURE CANDIESAN IMPORTANT MESSAGE from the PRESIDENT

After spending thirty years in the manufacture of fine candies, I have discovered a new method of making candies without the use of glucose (U. S. Patent application serial #720,525).

Complaint

It makes Loft candies easier to digest—makes them taste better than ever—smoother—richer—more delicious.

It costs more to make Loft candies without glucose, but price is never considered by Loft where quality is involved.

I believe it is now impossible to match Loft candies, from the standpoint of purity, quality and price.

CHARLES G. GUTH, President.

Loft CODE OF ETHICS:

Glucose should not be put in candy unless the label states the facts—because glucose is only a starch which has been treated with sulphuric acid. Excess of starch is dangerous.

Loft candies are really pure—they contain no substitutes—no adulterants of any kind.

* * * * *

Loft does not believe that glucose should be used in candy and furthermore, believes that whenever it is used it should be so stated on the label. The U. S. Pure Food Laws compel the makers of jellies, jams and table syrups, when glucose is used, to print a statement on the label, notifying the purchaser. Loft believes this same law should apply to candy, and, therefore, every package of Loft candy made and sold by Loft contains a seal stating that Loft Really Pure Candies are Made Without Glucose.

Said respondents, individually and together further have advertised and made, and now advertise and make, the following statements and representations, among others, to wit:

I should like to impress upon my listeners to some measure the fraudulent practices that are going on in connection with candy that is fed to our children. * * * Now all these candies and hundreds of others like them contain a cheap, sticky mass called glucose. The question is immediately raised whether glucose is a good food to be used in candy. A great deal has been said about commercial glucose, but the only reason that I can find to account for its wide use in candy making is that it is cheap. It lowers the cost of candy manufacture. It has a sticky, slimy consistency and derives its name from the word glue. There is 50% or more dextrin in glucose. We use dextrin to make muilage and other adhesives. * * * It became very popular almost immediately as an ingredient in candy because it was a cheap substitute for sugar. * * * This wholesale practice of trying to make money by selling unsuspecting individuals concoctions of the worst type under the guise that they are candy, is criminal and villainous. As this Christmas season approaches, there is only one way to be assured that the spirit of Christmas can be maintained, and that is by feeding children candy free from adulterations, free from impurities, free from artificial colors and artificial eggs, and free from glucose.

* * * * *

When a stock-raiser tries to make a profit out of his animals he won't feed them with chemically produced glucose a lot of worthless dyes and drugs which may legally be used in foods to be consumed by human beings.

* * * * *

This good mother may, in all innocence give her children money to buy candy that is filled with commercial glucose, glucose, made from starch, treated with hydrochloric acid. Glucose that may have been bleached with sulphuric acid and improperly treated, so that this destructive and harmful substance is still present in the candy in sufficient amounts to do real harm to the health of children. The child may pick up this candy in the high school cafeteria where he eats his luncheon, or he may eat peanut bars with the peanuts stuck together by a cheap adulteration called commercial glucose . . . what chance has he when his food and his candy and syrups are filled with adulterations and his fruits covered with residue poisons. No wonder we find in the Rochester high school 197 children out of 425 afflicted with organic heart disease. * * * Let us strike at the heart of this evil and eliminate from our tables food that is not pure and wholesome and from the hands of our children, candies adulterated with commercial glucose. * * * Let the food and candy consumed be so pure as to keep the vital blood of life red and uncontaminated by the junk that interfere with the normal processes of digestion and elimination.

* * * * *

This is a warning to all my listeners to be careful of the products introduced into your homes. * * * candy made of cheap commercial glucose, bleached with sulphuric acid, a product that has no place in the stomach of children of tender age or in the digestive tracts of adult human beings of any age. Until we find effective laws which will prevent wholesale destruction of health through improper material in our foods, and commercial glucose in candies, we must choose carefully the things we feed the children and ourselves. Lurking behind these fine advertised labels and innocent looking foods and candy is the skull and cross bones, the symbol of disease and death.

* * * * *

When we consume quantities of candy made of commercial glucose, bleached with sulphurous acid; when we give our children such candy, we begin to interfere with the calcium retention and absorption and assimilation and we starve. I mean just what the word means. We deprive, yes, we starve ourselves, our children, the ones we love most, of those vital mineral salts so necessary to life and health.

* * * * *

It means that the market is flooded today with food concoctions, dietetical monstrosities, and cheap glucosed-filled candies * * * and a lot of other junk made for human consumption and at the same time preparing the way to death and destruction of human beings. Why is the child at school becoming a nervous unstable object of worry to his mother? Why does the teacher find her job irksome and her nerves jumpy? Why does Dad at home become easily irritated and upset? Because of starvation * * * the starvation which is brought about through the improper selection of foods and the introduction into the system of foods filled with artificial products which have no nourishing value and which prevent a sufficient supply of mineral elements to maintain good health. Our children purchase on the street corner candy filled with commercial glucose that has been bleached with that dangerous poison substance, sulphurous acid; glucose made of starch with the aid of hydrochloric acid; glucose still containing an over-abundance of this tissue destroying and digestive juice destroying acid. I don't care where you go; I don't care in what store you purchase your candy, except one. You will find that the candy-maker has used to a greater or less degree quantities of a cheap adulterant known as commercial glucose. It is cheaper than sugar and that is why he uses it. One of the great outstanding inventions in the candy-making world was the discovery that candy can be made wholly of pure cane sugar which could be inverted into a substance resembling honey without acid and without artificial chemical substances. This inversion created out of pure sugar, a highly digestive substance resembling honey and containing fructose, levulose and dextrose, highly nourishing, ready to be absorbed and used as food by the blood. Now, when a substance like that is created out of pure sugar and is made into candy, free from adulterations, free from artificial coloring matter other than pure vegetable colors, free from infected nuts and fruits, we have a candy that can be safely fed to children and adults without burdening the digestive tract with a lot of unhealthy, vile, filthy, poisonous, and doubtful material which would have no other function than to destroy or burden the human organisms with foreign matter, totally unnatural to the normal functions it must perform. * * * There is one candy-maker that makes pure candy. Loft Candy represents a new standard, a standard of purity, a standard of cleanliness, a standard of unadulteration, a standard of candy free from all commercial glucose with all of its possibilities of destructive acid content.

* * * * *

It frequently happens that where the mother denies the children food between meals, she opens up the way for children to stuff themselves with cheap candy made of commercial glucose. When children consume a large amount of this glucose candy between meals, they have a tendency to lack an appetite at mealtime. If the commercial glucose has been bleached with sulphurous acid and contains residues of this acid, naturally it will destroy the appetite. * * * Candy made from invert sugar is especially recommended because the cane sugar has been changed into a wholesome food resembling honey. This is quickly and easily digested and gives the child a considerable amount of energy for his play. This candy should be fed at the close of the meal or at the close of the between-meal luncheons. This kind of candy does not destroy the appetite for food, as the cheap glucose type of candy does.

* * * * *

Candies may be adulterated with all sorts of cheap commercial glucose and no mention is made of it. Little children will buy this stuff in the thousands of penny candy stores. There is not a thing on any label to indicate that it was made with commercial glucose. You can go into a store today and buy even the highest priced candies, pay a lot of money for it, and most of your money will go into the boxes and other fancy containers. The candy will be made up of a large percentage of cheap commercial glucose. When a product is adulterated with glucose, the public should be warned of its presence;—when the candy is made of pure sugar, the public should be told that they are getting an honest product, free from adulteration.

* * * * *

Now, studies of these mentalities and mental diseases will tend to show that mental abnormality is frequently a merely temporary condition depending on the feeding of the brain, and that, when this condition is rectified so that the brain obtains proper feeding, the disorder vanishes. * * * What effect has any poisonous byproduct such as sulphurous acid which may, or may not be, in glucose, upon the activity of the brain. * * * When we introduce sulphurous acid into the stomach * * * these ketones—which are believed the cause of old age and degeneration, can do their work. They appreciably shorten life. * * * I want children to have pure candy—not candy made with glucose. * * * I want every food to be so pure as to avoid the making of the D-ketones which are so destructive to health and life and our vitality, to our thinking power and to our mental balance, and when we do that we produce lactic acid. Then these byproducts cannot do us any harm. * * *

Announcer:—"Now, ladies and gentlemen, the following products are approved and endorsed because of their quality, of their wholesomeness and their standard of purity. Loft's candy is endorsed because it is absolutely pure, has no glucose in any form, no substitutes, no preservatives are used in Loft's candy. Loft's candies are the purest candy known to the science of candy makers. These points that Dr. Hodgdon has brought up this morning: 'The effect on the brain of candy, of sugar', in many instances are most interesting, and remember that you must have pure candy for the correct and corrective effect upon the brain."

DR. DANIEL R. HODGDON says:

While President of Hahneman Medical College and Chicago Memorial Hospital, I became intensely interested in the subject of Pure Candy. I have recently made a thorough inspection of the Loft manufacturing plant where 100,000 pounds, or more, of fine Candies are made daily.

Until then, I never dreamed that Candies could be made so pure, delicious and healthful.

It gives me pleasure to state that Loft Candies are made of the finest and highest quality, rich natural materials, and are absolutely free from all adulterations, substitutes and commercial glucose (corn syrup). In my opinion, this puts Loft Candies in the highest possible class, regardless of the fact that they are sold to the public at such reasonable prices.

(Signed) DANIEL R. HODGDON.

PAR. 4. In the course and conduct of the business aforesaid, and in the advertising, promotion and selling as aforesaid, respondent, Loft, Inc., and its agents and employees have falsely and misleadingly stated and represented and now falsely and misleadingly state and represent that said respondent uses a newly discovered method of making candies without the use of glucose and that its said products are "made without glucose"; whereas, in truth and in fact said respondent's products are made with and do contain glucose, and the method used by respondent, Loft, Inc., in making said products is not a new discovery.

PAR. 5. In the course and conduct of the business aforesaid, and in the advertising, promotion and selling as aforesaid, respondents, individually and together, further falsely and misleadingly have stated, represented and implied, and now falsely and misleadingly state, represent and imply that the ingredient generally used in the making of candies and confections and known as "glucose" is impure, unwholesome, harmful to health, dangerous for children, made with sulphuric acid, bleached with sulphuric acid, an adulterant, a filler, a cheap substitute for sugar in candy, and less digestible than cane sugar, and that in general candies and confection products in competition with products of respondent, Loft, Inc., are made with glucose and are therefore impure, unwholesome, harmful to health, dangerous for children, contain sulphuric acid or hydrochloric acid and starch, contain a filler, an adulterant and a cheap substitute for sugar in candies, and are less digestible than the candy and confection products of respondent Loft, Inc., and that said competing products and products of said respondent's competitors are therefore not only of inferior quality but that said products are unsafe and the use thereof dangerous or unsafe; whereas, in truth and in fact the ingredient known as "glucose" used in the making of candies and confections in competition with said respondent's products, and as used by said respondent's competitors, is, contrary to respondents' representations, pure, wholesome and healthful, is not dangerous to children, does not contain sulphuric or hydrochloric acid, is not a filler, an adulterant or a cheap substitute for sugar in candies and is not less digestible than cane sugar; and whereas, in truth and in fact the candies or confections of said competitors of respondent, Loft, Inc., and in competition with products of said respondent, Loft, Inc., are contrary to said respondents' representations, no less pure, wholesome or more harmful to health or more dangerous for children or less digestible than the products of said respondent, Loft, Inc., and do not contain sulphuric or hydrochloric acid and starch, or a filler, or an adulterant or a cheap substitute for sugar; and whereas, further, in truth and in fact the purchase and use of candies or confections of said competitors of respondent, Loft, Inc., are no more dangerous or unsafe than the purchase and use of the candies, candy and confection products of said respondent.

PAR. 6. That the aforesaid false and misleading statements so made by respondents in the sale of the candies, candy and confection products of respondent, Loft, Inc., have had and have the tendency and capacity to mislead and to deceive, and do mislead and deceive, purchasers and prospective purchasers of products of competitors of respondent, Loft, Inc., into the false and erroneous belief that such statements and representations are true and that the purchase and use of said competing candies, candy or confection products is dangerous or unsafe, thereby causing a substantial portion of such purchasers and prospective purchasers of said competitors' products to discontinue or refrain from the making of such purchases from said competitors, causing such purchasers and prospective purchasers to purchase respondent's products in lieu and instead of the products of its competitors, in consequence of which trade has been and is diverted to respondent, Loft, Inc., from its competitors who do not falsely defame or disparage the products of others, or who do not misrepresent their own products, and thereby substantially injuring competition and said competitors in interstate commerce.

PAR. 7. The above and foregoing acts, practices and representations of respondent have been, and are, all to the prejudice of the public and respondent's competitors, and have been, and are, unfair methods of competition within the meaning and intent of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

were duly recorded and filed in the office of the Commission. Thereafter, the proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on the said complaint, the answers thereto, testimony and other evidence, briefs in support of the complaint and in opposition thereto, and the oral arguments of counsel aforesaid; and the Commission having duly considered the same, and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public, and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent Loft, Inc., is a corporation organized in 1919 under the laws of the State of Delaware, with its principal office and place of business located at 40th Avenue and 9th Street, Long Island City, in the State of New York. Said respondent is now engaged, and since the first day of October 1934, has been engaged in manufacturing, selling, offering for sale, and distributing candy and confection products in commerce among and between the various States of the United States, and in the District of Columbia, and has caused said products to be sold in and shipped to several States of the United States other than the State of New York, including New Jersey, Connecticut, Massachusetts, and Pennsylvania, and the District of Columbia, in the course and conduct of which said respondent has been, and is, in substantial competition with other corporations, partnerships, and individuals likewise engaged in the sale, offering for sale and distribution of candy and confection products in commerce in, among, and between the various States of the United States, and in the District of Columbia.

Respondent Dr. Daniel R. Hodgdon is an individual with his principal place of business located at 54 West 40th Street, New York, N. Y., and with addresses at other places in New York State. During the latter part of 1934 and the early part of 1935, his principal place of business was located at 1697 Broadway, New York, N. Y. He holds the degree of Ph. D. and J. D., which entitle him to prefix the title "Dr." to his name, but he does not hold the degree of Doctor of Medicine and has never practiced medicine. On and before the 1st day of October 1934, and for several months continuously thereafter, he was an agent and employee of respondent Loft, Inc., and as such engaged, under contract for a consideration, in advertising Loft candy products and in promoting the sale thereof by means of broadcasts of lectures on food over Radio Station WMCA, of New York City, State of New York, and during said time was further engaged in lending his recommendation, name, title, and photograph for use on advertising literature of, and in promoting the sale of, the candy products of respondent Loft, Inc.

PAR. 2. Commencing on or about the first day of October 1934, and continuously thereafter for several months, reaching into the year 1935, respondents, separately and together, began and carried on an extensive advertising and sales promotion program for Loft candy products, directed to and reaching the public in general in various States of the United States, and in the District of Columbia, by means of statements and representations, having State and interstate circulation, in newspapers, on circular literature inserted in Loft candy boxes, on labels and seals, on certain literature distributed through Loft stores, on Loft store and window displays, and by means of radio broadcasts made by respondent Daniel R. Hodgdon and contracted for and sponsored by respondent Loft, Inc. Throughout the entirety of the aforesaid advertising of respondents there runs and prominently appears the slogan and representation that Loft candies are "Made without Glucose" and contain no glucose. The said slogan and representation appears on Loft labels and seals, sometimes standing alone, but usually in combination with the words "SEAL OF PROTECTION" and "LOFT REALLY PURE CANDY." These seals, which are placed on Loft candy boxes and wrappers, are pictured in approximately all of the advertising literature of respondent Loft, Inc., and are repeatedly therein referred to and combined with such statements as "This Seal is your Protection" and "Loft Seal is Your Protection." The aforesaid statements and representations also repeatedly and variously appear in association or combination with such statements and representations as the following:

Loft CODE OF ETHICS:

Glucose should not be put in candy unless the label states the facts—because glucose is only a starch which has been treated with sulphuric acid. Excess of starch is dangerous.

Loft candies are really pure—they contain no substitutes—no adulterants of any kind.

Loft has discovered a new method of making candies without the use of glucose.

Loft candies do not contain substitutes or preservatives of any kind.

Loft candies are made of pure cane sugar—honey—and the purest of all fine materials.

Loft candies are really pure—therefore delicious and easily digested.

Loft Seal is Your Protection.

During the period between October 1, 1934, and the first part of January 1935, respondents made no specific reference to corn syrup as being the product identified by their use of the term "glucose" and for the most part confined themselves to the use of the term "glucose," except that a substantial portion of the newspaper advertisements of respondent Loft, Inc., during the said times, carried the following additional statements and references to definitions additional statements and references to definitions purporting to describe and identify glucose:

WHAT IS GLUCOSE?

U. S. Pharmacopoeia, page 178, as follows:

A product obtained by the incomplete hydrolysis of starch.

Oxford English Dictionary, page 237 (1933) says of glucose:

Now chiefly in non-scientific use as a commercial name for dextrose, obtained from starch by the action of sulphuric acid.

Mr. Alfred W. McCann says in his book, "The Science of Eating", page 300, of glucose:

Glucose as a filler is the symbol of denatured carbohydrate foods, the excess of which in the diet of the average American family is the cause of many diseases.

During the aforementioned period, the aforesaid statements and definitions were also made and referred to on the insert literature separately circulated and distributed to and among the purchasing and consuming public by respondent Loft, Inc., in its candy boxes, together, however, with the following additional statements, representations, and references to definitions:

Funk & Wagnalls Standard Dictionary, 1932 Edition, page 1044, says of glucose:

It is the principal member of the group to which it gives its name and is much less sweet than cane sugar. It is made commercially by treating starch with dilute sulphuric acid, and the resulting solid product is called grape sugar, and the syrup Glucose.

The Winston Simplified Dictionary, 1934, page 415, says of Glucose:

Obtained by the action of sulphuric acid on starch, or in solid form known as dextrose. Commercially a syrup containing glucose proper and other substances. Used as an adulterant.

Webster's International Dictionary (1934), page 1067, says of glucose:

Commercial. A light colored, uncrystallizable syrup obtained by the incomplete hydrolysis of starch (usually by heating it with dilute acid) and containing chiefly maltose, dextrin, and dextrose; mixing syrup; starch syrup.

PAR. 3. In the course and conduct of the aforesaid advertising and sales promotion program for Loft candy products, respondent Loft, Inc., and respondent Daniel R. Hodgdon represented and represent to purchasers and prospective purchasers of candy and to the public in general that the candy products of the respondent Loft, Inc., are "Made without Glucose" and contain no glucose; that glucose, as used or found in candy, is made with sulphuric or hydrochloric acid and bleached with sulphuric acid, is a filler, an adulterant, a preservative, and a cheap substitute for sugar in candy, is less digestible than cane sugar, and contains starch, and therefore, that it is impure, unwholesome, harmful to health, unsafe, and dangerous for adults and children; that glucose is an ingredient used and found in candies, except Loft candies; that candy products made with or containing glucose may contain and do contain sulphuric or hydrochloric acid and starch, are less digestible than candies made without glucose, contain a filler, a preservative, an adulterant, and a cheap substitute for sugar in candies, and therefore, that the same are impure, unwholesome, harmful to health, unsafe, and dangerous for adults and children; that the Loft seal, appearing on Loft candy boxes, bearing the slogan "Made without Glucose", is a "Seal of Protection" against such candies, all therein and thereby further implying and representing that the purchase and use of candy products in general, other than those of respondent Loft, Inc., is dangerous and unsafe and is to be warned against, and that candies made with or containing glucose are inferior in quality to candies made without or containing no glucose, and to the candy products made, offered, and sold by respondent Loft, Inc.

The slogan "Made without Glucose," as used by respondents with relation to Loft candies, is calculated to and does epitomize the aforesaid statements and representations relative to glucose, to candies made with or containing glucose, and to Loft candies as distinguished therefrom and as superior thereto. Said slogan is at all times combined with respondent's statements and representations in disparagement of glucose, such that the same is inseparable from said statements and representations with respect to the benefits accruing therefrom to respondent Loft, Inc.

The substance of the aforesaid statements and representations relative to Loft candies, to glucose, to candies made with or containing glucose, and to candies other than those of Loft, Inc., all as above set forth, is abundantly diffused throughout the advertising and sales promotion conducted by respondents between October 1, 1934, and the month of October 1935, but in carrying the same over in the advertising conducted during the latter part of January 1935, and thereafter, respondents used the terms "glucose" and "commercial glucose," together or in association with the term "corn syrup," for the most part in such a way as to indicate that by the terms "glucose" and "commercial glucose" respondents specifically and exclusively referred to, meant, and intended to limit the application of such terms to that candy ingredient or product known as "corn syrup."

The aforesaid statements and representations falsely disparage the qualities and ingredient properties of the candy products of competitors of respondent Loft, Inc.

PAR. 4. In view of the primary meaning of "glucose," as more fully hereinafter set forth, and because "glucose" and "commercial glucose" are used to identify a certain sugar contained in candy products in general, and in Loft candies, said terms, in and of themselves, are inadequate to identify "corn syrup" or to identify and distinguish that commercial ingredient, specifically known as "corn syrup," from certain other sugar or candy ingredients commonly designated and identified as "glucose."

As a matter of primary definition and meaning, the word "glucose" is a name for a certain sugar or group of sugars. Dictionary definitions of "glucose" are not worded alike, and some are more extensive than others, but according to that definition which in substance is common to dictionaries in general, the word "glucose" is generic in meaning and as such identifies a sugar. This definition also usually indicates that this sugar is found largely in the vegetable kingdom, in honey, and in animal organisms, as in the blood, liver, etc.; that it is less sweet than cane sugar, and that it is commercially derived from starch. Within this meaning, the words "glucose" and "dextrose" are interchangeable and synonymous, and in connection with the said definition of the word "glucose," the word "dextrose" is sometimes referred to and defined as a synonym for "glucose." Within this meaning, also, and as a matter of fact, the said sugar is an end-product of hydrolized cane sugar and an end-product of hydrolized starch. Some definitions also indicate that "glucose" is the name of a group of sugars or sweet compounds having a common chemical formula, to which glucose, as the principal member of the group, gives its name, and that this group includes, among others, grape-sugar, also called "dextrose," and fruit sugar, also called "fructose" and "levulose." In some instances, but not universally, dictionary definitions also indicate that the word "glucose" has a commercial significance, in which connection some definitions indicate it as a commercial name for dextrose, while other definitions indicate it as the name for syrup which is commercially derived from starch, but this information, in those definitions in which it appears, is subordinated to the primary definition of glucose as meaning a sugar or sugars, such that general reference to dictionary definitions serves to identify glucose as a sugar rather than as a commercial syrup, and even where a commercial syrup is referred to in definitions appearing under the word "glucose," no specific mention is made of "corn syrup" nor is the commercial meaning of the word limited in such a way as to identify glucose as being only that syrup commercially derived from the starch of corn.

In the sense that the word "glucose" primarily identifies sugar, it is a word familiar to and generally used in the parlance of biochemists, nutritionists, pediatricians, and medical men, and in general by those professions dealing with the feeding, uses, and metabolisms of food, and as so used, it means and signifies that particular sugar also known and identified both as "dextrose" and as "d-glucose." By such experts it is also described as the "sugar of the blood," or as that sugar which, upon digestion of carbohydrate foods, is absorbed and taken into the blood stream to the liver and to the muscles of the body. For the reason that the glucose sugars, including glucose or dextrose and levulose, are subject to scientific detection by a process known as polarization, the word "glucose" has been subjected to some refinement and has given rise in chemical and scientific terminology to the words "d-glucose" and "l-glucose." For the reason that the simple sugar known as "glucose" or "dextrose" is dextrorotary, that is, upon polarization rotates the plane of light to the right, it has come to be more specifically identified as "d-glucose." "Levulose," on the other hand, being levurotary, rotating the plane of light to the left, has come to be more particularly identified as "l-glucose."

The Pharmacopoeia of the United States defines Glucos (Liquid Glucose) as "a product obtained by the incomplete hydrolysis of starch."

The words "glucose" and "commercial glucose" are interchangeably used among members of the candy-making trades to designate a candy ingredient or syrup product made and sold by the corn industries, and with regard thereto these words are understood by most members of the candy-making trades to mean "corn syrup", but the words as so used by some members of said trades have not been and are not accepted, adopted or used by all members of said trades as a name and synonym for "corn syrup." It is not shown that these words, standing alone and as used or understood among members of said trades, are understood by the public in general to mean "corn syrup."

PAR. 5. Sugars are called monosaccharides, disaccharides, and polysaccharides, depending upon whether they are composed of one, two, or more sugar molecules. The simple glucose sugars, dextrose (d-glucose) and levulose (l-glucose), are monosaccharides. Hydrolysis (chemical breakdown) of the disaccharides and polysaccharides produces monosaccharides. The hydrolysis of cane sugar (sucrose), a polysaccharide, into its simple sugars, produces one part dextrose and one part levulose. The hydrolysis of starch into maltose, a disaccharide, and thence into its simple sugars, produces two equal parts of dextrose. Levulose is known to be sweeter than dextrose sugar, but the food and energy values of dextrose presently appear to be more emphasized in human diet, physiology, and food metabolism.

The general process of making commercial candies with cane sugar involves a substantial hydrolysis or breakdown of the cane sugar into its simple sugars and the inversion thereof into non-crystalline form, in which form it is known as "invert sugar." The maintenance of this inversion is essential in the finished candy product. Except in the presence of acids, acid salts, or certain enzymes, by which hydrolysis and inversion are achieved and maintained, inverted cane sugar regrains or crystallizes, for which reason acidity, as distinguished from alkaline conditions, must be present in candy made of cane sugar and must be produced or induced therein in the process of manufacture in order to make and maintain candy as such. The industrial chemistry incident and essential to these accomplishments in candy making, as now practiced, is consistent with the qualities of safety and wholesomeness in candy.

Among commercial candy makers in general, the aforesaid ends for the most part are achieved by use of that candy ingredient or product made and sold by the so-called corn industries and specifically described and identified as "corn syrup", although called "glucose" and sometimes "commercial glucose" among members of the candy-making trades. This product is obtained in commercial manufacture by the controlled hydrolysis or conversion of starch, derived from corn, in which process the starch loses its identity and nature as such, and in which, short of complete hydrolysis, producing dextrose only, the starch is converted into dextrans, maltose, and dextrose, in varying proportions dependent upon the extent of hydrolysis. A dextrin is a product which is neither starch nor sugar but intermediate between starch and sugar. Dextrans are not found in cane sugar or in hydrolyzed or inverted cane sugar. They are produced from starch in the process of human digestion and, like the starch from which derived, they are healthful and wholesome when found or produced in human diet. In addition, corn syrup contains water and is acid, as distinguished from alkaline, in its reactions.

Candy can be made with a sugar ingredient other than cane sugar, but cane sugar is usually used, and usually with corn syrup in combination therewith. Corn Syrup contains glucose, that is, sugar, which is the base of all candy, and it has the additional value and necessary properties for aiding the hydrolysis and inversion of cane sugar and for maintaining the inverted sugar of candy against regraining or reversion to crystalline form. It thus serves not only in the making of candy but also thereafter to maintain it as such. It is also valuable in obtaining and regulating the desired sweetness or taste of candy and serves to satisfy needs brought about by varied conditions under which candy is kept and sold.

PAR. 6. Respondent Loft, Inc., professes to a long record and reputation for good candies, and for many years prior to the month of October 1934, it used corn syrup in the making of its candies. Because of its unique combination of values as a candy ingredient, corn syrup, also known as "glucose" and "commercial glucose" by members of the candy making industry, has been used in said industry for approximately fifty years. Many makers of candy, competitors of respondent Loft, Inc., regard it as an absolutely essential ingredient for all or most of their candies. It is now used generally, if not universally, by competitors of respondent Loft, Inc., so that false and disparaging statements and representations by respondents relative to corn syrup, glucose, and commercial glucose, as a candy ingredient, tend to affect and obstruct, and do affect and obstruct, competitors in the sale of their candies.

PAR. 7. For the reason that glucose, in any form, inclusive of sugar or corn syrup, as used or found in candy, is safe and wholesome and regarded both as a natural and essential ingredient in commercial candies, there is no basis for disparaging candies made with or containing glucose in any form. For the same reasons, and contrary to the statements and representations made by respondents, as set forth in paragraphs 2 and 3 above, glucose, as sugar or corn syrup, or in any form as used or found in candy, with respect to candy, is not an "adulterant" and is not a "substitute," or a "cheap substitute" for cane sugar, or a "filler," or a "preservative," in the sense that these words may be used, and were so used in Loft advertising, to reflect upon candy quality, and the same are inappropriate to describe corn syrup as a candy ingredient or to reflect comparative qualities of candies as a result of the use or non-use of corn syrup. For the same reasons, also, the market price of corn syrup, purchased in commercial quantities for use in candies, is not relevant to the quality of candies, and with respect to the qualities of candy made with or containing corn syrup, there is no basis for disparaging said candy by way of a general representation to the effect that the ingredient used or contained therein, called "glucose," "commercial glucose," or "corn syrup," is "cheap" or a "cheap substitute" for cane sugar in candy. The said ingredient, as used or found in candy, is not made with sulphuric acid, is not bleached with sulphuric acid, and does not contain either sulphuric or hydrochloric acid, or starch, is not impure, unwholesome, harmful to health, unsafe, or dangerous for adults or children, or less digestible than cane sugar. The said ingredient has been studied by biochemists and is used extensively by nutritionists, pediatricians, and experts in the field of carbohydrate feeding, and upon the overwhelming weight of evidence, it is not only healthful and wholesome but a valuable food product which may be made an ingredient in candy or other food products without risk of injuring the health of either adults or children. In general, the industrial chemistry of making said ingredient for use in candies is not in every detail parallel to that used in the making or refining of cane sugar, but the same is comparable thereto, and no basis is shown for impeaching either of these processes, or the process or processes used in hydrolizing and inverting cane sugar in candy making, as being unsafe or unwholesome. Candy products made with or containing said ingredient or product do not contain sulphuric or hydrochloric acid, or starch, are not less digestible than candies made without said ingredient, or with cane sugar only, and the same are not impure, unwholesome, harmful to health, unsafe, and dangerous for adults or children, or otherwise inferior in quality to candies made without said ingredient or product. The purchase and use of candy products in general other than those of respondent Loft, Inc., is not dangerous or unsafe. With respect to the qualities of safety, healthfulness, and wholesomeness in candy, respondent Loft, Inc., has competitors making and selling candies made with and without said ingredient, which are comparable and equal to the candy products made, offered, and sold by respondent Loft, Inc.

For the reasons above stated, the statements and representations made by respondents in disparagement of the qualities and ingredient property or properties of candy products made and sold by competitors of respondent Loft, Inc., all as set forth and referred to in paragraphs 2 and 3 above, were and are, and each of them was and is, false.

PAR. 8. It is not shown that glucose, in the form of corn syrup as such, was used or found in any of the candy products made and sold by respondent Loft, Inc., during the course of the advertising and sales promotion hereinabove referred to; but with respect to glucose, defined as "a product obtained by the incomplete hydrolysis of starch," and as so identified and represented in certain portions of Loft advertisements, some of said candies did in fact contain, or were made with, a product identified as incompletely hydrolyzed starch and as glucose, as evidenced by the presence of dextrans. Of necessity, also, being made with cane sugar and invert cane sugar, the candy products of respondent Loft, Inc., were and are made with dextrose and levulose, so that as a matter of scientific fact, and within the general and specific definition of glucose as identifying sugars and a particular sugar, and further, within the identity thereof as so represented in certain portions of Loft advertising, referred to and set out in paragraph 2 above, referring to glucose as sugar, and as a name for dextrose, said candies were and are made with glucose.

PAR. 9. Respondent Loft, Inc., is one of the largest candy products manufacturers in the world and has publicly represented itself to be the largest. While it sells to independent retailers, it also owns or operates over two hundred retail stores, located in various cities of the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia. The total sales income of respondent Loft, Inc., in 1934, the year in which the advertising complained of was begun, was $12,412,327.46, of which $7,692,270.85 represents income from candy sales. Respondent spent $226,067.32 on account of advertising in 1934, and $208,609.82 on account of advertising from January 1, 1935, to October 1, 1935. The amount spent in 1934 was almost half as much as the entire net profit of the corporation for 1934, which was $455,377.19. In the year 1934, the year in which the advertising complained of began, respondent Loft, Inc., produced and distributed 22,950,817 pounds of candies, representing an increase of considerably over two and a half million pounds more than it sold in 1933. Many of the competitors of respondent Loft, Inc., are small and inferior in business size and strength to that of said respondent.

PAR. 10. The false and disparaging statements and representations made by respondents, separately and together, all as more particularly hereinabove set forth, have the tendency and capacity to place, and have in fact placed, in the minds of the buying public to a substantial degree a consciousness of danger in the use of candy or food made with or containing glucose, and the same have had, and have, and each of them has had, and has, a tendency and capacity to, and did and do in fact, mislead and deceive a substantial portion of the buying public, including purchasers and potential purchasers of candies being sold in competition with the candy products of respondent Loft, Inc., into the false and erroneous belief that said statements and representations are, and each of them is, true; that glucose is an ingredient or substance which is used or contained in candy in general but is not used or contained in Loft candies; that it is an ingredient or substance which is impure, harmful to health, unwholesome, dangerous, and unsafe; that candies in which it is used or present are impure, harmful to health, unwholesome, dangerous, and unsafe, and otherwise inferior in quality to the candies of respondent Loft, Inc., and that the purchase and use of candies other than those of respondent Loft, Inc., is in general dangerous and unsafe, and the same have caused, and cause, such purchasers and prospective purchasers of competitors to discontinue or refrain from the making of purchases from said competitors and to purchase products of Loft, Inc., in place and stead of candy products of said competitors, in consequence of which trade has been, and is, unfairly diverted to respondent Loft, Inc., from its competitors who do not falsely defame or disparage the products of others and who do not misrepresent the ingredients of their own products.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of respondent, Loft, Inc., and Dr. Daniel R. Hodgdon, are to the prejudice of the public and of respondents' competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce, within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

It is ordered, That respondent Loft, Inc., and respondent Dr. Daniel R. Hodgdon, and its and his officers, agents, representatives, and employees, in connection with the advertising, offering for sale, sale, and distribution of candy products in interstate commerce, or in the District of Columbia, do forthwith cease and desist from:

1. Representing in any way, directly or indirectly, that glucose, whether in the form of commercial glucose or glucose in any other form, as now produced and used or contained in candy products, is impure, harmful to health, unwholesome, dangerous, or unsafe, or that that ingredient, or any ingredient, now produced and used or contained in candy products, and called or identified by the name glucose, is impure, harmful to health, unwholesome, dangerous, or unsafe;

2. Representing in any way, directly or indirectly, that candy products made with or containing glucose, whether in the form of commercial glucose or glucose in any other form, are impure, harmful to health, unwholesome, dangerous, or unsafe, or that such candies are inferior in quality to, or less pure, wholesome, or safe than, the candies of respondent Loft, Inc.;

3. Representing in any way, directly or indirectly, that the purchase and use of candies made with or containing glucose, whether in the form of commercial glucose or glucose in any other form, is dangerous or unsafe, or that the purchase and use of candy products in general, other than those of respondent Loft, Inc., is dangerous or unsafe;

4. Representing, directly or indirectly, that the candy products of respondent Loft, Inc., are made without, or do not in fact contain, glucose.

It is further ordered, That the respondents shall, within 60 days after service upon them of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which they have complied with this order.

IN THE MATTER OF
CHARLES R. LUCE, INDIVIDUALLY AND AS TRUSTEE, TRADING AS LUCE & COMPANY

COMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION
 OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 26, 1914

Docket 2780. Complaint, Apr. 23, 1936—Decision, Feb. 9, 1937

Where an individual engaged in manufacture and sale of "straight" goods candy and of so-called "break and take" assortments, principal trade demand for which comes from the small retailers with stores, in many instances, near schools and patronized by school children, and sale and distribution of which candy, giving with sale thereof to public opportunity of obtaining a prize or becoming a winner by lot or chance, teaches and encourages gambling among children, largest class by far of purchasers and consumers of such type thereof, who buy same in preference to so-called "straight" candy when displayed side by side, by reason of lottery or gambling feature connected with former, and selling of which in the market of the other, i. e., the "straight" goods, has been followed by marked decrease in sales of such "straight" candy, due to gambling or lottery feature connected with so-called "break and take" merchandise—

Sold to wholesalers and jobbers assortments variously designated as "Lucky Winner," "Lucky Smokes," and "Big Winner," and composed of a number of penny pieces of uniform size and shape, the concealed colored centers of some of which differed from those of the majority, together with number of packages of candy, to be given as prizes to those procuring one of said pieces, colored center of which differed as aforesaid from majority thereof, and together with explanatory display cards with said "Lucky Winner" assortments for retailers' use is offering same to public; so assembled and packed that such assortments might be and were displayed and sold by numerous retail dealer purchasers thereof in accordance with above described plan, and with knowledge and intent that such assortments could and would thus be resold to public by retail dealers as above set forth, in violation of public policy and in competition with many who regard such method of sale and distribution as morally bad and as encouraging gambling, and especially among children, as injurious to the industry through resulting in the merchandising of a chance or lottery instead of candy, and as providing retailers with a means of violating the laws of the several States, and some of whom, for such reasons, refuse to sell candy so packed and assembled that it can be resold to public by lot or chance;

With result that retailers, finding such candy more salable, purchased products of said individual and others employing similar methods, some competitors began sale and distribution of candy for resale to public by lot or chance to meet competition of manufacturers who thus sell and distribute their products, "straight" goods sales of aforesaid refusing competitors, who can compete on even terms only by giving same or similar devices to retail dealers, showed a continued decrease in their unwillingness to do so, public and competitors were prejudiced and injured, and trade was diverted to him from said competitors, and there was a restraint upon and a detriment to the freedom of fair and legitimate competition in industry concerned:

Held, That such acts and practices, under the conditions and circumstances set forth, were all to the prejudice and injury of the public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition.

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that Charles R. Luce, individually, and as trustee, trading as Luce & Company, hereinafter referred to as respondent, has been and is using unfair methods of competition in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in said act of Congress, and it appearing to said Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent is an individual, operating his business as a common law trust of the type known as "Massachusetts Trust Estate," organized and filed under the laws of New Jersey, and using the trade name of Luce & Company, with his principal office and place of business located at 350 Mercer Street, in the city of Jersey City, State of New Jersey. Respondent is now, and for several years last past, has been engaged in the manufacture of candy and in the sale and distribution thereof to wholesale dealers located at points in the various States of the United States, and causes said products, when so sold, to be transported from his place of business in the city of Jersey City, State of New Jersey, to purchasers thereof in other States of the United States at their respective places of business, and there is now, and has been for several years last past, a course of trade and commerce by said respondent in such candy, between and among the States of the United States. In the course and conduct of the said business, respondent is in competition with other individuals and with corporations and partnerships engaged in the sale and distribution of candy and candy products in commerce between and among the various States of the United States.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of his business, as described in paragraph 1 hereof, respondent sells and has sold since on or about December 1935, to wholesale dealers, packages or assortments of candy so packed and assembled as to involve the use of a lottery scheme when sold and distributed to the consumers thereof.

Complaint

One of said assortments consists of a number of pieces of candy of uniform size and shape, together with a number of packages of candy, which packages of candy are to be given as prizes to purchasers of said pieces of candy of uniform size and shape in the following manner: The majority of the said pieces of candy of uniform size and shape have centers of the same color, but a small number of said pieces of candy have centers of a different color. The said pieces of candy of uniform size and shape in said assortment retail at the price of 1¢ each, but the purchaser who procures one of said candies having a center colored differently from the majority is entitled to receive, and is to be given free of charge, one of the said packages of candy heretofore referred to. The color of the centers of said pieces of candy of uniform size and shape is effectively concealed from the purchaser and prospective purchaser until a selection has been made and the piece of candy broken up. The aforesaid purchasers of said candies, who procure a candy having a center colored differently from the majority of said pieces of candy of uniform size and shape in said assortment, thus procure one of the said packages of candy wholly by lot or chance.

PAR. 3. The wholesale dealers, to whom respondent sells his assortment, resell said assortment to retail dealers, and said retail dealers expose said assortment for sale and sell said candy to the purchasing public in accordance with the aforesaid sales plan. Respondent thus supplies to and places in the hands of others the means of conducting lotteries in the sale of his product in accordance with the sales plan hereinabove set forth, as a means of inducing purchasers thereof to purchase respondent's said product in preference to candy offered for sale and sold by his competitors.

PAR. 4. The sale of said candy to the purchasing public in the manner above alleged involves a game of chance or the sale of a chance to procure packages of candy.

The use by respondent of said method in the sale of candy, and the sale of candy by and through the use thereof and by the aid of said method, is a practice of the sort which the common law and criminal statutes have long deemed contrary to public policy; and is contrary to an established public policy of the Government of the United States. The use by respondent of said method has the dangerous tendency unduly to hinder competition or create monopoly in this, to wit: that the use thereof has the tendency and capacity to exclude from the branch of the candy trade involved in this proceeding competitors who do not adopt and use the same method or an equivalent or similar method involving the same or an equivalent or similar element of chance or lottery scheme.

Many persons, firms and corporations who make and sell candy in competition with the respondent, as above alleged, are unwilling to offer for sale or sell candy so packed and assembled as above alleged, or otherwise arranged and packed for sale to the purchasing public so as to involve a game of chance, and such competitors refrain therefrom.

PAR. 5. Many dealers in, and ultimate purchasers of, candy are attracted by respondent's said method and manner of packing said candy, and by the element of chance involved in the sale thereof in the manner above described, and are thereby induced to purchase said candy so packed and sold by respondent, in preference to candy offered for sale and sold by said competitors of respondent who do not use the same or equivalent methods. The use of said method by respondent has the tendency and capacity, because of said game of chance, to divert to respondent trade and custom from his said competitors who do not use the same or an equivalent method; to exclude from said candy trade all competitors who are unwilling to and who do not use the same or an equivalent method because the same is unlawful; to lessen competition in said candy trade, and to tend to create a monopoly of said candy trade in respondent and such other distributors of candy as use the same or an equivalent method, and to deprive the purchasing public of the benefit of free competition in said candy trade. The use of said method by the respondent has the tendency and capacity to eliminate from said candy trade all actual competitors, and to exclude therefrom all potential competitors, who do not adopt and use said method or an equivalent method.

PAR. 6. Many of said competitors of respondent are unwilling to adopt and use said method or any method involving a game of chance or the sale of a chance to win something by chance or any other method that is contrary to public policy.

PAR. 7. The aforementioned method, acts and practices of the respondent are all to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors as hereinabove alleged. Said method, acts, and practices constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914.

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, on April 23, 1936, issued and served its complaint in this proceeding upon the respondent, Charles R. Luce, individually and as trustee, trading as Luce & Company, charging him with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of the provisions of said act. Respondent did not file answer to said complaint, and, commencing July 10, 1936, testimony and other evidence in support of the allegations of the complaint were introduced by Henry C. Lank and P. C. Kolinski, attorneys for the Commission, before Miles J. Furnas, an examiner of the Commission theretofore duly designated by it, and said testimony and other evidence were duly recorded and filed in the office of the Commission. Respondent was represented by counsel but offered no testimony or other evidence in opposition to the charges of the complaint.

Thereafter this proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on said complaint, the testimony and other evidence duly recorded and filed in the office of the Commission, respondent having indicated that he did not desire to file any brief or to orally argue the matter; and the Commission, having duly considered the matter and being fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent is an individual and the sole trustee of the trust estate doing business as Luce & Company. He has his principal office and place of business at 350 Mercer Street, in the city of Jersey City, State of New Jersey, and is now, and for several years last past has been, engaged in the manufacture of candy and in the sale and distribution thereof to wholesale dealers and jobbers located at points in the various States in the eastern part of the United States, and causes said candy when so sold to be shipped or transported from his principal place of business in the State of New Jersey to purchasers thereof in New Jersey and in other States in the eastern part of the United States at their respective places of business. In so carrying on said business respondent is and has been engaged in interstate commerce and is and has been in active competition with other individuals and with partnerships and corporations engaged in the manufacture of candy and in the sale and distribution thereof in commerce between and among the various States of the United States.

PAR. 2. Among the candy manufactured and sold by respondent were assortments known and designated by respondent as "Lucky Winner," "Lucky Smokes," and "Big Winner." Said assortments were composed of a number of pieces of candy of uniform size and shape, together with a number of packages of candy, which packages of candy were given as prizes to purchasers of said pieces of candy of uniform size and shape, in the following manner:

The majority of said pieces of candy of uniform size and shape in said assortment had centers of the same color, but a small number of said pieces of candy had centers of a different color. Said pieces of candy of uniform size and shape retailed at the price of 1¢ each, but the purchasers who procured one of the said pieces of candy having a center colored differently from the majority were entitled to receive, and were to be given free of charge, one of the said packages of candy heretofore referred to. The color of the center of said pieces of candy of uniform size and shape was effectively concealed from purchasers and prospective purchasers until a selection had been made and the piece of candy selected broken open. The aforesaid purchasers, who procured a piece of candy of uniform size and shape having a center colored differently from the majority, thus procured one of the said packages of candy wholly by lot or chance.

Respondent furnished to said wholesale dealers, with the "Lucky Winner" assortment, a display card to be used by the retail dealer in offering said assortment for sale to the public. The display card bore a legend or legends informing the prospective purchaser that the said assortment was being distributed in accordance with the above-described sales plan.

PAR. 3. The candy assortments involving the lot or chance feature, as described in paragraph 2 above, are generally referred to in the candy trade or industry as "break and take" assortments. Assortments of candy without the lot or chance feature in connection with their resale to the public are generally referred to in the candy trade or industry as "straight" goods. These terms will be used hereafter in these findings to designate these types of assortments.

PAR. 4. Numerous retail dealers purchased the said assortments described in paragraph 2 above from wholesale dealers and jobbers who in turn had purchased said assortments from respondent. Such retail dealers displayed said assortments for sale to the public as packed and assembled by the respondent, and the candy contained in said assortments was sold and distributed to the consuming public in accordance with the above described sales plan.

PAR. 5. All sales made by respondent of assortments described in paragraph 2 hereof were absolute sales, and respondent retained no control in any way over the goods after they were delivered to the wholesale dealer or jobber. The assortments were assembled and packed in such manner that they were and might be displayed by the retail dealer for sale and distribution to the purchasing public in accordance with the sales plan described in said paragraph 2. The respondent had knowledge that said assortments would be resold to the purchasing public by retail dealers by lot or chance, and packed and assembled such candy in the way and manner described so that it could and would be resold to the public by retail dealers in the manner described.

PAR. 6. The sale and distribution of candy by the retail dealers by the method herein described is a sale and distribution of candy by lot or chance and constitutes a lottery or gaming device.

Competitors of respondent appeared as witnesses in this proceeding and testified, and the Commission finds as a fact, that many competitors regard such methods of sale and distribution as morally bad and as encouraging gambling especially among children; as injurious to the candy industry because it results in the merchandising of a chance or lottery instead of candy; and as providing retail merchants with the means of violating the laws of the several States. Because of these reasons some competitors of respondent refuse to sell candy so packed and assembled that it can be resold to the public by lot or chance. These competitors are thereby put to a disadvantage in competing. The retailers, finding that they could dispose of more candy by the "break and take" method, bought from respondent and others employing the same methods of sale, and thereby trade was diverted to respondent and others using similar methods from said competitors. Said competitors can compete on even terms only by giving the same or similar devices to retail dealers. This they are unwilling to do, and their sales of "straight" candy show a continued decrease.

In order to meet the competition of manufacturers who sell and distribute candy which is resold by such methods, some competitors of respondent have begun the sale and distribution of candy for resale to the public by lot or chance. The use of such methods by respondent in the sale and distribution of his candy was prejudicial and injurious to the public and his competitors and resulted in the diversion of trade to respondent from said competitors, and was a restraint upon and a detriment to the freedom of fair and legitimate competition in the candy industry.

PAR. 7. There are in the United States many manufacturers of candy who do not manufacture and sell lottery or prize assortments and who sold their "straight" candy in interstate commerce in competition with the "break and take" assortments of respondent and other manufacturers of similar candy. The sale of candy without a lottery or gaming feature in connection therewith is adversely affected by the sale of "break and take" candy, and manufacturers of the former type of candy have noted a marked decrease in the sales of their products whenever and wherever the lottery or prize candy has appeared in their market. This decrease in the sales of "straight" candy is principally due to the gambling or lottery features connected with the "break and take" candy.

PAR. 8. The principal demand in the trade for the "break and take" candy comes from the small retailers. The stores of these small retailers are in many instances located near schools and attract the trade of school children. The consumers or purchasers of the lottery or prize assortments are principally children, and because of the lottery or gambling feature connected with the "break and take" assortments and the possibility of becoming a winner it has been observed that the children purchase them in preference to the "straight" candy when the two types of assortments are displayed side by side.

The children prefer to purchase the lottery or prize assortments of candy because of the gambling feature connected with their sale. The sale and distribution of "break and take" assortments of candy, or of candy which has connected with its sale to the public the means or opportunity of obtaining a prize or becoming a winner by lot or chance, teaches and encourages gambling among children who comprise by far the largest class of purchasers and consumers of this type of candy.

PAR. 9. The respondent testified, and the Commission finds, that the gross annual sales of the respondent are between $80,000 and $90,000; that the respondent sold his "break and take" assortments described in paragraph 2 hereof for a few months only, discontinuing the sale thereof during March or April 1936; and that the "break and take" assortments were a minor part of the respondent's total business.

PAR. 10. The Commission further finds that the sale and distribution in interstate commerce of assortments so packed and assembled as to enable retail dealers, without alteration, addition or rearrangement, to resale the same to the consuming public by lot or chance is contrary to public policy.

Order

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondent, Charles R. Luce, individually and as trustee, trading as Luce & Company, under the conditions and circumstances set forth in the foregoing findings of fact, were all to the prejudice of the public and respondent's competitors and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce and constitute a violation of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914.

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

It is ordered, That the respondent, Charles R. Luce, individually and as trustee, trading as Luce & Company, his agents, representatives, and employees, in the offering for sale, sale, and distribution in interstate commerce of candy, do cease and desist from:

1. Selling and distributing to jobbers and wholesale dealers for resale to retail dealers candy so packed and assembled that sales of such candy to the general public are to be made or may be made by means of a lottery, gaming device, or gift enterprise.

2. Supplying to or placing in the hands of wholesale dealers and jobbers assortments of candy which are used or which may be used, without alteration or rearrangement of the contents of such packages or assortments, to conduct a lottery, gaming device, or gift enterprise in the sale or distribution of the candy contained in said assortments to the public.

3. Packing or assembling in the same assortment of candy for sale to the public at retail pieces of candy of uniform size and shape having centers of different color, together with small packages of candy, which said small packages of candy are to be given as prizes to the purchaser procuring a piece of candy with a center of a particular color.

Memorandum

4. Furnishing to wholesale dealers and jobbers display cards, either with assortments of candy or separately, bearing a legend or legends informing the purchaser that the candy is being sold to the public by lot or chance, or in accordance with a sales plan which constitutes a lottery, gaming device, or gift enterprise.

It is further ordered, That the respondent shall, within 30 days after service upon him of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which he has complied with this order.

MEMORANDUM

The Commission, as of February 11, 1937, made substantially similar findings and orders in two other cases, namely:

GEORGE CLOSE COMPANY, Docket 2688, in which complaint issued on Jan. 18, 1936, and in which respondent, Massachusetts corporation with principal office and place of business in Cambridge, Mass., sold similarly arranged assortments of penny candies with display cards, with the different colored centers entitling chance purchasers to one of the larger pieces included, and in which Commission found, as respects respondent's annual business (as set forth in Par. 9), that it was substantial, that it sold both its "straight" merchandise and "break and take" assortments in all states east of the Mississippi and in states west of the Rocky Mountains, and that the "break and take" assortments constituted the lesser part of the total volume of its business, but that it had been and was distributing numerous assortments involving same lot or chance principle and varying only in detail; and

YORK CARAMEL COMPANY, Docket 2747, in which complaint issued on Mar. 16, 1936, and in which respondent, Pennsylvania corporation with principal office and place of business in York, Pa., sold assortments of individually wrapped penny caramels of uniform size and shape, the concealed different color of a small number of which entitled person procuring such a piece to one of the larger pieces included, and in which Commission found, as set forth in Par. 9, that respondent's gross annual sales were about $200,000, that it sold its aforesaid "break and take" assortments for a short time only and discontinued sale thereof shortly before issuance of Commission's complaint in matter, and that such "break and take" assortments were a minor part of its total volume of business.

GRANITE ARTS, INC.

COMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION
OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 26, 1914

Docket 2610. Complaint, Nov. 2, 1935—Decision, Feb. 16, 1937

Where a corporation engaged in manufacture of monuments, tombstones and grave markers, through mixing granite chips or powder with cement and molding same into cast stone, and in the sale of its said products, which simulated in appearance and were used as a substitute for granite; in advertising its said products in farm papers of interstate circulation and through descriptive circulars mailed to prospective purchasers—

- (a) Represented its said monuments, etc., as "Victoria Granite" and featured the corporate and trade name adopted by it, in which were included words "Granite Arts," in its said advertising and in correspondence with customers and prospective customers, and caused its address in said newspaper advertisements to appear as "Graniteway, Omaha," and represented that its said products constituted "A Permanent Lasting Tribute of Love and Respect," and that "Our Memorials Will Endure Far into the Centuries," facts being it did not make any products from true granite, almost everlasting solid rock formation of great strength, etc., and known universally as a substance from which tombstones, monuments, and grave markers have long been made, and of which Victoria Granite is an old established type and well-known to trade, aforesaid address was purely fictitious, and aforesaid representations were otherwise false;
- (b) Represented, in its advertising matter, that its memorials were standardized to dimensions which had the official approval of practically every cemetery in the United States, facts being many such cemeteries have rules and regulations prohibiting any such markers, excepting those made of granite, bronze, or marble, and do not allow cast stone monuments, etc., to be placed therein, and such representations were false; and
- (c) Mailed circulars to prospective purchasers offering discount of 10% for ten days only from price listed in circulars, and sent, thereafter, to such prospects who did not reply, card, at end of such period, offering 20% discount, and third card thereafter to non-replying customers offering 30%, facts being price thus finally arrived at was not a special one for its products, but was regular and usual price at which it sold the same;

With effect of misleading purchasing public into false and erroneous belief that said representations were true, and into purchase of substantial quantities of its products on account of such belief, thus induced, and of unfairly diverting trade to it from competitors who did not make use of same or similar representations in manufacture, sale and distribution of aforesaid products; to the injury of competition in commerce:

Held, That such acts and practices were to the prejudice and injury of the public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition.

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that Granite Arts, Inc., a corporation, hereinafter referred to as respondent, has been and now is using unfair methods of competition in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in said act, and it appearing to the Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, states its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. The respondent, Granite Arts, Inc., is a corporation, organized, existing, and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Nebraska, with its principal place of business at 1909 Leavenworth Street in the city of Omaha, State of Nebraska. It is now, and has been for several years last past, engaged in the business of manufacturing and selling cast stones which are used as monuments, tombstones, and grave markers. Said product is designed as and used as a substitute for granite, which it simulates in appearance. Its process of manufacture is that of mixing granite chips or powder with a cement mix, which is cemented sand. Respondent causes said product, when sold, to be transported from its principal place of business into and through numerous States of the United States other than the State of Nebraska, to the purchasers thereof at their respective points of location.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid, respondent is in competition with other individuals, partnerships, and corporations engaged in the manufacture, sale, and distribution of granite monuments, tombstones, and grave markers, in commerce between and among the various States of the United States.

PAR. 3. In the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid, respondent, in soliciting the sale of and selling its products in interstate commerce:

1. In advertisements and advertising matter describes its products as "Victoria Granite";

2. Adopted as and for a corporate and trade name under which to carry on its said business, the words "Granite Arts, Inc.," and used and displayed same in its advertising matter and in correspondence with customers and prospective customers in the various States of the United States; and caused in its newspaper advertisements the address "Graniteway, Omaha," to appear;

3. Described its product as "A Permanent, Lasting Tribute of Love and Respect," and "Our Memorials Will Endure Far Into The Centuries";

4. Represented in its advertising matter that their memorials are standardized to dimensions which have official approval of practically every cemetery in the United States; and

5. Mailed to prospective purchasers circulars offering a discount of 10% from the price listed in such circulars, and in other cases offered them a discount of 20% from such prices, and in certain cases, when the person circularized made further inquiry but did not purchase, offered them a special discount of 30% from the list prices.

PAR. 4. In truth and in fact:

1. The products which said corporation manufactures, sells, and distributes are not composed of natural stone or granite, but are manufactured by said corporation from cement and other ingredients;

2. The address of said corporation, "Graniteway, Omaha," given in its advertisements, is a fictitious address and one having the tendency and capacity to add to the deception caused by its misuse of the word "granite," as likewise is the corporate name of respondent, "Granite Arts, Inc.";

3. Said products are not permanent, nor will they endure for centuries;

4. Respondent's memorials do not have the official approval of practically every cemetery in the United States; and

5. The statement and representation that the discount of 10%, 20%, and 30% was a special price, is false and misleading, and the prices so quoted were and are the regular and usual prices at which said corporation sells its said products, all of which has the tendency and capacity to mislead and deceive many among the consuming public into the belief that respondent's said product is granite, and to purchase said product in that belief, and that they are obtaining a special discount in the purchase of said products.

PAR. 5. The above alleged acts and things done by respondent are all to the injury and prejudice of the public and to the competitors of respondent in interstate commerce, and constitute unfair methods of competition in interstate commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914.

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission on the second day of November 1935, issued and on the fourth day of November 1935, served its complaint in this proceeding upon respondent Granite Arts, Inc., a corporation, charging it with the use of unfair methods of competition in violation of the provisions of said act. After the issuance of complaint the respondent failed to file answer thereto, and thereafter testimony and other evidence in support of the allegations of said complaint were introduced by Morton Nesmith, attorney for the Commission, before W. W. Sheppard, an examiner of the Commission theretofore duly designated by it; and said testimony and other evidence were duly recorded and filed in the office of the Commission. Thereafter, the proceeding regularly came on for final hearings before the Commission on the said complaint, testimony and other evidence and brief in support of the complaint; respondent having filed no brief though given an opportunity to do so, and the Commission having duly considered the same and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public, and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. The respondent Granite Arts, Inc., is a corporation organized and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Nebraska, with its principal office and place of business at 1909 Leavenworth Street in the city of Omaha, State of Nebraska. The respondent was for several years prior to the issuance of the complaint engaged in the business of manufacturing and selling cast stones which were used as monuments, tombstones, and grave markers. The respondent caused these products, when manufactured, to be transported from its place of business in Omaha, Nebr., to purchasers thereof located in the various other States of the United States. In the course and conduct of its business respondent was in competition with other individuals, partnerships, and corporations engaged in the manufacture, sale, and distribution of granite monuments, tombstones, and grave markers in commerce between and among the various States of the United States.

PAR. 2. Respondent's process of manufacture was that of mixing granite chips or powder with cement and moulding the same into a cast stone. Its products, when manufactured, simulated granite in appearance and were used as a substitute for granite. The president of respondent company was one John Afflerbaugh who was the controlling and majority stockholder of the corporation. It appears that Mr. Afflerbaugh left his place of business shortly after the issuance of the complaint in this case and his address is unknown and could not be ascertained after reasonable inquiry was made.

Findings

The respondent at one time maintained an agent in Sioux City, Iowa, which agent made sales of respondent's products under the name "Sioux City Granite Arts Company."

PAR. 3. The respondent, in soliciting sale of and selling its product in commerce, as herein described, advertised its products in farm papers having an interstate circulation and mailed to prospective purchasers circulars descriptive of its products. In these advertisements respondent advertised and represented its products as "Victoria Granite." Respondent also adopted and used as its corporate and trade name "Granite Arts, Inc." which name was conspicuously displayed in all of its advertising matter and its correspondence with customers and prospective customers in the various States of the United States. Respondent also caused its address in certain newspaper advertisements having an interstate circulation to appear as "Graniteway, Omaha." Respondent further represented in its advertising matter that its memorials were standardized to the dimensions which have the official approval of practically every cemetery in the United States; and further, respondent mailed to prospective purchasers circulars offering a discount of 10% for ten days only, from the prices listed in said circulars, and at the end of said ten days respondent sent to said prospective buyers another card offering a 20% discount, and if the customer did not respond, a third card was sent offering a 30% discount. Respondent further represented in its advertising matter that its products were "A Permanent Lasting Tribute of Love and Respect," and "Our Memorials Will Endure Far into the Centuries."

PAR. 4. Granite is a solid rock formation composed of quartz, feldspar and mica of great strength, almost everlasting, and takes an excellent polish. It is universally known as a substance from which tombstones, monuments and grave markers have been made for many years. Granite is taken from quarries in various sections of the country by a mechanical process and subsequently cut and manufactured into stone markers and tombstones. Respondent's monuments, tombstones and grave markers are not composed of natural granite or stone but are made entirely of granite chips and other material mixed with cement. Respondent does not manufacture any products from true granite. Respondent's products therefore will deteriorate and disintegrate in time and are not permanent, lasting memorials nor will they endure far into the centuries. Respondent's products are not standardized to dimensions which have official approval of cemeteries throughout the United States. On the contrary there are many cemeteries throughout the United States that do not allow cast stone monuments, tombstones, and grave markers to be placed therein. These cemeteries have rules and regulations prohibiting any such markers except those made of granite, bronze, or marble. Victoria granite is a type of real granite which is quarried in the State of Massachusetts and is an old established type taken from old established quarries and is well known to the trade. Graniteway, Omaha, is a purely fictitious address. There is no post-office known as "Graniteway, Omaha, Nebraska." The statements and representations of respondent as to allowing first a 10% discount followed by a 20% discount and that followed by a 30% discount was not a special price for respondent's products but was the regular and usual price at which the respondent sold its monuments, tombstones, and grave markers.

PAR. 5. The aforesaid false and misleading statements and representations used by the respondent in offering for sale and selling its merchandise have had a tendency and capacity to and have misled the purchasing public into the false and erroneous belief that said representations are true and into the purchase of substantial quantities of respondent's products on account of said belief so induced. As a result thereof trade has been unfairly diverted to respondent from competitors in commerce as herein set out who did not make use of the same or similar representations in the manufacture, sale and distribution of tombstones, monuments, and grave markers, all to the injury of competition in commerce among and between the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondent, Granite Arts, Inc., a corporation, are to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce, within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

Order

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

This proceeding having been heard by the Federal Trade Commission upon the complaint of the Commission, testimony and other evidence taken before W. W. Sheppard, an examiner of the Commission theretofore duly designated by it, in support of the allegations of said complaint and brief on behalf of the Commission filed herein by Morton Nesmith, counsel for the Commission, and the Commission having made its findings as to the facts and its conclusion that said respondent has violated the provisions of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

It is ordered, That the respondent, Granite Arts, Inc., a corporation, its officers, representatives, agents, and employees, in connection with the offering for sale, sale, and distribution of cast stone monuments, tombstones, and grave markers in interstate commerce or in the District of Columbia, do forthwith cease and desist from representing:

1. That its cast stone monuments, tombstones, and grave markers are granite;
2. Through use of any corporate or trade name containing the word "Granite" or through the use of any other words or phrases containing the word "Granite," alone or in conjunction with any other word or words, or through any other means, that its cast stone monuments, tombstones, and grave markers are granite;
3. That its monuments, tombstones, and grave markers are standardized to dimensions which have the official approval of practically every cemetery in the United States, when such is not the fact;
4. That its cast stone products are permanent or lasting, or that they will endure far into the centuries;
5. That the prices at which said cast stone products are offered for sale and sold are other than its regular and customary retail prices unless an actual discount from its customary retail prices is offered;
6. That prices at which it sells its cast stone products are other than its customary retail prices, when such is not the fact.

It is further ordered, That the respondent shall, within 60 days after service upon it of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing, setting forth in detail the manner and form in which it has complied with the order.

IN THE MATTER OF
DOLLAR CRYSTAL COMPANYCOMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 26, 1914*Docket 2919.—Complaint, Sept. 8, 1936—Decision, Feb. 16, 1937*

Where a corporation engaged in the offer and sale of mineral water crystals under such trade names as "Genuine Texas Mineral Crystals"—

Represented, through radio broadcasts and otherwise, that drinking water in which said product had been dissolved would relieve headaches, nervousness, irritability, and fatigue, and that such crystals would remove poisonous waste matter that had accumulated in the system and the cause of disease and of most human ailments, and inability to eat certain foods, and that they contained essential minerals necessary for good health, and would impart pep and energy and accomplish various beneficial results, and were not a medicine or habit-forming drug, and that dissolving thereof in drinking water produced solution identical with the mineral water as it came from the springs, and made use of so-called testimonial letters in its said advertising;

Facts being such letters were used by it without any investigation or knowledge as to whether statements therein were in fact true or as to whether writers thereof were sufficiently informed in proper diagnosis as to be able accurately to state facts of use of such product, sole constituent of which, practically, was the saline laxative and purgative Glauber's Salts, and only therapeutic effect of which was relief of temporary constipation, many of symptoms and ailments for which it represented its said product as a relief or cure arise from causes which said salts, or hydrated sodium sulphate, will not cure or relieve, but will positively aggravate, principal active constituent of such crystals was in fact a medicine, and habit-forming, and solution of crystals in drinking water does not result in product identical with the original mineral water, due to the removal and discarding of certain constituents in process of producing the crystals in question;

With effect of misleading and deceiving purchasers and prospective purchasers into the erroneous belief that such representations were true and into purchase of its said products in such belief, and of thereby unfairly diverting trade to it from competitors engaged in producing and selling saline purgatives and in shipping same in commerce among the various States, and who truthfully advertise and represent the therapeutic value of their products, and competitors who make and sell remedies for the relief of the ailments involved as above set forth and indicated, and who truthfully represent said remedies' therapeutic effect; to the substantial injury of competition in commerce:

Held, That such acts and practices were to the prejudice of the public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition.

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that the Dollar Crystal Company, a corporation, hereinafter referred to as respondent, has been and is using unfair methods of competition in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in said act, and it appearing to the Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be to the interest of the public, hereby issues its complaint, stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent is, and was at all times hereinafter mentioned, a corporation organized and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Nebraska, with its principal place of business in Redick Tower Building, Omaha, Nebr. It is now and has been engaged in offering for sale, and selling, a product designated by it as "Genuine Texas Mineral Crystals," "Genuine Texas Crystals," "Real Texas Mineral Water Crystals," and "Texas Mineral Water Crystals."

To a substantial extent sales of said product have been made by respondent to persons, partnerships and corporations located in States other than Nebraska, pursuant to which sales, and as a part thereof, shipment is and has been made by it from the State of Nebraska, and from points in Texas, through and into other States of the Union to said purchasers.

PAR. 2. In connection with offering for sale and selling said product in interstate commerce, and as an inducement for the purchase of said product, respondent is and has been making, and is causing and has caused to be made, the following representations, by means of radio broadcast and otherwise, of and concerning its said product:

1. (a) That the drinking of water in which said product has been dissolved will relieve headache, nervousness, irritability, and fatigue;

(b) That it will remove the cause of disease;

(c) That it will remove poisonous waste matter that has accumulated in the system;

(d) That it has relieved thousands of cases of ailments that are caused by a sluggish system;

(e) That it will remove the cause of most of the human ailments;

(f) That in its use thousands have found lasting relief from such ailments as rheumatism, arthritis, neuritis, indigestion, constipation, nervousness, sick headaches, and swollen joints, and many other common ailments which may be caused by a sluggish system or faulty elimination;

(g) That it will remove inability to eat certain foods;

Complaint

24 F. T. C.

- (h) That it will neutralize acid conditions that cause 95% of suffering;
 - (i) That it contains the essential minerals from the earth that the body demands in order for it to enjoy good health;
 - (j) That it cleanses the system and strengthens the natural functions in resisting disease;
 - (k) That it will impart pep and energy;
 - (l) That the minerals contained therein are blended in just the right way to cleanse, purify and wash away the poisons and impurities that cause so many of our aches and pains, and that it contains natural minerals that supply a balance to the diet.
2. (a) That "Genuine Texas Mineral Water Crystals" are not a medicine;
- (b) That they are not a habit forming drug;
- (c) That by dissolving the crystals in drinking water there is produced a solution identical in results with the mineral water as it comes from the mineral springs.

PAR. 3. In truth and in fact, practically the sole constituent of respondent's crystals is hydrated sodium sulphate, or Glauber's Salts. This drug is a saline laxative and purgative and its only therapeutic effect is the relief of temporary constipation; many of the symptoms and ailments for which respondent represents its product to be a relief or cure, arise from causes which hydrated sodium sulphate or respondent's crystals, will not cure or relieve, but which it will positively aggravate; and for none of the ailments or symptoms mentioned in paragraph 2 hereof is it effective in producing a lasting relief or cure; nor will it produce results as represented by respondent. The principal active constituent of the crystals is in fact a medicine and is habit forming, in that its continued use will produce the condition known as laxative habit. The solution of the crystals in drinking water does not produce a solution identical with the original mineral water from which the minerals are derived, but in the process of producing the crystals some relatively insoluble constituents, and some very soluble constituents and some constituents present in a small proportion are removed and discarded.

Some of the crystals which respondent designates and sells as "Genuine Texas Mineral Water Crystals," are derived from mineral water produced at or near Mineral Wells, Tex., and other crystals, so designated and sold, are from water produced at or near Marlin, Tex., although the mineral waters from said localities differ substantially in their constituents.

PAR. 4. In advertising its said product by radio broadcast and otherwise, respondent has used and is using letters, commonly known as testimonials, of and concerning its product written by users thereof, containing statements of actual effects from the use of such product, without any investigation or knowledge on the part of respondent as to whether the statements in said letters contained are in fact true or as to whether the writers of the letters were sufficiently informed as to be able to truthfully make such statements.

PAR. 5. There are and were at all times hereinabove mentioned, persons, partnerships, and corporations engaged in the business of producing and selling saline purgatives and pursuant to such sales shipping the same in commerce among the States, who truthfully advertise and represent the therapeutic qualities of their products; and other persons, partnerships and corporations who make and sell in interstate commerce, remedies for the relief of the ailments hereinabove mentioned who truthfully represent the therapeutic effect of said remedies; and with such other persons, firms, and corporations, respondent has been and is in active, substantial competition.

PAR. 6. Respondent's false and misleading representations of and concerning its said product, as hereinabove set forth, have the capacity and tendency to mislead and deceive, and have misled and deceived, and do mislead and deceive purchasers and prospective purchasers into the belief that such representations are true and to purchase respondent's product in such erroneous belief. Thereby the aforesaid false and misleading representations have diverted business from its aforesaid competitors to itself, to the substantial injury of substantial competition in interstate commerce.

PAR. 7. The acts and practices of respondent, as aforesaid, are to the prejudice of the public interest, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce, within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of the Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, on September 8, 1936 issued, and on September 10, 1936, served, its complaint in this proceeding upon respondent, Dollar Crystal Company, charging it with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of the provisions of said act. After the issuance of said complaint and the filing of respondent's answer, the Commission, by order entered herein, granted respondent's motion for permission to withdraw said answer and to substitute therefor an answer admitting all the material allegations of the complaint to be true and waiving the taking of further evidence and all other intervening procedure, which substitute answer was duly filed in the office of the Commission. Thereafter, this proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on the said complaint and the substitute answer, briefs and oral arguments of counsel having been waived, and the Commission having duly considered the same and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. The respondent, Dollar Crystal Company, is a Nebraska corporation with its principal place of business in Redick Tower Building, Omaha, Nebr. It has been and is now engaged in offering for sale and selling mineral water crystals under the trade names "Genuine Texas Mineral Crystals," "Genuine Texas Crystals," "Real Texas Mineral Water Crystals," and "Texas Mineral Water Crystals." The respondent sells its products to customers located in the various States of the United States other than Nebraska and causes its products when sold, to be shipped from the State of Nebraska into and through the various States of the United States to said purchasers, maintaining a constant current of trade in its said products in such commerce.

PAR. 2. In connection with offering for sale and selling its products in interstate commerce, and as an inducement for the purchase of said products, the respondent has made and makes, and has caused and causes to be made, representations by means of radio broadcasts and otherwise, of and concerning its products, to the following effect, gist, or meaning:

1. (a) That the drinking of water in which said products have been dissolved will relieve headache, nervousness, irritability and fatigue;

(b) That they will remove the cause of disease;

(c) That they will remove poisonous waste matter that has accumulated in the system;

(d) That they have relieved thousands of cases of ailments that are caused by a sluggish system;

(e) That they will remove the cause of most of the human ailments;

(f) That in their use thousands have found lasting relief from such ailments as rheumatism, arthritis, neuritis, indigestion, constipation, nervousness, sick headaches, and swollen joints, and many other common ailments which may be caused by a sluggish system or faulty elimination;

(g) That they will remove inability to eat certain foods;

(h) That they will neutralize acid conditions that cause 95% of suffering;

(i) That they contain the essential minerals from the earth that the body demands in order for it to enjoy good health;

(j) That they cleanse the system and strengthen the natural functions in resisting disease;

(k) That they will impart pep and energy;

(l) That the minerals contained therein are blended in just the right way to cleanse, purify and wash away the poisons and impurities that cause so many of our aches and pains, and that they contain natural minerals that supply a balance to the diet.

2. (a) That "Genuine Texas Mineral Water Crystals" are not a medicine;

(b) That they are not habit forming drugs;

(c) That by dissolving the crystals in drinking water there is produced a solution identical in results with the mineral water as it comes from the mineral springs.

PAR. 3. Practically the sole constituent of respondent's crystals is hydrated sodium sulphate, or Glauber's Salts. This drug is a saline laxative and purgative and its only therapeutic effect is the relief of temporary constipation. Many of the symptoms and ailments for which respondent represents its products to be a relief or cure, arise from causes which hydrated sodium sulphate will not cure or relieve, but which it will positively aggravate. Respondent's products are not effective in producing a lasting relief or cure for any of the ailments or symptoms mentioned in paragraph 2 hereof, and they will not produce results as represented by respondent. The principal active constituent of the crystals is in fact a medicine and is habit forming, in that its continued use will produce a condition known as laxative habit. The solution of the crystals in drinking water does not produce a solution identical with the original mineral water from which the minerals are derived, but in the process of producing the crystals some relatively insoluble constituents, and some very soluble constituents and some constituents present in a small proportion are removed and discarded.

PAR. 4. In advertising its said products by radio broadcasts and otherwise, respondent has used and is using letters, commonly known as testimonials, of and concerning its products written by purported users thereof, containing statements of actual effects from the use of such products, without any investigation or knowledge on the part of respondent as to whether the statements in said letters are in fact true or as to whether the writers of the letters were sufficiently informed in the proper diagnosis of ailments and conditions of the human body as to be able to accurately state the effect of the use of such products.

PAR. 5. There are persons, partnerships, and corporations engaged in the business of producing and selling saline purgatives and, pursuant to such sales, shipping the same in commerce among the various States, who truthfully advertise and represent the therapeutic qualities of their products; and other persons, partnerships, and corporations who make and sell in commerce, as herein set out, remedies for the relief of the ailments hereinabove mentioned who truthfully represent the therapeutic effect of said remedies. With all of such other persons, firms, and corporations, respondent has been, and is, in active and substantial competition in such commerce.

PAR. 6. Respondent's false and misleading representations of and concerning its said products, as hereinabove set forth, have the capacity and tendency to mislead and deceive, and have mislead and deceived, and do mislead and deceive purchasers and prospective purchasers into the erroneous belief that such representations are true and into the purchase of respondent's products in such erroneous belief. Trade is thereby unfairly diverted from respondent's aforesaid competitors to respondent to the substantial injury of competition in commerce among and between the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondent Dollar Crystal Company, are to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce, within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

This proceeding having been heard by the Federal Trade Commission upon the complaint of the Commission and the answer filed herein on December 15, 1936, by respondent admitting all the material allegations of the complaint to be true and waiving the taking of further evidence and all other intervening procedure, and the Commission having made its findings as to the facts and its conclusion that said respondent has violated the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

It is ordered, That the respondent, Dollar Crystal Company, its officers, representatives, agents, and employees, in connection with the offering for sale, sale, and distribution of its water crystal products in interstate commerce or in the District of Columbia, do forthwith cease and desist from representing through the medium of radio continuity, advertising matter, testimonial letters or in any manner:

(a) That the aforesaid products have any therapeutic value in the treatment of any disease or ailment other than as a laxative or purgative;

(b) That they are not a habit forming drug;

(c) That the dissolution of the products in drinking water will produce a solution identical with the mineral water from which they are obtained as it comes from the mineral springs.

It is further ordered, That the respondent shall, within 60 days after service upon it of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which it has complied with this order.

ROBERT HOLMES, INC., AND ALBERT GOODMAN

COMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION
OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 26, 1914

Docket 2893. Complaint, Nov. 16, 1936—Decision, Feb. 16, 1937

Where a corporation and an individual, its president and manager and director of its policies and practices, engaged in sale and distribution of so-called home study psychology health courses, in substantial competition with others likewise engaged in sale of such courses of instruction by correspondence; in advertising the same in various periodicals, booklets, circulars, and other forms of printed matter—

Represented that constipation, indigestion, cold sweats, dizzy spells, and bashfulness are always caused by nervous exhaustion, and that "lack of energy" and aforesaid ailments or conditions "positively indicate" a deranged nervous system, for which their said course would be an effective treatment, and that it was an effective and competent treatment for nervousness and aforesaid ailments or conditions and for sleeplessness, irregular heart, worry, fatigue, sex weakness and other conditions specified, and would effectively eliminate poisons from the system, and was entirely different from any other method and would absolutely bring positive and permanent relief from various ailments noted, and that each case was given individual personal attention by them, and that for the sum of twenty-five cents one might learn how to conquer bashfulness, nervousness, or embarrassment, overcome his faults easily, and enjoy life to the fullest, through such statements as "* * * every form of self-consciousness comes from * * * derangement of the Nervous System," "Do not try to fight self-consciousness alone and unaided. It is a losing battle," etc., "You need a knowledge of the action and abuses of nerves * * * such as my course of instruction fully covers," "ARE YOU—NERVOUS?—WORRIED?—UNHAPPY? * * * My wonderful book 'Watch Your Nerves' explains a new method that will help you regain lost vitality and healthy nerves. Send 25¢ * * *," "INSTRUCTION IS INDIVIDUAL * * * each case is given individual personal attention," etc.;

Facts being their said courses were not effective in treatment of the various ailments and conditions for which thus offered, and did not enable purchasers to eliminate the causes thereof, and their said representations with respect to the nature, value and effect of their said courses of home study and instruction were grossly exaggerated, false, misleading, and untrue;

With capacity and tendency to mislead and deceive purchasers and prospective purchasers of their so-called home study psychology health courses in aforesaid respects, and with the result that a substantial number of prospective purchasers of such courses were induced and persuaded to buy the same through such statements and representations, which were false, misleading, and deceptive and unfair to others selling and distributing similar courses without making the same or similar false and misleading statements or representations in solicitation and sale of their respective courses, and

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that Robert Holmes, Inc., a corporation, and Albert Goodman, an individual, hereinafter referred to as respondents, have been and are now using unfair methods of competition in commerce as "commerce" is defined in said act, and it appearing to the Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint, stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent, Robert Holmes, Inc., is a corporation organized and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the State of New Jersey and the respondent, Albert Goodman, an individual is president of the respondent corporation, and manages and directs its policies and practices. The principal place of business of both of said respondents is located in the Fuller Building, in the city of Jersey City, in the State of New Jersey.

Said respondents are now, and have been for more than one year last past, engaged in the sale and distribution of home study psychology health courses calculated to enable subscribers and purchasers and prospective purchasers thereof to overcome bashfulness, nervousness, and similar and allied ailments. Respondents cause said courses of home study when sold, to be transported from their principal place of business in the State of New Jersey to purchasers thereof located in other States of the United States and in the District of Columbia. There is now, and has been, at all times mentioned herein, a constant current of trade in commerce in said courses of home study and instruction, sold, and distributed by the said respondents, between and among the several States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

In the course and conduct of said business, said respondents, Robert Holmes, Inc., a corporation, and Albert Goodman, an individual, were and are in substantial competition with other corporations, individuals, firms, and partnerships likewise engaged in the business of selling similar courses of instruction by correspondence through the mails in commerce among the several States of the United States, and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of their business, as aforesaid, the respondents, in soliciting the sale of and selling said courses of study and instruction and for the purpose of creating a demand upon the part of the purchasing public for said courses, now cause and for more than one year last past have caused advertisements to be issued, published and circulated to and among the general public of the United States in various periodicals, booklets, circulars, and in other forms of printed matter. In said ways and by said means, respondents make and have made to the general public many unfair, false, and misleading statements with reference to the alleged therapeutic value of said courses of home study and instructions and their alleged salutary effect upon the users thereof, a portion of which are as follows:

. . . every form of self-consciousness comes from * * * derangement of the Nervous System.

I have helped thousands of men and women to counteract and prevent extreme worry and mental depression. My course tends to bring about a normal condition of the nerves and to teach you the conservation of precious Nerve Power.

PAR. 3. The statements and representations set forth in paragraph 2 hereof, and many others similar thereto, have the capacity and tendency to mislead and deceive purchasers and prospective purchasers of respondents' said home study psychology health courses into the erroneous belief:

1. That constipation, indigestion, cold sweats, dizzy spells and bashfulness, or any of them, are always caused by nervous exhaustion;

2. That for 25 cents, or any other nominal amount, one may learn how to conquer bashfulness or nervousness or embarrassment, overcome his faults easily and enjoy life to the fullest;

3. That each such case is given individual personal attention by respondents;

4. That respondents' course of study and instruction will, if followed, immunize one against the contraction of colds;

5. That respondents' course is an effective or competent treatment for nervousness, constipation, indigestion, dizzy spells, sweating, sleeplessness, irregular heart, worry, bashfulness, fatigue, pain, sex weakness, or "feeling blue";

6. That the respondents' treatment is entirely different from any other method, or that it will absolutely bring very positive and permanent relief from the various physical ailments mentioned;

7. That lack of energy, indigestion, constipation, and kindred ailments "positively indicate" a deranged nervous system for which respondents' course would be an effective treatment;

8. That respondents' course will effectively eliminate poisons from the system;

whereas, in truth and in fact, respondents' courses of home study and instruction, when used, are not effective in the treatment of nervousness, constipation, indigestion, sleeplessness, irregular heart, worry, bashfulness, fatigue, sex weakness, pain or any other nervous, mental or physical disorders. They do not eliminate the cause of such ailments or relieve a user's weakened mental or physical condition due to nervousness, bashfulness, and worry, and other kindred ailments and troubles. The representations made by respondents with respect to the nature, value and effect of said courses of home study and instruction, when used, are grossly exaggerated, false, misleading and untrue, as said courses will not accomplish the results claimed for them.

PAR. 4. The use by respondents of the statements and representations set forth in paragraph 2 hereof, and others similar thereto, is unfair to other corporations, firms, partnerships, and individuals selling like and similar courses of home study and instruction who do not make the same or similar false and misleading statements and representations in the solicitation and the sale of their respective courses of home study and instruction.

By reason of the said false, misleading and deceptive statements, subscribers and purchasers and prospective purchasers of respondents' said home study psychology health courses are and have been induced and persuaded to purchase said courses thus offered by respondents. The methods thus used by respondents result in an unfair diversion of trade to respondents from their competitors. In consequence thereof, substantial injury has been done by respondents to competition in commerce between and among the various States of the United States.

PAR. 5. The aforesaid methods, acts and practices of the respondents are all to the prejudice of the public and of the respondents' competitors as hereinabove alleged. Said methods, acts, and practices constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914.

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, on the 16th day of November 1936, issued and on the 18th day of November 1936, and on the 13th day of January 1937, respectively, served its complaint in this proceeding upon respondents, Robert Holmes, Inc., a corporation, and Albert

Goodman, an individual, charging them with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of the provisions of said act. The Commission, by order entered herein, granted respondents' motion for permission to withdraw said answer and to substitute therefor an answer admitting all the material allegations of the complaint to be true and waiving the taking of further evidence and all other intervening procedure, which substitute answer was duly filed in the office of the Commission. Thereafter, this proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on the said complaint and the substitute answer, briefs and oral arguments of counsel having been waived, and the Commission having duly considered same and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. The respondent, Robert Holmes, Inc., is a corporation organized and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the State of New Jersey. The respondent, Albert Goodman, an individual, is president of the respondent corporation, and manages and directs its policies and practices. Both respondents have their principal place of business located in the Fuller Building, Jersey City, N. J.

The respondents herein are now, and for more than one year last past have been, soliciting the sale and distribution of so-called home study psychology health courses. These courses of home study when sold, are transported by respondents from their principal place of business in the State of New Jersey to purchasers thereof located in other States of the United States, and in the District of Columbia. There is now, and there has been at all times mentioned herein, a constant current of trade in commerce in said so-called home study psychology health courses thus sold and distributed by the said respondents, between and among the several States of the United States, and in the District of Columbia.

In the course and conduct of said business, said respondents, were and are in substantial competition with other corporations, firms, partnerships, and individuals, likewise engaged in the business of selling psychology and health courses of instruction by correspondence through the United States mails in commerce between and among the several States of the United States, and in the District of Columbia.

PAR 2. In the course and conduct of their business, as above set out, the respondents, in soliciting the sale of and selling said courses of home study and instruction and for the purpose of creating a demand upon the part of the purchasing public for said courses now cause, and for more than one year last past have caused, advertisements to be issued, published and circulated to and among the general public of the United States in various periodicals, booklets, circulars, and in other forms of printed matter. In said ways and by said means, respondents make and have made to the general public many statements with reference to the alleged therapeutic value of said courses of home study and instruction and their alleged salutary effect upon the users thereof. Typical of the representations, which the respondents have thus published and circulated in commerce throughout the United States and in the District of Columbia, are the following:

. . . every form of self-consciousness comes from * * * derangement of the Nervous System.

Do not try to fight self-consciousness alone and unaided. It is a losing battle. You are fighting yourself—your own sick nerves.

INSTRUCTION IS INDIVIDUAL—All this invaluable information is embodied in my course in Nerve and Health Culture. The instruction is not general and each case is given individual personal attention . . .

I have helped thousands of men and women to counter-act and prevent extreme worry and mental depression. My course tends to bring about a normal condition of the nerves and to teach you the conservation of precious Nerve Power.

PAR. 3. In the manner above set out the respondents represent and imply that their course of home study and instruction are effective in the treatment of nervousness, constipation, indigestion, sleeplessness, irregular heart action, worry, bashfulness, fatigue, sex weakness, pain and other nervous, mental and physical disorders; that study of said courses will enable purchasers to eliminate the cause of the ailments mentioned and will relieve a purchaser's weakened mental or physical condition due to nervousness, bashfulness, worry or other kindred ailments or troubles.

Respondents' course of home study and instruction are not effective in the treatment of nervousness, constipation, indigestion, sleeplessness, irregular heart action, worry, bashfulness, fatigue, sex weakness, pain or any other nervous, mental or physical disorders. Neither do said courses enable purchasers to eliminate the cause of such ailments or relieve a purchaser's weakened mental or physical condition due to nervousness, bashfulness, and worry, and other kindred ailments and troubles. The representations made by respondents with respect to the nature, value and effect of said courses of home study and instruction, when used, are grossly exaggerated, false, misleading and untrue, as said courses will not accomplish the results claimed for them.

PAR. 4. The statements and representations used by the respondents have the capacity and tendency to mislead and deceive purchasers and prospective purchasers of respondents' so-called home study psychology health courses into the erroneous belief that constipation, indigestion, cold sweats, dizzy spells and bashfulness, are always caused by nervous exhaustion; that for 25 cents, or some other nominal amount, one may learn how to conquer bashfulness or nervousness or embarrassment, overcome his faults easily and enjoy life to the fullest; that each purchaser's case is given individual personal attention by respondents; that respondents' course is an effective or competent treatment for nervousness, constipation, indigestion, dizzy spells, sweating, sleeplessness, irregular heart, worry, bashfulness, fatigue, pain, sex weakness, or "feeling blue"; that the respondents' treatment is entirely different from any other method, and that it will absolutely bring positive and permanent relief from the various physical ailments mentioned; that "lack of energy," indigestion, constipation, and kindred ailments "positively indicate" a deranged nervous system for which respondents' course is an effective treatment; and that respondents' course will effectively eliminate poisons from the system.

PAR. 5. The use by respondents of the statements and representations set forth in paragraph 2 hereof, and others similar thereto, is unfair to other corporations, firms, partnerships, and individuals selling and distributing courses of home study and instruction in psychology and health who do not make the same or similar false and misleading statements and representations in the solicitation and the sale of their respective courses of home study and instruction.

PAR. 6. By reason of the said false, misleading, and deceptive statements, as above set out, a substantial number of the prospective purchasers of home study psychology health courses are and have been induced and persuaded to purchase said courses offered by respondents. The acts, practices, and methods used by respondents result in an unfair diversion of trade to respondents from their competitors. In consequence thereof, substantial injury has been done by respondents to competition in commerce between and among the various States of the United States.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondents, Robert Holmes, Inc. and Albert Goodman, are to the prejudice of the public and of respondents' competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

This proceeding having been heard by the Federal Trade Commission upon the complaint of the Commission and the answer filed herein, dated January 27, 1937, by respondents, admitting all the material allegations of the complaint to be true and waiving the taking of further evidence and all other intervening procedure, and the Commission having made its findings as to the facts and its conclusion that said respondents have violated the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

It is ordered, That the respondents, Robert Holmes, Inc., a corporation; and Albert Goodman, an individual, their officers, representatives, agents, and employees, in connection with the offering for sale, sale and distribution of their home study psychology health courses in interstate commerce or in the District of Columbia do forthwith cease and desist from representing:

1. That constipation, indigestion, cold sweats, dizzy spells and bashfulness, or any of them, are always caused by nervous exhaustion;
2. That for 25 cents, or any other nominal amount, one may learn how to conquer bashfulness or nervousness or embarrassment, overcome his faults easily and enjoy life to the fullest;
3. That each such case is given individual personal attention by respondents;
4. That respondents' course is an effective or competent treatment for nervousness, constipation, indigestion, dizzy spells, sweating, sleeplessness, irregular heart, worry, bashfulness, fatigue, pain, sex weakness, or "feeling blue";
5. That the respondents' treatment is entirely different from any other method, or that it will absolutely bring very positive and permanent relief from the various physical ailments mentioned;
6. That "lack of energy", indigestion, constipation, and kindred ailments "positively indicate" a deranged nervous system for which respondents' course would be an effective treatment;
7. That respondents' course will effectively eliminate poisons from the system; and from making any other representations of similar tenor or import.

And it is hereby further ordered, That the said respondents shall within 60 days from the date of the service upon them of this order file with this Commission a report, in writing, setting forth the manner and form in which they have complied with this order.

IN THE MATTER OF NATIONAL SILVER COMPANY

COMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION
OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 26, 1914

Docket 2111. Complaint, Sept. 29, 1933¹—Decision, Feb. 17, 1937

Where a corporation engaged in sale and distribution of knives and other cutlery and tableware to jobbers, wholesale and retail dealers in cutlery, chain stores, hardware stores, department stores, and house-furnishing stores, with branch sales offices in Chicago and Los Angeles; in competition with others who made and sold similar products and used word "stainless" only as a mark, brand, or stamp for or in advertising such products made of the chrome-iron alloy, stainless steel, and truthfully used words or terms "chromium plate" or "chromium plated" to indicate a carbon steel product plated with chromium, and did not employ such words as "stainpruf" as a stamp, brand, or mark for or in advertising such chromium-plated articles that were not in fact stainproof and corrosion resistant—

- (a) Stamped its aforesaid products, regardless of whether made from carbon steel or chromium alloy steel, with word "stainless," in utter disregard of well established trade custom among cutlery manufacturers, silversmiths, and trade generally, of using said word to designate cutlery made from chromium-alloyed steel, and failed to inform purchasers as to whether or not its said products were chromium plated or were in fact made of the said more costly solid stainless steel, as long understood by trade and ultimate purchasers from word "stainless" as meaning, as applied to knives, cutlery, and tableware, said high-grade type of chromium steel alloy with its high degree of resistance to oxidation and corrosion against most media, and as used by manufacturers and distributors in their catalogs and advertising material to designate only those products made of stainless steel as aforesaid;

With result that purchasers, in view of the almost identically similar appearance of the two kinds of products, purchased its chromium-plated knives and other flat tableware of inferior quality, as and for products, the metallic parts of which were made of solid alloyed or stainless steel and were not the cheaper carbon steel articles with utterly thin and inadequate chromium plating and notorious amenability to corrosive influence, and quality of rusting rapidly in presence of water, dampness, acids or similar agents;

- (b) Sold and distributed carbon steel, chromium-plated knives marked "stainpruf," made of carbon steel plated as above set forth, notwithstanding fact said products were extremely susceptible to corrosion and were not in fact stainless in any sense, and were further subject to corrosion by reason of tendency of plating to break through sharpening or other abrasive action, etc., and in its advertising of its said "stainpruf" products as guaranteed against staining by acids contained in vegetables, fruits, and meats and against discoloration in ordinary use, warned against scouring materials to polish the blades;

With effect of deceiving wholesalers, jobbers, retailers, and ultimate purchasers into buying said cheap and inferior chromium-plated carbon steel knives, cutlery, and tableware, marked "stainless" and "stainpruf," as and for products made of genuine stainless steel, and of placing, as result of its said advertising and misbranding, in the hands of its wholesale and retail dealers, the means of deceiving ultimate purchasers, and with capacity and tendency to divert to it trade of competitors engaged in selling in commerce products of the same kind or nature which they truthfully advertise:

Held, That such acts and practices were to the prejudice of the public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition.

Mr. Marshall Morgan for the Commission.

Brill, Bergensfeld & Brill, of New York City, for respondent.

AMENDED AND SUPPLEMENTAL COMPLAINT.

Whereas, The Federal Trade Commission did heretofore, to wit, on August 7, 1933, issue its complaint herein charging and alleging that the respondent corporation is, and has been, guilty of unfair methods of competition in interstate commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914;

And, whereas, This Commission, since the issuance of said complaint, has been advised that the respondent therein is, and has been, using unfair methods of competition in interstate commerce other than, and in addition to, those in relation to which the Commission issued its complaint aforesaid on August 7, 1933, in violation of the provisions of Section 5 of said Act;

Now, therefore, Acting in the public interest, pursuant to the provisions of the Act of September 26, 1914, aforesaid, the Federal Trade Commission charges that National Silver Company, a corporation, has been and now is using unfair methods of competition in interstate commerce in violation of Section 5 of said Act, and states its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. The respondent is a corporation, organized and existing under the laws of the State of New York with its principal place of business located at 61-65 West 23rd Street, in the City of New York, State of New York, and for several years last past has been engaged in the business of selling and distributing to jobbers, wholesale and retail dealers in cutlery, chain stores, hardware stores, department stores, and house furnishing stores, knives, other cutlery and tableware. Said respondent causes said knives, cutlery and tableware when sold by it, to be transported from its principal place of business in the State of New York into and through the various other States of the United States to the purchasers thereof.

In the course and conduct of its aforesaid business, the respondent is and for several years has been, in direct and substantial competition with other individuals, partnerships and corporations engaged in the sale and distribution in interstate commerce of knives, cutlery, and tableware, both like and similar to those sold by respondent.

PAR. 2. Through long usage the terms "stainless steel" and "stainless," when used in association with knives and other cutlery, have become and are known in the trade and by the general public to designate cutlery composed of an alloy of steel containing not more than 0.70% of carbon and from 9% to 16% of chromium. Certain grades of knives and other cutlery sold and distributed by respondent, as aforesaid, are manufactured in simulation of "stainless steel" knives and cutlery, when in truth and in fact, they are not composed of such an alloy of steel, and are not "stainless steel" as known to and understood by the trade and the general public.

In the course and conduct of its aforesaid business, respondent solicits its business by advertising in catalogs and price lists widely distributed among customers and prospective customers, in which catalogs and price lists the aforesaid certain grades of its product are by respondent described as "stainless" and by stamping on the blades thereof, respondent describes and designates such knives and cutlery as "stainless." Respondent thereby has falsely represented and does falsely represent to prospective purchaser those certain grades of its products to be such products as are known by the trade and general public as "stainless steel," when in truth and in fact, such grades of cutlery by respondent so described and branded are made from carbon steel plated with chromium, and so prepared as to imitate genuine "stainless steel."

PAR. 3. Among the grades of knives and other cutlery advertised and described in its catalog, and sold and distributed by the respondent in interstate commerce, as aforesaid, is a carving knife bearing the trade name "NASCO" and stamped "stainpruf." Said knife is made from carbon steel and is merely chromium plated. The term "stainpruf" stamped on said knife is and was employed by respondent to be the equivalent in meaning of the term "stain-proof" in its common, general acceptance, and was, and is, intended by respondent to, and does, create the impression upon the trade and the general public, and causes the trade and general public to believe, that said carving knife is so made, and is of such quality, as that it resists rust stain and corrosion. Such is not the fact with respect to said knife, it being neither rust nor stain proof on its surfaces, its cutting edge, nor otherwise.

PAR. 4. Among other grades of knives and cutlery advertised and described in its catalog, and sold and distributed by respondent, as aforesaid, in interstate commerce, are certain knives and forks stamped "stainless," when in truth such knives and forks are composed of carbon steel, merely chromium plated, and are not stainless in fact. In addition to thus falsely representing to prospective purchasers in interstate commerce that those certain grades of its products are such products as are known by the trade and general public as "stainless steel" when in truth such was not the fact and said knives and forks were so prepared as to merely imitate genuine "stainless steel," the said knives and forks, as now charged and alleged, are not stainless or rust proof in fact, but on the contrary will and do rust and stain when brought in contact with agencies which do not stain, rust or blemish a stainless steel made from an alloy of steel containing not more than .7% of carbon and from 9% to 16% of chromium. Said knives and forks, apart from and consideration of the technical or trade acceptance or meaning of the word "stainless" as applied to a manufacturing process for steel, are not stainless in fact, using the term "stainless" as a mere common dictionary word.

PAR. 5. Under the foregoing facts and circumstances, both the designation and branding by respondent of certain of its products as "stainless" as set out in paragraphs 2 and 4 above, and the branding by respondent of certain of its products as "stainpruf," as set out in paragraph 3 above, including the advertising, description, and price lists of such products in respondent's catalogs, are false and misleading and have the capacity and tendency to deceive, and do deceive, wholesalers, jobbers, retailers and the ultimate purchasers into buying that which they did not intend to buy, and through its price lists, catalogs, and misbranding, as aforesaid, respondent has placed and is placing in the hands of its wholesaler and retailer in interstate commerce, the means of deceiving the ultimate purchasers. The aforesaid practices have had the capacity and tendency to divert to respondent the trade of competitors engaged in selling in interstate commerce, products of the same kind and nature as those of respondent, which products are truthfully advertised, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914.

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission on August 7, 1933, issued and served its original complaint in this proceeding on respondent, National Silver Company, charging it with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of the provisions of said act, and on September 29, 1933, issued and served its amended and supplemental complaint on the said respondent, charging it with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce other than, and in addition to, those in relation to which the Commission issued its original complaint as aforesaid. After the issuance of said complaints, and the filing of respondent's respective answers thereto, testimony and other evidence in support of the allegations of the complaints were introduced by Marshall Morgan, attorney for the Commission, before Edward M. Averill, an examiner of the Commission theretofore duly designated by it, and in opposition to the allegations of the complaints by Abraham Brill, attorney for the respondent, and said testimony and other evidence were duly recorded and filed in the office of the Commission. Thereafter, the proceeding came on for final hearing before the Commission on the said complaints, the answers thereto, testimony and other evidence, briefs in support of the complaints and in opposition thereto, and the oral arguments of counsel aforesaid; and the Commission having duly considered the same and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public, and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. The respondent is a corporation, organized, and existing under the laws of the State of New York, with its principal place of business located at 61-65 West 23rd Street, in the City of New York. Respondent, for several years last past, has been in the business of selling and distributing knives and other cutlery and tableware to jobbers, wholesale and retail dealers, in cutlery, chain stores, hardware stores, department stores, and house-furnishing stores. Respondent causes said knives, cutlery and tableware, when sold by it, to be transported from its principal place of business in the State of New York to the purchasers thereof located in States of the United States other than the State of New York, and into the District of Columbia.

In the course and conduct of its aforesaid business, the respondent is, and for several years last past has been, in direct and substantial competition with other corporations, individuals, firms, and partnerships engaged in the sale and distribution in interstate commerce of knives, cutlery, and tableware. Respondent employs a number of salesmen, directed by a sales manager. It maintains branch sales offices in the city of Chicago, directed by its New York office, and a branch office in Los Angeles, Calif., carrying its own stock.

PAR. 2. Stainless steel, as used in the manufacture of cutlery, is an alloy produced from iron, chromium and carbon, and sometimes contains other minor alloying elements. Chromium is present in percentages ranging from 9 to 16%, and carbon in percentages not exceeding .7%. The metal or alloy so produced has through long commercial usage become known to and designated by steel and cutlery manufacturers, the cutlery trade, retailers, and the purchasing and consuming public by the term "stainless." This term as applied to steel indicates a very specific type of chromium-steel alloy which has the quality of resisting oxidation and corrosion against most media. To a markedly greater degree than is true of carbon steel, chromium-steel resists alkaline materials, fruit acids, nitric acids, dampness and water, salt air and salt water, and weather conditions, including rain and snow. It is a much more expensive product to manufacture than carbon steel, and is comparable to carbon steel at normal temperatures and markedly superior to it at elevated ranges.

Stainless steel possesses great tensile strength, and takes and retains a higher polish than carbon steel, which carbon steel does not retain because it is far less resistant to oxidation and scaling. Stainless steel is from 50% to 400% stronger than ordinary steel; can be rolled, drawn, stamped, forged, pressed, machined, cast, spun, punched, braced, soldered, welded, ground, and polished. It is furnished in plates, shapes, sheets, bars, rods, flats, strips, tubing, wire, forging, blanks, billets, ingots, castings, etc. It has the inherent and combined characteristics of tremendous strength, resistance to corrosion, to high temperature, to erosion and to abrasion, and has the ability to take and permanently retain a highly polished surface. Stainless steel is either wholly or substantially immune to the action of nearly a hundred corrosive agents. The discovery of stainless steel has been one of the major outstanding developments in metallurgy in the last twenty years.

PAR. 3. The first popular development of stainless steel was in the cutlery field. Harry Brearley, an Englishman, was granted a United States patent on September 5, 1916. In his application, Brearley stated that his invention related to new and useful improvements in cutlery or other hardened and polished articles of manufacture where non-staining objects were desired, and that it had for its object a tempered steel cutlery blade or other hardened article having a polished surface and composed of an alloy practically untarnishable, when hardened, or when hardened and tempered. "This alloy," he stated, "is malleable, and can be formed, rolled, hardened, tempered and polished under ordinary commercial conditions." Brearley further stated that his invention resulted from the discovery that the addition of certain percentages of chromium and carbon to iron will produce a steel capable of taking a polish and of having the above specified characteristics.

The American Stainless Steel Company was organized in 1918 in Pittsburgh, Pa., for the purpose of holding and exploiting various patents covering stainless steel. Among the patents so acquired was the Brearley patent of 1916, and the Haynes and Cox patents, and others, the Brearley cutlery patent antedating all other such patents. Said American Stainless Steel Company entered upon a campaign, national in scope, to advertise and develop the use of stainless steel. This company has expended more than $500,000 in such advertising, has entered into numerous agreements licensing others to manufacture this product, and has enumerated many articles for the manufacture of which it has recommended that its "stainless" or "stainless steel" be used. Included among these were such products as trimming and mechanical parts for automobiles, bumpers, hub caps, knives, forks, and scissors. Advertisements of this product were carried in periodicals of national circulation as far back as 1919, and continued for a period of fifteen years. Thousands of pamphlets were also distributed during this period, explanatory of stainless steel, its characteristics and its uses. In all of said advertisements the American Stainless Steel Company used the word "stainless" in a noun sense to indicate and denote the product which is also designated as "The Metal of Endless Possibilities."

As a result of the continuous advertising of this product over a period of fifteen years, both the manufacturing and the purchasing and using public came to recognize and still recognizes stainless steel or "stainless" as a high-grade type of chromium-steel alloy, possessing to a high degree the quality of resisting oxidation and corrosion against most media. The manufacturing and the using public for a number of years have been led to expect, and now do expect, when they purchase knives, cutlery and tableware marked "stainless," to receive articles, the cutting portions of which are manufactured from said chromium-steel alloy, and which possess the characteristics above enumerated.

PAR. 4. The manufacturers of cutlery, including table cutlery and flatware, and silversmiths, as a trade practice and custom, use the word "stainless" to designate knife blades, forks, and kindred articles made by them from the chromium-steel alloy, stainless steel. It is the practice of manufacturers of stainless steel cutlery and flatware to stamp the word "stainless" upon the blade of said ware, and to superimpose on that the name of the manufacturer. Many silversmiths and manufacturers of cutlery, in pursuance of such trade custom, mark and stamp stainless steel cutlery, particularly the knife blades of the same, as indicated below :

Towle Stainless,	Russell Stainless,
Goodell Stainless,	Stainless, under which are the words
Clyde Cutlery Company—Stainless,	Universal Resistain,
Community Stainless,	D. Harrington & Co., Stainless,
I. N. S. & Company Stainless,	Ontario Stainless.

The word "stainless" thus stamped by manufacturers and distributors upon their cutlery and other tableware has through long and continuous usage come to signify both to the manufacturer, to the distributor, to the retailer, and to the ultimate purchaser and user, that such cutlery is produced from stainless steel, that is, from chromium-steel alloy.

Catalogs and other advertising material of cutlery manufacturers and distributors employ the word "stainless" to designate those products only which are made of stainless steel.

A stainless steel knife ground in daily use will not stain or tarnish as a result of grinding or sharpening; it remains stainless under such grinding so long as a piece of it is left, and the corrosion resisting qualities of said knife suffer no deterioration from nicking or scratching or bending. Such a stainless steel knife made fifteen years ago is now as serviceable in the kitchen as though it were made today.

PAR. 5. In addition to the stainless steel cutlery manufactured as hereinabove described and possessing the characteristics specified, knives, cutlery and tableware are also manufactured with knife blades of carbon steel, either plain or chromium-plated. A carbon steel knife blade is one made of the ordinary unalloyed steel, containing no chromium as an alloy and being readily susceptible to rust, stain, and corrosion. A chromium plated knife blade is manufactured of carbon steel upon which has been deposited a thin coating of chromium, or of nickel and chromium. The chromium plated carbon steel cutlery is not stainless or corrosion resistant.

A stainless steel knife costing from 25¢ to 30¢ can be duplicated, as to appearance, by a chromium plated carbon steel knife costing approximately 6¢. A thirty piece set of chromium plated flatware can be bought from a well-known mail order house for 98¢, while a one dozen piece set of stainless steel flatware of similar appearance can be bought from the same mail order house at from $1.18 to $7.90 per set.

A carbon steel knife blade, a stainless steel knife blade, and a chromium plated knife blade are made and finished by cutlery manufacturers so as to look exactly alike to the eye. In fact, the three types, given a similar finish, are so much alike that cutlery experts, including manufacturers of cutlery, are not able to tell them apart. Numerous tests have shown this to be the fact. The only way in which any purchaser can distinguish a chromium-plated carbon steel knife from a stainless steel knife is by the word "stainless" stamped upon the blade of the knife. When the word "Stainless" is stamped upon a chromium plated knife, the purchaser expects to receive and believes he is receiving a knife made from stainless steel.

PAR. 6. Respondent herein, the National Silver Company, distributes and sells knives, cutlery, and tableware made of the chromium-steel alloy, stainless steel, and similar articles made of carbon steel, chromium-plated, stamping such products, regardless of whether they are made from carbon steel or chromium alloyed steel, with the word "stainless." The respondent has also sold and distributed a carbon steel chromium-plated knife marked "Stainpruf". Respondent's salesmen do not inform the purchasers of its products whether the said products are made of solid metal, that is, stainless steel, or whether they are chromium-plated. Said purchasers, in view of the almost identically similar appearance of the two products, are unable to detect the difference, and have purchased and do purchase chromium-plated knives and other flat tableware of inferior quality in the belief that the metallic parts of said products are composed of solid alloyed or stainless steel. Department and other stores identified in the record as having sold chromium-plated cutlery stamped "stainless" obtained such goods from the respondent. The salesmen of respondent had no knowledge of any other firm, person or manufacturer save the respondent itself, which marked or stamped chromium-plated cutlery with the word "stainless." Respondent did not produce a single chromium-plated knife or fork, stamped "stainless," that had been so stamped by anyone other than the respondent. It did not present, as a witness, a single cutlery manufacturer or silversmith in the United States who brands or stamps, or has stamped, a chromium-plated knife or fork with the word "stainless." Respondent did not produce a single catalog put out by any manufacturer or jobber or department store in the United States in which chromium plated knives or forks are advertised and branded with the word "stainless." Respondent alone has followed the practice of stamping or branding chromium-plated knives and forks with the word "stainless" in utter disregard of the well established trade custom in this country among cutlery manufacturers, silversmiths, and the trade generally of using the word "stainless" to designate steel cutlery made from chromium-alloyed steel.

The chromium-plated cutlery distributed and sold by the respondent is made from a base of carbon steel electrically plated with nickel and chromium. Carbon steel is notoriously subject to corrosive influences, and rusts or oxidizes rapidly in the presence of water, dampness, acids, or similar agents. Said chromium-plated cutlery is characterized by the element of porosity; that is to say, the underlying base metal becomes exposed to the atmosphere because the plating is porous.

Chromium is the most porous plating known, and is of negligible value when used alone to protect the underlying base of carbon steel against corrosion. For corrosion protection the common practice is first to apply to the underlying metal a very heavy layer of nickel. The degree of protection afforded depends upon the thickness of the nickel plating applied; the thicker the nickel, the more protection afforded.

The specifications for plating on carbon steel approved by the United States Bureau of Standards call for a minimum of 0.0005 of an inch of nickel for good protection under mild conditions and at least 0.001 of an inch of nickel for severe conditions. The Bureau's conclusions based upon a summary of exposure tests is that chromium coatings from 0.00002 of an inch to 0.00003 of an inch add very little to the protective value of said coatings but maintain their bright appearance owing to their resistance to tarnish; and that relatively thick chromium coatings, from 0.00005 of an inch to 0.0001 of an inch improve the protection against corrosion, especially in an industrial atmosphere.

The plating expert of the U. S. Bureau of Standards testified in this proceeding that "any coating of chromium less than one hundred-thousandth of an inch, over any coating of nickel less than one tenthousandth of an inch will furnish very little protection as a coating of steel if the steel is subjected to any corrosive influences"; that a thickness of nickel less than one ten-thousandth of an inch "is insufficient to furnish protection against corrosion regardless of what may be the thickness of the chromium that you put over it".

Requirements for the plating of carbon steel to be used, among other things, for cutlery, specified by other plating experts not connected with the United States Government are that the nickel plating be not less than 0.0002 of an inch, preferably 0.0005 of an inch, and that the chromium plating shall be from 0.00002 to 0.00003 of an inch.

The chromium plating on the cutlery and other tableware products distributed and sold by respondent is utterly thin and inadequate. Various specimens of respondent's chromium-plated cutlery were tested at the United States Bureau of Standards to ascertain the thickness of the plating thereon. These tests revealed plating of nickel of thicknesses ranging from 0.00006 to 0.00008 of an inch, and plating of chromium ranging from 0.000007 to 0.000009 of an inch. No underlying copper at all was found underneath that plating.

These thicknesses, as used by the respondent, in the opinion of well-known plating experts, were entirely inadequate to furnish satisfactory protection. They were merely just "a flash" "a quick job," just "smell plating," requiring only a five-minute period for the plating, a relatively cheap operation; thin plating as plating goes, and distinctly poor for protective purposes. The plated object would be almost as much subject to corrosion as if these weak deposits had not been put on at all. Cutlery plating affording the best protection would be commercially impracticable owing to the cost of and time required for the plating operation— $2\frac{3}{4}$ hours in all. This would constitute very expensive plating. For a knife blade this time would make this cost of the operation almost prohibitive from a commercial standpoint.

Tests made by the Bureau of Standards show that the chromium-plated carbon steel cutlery sold by respondent as "stainless" is not stainless or corrosion resistant in fact. Portions of a chromium-plated fork of the respondent, stamped "stainless" subjected to a 24-hour salt spray test, were attacked, showing the presence of rust in various locations, both on the tines and bowl. An unmounted chromium-plated knife blade sold by respondent and stamped "Stainpruf," after having its cutting edge ground, to simulate ordinary use, when placed in tap water became rusty and later, when cleaned and placed in a salt spray for 24 hours, was severely attacked on the ground edge and along the plated surfaces as well.

Portions of another of respondent's chromium-plated forks, stamped "stainless," when subjected to a 24-hour salt spray test, showed the presence of rust, both on the bowl and on the tines, particularly at the cutting edges. One of respondent's chromium-plated knife blades stamped "Nasco Stainpruf," when subjected to the same salt spray, showed a tremendous amount of corrosion on one side, not confined to the cutting edge but on the surface as well, and the ground edges were severely rusted.

Portions of one of respondent's chromium-plated forks, stamped "stainless" on the bowl, when subjected to the salt spray test, showed rust spots all over the sample, particularly along the sheared edges.

A number of carbon steel knife blades, plated for comparative purposes with plating of the same character and thickness as that used by the respondent, namely, with from 0.00006 to 0.00008 of an inch of nickel and thereafter with from 0.000007 to 0.000009 of chromium, were subjected to various corrosion tests. These samples corroded when immersed in grapefruit juice, lemon juice, acetic acid, and in distilled water for extended periods.

Chromium-plated knives, plated with the same specifications corroded when subjected to December weather, specimens subjected to humid atmosphere arising from a 2% solution of vinegar corroded, and specimens similarly chromium-plated and subjected to 48 hours of salt spray corroded.

On the other hand, stainless steel blades subjected to the above-mentioned tests remained shiny and clean and bright. Stainless steel knives and forks as sold by the respondent, subjected to the salt spray test by the U. S. Bureau of Standards, successfully withstood such test.

PAR. 7. The respondent submitted the results of chemical tests conducted in its behalf upon certain groups of unmounted chromium-plated fork blades. The said forks so tested had been plated with a coating of chromium from 40 to 60 times as thick as that appearing on the original specimens of its cutlery furnished the Commission by the respondent, and had beneath this chromium plate undetermined thicknesses of nickel and copper. It does not appear whether said forks had been or were being sold by the respondent, nor by whom they had been plated. The fork blades so tested were reported as having successfully withstood a salt spray test, but they did not withstand certain other corrosion tests to which they were subjected. One of them, after being immersed for an extended period of time in orange juice, showed the beginning of corrosion and rust on one tine. Another of the said forks, similarly subjected to a 5% solution of acetic acid, showed two different spots at which the chromium plating had started peeling off. The blade of this fork showed rust on its shank, on the front and back sides and on one of the inside tines near the bowl, all resulting from the action of the acetic acid. Another fork blade of the same lot immersed in lemon juice for an extended period, showed evidence of corrosion of the inside of the first tine. Another of the same forks subjected to the action of orange juice, showed the beginning of rust and corrosion. Two of the fork blades, submitted respectively to the salt spray test and to distilled water, were reported as not corroding.

PAR. 8. The breaking of plating on cutlery by sharpening or other abrasive action will cause and hasten corrosion in the presence of moisture. Dissimilar metals of opposite polarity being thus brought into contact with each other, electrolytic or battery action is created, and corrosion not only results but is hastened. Nickel and chromium are negative to steel and, in a moist atmosphere, the iron goes into solution and the nickel and chromium accelerate the corrosion of the object made of iron or steel. On the other hand, there is no electrolytic action between the component parts of an alloy.

The sharpening of a chromium-plated carbon steel knife tends to wear the chromium plate away. Any abrasion on a plated knife is likely to cut through, and the carbon steel beneath will be attacked and will rust or corrode. After one grinding or sharpening the chromium plate along the ground or sharpened edge of the blade is destroyed, and the broken plating, ceasing to be stain resisting, the blade will corrode and rust.

There is a further tendency for chromium plate to flake or chip off when abraded. It is more difficult to put a satisfactory plating on a fork than on a knife, owing to the tines or prongs of a fork. When the plating on a piece of carbon steel is broken, and moisture or dampness gets to the underlying surface, the steel underneath rusts and a rust streak appears on the nickel plate.

The respondent, in advertising or representing its knife stamped "stainproof," after guaranteeing that the cutlery will not be stained by acids contained in vegetables, fruits, or meats, and that it will not rust or discolor in ordinary use, sets forth the following cautions in its advertising directions:

To clean, it is only necessary to wash in warm water and dry with cloth. Do not use scouring materials to polish the blades.

The knife concerning which this caution was given was a chromium-plated knife.

PAR. 9. A household and department store survey as to the meaning of the term "stainless" was made by respondent in New York City and environs. A set of questions not seen by nor shown to the person interviewed was used by respondent. No person wrote his own answer or was shown how it was worded. In the first question asked, the word stainless was presented in a distinctly adjective sense. All sorts of replies were reported from these surveys, many of them contradictory and confused. Sixteen percent of those interviewed are reported as indicating a material that would not rust or stain. Only one person out of five hundred reported to have been interviewed made any reference to chromium plate. A number of cutlery salesmen from New York department stores offered by respondent in the capacity of experts or opinion witnesses knew comparatively little of the manufacture or manufacturers of cutlery or of cutlery markings and the significance thereof.

PAR. 10. There are among the competitors of respondent, corporations, firms, partnerships and individuals who manufacture knives, cutlery, and table flatware similar to that sold by the respondent. Such competitors of respondent use the word "stainless" only as a mark, brand, or stamp for, or in advertising knives, cutlery and table flatware made of the chrome-iron alloy, stainless steel, and they likewise truthfully use the words or terms "chromium plate" or "chromium plated" to indicate a carbon steel product plated with chromium, and they do not employ such word as "stainpruf" as a stamp, brand, or mark for, or in advertising chromium-plated knives, cutlery, and table flatware that are not in fact stainproof and corrosion resistant.

PAR. 11. The representations of respondent as hereinbefore set forth in falsely stamping, branding, marking, describing, designating and advertising cheap and inferior products, to wit, chromium-plated carbon steel knives, cutlery and tableware with the word "stainless," thereby falsely representing such products to be made of the alloy stainless steel, and the further stamping, branding, marking, describing, and advertising of certain of its chromium-plated carbon steel knives and flatware cutlery as "stainpruf," are false and misleading and have the capacity and tendency to deceive, and do deceive, wholesalers, jobbers, retailers, and the ultimate purchasers into buying chromium-plated carbon steel products as and for those made of genuine stainless steel, and through its advertising material and misbranding, as aforesaid, respondent has placed and is placing in the hands of its wholesaler and retailer in interstate commerce, the means of deceiving the ultimate purchasers. The aforesaid practices have had the capacity and tendency to divert to respondent the trade of competitors engaged in selling in interstate commerce, products of the same kind and nature as those of respondent, which products are truthfully advertised, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondent, National Silver Company, are to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce, within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

This proceeding having been heard by the Federal Trade Commission upon the original and amended and supplemental complaints of the Commission, the answers of respondent thereto, testimony and other evidence in support of the allegations of said complaints and in opposition thereto, taken before Edward M. Averill, an examiner of the Commission theretofore duly designated by it, briefs filed herein, and oral arguments by Marshall Morgan, counsel for the Commission, and by Abraham Brill, counsel for the respondent, and the Commission having made its findings as to the facts and its conclusion that said respondent has violated the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

It is ordered, That the respondent, National Silver Company, its officers, representatives, agents, and employees, in connection with the offering for sale, sale, and distribution of knives, cutlery and tableware in interstate commerce or in the District of Columbia, do forthwith cease and desist from:

1. Using the word "Stainless" as a trade name, brand, stamp, label or part thereof, or otherwise, upon or for knives and flatware cutlery, or in advertising or representing the same unless such knives and flatware cutlery are made of steel containing from 9% to 16% of chromium and containing not more than 0.7% carbon.
2. Marking, branding, stamping, designating or advertising chromium-plated knives and flatware cutlery with the word "Stainpruf," or with a similar word or words indicating that such products are in fact stainproof.

It is further ordered, That the respondent shall, within 60 days after service upon it of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which it has complied with this order.

IN THE MATTER OF
CUSHING REFINING & GASOLINE COMPANY

COMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION
OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 26, 1914

Docket 2825. Complaint, May 28, 1936—Decision, Feb. 17, 1937

Where a corporation, engaged in the refining of crude petroleum, and in the manufacture therefrom of a portion of the gasoline produced by it by the new "cracking" method or process, and of the balance and greater portion thereof by the straight "distillation" method, and in the sale and distribution of such gasoline, thus variously made, in commerce among the various States and in the District of Columbia to ultimate purchasers or consumers thereof, largely through wholesale dealers, jobbers, and retailers; in substantial competition with individuals and concerns likewise engaged in manufacture, distribution, and sale of gasoline produced by one or both of such methods, and with those also engaged in making type consisting of said product made by any of aforesaid methods, with addition thereto of tetraethyl lead or "ETHYL," to eliminate knock or detonation encountered in high compression motors driven by usual "straight run" or "ordinary" gasoline, refined through the "skimming" or "distillation" process, and added, to some extent, to most of the gasoline now sold in the United States, and resulting in the so-called long and widely used "ETHYL" gasoline, use of which destroys to extent thereof demand for or sale of "straight run" and "cracked" gasoline (some of which latter is sufficiently high in grade, without addition of such tetraethyl lead, to accomplish results similar to that produced by so-called "ETHYL" gasoline); and including among its said competitors those who use both "distillation" and "cracking" processes in manufacture of gasoline sold and distributed by them to consuming public in competition with its own, but without such false and fictitious representations as to the "newness" of their product, or falsely representing all their said product "high test" or "high octane," are superior to all other gasoline, and without unfairly disparaging products of manufacturers who added tetraethyl lead or "Ethyl" to their product to eliminate knock and increase power;—

- (a) Represented, through its advertising in newspapers, periodicals, and other publications of wide circulation among the general public, in aid of the sale of its said gasoline to dealers for ultimate use by consuming public, and to create a demand therefor in preference to the gasoline containing chemicals such as tetraethyl or "Ethyl," not theretofore made or sold by it, that gasoline to which such substance or fluid had been added for the purpose of processing the same was a narcotic, or had narcotic effects, and was "doped-up" and poisonous, and unsafe to users of such motor fuel, and that gasoline thus treated was unsafe for sale to or use by the public as a motor fuel, through such statements as: "Cushing's new gasoline needs no BEWARE signs. It's safe," "You don't want to endanger the life of your customers—you DO when you use a poisonously doped gasoline, but you DON'T when you offer them Cushing's," "Needs no dangerous chemicals"; and

Syllabus

- (b) Represented that all the gasoline produced by it was made by the "cracking" process, and that all of its said gasoline was made by a new process and consisted of "high-test," "high-octane," "anti-knock" gasoline, and that all of its said product was superior as motor fuel to so-called "ETHYL" gasoline, and that "cracking" process product was superior as a motor fuel to gasoline of equal octane value to which tetraethyl or "ETHYL" had been added, through such statements as: "WHAT'S CUSHING GOT THAT'S SO NEW," "Cushing's plant is new * * * We never believed gasoline had to be doped—and we're anti-narcotic now, so rather than sell you an artificially pep'ed-up product we've built a plant that's turning out an un-doped high octane gasoline that's a world beater—," "* * * A NEW AND SAFER ANTI-KNOCK MOTOR FUEL! NOT JUST ANOTHER GASOLINE," "* * * As New as Today's Cars," "* * * It stands on its own merits and needs no dangerous chemicals * * *";

The facts being that the commonly known "ETHYL" gasoline, which results from treating "straight run" or "ordinary" gasoline as made commercially either by "distillation" or "skimming" method, or by "cracking" method, by adding thereto tetraethyl lead or "ETHYL," is a high-grade, anti-knock product, which functions in an exceedingly high and efficient manner as a gasoline motor fuel, is entirely safe to health of operators thereof and to public in general when used as such, and is not narcotic in effect, or a poisonous dope, or dangerous to life or health or customers, purchasers, users, or general public, and only portion of gasoline produced by it as above set forth was made by "cracking" process, or by its new plant or refinery, or by new addition to old refinery, and balance and greater part of its said gasoline was made by straight distillation, one of the oldest processes known in industry in question;

With effect of misleading retailers and other dealers in gasoline, and substantial portion of purchasing public, into erroneous belief that statements and representations above set forth and indicated were true, and that gasoline treated with such tetraethyl lead or other chemicals to increase its power or eliminate knock, was undesirable, inefficient, doped, harmful, poisonous, and narcotic in its effect, and dangerous to health or life of customers when used for purpose for which gasoline motor fuel is intended; and that all the gasoline made by it was high-test or high-octane, obtained by a new "cracking" process, which was safe and superior to ETHYL gasoline, or that to which tetraethyl lead had been added, or to "straight run" gasoline, and with tendency to induce public to buy gasoline not thus chemically treated, because of such erroneous beliefs thus brought about, and unfairly divert trade to sellers of "straight" or "ordinary" gasoline, and to it and other sellers of "cracked" gasoline, and its customers, from sellers of gasoline treated with tetraethyl lead or "ETHYL"; to the substantial injury of competition in commerce:

Held, That such acts and practices were to the prejudice of the public and competitors, and constituted unfair methods of competition.

Mr. James M. Hammond for the Commission.

Mr. Dudley, Hyde, Duvall & Dudley, of Oklahoma City, Okla., for respondent.

Complaint

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that Cushing Refining & Gasoline Company, a corporation, is using unfair methods of competition in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in said act, and it appearing to said Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereto would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint, stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent, Cushing Refining & Gasoline Company, is a corporation organized and existing pursuant to the laws of the State of Oklahoma, having its office and principal place of business at Cushing, Okla., with branch offices at Minneapolis, Minn., and refineries at Cushing and Blackwell, Okla. It is now, and for more than one year last past has been, engaged in the business of refining crude petroleum and manufacturing therefrom gasoline, and in the sale of said gasoline in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia, shipping such products, when sold, to the purchasers thereof, some located in the State of Oklahoma, and others located in various States of the United States other than the State from which shipment is made and in the District of Columbia. There is now and has been, for more than one year last past, a constant current of trade and commerce by respondent in its aforesaid products.

PAR. 2. Certain other persons, firms, partnerships, and corporations have been, and are now engaged in the manufacture and sale of gasoline in interstate commerce, as described in paragraph 1 hereof, some of which gasoline is refined by what is known in the trade as the "skimming" or "distillation" process, and is called "straight run" or "ordinary" gasoline; others are engaged in the manufacture of gasoline by the "cracking" method, a newer process of refining gasoline which, as a rule, extracts a higher grade of gasoline from crude petroleum than is usually obtained by the "skimming" or "distillation" method. Most refiners use both the "cracking" and "distillation" processes. Others are engaged in manufacturing a certain type of gasoline known as "Ethyl" gasoline, which consists of gasoline made by any of the above methods, to which a chemical known as "tetra-ethyl lead" or "Ethyl" has been added for the purpose of eliminating "knocking" or "detonation" which is encountered in high compression motors when driven by the usual straight run gasoline. Some of the gasoline manufactured by the "cracking" method is sufficiently high in grade without the addition of tetraethyl lead to accomplish a result similar to that produced by "Ethyl" gasoline. The quality or grade of gasoline in this respect is susceptible of measurement and determination. This standard of measurement is expressed in terms of octane value, and the gasoline having the highest octane rating is considered by the trade, and the purchasing public, to be the best and commands a higher price or premium, accordingly. Tetraethyl lead, or Ethyl fluid, unadulterated, is poisonous, but when used in the very limited quantity necessary or permitted in gasoline, as sold to the public for motor fuel, is entirely safe and no more poisonous or dangerous than any other motor gasoline. Tetraethyl lead or "Ethyl" has been added, to some extent, to most of the gasoline now sold in the United States.

Respondent's refineries at Blackwell and Cushing, Okla., have a daily capacity of approximately 6,200 gallons of straight run gasoline produced by the "distillation" process. In addition to this, its plant at Cushing has a daily capacity of 2,200 gallons produced by the "cracking" process. Respondent's production capacity for "cracked" gasoline is therefore approximately one-third of its capacity for producing "straight run" gasoline by the distillation process.

Respondent does not now, and never has, manufactured or sold gasoline to which tetraethyl lead, or "Ethyl" is, or has been, added.

PAR. 3. In the course and conduct of its business, respondent is now, and for more than one year last past has been, in substantial competition in commerce among and between the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia, with other corporations, and with partnerships and individuals engaged in manufacturing, distributing, and selling gasoline to which tetraethyl lead, or "Ethyl" has been added, and with other corporations, partnerships, and individuals, who sell only "straight run" or "ordinary" gasoline to which tetraethyl lead or "Ethyl" has not been added, or who sell gasoline produced by the "cracking" process. All of the manufacturers and sellers of the several types of gasoline above described are and have been in competition in commerce as hereinabove set out, between and among themselves, as to each and all of the said types of gasoline.

PAR. 4. In such competition between the sellers of "Ethyl" gasoline and the sellers of gasoline to which no tetraethyl lead or "Ethyl" has been added, one of the controlling influences on the purchasing public, is the popular opinion as to the comparative value, desirability, effectiveness and safety of "Ethyl" gasoline, as compared with either "ordinary," "straight run" gasoline or "cracked" gasoline to none of which "Ethyl" has been added.

The use of "Ethyl" gasoline has been widely practiced in the United States for the last ten years, and its desirability and effectiveness in increasing power and eliminating "knock" is well known and understood by the purchasing public, and has been found to be entirely safe when used as motor fuel, the use for which it is intended, and is no more poisonous or dangerous than any other form of gasoline used for that purpose. Notices are placed on all gasoline pumps from which "Ethyl" gasoline is sold, in order that purchasers may be warned not to use it for cleaning or other purposes.

The respondent, as a manufacturer and seller of gasoline which does not contain tetraethyl lead or "Ethyl," is interested in and engaged in presenting to the purchasing public all available reasons or arguments against, or tending to lessen the desirability, effectiveness and safety of gasoline treated with tetraethyl lead or "Ethyl."

The use of the said "Ethyl" gasoline destroys to the extent of the use thereof, the demand for or sale of "straight run" and "cracked" gasoline, such as is manufactured and sold by the respondent, and respondent is therefore interested in an attempt to create public sentiment against or adverse to the use of gasoline containing tetraethyl lead or "Ethyl."

PAR. 5. Respondent distributes its said product to the ultimate purchasers or consumers thereof, largely through wholesale dealers, jobbers and retail merchants. In aid of its sales to such dealers, or ultimate dealers, for ultimate use by the consuming public, and for the purpose of creating a demand on the part of the consuming public for its own products, in preference to gasoline containing chemicals such as tetraethyl or "Ethyl," which it does not manufacture or sell, respondent now causes, and for a long time past, has caused advertisements to be issued, published, and circulated in newspapers, magazines and other publications of wide and general circulation, and in other forms of printed matter, and by radio broadcasting and in other ways, to and among the general public of the United States.

In said ways, and by said means, respondent has made to the general public, unfair, exaggerated, false, and misleading statements, for the purpose and intent, and with the effect of promoting the sale in commerce, as aforesaid, of its own products and for the purpose and effect of unfairly disparaging and discouraging the consumption by the purchasing public of gasoline containing tetraethyl lead or

"Ethyl," which it does not manufacture, produce or sell. These advertisements contain statements, among others, such as the following:

WHAT'S CUSHING GOT THAT'S SO NEW
