FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION DECISIONS

FINDINGS AND ORDERS, JUNE 1, 1937, TO NOVEMBER 30, 1937

IN THE MATTER OF

WILLIAM F. ALLEN, CHARLES H. WOLF, EDWARD M. MULLEN, AND CHARLES H. CLARK, INDIVIDUALLY, AND DOING BUSINESS AS MILLER, BAIN, BEYER & COMPANY

Docket 3095. Complaint, Apr. 3, 1937—Decision, June 2, 1937

Where partners engaged in the purchase of blankets and bedspreads from the manufacturers and in selling same to wholesale and retail dealers and to clubs, fraternal organizations, hospitals, charitable institutions, and associations, for resale and distribution to purchasing public—

Advertised, through printed cards, circulars, and letters, and sold said products for resale under, a "Club Plan," under which each week, in accordance with weekly drawings, one of a fixed number of members who obligated themselves to some small weekly payment for a specified number of weeks, received, as determined by the name drawn by chance, article of merchandise involved, without further payments or further compliance with original undertaking, from which he was thus absolved, and thereby supplied to and placed in the hands of others the means of conducting lotteries in the sale of their products in accordance with aforesaid sales plan, and aided and abetted, through aforesaid advertising, in inducing organizations, associations, and the like to purchase and dispose of their said products through lottery, gift enterprise, or game of chance, in violation of public policy, as long recognized in the common law and criminal statutes, and of an established public policy of the United States Government, and in competition with many makers and sellers of blankets and bedspreads, unwilling to offer or sell their said products together with a sales plan or method involving a lottery, game of chance or gift enterprise, and who refrain therefrom, and with many unwilling to adopt and use said or any method involving a game of chance or sale of a chance to win by chance or any other method contrary to public policy;

With result that purchasing public was induced and persuaded to buy their said products in preference to those offered and sold by competitors, by reason of said lottery or game of chance, and of inducing, through said advertisements, circulars, and the like, purchase of their said products by aforesaid organizations and distribution thereof to consuming public through such sales plan, and with result that many dealers, associations, societies, and ultimate purchasers of blankets and bedspreads, attracted by said plan or method and element of chance involved in sale thereof, as above set forth, were thereby induced to buy such articles, sold and distributed by them, in preference to like merchandise offered and sold by aforesaid competitors who do not use same or equivalent method, and with tendency and capacity, by reason of said game of chance, to divert to them trade and custom from their said competitors who do not use such or an equivalent practice or method, to exclude from trade in question all competitors who are unwilling to and do not use same as unlawful, to lessen competition therein and tend to create a monopoly in themselves and such other distributors as do use same or equivalent practice, and deprive purchasing public of benefit of free competition in trade in question, and to eliminate therefrom all actual, and exclude therefrom all potential, competitors who do not use such or an equivalent method:

Held, That such acts and practices were to the prejudice of the public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition.

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that William F. Allen, Charles H. Wolf, Edward M. Mullen, and Charles H. Clark, individually and as copartners doing business under the firm name and style of Miller, Bain, Beyer & Company, hereinafter referred to as respondents, have been and are using unfair methods of competition in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in said Act of Congress, and it appearing to said Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. The respondents are individuals doing business as a copartnership under the firm name and style of Miller, Bain, Beyer & Company, with their principal office and place of business located at 1001 Filbert Street, in the city of Philadelphia, State of Pennsylvania. Respondents are now, and for several years last past have been engaged in the business of buying blankets and bedspreads from the manufacturers thereof and in selling the same to wholesale and retail dealers and to clubs, fraternal organizations, hospitals, charitable institutions, and associations, for resale and distribution to the purchasing public. Respondents' customers are located at points in the various States of the United States, and respondents cause said products when sold to be transported from their place of business in the city of Philadelphia, State of Pennsylvania, to purchasers thereof in the State of Pennsylvania and in other States of the United States at their respective places of business; and there is now, and has been for several years last past, a course of trade and commerce by said respondents in such blankets and bedspreads between and among the States of the United States. In the course and conduct of their said business, respondents are in competition with other partnerships and with corporations and individuals engaged in the sale and distribution of similar or like merchandise in commerce between and among the various States of the United States.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of their business, as described in paragraph 1 hereof, respondents have offered for sale and sold their said blankets and bedspreads to purchasers, as described in paragraph 1 hereof, along with a sales plan or method by which the said blankets and bedspreads are to be resold to the purchasing public. Said sales plan or method involves the use of a lottery scheme or gift enterprise in the sale and distribution of said merchandise to the ultimate purchasers thereof. Respondents have advertised their said merchandise and their said sales plan or method by means of printed cards, circulars, and letters. The sales plan or method as suggested and advertised by respondents, is as follows:

The sales plan or method is described as a "Club Plan." Each club has a fixed number of members, usually sixty or a hundred. Each member of a club pays a fixed amount each week, usually 25¢, for a period not to exceed a given number of weeks, usually twenty or twenty-four weeks. At the end of the first week a drawing is held, and the member whose name or number is drawn receives one of the articles of merchandise being distributed for the payment of one week's dues, and such winner or member then is dropped from the club. Each succeeding week the same procedure is followed, and thus one member receives an article of merchandise for the payment of one week's dues, another for two weeks' dues, another for three weeks' dues, and so to the end of the fixed period. At that time all remaining members receive one of the articles of merchandise, but such members have paid the full value of such merchandise. Thus by means of the sales plan or method offered by respondents the amount which an ultimate purchaser pays for an article of merchandise is determined wholly by lot or chance.

PAR. 3. The dealers and purchasers to whom respondents sell their blankets and bedspreads expose said blankets and bedspreads for sale and sell the same to the purchasing public in accordance with the aforesaid sales plan or method. Respondents thus supply to and place in the hands of others the means of conducting lotteries in the sale of their products in accordance with the sales plan hereinabove set forth. The purchasing public is induced and persuaded to purchase respondents' said products in preference to blankets and bedspreads offered for sale and sold by respondents' competitors because of said lottery or game of chance.

PAR. 4. The advertisements and circulars as distributed by respondents aid and abet in inducing organizations, associations and the like to purchase respondents' products and to dispose of the same by means of a lottery, gift enterprise, or game of chance. The purpose of respondents in so distributing their advertising material and circulars describing the sales plan above mentioned is to induce organizations, associations and the like to purchase respondents' said products, and the distribution of said advertisements, circulars and the like has the effect of inducing the purchase of respondents' products by such organizations and the distribution of the same to the consuming public by means of said sales plan.

PAR. 5. The sale of blankets and bedspreads to the purchasing public in the manner above alleged involves a lottery, game of chance, or a gift enterprise.

The use by respondents of said sales plan or method in the sale of their merchandise, and the sale by and through the use thereof and by the aid of said sales plan or method, is a practice of the sort which the common law and criminal statutes have long deemed contrary to public policy, and is contrary to an established public policy of the Government of the United States. The use by respondents of said sales plan or method has the tendency to unduly hinder competition or create monopoly.

Many persons, firms, and corporations who make and sell blankets and bedspreads in competition with the respondents, as above alleged, are unwilling to offer for sale or sell their said blankets and bedspreads together with a sales plan or method which involves a lottery, game of chance, or a gift enterprise as above alleged, and such competitors refrain therefrom.

PAR. 6. Many dealers, associations, societies, and ultimate purchasers of blankets and bedspreads are attracted by respondents' said sales plan or method and by the element of chance involved in the sale thereof in the manner above described, and are thereby induced to purchase blankets and bedspreads sold and distributed by respondents in preference to like merchandise offered for sale and sold by said competitors of respondents who do not use the same or an equivalent method. The use of said sales plan or method by respondents has the tendency and capacity because of said game of chance to divert to respondents trade and custom from their said competitors who do not use the same or an equivalent method; to exclude from said trade all competitors who are unwilling to and who do not use the same or an equivalent method because the same is unlawful; to lessen competition in said trade and to tend to create a monopoly in respondents and such other distributors as use the same or an equivalent method; and to deprive the purchasing public of the benefit of free competition in said trade. The use of said method by the respondents has the tendency and capacity to eliminate from said trade all actual competitors and to exclude therefrom all potential competitors who do not adopt and use said method or an equivalent method.

PAR. 7. Many of said competitors of respondents are unwilling to adopt and use said method or any method involving a game of chance or the sale of a chance to win something by chance, or any other method that is contrary to public policy.

PAR. 8. The aforementioned method, acts and practices of the respondents are all to the prejudice of the public and of respondents' competitors, as hereinabove alleged. Said method, acts and practices constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, on April 3, 1937, issued and served its complaint in this proceeding upon the respondents above named, charging them with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of the provisions of said act. On May 20, 1937, the respondents filed their answer, in which answer they admitted all the material allegations of fact in said complaint to be true, and stated that they waived hearing on the charges set forth in said complaint, and consented that the Commission might, without trial, without the taking of further evidence, and without any other proceeding, make and enter its findings as to the facts and issue and serve upon them an order to cease and desist from any methods of competition alleged in the complaint which constitute violations of Section 5 of the said Federal Trade Commission Act.

Thereafter, the proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on said complaint and the answer thereto, and the Commission, having duly considered the same and being now fully advised in the premises, finds this proceeding is in the interest of the public and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. The respondents are individuals doing business as a copartnership under the firm name and style of Miller, Bain, Beyer & Company, with their principal office and place of business located at 1001 Filbert Street, in the city of Philadelphia, State of Pennsylvania. Respondents are now, and for several years last past have been, engaged in the business of buying blankets and bedspreads from the manufacturers thereof and in selling the same to wholesale and retail dealers and to clubs, fraternal organizations, hospitals, charitable institutions, and associations, for resale and distribution to the purchasing public. Respondents' customers are located at points in the various States of the United States, and respondents cause said products when sold to be transported from their place of business in the city of Philadelphia, State of Pennsylvania, to purchasers thereof in the State of Pennsylvania and in other States of the United States at their respective places of business; and there is now, and has been for several years last past, a course of trade and commerce by said respondents in such blankets and bedspreads between and among the States of the United States. In the course and conduct of their said business, respondents are in competition with other partnerships and with corporations and individuals engaged in the sale and distribution of similar or like merchandise in commerce between and among the various States of the United States.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of their business, as described in paragraph 1 hereof, respondents have offered for sale and sold their said blankets and bedspreads to purchasers, as described in paragraph 1 hereof, along with a sales plan or method by which the said blankets and bedspreads are to be resold to the purchasing public. Said sales plan or method involves the use of a lottery scheme or gift enterprise in the sale and distribution of said merchandise to the ultimate purchasers thereof. Respondents have advertised their said merchandise and their said sales plan or method by means of printed cards, circulars, and letters. The sales plan or method, as suggested and advertised by respondents, is as follows:

The sales plan or method is described as a "Club Plan." Each club has a fixed number of members, usually sixty or a hundred. Each member of a club pays a fixed amount each week, usually 25¢, for a period not to exceed a given number of weeks, usually twenty or twenty-four weeks. At the end of the first week a drawing is held, and the member whose name or number is drawn receives one of the articles of merchandise being distributed for the payment of one week's dues, and such winner or member then is dropped from the club. Each succeeding week the same procedure is followed, and thus one member receives an article of merchandise for the payment of one week's dues, another for two weeks' dues, another for three weeks' dues, and so to the end of the fixed period. At that time all remaining members receive one of the articles of merchandise, but such members have paid the full value of such merchandise. Thus by means of the sales plan or method offered by respondents the amount which an ultimate purchaser pays for an article of merchandise is determined wholly by lot or chance.

PAR. 3. The dealers and purchasers to whom respondents sell their blankets and bedspreads expose said blankets and bedspreads for sale and sell the same to the purchasing public in accordance with the aforesaid sales plan or method. Respondents thus supply to and place in the hands of others the means of conducting lotteries in the sale of their products in accordance with the sales plan hereinabove set forth. The purchasing public is induced and persuaded to purchase respondents' said products in preference to blankets and bedspreads offered for sale and sold by respondents' competitors because of said lottery or game of chance.

PAR. 4. The advertisements and circulars as distributed by respondents aid and abet in inducing organizations, associations and the like to purchase respondents' products and to dispose of the same by means of a lottery, gift enterprise, or game of chance. The purpose of respondents in so distributing their advertising material and circulars describing the sales plan above mentioned is to induce organizations, associations and the like to purchase respondents' said products, and the distribution of said advertisements, circulars and the like has the effect of inducing the purchase of respondents' products by such organizations and the distribution of the same to the consuming public by means of said sales plan.

PAR. 5. The sale of blankets and bedspreads to the purchasing public in the manner above found involves a lottery, game of chance, or a gift enterprise. The use by respondents of said sales plan or method in the sale of their merchandise, and the sale by and through the use thereof and by the aid of said sales plan or method, is a practice of the sort which the common law and criminal statutes have long deemed contrary to public policy, and is contrary to an established public policy of the Government of the United States. The use by respondents of said sales plan or method has the tendency to unduly hinder competition or create monopoly. Many persons, firms and corporations who make and sell blankets and bedspreads in competition with the respondents, as above found, are unwilling to offer for sale or sell their said blankets and bedspreads together with a sales plan or method which involves a lottery, game of chance, or a gift enterprise, as above found, and such competitors refrain therefrom.

PAR. 6. Many dealers, associations, societies and ultimate purchasers of blankets and bedspreads are attracted by respondents' said sales plan or method and by the element of chance involved in the sale thereof in the manner above described, and are thereby induced to purchase blankets and bedspreads sold and distributed by respondents in preference to like merchandise offered for sale and sold by said competitors of respondents who do not use the same or an equivalent method. The use of said sales plan or method by respondents has the tendency and capacity, because of said game of chance, to divert to respondents trade and custom from their said competitors who do not use the same or an equivalent method; to exclude from said trade all competitors who are unwilling to and who do not use the same or an equivalent method because the same is unlawful; to lessen competition in said trade and to tend to create a monopoly in respondents and such other distributors as use the same or an equivalent method; and to deprive the purchasing public of the benefit of free competition in said trade. The use of said method by the respondents has the tendency and capacity to eliminate from said trade all actual competitors and to exclude therefrom all potential competitors who do not adopt and use said method or an equivalent method.

PAR. 7. Many of said competitors of respondents are unwilling to adopt and use said method or any method involving a game of chance or the sale of a chance to win something by chance, or any other method that is contrary to public policy.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondents, William F. Allen, Charles H. Wolf, Edward M. Mullen, and Charles H. Clark, individually and as copartners doing business under the firm name and style of Miller, Bain, Beyer & Company, are to the prejudice of the public and of respondents' competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

This matter coming on to be heard by the Commission on the complaint filed herein on April 3, 1937, and the answer of the respondents filed May 20, 1937, in which answer the respondents state that they desire to waive hearing on the charges set forth in said complaint and that for the sole purpose of avoiding the trouble and expense incident to further continuance of this proceeding they refrain from contesting the proceeding and admit that all the material allegations of fact in said complaint are true, but within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," and not within the intent and meaning of any other law of the United States, and further state that such answer does not constitute an admission of any conclusions of law and does not constitute an admission of fact for any other purpose than for the disposition of this proceeding and is not to be used against them in any other proceeding, suit or action, and in which answer respondents consent that the Commission may, without trial, without the taking of further evidence, and without any other proceeding, make and enter its findings as to the facts and issue and serve upon them an order to cease and desist from any methods of competition alleged in said complaint which constitute violations of Section 5 of the said Federal Trade Commission Act; and the Commission having made its findings as to the facts and conclusion that said respondents have violated the provisions of said Federal Trade Commission Act.

It is ordered, That the respondents, William F. Allen, Charles H. Wolf, Edward M. Mullen, and Charles H. Clark, individually and as copartners doing business under the firm name and style of Miller, Bain, Beyer & Company, their agents, representatives and employees, in connection with the sale and offering for sale and distribution in interstate commerce of blankets, bedspreads, or other merchandise, do cease and desist from:

1. Offering for sale and selling blankets, bedspreads, or other merchandise, to purchasers together with a sales plan or method involving the use of a lottery scheme or gift enterprise by which said blankets, bedspreads, or other merchandise, are to be or may be resold to the purchasing public.

2. Advertising by means of printed cards, circulars, letters, or by any other means, the sale of blankets, bedspreads, or other merchandise, under any plan involving the use of a lottery scheme or gift enterprise.

3. Aiding and inducing the purchasers of such blankets, bedspreads, or other merchandise, to dispose of the same by means of any lottery, gift enterprise, or game of chance.

It is further ordered, That the respondents and each of them shall, within 60 days after service upon them of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which they have complied with this order.

COMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION
OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 26, 1914

Docket 3098. Complaint, Apr. 6, 1937—Decision, June 2, 1937¹

Where an individual engaged in the purchase of blankets and bedspreads from the manufacturers or their selling agents, and in selling same to clubs, fraternal organizations, hospitals, charitable institutions, and associations, for resale and distribution to the purchasing public—

Advertised, through printed cards, circulars, and letters, and sold said products for resale under, a "Club Plan," under which each week, in accordance with weekly drawings, one of a fixed number of members who obligated themselves to some small weekly payment for a specified number of weeks, received, as determined by the name drawn by chance, article of merchandise involved, without further payments or further compliance with original undertaking, from which he was thus absolved, and thereby supplied to and placed in the hands of others the means of conducting lotteries in the sale of his products in accordance with aforesaid sales plan, and aided and abetted, through aforesaid advertising, in inducing organizations, associations, and the like to purchase and dispose of his said products through lottery, gift enterprise, or game of chance, in violation of public policy, as long recognized in the common law and criminal statutes, and of an established public policy of the United States Government, and in competition with many makers and sellers of blankets and bedspreads, unwilling to offer or sell their said products together with a sales plan or method involving a lottery, game of chance, or gift enterprise, and who refrain therefrom, and with many unwilling to adopt and use said or any method involving a game of chance or sale of a chance to win by chance or any other method contrary to public policy:

With result that purchasing public was induced and persuaded to buy his said products in preference to those offered and sold by competitors, by reason of said lottery or game of chance, and of inducing, through said advertisements, circulars, and the like, purchase of his said products by aforesaid organizations and distribution thereof to consuming public through such sales plan, and with result that many dealers, associations, societies, and ultimate purchasers of blankets and bedspreads, attracted by said plan or method and element of chance involved in sale thereof, as above set forth, were thereby induced to buy such articles, sold and distributed by him, in preference to like merchandise offered and sold by aforesaid competitors who do not use same or equivalent method, and with tendency and capacity, by reason of said game of chance, to divert to him trade and custom from his said competitors who do not use such or an equivalent practice or method, to exclude from trade in question all competitors who are unwill-

Mr. Herman Hurowitz, of Philadelphia, Pa., for Penn Dry Goods Co. and Wright, Gordon, Zachry & Parlin, of New York City, for George J. Nothnagel.

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that Penn Dry Goods Company, a corporation, and George J. Nothnagel, an individual trading under the firm name and style of The Stanley Store and as agent of the Penn Dry Goods Company, hereinafter referred to as respondents, have been and are using unfair methods of competition in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in said act of Congress, and it appearing to said Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. The respondent, Penn Dry Goods Company, is a corporation organized and doing business under the laws of the State of New Jersey, with its principal office and place of business located at 731 Arch Street, in the city of Philadelphia, State of Pennsylvania. The respondent, George J. Nothnagel, is an individual trading under the firm name and style of The Stanley Store, with his principal place of business located at 734 Haddon Avenue, in the city of Collingswood, State of New Jersey. The respondent Nothnagel does business in his own name and right and as agent for the respondent, Penn Dry Goods Company.

The respondent, Penn Dry Goods Company, is now, and for several years last past has been, engaged in the business of buying blankets and bedspreads from the manufacturers thereof, or from manufacturers' agents, and selling the same to wholesale and retail dealers and to clubs, fraternal organizations, hospitals, charitable institutions, and associations for resale and distribution to the purchasing public.

The respondent, George J. Nothnagel, trading under the firm name and style of The Stanley Store, is now, and for some time last past has been, engaged in the business of buying blankets and bedspreads from the manufacturers thereof, or their selling agents, and in selling the same to clubs, fraternal organizations, hospitals, charitable institutions, and associations for resale and distribution to the purchasing public. The respondent Nothnagel has also, as agent for the respondent, Penn Dry Goods Company, been engaged in the business of taking orders for and selling blankets and bedspreads to clubs, fraternal organizations, hospitals, charitable institutions, and associations, and forwarding said orders to the said respondent, Penn Dry Goods Company.

Respondents' customers are located at points in the States of Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Maryland, and Delaware, and the respondents cause said merchandise when sold to be transported from their place of business in the city of Philadelphia, State of Pennsylvania, or the city of Collingswood, State of New Jersey, to the purchasers thereof at their respective places of business in the States above mentioned; and there is now, and has been for some time last past, a course of trade and commerce by said respondents in such blankets and bedspreads between and among the States of the United States.

In the course and conduct of their said business, respondents are in competition with other corporations and with other individuals and with partnerships engaged in the sale and distribution of similar or like merchandise in commerce between and among the various States of the United States.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of their business, as described in paragraph 1 hereof, respondents have offered for sale and sold their said blankets and bedspreads to purchasers, as described in paragraph 1 hereof, along with a sales plan or method by which the said blankets and bedspreads are to be resold to the purchasing public. Said sales plan or method involves the use of a lottery scheme or gift enterprise in the sale and distribution of said merchandise to the ultimate purchasers thereof. Respondents have advertised their said merchandise and their said sales plan or method by means of printed cards, circulars, and letters. The sales plan or method, as suggested and advertised by respondents, is as follows:

The sales plan or method is described as a "Club Plan." Each club has a fixed number of members, usually sixty or a hundred. Each member of a club pays a fixed amount each week, usually 25¢, for a period not to exceed a given number of weeks, usually twenty or twenty-four weeks. At the end of the first week a drawing is held, and the member whose name or number is drawn receives one of the articles of merchandise being distributed for the payment of one week's dues, and such winner or member then is dropped from the club. Each succeeding week the same procedure is followed, and thus one member receives an article of merchandise for the payment of one week's dues, another for two weeks' dues, another for three weeks' dues, and so to the end of the fixed period. At that time all remaining members receive one of the articles of merchandise, but such members have paid the full value of such merchandise. Thus by means of the sales plan or method offered by respondent the amount which an ultimate purchaser pays for an article of merchandise is determined wholly by lot or chance.

PAR. 3. The dealers and purchasers to whom respondents sell their blankets and bedspreads expose said blankets and bedspreads for sale and sell the same to the purchasing public in accordance with the aforesaid sales plan or method. Respondents thus supply to and place in the hands of others the means of conducting lotteries in the sale of their products in accordance with the sales plan hereinabove set forth. The purchasing public is induced and persuaded to purchase respondent's said products in preference to blankets and bedspreads offered for sale and sold by respondents' competitors because of said lottery or game of chance.

PAR. 4. The advertisements and circulars as distributed by respondents aid and abet in inducing organizations, associations and the like to purchase respondents' products and to dispose of the same by means of a lottery, gift enterprise, or game of chance. The purpose of respondents in so distributing their advertising material and circulars describing the sales plan above mentioned is to induce organizations, associations, and the like to purchase respondents' said products, and the distribution of said advertisements, circulars and the like has the effect of inducing the purchase of respondents' products by such organizations and the distribution of the same to the consuming public by means of said sales plan.

PAR. 5. The sale of blankets and bedspreads to the purchasing public in the manner above alleged involves a lottery, game of chance, or a gift enterprise.

The use by respondents of said sales plan or method in the sale of their merchandise, and the sale by and through the use thereof and by the aid of said sales plan or method, is a practice of the sort which the common law and criminal statutes have long deemed contrary to public policy, and is contrary to an established public policy of the Government of the United States. The use by respondents of said sales plan or method has the tendency to unduly hinder competition or create monopoly.

Many persons, firms, and corporations who make and sell blankets and bedspreads in competition with the respondents, as above alleged, are unwilling to offer for sale or sell their said blankets and bedspreads together with a sales plan or method which involves a lottery, game of chance, or a gift enterprise, as above alleged, and such competitors refrain therefrom.

PAR. 6. Many dealers, associations, societies, and ultimate purchasers of blankets and bedspreads are attracted by respondents' said sales plan or method and by the element of chance involved in the sale thereof in the manner above described, and are thereby induced to purchase blankets and bedspreads sold and distributed by respondents in preference to like merchandise offered for sale and sold by said competitors of respondents who do not use the same or an equivalent method. The use of said sales plan or method by respondents has the tendency and capacity, because of said game of chance, to divert to respondents trade and custom from their said competitors who do not use the same or an equivalent method; to exclude from said trade all competitors who are unwilling to and who do not use the same or an equivalent method because the same is unlawful; to lessen competition in said trade and to tend to create a monopoly in respondents and such other distributors as use the same or an equivalent method; and to deprive the purchasing public of the benefit of free competition in said trade. The use of said method by the respondents has the tendency and capacity to eliminate from said trade all actual competitors and to exclude therefrom all potential competitors who do not adopt and use said method or an equivalent method.

PAR. 7. Many of said competitors of respondents are unwilling to adopt and use said method or any method involving a game of chance or the sale of a chance to win something by chance, or any other method that is contrary to public policy.

PAR. 8. The aforementioned method, acts and practices of the respondents are all to the prejudice of the public and of respondents' competitors, as hereinabove alleged. Said method, acts and practices constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, on April 6, 1937, issued and served its complaint in this proceeding upon the respondents above named, charging them with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of the provisions of said act. On May 15, 1937, the respondent, Penn Dry Goods Company, a corporation, filed its answer denying the allegations of said complaint, and on May 24, 1937, the respondent George J. Nothnagel, filed his answer, in which answer he stated that he desired to waive hearing on the charges set forth in the complaint and admitted that all the material allegations in said complaint, except as in said answer expressly denied, were true and consented that the Commission might, without further evidence and without any other proceeding, make and enter its findings as to the facts and serve upon him an order to cease and desist from any methods of competition alleged in the complaint which constitute violations of Section 5 of the said Federal Trade Commission Act.

Thereafter, the proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on the said complaint and the answers thereto, and the Commission having duly considered the same and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPHS 1. Respondent, Penn Dry Goods Company, is a corporation organized and doing business under the laws of the State of New Jersey, with its principal office and place of business located at 731 Arch Street, in the city of Philadelphia, State of Pennsylvania.

Respondent, George J. Nothnagel, is an individual trading under the firm name and style of The Stanley Store, with his principal place of business located at 734 Haddon Avenue, in the city of Collingswood, State of New Jersey.

Respondent, George J. Nothnagel, trading under the firm name and style of The Stanley Store, is now and for sometime last past has been engaged in the business of buying blankets and bedspreads from the manufacturers thereof or their selling agents, and in selling the same to clubs, fraternal organizations, hospitals, charitable institutions, and associations, for resale and distribution to the purchasing public. Customers of the respondent, George J. Nothnagel, are located at points in the States of Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Maryland, and Delaware, and the respondent Nothnagel causes said merchandise when sold to be transported from his place of business in the city of Collingswood, State of New Jersey, to the purchasers thereof at their respective places of business in the States above mentioned; and there is now and has been for sometime last past a course of trade and commerce by said respondent in such blankets and bedspreads between and among the States of the United States. In the course and conduct of his business, respondent Nothnagel is in competition with other individuals and with corporations and partnerships engaged in the sale and distribution of similar or like merchandise in commerce between and among the various States of the United States.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of his business, as described in paragraph 1 hereof, respondent Nothnagel has offered for sale and sold his said blankets and bedspreads to purchasers, as described in paragraph 1 hereof, along with the sales plan or method by which the said blankets and bedspreads are to be resold to the purchasing public. Said sales plan or method involves the use of a lottery scheme or gift enterprise in the sale and distribution of said merchandise to the ultimate purchasers thereof. Respondent has advertised his said merchandise and his said sales plan or method by means of printed cards, circulars, and letters. The sales plan or method, as suggested and advertised by respondent, is as follows:

The sales plan or method is described as a "Club Plan." Each club has a fixed number of members, usually sixty or a hundred. Each member of a club pays a fixed amount each week, usually 25¢, for a period not to exceed a given number of weeks, usually twenty or twenty-four weeks. At the end of the first week a drawing is held, and the member whose name or number is drawn receives one of the articles of merchandise being distributed for the payment of one week's dues, and such winner or member then is dropped from the club. Each succeeding week the same procedure is followed, and thus one member receives an article of merchandise for the payment of one week's dues, another for two weeks' dues, another for three weeks' dues, and so to the end of the fixed period. At that time all remaining members receive one of the articles of merchandise, but such members have paid the full value of such merchandise. Thus by means of the sales plan or method offered by respondent Nothnagel the amount which an ultimate purchaser pays for an article of merchandise is determined wholly by lot or chance.

PAR. 3. The dealers and purchasers to whom respondent Nothnagel has sold his blankets and bedspreads have exposed said blankets and bedspreads for sale and have sold the same to the purchasing public in accordance with the aforesaid sales plan or method. Respondent Nothnagel has thus supplied to and has placed in the hands of others the means of conducting lotteries in the sale of his products in accordance with the sales plan hereinabove set forth. The purchasing public has been induced and persuaded to purchase respondent's said products in preference to blankets and bedspreads offered for sale and sold by respondent's competitors because of said lottery or game of chance.

PAR. 4. The advertisements and circulars as distributed by respondent Nothnagel aided and abetted in inducing organizations, associations and the like to purchase respondent's products and to dispose of the same by means of a lottery, gift enterprise, or game of chance. The purpose of respondent in so distributing his advertising material and circulars describing the sales plan above mentioned has been to induce organizations, associations and the like to purchase respondent's said products, and the distribution of said advertisements, circulars, and the like has had the effect of inducing the purchase of respondent's products by such organizations and the distribution of the same to the consuming public by means of said sales plan.

PAR. 5. The sale of blankets and bedspreads to the purchasing public in the manner above found involves a lottery, game of chance, or a gift enterprise. The use by respondent of said sales plan or method in the sale of his merchandise, and the sale by and through the use thereof and by the aid of said sales plan or method, is a practice of the sort which the common law and criminal statutes have long deemed contrary to public policy, and is contrary to an established public policy of the Government of the United States. The use by respondent of said sales plan or method has had the tendency to unduly hinder competition or create monopoly. Many persons, firms, and corporations who make and sell blankets and bedspreads in competition with respondent Nothnagel, as above found, are unwilling to offer for sale or sell their said blankets and bedspreads together with a sales plan or method which involves a lottery, game of chance, or a gift enterprise, as above found, and such competitors refrain therefrom.

PAR. 6. Many dealers, associations, societies and ultimate purchasers of blankets and bedspreads have been attracted by respondent's said sales plan or method and by the element of chance involved in the sale thereof in the manner above described, and have been thereby induced to purchase blankets and bedspreads sold and distributed by respondent Nothnagel, in preference to like merchandise offered for sale and sold by said competitors of respondent who do not use the same or an equivalent method. The use of said sales plan or method by respondent has had the tendency and capacity, because of said game of chance, to divert to respondent trade and custom from his said competitors who do not use the same or an equivalent method; to exclude from said trade competitors who are unwilling to and who do not use the same or an equivalent method because the same is unlawful; to lessen competition in said trade and to tend to create a monopoly in respondent Nothnagel and such other distributors as use the same or an equivalent method; and to deprive the purchasing public of the benefit of free competition in said trade. The use of said method by respondent Nothnagel has had the tendency and capacity to eliminate from said trade actual competitors and to exclude therefrom potential competitors who do not adopt and use said method or an equivalent method.

PAR. 7. Many of said competitors of respondent Nothnagel are unwilling to adopt and use said method or any method involving a game of chance or the sale of a chance to win something by chance, or any other method that is contrary to public policy.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of respondent, George J. Nothnagel, individually and trading as The Stanley Store, have been to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

MODIFIED ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST ¹

This matter comes on to be heard by the Federal Trade Commission on the complaint filed herein on April 6, 1937, the answer of the respondent, Penn Dry Goods Company, a corporation, filed May 15, 1937, and the answer of respondent, George J. Nothnagel, an individual trading under the firm name and style of The Stanley Store, filed herein on May 24, 1937.

The answer of respondent, George J. Nothnagel, as aforesaid, states that he desires to waive hearing on the charges set forth in the complaint, and that for the sole purpose of avoiding the trouble and expense incident to further continuation of this proceeding he refrains from contesting this proceeding, and admits that all the material facts alleged in said complaint, except that he is or acts as agent for the Penn Dry Goods Company, are true, but within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act only and not within the intent and meaning of any other law of the United States, such answer not constituting an admission of fact for any other purpose nor to be used against him in any other proceeding, suit or action; and that said respondent Nothnagel consents that the Commission may, without trial, without the taking of further evidence, and without any other proceeding, make and enter its findings as to the facts and issue and serve upon him an order to cease and desist from any methods of competition alleged in the complaint which constitute violations of Section 5 of the said Federal Trade Commission Act.

The answer of respondent, Penn Dry Goods Company, a corporation, denies that it has indulged in the practices complained of in said complaint, and denies that the said respondent Nothnagel is or has been its agent, representative, or employee.

The Commission, on June 2, 1937, having made its findings as to the facts and conclusion that said respondent Nothnagel has violated the provisions of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," and the Commission, on June 2, 1937, having entered its order to cease and desist against the respondent, George J. Nothnagel, and the matter now coming on for reconsideration upon the request of counsel for the respondent, George J. Nothnagel, dated June 25, 1937, requesting a modification of said order to cease and desist, and the Commission having duly considered the said request and being now fully advised in the premises.

It is ordered, That the order to cease and desist heretofore entered on June 2, 1937, be, and the same hereby is, vacated and set aside.

It is further ordered, That the respondent, George J. Nothnagel, an individual trading under the firm name and style of The Stanley Store, his agents, and employees, in connection with the offering for sale, sale and distribution in interstate commerce of blankets, bedspreads, or other merchandise, do cease and desist from:

1. Offering for sale and selling blankets, bedspreads, or other merchandise, to purchasers together with a sales plan or method involving the use of a lottery scheme or gift enterprise by which said blankets, bedspreads, or other merchandise, are to be or may be resold to the purchasing public.

2. Advertising by means of printed cards, circulars, letters, or by any other means, the sale of blankets, bedspreads, or other merchandise, under any plan involving the use of a lottery scheme or a gift enterprise.

3. Aiding and inducing the purchasers of such blankets, bedspreads, or other merchandise, to dispose of the same by means of any lottery, gift enterprise, or game of chance; this provision not applying to sales of merchandise not accompanied by any acts of respondent aiding or inducing disposition thereof under any plan involving a lottery, gift enterprise, or game of chance.

It is further ordered, That the respondent, George J. Nothnagel, individually and trading as The Stanley Store, shall, within 60 days after service upon him of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which he has complied with this order.

It is further ordered, That the said complaint, insofar as it relates to the respondent, Penn Dry Goods Company, a corporation, be and the same is hereby dismissed without prejudice.

IN THE MATTER OF HADDORFF PIANO COMPANY

COMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION
OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 26, 1914

Docket 3041. Complaint, Jan. 27, 1937—Decision, June 5, 1937

Where a corporation engaged in the manufacture of pianos and in sale and distribution thereof to retailers for resale, in competition with those who make and sell such products similar to its so-called "Vertichord Grand" type and not in any way represent their respective products as having mechanical features and other properties similar to grand pianos, and thus designate their respective products, and in competition with others who make pianos with same mechanical features and other qualities possessed by grand pianos and do thus designate same; in advertising aforesaid type, among others made and dealt in by it, in periodicals and trade journals of general circulation, and in pamphlets, folders, suggested sales talks and other advertising literature circulated to its customers and prospective customers—

Made use of word "Grand" in trade name "Vertichord Grand" to designate and describe its aforesaid type, and represented that said piano possessed same mechanical or operating features as those of the type generally designated and referred to as grand pianos, through such statements as "* * * designed to * * * maintain grand piano tone quality," "* * * volume and tone of a fine grand without taking up a grand's space," "All the advantages of a large grand piano," "* * * deep mellow tone of a large grand piano," and urged, in its said suggested sales talks, use of name "Vertichord Grand" to describe said product, and, in pamphlets distributed to retailers for members of the purchasing public, emphasized economy of space along with featured characteristics of the grand, notwithstanding fact it did not have, among distinctive operating or mechanical features different from and in some cases superior to those of pianos of other types, strings placed horizontally, gravity action of hammers and shifting soft pedal, and, while possessing tonal qualities comparable to those of baby grand, it did not possess such qualities comparable to those of the large or concert size grand piano;

With tendency and capacity to mislead members of the purchasing public into the erroneous and mistaken belief that its said pianos, thus designated, possessed same operating or mechanical features as present in grand pianos, as long designated, described and known to piano trade and purchasing public, and preferred by many users, and into purchase of its so-called "Vertichord Grand" type piano by reason of such belief, and with result of thereby placing in the hands of retailers instrument and means whereby they might misrepresent the operating or mechanical features and other properties of said products and induce members of purchasing public to buy the same by reason thereof, and with result that trade was diverted to it from competitors, likewise engaged in distribution and sale of pianos, who have not made use of like or similar statements and representations in sale of their respective products in commerce:

Complaint

Held, That such acts and practices were to the prejudice of the public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition.

Mr. J. T. Welch for the Commission.

Mr. Axel A. Hofgren, of Chicago, Ill., for respondent.

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that Haddorff Piano Company, a corporation, hereinafter referred to as respondent, has been and is using unfair methods of competition in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in said act of Congress, and it appearing to said Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent, Haddorff Piano Company, is a corporation, existing and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Illinois with its principal office and place of business located at 1900 Harrison Avenue, in the city of Rockford, State of Illinois. Respondent is now, and has been for a number of years, engaged in the business of manufacturing, distributing, and selling pianos to retail dealers for resale, in commerce as herein set out.

PAR. 2. Respondent, being engaged in business as aforesaid, causes said pianos, when sold by it, to be transported from its office and principal place of business in the State of Illinois to the respective purchasers thereof located at various points in the States of the United States other than the State of Illinois. For more than one year last past, the respondent has maintained a constant current of trade in the pianos manufactured, distributed, and sold by it, in commerce among and between the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 3. In the course and conduct of its business the respondent is now, and has been for many years, in substantial competition with other corporations and with firms and individuals likewise engaged in the business of distributing and selling pianos, in commerce among and between the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 4. One of the various types of pianos manufactured and distributed in commerce as hereinabove set out by the respondent is designated and described by it as the "Vertichord Grand." Upon each of the pianos of this type there is imprinted upon the center of the front panel thereof the words "Haddorff Vertichord Grand." In the course of the operation of said business, and for the purpose of inducing customers and prospective customers to purchase said pianos, the respondent has, from time to time, caused advertisements to be inserted in periodicals and trade journals of general circulation throughout the United States and has printed and circulated throughout the several States to said customers and prospective customers, through the United States mails and otherwise, pamphlets, folders, suggested sales talks, and other advertising literature, some of which literature is designed and intended to be used by the retailers purchasing said pianos in the offering for sale and sale of respondent's pianos. In said advertising literature above referred to, the respondent has caused its corporate name, Haddorff Piano Company, to be prominently and conspicuously displayed, together with such statements as follows:

Cleverly designed to take much less space than a grand and yet to maintain grand piano tone quality.

Tone of a parlor grand.

It solves the problem of creating a piano that literally has the volume and tone of a fine grand without taking up a grand's space.

Haddorff's ingenious piano engineers have devised a way of using longer strings in less space (and we can prove the paradox) thus giving full, rounded grand piano tone.

All the advantages of a large grand piano.

It has the deep mellow tone of a large grand piano.

In its suggested sales talk distributed to retailers appear such statements as:

In conversation there is a tendency to shorten this to just "Vertichord". "Vertichord" indicates "vertical strings" or "vertically strung", but that by itself is not a complete description of the instrument. It is a horizontal piano, vertically strung. Vertichord Grand is therefore an accurate and proper name. Its constant use in full has been proved to have a very favorable effect in the promotion and sale of the instrument.

In pamphlets which it distributes to its retailers for distribution to members of the purchasing public in connection with the offering for sale and sale of its pianos appear such statements as:

The name chosen for the new instrument, Vertichord Grand, is descriptive of the new form. In its main mass and main effect the piano is horizontal (grand), but at that point in the structure of an ordinary grand where the curve in the rim begins, the strings are up-ended (which is the significance of "Vertichord"). The result is a piano which combines the grace and decorative charm of the old spinet, with the string length, sounding board area, and general tonal character of a sizeable grand of excellent quality, projects into the room only twenty-five and one-half inches, and costs much less than any other piano of the same style, appeal and a comparable musical quality.

All of said statements, together with other similar statements not herein set out, purport to be descriptive of the type of pianos manufactured and distributed by the respondent under the name "Vertichord Grand." In all of said advertising literature, in the statements above set out, and in many other statements, the respondent represents, either directly or through implication, that the type of pianos referred to in said statements is the same as or is comparable to and has the same operating or mechanical features, tonal qualities and other merits as the type of pianos generally known to and designated by the trade and public generally as Grand pianos.

PAR. 5. For a period of many years, one type of piano has been designated, described and known, both to the trade and to the purchasing public, as a Grand piano. Many users of pianos have expressed, and actually have, a preference for pianos of this type. Pianos of this type possess distinctive operating or mechanical features and tonal qualities different from and superior to the operating or mechanical features and tonal qualities of pianos of any other type. Among these features and tonal qualities are horizontal stringing, gravity action of hammers, placement and resonance of sounding board, shifting soft pedal, superior touch and, in many pianos, the presence of a true sostenuto pedal. When members of the purchasing public purchase pianos designated, described and referred to as Grand pianos, they expect to receive pianos possessing the operating or mechanical features and tonal qualities above referred to.

PAR. 6. The pianos manufactured and distributed by the respondent, in commerce as herein set out, and designated as "Vertichord Grand" pianos do not possess the same operating or mechanical features and tonal qualities as are possessed by the type of pianos generally known and referred to as Grand pianos. The so-called "Vertichord Grand" pianos do not possess horizontal stringing of the chords or strings and do not have sounding boards that are placed horizontally or that have the same resonance and tonal qualities as sounding boards found in the type of pianos generally known and referred to as Grand pianos. The so-called "Vertichord Grand" pianos do not have a gravity action of hammers that strike the strings or chords and do not have the superior touch found in pianos of the type commonly known as Grand pianos. The respondent's so-called "Vertichord Grand" pianos do not have shifting soft pedals and do not have sostenuto pedals. The general mechanical features and tonal qualities of the so-called "Vertichord Grand" pianos are not comparable to the mechanical features and tonal qualities of that type of pianos hereinabove referred to as Grand pianos.

PAR. 7. There are among respondent's competitors those who manufacture and sell in commerce, as herein set out, pianos having many of the same mechanical features and tonal qualities as respondent's "Vertichord Grand" pianos and having a similar general appearance to said pianos, who do not, in any way, misrepresent the character and quality of their respective pianos or the mechanical features and tonal qualities thereof and who do not designate their respective pianos of this type as being Grand pianos. There are also among respondent's competitors those who manufacture pianos designated by them as Grand pianos which do have the same mechanical features and tonal qualities possessed by the type of pianos hereinabove referred to as Grand pianos and who truthfully designate their pianos as Grand pianos and truthfully advertise and represent the true character and nature of their respective products.

PAR. 8. The acts and practices of the respondent in using the aforesaid statements and representations in its advertising literature and in advertising literature furnished by it to retailers, in offering for sale and selling its so-called "Vertichord Grand" pianos have had, and now have, the tendency and capacity to mislead and deceive members of the purchasing public into the false and erroneous belief that said pianos possess the same operating or mechanical features and tonal qualities present in pianos of the type generally known and designated as Grand pianos and into the purchase of respondent's so-called "Vertichord Grand" pianos on account of said belief induced as aforesaid. The acts and practices of the respondent as hereinabove set out also place in the hands of retail dealers an instrument and a means whereby said retail dealers may misrepresent the operating or mechanical features and tonal qualities thereof and induce members of the purchasing public to buy said pianos on account of such misrepresentations. As a result thereof, trade has been unfairly diverted to the respondent from competitors likewise engaged in the business of distributing and selling pianos who truthfully advertise and represent the nature and character of their respective products. As a consequence thereof, substantial injury has been, and is now being, done by respondent to competition, in commerce among and between the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 9. The above and foregoing acts, practices, and representations of the respondent have been, and are, all to the prejudice of the public and respondent's competitors as aforesaid, and constitute unfair methods of competition within the meaning and intent of Section 5 of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, on January 27, 1937, issued and served its complaint in this proceeding upon respondent Haddorff Piano Company, charging it with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of the provisions of said act. After the issuance of said complaint and the filing of respondent's answer, the Commission, by order entered herein, granted respondent's motion for permission to withdraw said answer and to substitute therefor an answer admitting all the material allegations of the complaint to be true and waiving the taking of further evidence and all other intervening procedure, which substitute answer was duly filed in the office of the Commission. Thereafter, this proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on the said complaint and the substitute answer, briefs and oral arguments of counsel having been waived, and the Commission having duly considered the same and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent Haddorff Piano Company is a corporation existing and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Illinois. Its principal office and place of business are located at 1900 Harrison Avenue, in the city of Rockford, State of Illinois. For a number of years, respondent has been engaged in the business of manufacturing pianos. It sells and distributes its pianos to retail dealers for resale.

PAR. 2. Respondent causes its pianos, when sold, to be transported from its office and principal place of business in the State of Illinois to the respective purchasers thereof located at various points in States of the United States other than the State of Illinois. Respondent now maintains, and has for several years last past maintained, a constant current of trade in the pianos manufactured, distributed and sold by it in commerce among and between the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 3. In the course and conduct of its business, respondent is now, and has been for many years, in substantial competition with other corporations and with firms and individuals likewise engaged in the business of distributing and selling pianos to retail dealers for resale in commerce among and between the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 4. The respondent manufactures pianos of various types including pianos commonly designated as Grand pianos and also pianos commonly designated as Upright pianos. In addition to the pianos of the types above referred to, the respondent manufactures another type of piano which has been designated and described as "Vertichord Grand." Upon each of the pianos of this type, there has been imprinted upon the center of the front panel thereof the words "Haddorff Vertichord Grand."

In the course of the operation of its business, and for the purposes of inducing customers and prospective customers to purchase its pianos of this type, the respondent has caused advertisements to be inserted in periodicals and trade journals of general circulation throughout the United States. It has also printed and circulated throughout the several States, to its customers and prospective customers, pamphlets, folders, suggested sales talks, and other advertising literature. Some of the above mentioned literature is designed and intended to be used by the retailers in the offering for sale and sale of respondent's pianos to retail customers. In the advertisements and advertising literature above referred to, the respondent has caused its corporate name, Haddorff Piano Company, to be prominently and conspicuously displayed, together with such statements as the following:

Cleverly designed to take much less space than a grand and yet to maintain grand piano tone quality.

Tone of a parlor grand.

It solves the problem of creating a piano that literally has the volume and tone of a fine grand without taking up a grand's space.

Haddorff's ingenious piano engineers have devised a way of using longer strings in less space (and we can prove the paradox) thus giving full, rounded grand piano tone.

All the advantages of a large grand piano.

It has the deep mellow tone of a large grand piano.

In its suggested sales talks distributed to retailers appear such statements as:

In conversation there is a tendency to shorten this to just "Vertichord." "Vertichord" indicates "vertical strings" or "vertically strung," but that by itself is not a complete description of the instrument. It is a horizontal piano, vertically strung.

Vertichord Grand is therefore an accurate and proper name. Its constant use in full has been proved to have a very favorable effect in the promotion and sale of the instrument.

In pamphlets which it distributes to its retailers for distribution to members of the purchasing public in connection with the offering for sale and sale of its pianos appear such statements as:

The name chosen for the new instrument, Vertichord Grand, is descriptive of the new form. In its main mass and main effect the piano is horizontal (grand), but at that point in the structure of an ordinary grand where the curve in the rim begins, the strings are up-ended (which is the significance of "Vertichord"). The result is a piano which combines the grace and decorative charm of the old spinet, with the string length, sounding board area, and general tonal character of a sizable grand of excellent quality, projects into the room only twenty-five and one-half inches, and costs much less than any other piano of the same style, appeal and a comparable musical quality.

All of said statements, together with other similar statements not herein set out, purport to be descriptive of the type of pianos manufactured and distributed by the respondent under the name "Vertichord Grand." In all of said advertising literature, in the statements above set out, and in many other statements, the respondent represents, either directly or through implication, that the type of pianos referred to in said statements is the same as or is comparable to and has the same operating or mechanical features, tonal qualities, and other merits as the type of pianos generally known to and designated by the trade and public generally as Grand Pianos.

PAR. 5. For a period of many years, one type of piano has been designated, described and known, both to the piano trade and to the purchasing public, as a Grand piano. Many users of pianos have expressed, and actually have, a preference for pianos of this type. Pianos of this type possess distinctive operating or mechanical features different from and in some cases superior to the operating or mechanical features of pianos of any other type. Among these features are: horizontal stringing, gravity action of hammers, placement of sounding board, and shifting soft pedal. In many pianos of the type generally designated and described as Grand pianos, there is also the additional feature of a true sostenuto pedal. The tonal qualities of pianos are determined to a large extent by the quality, character and placement of the sounding board, the size of the string plate and the length and number of strings. Some pianos of the type generally designated and known as Grand pianos, especially those of large or concert size, do have tonal qualities superior to the tonal qualities of any other type piano. When members of the purchasing public purchase pianos designated, described and referred to as

PAR. 6. The pianos manufactured, distributed and sold by the respondent in commerce as herein described and designated as "Vertichord Grand" pianos do not possess the same operating or mechanical features as are possessed by the type of pianos generally known and referred to as Grand pianos. The so-called "Vertichord Grand" pianos do not have a gravity action of hammers that strike the strings or chords. They do not have shifting soft pedals and do not have sostenuto pedals.

The sounding boards in respondent's "Vertichord Grand" pianos are not comparable in placement and tonal resonance to the sounding boards used in large or concert size Grand pianos. The size of the string plate and the length and number of strings in respondent's "Vertichord Grand" pianos are not comparable to those of the large or concert size Grand pianos. Consequently, the tonal qualities of respondent's "Vertichord Grand" pianos are not comparable to those of the large or concert size Grand pianos.

Because of the reduction in the size of the sounding board and in the size of the string plate and the length and number of strings necessitated in Grand pianos of the smaller sizes often referred to as "Baby Grand" pianos, the tonal qualities of respondent's "Vertichord Grand" pianos are comparable to the tonal qualities of such pianos.

PAR. 7. There are among respondent's competitors those who manufacture and sell in commerce as herein set out pianos having many of the same mechanical features and tonal qualities as respondent's "Vertichord Grand" pianos and having a similar general appearance to said pianos who do not, in any way, represent that their respective pianos have mechanical features and other qualities similar to Grand pianos and do not designate their respective pianos of this type as being Grand pianos. There are also among respondent's competitors those who manufacture pianos which do have the same mechanical features and other qualities possessed by the type of pianos hereinabove referred to as Grand pianos and who designate such pianos as Grand pianos.

PAR. 8. The respondent changed the name of its pianos of this type from "Vertichord Grand" pianos to "Vertichord" on or about October 15, 1936. Since that time, it has not designated its pianos of this type as being Grand pianos. It has already eliminated from its advertisements and advertising literature similar to that described in paragraph 4 hereof any reference to pianos of this type as Grand pianos.

PAR. 9. The acts and practices of the respondent in using the aforesaid statements and representations in its advertising literature and in advertising literature furnished by it to retailers, in offering for sale and selling its "Vertichord Grand" pianos have had the tendency and capacity to mislead members of the purchasing public into the erroneous and mistaken belief that said pianos so designated possess the same operating or mechanical features as are present in pianos of the type generally known and designated as Grand pianos and into the purchase of respondent's so-called "Vertichord Grand" pianos on account of such belief. The acts and practices of the respondent as hereinabove set out also place in the hands of the retail dealers an instrument and a means whereby said retail dealers may misrepresent the operating or mechanical features and other qualities of said pianos and induce members of the purchasing public to buy said pianos on account of such misrepresentations. As a result thereof, trade has been diverted to the respondent from competitors likewise engaged in the business of distributing and selling pianos who have not made use of like or similar statements and representations in the sale of their respective products in commerce among and between the various States of the United States.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondent Haddorff Piano Company are to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce, within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

This proceeding having been heard by the Federal Trade Commission upon the complaint of the Commission and the answer filed herein by the respondent admitting all the material allegations of the complaint to be true and waiving the taking of further evidence and all other intervening procedure, and the Commission having made its findings as to the facts and its conclusion that said respondent had violated the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

It is ordered, That the respondent, Haddorff Piano Company, its officers, representatives, agents, and employees, in connection with the offering for sale, sale and distribution of vertically strung pianos formerly designated as "Haddorff Vertichord Grand" and now designated as "Haddorff Vertichord" in interstate commerce or in the District of Columbia, do forthwith cease and desist from:

(1) The use of the word "Grand," alone or in conjunction with any other word or words, as a trade name by which to designate or describe any piano not having its strings placed horizontally, gravity action of hammers, and shifting soft pedal, and not possessing those tonal and other qualities associated by the trade and the general public with Grand pianos;

(2) Representing that said pianos possess the same mechanical or operating features as are possessed by pianos of the type generally designated and referred to as Grand pianos;

(3) Representing that said pianos possess the same or comparable tonal qualities as pianos of the type generally designated and referred to as Grand Pianos, except as to the smaller sizes or Baby Grand pianos.

It is further ordered, That the respondent shall within 60 days after service upon it of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which it has complied with this order.

Complaint

IN THE MATTER OF KOLYNOS COMPANY

COMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION
OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 26, 1914

Docket 3074. Complaint, Mar. 11, 1937—Decision, June 5, 1937

Where a corporation engaged in sale and distribution of a toothpaste or dentifrice known as "Kolynos," in substantial competition with others engaged in sale and distribution of dentifrices, and including those who do not in any manner misrepresent the ingredients or efficacy of their respective products; in advertising its said "Kolynos" in newspapers of general circulation—

- (a) Falsely represented that it conquered or removed "Bacterial Mouth," caused, as asserted, by germs which sweep in with every breath and attack tooth and gum, and killed germs which were known cause of most gum troubles, and contained important germicidal ingredients exceptional to it;
- (b) Falsely represented that it cleaned and polished teeth down to the naked white enamel without injury and erased stain and tartar, and gave teeth a double cleansing that could not be obtained with ordinary or other toothpastes or dentifrices, and contained "essential ingredients" which remove tartar, and cleaned teeth down to the natural white enamel and gave them sparkling whiteness, and restored their natural whiteness, and made them look shades lighter almost at once, and gleam like pearls; and
- (c) Falsely represented that it did what ordinary toothpaste could not do, and contained properties not found in ordinary pastes and powders, and was new and totally different, and was "the approved" toothpaste and "the" antiseptic dental cream, and that dentists throughout the world recommended it because of its ability to remove tartar;

With result that a substantial number of the consuming public, as a consequence of its said false and misleading representations, purchased substantial volume of its said preparation and thereby unfairly diverted substantial volume of trade and business to it which would otherwise have gone to competitors who have not made use of such unfair methods:

Held, That such acts and practices were to the prejudice of the public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition.

Mr. Wm. T. Chantland for the Commission.

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that the Kolynos Company, hereinafter referred to as "respondent" has been, and is now, using unfair methods of competition in commerce as "commerce" is defined in said act, and it appearing to the Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint, stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent, Kolynos Company, is a Connecticut corporation, which has its principal office and place of business in the city of New Haven, State of Connecticut. Respondent is now, and has been for some time, engaged in the business of distributing and selling, in commerce as herein set out, a certain tooth paste, known as "Kolynos."

PAR. 2. Said respondent, being engaged in business as aforesaid, causes said tooth paste, when sold, to be transported from its office and place of business in the State of Connecticut to purchasers thereof located at various points in States of the United States other than the State from which said shipments were made. Respondent now maintains a constant current of trade in commerce in said product, distributed and sold by it, between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 3. In the course and conduct of its said business, respondent is now, and has been, in substantial competition with other corporations and with firms and individuals likewise engaged in the business of distributing and selling tooth pastes and kindred preparations in commerce among and between the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

In the course and operation of said business, and for the purpose of inducing the purchase of said tooth paste, respondent has made use of advertisements carried in newspapers, magazines, and periodicals having a general circulation throughout the various States of the United States and has also made use of other types of advertising generally circulated to purchasers and prospective purchasers located in all of the States. In all of said advertisements, respondent has caused its name to be prominently displayed, together with such statements as the following:

Teeth whiten 3 shades in 3 days when you remove Bacterial-Mouth.

Within 3 days teeth will look whiter—fully 3 shades.

Germs sweep into the mouth with every breath and attack tooth and gum. They cause the condition known as Bacterial-Mouth but Kolynos quickly conquers this foe * * *.

It cleans and polishes teeth down to the naked white enamel without injury.

Erases stain and tartar.

KOLYNOS GIVES TEETH A DOUBLE-CLEANSING YOU CAN'T GET WITH ORDINARY TOOTH PASTE.

1. Foams into every crevice, over every tooth surface and kills millions of germs.

2. Erases dingy film and stain. Before you know it your teeth are cleaned right down to the beautiful, natural white enamel without injury.

* * * Kolynos does what ordinary toothpastes can't do. As it cleans up ugly stain and tarnish—it foams into every crevice and kills millions of germs that are the known cause of most tooth and gum troubles.

The dentist can stimulate the practice of oral hygiene in the home by explaining the relationship to the patient between mouth bacteria and tooth decay. The patient can aid in maintaining a healthy condition of the oral cavity, as established by the dentist, through the use of KOLYNOS DENTAL CREAM, which not only neutralizes the acid formed by mouth bacteria, but reduces the oral flora from 80% to 92% with each brushing.

Just one brushing with Kolynos in the unique Kolynos way—a half-inch of this amazing dental cream on a dry brush, use no water—and you'll see how important it is to use an antiseptic dental cream that kills germs always collecting on the teeth and disfiguring them.

IT'S EASY TO MAKE DULL, DINGY TEETH ATTRACTIVE. GIVE THEM SPARKLING WHITENESS!

New—and totally different—way of antiseptic cleaning transforms dull teeth in a hurry. * * *

This modern antiseptic dental cream contains properties not found in ordinary pastes and powders. It instantly kills 80% to 92% of the germs present in the mouth. Removes the ugly germ-spots, the stain and discoloration. Cleans every tooth surface, between the teeth, every tiny crevice. And gives to teeth a clearness and brilliance that is wonderful to see.

Now discover what more than 2,000,000 Americans already know. Start cleaning your teeth with antiseptic Kolynos.

Your teeth look shades lighter; they gleam like pearls.

* * * Makes them look shades lighter almost at once.

* * * Actually kills harmful germs in a few seconds and keeps teeth and mouth thoroughly clean and healthy.

Important ingredients exceptional to KOLYNOS actually kill the germs of dental decay in a few seconds.

The approved antiseptic and germicidal tooth paste.

* * * KOLYNOS Dental Cream * * * destroys from 80 to 90% of oral bacteria with each brushing * * *

KOLYNOS, the Antiseptic Dental Cream.

Dentists throughout the world recommend KOLYNOS because of its ability to remove unsightly stain and tartar.

Other essential ingredients remove unsightly stain and dissolve tartar.

Its action is exactly like that of a jeweler's polish on tarnished silver. It erases the yellowish colored coating that disfigures your teeth and restores their natural whiteness.

All of said statements, together with many other statements appearing in respondent's advertising literature, purport to be descriptive of respondent's product and its effectiveness in use. In all of its advertising literature, respondent represents, through the statements and representations hereinabove set out and other statements of similar import and effect that its tooth paste erases or removes stain and tartar; that it will whiten teeth several shades in a few days; that it cleans teeth down to the white enamel without injury; that it almost instantly kills millions of germs which cause most tooth and gum troubles; that it keeps the teeth and mouth thoroughly clean and healthy on account of its germicidal and antiseptic properties; that it gives dull, dingy teeth sparkling whiteness; that said tooth paste will remove or conquer bacterial mouth; and that it accomplishes results which other tooth pastes cannot accomplish.

PAR. 4. The representations made by the respondent, as above set out, with respect to the effect, when used, of its said product, are grossly exaggerated, false, misleading and untrue. The truth and facts are that said tooth paste does not have any of the qualities, nor achieve any of the results thus represented and claimed. Respondent's tooth paste will not erase or remove all stain and tartar and it will not, in all cases, clean teeth to the natural white enamel without injury. It does not almost instantly kill millions of germs which are the cause of most tooth and gum troubles and it does not keep teeth and mouth thoroughly clean and healthy on account of germicidal and antiseptic properties or on any other account. Its use does not render all dull and dingy teeth sparkling white. Respondent's tooth paste does not accomplish results that cannot be accomplished by use of other tooth pastes.

PAR. 5. There are among respondent's competitors many who distribute and sell tooth pastes or dentifrices, or similar preparations, who do not in any way misrepresent the effectiveness of their respective products.

PAR. 6. Each and all of the false and misleading statements and representations made by the respondent as to the effectiveness of its said product, as hereinabove set out, in its advertising, in the course of distributing its products, were and are calculated to, and had, and now have a tendency and capacity to mislead and deceive a substantial portion of the purchasing public into the erroneous belief that all of said representations are true, and that the results claimed by the respondent will be obtained by the purchasers thereof upon the use of said products. Further, as a true consequence of the mistaken and erroneous beliefs induced by the acts, advertisements and representations of respondent, as hereinabove set out, a substantial number of the consuming public has purchased a substantial volume of respondent's product with the result that trade has been unfairly diverted to the respondent from individuals, firms, and corporations likewise engaged in the business of distributing and selling similar products, who truthfully advertise their respective products and their respective effectiveness in use. As a result thereof, substantial injury has been and is now being done by respondent to competition in commerce among and between the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 7. The above and foregoing acts, practices and representations of the respondent have been, and are, all to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors as aforesaid, and have been, and are, unfair methods of competition within the meaning and intent of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission on the 11th day of March 1937, issued and served its complaint in this proceeding upon said respondent, Kolynos Company, charging it with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of the provisions of said act. Thereafter on May 19, 1937, a stipulation was entered into whereby it was stipulated and agreed that a statement of facts signed and executed by the respondent and W. T. Kelley, Chief Counsel for the Federal Trade Commission, subject to the approval of the Commission, may be taken as the facts in this proceeding and in lieu of testimony in support of the charges stated in the complaint, or in opposition thereto, and that the said Commission may proceed upon said statement of facts to make its report, stating its findings as to the facts and its conclusion based thereon and enter its order disposing of the proceeding without the presentation of argument or the filing of briefs. Thereafter this proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on said complaint and stipulation, said stipulation having been approved and accepted, and the Commission having duly considered the same and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public and makes its finding as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent Kolynos Company is a corporation duly organized and existing under the laws of the State of Connecticut, with its office and principal place of business in the city of New Haven, Conn. Respondent is now and for some time has been engaged in the business of selling and distributing in interstate commerce a tooth paste or dentifrice known as "Kolynos."

PAR. 2. Respondent, being engaged in business as aforesaid, causes said preparation, when sold, to be transported from its place of business in the State of Connecticut to the purchasers thereof located at various points in States of the United States other than the State from which shipments are made. Respondent now maintains a constant current of trade in commerce in said product distributed and sold by it between and among the various States of the United States.

PAR. 3. Respondent is now and has been, in the course and conduct of its said business, in substantial competition with other corporations and with firms and individuals likewise engaged in the business of distributing and selling tooth pastes or dentifrices in commerce among and between the various States of the United States.

PAR. 4. Respondent, in the course and conduct of its business in said commerce, for the purpose of inducing the purchase of its said product, Kolynos tooth paste, caused advertisements to be placed in newspapers having a general circulation in the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia. These advertisements contained statements concerning the ingredients in and the efficacy of the product, Kolynos tooth paste, in the care, preservation, and treatment of the teeth and gums.

Prior to October 2, 1933, at which time respondent executed a stipulation with the Commission wherein it agreed to discontinue certain practices, the following statements were made in said advertisements:

Teeth whiten 3 shades in 3 days when you remove Bacterial-Mouth.
Within 3 days teeth will look whiter—fully 3 shades.

Germs sweep into the mouth with every breath and attack tooth and gum. They cause the condition known as Bacterial-Mouth but Kolynos quickly conquers this foe * * *.

It cleans and polishes teeth down to the naked white enamel without injury.
Erases stain and tartar.

None of the statements above set out have been so used since the date of the execution of said stipulation, except for such of said statements as were in outstanding advertising copy on that date, and none have been used at all since January 1, 1934, except a statement which was inadvertently included in certain advertisements placed in newspapers circulated in the State of Alabama, to the effect that the product, Kolynos tooth paste, would remove tartar from the teeth. Upon discovery of the inclusion of such statement in said advertisements, the respondent, by letter dated February 10, 1937, and prior to the issuance of the complaint herein, ordered said statement removed from such advertisements.

PAR. 5. Subsequent to January 1, 1934, and up to date of the issuance of the complaint herein, March 11, 1937, respondent in said newspaper advertisements made in substance the following statements concerning the efficacy of the product, Kolynos tooth paste, in the care, preservation, and treatment of the teeth and gums: that "Kolynos gives teeth a double-cleansing you can't get with ordinary tooth paste"; that "Kolynos does what ordinary tooth pastes can't do"; that "This modern antiseptic dental cream contains properties not found in ordinary pastes and powders"; that by the use of Kolynos teeth are cleaned down to the natural "white" enamel; that the use of Kolynos gives teeth "sparkling whiteness"; that its use restores to teeth "their natural whiteness"; that Kolynos kills germs that are the known cause of "most gum troubles"; that "Kolynos is new—and totally different"; that using Kolynos makes "your teeth look shades lighter," "gleam like pearls" and "look shades lighter almost at once"; that Kolynos contains important ingredients, "exceptional to Kolynos," which kill germs; that Kolynos is "the approved" tooth paste and is "the" antiseptic dental cream and that dentists "throughout the world recommend Kolynos because of its ability to remove * * tartar," and that other "essential ingredients" found in Kolynos remove tartar.

PAR. 6. The use of Kolynos tooth paste will not whiten teeth "3 shades within 3 days." Kolynos does not "conquer the condition known as bacterial-mouth caused by germs which sweep into the mouth with every breath and attack tooth and gum." It does not "clean and polish teeth down to the naked white enamel without injury." It does not "erase or remove tartar"; nor does it "erase or remove stains" other than superficial stains. It does not give teeth a "double cleansing" not obtainable from ordinary tooth paste. Its use does not give teeth which are naturally discolored "sparkling whiteness" nor "restores" to such teeth their natural whiteness. It does not kill germs that are "the known cause of most gum trouble." Kolynos is not "new" nor is it "totally" different from other tooth pastes. Its use will not make teeth "look shades lighter almost at once" nor will it make teeth "gleam like pearls." It does not contain important ingredients "exceptional to Kolynos" which kill germs. It is not "the approved" tooth paste or "the" antiseptic dental cream in the sense that it has been approved or recommended by dentists or the purchasing public to the exclusion of other tooth pastes.

PAR. 7. Among the competitors of the respondent above mentioned are many who do not in any manner misrepresent the ingredients in or the efficacy of their products in selling and distributing the same in said commerce and as a result of respondent's said false and misleading representations a substantial number of the consuming public has purchased a substantial volume of respondent's preparations and so unfairly diverted a substantial volume of trade and business to respondent which would otherwise have gone to competitors who have not used such unfair methods.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondent, Kolynos Company, are to the prejudice of the public and of respondents' competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce, within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

This proceeding having been heard by the Federal Trade Commission upon the complaint of the Commission and the stipulation as to the facts filed herein on May 19, 1937, whereby respondent admits all the material allegations of the complaint to be true, and waives all other intervening procedure, and the Commission having made its findings as to the facts and its conclusion that said respondent has violated the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

It is ordered, That the respondent, Kolynos Company, its officers, representatives, agents and employees, in connection with the offering for sale, sale, and distribution of Kolynos toothpaste in interstate commerce or in the District of Columbia, do forthwith cease and desist from directly or indirectly representing:

1. That Kolynos toothpaste conquers or removes bacterial mouth allegedly caused by germs which sweep into the mouth with every breath, and attack tooth and gum.

2. That Kolynos toothpaste kills germs that are allegedly the cause of most gum troubles, or that it contains ingredients exceptional to Kolynos that kill germs.

3. That Kolynos toothpaste cleans and polishes teeth down to the naked white enamel without injury.

4. That Kolynos toothpaste erases and removes tartar, or erases and removes stains other than superficial stains.

5. That Kolynos toothpaste restores all teeth to sparkling whiteness, or natural whiteness, or makes teeth shades lighter almost at once, or makes teeth gleam like pearls.

6. That Kolynos toothpaste gives teeth a double-cleansing that can't be obtained with ordinary or other toothpastes or dentifrices.

7. That Kolynos toothpaste does for the teeth and gums what ordinary or other toothpastes or dentifrices cannot do.

8. That Kolynos toothpaste is new, or totally different from other toothpastes or dentifrices.

9. That Kolynos toothpaste is "the approval" toothpaste or "the" antiseptic dental cream, in the sense of having been approved or recommended by dentists or the purchasing public to the exclusion of other toothpastes and dentifrices; or from making any other representations of similar meaning, import and effect.

It is further ordered, That the respondent shall, within 60 days after service upon it of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which it has complied with this order.

Docket 2404. Complaint, May 22, 1935—Decision, June 8, 1937

Where a corporation engaged in rectifying and bottling, at its rectifying plant and under rectifier's permit, whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages, and in producing gin with still used therefor by redistillation of purchased alcohol, not produced by it, over juniper berries and other aromatics, and in selling its aforesaid various products to wholesalers and distributors in various States other than State of origin and in District of Columbia, in substantial competition with those engaged in manufacture by true distillation of whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages from mash, wort, or wash, and in sale thereof in trade and commerce among the various States and in the District of Columbia, and with those engaged in purchasing, rectifying, blending, and bottling such various beverages in rectifying plants and under rectifiers' permits, and in similarly selling same, and including among its said competitors those who, as manufacturers and distillers by original and continuous distillation of mash, wort, or wash through closed pipes and vessels until manufacture is complete, of whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages sold by them, truthfully use words "distillery," "distilleries," "distilling," or "distillers" as a part of their corporate or trade names and on their stationery and advertising and on the labels of the bottles in which they sell and ship their said products, and those who, engaged in purchasing, rectifying, blending, and bottling such various products in their respective rectifying plants and under their rectifiers' permits, do not use aforesaid words as above set forth—

Represented, through use of word "Distilleries" in its corporate name, printed on its stationery and catalogs and on the labels attached to the bottles in which it sold and shipped its said products, and in various other ways, to its customers, and furnished them with the means of representing to their vendees, both retailers and consuming public, that it was a distiller, and that the said whiskies, gins, cordials, brandies, and other alcoholic beverages contained in such bottles were by it made through process of distillation from mash, wort, or wash, notwithstanding fact it did not own, operate, or control any place or places where such beverages are made by process of original and continuous distillation from mash, wort, or wash, as long definitely understood from word "Distilleries" when used in connection with liquor industry and products thereof, by trade and ultimate purchasing public, as meaning place where spirituous liquors are made by original and continuous distillation from mash, wort, or wash, through continuous closed pipes and vessels until manufacture is complete, and was not a distiller, requirements of which, in the way of bond, plant, etc., are more exacting and extensive than in case of rectifier, and for the

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent is a corporation organized, existing and doing business under the laws of the State of New York, with its office and principal place of business in the city of Brooklyn in said State. It is now, and since October 1934 has been, engaged in the business of manufacturing and bottling whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages in a rectifying plant under a rectifier's permit and in the sale thereof in constant course of trade and commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia. In the course and conduct of its said business it causes its said products when sold to be transported from its place of business aforesaid into and through various States of the United States to the purchasers thereof, consisting of wholesalers and distributors, some located within the State of New York and some located in other States of the United States and the District of Columbia. In the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid, respondent is now, and since October 1934 has been, in substantial competition with other corporations and with individuals, partnerships, and firms engaged in the manufacture by true distillation of whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages from mash, wort, or wash and in the sale thereof in trade and commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia; and in the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid respondent is, and since October 1934 has been, in substantial competition with other corporations and with individuals, firms, and partnerships engaged in the business of purchasing, rectifying, blending, and bottling whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages in rectifying plants under rectifiers' permits and in the sale thereof in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 2. Upon the premises of respondent's place of business aforesaid, there is a still for use in the production of gins by a process of rectification whereby alcohol, purchased but not produced by respondent, is re-distilled over juniper berries and other aromatics. Such rectification of alcoholic spirits does not make or constitute respondent a distillery or a distiller, as defined by Section 3247 of the Revised Statutes regulating Internal Revenue, nor as commonly understood by the public and the liquor industry. For a long period of time the word "distillery" when used in connection with the liquor industry and with the products thereof has had and still has a definite significance and meaning to the minds of wholesalers and retailers in such industry and to the ultimate purchasing public, to wit, a place where such alcoholic liquors are manufactured by an original and continuous distillation from mash, wort, or wash, through continuous closed pipes and vessels until the manufacture thereof is complete, and a substantial portion of the purchasing public prefers to buy spirituous liquors bottled and prepared by the actual distillers and manufacturers thereof.

PAR. 3. In the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid, by the use of the word "Distilleries" in its corporate name printed on its stationery and on the labels attached to the bottles in which it sells and ships its said products, and in various other ways, respondent represents to its customers and furnishes them with the means of representing to their vendees, both retailers and the ultimate consuming public, that the said whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages therein contained were by it manufactured through the process of distillation from mash, wort, or wash, when as a matter of fact respondent is not a distiller, does not distill the said whiskies, gins and other spirituous beverages by it so bottled, labeled, sold, and transported, and merely by the use of a still operated by it as aforesaid in the rectification of alcoholic spirits by re-distillation over juniper berries and other aromatics, does not distill the whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages by it so bottled, labeled, sold, and transported in the sense in which the word "distilled" is commonly accepted and understood by those engaged in the liquor trade and the public. Respondent does not own, operate or control any place or places where such alcoholic beverages are manufactured by a process of original and continuous distillation from mash, wort, or wash.

PAR. 4. There are among the competitors of respondent engaged in the sale of spirituous beverages as mentioned in paragraph 1 hereof corporations, firms, partnerships and individuals who manufacture and distill from mash, wort, or wash whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages sold by them and who truthfully use the words "distillery," "distilleries," "distillers," or "distilling" as a part of their corporate or trade names and on their stationery, advertising and on the labels of the bottles in which they sell and ship such products. There are also among such competitors corporations, firms, partnerships, and individuals engaged in the business of purchasing, rectifying, blending and bottling whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages in rectifying plants under rectifiers' permits who do not use the words "distillery," "distilleries," "distilling," or "distillers" as a part of their corporate or trade names, nor on their stationery, advertising nor on the labels attached to the bottles in which they sell and ship their said products.

PAR. 5. The representation by respondent, as set forth in paragraph 3 hereof, is calculated to and has a capacity and tendency to and does mislead and deceive dealers and the purchasing public into the belief that the whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages sold by the respondent are manufactured and distilled by it from mash, wort, or wash by one continuous process and is calculated to and has the capacity and tendency to and does induce dealers and the purchasing public, acting in such belief, to purchase the whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages rectified and bottled by the respondent, thereby diverting trade to respondent from its competitors who do not by their corporate or trade name or in any other manner misrepresent that they are manufacturers by distillation from mash, wort, or wash of whiskies, gins or other spirituous beverages, and thereby respondent does substantial injury to substantial competition in interstate commerce.

PAR. 6. The acts and things above alleged to have been done and the false representations alleged to have been made by respondent are to the prejudice of the public and the competitors of respondent and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress entitled, "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914.

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent is a corporation organized, existing and doing business under the laws of the State of New York, with its office and principal place of business in the city of Brooklyn in said State. It is now, and since October 1934 has been, engaged in the business of manufacturing and bottling whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages in a rectifying plant under a rectifier's permit and in the sale thereof in constant course of trade and commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia. In the course and conduct of its said business it causes its said products when sold to be transported from its place of business aforesaid into and through various States of the United States to the purchasers thereof, consisting of wholesalers and distributors, some located within the State of New York and some located in other States of the United States and the District of Columbia. In the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid, respondent is now, and since October 1934 has been, in substantial competition with other corporations and with individuals, partnerships, and firms engaged in the manufacture by true distillation of whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages from mash, wort, or wash and in the sale thereof in trade and commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia; and in the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid respondent is, and since October 1934 has been, in substantial competition with other corporations and with individuals, firms, and partnerships engaged in the business of purchasing, rectifying, blending, and bottling whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages in rectifying plants under rectifiers' permits and in the sale thereof in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PARS. 2, 3, 4 and 5. As grounds for these paragraphs of this complaint, the Federal Trade Commission relies upon the matters and things set out in paragraphs 2, 3, 4, and 5 of count 1 of this complaint to the same extent as though the several allegations thereof were set out at length and in separate paragraphs herein, and the said paragraphs 2, 3, 4, and 5 of count 1 of this complaint are incorporated herein by reference and adopted as the allegations of paragraphs 2, 3, 4, and 5, respectively, of this count, and are hereby charged as fully and as completely as though the several averments of the said paragraphs of count 1 were separately set out and repeated verbatim.

PAR. 6. Under and pursuant to Title I of the National Industrial Recovery Act, approved June 16, 1933 (48 Stat. 195 C. 90), the President of the United States, by Executive Order No. 6182, of June 26, 1933, as supplemented by Executive Order No. 6207, of July 21, 1933, and Executive Order No. 6345, of October 20, 1933, delegated to H. A. Wallace as Secretary of Agriculture certain of the powers vested in the President of the United States by the aforesaid act.

Under and pursuant to the delegation of such powers, the said Secretary of Agriculture pursuant to Section 3 (d) of the Act and Executive orders under the act, upon his own motion presented a Code of Fair Competition for the Distilled Spirits Rectifying Industry after due notice and opportunity for hearing in connection therewith had been afforded interested parties, including respondent, in accordance with Title I of the National Industrial Recovery Act and applicable regulations issued thereunder, to the President of the United States who approved the same on the 9th day of December, 1933, thereby constituting the said code a Code of Fair Competition within the meaning of the said National Industrial Recovery Act, for the regulation of the aforesaid industry.

In his written report to the President, the said Secretary of Agriculture made, among others, the following findings with respect to the said Code in the following words, to wit:

That said Code will tend to effectuate the declared policy of Title I of the National Industrial Recovery Act as set forth in Section 1 of said Act in that the terms and provisions of such Code tend: (a) to remove obstructions to the free flow of foreign commerce, which tend to diminish the amount thereof; (b) to provide for the general welfare by promoting the organization of industry for the purposes of cooperative action among trade groups; (c) to eliminate unfair competitive practices; (d) to promote the fullest possible utilization of the present productive capacity of industries; (e) to avoid undue restriction of production (except as may be temporarily required); (f) to increase the consumption of industrial and agricultural products by increasing purchasing power; and (g) otherwise to rehabilitate industry.

By his approval of the said Code on December 9, 1933, the President of the United States, pursuant to the authority vested in him by Title I of the National Industrial Recovery Act aforesaid, made and issued his certain written Executive order, wherein he adopted and approved the report, recommendations and findings of the said Secretary of Agriculture, and ordered that the said Code of Fair Competition be, and the same thereby was approved, and by virtue of the National Industrial Recovery Act aforesaid, the following provision of Article V of said Code became and still is one of the standards of fair competition for the Distilled Spirits Rectifying Industry and is binding upon every member of said Industry and this respondent:

The following practices constitute unfair methods of competition and shall not be engaged in by any member of the industry:

SECTION 1. False Advertising.—To publish or disseminate in any manner any false advertisement of any rectified product. Any advertisement shall be deemed to be false if it is untrue in any particular, or if directly or by ambiguity, omission or inference it tends to create a misleading impression.

PAR. 7. The use by respondent of the word "Distilleries" in its corporate name, printed on its stationery and on the labels attached to the bottles in which it sells and ships such products and in various other ways, constitutes false advertising within the meaning of the aforesaid provision of said Article V and tends to and does create the misleading impression that respondent is engaged in the business of distilling whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages from mash, wort, or wash and that the whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages by it so sold and transported have been bottled by the original distillers thereof and have been produced by a true process of distillation from mash, wort, or wash, all contrary to the provisions of Section 1, Article V, of the Code aforesaid.

PAR. 8. The above alleged methods, acts and practices of the respondent are and have been in violation of the standard of fair competition for the Distilled Spirits Rectifying Industry of the United States. Such violation of such standard in the aforesaid transactions in interstate commerce and other transactions which affect interstate commerce in the manner set forth in paragraph 5 of count 1 hereof, are in violation of Section 3 of Title I of the National Industrial Recovery Act and they are unfair methods of competition in commerce within the meaning of the Federal Trade Commission Act as amended.

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, on May 22, 1935, issued and on May 23, 1935, served its complaint in this proceeding upon respondent Provincial Distilleries, Ltd., Inc., charging it with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of the provisions of said act. After the issuance of said complaint, and the filing of respondent's answer thereto, testimony and other evidence in support of the allegations of the said complaint were introduced by PGad B. Morehouse and DeWitt T. Puckett, attorneys for the Commission, before John L. Hornor, an examiner of the Commission theretofore duly designated by it, and in opposition to the allegations of the complaint by R. E. Joyce, attorney for the respondent; and said testimony and other evidence were duly recorded and filed in the office of the Commission. Thereafter, the proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on the said complaint, the answer thereto, testimony and other evidence and brief in support of the complaint (no brief in opposition thereto having been filed and no oral argument having been made); and the Commission having duly considered the foregoing and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent is a corporation organized, existing, and doing business under the laws of the State of New York, with its office and principal place of business at the city of Brooklyn in that State. It is now, and since October 1934, has been, engaged in the manufacturing and bottling of whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages in a rectifying plant under a rectifier's permit and in the sale thereof in the constant course of trade and commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia. In the course and conduct of its said business it causes its said products when sold to be transported from its place of business aforesaid into and through various States of the United States to the purchasers thereof, consisting of wholesalers and distributors, located in various States of the United States other than the State of origin of said shipments, and in the District of Columbia. In the course and conduct of its business, as aforesaid, respondent is now, and since October 1934, has been in substantial competition with other corporations and with individuals, partnerships, and firms engaged in the manufacture by true distillation of whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages from mash, wort, or wash, and in the sale thereof in trade and commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia; and in the course and conduct of its business, as aforesaid, respondent is and since October 1934, has been, in substantial competition with other corporations and with individuals, firms, and partnerships, engaged in the business of purchasing, rectifying, blending, and bottling whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages in rectifying plants under rectifiers' permits, and in the sale thereof in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

Respondent's corporation was organized in December 1933, with $50,000 fully paid in capital which was later increased to $200,000, which has since all been paid in. Its plant is located at No. 1027 Forest Street and occupies an entire city block. It is equipped with very large modern equipment. Respondent has its own artesian well and distills all of the water used in its manufacturing. It has a very large warehouse and large stocks of whiskey which it purchases from various distilleries. Up to January 11, 1935, 95% of respondent's business consisted of the rectification of whiskies, and respondent specialized in five brands, namely: Sunny Ridge Straight, Provincial Maryland Straight Rye, City Athletic Club Blended, Provincial Blended, Auld Petrie Blended Scotch Whiskey.

Respondent's production of "Auld Petrie Blended Scotch Whiskey" is under the supervision of a Mr. L. R. Chambers, an official of Southard & Company, Ltd., of London, England, who is chairman of respondent's board of directors, and under an agreement which provides that the said scotch whiskey is to be made under a formula supplied by Southard & Company, and that Mr. Chambers will visit the United States at least once a year to supervise the manufacture and production of this product.

PAR. 2. Upon the premises of respondent there is a still for use in the production of gins by a process of rectification whereby alcohol, purchased, but not produced, by respondent, is redistilled over juniper berries and other aromatics. Such rectification of alcoholic spirits does not make or constitute respondent a distillery or a distiller, as defined by Section 3247 of the Revised Statutes regulating internal revenue. This gin still has a capacity of 2400 gallons, and there is also one registered 75-gallon still for cordials. There are upon said premises three storage tanks, each with a capacity of 2600 gallons, six storage tanks of 1100 gallons and three tanks of 1100 gallons each for bottling, in addition to six 50-gallon tanks for use in the manufacture of cordials. Up to January 11, 1935, no gin had been produced. Production of gin by the above described process began on the 15th day of March 1936, and during June, July, and August, 1936, respondent had produced approximately 6,858 proof gallons of gin, constituting approximately 81% of its total volume by gallons of spirits handled.

"Rectifying" in the distilled spirits rectifying industry means the mixing of whiskies of different ages or types or the mixing of other ingredients with whiskies, but reducing proof of whiskey by adding water is not rectifying. Rectifiers also blend whiskies with neutral spirits (grain alcohol).

Many distillers operate a separate establishment 600 feet or more away from their distillery, known as a rectifying plant, wherein they operate in the same manner as described above, for a rectifier—sometimes exclusively with spirits of their own distillation and sometimes with spirits purchased from other distillers or both. Some distilleries have a tax paid bottling room on the distillery bonded premises wherein their distilled spirits are bottled straight as they come from the still, or in a bonded warehouse after aging, or after reduction of proof. Any rectifying by a distiller, however, must be done in his rectifying plant under his rectifier's permit. On all bottled liquors, whether bottled at the distillery or at any rectifying plant, appear the words "bottled" or "blended" (as the case may be) "by the ----- Company." If the distilled spirits therein contained are bottled by a distiller either in his distillery or spirits of his own distillation bottled in his rectifying plant, the distiller may and does put "distilled and bottled by ----- Company." If, in the distiller's rectifying plant, other spirits have been blended or rectified, he puts on the bottle "blended and bottled by----- Company."

Finally, blown in the bottom of each bottle is a symbol, consisting of a letter followed by a number, identifying the bottler, viz, a "D" for a distillery and "R" for a rectifier, the number following said letter corresponding with the distiller's or rectifier's permit. Thus "R-62" designates this respondent. A distiller who also operates a rectifying plant, having both kinds of permits, may use either symbol depending upon whether the liquor contained in the bottle was produced and bottled under his distiller's or his rectifier's permit. This number is placed on the bottle to identify the bottler. Subsequently to the issuance of the complaint herein, and, on the 6th day of February 1936, pursuant to proper application approved by the requisite governmental authorities, there was issued to respondent by the Federal Alcohol Administration a basic distiller's permit, No. D-700, authorizing it to distill spirituous beverages from mash, wort or wash, but up to the present time respondent has not distilled any spirituous beverages and has not commenced operations under the aforesaid basic permit. Since the issuance of respondent's basic distiller's permit it can and may place the symbol "D-700" on the bottles in which it sells and ships its liquors, but it has not yet done so.

A distiller has a maximum bond of $100,000, and is permitted to have untaxed liquors. The average bond of the rectifier is about $5,000. A distiller must own the fee title to the premises upon which the business is conducted, or have consent from the owner waiving the owner's interest so that the government can have a first lien upon that property for taxes. A distillery is under constant general supervision by storekeeper gaugers who are always there. Absolute supervision is maintained over the bonded warehouse of a distillery and the rectifying plant; the premises are not locked, and general supervision is maintained over the bottling and rectification. The primary distinction is that one storekeeper gauger may take care of several rectifying plants, but at the distillery he is in constant supervision, primarily to supervise the tax payments. A rectifier is not permitted to store spirits in bond. A distiller produces spirits from grain, alcohol, molasses, and fruits, but a rectifier produces no distilled spirits whatever and must obtain them from the producer or from someone holding warehouse certificates. The requirements are considerably more detailed in the case of a distiller than in the case of a rectifier.

A distiller must have a distillery, which must be a complete building, and a warehouse, a separate building; he must have the necessary weighing equipment, grain hopper, cooker, cooking equipment, mash tubs, fermenters, sufficient distilling equipment to take care of his continuous distillation until the spirits are run through the pipe lines into the receiving tanks; and at the warehouse he must have the weighing and testing instruments for checking and many other things. A rectifier is not required to have a separate building. A rectifying plant may consist of a room without a building. He needs no bonded warehouse. If one room, it would have to be divided into three separate rooms by wire mesh partitions. The regulations for the equipment of a rectifier are not so specific as those for a distiller.

Knowledge of these details is not widespread among the retail trade and is very limited among the general public. All whiskies, whether coming from a distillery or rectifier, are generally conceded to be "distilled" products.

It therefore is not possible to determine from the presence of the phrase "blended and bottled by" alone or the phrase "bottled by" alone on the label whether the package was bottled by a rectifier who is a distiller, or by a rectifier who is not a distiller.

This respondent does not now and never has produced or manufactured distilled spirits of any kind from mash or raw materials, although its charter would authorize it so to do. Its rectifier's permit authorizes it to engage in the business of rectifying and blending, and is conditioned upon compliance by respondent with all applicable regulations made pursuant to law, which are or may hereafter be in force.

The rectification of alcoholic spirits by this respondent as aforesaid in the production of its gin, does not make or constitute it a distiller or a distilling company as defined by Sec. 3247 of the Revised Statutes of the United States regulating Internal Revenue.

PAR. 3. The testimony of those having long experience in both the distilled spirits rectifying industry and the distilling industry, established, and the Commission finds that the foregoing rectification of alcoholic spirits by redistillation over juniper berries and other aromatics in the production of gin does not make or constitute this respondent a distilling company in the sense commonly understood by the liquor industry or by the general public. A large number of witnesses who were lay-members of the purchasing public, 22 in number, with few exceptions testified to the effect that from such terms as "distilling" or "distillery" or "distillers" used in the trade or corporate name of a concern handling alcoholic beverages, they understood such concern to be engaged in the initial distilling process of producing spirituous or alcoholic beverages from fermented grain or mash, and that they had a preference for a distillery-bottled package over one bottled by a rectifier.

The Commission finds that for a long period of time the word "distillery" when used in connection with the liquor industry and with the products thereof has had and still has a definite significance and meaning to the minds of wholesalers and retailers in such industry and to the ultimate purchasing public, to wit, the place where spirituous liquors are manufactured by an original and continuous distillation from mash, wort, or wash, through continuous closed pipes and vessels until the manufacture thereof is complete, and a substantial portion of the purchasing public prefers to buy spirituous liquors bottled and prepared by the distillers.

PAR. 4. In the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid, by the use of the word "distilleries" in its corporate name, printed on its stationery, catalogs and on the labels attached to the bottles in which it sells and ships its said products, and in various other ways, respondent represents to its customers and furnishes them with the means of representing to their vendees, both retailers and the ultimate consuming public, that it is a distiller and that the said whiskies, gins, cordials, brandies, and other alcoholic beverages therein contained were by it manufactured through the process of distillation from mash, wort, or wash, when, as a matter of fact, respondent is not a distiller in the sense in which such term is commonly accepted and understood by those engaged in the liquor trade and by the public. Respondent does not own, operate, or control any place or places where spirituous beverages are manufactured by a process of original and continuous distillation from mash, wort, or wash, and therefore cannot truthfully designate itself as "Provincial Distillers."

PAR. 5. There are, among the competitors of respondent, engaged in the sale of spirituous beverages as mentioned in Paragraph One hereof corporations, firms, partnerships, and individuals who manufacture or distill from mash, wort, or wash, whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages sold by them and who truthfully use the word "distillery," "distilleries," "distillers," or "distilling" as a part of their corporate or trade names and on their stationery, advertising and on the labels of the bottles in which they sell and ship such products. There are also, among such competitors, corporations, firms, partnerships, and individuals engaged in the business of purchasing, rectifying, blending, and bottling whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages in rectifying plants under rectifiers' permits who do not use the words "distillery," "distilleries," "distilling," or "distillers" as a part of their corporate or trade name, nor on their stationery, advertising, nor on the labels attached to the bottles in which they sell and ship their said products.

PAR. 6. The record discloses two instances where wholesale customers of respondent purchased liquors from respondent while they were under the impression from the name of respondent that respondent had a distillery in the sense above used, and one of them, a Mr. I. J. Rosbeck of Coughlin & Company testified that the use by respondent of such term in its name had a very definite influence upon the small business which that company had done with the respondent.

The Commission finds that the representations by respondent, as set forth in paragraph 4 hereof, have the capacity and tendency to and do mislead and deceive dealers and the purchasing public into the beliefs that respondent is a distiller or distilling company in the ordinarily accepted sense of those terms, and that the whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages sold by respondent are manufactured or distilled by it from mash, wort, or wash by one continuous process and have the capacity and tendency to and do induce dealers and the purchasing public acting in such beliefs, to purchase the whiskies, gins, and other alcoholic beverages rectified and bottled by the respondent. The Commission finds that the whole situation in this industry is such that the foregoing representations have a distinct tendency to give respondent what amounts to unfair competitive advantage over those of its competitors who do not, by the use of such terms in their trade or corporate names, represent that the package of alcoholic liquor offered to the retailer and in turn to the consumer, is a distillery bottled package and this in turn tends to divert trade to respondent from such competitors and thereby respondent does substantial injury to competition in interstate commerce.

PAR. 7. Because of existing regulations promulgated under the Federal Alcohol Administration Act approved August 29, 1935 (49 Stat. 977), providing that rectifiers who redistill purchased alcohol over juniper berries and other aromatics may label such resulting product "Distilled Gin," and requiring that the labels state who distilled it, the Commission has excepted gins produced by respondent by redistillation of alcohol over juniper berries and other aromatics from the prohibitions of its order.

PAR. 8. The Commission's complaint in this case was issued prior to the decision of the United States Supreme Court in the case of A. L. A. Schechter Poultry Corporation, et al. vs. United States (295 U. S. 495), and contained two counts. Count one specifically charged a violation of the Federal Trade Commission Act, and count two charged that the practices of respondent, as hereinbefore set out, were unfair methods within the meaning of the Federal Trade Commission Act because they were in violation of Section 3 of Title I of the National Industrial Recovery Act, which was invalidated by the aforesaid decision. For that reason the Commission is dismissing the complaint as to count two thereof.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondent Provincial Distilleries, Ltd., Inc., are to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce, within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

It is ordered, That the respondent, Provincial Distilleries, Ltd., Inc., its officers, representatives, agents, and employees, in connection with the offering for sale or sale and distribution by it in interstate commerce or in the District of Columbia of whiskies, gins, or other spirituous beverages (except gins produced by it through a process of rectification whereby alcohol purchased but not produced by respondent is redistilled over juniper berries and other aromatics) do cease and desist from:

Representing, through the use of the word "distilleries" in its corporate name, on its stationery, advertising or on the labels attached to the bottles in which it sells and ships said products, or in any other way by word, or words of like import, (a) that it is a distiller of whiskies, gins, or other spirituous beverages; or (b) that the said whiskies, gins, or other spirituous beverages were by it manufactured through the process of distillation; or (c) that it owns, operates, or controls a place or places where any such products are by it manufactured by a process of original and continuous distillation from mash, wort, or wash, through continuous closed pipes and vessels until the manufacture thereof is completed, unless and until respondent shall actually own, operate, or control such a place or places.

It is further ordered, That the said complaint be, and the same hereby is dismissed as to count 2 thereof.

It is further ordered, That the said respondent within 60 days from and after the date of the service upon it of this order, shall file with the Commission a report or reports in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which it is complying and has complied with the order to cease and desist hereinabove set forth.

COMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 26, 1914, AND OF SEC. 2 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED OCT. 15, 1914

Docket 2650. Complaint, Dec. 10, 1935—Decision, June 8, 1937

Where five corporations and an individual engaged in the manufacture and sale of more than ninety percent of the total volume of new butter tubs sold in interstate commerce in the United States, and, prior to acts and practices hereinafter set forth, in active competition with one another in sale of said products in commerce among the several States—

- (a) Entered into a combination and conspiracy to restrict, restrain and suppress competition in interstate sale of said products by fixing and maintaining, pursuant to agreements and understandings, expressed or implied, uniform prices, terms, and discounts at which said tubs were to be sold to creameries and other customers located throughout the several States, and to enforce and maintain said fixed prices, terms, and discounts by exchanging, through their council, information as to prices, etc., at which they were selling and offering their said products; and in pursuance of said combination, etc., and incident thereto, and as a means of carrying out the same
- (1) Jointly or cooperatively fixed, adopted, and quoted uniform prices, terms, and discounts at which such tubs were to be sold, as above set forth, throughout the States, and thus enforced and maintained said fixed prices, etc., by exchanging information through said council as to prices, etc., at which they were selling and offering to sell butter tubs, as hereinabove stated;
- (2) Jointly or cooperatively exchanged with each other, directly or through the medium of their said council, future sales price information, including future prices in advance of the actual adoption, quotation or effective date thereof, and reports as to sales of butter tubs, together with prices, discounts, and terms at which sold or offered in interstate commerce;
- (3) Jointly or cooperatively adopted special lists of preferred customers to whom extra discounts on butter tubs were to be allowed, and thus exchanged with one another, directly or through their said council, future sales price information as aforesaid, including lists of preferred customers, jobbers or brokers; and
- (4) Jointly or cooperatively discriminated against a cooperative association which served some 400 to 450 customer creamery members and some 800 to 1,000 non members by purchase and sale in large quantities of various items of equipment and supplies used by creameries, did an annual business of about $1,500,000, published a catalog listing 1,200 items, including butter tubs, and performed the usual services rendered by jobbers and which, except as below noted, received usual jobber's commissions on all items handled by it, by withholding therefrom the usual and customary jobber's discount on sales of butter tubs made by it; and

Where said council, organized as hereinabove set forth—

(b) Cooperated with said corporate manufacturers and said individual manufacturer in enforcement and maintenance of aforesaid agreements, through acting as clearing house for exchange of information submitted by them, including reports as to prices, discounts and terms at which butter tubs were being sold or offered in interstate commerce;

With result of substantially lessening, restricting, restraining, and suppressing competition in sale of butter tubs throughout the several states and, more particularly, in prices quoted and discounts allowed, and with tendency to enhance prices of such tubs above those heretofore prevailing and which would prevail under normal and open competition:

Held, That such acts and practices were to the prejudice of the public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition.

COMPLAINT

I

PARAGRAPH 1. Said corporate respondent, Menasha Wooden Ware Corporation, is a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Wisconsin in 1926, with its principal office located in the city of Menasha within said State. Said corporate respondent since the date of its organization has been, and now is, engaged in the manufacture of butter tubs from ash and spruce lumber which it sells to jobbers and also creameries located in States other than the State of Wisconsin, causing said tubs, when sold, to be transported from the place of manufacture within said State of Wisconsin to the purchasers thereof located in States other than the State of Wisconsin. Said corporate respondent is the largest manufacturer and distributor of butter tubs in the United States and as such occupies a dominant position in the butter tub industry.

Said corporate respondent is now, and has been since September 1932, a member of said respondent association, Butter Tub Manufacturers Council, and has been represented at the meetings of said council.

PAR. 2. Said corporate respondent, Creamery Package Manufacturing Company, is a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Illinois in 1887, with its principal office and place of business located at 1243 West Washington Boulevard, in the city of Chicago within said State. Said corporate respondent has been for more than ten years last past, and is now, engaged in the manufacture of butter tubs from ash and spruce lumber which it sells to jobbers and creameries located in States other than the State of Illinois, causing said tubs, when sold, to be transported from the place of manufacture within said State of Illinois to the purchasers thereof located in States other than the State of Illinois.

Said corporate respondent is now, and has been since September 1932, a member of said respondent association, Butter Tub Manufacturers Council, and has been represented at the meetings of said council.

PAR. 3. Said corporate respondent, Elgin Butter Tub Company, is a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Illinois, with its principal office and place of business located in the city of Elgin within said State. Said corporate respondent, since the date of its organization, has been, and now is, engaged in the manufacture of butter tubs from ash and spruce lumber which it sells to jobbers and creameries located in States other than the State of Illinois, causing said tubs, when sold, to be transported from the place of manufacture within said State of Illinois to the purchasers thereof located in States other than the State of Illinois.

Said corporate respondent is now, and has been since September, 1932, a member of said respondent association, Butter Tub Manufacturers Council, and has been represented at the meetings of said council.

PAR. 4. Said corporate respondent, Wisconsin Butter Tub Company, is a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Wisconsin, with its principal office and place of business located in the city of Marshfield within said State. Said corporate respondent, since the date of its organization, has been, and now is, engaged in the manufacture of butter tubs from ash and spruce lumber which it sells to jobbers and creameries located in States other than the State of Wisconsin, causing said tubs, when sold, to be transported from the place of manufacture within said State of Wisconsin to the purchasers thereof located in States other than the State of Wisconsin.

Said corporate respondent is now, and has been since September, 1932, a member of said respondent association, Butter Tub Manufacturers Council, and has been represented at the meetings of said council.

PAR. 5. Said corporate respondent, Bousfield Wooden Ware Company, is a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Minnesota, with its principal office and place of business located at 2524 Marshall Avenue, Northeast in the city of Minneapolis, within said State. Said corporate respondent, since the date of its organization, has been, and now is, engaged in the manufacture of butter tubs from ash and spruce lumber which it sells to jobbers and creameries located in States other than the State of Minnesota, causing said tubs, when sold, to be transported from the place of manufacture within said State of Minnesota to the purchasers thereof located in States other than the State of Minnesota.

Said corporate respondent is now, and has been since September, 1932, a member of said respondent association, Butter Tub Manufacturers Council, and has been represented at the meetings of said council.

PAR. 6. Said corporate respondent, Storey City Butter Tub Company, is a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Iowa, with its principal office and place of business located at Storey City within said State. Said corporate respondent, since the time of its organization, has been, and now is, engaged in the manufacture of butter tubs from ash and spruce lumber which it sells to jobbers and creameries located in States other than the State of Iowa, causing said tubs, when sold, to be transported from the place of manufacture within said State of Iowa to the purchasers thereof located in States other than the State of Iowa.

Said corporate respondent is now, and has been since September, 1932, a member of said respondent association, Butter Tub Manufacturers Council, and has been represented at the meetings of said council.

PAR. 7. Said corporate respondents, acting in cooperation with each other and through and in cooperation with said respondent association and said individual respondent, for more than one year last past, and particularly since September 1932, have entered into an understanding, agreement, combination or conspiracy among themselves and with and through said respondent association and said individual respondent to restrict, restrain and suppress competition in the sale and distribution of butter tubs to jobber customers and to creamery customers located throughout the several States of the United States, as aforesaid, by agreeing to fix uniform prices, terms, and discounts at which said butter tubs are to be sold and by cooperating with each other in the enforcement and maintenance of said fixed prices, terms, and discounts by exchanging information through said respondent association as to prices, terms, and discount at which said corporate respondents have sold, and are offering to sell, said butter tubs to said jobber customers and to said creamery customers.

PAR. 8. Said corporate respondents, in furtherance of their aforesaid understanding, agreement, combination, or conspiracy, in September, 1932, organized said respondent association, Butter Tub Manufacturers Council. Said respondent association, the aforesaid Butter Tub Manufacturers Council, is a voluntary, unincorporated association composed of butter tub manufacturers located throughout the several States of the United States and has as its principal members said corporate respondents named herein, which said corporate respondents manufacture and sell more than 90 percent of the total volume of butter tubs sold in interstate commerce in the United States. Said respondent association was organized in the city of Milwaukee within the State of Wisconsin and, since its organization, has acted as a clearing house for statistical information submitted by said corporate respondents, including daily reports as to the quantity of butter tubs sold, prices, discounts, and terms at which said butter tubs are sold. Since the organization of said respondent association, offices have been maintained at Cleveland, within the State of Ohio, and regular monthly meetings of the members of said respondent association have been, and now are, held in the city of Milwaukee within the State of Wisconsin, and in other convenient places, at which said meetings said corporate respondents discuss trade and competitive conditions in the Butter Tub Industry and agree upon and establish trade policies to be followed by said corporate respondents in the interstate sale and distribution of their butter tubs, and carry out and perform the acts and things hereinbefore alleged in paragraph 7.

PAR. 9. Said individual respondent, D. S. Hunter, is now, and since September 1932, has been, the commissioner of said respondent association and as such commissioner has had, and now has, full and complete charge of the activities of said respondent association, conducting said monthly meetings of said members of said respondent association and collecting said statistical information from the members of said respondent association and compiling and disseminating the same to the said members aforesaid, all in pursuance and furtherance of the object and aims of said respondent association, as hereinbefore set forth in paragraph 8.

PAR. 10. The result of the acts and conduct of the said corporate respondents and the said respondent association and said individual respondent, as set out in paragraphs 7, 8, and 9 herein, has been, and now is, to unduly tend to substantially lessen, restrict and suppress competition in the interstate sale of butter tubs throughout the several States, particularly in the prices quoted and discounts allowed by said corporate respondents, and to enhance the prices of said butter tubs above the prices which had theretofore prevailed and which would prevail under normal, natural and open competition between said corporate respondents; and also to tend to create a monopoly in the said corporate respondents in the manufacture and sale of butter tubs in interstate commerce.

PAR. 11. The foregoing alleged acts and practices of the said corporate, association and individual respondents have been, and still are, to the prejudice of the buying public generally, and customers of said corporate respondents in particular, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, and entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

II

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved October 15, 1914 (The Clayton Act—C. 323, 38 Stat. 730, 731) entitled, "An Act to supplement existing laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes" the Federal Trade Commission having reason to believe that the Menasha Wooden Ware Corporation, Creamery Package Manufacturing Company, Elgin Butter Tub

Company, Wisconsin Butter Tub Company, Bousfield Wooden Ware Company and Storey City Butter Tub Company, herein referred to as corporate respondents, and the Butter Tub Manufacturers Council, herein referred to as the respondent association, and D. S. Hunter, individually and as Commissioner of the Butter Tub Manufacturers Council, herein referred to as individual respondent, have been, and are, violating the provisions of Section 2 of said Act, issues its complaint and states its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. That the several recitals in paragraphs 1 to 6 inclusive and 8 and 9 of count I hereof are hereby charged as fully and completely as though the several paragraphs were repeated verbatim.

PAR. 2. Said corporate respondents, acting in cooperation with each other and in cooperation with and through said respondent association, with the knowledge and consent of said individual respondent, for more than one year last past, and particularly since September 1932, have agreed, combined or conspired among themselves to restrict, restrain and suppress competition in the interstate sale and distribution of butter tubs at wholesale to jobber customers and to creamery customers located throughout the several States of the United States, as aforesaid, by discriminating in price and are now discriminating in price between the different purchasers of their said products by giving and allowing certain favored jobber customers and certain favored creamery customers lower prices than given or allowed other jobber customers and other creamery customers of said products competitively engaged in their respective lines of commerce, and said discriminations in price have not been made, and are not now made, on account of differences in the grade, quantity, or quality of the commodity sold, nor have said discriminations made only due allowance, and they do not now make only due allowance, for a difference in the cost of selling or transportation, nor have said discriminations in price been made in the same or different communities in good faith to meet competition.

PAR. 3. The effect of said discrimination in price made by said corporate respondents, as set forth in paragraph 2 herein, may be to substantially lessen competition in the interstate sale and distribution of butter tubs for use by butter manufacturers; and the effect of said discriminations also may be to tend to create a monopoly in a line of commerce, namely, the interstate sale and distribution of butter tubs, and said discriminations are in violation of Section 2 of an Act of Congress approved October 15, 1914 (The Clayton Act, C. 323, 38 Stat. 730, 731) entitled, "An Act to supplement existing laws against unlawful restraint and monopolies, and for other purposes."

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled, "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, on December 10 and 12, 1935, issued and served its complaint in this proceeding upon the respondents, charging said respondents with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce, in violation of the provisions of said act, and with violation of the provisions of Section 2 of an Act of Congress approved October 15, 1914 (the Clayton Act, C. 323, 38 Stat. 730-31), entitled, "An Act to supplement existing laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes." Thereafter answers were duly filed by said respondents in the office of the Commission on January 31, 1936. After the issuance of said complaint and the filing of respondents' answers thereto, testimony and evidence in support of the allegations of said complaint were introduced by Everett F. Haycraft and Reuben J. Martin, attorneys for the Commission, before William C. Reeves, an examiner of the Commission theretofore duly designated by it, and in defense of the allegations of the complaint by Spencer Gordon and Alan C. Maxwell, attorneys for the respondent; and said testimony and evidence were duly recorded and filed in the office of the Commission. Thereafter the proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on the said complaint, the answers thereto, the testimony and evidence, exceptions to the examiner's findings filed on behalf of the Commission and on behalf of the respondents, and briefs in support of the said exceptions and briefs in support of the complaint and in defense thereto, and the oral arguments of counsel aforesaid; and the Commission having duly considered the same and being fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom.

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. Said corporate respondent Menasha Wooden Ware Corporation is a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Wisconsin in 1926, with its principal office located in the city of Menasha, within said State. Said corporate respondent, since the date of its organization, has been, and now is, engaged in the manufacture from spruce lumber of butter tubs which it sells to jobbers and also to creameries located in States other than the State of Wisconsin, causing said tubs, when sold, to be transported from the place of manufacture within said State of Wisconsin to purchasers thereof located in States other than the State of Wisconsin. Said respondent Menasha Wooden Ware Corporation is the largest manufacturer and distributor of butter tubs in the United States. Said respondent Menasha Wooden Ware Corporation is now, and has been since October 27, 1932, a member of Butter Tub Manufacturers Council, and has been represented at the meetings of said council.

PAR. 2. Respondent The Creamery Package Mfg. Company is a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Illinois in 1887, with its principal office and place of business located at 1243 West Washington Boulevard, in the city of Chicago, within said State. Said corporate respondent has been for more than ten years last past, and now is, engaged in the manufacture, from ash and spruce lumber, of butter tubs, which it sells to jobbers and creameries located in States other than the State of Illinois. Said corporate respondent causes said tubs, when sold, to be transported from the place of manufacture to purchasers thereof located in States other than the State of manufacture. Said respondent The Creamery Package Mfg. Company is now, and has been since October 27, 1932 a member of the respondent association, Butter Tub Manufacturers Council, and has been represented at the meetings of said council.

PAR. 3. Respondent Elgin Butter Tub Company is a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Illinois, with its principal office and place of business located in the city of Elgin, within said State, and since the date of its organization has been, and now is, engaged in the manufacture, from ash and spruce lumber, of butter tubs, which it sells to jobbers and creameries located in States other than the State of Illinois, causing said butter tubs, when sold, to be transported from the place of manufacture within said State of Illinois to the purchasers thereof located in States other than the State of Illinois. Said corporate respondent Elgin Butter Tub Company is now, and has been since October 27, 1932, a member of said respondent association Butter Tub Manufacturers Council, and has been represented at the meetings of said council.

PAR. 4. Respondent Wisconsin Butter Tub Company is a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Wisconsin, with its principal office and place of business located in the city of Marshfield, within said State. Said corporate respondent, since the date of its organization, has been, and now is, engaged in the manufacture of wooden butter tubs, which it sells to jobbers and creameries located in States other than the State of Wisconsin, causing said tubs, when sold, to be transported from the place of manufacture within said State to purchasers thereof located in States other than the State of Wisconsin. Said corporate respondent is now, and has been since October 27, 1932, a member of said respondent association Butter Tub Manufacturers Council, and has been represented at the meetings of said council.

PAR. 5. Respondent Bousfield Wooden Ware Company is a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Minnesota, with its principal place of business formerly at 2524 Marshall Avenue, N. E., in the city of Minneapolis, within said State. Said corporate respondent, from the date of its organization up to July 1935, was engaged in the manufacture, from spruce lumber, of butter tubs, which it sold to jobbers and creameries located in States other than the State of Minnesota, causing said butter tubs, when sold, to be transported from the place of manufacture within the State of Minnesota to purchasers thereof located in States other than the State of Minnesota. Said corporate respondent was from October 27, 1932 to July 29, 1935 a member of the respondent association Butter Tub Manufacturers Council, and during that period was represented at meetings of said council. Said corporate respondent Bousfield Wooden Ware Company, in the month of July 1935, ceased doing business and resigned from the respondent association Butter Tub Manufacturers Council, and since that date has not engaged in the manufacture or sale of butter tubs; it has sold its plant, raw materials, and finished goods, and its only assets are accounts which are now in the process of liquidation.

PAR. 6. Respondent Storey City Butter Tub Company, is the trade name for a business conducted by Bert S. Hill, who maintains his office and place of business at Storey City, Iowa. Said respondent Bert S. Hill, trading as Storey City Butter Tub Company, has been, and now is, engaged in the manufacture, from ash and spruce lumber, of butter tubs, which he sells to jobbers and creameries located in the State of Iowa and States other than the State of Iowa. Said respondent Bert S. Hill, trading as Storey City Butter Tub Company, is now, and has been since January 25, 1934, a member of the respondent association, Butter Tub Manufacturers Council, and has attended most of the meetings of said council since that date.

PAR. 7. In the course and conduct of their respective businesses, the said respondents Menasha Wooden Ware Corporation, The Creamery Package Mfg. Company, Elgin Butter Tub Company, Wisconsin Butter Tub Company, Bousfield Wooden Ware Company, and Bert S. Hill, trading as Storey City Butter Tub Company, were, prior to November 1932, in active competition with each other in the sale of butter tubs in commerce among the several States of the United States. Said respondents manufacture and sell more than 90 percent of the total volume of new butter tubs in interstate commerce in the United States. Butter tubs are made in various styles and sizes of spruce and ash lumber, and are used for containing butter. There are other butter containers, besides tubs of the type manufactured by the respondents, which are used by creameries, among which are fibre boxes, wooden boxes, corrugated fibre boxes, and wire baskets. About 75 percent of the butter tubs produced are sold in the States of Illinois, Iowa, Minnesota, Nebraska, North Dakota, South Dakota, and Wisconsin.

For some time prior to September 1932, competitive conditions in the butter tub industry had been very severe. No standards of quality were maintained in the industry. Some of the manufacturers, in order to meet price competition, were selling seconds. Some of the manufacturers had established branch factories, or plants, in the various dairying centers and quoted delivered prices, whereas previously delivered prices had not been quoted. There was no statistical information as to the total number of tubs sold by the industry available to manufacturers of butter tubs.

PAR. 8. The said respondents Menasha Wooden Ware Corporation, The Creamery Package Mfg. Company, Elgin Butter Tub Company, Wisconsin Butter Tub Company, Bousfield Wooden Ware Company, and Bert S. Hill, trading as Storey City Butter Tub Company, at meetings held in the City of Milwaukee, in the State of Wisconsin, in the month of September 1932, and periodically thereafter, as more particularly hereinafter set forth, entered into a combination and conspiracy to restrict, restrain, and suppress competition in the interstate sale of butter tubs by fixing and maintaining, pursuant to agreements and understandings, expressed or implied, uniform prices, terms, and discounts at which said butter tubs were sold, and are to be sold, to creameries and other customers located throughout the several States of the United States; and to enforce and maintain said fixed prices, terms, and discounts by the exchange of information with each other, through said respondent Butter Tub Manufacturers Council, as to the prices, terms, and discounts at which said respondents have sold, and are offering to sell, said butter tubs in interstate commerce to said creameries and other customers, located as aforesaid. Pursuant to, and in carrying out, said combination or conspiracy, each and all of the said respondent corporations, cooperating together and with and through said respondent Butter Tub Manufacturers Council, have performed the following acts:

(a) At a meeting of representatives of the respondent manufacturers held in Milwaukee in the month of September 1932, a discussion was had with respect to the establishment of zones whereby the respective butter tub manufacturers would quote uniform delivered prices to customers located in the same territory. Representatives of respondents The Creamery Package Mfg. Company and Menasha Wooden Ware Corporation, the two largest manufacturers of butter tubs in the industry, compared and exchanged ideas as to what territory should be included in the respective zones, and in the latter part of the month of September 1932, respondent The Creamery Package Mfg. Company furnished to the other members of the respondent Butter Tub Manufacturers Council, pursuant to their request, a zoning system which was thereupon adopted by each of the other members of said respondent council. On or about October 15, 1932, each of the respondent members, except respondent Elgin Butter Tub Company, which adopted the system in December 1932, issued price lists to the trade embodying said zoning system, said price lists being uniform as to delivered prices in each respective zone.

(b) On October 27, 1932, the said respondent butter tub manufacturers organized the said respondent Butter Tub Manufacturers Council, in the city of Milwaukee, in the State of Wisconsin, which now maintains offices in the city of Cleveland, State of Ohio. Said respondent Butter Tub Manufacturers Council was organized as an unincorporated association, and now has as its member the corporate respondents named herein, with the exception of the Bousfield Wooden Ware Company, which has now retired from business, and Bert S. Hill, trading and doing business as Storey City Butter Tub Company. Since its organization, said respondent Butter Tub Manufacturers Council has received information submitted by its members, and has sent out information and statistics to its members, including daily reports as to the quantity of butter tubs sold, prices, discounts, and terms at which said butter tubs are sold. Since its organization, said respondent Butter Tub Manufacturers Council has held regular monthly meetings of the members, which said meetings are held in the city of Milwaukee, Wis., and in other convenient places, and on the occasion of said meetings, representatives of said corporate respondents discuss trade conditions in the butter tub industry and enter into agreements and understandings as to future prices, terms, and discounts of butter tubs, as aforesaid.

(c) Since its said organization, as hereinbefore set out in paragraph (b), the respondent Butter Tub Manufacturers Council has been in charge of a paid employee known as the "Commissioner," who collects statistical information from the members of said respondent council and compiles and disseminates the same to the members of the said council as hereinafter set forth.

(d) On or about December 15, 1932, said members of respondent council, except respondent Elgin Butter Tub Company, began to submit daily reports to the commissioner of respondent council, in which said reports the said members were required to indicate the zone of origin and zone of destination of all sales and shipments of butter tubs, together with prices at which said tubs were sold; and said commissioner distributed to the members of said council, beginning December 15, 1932, and continuing thereafter, a consolidated daily report of all orders received and releases of contracts showing the net unit prices at which orders were received and the zones of origin and destination of each shipment. These said daily reports of members and of the said commissioner contained, in addition to the information just described, the dates of the orders, the business of the customer, the quantity shipped, the size of tubs, the kind of wood, the kind of hoop, the terms of payment, the conditions of delivery, and the date of contract under which shipments were made. The respondent Elgin Butter Tub Company began to submit said reports to the commissioner on or about June 10, 1933, and has continued to do so since said date.

(e) Effective January 1, 1933, each and every member of respondent council issued price lists to the trade containing uniform delivered prices in the respective zones theretofore adopted by them, which said prices were 2 cents higher than prices previously quoted by them during the year 1932; during the month of December 1932, and particularly on the occasion of meetings of the members of said council, representatives of members of said respondent council had discussed the prices of butter tubs and had agreed that they were being sold too low, and that the prices should be advanced; that subsequent to January 1, 1933, until the next price change, the uniform prices quoted by said members of said respondent council were maintained by them, being reported daily to the said commissioner of said respondent council and reported by him in consolidated form to said members.

(f) Effective April 28, 1933, each and every member of said respondent council issued a price list to the trade containing uniform delivered prices in the respective zones theretofore adopted by them, which prices were 2 cents higher on practically all sizes than the prices quoted by said members of respondent council effective January 1, 1933; that representatives of said members of respondent council, on the occasion of the meeting of said council on April 27, 1933, discussed the matter of increasing prices, expressing the opinion that the prices on tubs were too low, and the respondent Menasha

Wooden Ware Corporation, the largest manufacturer of butter tubs, was looked to as the leader by the other members of said respondent council; that upon the expression by officials of said respondent Menasha Wooden Ware Corporation that they would advance prices, the other members of said respondent council issued on the following day, concurrent with the respondent Menasha Wooden Ware Corporation, new price lists carrying the advance in prices as aforesaid; that subsequent to April 28, 1933, and until the next price change took place, the prices quoted by said members of said respondent council were uniformly maintained, being reported daily to the said commissioner of said council and reported daily by him to the said members in consolidated form as aforesaid.

(g) Effective August 25, 1933, each and every member of said respondent council issued price lists to the trade containing uniform delivered prices in the respective zones theretofore adopted by them, which prices were 2 cents higher than the prices quoted by them on April 27, 1933, as aforesaid; that on the occasion of a meeting of the said respondent council held on August 24, 1933, representatives of members of said respondent council discussed prices of butter tubs; that representatives of the respondent Menasha Wooden Ware Corporation advised the other representatives that it, the Menasha Wooden Ware Corporation, was going to advance its prices, and offered to, and did, furnish a list containing such advances to the other representatives present; that thereafter on the following day uniform prices were issued by said members of respondent council as aforesaid. Subsequent to August 25, 1933, and subsequent to said price change, the prices quoted by said members of respondent council were uniformly maintained by them in the sale of butter tubs, said prices being reported daily to the said commissioner of said respondent council, and reported daily by him to the members of the said respondent council in the consolidated daily form as aforesaid.

(h) Effective February 23, 1934, each and every member of said respondent council issued price lists containing uniform delivered prices in the respective zones theretofore adopted by them, which said prices were 2 cents higher than the prices theretofore quoted by them on August 25, 1933, as aforesaid; that on the occasion of a meeting of the said respondent council on February 22, 1934, butter tub prices were discussed with each other by representatives of the members of said respondent council, on which occasion the representative of the respondent Menasha Wooden Ware Corporation notified the other representatives present that the said Menasha Wooden Ware Corporation would advance its prices on butter tubs, and furnished the representatives of the other members of said respondent council with a copy of the proposed price list; that thereupon the other members of the respondent council issued their uniform delivered price lists effective February 23, 1934. Subsequent to February 23, 1934, and until the next price change took place, the prices of the members of said respondent council were uniformly maintained, were reported daily by them to the said commissioner, and were reported daily by him to the said members in a consolidated report.

(i) Effective September 1, 1935, each and every member of said respondent council issued a price list containing uniform delivered prices in the respective zones theretofore adopted by them, which prices were 2 cents higher than prices theretofore quoted by them in the price lists of February 23, 1934; that on the occasion of a meeting of the respondent council on July 30, 1935, representatives of the members of said respondent council discussed butter tub prices; that on that occasion the representatives of the respondent Menasha Wooden Ware Corporation informed the representatives of the other members of said respondent council that the said respondent Menasha Wooden Ware Corporation would advance its prices on butter tubs 2 cents each on September 1, 1935; that thereafter on August 8, 1935, the respondent The Creamery Package Mfg. Company issued a new price list, replacing its price list of February 23, 1934, and becoming effective September 1, 1935, containing an advance of 2 cents per tub, and that respondent Elgin Butter Tub Company, on August 12, 1935, issued its said price list to the trade, notifying of a similar change of price effective September 1, 1935, and all of the other members of respondent council issued price lists carrying similar changes in price and becoming effective on September 1, 1935.

PAR. 9. Subsequent to September 1, 1935, to the date of taking of testimony in this proceeding, the said delivered prices quoted by members of said respondent council have been uniformly maintained. The said prices have been reported daily by said members to the said commissioner, and reported by him to the said members daily in consolidated form. Since December 1932 with very few minor exceptions, the delivered prices charged by the said members of respondent council for butter tubs of equal quality and size have been uniform when sold to the same class of trade.

PAR. 10. Further pursuant to said combination and conspiracy set forth in paragraph 8 hereof, each and all of the said corporate respondents and Bert S. Hill, trading and doing business as Storey City Butter Tub Company, cooperating together and with and through said respondent Butter Tub Manufacturers Council, have entered into agreements and understandings, expressed or implied, to restrict, restrain, and suppress competition in the interstate sale of butter tubs by adopting preferred lists of customers and by discriminating in price between purchasers of butter tubs and by discriminating in the amount of discount to be allowed jobber customers in the sale of butter tubs in interstate commerce, and pursuant to said agreement and understanding, have performed the following acts:

(a) At the time of the adoption of the said zoning system by the said members of respondent council on or about October 15, 1932, certain large users of butter tubs, consisting principally of packers and centralizers of butter tubs, were granted by the members of said respondent council a discount of 1 cent from the quoted list prices. A confidential list of said preferred buyers was adopted by the members of the said respondent council at the time said zoning system was adopted; said preferred buyers had been, prior to December 1932, accustomed to receive from said manufacturers discounts as great as 3 cents from the recognized retail list prices of the members of said respondent council.

(b) Land O'Lakes Creameries, Inc., is a cooperative association organized under the laws of the State of Minnesota, with its principal place of business at Minneapolis within said State of Minnesota. There is included in the activities of the Land O'Lakes Creameries, Inc., the purchase and sale in large quantities of various items of equipment and supplies used by creameries. These supplies are sold by the Land O'Lakes Creameries, Inc., to member creameries, and also to nonmember creameries. For this purpose it employs two salesmen who devote their entire time to this work, and about twenty other employees of the association devote part of their time to the work. Land O'Lakes Creameries, Inc., has between 1,200 and 1,500 customers, 400 to 450 of which are members, and the rest nonmembers, and it does an annual business of about $1,500,000, with approximately $800,000 to $900,000 of its sales to members. It publishes a catalog which lists approximately 1,200 items handled by it, and included in these articles sold by it are butter tubs. Land O'Lakes Creameries, Inc., performs the usual services rendered by jobbers, and receives the usual jobber's commissions on all items handled by it, with the exception of butter tubs. Land O'Lakes Creameries, Inc., has been supplied with butter tubs by the respondents Menasha Wooden Ware Corporation and Elgin Butter Tub Company, and was supplied with butter tubs by the Bousfield Wooden Ware Company until its liquidation. The Creamery Package Mfg. Company and Wisconsin Butter Tub Company have never sold butter tubs to Land O'Lakes Creameries, Inc. The majority of sales made to Land O'Lakes Creameries, Inc., by Menasha Wooden Ware Corporation and Elgin Butter Tub Company were as a result of the activities of the salesmen of said Menasha Wooden Ware Corporation and said Elgin Butter Tub Company, which salesmen secured the orders direct from the creameries, and then shipped the tubs direct to the creameries and billed Land O'Lakes Creameries, Inc., for the shipment.

(c) Prior to January 1, 1928, Land O'Lakes Creameries, Inc., was allowed the usual jobber's discount on butter tubs, amounting to $1\frac{1}{2}$ cents per tub, by the Menasha Wooden Ware Corporation. Beginning with January 1, 1928, this discount was increased by $\frac{4}{10}$ cent per tub, making a total allowance of $1\frac{9}{10}$ cents per tub, which was received by the Land O'Lakes Creameries, Inc., from Menasha Wooden Ware Corporation. Due to competitive conditions, it was necessary for Land O'Lakes Creameries, Inc., to pass on to its customers out of this discount of $1\frac{9}{10}$ cents per tub the sum of 1 cent per tub, leaving a net discount to Land O'Lakes Creameries, Inc., of $\frac{9}{10}$ cent per tub. On July 1, 1931, Land O'Lakes Creameries, Inc., was requested by Menasha Wooden Ware Corporation, as a temporary arrangement necessitated by competitive conditions existing at that time to reduce its discount to $\frac{9}{10}$ cent per tub, which said request Land O'Lakes Creameries, Inc., granted, and thereupon Land O'Lakes Creameries, Inc., discontinued allowing the discount of 1 cent per tub to its customers. Thereafter repeated efforts on the part of Land O'Lakes Creameries, Inc., to regain the customary and usual jobber's discount of $1\frac{1}{2}$ cents per tub from Menasha Wooden Ware Corporation have met with no success. Land O'Lakes Creameries, Inc., has made request to be allowed the usual jobber's discount of $1\frac{1}{2}$ cents per tub on all sales of butter tubs made by or through it from the Menasha Wooden Ware Corporation, the Wisconsin Butter Tub Company, and the Elgin Butter Tub Company, but the request for the allowance was refused by said respondents, who advised the Land O'Lakes Creameries, Inc., that they could allow a commission of only $\frac{9}{10}$ cent per tub.

(d) In June, 1933, the matter of selling butter tubs to Land O'Lakes Creameries, Inc., as a jobber, and allowing $1\frac{1}{2}$ cents discount, was discussed at a regular meeting of the respondent council, at which time the commissioner of said council, acting as chairman, pointed out that the Land O'Lakes Creameries, Inc., was a collective buying outfit which had to return to its members or stockholders whatever revenue it derived from such method of purchasing, and that this developed an unfair discrepancy as between members and stockholders of Land O'Lakes Creameries, Inc., and independent operators who might be located in the same territory, and that if any such special concession were given to Land O'Lakes Creameries, Inc., in his opinion, the same concession would have to be given to other users.

(e) On August 3, 1934, the attention of said commissioner was called by the attorney for the National Cooperative Milk Producers Federation to the inability of the Land O'Lakes Creameries, Inc., to obtain a jobber's discount from the manufacturers of butter tubs, and a statement was requested as to the position of the respondent council relative to this matter; that on August 7, 1934, the executive secretary of respondent council advised the attorney for the National Cooperative Milk Producers Federation that the matters referred to in his letter of August 3 would be taken up with the manufacturers at the next meeting; that on September 4, 1934, the said commissioner of respondent council notified the attorney for the National Cooperative Milk Producers Federation that the manufacturers who were selling Land O'Lakes Creameries, Inc., stated that for a number of years the competitive situation had been such that it had been necessary for them to solicit the business direct through their own salesmen from the creameries and bill the goods through Land O'Lakes Creameries, Inc., making allowance for credit service, and that, in his opinion, there had not been any discrimination; that the situation seemed to be entirely between Land O'Lakes Creameries, Inc., and the manufacturers, individually, who were soliciting the business; that on September 18, 1934, the said commissioner of said respondent council submitted a copy of the letter of September 4, 1934, just described, to the president of respondent Menasha Wooden Ware Corporation with the statement, "We are attaching hereto copy of a letter sent to Mr. Donald Keene. This is in accord with the minutes of the last butter tub meeting." That representatives of members of the respondent council, upon being solicited by Land O'Lakes Creameries, Inc., to be given a jobber's discount of 1½ cents, declined to do so, although some of them stated that they would be willing to do so provided the respondent Menasha Wooden Ware Corporation would do likewise; that on March 28, 1933, respondent Wisconsin Butter Tub Company advised the Land O'Lakes Creameries, Inc., that it seemed only fair that it should allow the creamery company the same commission as the creameries enjoyed from other butter tub manufacturers, and asked to be advised as to what discount Land O'Lakes Creameries, Inc., was receiving from the butter tub manufacturers from whom it purchased; that on June 29, 1934, the Elgin Butter Tub Company, in a letter to Land O'Lakes Creameries, Inc., stated that it could not see how it would be justified in securing all of the creamery company's business by allowing a larger discount than that which the creameries received from other concerns.

(f) Since July 1, 1931, none of the said respondents Menasha Wooden Ware Corporation, The Creamery Package Mfg. Company, Elgin Butter Tub Company, Wisconsin Butter Tub Company, Bousfield Wooden Ware Company, and Bert S. Hill, trading as Storey City Butter Tub Company, has allowed the usual and customary jobber's discount to Land O'Lakes Creameries, Inc., on sales of butter tubs made by said Land O'Lakes Creameries, Inc., and said respondents Menasha Wooden Ware Corporation, Elgin Butter Tub Company, and Wisconsin Butter Tub Company have refused, and still do refuse to allow said usual jobber's discount to said Land O'Lakes Creameries, Inc.

PAR. 11. The result of the acts and conduct of the said respondent corporations and the said Bert S. Hill, trading as Storey City Butter Tub Company, and the said respondent council, as hereinbefore set out, has been substantially to lessen, restrict, restrain, and suppress competition in the sale of butter tubs throughout the several States, particularly in the prices quoted and the discounts allowed by said respondent corporations and by said respondent Bert S. Hill, trading as Storey City Butter Tub Company; and tends to enhance the prices of said butter tubs above the prices which have heretofore prevailed and which would prevail under normal and open competition.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondents, Menasha Wooden Ware Corporation, The Creamery Package Mfg. Company, Elgin Butter Tub Company, Wisconsin Butter Tub Company, Bousfield Wooden Ware Company, Bert S. Hill, trading as Storey City Butter Tub Company, and Butter Tub Manufacturers Council, are to the prejudice of the public and competitors of the respondents, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled, "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes." There is not sufficient proof submitted in the hearings to sustain the allegations in the complaint charging a violation of Section 2 of an Act of Congress known as the Clayton Act (Act, Oct. 15, 1914, C. 323, 38 St. 731 (Comp. St. sec. 8835 C.)).

25 F. T. C.

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

It is ordered, That the respondents Menasha Wooden Ware Corporation, The Creamery Package Mfg. Company, Elgin Butter Tub Company, Wisconsin Butter Tub Company, Bousfield Wooden Ware Company, and Bert S. Hill, trading and doing business as Storey City Butter Tub Company, their respective officers, representatives, agents, and employees, in connection with the offering for sale, sale, and distribution of butter tubs in interstate commerce or in the District of Columbia, do forthwith cease and desist from entering into combinations, conspiracies, or agreements, express or implied, with each other and by and through said respondent association, Butter Tub Manufacturers Council, to restrict, restrain, and suppress competition in the interstate sale of butter tubs by

(a) Jointly or cooperatively fixing, adopting, and quoting uniform prices, terms, and discounts at which butter tubs are to be sold to creameries and to other customers located throughout the several States of the United States in interstate commerce;

(b) Jointly or cooperatively enforcing and maintaining said fixed prices, terms, and discounts by exchanging information through said Butter Tub Manufacturers Council as to the prices, terms, and discounts at which said respondents have sold, and are offering to sell, butter tubs in interstate commerce to creameries and other customers located throughout the several States of the United States;

(c) Jointly or cooperatively exchanging with each other, directly, or through the medium of said Butter Tub Manufacturers Council, or any other medium, information as to future prices in advance of the actual adoption, quotation, or effective date of said prices;

(d) Jointly or cooperatively adopting special lists of preferred customers to whom extra discounts on butter tubs are to be allowed;

(e) Jointly or cooperatively discriminating against Land O'Lakes Creameries, Inc., or any other purchaser of butter tubs in interstate commerce;

(f) Jointly or cooperatively exchanging with each other, directly or through Butter Tub Manufacturers Council, or any other medium, future sales price information, including lists of preferred customers, jobbers, or brokers, and reports as to the sales of butter tubs, together with prices, discounts, and terms at which said butter tubs are sold, or offered to be sold, in interstate commerce.

It is further ordered, That said Butter Tub Manufacturers Council, its officers, agents, and employees cease and desist from cooperating with said corporate respondents and with Bert S. Hill, trading and doing business as Storey City Butter Tub Company, by acting as a clearing house for the exchange of information submitted by said corporate respondents and by said Bert S. Hill, trading and doing business as Storey City Butter Tub Company, including reports as to prices, discounts, and terms at which said butter tubs are sold, or offered to be sold, in interstate commerce, in the enforcement and maintenance of said agreements aforesaid.

It is further ordered, That the respondents, Menasha Wooden Ware Corporation, The Creamery Package Mfg. Company, Elgin Butter Tub Company, Wisconsin Butter Tub Company, Bert S. Hill, trading and doing business as Storey City Butter Tub Company, and Butter Tub Manufacturers Council, shall within 30 days after the service upon them of this order file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which they have complied with the order to cease and desist hereinabove set forth.

IN THE MATTER OF ALLURA, INC.

COMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION
OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 26, 1914

Docket 2854. Complaint, June 26, 1936—Decision, June 8, 1937

Where a corporation engaged in sale and distribution of eye lotion, sold under trade name "Allura", and consisting essentially of honey and water with extracts of plant drugs and small amounts of ammonium and potassium salts, and, as thus engaged, in substantial competition with those engaged in sale and distribution of eye glasses and other products for relief of diseases or ailments of the eye, and in competition with many who sell and distribute eye lotions and eye glasses without falsely representing the properties, capacities, or effects of their products—

- (a) Represented, in radio broadcasts and in pamphlets and other advertising matter distributed among prospective purchasers, that said preparation would relieve poor or cloudy vision or headache resulting from eye strain, and that use thereof would take the place of wearing glasses and relieve astigmatism and general weakness of the eyes and overcome irritating and painful conditions thereof;
- (b) Represented, as aforesaid, that it was nature's aid to the eyes and had no equal in keeping them clear, bright, and full of life, and was not injurious; and
- (c) Represented, as aforesaid, that it was a cure for cataract and was a remedy for eye troubles, and would cure or be beneficial in treatment of all cases of granulated lids, bloodshot eyes, focal disorders, weeping lids, weak lachrymal glands, and muscular atrophies, or contractions;

Notwithstanding fact preparation contained nothing of medical value in treatment of any eye disease, only possible value thereof would be equivalent to that of ordinary normal salt solution, it was not harmless, might be injurious, would not take place of glasses, relieve astigmatism or general weakness of the eyes, and other representations as hereinabove set forth were false;

With effect of misleading and deceiving a substantial portion of the purchasing public into the erroneous belief that its said preparation had properties, capacities or effects set forth as hereinabove indicated, and that buying public, as a result of erroneous belief induced by such false and misleading representations, bought substantial volume of its said product, and trade was unfairly diverted to it from its competitors who truthfully represent nature and character of their respective products; to the substantial injury of competition in commerce:

Held, That such acts and practices were to the prejudice of the public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition.

Before Mr. Charles P. Vicini, Mr. John W. Norwood and Mr. Robert S. Hall, trial examiners.

Mr. T. H. Kennedy, Mr. P. C. Kolinski and Mr. J. T. Welch for the Commission.

Mr. Darold D. DeCoe, of Sacramento, Calif., for respondent.

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that Allura, Inc., a corporation, hereinafter referred to as respondent, has been and now is using unfair methods of competition in commerce as "commerce" is defined in said act, and it appearing to the Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint, stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent, Allura, Inc., is a corporation organized and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the State of California, with its principal place of business at 626 I Street, Sacramento, Calif. Respondent is, and for more than three years last past, has been engaged in the manufacture of an eye lotion, and has been engaged in the sale of said preparation under the trade name of "Allura" between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia. During all of said time it has caused, and still causes, said product when sold by it, to be transported from its place of business in California, or other places within the United States, to purchasers thereof, some located in the State of California and others located in various States of the United States other than the State of origin of the shipment, and in the District of Columbia.

In the course and conduct of its said business respondent is now, and for more than three years last past has been, in constant competition with other corporations, persons, firms, and partnerships engaged in the sale of products having properties, capacities, or effects claimed for the said "Allura" by the respondent, as herein set forth, in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of its business described herein respondent for more than three years last past has, by means of radio broadcasts, pamphlets, advertising matter, testimonials, and otherwise, represented, and still represents, that its said product is harmless; will, when used, take the place of the wearing of glasses by the user; relieves astigmatism and general weakness of the eye; overcomes irritating and painful conditions of the eyes; has no equal in keeping eyes clear, bright, and full of life; is not injurious; will cure cataract of the eye and is a remedy for any eye trouble; will relieve severe headaches from eye strain, poor and cloudy vision, or eye strain; is Nature's aid to the eyes; and respondent has recommended the use of "Allura" in cases of granulated lids, bloodshot eyes, weak lachrymal glands, weeping lids, muscular atrophies, muscular contractions, headaches from eye strain, and focal disorders.

Respondent has distributed radio texts or continuities and said pamphlets, advertising matter, and testimonials among its prospective customers and places the same in the hands of retailers and distributors in various States of the United States for use by them in advertising its said product.

Said representations have been and are made by respondent in such a way that purchasers and prospective purchasers of respondent's product are led to believe that respondent's product will cure or relieve any of the diseases or ailments above set forth.

In truth and in fact each and every said representation has been and is untrue or grossly exaggerated, and respondent's said product is not, nor has it ever been, harmless; a substitute for glasses; a relief for astigmatism and general weakness of the eyes; a cure for irritating and painful conditions of the eyes; without equal as an agent for keeping the eyes clear, bright, and full of life; free from injurious properties, capacities, or effects; a cure for cataract or a remedy for any eye trouble; an agent for relief of severe headaches from eye strain, poor and cloudy vision or eye strain; nor is it Nature's aid to the eyes. Said product is not a competent remedy for granulated lids, bloodshot eyes, weak lachrymal glands, weeping lids, muscular atrophies, muscular contractions, headaches from eye strain, and focal disorders.

There is a preference by a substantial number of retail dealers in products having properties, capacities, or effects claimed by respondent for its product, as hereinabove described, and by a substantial part of the purchasing public for products that have the properties, capacities, or effects claimed by respondent for its products, as hereinabove set forth.

The aforesaid representations by the respondent have had and still have a capacity and tendency to mislead and deceive, and have misled and deceived, and still mislead and deceive, retailers and the purchasing public into the erroneous belief that said product of respondent has all the properties, capacities, or effects claimed for it by the respondent, as aforesaid, and the use of said misrepresentations causes them to purchase respondent's product in such erroneous belief.

The aforesaid misrepresentations by the respondent have placed and still place in the hands of retailers of the product of respondent hereinabove described the means of deceiving and misleading the purchasing public.

PAR. 3. There are among the competitors of respondent manufacturers and distributors of products having properties, capacities, or effects similar to those claimed by the respondent for its product, who truthfully represent the properties, capacities, or effects of their said products; and there are also among the competitors of respondent manufacturers and distributors who do not misrepresent the properties, capacities, or effects of their said products.

By the representations made by the respondent, as set out hereinabove, trade has been, and still is, unfairly diverted to the respondent from such competitors, and thereby substantial injury has been done and is still being done by respondent to competitors in interstate commerce.

PAR 4. The above acts and things done by the respondent are all to the injury and prejudice of the public and competitors of respondent in interstate commerce within the meaning and intent of Section 5 of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission on June 26, 1936, issued and served its complaint in this proceeding upon respondent Allura, Inc., charging it with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of the provisions of said act. After the issuance of said complaint, and the filing of respondent's answer thereto, testimony and other evidence in support of the allegations of said complaint were introduced by Thomas H. Kennedy and Peter C. Kolinski, attorneys for the Commission before Charles P. Vicini, John W. Norwood and Robert S. Hall, examiners of the Commission, theretofore duly designated by it, and in opposition to the allegations of the complaint by Darold D. DeCoe, attorney for the respondent; and said testimony and other evidence were duly recorded and filed in the office of the Commission. Thereafter, the proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on the said complaint, the answer thereto, testimony and other evidence, and brief in support of the complaint; and the Commission having duly considered the same, and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public, and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. The respondent, Allura, Inc., is a corporation organized, existing and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of California, and has its principal place of business at Sacramento, Calif.

It is now, and for more than three years has been, engaged in the sale and distribution of an eye lotion under the trade name of "Allura." When orders are received for respondent's goods, it ships them from Sacramento, Calif., to purchasers thereof located at various points in the State of California and in other States in the United States. The respondent has at all times during the past several years maintained a constant current of trade and commerce among and between the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia in the merchandise which it sells.

At all times during the last three years the respondent has been in substantial competition with other corporations and with individuals and partnerships likewise engaged in the sale and distribution of eye glasses and other products for the relief of diseases or ailments of the eye in commerce between and among the several States of the United States and the District of Columbia.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of its business, the respondent through statements in radio broadcasts, and in pamphlets and other advertising matter distributed among prospective purchasers, represented that its preparation "Allura" is harmless; not injurious; will, when used, take the place of the wearing of glasses by the user; relieve astigmatism and general weakness of the eyes; overcome irritating and painful conditions of the eyes, and that it has no equal in keeping eyes clear, bright and full of life; will cure cataract of the eye; is a remedy for any eye trouble; will relieve severe headaches from eye strain, poor and cloudy vision; is nature's aid to the eyes; and has recommended the use of its preparation "Allura" in cases of granulated lids, bloodshot eyes, weak lachrymal glands, weeping lids, muscular atrophies, muscular contractions, headaches from eye strain and focal disorders. Among and typical of the representations used in radio broadcasts, pamphlets and other advertising matter are the following:

Findings

Allura * * * dissolves the dust-laden film of mucous which makes eyes look dull and by its gentle astringent action removes bloodshot from the eyes.

Allura * * * is not injurious.

I have been using "Allura" for astigmatism and general weakness of the eyes and I have found the condition of my eyes greatly improved.

My son has used "Allura" for the past year with remarkable results. His vision was poor and he wore glasses. Prior to using your product his vision was faulty. For the past ten months he has read without glasses. We see continual improvement in his sight.

Many people report that after using "Allura" they have discarded their glasses permanently.

I have been using "Allura" just thirty days and it is not necessary for me to use my glasses now and each day I can notice my eyes becoming stronger.

PAR. 3. Respondent's product, "Allura," is not harmless, may be injurious, will not take the place of the wearing of glasses by the user, will not relieve astigmatism or general weakness of the eyes, nor will it overcome irritating or painful conditions of the eyes. It is not true that "Allura" has no equal in keeping the eyes clear, bright and full of life nor will it cure cataract of the eye. It is not a remedy for any eye trouble, nor will it relieve severe headaches from eye strain, poor and cloudy vision, nor is it nature's aid to the eyes. It will not relieve all cases of granulated lids, bloodshot eyes, weak lachrymal glands, weeping lids, muscular atrophies, muscular contractions, headaches from eye strain or focal disorders. Respondent's preparation "Allura" consists essentially of honey and water with extracts of plant drugs, together with small amounts of ammonium and potassium salts such as ammonium chloride, and potassium sulphate and is preserved with a salicylate. The preparation contains nothing of medical value in the treatment of any eye disease and the only possible value of it would be equivalent to that of ordinary normal salt solution.

PAR. 4. Many of respondent's competitors sell and distribute eye lotions and eye glasses in interstate commerce, who do not falsely represent the properties, capacities or effects of their products.

PAR. 5. Respondent's practice of representing its preparation "Allura," as possessing properties, capacities or effects as set forth in paragraph 2 hereof has had, and now has, the capacity and tendency to mislead and deceive, and has misled and deceived a substantial portion of the purchasing public into the erroneous belief that its preparation "Allura," has the properties, capacities or effects set forth in paragraph 2 above. As a result of the erroneous belief induced by the false and misleading representations referred to above, the buying public has purchased a substantial volume of respondent's product, with the result that trade has been unfairly diverted to the respondent from its competitors who truthfully represent the nature and character of their respective products. Thereby substantial injury has been, and is now being done by the respondent to competition in commerce among and between the various States of the United States and the District of Columbia.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondent, Allura, Inc., are to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce, within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

This proceeding having been heard by the Federal Trade Commission upon the complaint of the Commission, the answer of respondent, testimony and other evidence taken before Charles P. Vicini, John W. Norwood and Robert S. Hall, examiners of the Commission, theretofore duly designated by it, in support of the allegations of said complaint and in opposition thereto, brief filed herein by the attorney for the Commission, and the Commission having made its findings as to the facts and its conclusion that said respondent has violated the provisions of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

It is ordered, That the respondent Allura, Inc., its officers, representatives, agents and employees, in connection with the offering for sale, sale and distribution of the preparation now known as, and sold under the name, "Allura" or any other preparation, under whatever name sold, composed of similar ingredients and possessing therapeutic properties similar to the preparation now known as, and sold under the name "Allura," in interstate commerce or in the District of Columbia, do forthwith cease and desist representing directly or by implication:

1. That the use of said preparation will take the place of the wearing of glasses, relieve astigmatism and general weakness of the eyes, and overcome irritating and painful conditions of the eyes;
2. That said preparation has no equal in keeping eyes clear, bright and full of life;
3. That said preparation is not injurious;

4. That said preparation is a cure for cataract of the eye or that it is a remedy for eye troubles;

5. That said preparation will relieve poor or cloudy vision or headache resulting from eye strain;

6. That said preparation is nature's aid to the eyes;

7. That said preparation will cure, or is beneficial in the treatment of, all cases of granulated lids, bloodshot eyes, weak lachrymal glands, weeping lids, muscular atrophies, or contractions, and focal disorders.

It is further ordered, That the respondent shall, within 60 days after service upon it of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which it has complied with this order.

IN THE MATTER OF
L. MUSIL DISTILLING COMPANY

COMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION
OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 26, 1914

Docket 2476. Complaint, June 28, 1935—Decision, June 9, 1937

Where a corporation engaged in the rectifying and bottling of whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages, in a rectifying plant and under a rectifier's permit, and in sale thereof to wholesalers and retailers in States other than State of origin of its shipments, and in District of Columbia, and in substantial competition with those engaged in manufacture by true distillation of whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages from mash, wort, or wash, and in sale thereof in trade and commerce among the various States and in the District of Columbia, and with those similarly engaged in purchasing, rectifying, blending, and bottling such various beverages, and in similarly selling same, and including among said competitors those who, as manufacturers and distillers by original and continuous distillation from mash, wort, or wash, through continuous closed pipes and vessels until manufacture is complete, of whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages sold by them, truthfully use words "distillery," "distilleries," "distillers," or "distilling" as a part of their corporate or trade names and on their stationery and advertising and on the labels of the bottles in which they sell and ship their said products, and those who, engaged in purchasing, rectifying, blending, bottling, and selling such various products, do not use aforesaid words as above set forth—

Represented, through use of word "Distilling" in its corporate name, on its stationery, mailing cards, and invoices, and on the labels attached to the bottles in which it sold and shipped its said products, that it was a producer of distilled spirits from raw materials, and thus represented to its customers, and furnished same with a means of representing to their vendees, both retailers and ultimate consuming public, that it was a distiller and that the said whiskies and other spirituous beverages contained in such bottles were by it made through process of distillation from mash, wort, or wash, as above set forth, notwithstanding fact it did not thus distill said various beverages, thus bottled, labeled, sold, and transported by it, through process of original and continuous distillation as above set forth, and as long definitely understood from word "distilling" when used in connection with liquor industry and products thereof by trade and ultimate purchasing public, and did not own, operate or control any place or places where such beverages are made by process of distillation from mash, wort, or wash, and was not a distiller, for the purchase of the bottled liquors of which there is a preference on the part of a substantial portion of the purchasing public;

With effect of misleading and deceiving dealers and purchasing public into the belief that it was a distiller and that the whiskies and other spirituous beverages sold by it were by it made and distilled from mash, wort, or wash, and with capacity and tendency to induce dealers and purchasing public, acting in such beliefs, to buy the whiskies and other spirituous beverages bottled and sold by it, and with result of thereby diverting trade to it from its competitors who did not, by their corporate or trade names or in any other manner, misrepresent that they were manufacturers by distillation from mash, wort, or wash of whiskies or other spirituous beverages; to the substantial injury of competition in commerce:

Held, That such acts and practices were to the prejudice of the public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition.

Before Mr. John L. Hornor, trial examiner.

Mr. PGad B. Morehouse for the Commission.

Mr. Max W. Petacque, of Chicago, Ill., for respondent.

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that L. Musil Distilling Company, hereinafter referred to as respondent, has been and is using unfair methods of competition in commerce as "commerce" is defined in said act, and it appearing to the said Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint, stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent is a corporation organized, existing and doing business under the laws of the State of Wisconsin, with its office and principal place of business in the city of Racine, in said State. It is now, and for more than one year last past has been, engaged in the business of wholesaler and rectifier, purchasing, rectifying, blending, and bottling whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages and in the sale thereof in constant course of trade and commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia. In the course and conduct of its said business, it causes its said products when sold to be transported from its place of business aforesaid into and through various States of the United States to the purchasers thereof, consisting of wholesalers and retailers, located in other States of the United States and the District of Columbia. In the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid, respondent is now, and for more than one year last past has been, in substantial competition with other corporations and with individuals, partnerships, and firms engaged in the manufacture by distillation of whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages and in the sale thereof in trade and commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia; and in the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid; respondent is now, and for more than one year last past has been, in substantial competition with other corporations, and with individuals, firms, and partnerships engaged in the business of purchasing, rectifying, blending, and bottling whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages and in the sale thereof in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 2. For a long period of time the word "distilling" when used in connection with the liquor industry and the products thereof has had and still has a definite significance and meaning to the minds of the wholesalers and retailers in such industry and to the ultimate purchasing public, to wit, the manufacturing of such liquors by the process of original and continuous distillation from mash, wort, or wash, through continuous closed pipes and vessels until the manufacture thereof is completed; and a substantial portion of the purchasing public prefers to buy spirituous liquors prepared and bottled by distillers.

PAR. 3. In the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid, by the use of the word "Distilling" in its corporate name, printed on its stationery and advertising, and on the labels attached to the bottles in which it sells and ships its said products, and in various other ways, respondent represents to its customers and furnishes them with the means of representing to their vendees, both retailers and the ultimate consuming public, that it is a distiller and that the whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages therein contained were by it manufactured through the process of distillation from mash, wort, or wash, as aforesaid, when, as a matter of fact, respondent is not a distiller, does not distill the said whiskies, gins, or other spirituous beverages by it so bottled, labeled, sold, and transported, and does not own, operate, or control any place or places where such beverages are manufactured by the process of distillation from mash, wort, or wash.

PAR. 4. There are among the competitors of respondent engaged in the sale of spirituous beverages as mentioned in Paragraph One hereof corporations, firms, partnerships, and individuals who manufacture and distill from mash, wort, or wash, as aforesaid, whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages sold by them and who truthfully use the words "distillery," "distilleries," "distillers," or "distilling" as a part of their corporate or trade names and on their stationery and advertising, and on the labels of the bottles in which they sell and ship such products. There are also among such competitors corporations, firms, partnerships, and individuals engaged in the business of purchasing, rectifying, blending, bottling, and selling whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages who do not use the words "distillery," "distilleries," "distilling," or "distillers" as a part of their corporate or trade names, nor on their stationery or advertising, nor on the labels attached to the bottles in which they sell and ship their said products.

PAR. 5. Representation by respondent as set forth in paragraph 3 hereof, is calculated to and has the capacity and tendency to and does mislead and deceive dealers and the purchasing public into the beliefs that respondent is a distiller and that the whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages sold by the respondent are manufactured and distilled by it from mash, wort, or wash, as aforesaid, and is calculated to and has the capacity and tendency to and does induce dealers and the purchasing public, acting in such beliefs, to purchase the whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages bottled and sold by the respondent, thereby diverting trade to respondent from its competitors who do not by their corporate or trade names or in any other manner misrepresent that they are manufacturers by distillation from mash, wort, or wash, of whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages, and thereby respondent does substantial injury to substantial competition in interstate commerce.

PAR. 6. The acts and things above alleged to have been done and the false representations alleged to have been made by respondent are to the prejudice of the public and the competitors of respondent and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914.

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Messrs. Sabath, Pearlman, Goodman, and Rein, attorneys for the respondent. Thereafter the proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on the said complaint, the answer thereto, testimony and other evidence and brief in support of the complaint (no brief in opposition thereto having been filed and no oral argument having been made); and the Commission having duly considered the foregoing and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent is a corporation organized, existing, and doing business under the laws of the State of Wisconsin with its office and principal place of business at 1228 Buchanan Street, Racine, Wis. It was incorporated on June 14, 1934, with a capital stock of $35,000.00 to engage in the distilled spirits rectifying industry with a charter containing sufficiently broad powers to enable it to operate as a distillery, but it never so operated. At one time it had a small experimental still for the purpose of analyzing products going into cordials by it compounded. It operated under basic permit No. R-541 from the Federal Alcohol Administration and prior to the organization of that Administration under basic permit No. R-56. It still maintains its corporate existence, though it has not engaged in business since July 1, 1936, and its future plans have not been determined.

At the time of the hearings held during October 1936, respondent had no stock of liquors on hand and its plant equipment had been sold. During the period in which it did business its sales amounted to approximately one million gallons of whiskey, all of which had been rectified.

Between the commencement of its business and July 1, 1936, it was engaged in the manufacturing and bottling of whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages in a rectifying plant under a rectifier's permit, and in the sale thereof in the constant course of trade and commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia. In the course and conduct of its said business it caused its said products when sold to be transported from its place of business aforesaid into and through various States of the United States to the purchasers thereof, consisting of wholesalers and retailers located in States of the United States other than the States of origin of said shipments and in the District of Columbia. Its products were sold mostly to wholesalers in the territory west of Racine, Wis., and from California southeast to Louisiana.

In the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid, respondent, during said period was in substantial competition with other corporations and with individuals, partnerships, and firms engaged in the manufacture by true distillation of whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages from mash, wort, or wash, and in the sale thereof in trade and commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia; and in the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid, respondent was in substantial competition with other corporations and with individuals, firms, and partnerships, engaged in the business of purchasing, rectifying, blending, and bottling whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages in rectifying plants under rectifiers' permits, and in the sale thereof in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 2. "Rectifying" in the distilled spirits rectifying industry means the mixing of whiskies of different ages or types, or the mixing of other ingredients with whiskies, but reducing proof of whiskey by adding water is not rectifying. Rectifiers also blend whiskies with neutral spirits (grain alcohol).

Many distillers operate a separate establishment 600 feet or more away from their distillery, known as a rectifying plant, wherein they operate in the same manner as described above—for a rectifier—sometimes exclusively with spirits of their own distillation and sometimes with spirits purchased from other distillers, or both. Some distillers have a tax paid bottling room on the distillery bonded premises wherein their distilled spirits are bottled straight as they come from the still, or in a bonded warehouse after aging, or after reduction of proof. Any rectifying by a distiller, however, must be done in his rectifying plant under his rectifier's permit. On all bottled liquors, whether bottled at the distillery or at any rectifying plant, appear the words "Bottled" or "Blended" (as the case may be) "by the _____ Company." If the distilled spirits therein contained are bottled by a distiller in his distillery or are spirits of his own distillation bottled in his rectifying plant, the distiller may and does put "Distilled and bottled by _____ Company." If, in the distiller's rectifying plant, other spirits have been blended or rectified, he puts on the bottle "Blended and bottled by _____ Company."

Finally blown in the bottom of each bottle is a symbol consisting of a letter followed by a number, identifying the bottler, viz, a "D" for a distiller and "R" for a rectifier, the number following said

letter corresponding with the distiller's or rectifier's permit. Thus, "R-541" designates this respondent. A distiller who also operates a rectifying plant, having both kinds of permits, may use either symbol depending upon whether the liquor contained in the bottle was produced and bottled under his distiller's or his rectifier's permit. This number is placed on the bottle to identify the bottler.

Knowledge of these details is not widespread among the retail trade and is very limited among the general public. All whiskies, whether coming from a distillery or rectifier, are generally conceded to be "distilled" products. Therefore, it is not possible to determine from the presence of the phrase, "Blended and Bottled by" alone, or the phrase "Bottled by" alone on the label whether the package was bottled by a rectifier who is a distiller or by a rectifier who is not a distiller.

This respondent does not now and never has produced or manufactured distilled spirits of any kind from mash or raw materials, although its charter would authorize it so to do. Its rectifier's permit authorizes it to engage in the business of rectifying and blending, and is conditioned upon compliance by respondent with all applicable regulations made pursuant to law, which are or may hereafter be in force.

PAR. 3. The evidence adduced in this case from approximately eight competitive trade witnesses (both rectifiers and distillers) and sixteen members of the purchasing public shows, and the Commission finds, that for a long period of time the word "distilling," when used in connection with the liquor industry and the products thereof, has had and still has a definite significance and meaning to the minds of the wholesalers and retailers in such industry and to the ultimate purchasing public, to wit, the manufacturing of such liquors by the process of original and continuous distillation from mash, wort, or wash, through continuous closed pipes and vessels until the manufacture thereof is completed; and a substantial portion of the purchasing public prefers to buy spirituous liquors prepared and bottled by distillers.

PAR. 4. This respondent by the use of the word "distilling" in its corporate name, on its stationery, mailing cards, invoices, and on the labels attached to the bottles in which it sold and shipped its products in interstate commerce, represented itself as a producer of distilled spirits from raw materials, and was so regarded, by virtue of said representations, by the trade and purchasing public. It thus represented to its customers and furnished them with the means of representing to their vendees, both retailers and the ultimate consuming public, that it was a distiller and that the whiskies and other spirituous beverages in said bottles contained were by it manufactured by the process of distillation from mash, wort, or wash, as aforesaid, when, as a matter of fact, respondent is not now and never was a distiller, does not now and never did distill the said whiskies or other spirituous beverages, by it so bottled, labeled, sold, and transported and does not now and never did own, operate, or control any place or places where such beverages are or were manufactured by the process of distillation from mash, wort, or wash.

PAR. 5. There were among the competitors of respondent engaged in the sale of spirituous beverages as mentioned in paragraph 1 hereof corporations, firms, partnerships, and individuals who manufactured and distilled from mash, wort or wash, as aforesaid, whiskies, gins and other spirituous beverages sold by them and who truthfully used the words "distillery," "distilleries," "distillers," or "distilling" as a part of their corporate or trade names and on their stationery and advertising, and on the labels of the bottles in which they sold and shipped such products. There were also among such competitors, corporations, firms, partnerships, and individuals engaged in the business of purchasing, rectifying, blending, bottling, and selling whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages who did not use the words "distillery," "distilleries," "distilling," or "distillers" as a part of their corporate or trade names, on their stationery or advertising, or on the labels attached to the bottles in which they sold and shipped their said products.

PAR. 6. Representations by the respondent as hereinabove set forth had the capacity and tendency to and did mislead and deceive dealers and the purchasing public into the beliefs that respondent was a distiller, and that the whiskies and other spirituous beverages by it sold were manufactured and distilled by it from mash, wort, or wash, and had the capacity and tendency also to induce dealers and the purchasing public, acting in such beliefs, to purchase the whiskies and other spirituous beverages bottled and sold by the respondent, thereby diverting trade to respondent from its competitors who did not by their corporate or trade names, or in any other manner, misrepresent that they were manufacturers by distillation from mash, wort, or wash of whiskies or other spirituous beverages. Thereby respondent did substantial injury to competition in interstate commerce.

PAR. 7. Respondent stated of record through its attorney that after discussing this matter with the officers of the company and the principal stockholders, should the company desire to resume operations, the word "distilling" in its corporate name would be abandoned, but wished it understood that it did not by this expression of its intention waive its right to use the word "distilling" in its corporate name, or admit that the Commission's position was correct. Under these circumstances this Commission can have no assurance that the aforesaid unfair acts and practices on the part of respondent will not at some future date be resumed.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondent, L. Musil Distilling Company, were to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors, and constituted unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

This proceeding having been heard by the Federal Trade Commission upon the complaint of the Commission, the answer of respondent, testimony and other evidence taken before John L. Hornor, an examiner of the Commission theretofore duly designated by it, in support of the allegations of said complaint, brief filed herein by PGad B. Morscheuse, counsel for the Commission (no testimony or other evidence having been offered on behalf of respondent, and no brief having been filed on behalf of respondent and no oral argument having been made), and the Commission having made its findings as to the facts and its conclusion that said respondent has violated the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

It is ordered, That the respondent, L. Musil Distilling Company, a corporation, its officers, representatives, agents, and employees, in connection with the offering for sale or sale and distribution by it in interstate commerce or in the District of Columbia of whiskies, gins, or other spirituous beverages, do cease and desist from:

Representing, through the use of the word "distilling" in its corporate name, on its stationery, advertising or on the labels attached to the bottles in which it sells and ships said products, or in any other way by word, or words of like import, (a) that it is a distiller of whiskies, gins, or other spirituous beverages; or (b) that the said whiskies, gins, or other spirituous beverages were by it manufactured through the process of distillation; or (c) that it owns, operates or controls a place or places where any such products are by it manufactured by a process of original and continuous distillation from mash, wort or wash, through continuous closed pipes and vessels until the manufacture thereof is completed, unless and until respondent shall actually own, operate, or control such a place or places.

It is further ordered, That the said respondent within 60 days from and after the date of the service upon it of this order, shall file with the Commission a report or reports in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which it is complying and has complied with the order to cease and desist hereinabove set forth.

IN THE MATTER OF
CAP ASSOCIATION OF THE UNITED STATES, INC., ET AL.

COMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION
OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 26, 1914

Docket 2530. Complaint, Aug. 29, 1935—Decision, June 10, 1937

Where two trade associations, composed, respectively, of some 100 cap manufacturers of all types, and of 27 uniform cap manufacturers; the officers of said associations; the aforesaid uniform cap manufacturer-members engaged in manufacture and sale of all types of headwear used or worn in conjunction with a uniform, and including products used by the military, naval, postal, and coast guard service of the United States, military service of the States, police and fire departments, railway employees, etc., and, prior to the hereinafter set forth acts and practices, engaged in offer and sale of their aforesaid products at competitive and frequently varying prices; and four manufacturers of visors and trimmings used in manufacture of uniform caps, makers and sellers in interstate commerce of about 60 percent of the total volume of such items used in the uniform cap manufacturing industry in the United States, and, up to not long theretofore, sole source of supply for aforesaid indispensable items necessary to manufacture of uniform caps, and making of which items himself is not practicable for the average uniform cap manufacturer; following a series of meetings, called by and presided over by officers of said association first named, and discussions and comparison of prices at which they were offering competitive uniform caps—

- (a) Entered into an agreement to fix, and did fix and abide by, prices which were uniform as among themselves for the offer and sale of aforesaid products;
- (b) Printed, in pursuance of their aforesaid agreement, price lists indicating jobber price, retail price, and contract price to uniform tailors of such products made and sold by the members, and circulated, through use of correspondence facilities of aforesaid association, such price lists, and, in pursuance of their said understanding, uniformly changed said prices and adhered to schedule thereof as revised;
- (c) Exacted and procured agreements of cooperation from said visor and trimming manufacturers, to the effect that they would support, adhere to and enforce the program hereinabove indicated, and procured from them agreements to cooperate with the aforesaid second association or trade organization of cap manufacturers;
- (d) Supplied to aforesaid visor manufacturers, in cooperation and confederation with one another and through use of the offices, stationery and secretarial facilities of said first association, lists containing names of uniform cap manufacturers who refused to sell their products at the prices suggested, as hereinabove noted, and names of such non-member manufacturers who thus refused to sell their said products, and induced said visor manufacturers to cease dealing with and to refuse to sell visors and trimmings to uniform cap manufacturers thus reported, and made use of coercive and concerted action and threats of boycott against such visor

manufacturers to induce and require them to support the program herein set forth and to refrain from selling their visors and trimmings to non-member uniform cap manufacturers; and

(e) Held meetings in several large cities to devise means of exerting influence, pressure and coercion upon uniform cap manufacturers to abide by and adhere to the program hereinabove set forth, and imposed upon and collected from members selling below suggested prices, fines, and in one instance made threat of fine of $2,000 and strike and labor troubles; and

Where aforesaid visor manufacturers, so-called "Policemen of the Industry,"

(f) Cooperated with the others hereinbefore set forth in carrying out the above noted program and refused to sell to those uniform cap manufacturers who failed to take membership in aforesaid first-named association or to observe uniform prices fixed in aforesaid lists, necessary visors and trimmings;

With result that prices of such caps were raised to levels higher than those prevailing before effecting of said agreement and preparation of said lists, prices for visors and trimmings used in manufacture of such uniform caps were advanced by aforesaid visor manufacturers, purchasing public was deprived of advantages in price, service and other considerations which they would receive and enjoy under conditions of normal competition in uniform cap manufacturing industry, and small business enterprises engaged in manufacture and sale of such products were oppressed and discriminated against:

Held, That such acts and practices were to the prejudice of the public and competitors and tended unduly to hinder competition and create monopoly and constituted unfair methods of competition.

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress entitled, "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that each and all the parties named in the caption hereof, hereinafter referred to as respondents, have been and now are using unfair methods of competition in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in said act, and it appearing to the Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint and states its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. That the respondent Cap Association of the United States, Inc., hereinafter referred to as the association, is a corporation incorporated and existing under the laws of the State of New York having its principal office in New York City; that prior to April 19, 1934, its corporate name was National Cap & Cloth Hat Institute, Inc.; that its membership consists of approximately 100 cap manufacturers distributed throughout the United States, whose combined output constitutes practically all caps manufactured in the United States;

That the respondent Uniform Cap Manufacturers Institute, Inc., hereinafter referred to as the institute, is a corporation incorporated and existing under the laws of the State of New York, having its principal office in New York City; that its membership consists of approximately 80 uniform cap manufacturers distributed throughout the United States, whose combined output constitutes practically all the uniform caps manufactured in the United States;

That the following named individuals, partnerships, and corporations are representative uniform cap manufacturers holding membership in both organizations, the association and the institute:

Respondent E. Mattes & Son, Inc., is a corporation organized, existing, and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of New York, with its principal office and place of business at New York City.

Respondent William B. Mackey, is an individual trading as J. Mackey & Sons, with his office and principal place of business in New York City.

Respondent Pekarsky Cap Fronts, Inc., is a corporation organized, existing, and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of New York, with its principal office and place of business at New York City.

Respondent American Cap Fronts Mfg. Co., Inc., is a corporation organized, existing, and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of New York, with its principal office and place of business at New York City.

Respondent Samuel D. Basch is an individual trading as Basch Cap Co., with his office and principal place of business in Boston, Mass.

Respondent Wentworth Forman Co., Inc., is a corporation organized, existing, and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Massachusetts, with its principal office and place of business at Boston.

Respondent George Brunssen Co., Inc., is a corporation organized, existing, and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of New York, with its principal office and place of business at New York City.

Respondent Nas Saw Equipment Corporation, is a corporation organized, existing, and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of New York, with its principal office and place of business at New York City.

Respondent Philadelphia Uniform Co., Inc., is a corporation organized, existing, and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Delaware, with its principal office and place of business at Conshohocken, Pa.

Respondent Kuenzel Brothers is a corporation organized, existing, and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Pennsylvania, with its principal office and place of business at Philadelphia.

Respondent Opper Cap Co., is a corporation organized, existing, and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Ohio, with its principal office and place of business at Cleveland.

Respondent, Figmore Uniform Cap Co., Inc., is a corporation organized, existing, and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Michigan, with its principal office and place of business at Detroit.

Respondent Chicago Uniform Cap Co., is a corporation organized, existing, and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Illinois, with its principal office and place of business at Chicago.

Respondent Jacob Apfelbaum is an individual trading as J. Apfelbaum, with his office and principal place of business in Chicago, Ill.

Respondent Morris Greenberg and Jacob Wax are partners trading as Eastern Uniform Cap Mfg. Co., with their office and principal place of business in Chicago, Ill.

Respondents Irving L. Lewis, Jacob Bressler, Herman Buchbinder, and Isaac Ross are respectively president, treasurer, secretary, and executive secretary of said association, in charge of and conducting its activities and affairs.

That respondents Murray H. Bader, Sidney Lesser, Herman Juelick, and Walter Seifert are respectively president, vice president, treasurer, and secretary of said institute.

That respondents E. Mattes & Son, Inc., William B. Mackey, trading as J. Mackey & Sons, Pekarsky Cap Fronts, Inc., and American

Cap Fronts Mfg. Co., are manufacturers of vizors and trimmings used in the manufacture of uniform caps.

That the other respondents specifically named herein as members of the respondent association and respondent institute do not embrace the entire list or number of such members; that such members constitute a class so numerous, far-flung, and changing as to make it impracticable to specifically name each and every one of them as parties respondent herein; that those specifically named herein are fairly representative of the whole; that all members of the afore-said respondent association and respondent institute are also made parties respondent herein as a class of which those specifically named are representative; that said members of said association and said institute are hereinafter called the members.

That such respondent members manufacture and sell uniform caps, being any and all types of headwear used or worn in conjunction with a uniform. The uniform caps manufactured and sold by respondent members are used by the armed forces of the United States, the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, and Coast Guard, all United States Postal Carriers, members of National Guard organizations, police and fire departments in every city of the United States, railway employes, including railroad, street railway, rapid transit and bus employes, chauffeurs, telegraph and delivery messengers, building and theatre attendants, gasoline, laundry and other industrial uniformed organizations, and large patriotic and fraternal organizations in every city and town in the United States.

PAR. 2. That in the course and conduct of the business and activities of said association and institute respondents, their officers and members respondent, they have been and are engaged in commerce among the several States and in trade, business, and commerce relating to, and affecting interstate commerce, as hereinafter alleged; that respondent members of said association and institute purchase the vizors, cloth and trimmings used in the manufacture of uniform caps from manufacturers in various States and cause such products to be shipped to their places of business; and in the course of the sale and distribution of uniform caps said respondents caused such merchandise when sold to be shipped and transported from their places of business to their customers at points in States other than the State in which such shipments originated; that except insofar as competition has been restrained, stifled, lessened, or destroyed by the respondents as hereinafter alleged, each of the respondents have been and are engaged in the course and conduct of their businesses and activities in substantial competition with each other in price, and are otherwise in such substantial competition with other individuals, partnerships, and corporations also engaged in the manufacture of uniform caps.

PAR. 3. In July 1933, or thereabouts, respondents united in a common course of action and cooperated and confederated together to fix and establish uniform prices at which said members of respondent association and respondent institute should sell uniform caps and to prevent others from selling at less prices and by and through the aforesaid means to suppress competition and especially competition in price in the selling and distribution of said products. To carry out the aforesaid purposes the respondents have done, among others, the following acts and things:

(a) Exacted and procured pledges and other promises of agreements from each member of respondent Association and respondent Institute and from manufacturers of vizers and trimmings to the effect that such members and manufacturers would support, adhere to and enforce the foregoing program of respondents set forth in paragraph 3 hereof.

(b) Printed and circulated among members price lists indicating the price to jobbers, the retail price, and the contract price to uniform tailors, of uniform caps manufactured and sold by respondent members.

(c) Printed and circulated among members, lists (so called black lists), containing the names of members who refused to manufacture and sell uniform caps at the suggested prices, and the names of uniform cap manufacturers not members of said association and institute, who refused to manufacture and sell uniform caps at the prices suggested by respondents herein, and supplied said lists to the manufacturers of uniform cap vizers, respondents herein, and induced said vizer manufacturers to cease dealing with and to refuse to open accounts with the uniform cap manufacturers so reported.

(d) Used in concert and agreement among themselves and with others, coercive and concerted action, boycott, threats of boycott, and other united action against vizer manufacturers, to induce and require them, and to attempt so to induce and require them, to agree and conform to and to support and enforce the said program of respondents, and to refrain from selling said products to uniform cap manufacturers who were not members of said association.

(e) Held meetings of respondent association, and respondent institute, their members, officers and executive committees, to devise means of exerting influence, pressure and coercion upon uniform cap manufacturers, to abide by and adhere to said program.

PAR. 4. The combination and agreement so entered into and carried on by said respondents and the acts and things done thereunder and pursuant thereto, as hereinabove alleged, resulted and results in the suppression and prevention of competition between and among them and in the enhancement of prices to the using public; in depriving the purchasing and consuming public of advantages in price, service and other considerations which they would receive and enjoy under conditions of normal and unobstructed, or free and fair, competition in said trade and industry; in oppression in discrimination against small business enterprises which were or are engaged in manufacturing and selling uniform caps; and are monopolistic practices and methods of competition which are unfair, and they constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning, and in violation of Section 5 of said Act approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission on August 29, 1935, issued and served its complaint in this proceeding upon respondents, Cap Association of the United States, Inc., its officers and members, Irving L. Lewis, Jacob Bressler, Herman Buchbinder, Isaac Ross, individually and as president, treasurer, secretary, and executive secretary, respectively, of said association; Uniform Cap Manufacturers Institute, Inc., its officers and members, Murray H. Bader, Sidney Lesser, Herman Julick, Walter Seifert, individually and as president, vice president, treasurer, and secretary, respectively of said association; E. Mattes & Son, Inc., William B. Mackey, trading as J. Mackey & Sons, Pekarsky Cap Fronts, Inc., American Cap Fronts Mfg. Co., Inc., Samuel D. Basch, trading as Basch Cap Co., Wentworth Forman Co., Inc., George Brunssen Co., Inc., Nas Saw Equipment Corporation, Philadelphia Uniform Co., Inc., Kuenzel Brothers, Opper Cap Co., Figmore Uniform Cap Co., Inc., Chicago Uniform Cap Co., Jacob Apfelbaum, and Morris Greenberg and Jacob Wax, partners trading as Eastern Uniform Cap Mfg. Co., charging them with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of the provisions of said act. After the issuance of said complaint, and the filing of respondents' answers thereto, testimony and other evidence in support of the allegations of said complaint were introduced by P. C. Kolinski, attorney for the Commission, before William C. Reeves, an examiner of the Commission, theretofore duly designated by it, and in opposition to the allegations of the complaint by Elias Lieberman, David Miller, and D. L. Apfelbaum, attorneys for the respondents; and said testimony and other evidence were duly recorded and filed in the office of the Commission. Thereafter, the proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on the said complaint, the answers thereto, testimony and other evidence, briefs in support of the complaint and in opposition thereto, and the oral arguments of counsel aforesaid; and the Commission having duly considered the same, and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public, and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent, Cap Association of the United States, Inc., is a non-profit corporation existing under the laws of the State of New York with its principal office in New York City. It is a trade association of approximately one hundred members who are manufacturers of all type of caps, and prior to April 19, 1934, its corporate name was National Cap & Cloth Hat Institute, Inc. Respondents, Irving L. Lewis, Jacob Bressler, Herman Buchbinder, and Isaac Ross are officers of this respondent association in charge of conducting its activities. Respondent Uniform Cap Manufacturers Institute, Inc., is a non-profit corporation organized in September 1934, under the laws of the State of New York with its principal office in New York City. It is a trade association of twenty-seven members who are manufacturers of uniform caps. Respondents Murray H. Bader, Sidney Lesser, Herman Julick, and Walter Seifert, are officers of this respondent association in charge of conducting its activities. These association respondents and their officers are not engaged in interstate commerce on their own accounts. Respondent E. Mattes & Son, Inc., Pekarsky Cap Fronts, Inc., and American Cap Fronts Mfg. Co., are corporations existing under the laws of the State of New York, with their principal offices and places of business in New York City, engaged in the manufacture and sale of visors and trimmings used in the manufacture of uniform caps. Respondent William B. Mackey is an individual trading as J. Mackey & Sons, with his office and place of business in New York City, engaged in the manufacture and sale of visors and trimmings used in the manufacture of uniform caps. These four respondent manufacturers of visors and trimmings are, and at all times hereinafter mentioned were engaged in interstate commerce, and in the sale of visors and trimmings make shipments of such commodities from the State of New York through and into other States of the United States. The remaining respondents manufacture and sell uniform caps, being any and all types of head-wear used or worn in conjunction with a uniform. These commodities are used by the military, naval, postal and coast guard service of the United States, military service of the States, police and fire departments, railway employees, chauffeurs, telegraph messengers, building and theater attendants, gasoline, laundry, and industrial employees, and fraternal organizations. These respondents are Samuel D. Basch, an individual trading as Basch Cap Co., with his office and place of business in Boston, Mass.; Wentworth Forman Co., a corporation existing under the laws of the State of Massachusetts, with its principal office and place of business in Boston, Mass.; George Brunssen Co., Inc., and Nas Saw Equipment Corporation, corporations existing under the laws of the State of New York, with their principal offices and places of business in New York City; Philadelphia Uniform Co., Inc., and Kuenzel Brothers, corporations existing under the laws of the State of Pennsylvania, with their principal offices and places of business at Philadelphia, Pa.; Opper Cap Co., a corporation existing under the laws of the State of Ohio, with its principal office and place of business in the city of Cleveland, Ohio; Figmore Uniform Cap Co., a corporation existing under the laws of the State of Michigan, with its principal office and place of business in the city of Detroit, Mich.; Chicago Uniform Cap Co., a corporation existing under the laws of the State of Illinois, with its principal office and place of business in the city of Chicago, Ill.; Jacob Apfelbaum, an individual trading as J. Apfelbaum, with his office and principal place of business in the city of Chicago, Ill.; and Morris Greenberg and Jacob Wax, partners, trading as Eastern Uniform Cap Mfg. Co., with their office and principal place of business in the city of Chicago, Ill. With the exception of respondent Nas Saw Equipment Corporation, all of the respondents last named, engaged in the manufacture and sale of uniform caps, are, and at all times hereinafter mentioned were, engaged in interstate commerce, and make shipments of uniform caps from their respective places of business in the States of Massachusetts, New York, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Michigan, and Illinois, through and into other States of the United States.

PAR. 2. There are in the United States, and have been during the time referred to in paragraph one hereof, other persons, partnerships, and corporations engaged in the manufacture and sale of cloth caps, and other persons, partnerships and corporations engaged in the manufacture and sale of uniform caps. In the sale of these commodities, such other persons, partnerships, and corporations, pursuant to such sales, ship and have shipped such commodities into and through the various States of the United States other than the States of origin of such shipments; and with such other persons, partnerships, and corporations respondent uniform cap manufacturers are and have been in active and substantial competition. These commodities are used by the military, naval, postal, and coast guard service of the United States, military service of the States, police and fire departments, railway employees, chauffeurs, telegraph messengers, building and theater attendants, gasoline, laundry and industrial employees, and fraternal organizations.

PAR. 3. There are in the United States, and have been during the time referred to in paragraph one hereof, other persons, partnerships, and corporations engaged in the manufacture and sale of visors and trimmings used in the manufacture of uniform caps. In the sale of these commodities, such other persons, partnerships, and corporations, pursuant to such sales, ship and have shipped such commodities into and through the various States of the United States other than the States of origin of such shipments; and with such persons, partnerships and corporations, respondent visor manufacturers E. Mattes & Son, Inc., Pekarsky Cap Fronts, Inc., American Cap Fronts Mfg. Co., and William B. Mackey, are and have been in active and substantial competition. These respondents are not engaged in the manufacture and sale of uniform caps. Their commodities, visors and trimmings, used in the manufacture of uniform caps, are indispensable items necessary to the manufacture of uniform caps. Until the year 1934, these respondent visor manufacturers were the only source of supply of such necessary visors and trimming for uniform caps. At all the times hereinafter mentioned they manufactured, sold, and shipped in interstate commerce approximately 60 percent of the total volume of visors and trimmings used in the uniform cap manufacturing industry in the United States. It is not practicable for the average uniform cap manufacturer to manufacture his own visors and trimmings.

PAR. 4. Prior to the year 1933 respondent uniform cap manufacturers had been offering for sale and selling competitive uniform caps at prices determined by competition among them, and these prices in many instances varied as among said respondents. In July 1933 and thereafter, all respondents herein held a series of meetings at which they discussed and compared prices at which they were offering for sale and selling competitive uniform caps, and at and by means of such meetings came to an agreement or understanding to fix the prices at which they would and did thereafter offer for sale and sell competitive uniform caps, which prices were uniform as among said respondents. These meetings were called by the officers of respondent Cap Association of the United States, Inc., and were presided over by such officers. Pursuant to such agreement to fix prices of uniform caps, respondents printed and circulated among members of the uniform cap manufacturing industry price lists indicating the price to jobbers, the retail price, and the contract price to uniform tailors, of uniform caps manufactured and sold by respondent members. Such price lists were circulated by means of and through the use of the correspondence facilities of the respondent Cap Association of the United States, Inc. From time to time thereafter, pursuant to such understanding, respondents uniformly changed said prices and adhered to the schedule of prices as revised.

PAR. 5. Pursuant to the agreement set forth in paragraph four hereof, respondents exacted and procured agreements of cooperation from the four respondent visor and trimming manufacturers to the effect that such visor manufacturers would support, adhere to and enforce the program of respondents set forth in paragraph four hereof. Said visor manufacturers became members of the Cap Association of the United States, Inc.

PAR. 6. In September 1934, respondents organized the respondent association Uniform Cap Manufacturers Institute, Inc., being a group of uniform cap manufacturers who were and are members of the respondent Cap Association of the United States, Inc. Respondents, Murray H. Bader, Sidney Lesser, Herman Julick, and Walter Seifert acted as officers of the Uniform Cap Manufacturers Institute, Inc. which continued in active existence until June 1935. Respondents procured from the four visor manufacturer respondents agreements to cooperate with the Uniform Cap Manufacturers Institute.

PAR. 7. Respondents cooperating and confederating together and using the offices, stationery, and secretarial facilities of respondent Cap Association of the United States, Inc., printed and circulated among members, lists containing the names of uniform cap manufacturers who refused to sell uniform caps at the suggested prices mentioned in paragraph four hereof, and containing the names of uniform cap manufacturers not members of respondent Cap Association of the United States, Inc., who refused to sell uniform caps at such suggested prices, and supplied said lists to the four respondent visor manufacturers herein, and induced said visor manufacturer respondents to cease dealing with and to refuse to sell visors and trimmings to the uniform cap manufacturers so reported. Respondents used in concert and agreement among themselves, coercive and concerted action, and threats of boycott against respondent visor manufacturers to induce and require such visor manufacturers to support the program of respondents set forth in paragraph four herein, and to refrain from selling visors and trimmings to uniform cap manufacturers who were not members of said respondent association.

PAR. 8. Meetings were held in the cities of New York, Boston, Philadelphia, and Chicago, by respondent association, their members, and their officers, to devise means of exerting influence, pressure, and coercion upon uniform cap manufacturers to abide by and adhere to the program set forth in paragraph four hereof. At some of these meetings fines were imposed and collected from members who sold uniform caps below the suggested prices. In one instance a uniform cap manufacturer was threatened with a fine of $2000.00 and with strike and labor troubles.

PAR. 9. The four respondent visor manufacturers did cooperate with the other respondents herein, to carry out the program set forth in paragraph four herein. Said visor manufacturers refused to sell visors and trimmings to uniform cap manufacturers who either failed to take membership in respondent Cap Association of the United States, Inc., or who failed to observe the uniform prices fixed in the lists described in paragraph four hereof. This method of refusing necessary supplies earned for respondent manufacturers the title of "Policemen of the Industry."

PAR. 10. As a result of the combination and agreement entered into and carried on by respondents, prices of uniform caps were raised to levels higher than those prevailing before the agreement was effected and uniform price lists prepared. The prices for visors and trimmings used in the manufacture of uniform caps were advanced by the visor manufacturer respondents. The acts of respondents have deprived the purchasing public of advantages in price, service and other considerations which they would receive and enjoy under conditions of normal and free competition in the uniform cap manufacturing industry, and such acts have resulted in oppression and discrimination against small business enterprises which were or are engaged in manufacturing and selling uniform caps.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondents Cap Association of the United States, Inc., its officers and members, Irving L. Lewis, Jacob Bressler, Herman Buchbinder, Isaac Ross, individually and as president, treasurer, secretary and executive secretary, respectively, of said association; Uniform Cap Manufacturers Institute, Inc., its officers and members, Murray H. Bader, Sidney Lesser, Herman Julick, Walter Seifert, individually and as president, vice president, treasurer, and secretary, respectively, of said association; E. Mattes & Son, Inc., William B. Mackey, trading as J. Mackey & Sons, Pekarsky Cap Fronts, Inc., American Cap Fronts Mfg. Co., Inc., Samuel D. Basch, trading as Basch Cap Co., Wentworth Forman Co., Inc., George Brunssen Co., Inc., Nas Saw Equipment Corporation, Philadelphia Uniform Co., Inc., Kuenzel Brothers, Oppor Cap Co., Figmore Uniform Cap Co., Inc., Chicago Uniform Cap Co., Jacob Apfelbaum, and Morris Greenberg and Jacob Wax, partners trading as Eastern Uniform Cap Mfg. Co., are to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors, and tend unduly to hinder competition and create a monopoly, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce, within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

It is ordered, That the respondents, Cap Association of the United States Inc., its officers and members, Irving L. Lewis, Jacob Bressler, Herman Buchbinder, Isaac Ross, individually, and as president, treasurer, secretary, and executive secretary, respectively, of said association; Uniform Cap Manufacturers Institute, Inc., its officers and members, Murray H. Bader, Sidney Lesser, Herman Julick, Walter Seifert, individually and as president, vice president, treasurer, and secretary, respectively, of said association; E. Mattes & Son, Inc., William B. Mackey, trading as J. Mackey & Sons, Pekarsky Cap Fronts, Inc., American Cap Fronts Mfg. Co., Inc., Samuel D. Basch, trading as Basch Cap Co., Wentworth Forman Co., Inc., George Brunssen Co., Inc., Nas Saw Equipment Corporation, Philadelphia Uniform Co., Inc.,

Order

Kuenzel Brothers, Opper Cap Co., Figmore Uniform Cap Co., Inc., Chicago Uniform Cap Co., Jacob Apfelbaum, and Morris Greenberg and Jacob Wax, partners trading as Eastern Uniform Cap Mfg. Co., their officers, representatives, agents, and employees, in connection with the offering for sale, sale and distribution of uniform caps in interstate commerce or in the District of Columbia, do forthwith cease and desist from:

1. Entering into any agreement or understanding among themselves, or between two or more of them, or between any one or more and others, fixing the prices at which they would offer for sale or sell uniform caps.

2. Maintaining by concerted action, coercion and persuasion a boycott against and refusal to purchase visors and trimmings from any visor manufacturer who fails to abide by respondents' program to withhold supplies from non-members of their uniform price fixing agreement.

3. Publishing lists containing the names of members of respondent associations, so as to include in said lists only so-called regular or recognized members entitled to procure visors and trimmings used in the manufacture of uniform caps.

4. Refusing supplies of visors and trimmings to uniform cap manufacturers, and restricting or suppressing competition among themselves or any of them, or with others by any other similar concert of action.

It is further ordered, That the respondents shall, within 60 days after service upon them of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing, setting forth in detail the manner and form in which they have complied with this order.

IN THE MATTER OF
MILLS SALES COMPANY OF NEW YORK, INC., ET AL.

COMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION
OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 26, 1914

Docket 3070. Complaint, Mar. 8, 1937—Decision, June 10, 1937

Where a corporation and five individuals, officers thereof, engaged in sale at wholesale and retail of a variety of peddlers' and retail dealers' supplies, including toothbrushes, dental creams, razor blades, perfumes, and other drug sundries and notions, in substantial competition with others engaged in manufacture and distribution of like and similar products and sale thereof in commerce among the various States and in the District of Columbia, and including manufacturers and distributors of such products who do not fictitiously price-mark their merchandise, and also those who do not advertise or falsely represent, through their catalogs, that they are manufacturers or importers or that they have been established in business for a greater period than is the case—

- (a) Listed and described many articles and items of merchandise, in their catalogs and price lists, as possessing retail values or prices many times in excess of their actual selling price to the retailer or to the purchaser, and of the actual retail price thereof, and included among items and articles thus described a number which had stamped or printed thereon, or on the labels thereof, or on the containers in which offered and sold to the public, fictitious retail prices many times in excess of the actual selling price of said items or articles of merchandise, as sold by peddler or retailer to consuming public, and in excess of their true and actual value, and which were not intended, by either themselves or their purchasers buying for resale, to be true retail price or retail value of merchandise thus marked, but to be far in excess of price intended to be and actually charged for sale thereof to ultimate consumer purchaser in usual course of trade, and far in excess of true value of various items thus marked;

With result of placing in the hands of its peddler and retailer customers buying for resale, an instrument and means enabling them to commit a fraud upon a substantial part of consuming public through representing, offering, and selling shaving and dental creams, cosmetics, and other drug sundries involved, as genuinely superior products produced by the manufacturer with intent of sale thereof in usual course of trade to public at and for retail price stamped thereon or on containers thereof;

- (b) Designated, in catalogs and other advertising matter, certain domestic perfumes made or compounded in the United States, as "L'Odeur d'Amour" and "Perfumes of France," and set forth on the containers of one of said perfumes certain printed matter in the French language to the effect that products in question had been made by the French firm there named in their factories near Paris, etc.; and
- (c) Represented, in solicitation and sale of their said commodities, that business in question was an old established one, and that corporation had been wholesaler for some twenty years, and that they were importers and manufacturers of toilettries, drug sundries, razor blades, etc., and made such statements as "now located in New York only * * * We have discontinued all other branches * * * Chicago branch discontinued," notwithstanding fact corporation in question was organized, etc., in 1936 and not 1916, and had been, accordingly, wholesaler for only extremely limited period thus indicated, they were not manufacturers and did not own, control, operate, or have any interest whatsoever in manufacturing establishments making such products, and had never operated place of business in Chicago, or in any other place than in New York City;

With results that a substantial portion of the consuming public of the several States was misled into the belief that various items of merchandise, described as hereinbefore set forth, were a superior value and were to be sold and distributed with the intent and purpose that they should be sold at retail prices closely approximating those stamped thereon, and that said products, by reason of the marks affixed or stamped thereon, were composed of superior ingredients and ordinarily retailed, in usual course of trade, for prices closely approximating those stamped on merchandise, and that they were manufacturers of said products, in business for a great many years, and were importers of perfumes, etc., and that aforesaid perfumes had been made in and imported from France or some other foreign country, and with tendency and capacity to mislead and deceive distributors and purchasing public into erroneous belief that said statements and representations were true, and with effect of inducing members of public to buy their products on account of such belief, and of unfairly diverting trade to them from competitors; to the injury of the general and to the damage and injury of manufacturers and distributors, and to the substantial injury of competition in commerce:

Held, That such acts and practices were to the prejudice of the public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition.

Mr. S. Brogdyne Teu, II for the Commission.

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that Mills Sales Company of New York, Inc., a corporation, David Jacoby, Evelyn Jacoby, Joseph Jacoby, Estelle J. Kruger and Walter Jacoby, individuals, officers of the aforesaid corporation, all hereinafter referred to as respondents, have been and are using unfair methods of competition in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in said act, and it appearing to said Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint, stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent Mills Sales Company of New York, Inc., is a corporation having its principal office and place of business located at 901 Broadway, in the city of New York, State of New York, and operating a branch store located at 87 Orchard Street, city of New York, State of New York. It has been, for more than one year last past engaged in the sale and distribution of cosmetics, perfumes and notions to retail dealers and peddlers purchasing for resale, and also to the public direct. In the course and conduct of its business it offers said products for sale and sells the same in commerce between the State of New York and the several States of the United States and the District of Columbia.

Respondents David Jacoby, Evelyn Jacoby, Joseph Jacoby, Estelle J. Kruger, and Walter Jacoby, are respectively, president, vice-president, treasurer, secretary, and assistant secretary of the aforementioned respondent corporation. They have their principal places of business at the above-mentioned addresses of the Mills Sales Company of New York, Inc. They all participate in the management and direction of the Mills Sales Company of New York, Inc., and its sales policies and general business operations.

PAR. 2. When said products are sold, respondents transport or cause the same to be transported from their places of business in the State of New York to purchasers thereof located in States of the United States other than the State of New York, and in the District of Columbia. There has been for more than one year last past, and still is, a constant current of trade and commerce in said products so sold by respondents, between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia. Respondents are now, and for more than one year last past have been engaged in substantial competition with other individuals, firms, partnerships, and corporations engaged in the manufacture, sale, and distribution of like and similar products in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 3. Respondents in soliciting the sale and in the selling of their commodities, and for the purpose of creating a demand on the part of the consuming public for said commodities, have advertised their commodities through the media of catalogues, price lists, and other printed matter published, issued and circulated through the United States mails to their customers and prospective customers in the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

In the aforesaid ways and by the aforesaid means, respondents make and have made to the general public false and misleading statements with reference to the commodities offered by them for sale. Many articles and items of merchandise listed in said catalogues and price lists are described as possessing retail values greatly in excess of the actual selling price of respondents to the retailers or other purchasers, and greatly in excess of the actual value thereof. A number of the said items and articles of merchandise described in the aforesaid catalogues have retail prices stamped or printed on the labels attached thereto, or on the containers in which they are offered for sale and sold to the public.

Representative of such statements and representations made by the respondents on the containers regarding the selling price and value of the commodities thus offered by them for sale are the following: Economy First Aid Kit. Price 25¢; Safeguard Brand DeLuxe Liquid Latex. Price $4; Dupree Pills. Price $2 per box; You love to season with pure spices. Allspice Price 35¢; Champion Cup Shaving Soap. Price 15¢; Spirits of Camphor, U. S. P. Value 35¢; Lather Shave Cream. Palm and Olive Oil. A product of Palm and Olive Oils. Price 35¢; Dr. Ross' Tooth Paste. Contains Milk of Magnesia. Price 60¢; Royal Blue Dental Cream. Contains Milk of Magnesia. Price 60¢; and Campbell's Lather Shave Cream. Price 35¢.

In truth and in fact the Economy First Aid Kit is sold to the retail trade for 5¢ per unit; Safeguard Brand DeLuxe Liquid Latex is sold to the retail trade for $1 per unit; Dupree pills are sold to the retail trade for 25¢ per box; You love to season with pure spices. Allspice is sold to the retail trade for 6¢ per unit; Champion Cup Shaving Soap is sold to the retail trade for 2¢ per unit; Spirits of Camphor, U. S. P., is sold to the retail trade for 7¢; Lather Shave Cream. Palm and Olive Oil. A product of Palm and Olive Oils, is sold to the retail trade for 4¢; Dr. Ross' Tooth Paste. Contains Milk of Magnesia, is sold to the retail trade for 6¢; Royal Blue Dental Cream. Contains Milk of Magnesia, is sold to the retail trade for 10¢; and Campbell's Lather Shave Cream is sold to the retail trade for 6¢ per unit.

The respective items above referred to are usually and customarily sold to retail dealers or peddlers for the retail prices indicated in the unnumbered paragraph immediately preceding this one. The said retail prices at which the products are actually sold to retail consumers do not appear on the containers.

The said catalogues of respondents contain many other instances where fictitious retail prices are imprinted upon the label or carton.

Over a period of many years, manufacturers in many trades have adopted and followed the custom of marking or stamping on the article or item of manufacture, or on the container thereof, the retail price at which the said manufacturers suggest that the retailer should sell the item or article to the ultimate consumer purchaser.

This suggested retail price so stamped or marked is intended to represent the cost to the manufacturer of the article plus a reasonable profit for the manufacturer and the retailer, and, consequently, to represent the approximate retail sale value of the item. The public generally understands this custom and has been led to and does place its confidence in the price-marking so stamped and the representations so made as to the quality of the product, to the extent that it purchases a substantial volume of merchandise in reliance on this aforesaid custom.

For many years a substantial portion of the consuming public has had and has expressed a marked preference for dental creams, shaving creams, toilet articles and similar household notions which are composed of superior ingredients and which are produced by the manufacturers thereof with the intent and design of selling said products for prices in excess of the general and usual range of prices for similar products or for products made of inferior ingredients. Said manufacturers, following the custom herein detailed, have marked or stamped the suggested retail price on said products as indicating the superior quality and character of the product and its higher value.

Whenever a genuinely superior product so stamped or marked with the retail price thereon is offered for sale at a substantially reduced price, the general purchasing public is led to believe and does believe that in purchasing said product it is securing a bargain not ordinarily obtainable in the usual course of trade. The purchasing public has a preference for purchasing genuinely superior products sold at less than the customary retail prices thereof over ordinary products sold for their regular price which is lower than the normal retail value of the superior products in the customary course of trade.

The retail prices so stamped or printed as aforesaid upon respondents' products are greatly in excess of the actual selling price of the said items or articles of merchandise by the retailer to the consuming public and are in excess of their true and actual value. The retail prices so stamped or printed as aforesaid are false and fictitious and in no sense represent either the true value or the true selling price of the articles so price-marked.

PAR. 4. The said catalogues published and distributed by the respondents also contain other instances of misleading descriptions and representations of their commodities; among them are the following:

1. Perfumes represented and designated as "L' Odeur d' Amour." On this container appears certain printed matter in the French language which, when translated, reads as follows:

This specialty and these accessories have been created by Oralee Brothers in their factories in the City of Perfumes at Suresnes, near Paris (France). They are the exclusive property of Oralee Brothers for the United States of America where they are manufactured.

Counterfeits will be rigorously prosecuted.

All our specialties are sold under the own name of "Oralee Brothers" without any forenames.

Oralee Brothers, Paris, France.

2. Package of perfumes bearing (in French) the legend, "Perfumes of France".

For many years a substantial part of the consuming public has had, and still has, and has so expressed, a marked preference for perfumes and toilettries which are manufactured or compounded in foreign countries, and especially in France, and then imported into the United States.

The aforementioned representations and description appearing on the aforesaid articles by labels printed in the French language serve to lead purchasers and prospective purchasers into the erroneous and mistaken belief that the commodities so described and referred to are manufactured in France.

In truth and in fact, the aforesaid articles are not manufactured in France or any other foreign country, but are domestic products made or compounded in the United States.

PAR. 5. The respondents, in soliciting the sale of and selling their said commodities, and for the purpose of creating the impression that the respondent Mills Sales Company of New York, Inc., is an old established business, represent that respondent has been a wholesaler since 1916.

PAR. 6. The respondents, in soliciting the sale of and selling their commodities, and for the purpose of creating a demand on the part of the consuming public for such commodities, now cause and for more than one year last past have caused themselves to be represented, through their letterheads and circulars, order blanks and general business stationery, as importers and manufacturers of toilettries, drug sundries, razor blades, novelties and notions.

PAR. 7. The respondents further represent, through such statements as, "Now located in New York only * * * we have discontinued all other branches * * * Chicago branch discontinued," and other statements of like import, represent that the corporate respondent at one time operated a place of business in the city of Chicago, in the State of Illinois.

In truth and in fact the above set out representations of the respondents are false in that the respondents' business is not an old established business. The corporate respondents' business was incorporated in 1936. The respondents are not in any sense whatsoever importers of any of the aforementioned products, and they are not in any sense whatsoever manufacturers of the said articles. The said corporate respondents have never operated a branch in the city of Chicago, State of Illinois, or at any other place than in the city of New York, State of New York.

PAR. 8. The aforesaid false and misleading advertising and representations, together with the aforesaid false and fictitious price markings, on the part of the respondents, place in the hands of the aforesaid peddlers and retailers buying for resale, an instrument and means whereby said peddlers and retailers may commit a fraud upon a substantial portion of the consuming public, by enabling such dealers to represent and offer for sale and sell respondents' said shaving cream, dental cream, and other toilet notions as being genuinely superior, or imported, products produced and sold by the manufacturer thereof with the intent and purpose of selling the said products in the usual course of trade to the general consuming public at and for approximately the retail price stamped on said products or on their containers.

PAR. 9. There are, among the competitors of the respondents in commerce, as described in paragraph 1 above, manufacturers and distributors of like and similar products who truthfully advertise and represent the nature, merit, and value of their respective products and the nature and size of their business. There are also among the competitors of respondents manufacturers and distributors of like and similar products who refrain from advertising or representing through their catalogues and other advertising media and through fictitious price markings, that the merchandise offered for sale by them has a merit, origin or value that it does not have.

PAR. 10. The effect of the foregoing false and misleading representations and acts of the respondents in selling and offering for sale such items of merchandise as hereinbefore referred to, is to mislead a substantial portion of the purchasing and consuming public in the several States of the United States, by inducing them to mistakenly believe:

1. That the various items of merchandise described in respondents' catalogues and other advertising media were and are of superior value and were and are sold and distributed by respondents with the intent and purpose that said products should be sold at retail prices closely approximating the prices stamped thereon.

2. That the said products, because of the price marks fixed or stamped thereon, are composed of superior ingredients and are products which ordinarily retail, in the usual course of trade, for prices closely approximating the prices stamped on the merchandise.

3. That the respondents are manufacturers of said products, and large scale operators and distributors, and have been in business a great many years and conduct their business on such a scale as to assure purchasers of a superior quality and lower price by trading with such operators.

4. That the respondents are importers of perfumes, notions and other toiletries.

5. That the perfumes described in paragraph 4 are manufactured in and imported from France or some other foreign country.

The foregoing false and misleading statements and representations on the part of respondents have induced and still induce a substantial number of retail merchants as well as the consumer purchasers of said commodities, to buy the products offered for sale, sold and distributed by respondents, on account of the aforesaid erroneous and mistaken beliefs. As a result thereof trade has been diverted from those competitors of respondents engaged in similar businesses, referred to in paragraph 9 above. As a consequence thereof, substantial injury has been and is being done by respondents to competition in commerce between and among the various States of the United States.

PAR. 11. The aforementioned methods, acts and practices of respondents are all to the prejudice of the public and respondents' competitors, as hereinabove alleged. Said methods, acts and practices constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914.

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

of competition in commerce in violation of the provisions of said act. On May 14, 1937 the respondents filed their answer, in which answer they admit all the material allegations of the complaint to be true, and state that they waive hearing on the charges set forth in said complaint and consent that, without further evidence or intervening procedure, the Commission might issue and serve upon them findings as to the facts and conclusion and an order to cease and desist from the violations of law charged in the complaint. Thereafter, the proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on the said complaint, and answer thereto, and the Commission having duly considered the same, and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public, and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. The respondents are the Mills Sales Company of New York, Inc., a New York corporation organized and doing business by virtue of and under the laws of the State of New York, and David Jacoby, Evelyn Jacoby, Joseph Jacoby, Estelle J. Krueger, and Walter Jacoby, respectively president, vice president, treasurer, secretary, and assistant secretary of the Mills Sales Company of New York, Inc.

PAR. 2. Respondents have been for more than one year last past engaged in the wholesale and retail business of dealing in, and selling at retail, a variety of peddlers' and retail dealers' supplies, including tooth brushes, dental creams, razor blades, perfumes, and other drug sundries and notions.

PAR. 3. In the sale of said products respondents have transported or caused the same to be transported from their principal place of business in the State of New York to the purchasers thereof, located in States of the United States other than the State from which the shipment originated, and in the District of Columbia. There has been for more than one year last past, and still is, a constant current of trade and commerce in said products so distributed and sold by respondents between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

For more than one year last past the respondents have been engaged in substantial competition with other individuals, partnerships, firms, and corporations engaged in the manufacture and distribution of like and similar products, and in the sale thereof in commerce between and among the various States in the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 4. In the course and conduct of their business as aforesaid the respondents, in soliciting the sale of and in selling their products, and for the purpose of creating a demand upon the part of the consuming public for said products, have for more than one year last past caused their products to be advertised through the media of catalogs, price lists, and other printed matter published, issued, and circulated through the United States mails to their customers and prospective customers in the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia. In the said ways and by said means respondents have made to the general public many unfair, false, and misleading statements with reference to the commodities offered by them for sale.

PAR. 5. Many articles and items of merchandise listed in said catalogs and price lists have been described as possessing retail values or prices many times in excess of the actual selling price by the respondents to the retailer or other purchaser and many times in excess of the actual retail price thereof.

A number of the said items and articles of merchandise described in said catalogs have retail prices stamped or printed thereon, on the labels attached thereto or on the containers in which they have been offered for sale and sold to the public. The retail prices so stamped or printed as aforesaid are many times in excess of the actual selling price of the said items or articles of merchandise sold by the peddler or retailer to the consuming public, and are many times in excess of their true and actual value. The retail prices so stamped or printed as aforesaid are false and fictitious and in no sense represent either the true value or the true selling price of the articles so price marked.

PAR. 6. Among the misleading and fictitious price markings appearing on cartons and containers and advertised by respondents in catalogs, price lists, and in other advertising matter are the following:

(a) "Economy First Aid Kit"—"Price 25¢", whereas this item is regularly sold by said respondents at retail for 5¢ per unit.

(b) "Safeguard Brand DeLuxe Liquid Latex"—"Price $4", whereas this item is regularly sold by said respondents at retail for $1 per unit.

(c) "Dupree Pills"—"Price $2 per box", whereas this item is regularly sold by said respondents at retail for 25¢ per box.

(d) "You love to season with pure spices"—"Allspice"—"Price 35¢", whereas this item is regularly sold by said respondents at retail for 6¢ per unit.

(e) "Champion Cup Shaving Soap"—"Price 15¢", whereas this item is regularly sold by said respondents at retail for 2¢ per unit.

(f) "Spirits of Camphor, U. S. P."—"Value 35¢", whereas this item is regularly sold by said respondents at retail for 7¢ per unit.

Findings

25 F. T. C.

(g) "Lather Shave Cream"—"Palm and Olive Oil"—"A product of Palm and Olive Oils"—"Price 35¢", whereas this item is regularly sold by said respondents at retail for 4¢ per unit.

(h) "Dr. Ross' Tooth Paste"—"Contains Milk of Magnesia"—"Price 60¢", whereas this item is regularly sold by said respondents at retail for 6¢ per unit.

(i) "Royal Blue Dental Cream"—"Contains Milk of Magnesia"—"Price 60¢", whereas this item is regularly sold by said respondents at retail for 10¢ per unit.

(j) "Campbell's Lather Shave Cream"—"Price 35¢", whereas this item is regularly sold by said respondents at retail for 6¢ per unit.

PAR. 7. The retail prices which, as indicated above, appear on the items of merchandise or on the containers thereof are not and were not intended by either the respondents or the purchaser purchasing for resale to be the true retail price or the true retail value of the merchandise so price marked. The retail prices thus appearing on the items of merchandise or on the containers thereof were intended by the respondents and by the purchasers purchasing for resale to be far in excess of the price intended to be charged and actually charged for the sale of merchandise to the ultimate consumer purchasing in the usual course of trade, and far in excess of the true value of the various items of merchandise so price marked.

PAR. 8. Over a period of many years manufacturers have in many trades formed the custom of price marking or stamping on the article or item of manufacture, or on the container thereof, the retail price at which said manufacturers suggest the retailer should sell the item or article to the ultimate consumer purchaser. This suggested retail price so stamped or marked is intended to represent the cost of the manufacture of the article, plus a reasonable profit for the manufacturer and retailer and, consequently, to represent the approximate retail sale value of the item. The range of the suggested retail price is intended by the manufacturer to be indicative of the quality and character of the ingredients used and the process by which the item is manufactured. The public generally understands the custom herein detailed, and has been led to and does place its confidence in the price markings so stamped and the representations thereby made as to the quality of the product to the extent that it purchases a substantial volume of merchandise in reliance on this aforesaid custom.

PAR. 9. For many years a substantial part of the consuming public has expressed and has had a marked preference for dental creams, shaving creams, toilet articles, and like and similar drug sundries that are composed of superior ingredients and are produced by the manufacturer thereof with the intent and design of selling said products for prices in excess of the general and usual range of prices for similar products manufactured with the usual and customary ingredients or with inferior ingredients. Said manufacturers following the custom herein detailed, have marked or stamped the suggested retail prices on said products as an indication of the superior quality and character of the product and its resulting higher value. Whenever a genuinely superior product so stamped or marked with the retail price thereof is offered for sale at a substantially reduced price, the general purchasing public has been led to believe and does believe that in purchasing said product it is securing a bargain not ordinarily obtainable in the usual course of trade.

The purchasing public has a preference for purchasing genuinely superior products sold at less than the customary retail values thereof over ordinary products sold for the regular price, which is lower than the normal retail price of the superior product in the customary course of trade.

PAR. 10. The said catalogs, price lists, and other advertising literature of respondents contain many other instances where fictitious retail prices are imprinted upon the label or carton.

PAR. 11. The catalogs, price lists, and other advertising literature of respondents contain many other instances of false and misleading representations. Among them are the following:

(1) Perfumes represented and designated as "L'Odeur d' Amour." On this container appears certain printed matter in the French language which, when translated, reads as follows:

This specialty and these accessories have been created by Oralee Brothers in their factories in the City of Perfumes at Suresnes, near Paris (France). They are for the exclusive property of Oralee Brothers for the United States of America where they are manufactured.

Counterfeits will be rigorously prosecuted.

All our specialties are sold under the own name of "Oralee Brothers" without any forenames.

Oralee Brothers, Paris, France.

(2) Package of perfumes bearing (in French) the legend, "Perfumes of France".

PAR. 12. For many years a substantial part of the consuming public has had, and still has, and has so expressed, a marked preference for perfumes and toilettries which are manufactured or compounded in foreign countries, and especially in France, and then imported into the United States.

PAR. 13. The aforesaid articles of perfumes are not manufactured in France or in any other country, but are domestic products made or compounded in the United States.

PAR. 14. The respondents in soliciting the sale and selling their said commodities have represented that the respondent, Mills Sales Company of New York, Inc., is an old established business, and further represents that respondent, Mills Sales Company of New York, Inc., has been a wholesaler since 1916.

Mills Sales Company of New York, Inc. was organized and incorporated in 1936 and has only been a wholesaler since 1936.

PAR. 15. The respondents in soliciting the sale and selling their commodities have represented themselves through letterheads and circulars, order blanks, and general business stationery to be importers and manufacturers of toiletries, drug sundries, razor blades, novelties, and general drug sundries and notions.

PAR. 16. The respondents are not manufacturers of toiletries, drug sundries, razor blades, novelties, and general drug sundries, and notions, nor do they own, control, operate, or have any interest whatsoever in manufacturing establishments making toiletries, drug sundries, razor blades, novelties, and notions.

PAR. 17. The respondent further represents through such statements as "now located in New York only * * * We have discontinued all other branches * * * Chicago branch discontinued" and other statements of like import, that the corporate respondent at one time operated a place of business in the city of Chicago, in the State of Illinois.

The respondent, Mills Sales Company of New York, Inc., has never operated a place of business in the city of Chicago, in the State of Illinois or at any other place than in the city of New York, State of New York.

PAR. 18. The false and misleading advertising and representations hereinabove set out together with the false and fictitious price markings herein set out on the part of respondents place in the hands of the aforesaid peddlers and retailers, buying for resale, an instrument and a means whereby said peddlers and retailers may, and do, commit a fraud upon a substantial part of the consuming public by enabling such dealers to represent and offer for sale and sell the said shaving cream, dental cream, cosmetics, and other general line of drug sundries as genuinely superior products produced by the manufacturer thereof, with the intent and purpose of selling the said products in the usual course of trade to the general consuming public at and for the retail price stamped on the products or on their containers.

PAR. 19. There are among the competitors of the respondents in interstate commerce manufacturers and distributors of like and similar products who do not fictitiously price mark the merchandise offered for sale by them. There are also among the competitors of the respondents in interstate commerce manufacturers and distributors of like and similar products who do not advertise or represent through their catalogs that they are manufacturers, importers, or have been established in business for a great period of time unless such are the facts.

PAR. 20. The effect of the foregoing false and misleading representations and acts of the respondents in selling and offering for sale items of merchandise herein described is to mislead a substantial portion of the consuming public in the several States of the United States by inducing them to believe:

1. That the various items of merchandise described in respondents' catalogs and other advertising media were and are of superior value, and were and are sold and distributed by respondents with the intent and purpose that said products should be sold at retail prices closely approximating the prices stamped thereon.

2. That the said products, because of the price marks affixed or stamped thereon, are composed of superior ingredients and are products which ordinarily retail in the usual course of trade for prices closely approximating the prices stamped on the merchandise.

3. That the respondents are manufacturers of said products and have been in business a great many years.

4. That the respondents are importers of perfumes, notions, and other general line of drug sundries.

5. That the perfumes described in paragraph 11 are manufactured in and imported from France, or some other foreign country, into the United States.

PAR. 21. The use of each and all the foregoing false and misleading statements and representations by the respondents as herein set out has had and now has the tendency and capacity to mislead and deceive distributors and the purchasing public into the erroneous and mistaken belief that said statements and representations are true, and has induced and now induces members of the public to purchase the products of the said respondents on account of such erroneous beliefs, to the resultant damage and injury of manufacturers and distributors, and to the injury of the general public. Said representations have thereby unfairly diverted trade to said respondents from competitors, and substantial injury has been done by respondents to competition in commerce among and between the various States of the United States.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondents, Mills Sales Company of New York, Inc., a corporation, David Jacoby, individually, and as president of Mills Sales Company of New York, Inc.,

Evelyn Jacoby, individually, and as vice president of Mills Sales Company of New York, Inc., Joseph Jacoby, individually, and as treasurer of Mills Sales Company of New York, Inc., Estelle J. Krueger, individually, and as secretary of Mills Sales Company of New York, Inc., and Walter Jacoby, individually, and as assistant secretary of Mills Sales Company of New York, Inc., are to the prejudice of the public and of respondents' competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce, within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

This proceeding having been heard by the Federal Trade Commission upon the complaint of the Commission and the answer of respondents, in which answer respondents admit all the material allegations of the complaint to be true and state that they waive hearing on the charges set forth in said complaint and consent that without further evidence or other intervening procedure the Commission may issue and serve upon them its findings as to the facts and conclusion and an order to cease and desist from the violations of law charged in the complaint, and the Commission having made its findings as to the facts and conclusion that said respondents have violated the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes,"

It is ordered, That the respondents, Mills Sales Company of New York, Inc., and David Jacoby, Evelyn Jacoby, Joseph Jacoby, Estelle J. Krueger, and Walter Jacoby, individually, and as officers of said Mills Sales Company of New York, Inc., and their respective agents, representatives, or employees, individual or corporate, in connection with the offering for sale, sale, and distribution of cosmetics, perfumes, tooth brushes, shaving creams, tooth paste, and other drug sundries and novelties, in interstate commerce or in the District of Columbia, do forthwith cease and desist from:

Causing cartons and containers in which said articles of merchandise are offered for sale to the public, to be printed, labeled, marked, or stamped with retail prices in excess of the actual and usual selling prices at which the said articles are sold by retailers to the consuming public; or

Representing, directly or indirectly, by newspaper, or magazine advertisement, articles, catalogs, labels, letterheads, or any other form of printed matter, or by radio broadcasting or in any other manner:

1. That the prices marked or affixed to or stamped on the products sold by them, or on the containers thereof, are the regular or customary retail prices for such products when said price marks are fictitious and greatly in excess of the regular and customary prices at which said products are sold or offered for sale at retail;

2. That their perfumes, cosmetics, and other notions are manufactured in France or any other foreign country;

3. That the respondents, or any one of them, are importers of said products sold by them;

4. That the respondents, or any one of them, are manufacturers of any of the said products sold by them;

5. That the respondent, Mills Sales Company of New York, Inc., is a large scale operator and distributor; that it has been in business since 1916 and is an old established business; and that it formerly operated branches in any city other than New York City;

It is further ordered, That respondents shall, within 60 days from the date of the service upon them of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth the manner and form in which they have complied with the order herein set forth.

FOODS, INC.

COMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION
OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 26, 1914

Docket 2909. Complaint, Sept. 8, 1936¹—Decision, June 11, 1937

Where a corporation and its subsidiary distributing agency engaged, as case might be, in manufacture and sale of jams, preserves, and other food products, in substantial competition with those offering or selling similar products in like commerce, and including therein those engaged in manufacture of jams and preserves in accordance with conception thereof entertained by trade and consuming public, and who truthfully describe and represent their products, and including also preserve manufacturers making products similar to those made by said corporation, as hereinbelow set forth, and who label, describe, and sell the same as imitation preserves, in accordance with universal practice among other manufacturers—

Offered and sold, to retailers, chain stores, and others, certain imitation preserves and imitation jams which so simulated in appearance the genuine that the difference in fruit content could not be discerned by visual inspection, in jars or containers labeled as "Pure Preserves," together with name of particular fruit, notwithstanding fact products in question, thus labeled, were not made from the edible portion of the fruit or fruits indicated and in the proportion of forty-five pounds of actual fruit to each fifty-five pounds of sugar, but were adulterated by undisclosed substitution, in part, for fruits of mixture of water, sugar, and pectin, and were not jams, pure jams, preserves, or pure preserves, within meaning and popular acceptance of words "jams" or "preserves," as implying composition and proportion hereinbefore indicated;

With result that competitors selling standard unadulterated preserves were placed at a decided disadvantage in the marketing of their products in competition with the less costly imitation preserves made by said corporation and labeled, sold and described, as aforesaid, as "Pure Preserves," and at prices to dealers which producers of the genuine product could not meet by reason of fruit shortage in, and consequent lower production cost of, imitation product, and with capacity and tendency to mislead and deceive trade and consuming public into belief that products described as aforesaid by said corporation had been made from at least forty-five pounds of fruit or fruits involved to fifty-five pounds of sugar, and into purchase thereof in reliance on such erroneous belief, and with result of placing in hands of dealers at wholesale and retail, instrument of fraud enabling them to mislead and deceive public, and with capacity and tendency, further, unfairly to divert trade to them from their competitors, and otherwise injuriously affect the same; to the substantial injury of substantial competition in commerce:

¹ Amended.

Held, That such acts and practices were to the prejudice of the public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition.

Mr. James M. Brinson and Mr. James M. Hammond for the Commission.

Mr. Henry Duke, of Long Island City, N. Y., for respondents.

AMENDED COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that the National Kream Company, Inc., and National Foods, Inc., corporations hereinafter designated respondents, have been and are, and each has been and is, using unfair methods of competition in commerce as "commerce" is defined in said act, and it appearing to said Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, and having determined to modify its complaint herein heretofore on August 22, 1936, issued, hereby issues its amended complaint stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondents National Kream Company, Inc., and National Foods, Inc., are now, and for several years last past have been, corporations organized, existing and doing business under the laws of the State of New York, with offices and principal place of business at 360 Furman Street, in Brooklyn, in said State.

Respondent National Kream Company, Inc., has been during such period, and now is, engaged in the manufacture of jams, jellies, preserves, and other food products and each of them has been and is engaged in their sale, and also in the sale of jams, jellies, and preserves purchased by them, and each of them, from other manufacturers, in commerce between and among the State of New York and the various States of the United States other than the State of New York.

National Foods, Inc., acts as a distributing agency for National Kream Company, Inc. and is a subsidiary of, and owned, controlled, managed, and directed by National Kream Company, Inc. Some of the jams, jellies, and preserves manufactured by National Kream Company, Inc., or purchased by it from other manufacturers, are sold in commerce as above described, bearing labels of National Foods, Inc.

It has been and is the practice of respondents, and each of them, to transport such products, or cause them to be transported, when sold, from their said place of business at Brooklyn, N. Y., to purchasers thereof located in States of the United States other than the State of New York.

Respondents have been and are, and each of them has been and is, engaged in substantial competition in interstate commerce with individuals, partnerships, and corporations offering for sale or selling jams, jellies, preserves, and other food products in like commerce.

PAR. 2. It has been and is the practice of respondents and of each of them to offer for sale and sell their products to retail dealers, chain stores and others in jars or containers bearing labels which represent that the contents of such jars or containers are "pure jams," "pure jellies," or "pure preserves." Such labels also name the fruits which respondents represent have been used in the manufacture of the contents of such jars or containers.

The following are typical labels which indicate the said representations, by means of which respondents induce purchase of their products:

In truth and in fact the products of respondents, so denominated, described and represented, have not been and are not jams, jellies or preserves or pure jam, pure jellies or pure preserves within the meaning and popular acceptance of the words "jams," "jellies," or "preserves."

The expressions "jams," "fruit jams," "jelly," "fruit jelly," "preserves," and "fruit preserves" signify and mean to and are known and understood by the trade and the purchasing public to be a product prepared from a mixture of the fruit or fruits specifically named on the label, or otherwise specified or represented, with sugar in the proportion of at least forty-five pounds of fruit to fifty-five pounds of sugar and cooked to an appropriate consistence, or expressed in terms of percentages, a product so cooked from at least 45 percent of fruit and 55 percent of sugar.

The jams, jellies, and preserves offered for sale and sold by respondents and each of them, in interstate commerce, by and with the representation that they have been or were jams, or pure jams, jellies or pure jellies, preserves or pure preserves have been or were adulterated by the substitution in part for fruits of a mixture of water, sugar, and pectin, so that the products have contained substantially less fruit than the pure or genuine jams, jellies, and preserves.

Respondents have failed to disclose such deficiency of the fruit so named on the label, or otherwise specified or represented, and the presence of substitutes therefor in their products. This practice of respondents lowers and reduces the quality of their products and enables them to sell adulterated jams, jellies, and preserves, as, and for the pure and genuine articles they purport to be and are not.

PAR. 3. Water, sugar, and pectin, the materials used for adulteration by respondent National Kream Company, Inc., in the manufacture of its so-called jams, jellies, and preserves are less expensive than the fruit for which they are substituted, and in addition thereto, the substitution of water, sugar and pectin for the proportion of fruit prescribed by the usages of the trade and the popular significance of the words "jams," "jellies," and "preserves" enables respondent National Kream Company, Inc., to procure a substantially higher yield than results from use of the proportion of at least forty-five pounds of fruit to fifty-five pounds of sugar.

Such practice of so substituting water, sugar and pectin in part for fruit, results in the reduction of costs of manufacture for National Kream Company, Inc., both because of greater yield and cheaper material.

PAR. 4. There are now and for several years last past have been individuals, partnerships and corporations engaged in the manufacture of jams, jellies and preserves in accordance with the conception of jams, jellies, and preserves entertained by the trade and consuming public, as more particularly described in paragraph 2 hereof, and in their sale in interstate commerce, truthfully described and represented, in competition with respondents.

PAR. 5. The practices of respondents and each of them in offering for sale and selling as jams, or pure jams, as jellies or pure jellies, as preserves or pure preserves, products which have not been manufactured from at least forty-five pounds or forty-five percent of the fruit or fruits named on the label, or otherwise specified or represented, to fifty-five pounds, or fifty-five percent of sugar, but which have been adulterated with substitutes in part for said named fruit or fruits, have had and have the capacity and tendency to mislead and deceive the trade including wholesale and retail dealers and the consuming public into the belief that the products described as jams or pure jam, jelly or pure jelly, preserves or pure preserves, have been or are made from at least forty-five pounds of said fruit or fruits to fifty-five pounds of sugar and into the purchase of respondents' products in reliance on such erroneous belief.

By such practices, respondents have placed or put directly into the hands of dealers, wholesale and retail, an instrument of fraud by means of which they have been and are enabled to mislead and deceive the consuming public.

PAR. 6. The aforesaid practices of respondents described in paragraph 2 hereof have had and have the capacity and tendency to divert trade to respondents from their competitors mentioned in paragraph 4 hereof, and otherwise injuriously to affect them. Thereby substantial injury has been done, and still is being done, by respondents to substantial competition in interstate commerce.

PAR. 7. The aforesaid practices of respondents have been and are all to the prejudice of the public and respondents' competitors, and have been and are unfair methods of competition in interstate commerce in violation of the provisions of Section 5 of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

attorney for the respondents; and said testimony and other evidence were duly recorded and filed in the office of the Commission. Thereafter, the proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on the said amended complaint, the answer thereto, testimony and other evidence, briefs in support of the amended complaint and in opposition thereto, and the oral arguments of counsel aforesaid; and the Commission having duly considered the same, and being now fully advised in the premises finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public, and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondents, National Kream Company, Inc., and National Foods, Inc., are now, and have been for several years last past, corporations organized and existing in accordance with the laws of the State of New York, with their offices and principal places of business located at 360 Furman Street in Brooklyn in said State.

Respondent, National Kream Company, Inc., has been and is now engaged in the manufacture of jams, preserves, and other food products and together with the respondent, National Foods, Inc., has been and is engaged in their sale, and in the sale of jams and preserves purchased by them, and each of them, from other manufacturers, in commerce between and among the State of New York and the various other States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

The respondent, National Foods, Inc., acts as a distributing agency for the respondent, National Kream Company, Inc., and is a subsidiary of, and is owned, controlled, managed, and directed by the said National Kream Company, Inc. Some of the jams and preserves manufactured by National Kream Company, Inc., or purchased by it from other manufacturers, are sold in commerce as above described, bearing labels of National Foods, Inc.

It has been and is the practice of respondents, and each of them, to transport such products, or cause them to be transported, when sold, from their said place of business at Brooklyn, N. Y., to purchasers thereof located in States of the United States other than the State of New York.

The respondents have been and are, and each of them has been and is engaged in substantial competition in interstate commerce with corporations, individuals and partnerships offering for sale or selling jams, preserves, and other food products in like commerce.

PAR. 2. It has been and is the practice of respondents, and of each of them, to offer for sale and sell their products to retail dealers, chain stores and others in jars or containers bearing labels which represent that the contents of such jars or containers are "pure preserves." Such labels also name the fruits which respondents represent have been used in the manufacture of the contents of such jars or containers.

The following are typical labels which indicate the said representations by means of which respondents induce the purchase of their products:

In truth and in fact, the products of respondents, so denominated, described and represented, have not been and are not jams, pure jams, preserves, or pure preserves, within the meaning and popular acceptance of the words "jams" or "preserves."

Preserves and jams originated as food products produced in the home by the housewife. In such home production, fruit and sugar, as ingredients of these products, were used in the proportion of a cup of sugar to a cup of fruit, and for many years such proportion of fruit and sugar was used and became generally recognized as the proper minimum proportion of fruit to sugar for such home production of preserves and jams. Since a cup of sugar is slightly heavier than a cup of fruit, this household formula is approximately equivalent to the ratio of at least forty-five pounds of fruit to fifty-five pounds of sugar as used in the standard or accepted formula by commercial manufacturers of jams and preserves as described below.

As defined commercially, insofar as fruit and sugar content is concerned, preserve, fruit preserve, jam and fruit jam are understood to mean the fruit product made by cooking or concentrating to a suitable consistency the properly prepared, entire edible portion of fresh fruit, cold-packed fruit, canned fruit, or a mixture of two or all of these, with sugar, in the preparation of which fruit product there is used not less than forty-five pounds of actual fruit to each fifty-five pounds of sugar.

This formula of at least forty-five pounds of fruit to fifty-five pounds of sugar used in manufacturing jam or preserves has been universally recognized by preserve manufacturers as the minimum proportion of fruit to sugar required to produce a product that conforms to the public's understanding as to what constitutes "Jam" or "Preserve."

The jams and preserves offered for sale and sold by respondents, and each of them, in interstate commerce, by and with the representation that they are jams, pure jams or preserves or pure preserves, have been or were adulterated by the substitution in part for fruits of a mixture of water, sugar, and pectin, so that the products have contained substantially less fruit than pure or genuine jams and preserves.

Respondents have failed to disclose such deficiency of the fruit so named on the label, or otherwise specified or represented, and the presence of water, sugar, and pectin as a substitute therefor in their products by naming them as imitations. This practice of respondents lowers and reduces the quality and cost of manufacture of their products and enables them to sell adulterated jams and preserves, as, and for pure and genuine jams and preserves.

During the period 1932 to 1936, parts of both years inclusive, fifty-three samples of the respondents' preserves, representing seven different kinds of fruit were purchased at various retail stores in many different States, covering a territory from Massachusetts to Ohio and Maryland. In order to determine whether or not adulteration had been practiced by respondents, it was necessary to resort to chemical analysis. By comparing these analyses of respondents' products with the average analysis of corresponding fruits, properly qualified chemists are able to calculate the ratio of fruit to sugar in the preparation of a jam or preserve, both of which terms are synonymous as to the amount of fruit and sugar content. Twenty-eight of these samples were analyzed under the supervision of Commission's witness Sale, an expert food chemist of the United States Department of Agriculture. The result of each of these analyses is shown by Commission's Exhibit 38. He found that all samples analyzed were deficient in fruit content and averaged only approximately thirty-three pounds of fruit to fifty-five pounds of sugar. Seventeen samples of respondents' preserves were analyzed by Commission's witness Harrison, a commercial chemist of eighteen years' experience, who likewise found all samples deficient in fruit. Eight samples were analyzed by Commission's witness Walde, a chemist who has specialized for ten years in the analysis of preserves. Mr. Walde, who interpreted his own and Mr. Harrison's analyses, found an average shortage in respondents' product of thirteen pounds of fruit; that is to say, only thirty-two pounds of fruit were used to fifty-five pounds of sugar, instead of at least forty-five pounds of fruit to fifty-five pounds of sugar as required by the accepted formula. The principal shortage of fruit in respondents' product was found to exist in strawberries, the most expensive of all the fruits used by the respondents for preserving purposes. The average content of fruit of all of the fifty-three samples analyzed was thirty-two and five-tenths pounds of fruit to fifty-five pounds of sugar.

Preserve manufacturers who are in competition with respondents also manufacture jams and preserves in the preparation of which less than forty-five pounds of fruit are used to each fifty-five pounds of sugar, and in which water, sugar, and pectin, a chemical which has the property of jellifying sugar and water, are used as a substitute material for part of the fruit that is required for a standard preserve. In composition, such products are substantially the same in appearance and consistency as the average composition of the products of the respondents. Preserve manufacturers in competition with respondents, who produce such products deficient in fruit, label, describe and sell the same as "Imitation Preserve," and this form of labeling and description is generally a universal practice among manufacturers other than respondents.

As known to the trade and to the purchasing and consuming public, "Imitation preserve" and "Imitation jam" are products prepared with less than forty-five pounds of fruit to each fifty-five pounds of sugar and in place of the full proportion of fruit there is added sugar and water with or without pectin, or combinations of one or more of these ingredients. The chemical analyses referred to above show that respondents' products were, in fact, imitation preserves and imitation jams manufactured in this manner.

The evidence further shows that in 1935 a criminal information was filed in the United States District Court for the Eastern District of New York, containing thirty counts, each charging the respondent, National Kream Company, Inc., with the adulteration of preserves in substantially the same manner as alleged in the amended complaint in this case. The National Kream Company, Inc., pled guilty to twelve of these counts and was fined $25.00 on each of seven counts, for a total fine of $175.00 and received a suspended sentence as to the other five counts to which the plea of guilty was entered. The other eighteen counts were dismissed.

PAR. 3. Various preserve manufacturers were called by the Commission for the purpose of ascertaining what savings would accrue as a result of an adulteration of preserves as described above. They testified that manufacturers of preserve so adulterated might save from five to thirty-eight per cent of their manufacturing costs by this subterfuge depending in each instance on the degree of adulteration and the cost of the fruit involved. Commission's Exhibits 40, 41, 43, and 51 set out complete tabulations on costs and savings accruing as a result of adulteration. Comparison of these exhibits with the degree of adulteration in respondents' product, as shown by the chemical analyses referred to above, indicates the amount the respondent saved in production costs. For example, referring to Commission's Exhibit No. 51, a tabulation covering strawberry preserves where the fruit was purchased at $0.115 per pound, if the respondents adulterated to the extent of using only twenty-five pounds of fruit to fifty-five pounds of sugar, they would save 24% in cost of production, or $0.98 per dozen on their two-pound jars of strawberry preserves. If the respondents used only thirty pounds of strawberries to fifty-five pounds of sugar, they would save 18% of their production costs, or $0.72 on each dozen of their two-pound jars of strawberry preserves. The respondent's adulteration of strawberry preserves, as shown by the chemical analyses referred to above, averaged twenty-seven pounds of fruit to fifty-five pounds of sugar. Its average saving in production costs was therefore about $0.80 per dozen on their two-pound jars of strawberry preserves, depending on the cost of the fruit, with a similar proportionate saving on one-pound or four-pound jars, as the case might be.

Respondent's competitors in the sale of standard unadulterated preserves were placed at a decided disadvantage in the marketing of their products in competition with the imitation preserve manufactured by the respondents but labeled, sold and described by respondents as pure preserve, and sold to dealers at prices which the producers of pure preserves could not meet as a result of respondents' trade advantage because of fruit shortage in their product which necessarily gave them a lower production cost.

Respondents' imitation preserves and imitation jams were so made that they simulated unadulterated preserves or jams in appearance to the extent that the difference in fruit content between the imitation and the genuine products could not be discerned by visual inspection.

PAR. 4. There are now, and have been for many years past, other corporations, partnerships, and individuals engaged in the manufacture of jams and preserves in accordance with the conception of jams and preserves entertained by the trade and consuming public, as more particularly described in paragraph 2 hereof, who truthfully describe and represent their products in their sale in interstate commerce in competition with respondents.

PAR. 5. The practices of respondents and each of them in offering for sale and selling as jams, or pure jams and as preserves or pure preserves, products which have not been manufactured from at least forty-five pounds of the fruit or fruits named on the label, or otherwise specified or represented, to fifty-five pounds of sugar, but which have been adulterated with substitutes in part for said named fruit or fruits, have had and now have the capacity and tendency to mislead and deceive the trade, including wholesale and retail dealers, and the consuming public into the belief that the products described by respondents as jams or pure jams, preserves or pure preserves, have been or are made from at least forty-five pounds of said fruit or fruits to fifty-five pounds of sugar and into the purchase of respondents' products in reliance on such erroneous belief.

By such practices, respondents have placed in the hands of dealers, wholesale and retail, an instrument of fraud by means of which said dealers have been and are enabled to mislead and deceive the consuming public.

PAR. 6. The aforesaid practices of respondents, as described herein, have had and now have the capacity and tendency to unfairly divert trade to respondents from their competitors and otherwise to injuriously affect them, thereby, substantial injury has been done, and still is being done by respondents to substantial competition in interstate commerce.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondents, National Kream Company, Inc., and National Foods, Inc., respondents herein, are to the prejudice of the public and of the respondents' competitors and constitute unfair methods in competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled, "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

This proceeding having been heard by the Federal Trade Commission upon the amended complaint of the Commission, the answer of respondents, testimony and other evidence taken before Robert S. Hall and John L. Hornor, trial examiners of the Commission theretofore duly designated by it, in support of the allegations of said amended complaint and in opposition thereto, briefs filed herein and oral arguments by James M. Hammond, Esq., counsel for the Commission, and by Henry Duke, Esq., counsel for respondents, and the Commission having made its findings as to the facts and its conclusion that said respondents have violated the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

It is ordered, That the respondents, National Kream Company, Inc., and National Foods, Inc., their officers, representatives, agents, and employees in connection with the offering for sale, sale, and distribution of preserves or imitation preserves, jams or imitation jams in interstate commerce or in the District of Columbia, do forthwith cease and desist from:

1. Representing in any manner whatsoever that a mixture of fruit and sugar is pure preserve or preserve or pure jam or jam unless the same is properly prepared from the entire edible portion of fresh, cold-packed, or canned fruit, or a mixture of two or all of these, and cooked or concentrated to a suitable consistency with sugar, and in the preparation of which jam or preserve there is used not less than forty-five pounds of actual fruit to each fifty-five pounds of sugar;

2. Selling or offering for sale a product made in simulation of a jam or preserve but containing less than forty-five pounds of fruit to each fifty-five pounds of sugar used in the manufacture thereof until there is affixed to the container in which said product is sold, in a conspicuous place so as to be easily and readily seen, a word or words clearly indicating that said fruit product is imitation jam or imitation preserve.

It is hereby further ordered, That the respondents, National Kream Company, Inc., and National Foods, Inc., shall, within 30 days from the date of service upon them of this order, file with the Commission their reports in writing stating the manner and form in which they shall have complied with this order.

J. G. McDONALD CHOCOLATE COMPANY

Docket 2706. Complaint, Jan. 31, 1936—Decision, June 12, 1937

Where a corporation engaged in manufacture and sale of "straight" goods candy, and of so-called "break and take," "draw," or "deal" assortments, sale and distribution of which latter type to public, with means or opportunity of obtaining a prize or becoming a winner by lot or chance connected therewith, teaches and encourages gambling among children, who comprise a substantial number of the purchasers and consumers of such type, and particularly of assortments sold and distributed through different colored centers or pushcards, and sale and distribution of which, by lot or chance, provides easy means of disposing of such type candy, for which there is constant demand, and sale of which in the markets of the other, or "straight," merchandise has been followed by a marked decrease therein, due to gambling or lottery feature connected with former—

Sold to jobbers and retailers assortments so packed and assembled as to involve, or as to be designed to involve, use of a lottery scheme in sale and distribution to consumers thereof, and consisting of (1) number of penny pieces of uniform size and shape, concealed colored centers of some of which differed from those of the majority, together with number of larger pieces to be given free of charge and as prizes to chance purchasers of those pieces, colored centers of which differed, as aforesaid, from majority; (2) bars of candy, together with pushcards, for sale under a plan, and in accordance with cards' explanatory legend, under which purchaser's five cents secured one or more bars, depending on number or legend pushed by chance, and last push likewise receives specified number of additional pieces; and (3) assortments of packages of candy of varying size, together with punchboard, for sale under a plan, and in accordance with said board's explanatory legend, pursuant to which purchaser received, for five cents paid, one of aforesaid packages or nothing other than privilege of a punch, dependent upon number thus secured by chance; in competition with many who sell their exclusively "straight" merchandise in competition with such "break and take," "draw," or "deal" assortments, and with many who regard such sale and distribution as morally bad and as encouraging gambling, and especially among children, as injurious to the industry through resulting in the merchandising of a chance or lottery instead of candy, and as providing retailers with a means of violating the laws of the several States, and some of whom, by reason thereof, refuse to sell candy so packed and assembled that same can be resold to public by lot or chance, and in violation of public policy;

Senior & Senior, of Salt Lake City, Utah, for respondent.

COMPLAINT

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent is a corporation, organized under the laws of Utah with its principal office and place of business in the city of Salt Lake City, State of Utah. Respondent is now, and for several years last past, has been engaged in the manufacture of candy and in the sale and distribution thereof to wholesale and retail dealers located at points in the various States of the United States, and causes said products, when so sold, to be transported from its place of business in the city of Salt Lake City, State of Utah, to purchasers thereof in other States of the United States at their respective places of business, and there is now, and has been for several years last past, a course of trade and commerce by said respondent in such candy, between and among the States of the United States. In the course and conduct of the said business, respondent is in competition with other corporations and with individuals and partnerships engaged in the sale and distribution of candy and candy products in commerce between and among the various States of the United States.

25 F. T. C.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of its business, as described in paragraph 1 hereof, respondent sells and has sold to wholesale and retail dealers, various packages or assortments of candy, so packed and assembled as to involve the use of a lottery scheme when sold and distributed to the consumers thereof. Certain of said packages are hereinafter described for the purpose of showing the methods used by respondent, but this list is not all inclusive of the various packages, nor does it include all the details of the several sales plans which respondent has been or is using in the distribution of candy by lot or chance:

(a) One of said assortments is composed of a number of pieces of candy of uniform size, shape, and quality, together with a number of larger pieces of candy, which larger pieces of candy are to be given as prizes to purchasers of said pieces of candy of uniform size, shape, and quality, in the following manner:

The majority of the said pieces of candy of uniform size, shape, and quality, have centers of the same color, but a small number of said pieces of candy have centers of a different color. The said pieces of candy of uniform size, shape, and quality, retail at the price of one cent each, but the purchaser who procures one of the said candies having a center of a different color than the majority, is entitled to receive, and is to be given free of charge, one of the said larger pieces of candy heretofore referred to. The color of the center of said pieces of candy is effectively concealed from purchasers and prospective purchasers until a selection has been made and the piece of candy broken open. The aforesaid purchasers of said candy having a center colored differently from the majority thus procure one of the said larger pieces of candy wholly by lot or chance.

The respondent furnishes to said wholesale and retail dealers, with said assortment, a display card to be used by the retail dealer in offering said candy to the public. The display card bears a legend or statement informing the prospective purchaser that the said candy is being sold in accordance with the above described sales plan.

(b) Another assortment manufactured and distributed by respondent is composed of a number of pieces of candy, and a number of larger pieces of candy, together with a device commonly called a push card. The candy contained in said assortment is distributed to purchasers in the following manner:

The push card has a number of partially perforated discs, and when a push is made and the disc separated from the card, a legend or number is disclosed. Sales are 1¢ each and the card bears statements informing customers and prospective customers that certain specified legends or numbers entitle the purchaser to one of the small pieces of candy, and that certain other specified legends or numbers entitle the purchaser to one of the larger pieces of candy. The purchaser of the last push from said card is also entitled to one of the larger pieces of candy. The legends or numbers on the discs or pushes are effectively concealed from the purchaser and prospective purchaser until a selection has been made and the disc separated from the card. The fact as to whether a purchaser receives one of the small bars of candy or one of the larger bars of candy for the price of 1¢ is thus determined wholly by lot or chance.

The respondent also manufactures and distributes a similar assortment where the pieces or bars of candy are correspondingly larger, and where the sales are 5¢ each instead of 1¢ each.

(c) Another assortment manufactured and distributed by respondent is composed of a number of boxes of assorted chocolates, together with a device commonly called a punch board. The said boxes of candy are distributed to the consuming public by means of said punch board in the following manner:

The sales by means of said punch board are 5¢ each, and when a punch is made from said board, a number is disclosed. The numbers begin with one and continue to the number of punches there are on the board, but the numbers are not arranged in numerical sequence. The board bears a statement informing the customer and prospective customer as to which numbers receive a box of candy. The numbers on said board are effectively concealed from the purchasers and prospective purchasers until a selection has been made and the particular punch separated from the board. The boxes of candy are worth more than 5¢ each, and a purchaser who obtains one of the numbers calling for a box of candy receives the same for the price of 5¢. The purchaser who does not qualify by obtaining one of the numbers calling for one of the boxes of candy receives nothing for his money other than the privilege of punching a number from the board. The boxes of candy in said assortment are thus distributed from punches on said board wholly by lot or chance.

PAR. 3. The wholesale dealers to whom respondent sells its assortments, resell said assortments to retail dealers, and said retail dealers, and the retail dealers to whom respondent sells direct, expose said assortments for sale, and sell said candy to the purchasing public in accordance with the aforesaid sales plans. Respondent thus supplies to and places in the hands of others the means of conducting lotteries in the sale of its products in accordance with the sales plans hereinabove set forth, as a means of inducing purchasers thereof to purchase respondent's said products in preference to candy offered for sale and sold by its competitors.

PAR. 4. The sale of said candy to the purchasing public in the manner above alleged involves a game of chance or the sale of a chance to procure (a) larger pieces of candy; (b) larger bars of candy; or (c) boxes of candy.

The use by respondent of said method of the sale of candies, and the sale of candies by and through the use thereof and by the aid of said method is a practice of the sort which the common law and criminal statutes have long deemed contrary to public policy; and is contrary to an established public policy of the Government of the United States. The use by respondent of said method has the dangerous tendency unduly to hinder competition or create monopoly in this, to wit: that the use thereof has the tendency and capacity to exclude from the branch of the candy trade involved in this proceeding competitors who do not adopt and use the same method or an equivalent or similar method involving the same or an equivalent or similar element of chance or lottery scheme.

Wherefore, many persons, firms and corporations who make and sell candy in competition with the respondent, as above alleged, are unwilling to offer for sale or sell candy so packed and assembled as above alleged, or otherwise arranged and packed for sale to the purchasing public so as to involve a game of chance, and such competitors refrain therefrom.

PAR. 5. Many dealers in and ultimate purchasers of candy are attracted by respondent's said method and manner of packing said candy, and by the element of chance involved in the sale thereof in the manner above described, and are thereby induced to purchase said candy so packed and sold by respondent, in preference to candy offered for sale and sold by said competitors of respondent who do not use the same or equivalent methods. The use of said method by respondent has the tendency and capacity, because of said game of chance, to divert to respondent trade and custom from its said competitors who do not use the same or an equivalent method; to exclude from said candy trade all competitors who are unwilling to and who do not use the same or an equivalent method because the same is unlawful; to lessen competition in said candy trade, and to tend to create a monopoly of said candy trade in respondent and such other distributors of candy as use the same or an equivalent method, and to deprive the purchasing public of the benefit of free competition in said candy trade. The use of said method by the respondent has the tendency and capacity to eliminate from said candy trade all actual competitors, and to exclude therefrom all potential competitors, who do not adopt and use said method or an equivalent method.

PAR. 6. Many of said competitors of respondent are unwilling to adopt and use said method or any method involving a game of chance or the sale of a chance to win something by chance or any other method that is contrary to public policy.

PAR. 7. The aforementioned methods, acts and practices of the respondent are all to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors as hereinabove alleged. Said methods, acts and practices constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914.

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

After the issuance of said complaint and the filing of respondent's answer thereto, testimony and other evidence in support of the allegations of said complaint were introduced by P. C. Kolinski, attorney for the Commission and in opposition to the allegations of the complaint by H. L. Mulliner, attorney for the respondent, before Charles P. Vicini and Henry M. White, examiners of the Commission theretofore duly designated by it, and said testimony and other evidence were duly recorded and filed in the office of the Commission.

Thereafter, the proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on said complaint, the answer thereto, testimony and other evidence, briefs in support of the complaint and in opposition thereto, and the oral arguments of Henry C. Lank, counsel for the Commission, and Charles F. Solomon, secretary of the respondent corporation; and the Commission having duly considered the same and being fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent, J. G. McDonald Chocolate Company, is a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Utah, with its principal office and place of business located in Salt Lake City, Utah. Respondent is now, and for several years last past has been, engaged in the manufacture of candy in Salt Lake City and in the sale and distribution thereof to retail dealers and jobbers located in the State of Utah and other States of the United States. It causes the said candy when sold to be shipped or transported from its principal place of business in the State of Utah to purchasers thereof in Utah and in the States of the United States other than the State of Utah. In so carrying on said business, respondent is and has been engaged in interstate commerce and is and has been engaged in active competition with other corporations and with partnerships and individuals engaged in the manufacture of candy and in the sale and distribution thereof in commerce between and among the various States of the United States.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of its business, as described in paragraph 1 hereof, respondent sells and has sold to jobbers and retail dealers, certain assortments of candy so packed and assembled as to involve or which are designed to or may involve, the use of a lottery scheme when sold and distributed to the consumers thereof.

Several of such assortments manufactured, sold, and distributed by respondent are composed of a number of pieces of candy of uniform size and shape, together with a number of larger pieces of candy, which larger pieces of candy are given free of charge and as a prize to purchasers of said pieces of candy of uniform size and shape in the following manner: The majority of said pieces of candy of uniform size and shape have centers of the same color, but a small number of said pieces of candy have centers of a different color. The said pieces of candy of uniform size and shape retail at the price of 1¢ each, but the purchaser who procures one of said candies having a center colored differently from the majority is entitled to receive and is to be given free of charge one of the said larger pieces of candy contained in said assortment. The color of the centers of said pieces of candy of uniform size and shape in said assortment is effectively concealed from purchasers and prospective purchasers until a selection has been made and the piece of candy broken open. The aforesaid purchasers of said candies who procure a candy having a center colored differently from the majority of said pieces of candy of uniform size and shape thus procure one of the said larger pieces of candy wholly by lot or chance.

Respondent also distributes several assortments of candy which are composed of a number of bars of candy, together with a device commonly called a "push card." The said bars of candy are distributed to the consuming public by means of said push card in the following manner: The push card has a number of partially perforated discs, and when a push is made and the disc separated from the card a number or legend is disclosed. Sales are 5¢ each, and the card bears a statement or statements informing customers and prospective customers that all the numbers or legends pushed from said card receive one bar of candy, but that certain specified numbers or legends receive one or more additional bars of candy. The push card also bears a legend stating that the last push on the card receives a specified number of additional bars of candy. All purchasers receive one bar of candy, but purchasers obtaining the specified numbers or legends receive additional bars of candy of the same size and quality. The numbers or legends on said card are effectively concealed from the purchaser or prospective purchaser until a push or sale has been made and the particular push separated from the card. The additional bars of candy in said assortment are thus distributed to purchasers of pushes from said card wholly by lot or chance.

Respondent also distributes several assortments composed of a number of packages of candy of varying size, together with a device commonly called a "punchboard." The said packages of candy are distributed to the consuming public by means of said punchboard in the following manner: The punchboard has a number of holes in which slips of paper bearing numbers are secreted. The slips of paper and the numbers thereon are effectively concealed from purchasers and prospective purchasers until a punch or selection has been made and the particular slip of paper separated from the board. The punchboard has printed at the top thereof various statements or legends informing purchasers and prospective purchasers that certain numbers receive specified packages of candy. Sales are 5¢ each, and the packages of candy contained in said assortment are distributed to the consuming public in accordance with the legends at the top of said punchboard. The fact as to whether a purchaser receives one of the packages of candy or nothing other than the privilege of punching a number from said board for the price of 5¢ is thus determined wholly by lot or chance.

PAR. 3. The candy assortments involving the lot or chance feature, as above described, are generally referred to in the candy trade or industry as "break and take," "draw," or "deal" assortments. Assortments of candy without the lot or chance features in connection with their resale to the public are generally referred to in the candy trade or industry as "straight" goods. These terms will be used hereafter in these findings to distinguish these separate types of assortments.

PAR. 4. The wholesale dealers or jobbers to whom respondent sells its assortments resell the same to retail dealers. Respondent also sells its said assortments direct to retail dealers. Numerous retail dealers purchase the assortments described in paragraph 2 above either from respondent or from wholesale dealers or jobbers who in turn have purchased said assortments from respondent, and such retail dealers display said assortments for sale to the public as packed by respondent, and the candy contained in said assortments is generally sold and distributed to the consuming public in accordance with respondent's sales plans, as above described.

PAR. 5. All sales made by respondent, whether to wholesalers and jobbers or to retail dealers, are absolute sales and respondent retains no control over said assortments after they are delivered to the wholesale dealer or jobber or retail dealer. The assortments are assembled and packed in such manner that they are designed to be used and are used by the retail dealer for distribution to the purchasing public by lot or chance without alteration or rearrangement. In the sale and distribution to jobbers and wholesale dealers for resale to retail dealers and to retail dealers direct of the assortments of candy described in paragraph 2, respondent has knowledge that said candy will be resold to the purchasing public by retail dealers by lot or chance, and it packs such candy in the way and manner described so that without alteration, addition or rearrangement thereof, it may be resold to the public by lot or chance by said retail dealers.

PAR. 6. There are in the United States and in the territory served by this respondent many manufacturers of candy who do not manufacture and sell "break and take," "draw," or "deal" assortments of candy and who sell their "straight" goods in interstate commerce, in competition with the "break and take," "draw," or "deal" candy, and manufacturers of "straight" goods have noted a marked decrease in the sales of their products whenever or wherever the "break and take," "draw," or "deal" assortments have appeared in their markets. This decrease in the sale of "straight" candy is due to the gambling or lottery feature connected with the "break and take," "draw," or "deal" candy. Witnesses from several branches of the candy industry testified in this proceeding to the effect that consumers preferred to purchase the "break and take," "draw," or "deal" candy because of the gambling feature connected with its sale. The sale and distribution of "break and take," "draw," or "deal" packages or assortments of candy or of candy which has connected with its sale to the public the means or opportunity of obtaining a prize or becoming a winner by lot or chance, teaches and encourages gambling among children, who comprise a substantial number of the purchasers and consumers of this type of candy, particularly the assortments which are sold and distributed to the consumers by means of differently colored centers or "pushcards."

PAR. 7. The sale and distribution of candy by the retailers by the methods described herein is the sale and distribution of candy by lot or chance and constitutes a lottery or gaming device. The Commission finds that many competitors regard such sale and distribution as morally bad and as encouraging gambling, especially among children; as injurious to the candy industry because it results in the merchandising of a chance or lottery instead of candy; and as providing retail merchants with a means of violating the laws of the several states. Because of these reasons some competitors of respondent refuse to sell candy so packed and assembled that it can be resold to the public by lot or chance. These competitors are thereby put to a disadvantage in competing. The retailers, finding that they can dispose of more candy by the "break and take," "draw," or "deal" method, buy from respondent and others employing the same methods of sale, and thereby trade is diverted to respondent and others using similar methods from said competitors. Such competitors can compete on even terms only by giving the same or similar devices to retailers. This they are unwilling to do, and their sales of "straight" candy show a marked decrease. The sale and distribution of candy by lot or chance provides an easy means of disposing of such products. There is a constant demand for candy which is sold by lot or chance, and in order to meet the competition of manufacturers who sell and distribute candy which is sold by such methods, some competitors have begun the sale and distribution of candy to the public by lot or chance. The use of such methods by respondent, in the sale and distribution of its candy, is prejudicial and injurious to the public and its competitors, and has resulted in the diversion of trade to respondent from its said competitors, and is a restraint upon and a detriment to the freedom of fair and legitimate competition in the candy industry.

PAR. 8. Respondent sells its merchandise in the States of Utah, Idaho, Montana, Colorado, Washington, Oregon, California, Arizona, and New Mexico. The majority of its candy is sold as "straight" merchandise but its sales of "break and take," "draw," or "deal" assortments are substantial.

PAR. 9. The Commission further finds that the sale and distribution in interstate commerce of assortments or packages of candy so packed and assembled as to enable retail dealers, without alterations, addition or rearrangement, to resell the same to the consuming public by lot or chance, is contrary to public policy.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of respondent, J. G. McDonald Chocolate Company, a corporation, under the conditions and circumstances set forth in the foregoing findings of fact are all to the prejudice of the public and respondent's competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce, and constitute violation of Section 5 of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

25 F. T. C.

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

It is hereby ordered, That the respondent, J. G. McDonald Chocolate Company, a corporation, its officers, directors, agents, representatives, and employees in the offering for sale, sale and distribution in interstate commerce of candy, do cease and desist from:

1. Selling and distributing to wholesale dealers and jobbers, for resale to retail dealers and to retail dealers direct, candy so packed and assembled that sales of said candy to the general public are to be made, or may be made, by means of a lottery, gaming device, or gift enterprise.

2. Supplying to or placing in the hands of retail and wholesale dealers and jobbers, packages or assortments of candy which are used, or may be used, without alteration or rearrangement of the contents of such packages or assortments, to conduct a lottery, gaming device or gift enterprise in the sale or distribution of the candy contained in said assortments to the public.

3. Packing or assembling in the same package or assortment of candy for sale to the public at retail pieces of candy of uniform size and shape having centers of a different color, together with larger pieces of candy, which said larger pieces of candy are to be given as prizes to the purchaser procuring a piece of candy with a center of a particular color.

4. Supplying to or placing in the hands of retail and wholesale dealers and jobbers, assortments of candy, together with a device commonly called a "push card," or a device commonly called a "punchboard," for use, or which may be used, in distributing or selling said candy to the public at retail.

5. Furnishing to retail and wholesale dealers and jobbers a device commonly called a "push card," or a device commonly called a "punchboard," either with packages or assortments of candy or separately, bearing a legend or legends or statements informing the purchasing public that the candy is being sold to the public by lot or chance, or in accordance with a sales plan which constitutes a lottery, gaming device, or gift enterprise.

It is further ordered, That the respondent, J. G. McDonald Chocolate Company, a corporation, shall within 30 days after service upon it of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which it has complied with the order to cease and desist hereinabove set forth.

IN THE MATTER OF
GERMANIA TEA COMPANY, AND CONSOLIDATED DRUG TRADE PRODUCTS, INC.

COMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION
OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 26, 1914

Docket 3114. Complaint, Apr. 26, 1937—Decision, June 12, 1937

Where two corporations respectively engaged in importation and sale, and sale and distribution, of two herb products sold under trade names "Germania Herb Tea" and "Germania Orange Pekoe Tea," and composed, principally and respectively, of "senna" and "juniper," and of caffeine, in substantial competition with those engaged in sale of similar herb products and other preparations designed and used for purposes for which said corporations held out their aforesaid products as useful—

Represented, in extensive advertising campaigns conducted by them, consisting of radio broadcasts, circulars, pamphlets, and other printed matter, and in labels placed on aforesaid products, that they had substantial therapeutic value in the treatment of obesity when used in connection with a designated reducing diet, facts being first-named product performed no function in treatment of obesity other than that of a laxative or purgative, and neither product was of value as a remedy, treatment or cure for aforesaid condition;

With effect of misleading and deceiving purchasers and prospective purchasers into the belief that said representations were true, and to cause purchase of said products by reason of such erroneous beliefs, and with the result that trade was thereby diverted from aforesaid competitors to it; to the substantial injury of substantial competition in commerce:

Held, That such acts and practices were to the prejudice of the public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition.

Mr. John Darsey for the Commission.

Mr. Benjamin Segal, of Minneapolis, Minn., for respondents.

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that Germania Tea Company, a corporation, and Consolidated Drug Trade Products, Inc., a corporation, hereinafter referred to as respondents, have been and are using unfair methods of competition in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in said act, and it appearing to said Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint stating its charges in that respect as follows:

Complaint

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent, Germania Tea Company, is a corporation existing and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Minnesota with its principal office and place of business located at 608 First Avenue North in the city of Minneapolis, State of Minnesota. For more than two years last past, it has been engaged in the importation and sale of herb products, among which products are those which it sells under the trade names, "Germania Herb Tea" and "Germania Orange Pekoe Tea." The respondent causes the aforesaid designated products when sold to be transported from its principal place of business in the State of Minnesota to purchasers thereof residing in the various other States of the United States.

The respondent, Consolidated Drug Trade Products, Inc., is a corporation existing and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Illinois with its principal place of business located at 544 South Wells Street in the city of Chicago, State of Illinois. It has for several years last past been engaged in the sale of various drug products. For a period of more than three (3) years last past, it has been engaged in the sale and distribution of the products, "Germania Herb Tea" and "Germania Orange Pekoe Tea," which it obtains from the respondent, Germania Tea Company under a distributor contract which makes provision for an advertising campaign to be conducted by the respondent, Consolidated Drug Trade Products, Inc., in connection with the offering for sale and sale of the aforesaid products. It causes the products, "Germania Herb Tea" and "Germania Orange Pekoe Tea," when sold to be transported from its place of business in the State of Illinois to purchasers thereof located in the various other States of the United States.

In the course and conduct of their businesses, the respondents have been and are in substantial competition in commerce among and between the various States of the United States with other corporations, partnerships, firms, and individuals engaged in the sale of similar herb products, or products and preparations designed and used for the purposes for which respondents represent their aforesaid products to be useful.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of their business, and for the purpose of inducing the purchase of their products, respondents have cooperatively printed and circulated through the several States to customers and prospective customers, pamphlets and other advertising matter and have made use of radio broadcasts over stations of sufficient power to convey the programs emanating therefrom into the various States of the United States other than the State wherein said program originated. In all of said advertisements and radio broadcasts and on the labels placed on said products, the respondents make many statements wherein they represent that said products have a substantial therapeutic value in the treatment of obesity when used in connection with a designated reducing diet.

In truth and in fact, said herb products now designated as "Germania Herb Tea" and "Germania Orange Pekoe Tea" are of no value as a remedy for obesity. Neither preparation plays any important part in reducing excess weight when used in connection with any designated diet. The principal ingredients of the product are "senna" which is a strong purgative and "juniper" which is a diuretic. Neither of these ingredients are of any material value in the treatment of obesity or in reducing excess weight. A continuous use of these products might result in harmful effects to a substantial portion of the persons using the same without the direction and supervision of a doctor.

PAR. 3. Under the foregoing facts and circumstances, the representations and statements used by the respondents in the sale of their herb products are false and misleading. The use of such statements and representations has the capacity and tendency to mislead and deceive ultimate purchasers and consumers into the erroneous and mistaken beliefs that said products have a substantial therapeutic value in the treatment of obesity and into the purchase of respondent's herb products on account of said beliefs induced by the representations of the respondents. As a result thereof, trade is unfairly diverted to respondents from competitors engaged in selling in commerce, as herein described, products of the same kind and nature as those of respondents or selling products which actually do have substantial therapeutic value in the treatment of obesity. In consequence thereof, injury has been done by respondents to competition in commerce among and between the various States of the United States.

PAR. 4. The aforementioned methods, acts and practices of respondents are all to the prejudice of the public and respondents' competitors as hereinabove alleged. Said methods, acts, and practices constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914.

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, on April 26, 1937, issued and served its complaint in this proceeding upon respondents, Germania Tea Company, and Consolidated Drug Trade Products, Inc., charging them with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of the provisions of said act. On May 20, 1937, the respondents filed their answers in which answers they admitted all the material allegations of the complaint to be true and stated that they waived hearing on the charges set forth in the said complaint and consented that, without further evidence or other intervening procedure, the Commission might issue and serve upon them findings as to the facts and conclusion and an order to cease and desist from the violations of law charged in the complaint. Thereafter, the proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on the said complaint and the answer thereto, and the Commission having duly considered the same, and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public, and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent, Germania Tea Company, is a Minnesota corporation having its principal office and place of business at 608 First Avenue, North, Minneapolis, Minn. For several years it has been engaged in the importation and sale of herb products, among which products are those sold under the trade name "Germania Herb Tea" and "Germania Orange Pekoe Tea." The respondent causes the aforesaid designated products when sold to be transported from its place of business in Minnesota to purchasers residing in the various other States of the United States.

The respondent, Consolidated Drug Trade Products, Inc., is an Illinois corporation with its principal place of business at 544 South Wells Street, Chicago, Ill. For several years it has been engaged in the sale of various drug products. For a period of more than three years it has been engaged in the sale and distribution of the products "Germania Herb Tea" and "Germania Orange Pekoe Tea" which it obtains from the respondent, Germania Tea Company, under a distributor contract which provides for an advertising campaign to be conducted by the respondent, Consolidated Drug Trade Products, Inc. It causes the products designated above, when sold, to be transported from its place of business in the State of Illinois to purchasers who are located in the various other States of the United States.

In the course and conduct of their businesses, the parties respondent herein have been and are in substantial competition in commerce among and between the various States of the United States with other corporations, partnerships, firms, and individuals engaged in the sale of similar herb products and other preparations designed and used for the purposes for which respondents represent their aforesaid products to be useful.

PAR. 2. For the purpose of inducing the purchase of the aforesaid products, respondents have conducted extensive advertising campaigns in the various States of the United States consisting of radio broadcasts, circulars, pamphlets, and other printed matter. In all of said radio broadcasts, printed matter, and labels placed on said products, the respondents have made many statements wherein they represent that the aforesaid products have a substantial therapeutic value in the treatment of obesity when used in connection with a designated reducing diet.

In truth and in fact the herb products "Germania Herb Tea" and "Germania Orange Pekoe Tea" are of no value as a remedy, treatment, or cure for obesity. The principal ingredients of the product "Germania Herb Tea," are "senna," which has laxative and purgative qualities, and "juniper" which is a diuretic. The ingredients of the product "Germania Herb Tea" have no therapeutic value in the treatment of obesity and perform no functions in this respect other than those of a laxative or purgative. The principal ingredient of the product "Germania Orange Pekoe Tea," is caffeine. This product has no therapeutic value as a remedy, treatment or cure for obesity.

PAR. 3. Respondents' false and misleading representations of and concerning the said products, as hereinabove set forth, have the capacity and tendency to mislead and deceive, have misled and deceived, and do mislead and deceive purchasers and prospective purchasers into the belief that such representations are true and to cause the purchase of said products as the result of such erroneous beliefs. Trade is thereby diverted from its aforesaid competitors to respondents, to the substantial injury of substantial competition in interstate commerce.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondents, Germania Tea Company, and Consolidated Drug Trade Products, Inc., are to the prejudice of the public and of respondents' competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce, within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

This proceeding having been heard by the Federal Trade Commission upon the complaint of the Commission and the answers of respondents, in which answers respondents admit all the material allegations of the complaint to be true, and state that they waive hearing on the charges set forth in said complaint and consent that, without further evidence or other intervening procedure, the Commission may issue and serve upon them findings as to the facts and conclusion and an order to cease and desist from the violations of law charged in the complaint, and the Commission having made its findings as to the facts and conclusion that said respondents have violated the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

It is ordered, That the respondents, Germania Tea Company and Consolidated Drug Trade Products, Inc., their officers, representatives, agents, and employees, in connection with the offering for sale, sale and distribution of herb products now designated as "Germania Herb Tea" and "Germania Orange Pekoe Tea," or of the same or similar products designated by any other name or names in interstate commerce or in the District of Columbia, do forthwith cease and desist from representing:

1. That the product now designated as "Germania Herb Tea" performs any functions in a reducing program other than those of a laxative or purgative;

2. That the product now designated as "Germania Orange Pekoe Tea" performs any function or has any value in the treatment of obesity, or, in a reducing program, other than the caffeine supplied through its consumption.

It is further ordered, That the respondents shall, within 60 days after service upon them of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which they have complied with this order.

AMERICAN GRAIN DISTILLERS, INC.

COMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION
OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 26, 1914, AND OF SEC. 3
OF TITLE I OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED JUNE 16, 1933¹

Docket 2420. Complaint, May 27, 1935—Decision, June 17, 1937

Where a corporation engaged, as rectifier of all kinds of whiskies at its rectifying plant, in purchasing, rectifying, and blending whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages, and in producing gin with a still used therefor by redistillation of purchased alcohol, not produced by it, over juniper berries and other aromatics, and in selling its aforesaid various products between and among the various States and in the District of Columbia, in substantial competition with those engaged in manufacture by true distillation of whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages from mash, wort, or wash, and in selling same in trade and commerce among the various States and in said District, and with those engaged in purchasing, rectifying, blending, and bottling such various beverages and similarly selling same, and including among said competitors those who, as manufacturers and distillers by original and continuous distillation from mash, wort, or wash, through continuous closed pipes and vessels until manufacture is complete, of whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages sold by them, truthfully use words "distillery," "distilleries," "distillers," or "distiller" as part of their corporate or trade names and on their stationery and advertising, and on the labels of the bottles in which they sell and ship their said products, and those who, engaged in purchasing, rectifying, blending, bottling, and selling such various products, do not use aforesaid words as above set forth—

Represented, through use of word "Distillers" in its corporate name, on its stationery, mailing cards, and invoices, and on the labels attached to the bottles in which it sold and shipped its said products, that it was a producer of distilled spirits from raw materials, and thus represented to its customers, and furnished same with a means of representing to their vendees, both retailers and ultimate consuming public, that it was a distiller, and that the whiskies and other spirituous beverages contained in such bottles were by it made through process of distillation from mash, wort, or wash as aforesaid, notwithstanding fact it did not thus distill said various beverages thus bottled, labeled, sold, and transported by it, as definitely understood from word "distillers," used in connection with liquor industry and products thereof in the trade and by the purchasing public, as meaning, when used in connection with liquor industry and products thereof, manufacture of such liquors by process of original and continuous distillation from mash, wort, or wash through continuous closed pipes and vessels until manufacture is complete, and did not own, operate, or control any place or places where such beverages are made by process of distillation from mash, wort, or wash, and was not a distiller, for the purchase of the bottled liquors of which there is a preference on the part of a substantial portion of the purchasing public;

Complaint

With effect of misleading and deceiving dealers and purchasing public into the belief that it was a distiller, and that the whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages sold by it were by it made and distilled from mash, wort, or wash, and with capacity and tendency to induce dealers and purchasing public, acting in such beliefs, to buy its said whiskies and other spirituous beverages, bottled and sold by it, and with result of thereby diverting trade to it from its competitors, who do not, by their corporate or trade names or in any other manner, misrepresent that they are manufacturers by distillation from mash, wort or wash of whiskies or other spirituous beverages; to the substantial injury of competition in commerce: Held, That such acts and practices were to the prejudice of the public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition.

COMPLAINT

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent is a corporation organized, existing and doing business under the laws of the State of Michigan, with its office and principal place of business in the city of Detroit, in said State. It is now, and for more than one year last past has been, engaged in the business of purchasing, rectifying, blending, and bottling whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages in a rectifying plant under a rectifier's permit, and in the sale thereof in constant course of trade and commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia. In the course and conduct of its said business it causes its said products when sold to be transported from its place of business aforesaid into and through various States of the United States to the purchasers thereof, consisting of wholesalers and distributors, some located within the State of Michigan and some located in other States of the United States and the District of Columbia. In the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid, respondent is now, and for more than one year last past has been, in substantial competition with other corporations and with individuals, partnerships, and firms engaged in the manufacture by true distillation of whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages from mash, wort, or wash, and in the sale thereof in trade and commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia; and in the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid respondent is, and for more than one year last past has been, in substantial competition with other corporations and with individuals, firms, and partnerships engaged in the business of purchasing, rectifying, blending, and bottling whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages in rectifying plants under rectifiers' permits and in the sale thereof in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 2. Upon the premises of respondent's place of business aforesaid there is a still for use in the production of gins by a process of rectification whereby alcohol, purchased but not produced by respondent, is redistilled over juniper berries and other aromatics. Such rectification of alcoholic spirits does not make or constitute respondent a distillery or a distiller, as defined by Section 3247 of the Revised Statutes regulating Internal Revenue, nor as commonly understood by the public and the liquor industry. For a long period of time the word "distillers" when used in connection with the liquor industry and with the products thereof has had and still has a definite significance and meaning to the minds of wholesalers and retailers in such industry and to the ultimate purchasing public, to wit, those who produce alcoholic liquors by an original and continuous distillation from mash, wort or wash, through continuous closed pipes and vessels until the manufacture thereof is complete, and a substantial portion of the purchasing public prefers to buy spirituous liquors bottled and prepared by the actual distillers thereof.

PAR. 3. In the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid, by the use of the words "Grain" and "Distillers" in its corporate name, printed on its stationery and on the labels attached to the bottles in which it sells and ships its said products, and in various other ways, respondent represents to its customers and furnishes them with the means of representing to their vendees, both retailers and the ultimate consuming public, that the said whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages therein contained were by it manufactured through the process of distillation from mash, wort, or wash, when, as a matter of fact, respondent is not a distiller, does not distill the said whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages by it so bottled, labeled, sold, and transported, and merely by the use of a still operated by it as aforesaid in the rectification of alcoholic spirits by re-distillation over juniper berries and other aromatics, does not distill the whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages by it so bottled, labeled, sold, and transported in the sense in which the word "distillers" is commonly accepted and understood by those engaged in the liquor trade and the public. Respondent does not own, operate, or control any place or places where alcoholic beverages are manufactured by a process of original and continuous distillation from mash, wort, or wash.

PAR. 4. There are among the competitors of respondent engaged in the sale of spirituous beverages as mentioned in paragraph 1 hereof corporations, firms, partnerships, and individuals who manufacture and distill from mash, wort or wash, whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages sold by them and who truthfully use the words "distillery," "distilleries," "distillers," "distilling," or "grain" as a part of their corporate or trade names and on their stationery, advertising and on the labels of the bottles in which they sell and ship such products. There are also among such competitors corporations, firms, partnerships, and individuals engaged in the business of purchasing, rectifying, blending and bottling whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages in rectifying plants under rectifiers' permits who do not use the words "distillery," "distilleries," "distilling," "distillers," or "grain" as a part of their corporate or trade names, nor on their stationery, advertising nor on the labels attached to the bottles in which they sell and ship their said products.

PAR. 5. The representation by respondent, as set forth in paragraph 3 hereof, is calculated to and has a capacity and tendency to and does mislead and deceive dealers and the purchasing public into the belief that the whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages sold by the respondent are manufactured or distilled by it from mash, wort, or wash by one continuous process and is calculated to and has the capacity and tendency to and does induce dealers and the purchasing public, acting in such belief, to purchase the whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages rectified and bottled by the respondent, thereby diverting trade to respondent from its competitors who do not by their corporate or trade name or in any other manner misrepresent that they are manufacturers by distillation from mash, wort, or wash of whiskies, gins, or other spirituous beverages, and thereby respondent does substantial injury to substantial competition in interstate commerce.

PAR. 6. The acts and things above alleged to have been done and the false representations alleged to have been made by respondent are to the prejudice of the public and the competitors of respondent and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914.

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent is a corporation organized, existing, and doing business under the laws of the State of Michigan, with its office and principal place of business in the city of Detroit, in said State. It is now, and for more than one year last past has been, engaged in the business of purchasing, rectifying, blending, and bottling whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages in a rectifying plant under a rectifier's permit, and in the sale thereof in constant course of trade and commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia. In the course and conduct of its said business it causes its said products when sold to be transported from its place of business aforesaid into and through various States of the United States to the purchasers thereof, consisting of wholesalers and distributors, some located within the State of Michigan and some located in other States of the United States and the District of Columbia. In the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid, respondent is now, and for more than one year last past has been, in substantial competition with other corporations and with individuals, partnerships, and firms engaged in the manufacture by true distillation of whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages from mash, wort, or wash, and in the sale thereof in trade and commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia; and in the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid respondent is, and for more than one year last past has been, in substantial competition with other corporations and with individuals, firms, and partnerships engaged in the business of purchasing, rectifying, blending, and bottling whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages in rectifying plants under rectifiers' permits and in the sale thereof in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PARS. 2, 3, 4, and 5. As grounds for these paragraphs of this complaint, the Federal Trade Commission relies upon the matters and things set out in paragraphs 2, 3, 4, and 5 of count 1 of this complaint to the same extent as though the several allegations thereof were set out at length and in separate paragraphs herein, and the said paragraphs 2, 3, 4, and 5 of count 1 of this complaint are incorporated herein by reference and adopted as the allegations of paragraphs 2, 3, 4, and 5, respectively, of this count, and are hereby charged as fully and as completely as though the several averments of the said paragraphs of count 1 were separately set out and repeated verbatim.

PAR. 6. Under and pursuant to Title I of the National Industrial Recovery Act, approved June 16, 1933, (48 Stat. 195 C. 90), the President of the United States, by Executive Order No. 6182, of June 26, 1933, as supplemented by Executive Order No. 6207, of July 21, 1933, and Executive Order No. 6345, of October 20, 1933, delegated to H. A. Wallace as Secretary of Agriculture certain of the powers vested in the President of the United States by the aforesaid act.

Under and pursuant to the delegation of such powers, the said Secretary of Agriculture pursuant to Section 3 (d) of the act and Executive orders under the act, upon his own motion presented a code of Fair Competition for the Distilled Spirits Rectifying Industry after due notice and opportunity for hearing in connection therewith had been afforded interested parties, including respondent, in accordance with Title I of the National Industrial Recovery Act and applicable regulations issued thereunder, to the President of the United States who approved the same on the 9th day of December 1933, thereby constituting the said code a Code of Fair Competition within the meaning of the said National Industrial Recovery Act, for the regulation of the aforesaid industry.

In his written report to the President, the said Secretary of Agriculture made, among others, the following findings with respect to the said Code in the following words, to wit:

That said Code will tend to effectuate the declared policy of Title I of the National Industrial Recovery Act as set forth in Section 1 of said act in that the terms and provisions of such Code tend: (a) to remove obstructions to the free flow of foreign commerce, which tend to diminish the amount thereof; (b) to provide for the general welfare by promoting the organization of industry for the purposes of cooperative action among trade groups; (c) to eliminate unfair competitive practices; (d) to promote the fullest possible utilization of the present productive capacity of industries; (e) to avoid undue restriction of production (except as may be temporarily required); (f) to increase the consumption of industrial and agricultural products by increasing purchasing power; and (g) otherwise to rehabilitate industry.

By his approval of the said code on December 9, 1933, the President of the United States, pursuant to the authority vested in him by Title I of the National Industrial Recovery Act aforesaid, made and issued his certain written Executive order, wherein he adopted and approved the report, recommendations and findings of the said Secretary of Agriculture, and ordered that the said Code of Fair Competition be, and the same thereby was approved, and by virtue of the National Industrial Recovery Act aforesaid, the following provision of Article V of said Code became and still is one of the standards of fair competition for the Distilled Spirits Rectifying Industry and is binding upon every member of said Industry and this respondent:

The following practices constitute unfair methods of competition and shall not be engaged in by any member of the industry:

Section 1. False Advertising.—To publish or disseminate in any manner any false advertisement of any rectified product. Any advertisement shall be deemed to be false if it is untrue in any particular, or if directly or by ambiguity, omission or inference it tends to create a misleading impression.

PAR. 7. The use by respondent of the words "Distillers" and "Grain" in its corporate name, printed on its stationery and on the labels attached to the bottles in which it sells and ships such products and in various other ways, constitutes false advertising within the meaning of the aforesaid provision of said Article V and tends to and does create the misleading impression that respondent is engaged in the business of distilling whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages from mash, wort, or wash, and that the whiskies, gins and other spirituous beverages by it so sold and transported have been bottled by the original distillers thereof and have been produced by a true process of distillation from mash, wort, or wash, all contrary to the provisions of Section 1, Article V, of the Code aforesaid.

PAR. 8. The above alleged methods, acts and practices of the respondent are and have been in violation of the standard of fair competition for the Distilled Spirits Rectifying Industry of the United States. Such violation of such standard in the aforesaid transactions in interstate commerce and other transactions which affect interstate commerce in the manner set forth in paragraph 5 of count 1 hereof, are in violation of Section 3 of Title I of the National Industrial Recovery Act and they are unfair methods of competition in commerce within the meaning of the Federal Trade Commission Act as amended.

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission on May 27, 1935, issued, and on May 29, 1935, served its complaint in this proceeding upon respondent American Grain Distillers, Inc., charging it with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of the provisions of said Act. After the issuance of said complaint, and the filing of respondent's answer thereto, testimony and other evidence in support of the allegations of the said complaint were introduced by PGad B. Morehouse, attorney for the Commission, before John L. Hornor, an examiner of the Commission theretofore duly designated by it, and said testimony and other evidence were duly recorded and filed in the office of the Commission. No testimony or other evidence in opposition to the allegations of the complaint were introduced by Maurice Nathanson, president of the American Grain Distillers, Inc., appearing for respondent. Thereafter the proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on the said complaint, the answer thereto, testimony and other evidence and brief in support of the complaint (no brief in opposition thereto having been filed and no oral argument having been made); and the Commission having duly considered the foregoing and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent is a Michigan corporation organized August 24, 1933, and was engaged in the distilled spirits rectifying business from the time of repeal of the Eighteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States up to some time in April of 1936, when it ceased to engage in the aforesaid business. During said period respondent operated, under a basic rectifier's permit from the Government known as "R-248," a rectifying establishment with a capacity of 5,000 cases a day, rectifying all kinds of whiskies, purchasing its distilled spirits from Publicker Commercial Alcohol Company and other distilleries. Upon its premises, aforesaid, there was a still for use in the production of gins by a process of rectification whereby alcohol purchased but not produced by respondent was re-distilled over juniper berries and other aromatics.

During the period between repeal of the Eighteenth Amendment and April 1936, respondent was engaged in the business of purchasing, rectifying, and blending whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages in its aforesaid plant under its said permit, and in the sale thereof in constant course of trade and commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia. In the course and conduct of its said business it caused its said products when sold to be transported from its place of business in Michigan into and through various States of the United States to the purchasers thereof, consisting of wholesalers and retailers located in States of the United States other than the States of origin of said shipments, and in the District of Columbia.

In the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid, respondent, during said period, was in substantial competition with other corporations and with individuals, partnerships, and firms engaged in the manufacture by true distillation of whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages from mash, wort, or wash, and in the sale thereof in trade and commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia; and in the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid, respondent was in substantial competition with other corporations and with individuals, firms, and partnerships, engaged in the business of purchasing, rectifying, blending, and bottling whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages in rectifying plants under rectifiers' permits, and in the sale thereof in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 2. "Rectifying" in the distilled spirits rectifying industry means the mixing of whiskies of different ages or types, or the mixing of other ingredients with whiskies, but reducing proof of whiskey by adding water is not rectifying. Rectifiers also blend whiskies with neutral spirits (grain alcohol).

Many distillers operate a separate establishment 500 feet or more away from their distillery, known as a rectifying plant, wherein they operate in the same manner as described above—for a rectifier—sometimes exclusively with spirits of their own distillation and sometimes with spirits purchased from other distillers, or both. Some distillers have a tax paid bottling room on the distillery bonded premises wherein their distilled spirits are bottled straight as they come from the still, or in a bonded warehouse after aging, or after reduction of proof. Any rectifying by a distiller, however, must be done in his rectifying plant under his rectifier's permit. On all bottled liquors, whether bottled at the distillery or at any rectifying plant, appear the words "Bottled" or "Blended" (as the case may be) "by the ----- Company." If the distilled spirits therein contained are bottled by a distiller in his distillery or are spirits of his own distillation bottled in his rectifying plant, the distiller may and does put "Distilled and Bottled by ----- Company." If, in the distiller's rectifying plant, other spirits have been blended or rectified, he puts on the bottle "Blended and Bottled by ----- Company."

Finally, blown in the bottom of each bottle is a symbol consisting of a letter followed by a number, identifying the bottler, viz, "D" for a distiller and "R" for a rectifier, the number following said letter corresponding with the distiller's or rectifier's permit. Thus, "R-248" designates this respondent. A distiller who also operates a rectifying plant, having both kinds of permits, may use either symbol depending upon whether the liquor contained in the bottle was produced and bottled under his distiller's or his rectifier's permit. This number is placed on the bottle to identify the bottler.

Knowledge of these details is not widespread among the retail trade and is very limited among the general public. All whiskies, whether coming from a distillery or rectifier, are generally conceded to be "distilled" products. Therefore, it is not possible to determine from the presence of the phrase "Blended and Bottled by" alone, or the phrase "Bottled by" alone on the label whether the package was bottled by a rectifier who is a distiller, or by a rectifier who is not a distiller.

This respondent does not now and never has produced or manufactured distilled spirits of any kind from mash or raw materials, although its charter would authorize it so to do. Its rectifier's permit authorizes it to engage in the business of rectifying and blending, and is conditioned upon compliance by respondent with all applicable regulations made pursuant to law, which are or may hereafter be in force.

PAR. 3. The evidence adduced in this case from approximately eight competitive trade witnesses (both rectifiers and distillers) and sixteen members of the purchasing public shows, and the Commission finds, that for a long period of time the word "distilling," when used in connection with the liquor industry and the products thereof, has had and still has a definite significance and meaning to the minds of the wholesalers and retailers in such industry and to the ultimate purchasing public, to wit, the manufacturing of such liquors by the process of original and continuous distillation from mash, wort or wash, through continuous closed pipes and vessels until the manufacture thereof is completed; and a substantial portion of the purchasing public prefers to buy spirituous liquors prepared and bottled by distillers.

The rectification of alcoholic spirits by this respondent as aforesaid in the production of its gin, does not make or constitute it a distiller or a distilling company as defined by Sec. 3247 of the Revised Statutes of the United States regulating Internal Revenue.

The testimony of those having long experience in both the distilled spirits rectifying industry and the distilling industry, established, and the Commission finds that the foregoing rectification of alcoholic spirits by redistillation over juniper berries and other aromatics in the production of gin does not make or constitute this respondent a distilling company in the sense commonly understood by the liquor industry or by the general public.

PAR. 4. This respondent, by the use of the word "distillers" in its corporate name, on its stationery, mailing cards, invoices, and on the labels attached to the bottles in which it sold and shipped its products in interstate commerce, represented itself as a producer of distilled spirits from raw materials, and was so regarded, by virtue of said representations, by the trade and purchasing public. It thus represented to its customers and furnished them with the means of representing to their vendees, both retailers and the ultimate consuming public, that it was a distiller and that the whiskies and other spirituous beverages in said bottles contained were by it manufactured by the process of distillation from mash, wort, or wash, as aforesaid, when, as a matter of fact, respondent is not now and never was a distiller, does not now and never did distill the said whiskies, or other spirituous beverages, by it so bottled, labeled, sold, and transported, and does not now and never did own, operate, or control any place or places where such beverages are or were manufactured by the process of distillation from mash, wort, or wash.

PAR. 5. There were among the competitors of respondent engaged in the sale of spirituous beverages as mentioned in paragraph 1 hereof corporations, firms, partnerships, and individuals who manufactured and distilled from mash, wort or wash, as aforesaid, whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages sold by them and who truthfully used the words "distillery," "distilleries," "distillers," or "distiller" as a part of their corporate or trade names and on their stationery and advertising, and on the labels of the bottles in which they sold and shipped such products. There were also among such competitors corporations, firms, partnerships, and individuals engaged in the business of purchasing, rectifying, blending, bottling, and selling whiskies, gins and other spirituous beverages who did not use the words "distillery," "distilleries," "distiller," or "distillers" as a part of their corporate or trade names, on their stationery or advertising, or on the labels attached to the bottles in which they sold and shipped their said products.

PAR. 6. Representations by the respondent as hereinabove set forth had the capacity and tendency to and did mislead and deceive dealers and the purchasing public into the belief that respondent was a distiller, and that the whiskies and other spirituous beverages by it sold were manufactured and distilled by it from mash, wort, or wash, and had the capacity and tendency also to induce dealers and the purchasing public, acting in such beliefs, to purchase the whiskies and other spirituous beverages bottled and sold by the respondent, thereby diverting trade to respondent from its competitors who did not by their corporate or trade names, or in any other manner, misrepresent that they were manufacturers by distillation from mash, wort, or wash of whiskies or other spirituous beverages. Thereby respondent did substantial injury to competition in interstate commerce.

PAR. 7. At the time the hearings in this case were held, to wit, October 1936, respondent had no stock and no plant. On August 3, 1936, its basic permit had been amended by changing its address from 2431 Scotten Avenue, to 634 Lafayette Building, Detroit, Mich., which is a small temporary office where respondent gets its mail and is conducting certain correspondence in an endeavor to sell its rectifying equipment now located in Cincinnati, Ohio, with the Ansonia Copper Company. Respondent is attempting to sell its machinery and all its other assets in order to pay its creditors and close its books. It is now insolvent but there will be no bankruptcy proceedings as the chief creditors are financially interested in the respondent company, and the company expects to turn any proceeds over to its creditors and dissolve the company. Its labels, bearing the name "American Grain Distillers" were disposed of as junk. However, from the record before the Commission the company still maintains its corporate existence, and the Commission does not feel assured that upon a reorganization the name might not be resumed in interstate commerce in the absence of a prohibitive order.

PAR. 8. Because of existing regulations promulgated under the Federal Alcohol Administration Act, approved August 29, 1935, (49 Stat. 977), providing that rectifiers who redistill purchased alcohol over juniper berries and other aromatics may label such resulting product "Distilled Gin," and requiring that the labels state who distilled it, the Commission has excepted gins produced by respondent by redistillation of alcohol over juniper berries and other aromatics from the prohibitions of its order.

PAR. 9. The Commission's complaint in this case was issued on the same day as the decision of the United States Supreme Court in the case of A. L. A. Schechter Poultry Corporation, et al, vs. United States (295 U. S. 495), and contained two counts. Count 1 specifically charged a violation of the Federal Trade Commission Act, and count 2 charged that the practices of respondent, as hereinbefore set out, were unfair methods within the meaning of the Federal Trade Commission Act because they were in violation of Section 3 of Title I of the National Industrial Recovery Act, which was invalidated by the aforesaid decision. For that reason the Commission is dismissing the complaint as to count 2 thereof.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondent American Grain Distillers, Inc., were to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors, and constituted unfair methods of competition in commerce, within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

This proceeding having been heard by the Federal Trade Commission upon the complaint of the Commission, the answer of the respondent, testimony and other evidence taken before John L. Hornor, an examiner of the Commission theretofore duly designated by it, in support of the allegations of the said complaint, brief filed herein by PGad B. Morehouse, counsel for the Commission (no testimony or other evidence having been offered on behalf of respondent, and no brief having been filed on behalf of respondent, and no oral argument having been made), and the Commission having made its findings as to the facts and its conclusion that said respondent has violated the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled, "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

It is ordered, That the respondent, American Grain Distillers, Inc., its officers, representatives, agents, and employees, in connection with the offering for sale, or sale and distribution by it, in interstate commerce or in the District of Columbia of whiskies, gins, or other spirituous beverages (except gins produced by it through a process of rectification whereby alcohol purchased but not produced by respondent, is redistilled over juniper berries and other aromatics), do cease and desist from:

Representing, through the use of the word "distillers" in its corporate name, on its stationery, advertising, or on the labels attached to the bottles in which it sells and ships said products, or in any other way by word, or words of like import, (a) that it is a distiller of whiskies, gins, or other spirituous beverages; or (b) that the said whiskies, gins, or other spirituous beverages were by it manufactured through the process of distillation; or (c) that it owns, operates, or controls a place or places where any such products are by it manufactured by a process of original and continuous distillation from mash, wort, or wash, through continuous closed pipes and vessels until the manufacture thereof is completed, unless and until respondent shall actually own, operate, or control such a place, or places.

It is further ordered, That the said complaint be, and the same hereby is dismissed as to count 2 thereof.

It is further ordered, That the said respondent, within 60 days from and after the date of the service upon it of this order, shall file with the Commission a report or reports in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which it is complying and has complied with the order to cease and desist hereinabove set forth.

IN THE MATTER OF
SHUPE-WILLIAMS CANDY COMPANY

COMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION
OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 20, 1914

Where a corporation engaged in manufacture and sale of "straight" goods candy, and also of so-called "break and take," "draw," or "deal" assortments, sale and distribution of which type candy, in constant demand and affording, in connection with sale thereof to public, means or opportunity of obtaining a prize or becoming a winner by lot or chance, and providing an easy means of disposing of such products, teaches and encourages gambling among children, constituting substantial number of purchasers and consumers of such type, and sale and distribution of which in the markets of many manufacturers who sell their "straight" goods in interstate commerce in competition with the other, has been followed by a marked decrease in sales of such "straight" goods, due to gambling or lottery feature connected with said "break and take," "draw," or "deal" candy, preferred by consumers because of gambling feature connected therewith and sale of which candy, so packed and assembled as to enable retail dealers, without alteration, addition or rearrangement, to resell same to consuming public by lot or chance, is contrary to public policy—
Sold, to wholesalers, jobbers, and retailers, certain assortments of candy which were so packed and assembled as to involve, or were designed to or might involve, use of a lottery scheme when sold and distributed to consumers thereof, and several of which consisted of (a) a number of penny pieces of uniform size and shape, along with explanatory display cards for retailer's use, and number of larger pieces to be given to those purchasers procuring by chance one of aforesaid uniform pieces, concealed colored centers of which different from that of the majority, and small package of candy to be given as prize to purchaser of last piece in assortment, and (b) number of candy bars, together with push card for sale and distribution to purchasing public under a plan, and in accordance with said card's explanatory legend, by which person received, for five cents paid, one, two, three, four, or five bars of candy, dependent upon particular legend disclosed by chance by push, and purchaser of last push was entitled to six; so assembled and packed that they were designed to be, and were exposed and used by retailer dealer purchasers thereof for distribution and resale to purchasing public by lot or chance, without alteration or rearrangement and with knowledge and intent that such candy should thus be resold to public by lot or chance by said retail dealers, in competition with many who regard such sale and distribution as morally bad and as encouraging gambling, and especially among children, and as injurious to the candy industry through resulting in the merchandising of a chance or lottery instead of candy, and as providing retail merchants with a means of violating the laws of the several States, and some of whom, for such reasons, refuse to sell candy so packed and assembled that it can be resold to public by lot or chance;

Complaint

With result that such competitors were put to a disadvantage in competing, retailers, finding candy more salable by "break and take," "draw," or "deal" method, bought from it and others employing same methods of sale, trade was diverted to it and others using similar method from said competitors, who could compete on even terms only by giving similar devices to retailers, and sales of their "straight" candy, in their unwillingness so to do, showed a marked decrease, some competitors began sale and distribution of candy by lot or chance in order to meet competition of manufacturers who thus sold and distributed such products, and trade was diverted to it from its said competitors, and there was a restraint upon and a detriment to the freedom of fair and legitimate competition in the industry involved; to the prejudice and injury of the public and competitors:

Held, That such acts and practices, under the conditions and circumstances set forth, were all to the prejudice of the public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition.

Before Mr. Charles P. Vicini and Mr. Henry M. White, trial examiners.

Mr. P. C. Kolinski and Mr. Henry C. Lank for the Commission.

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that Shupe-Williams Candy Company, a corporation, hereinafter referred to as respondent, has been and is using unfair methods of competition in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in said act of Congress, and it appearing to said Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent is a corporation, organized under the laws of Utah with its principal office and place of business in the city of Ogden, State of Utah. Respondent is now, and for several years last past, has been engaged in the manufacture of candy and in the sale and distribution thereof to wholesale and retail dealers located at points in the various States of the United States, and causes said products, when so sold, to be transported from its place of business in the city of Ogden, State of Utah, to purchasers thereof in other States of the United States at their respective places of business, and there is now, and has been for several years last past, a course of trade and commerce by said respondent in such candy, between and among the States of the United States. In the course and conduct of the said business, respondent is in competition with other corporations and with individuals and partnerships engaged in the sale and distribution of candy and candy products in commerce between and among the various States of the United States.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of its business, as described in paragraph 1 hereof, respondent sells and has sold to wholesale and retail dealers, various packages or assortments of candy, so packed and assembled as to involve the use of a lottery scheme when sold and distributed to the consumers thereof. Certain of said packages are hereinafter described for the purpose of showing the methods used by respondent, but this list is not all inclusive of the various packages, nor does it include all the details of the several sales plans which respondent has been or is using in the distribution of candy by lot or chance:

(a) One of said assortments is composed of a number of pieces of candy of uniform size, shape, and quality, together with a number of larger pieces of candy and a small box of candy, which larger pieces of candy and small box of candy are to be given as prizes to purchasers of said pieces of candy of uniform size, shape, and quality, in the following manner:

The majority of the said pieces of candy of uniform size, shape, and quality, have centers of the same color, but a small number of said pieces of candy have centers of a different color. The said pieces of candy of uniform size, shape and quality, retail at the price of one cent each, but the purchaser who procures one of the said candies having a center of a different color than the majority, is entitled to receive, and is to be given free of charge, one of the said larger pieces of candy heretofore referred to. The purchaser of the last piece of candy in said assortment is entitled to receive, and is to be given free of charge, the small box of candy. The color of the center of said pieces of candy is effectively concealed from purchasers and prospective purchasers until a selection has been made and the piece of candy broken open. The aforesaid purchasers of said candy having a center colored differently from the majority thus procure one of the said larger pieces of candy wholly by lot or chance, and the purchaser of the last piece of candy in the said assortment thus procures the small box of candy wholly by lot or chance.

The respondent furnishes to said wholesale and retail dealers, with said assortment, a display card to be used by the retail dealer in offering said candy to the public. The display card bears a legend or statement informing the prospective purchaser that the said candy is being sold in accordance with the above described sales plan.

(b) Another assortment manufactured and distributed by respondent is composed of a number of candy bars, together with a device commonly called a push card. Candy contained in said assortment is distributed to purchasers in the following manner:

The push card has a number of partially perforated discs, and when a push is made and the disc separated from the card, a legend is disclosed. Sales are 5¢ each and the card bears statements informing customers and prospective customers that certain specified legends entitle customer to one bar of candy, that certain other specified legends entitle the customer to two bars of candy, that certain other specified legends entitle the customer to three bars, that certain other specified legends entitle the customer to four bars of candy, and that other specified legends entitle the customer to five bars of candy. The legends on the discs or pushes are effectively concealed from the purchaser and prospective purchaser until a selection has been made and the disc separated from the card. The number of bars of candy which a customer receives for the price of 5¢ is thus determined wholly by lot or chance.

PAR 3. The wholesale dealers to whom respondent sells its assortments, resell said assortments to retail dealers, and said retail dealers, and the retail dealers to whom respondent sells direct, expose said assortments for sale, and sell said candy to the purchasing public in accordance with the aforesaid sales plans. Respondent thus supplies to and places in the hands of others the means of conducting lotteries in the sale of its products in accordance with the sales plans hereinabove set forth, as a means of inducing purchasers thereof to purchase respondent's said products in preference to candy offered for sale and sold by its competitors.

PAR. 4. The sale of said candy to the purchasing public in the manner above alleged involves a game of chance or the sale of a chance to procure (a) larger pieces of candy or a small box of candy; (b) additional bars of candy.

The use by respondent of said method of the sale of candies, and the sale of candies by and through the use thereof and by the aid of said method is a practice of the sort which the common law and criminal statutes have long deemed contrary to public policy; and is contrary to an established public policy of the Government of the United States. The use by respondent of said method has the dangerous tendency unduly to hinder competition or create monopoly in this, to wit: that the use thereof has the tendency and capacity to exclude from the branch of the candy trade involved in this proceeding competitors who do not adopt and use the same method or an equivalent or similar method involving the same or an equivalent or similar element of chance or lottery scheme.

Wherefore, many persons, firms, and corporations who make and sell candy in competition with the respondent, as above alleged, are unwilling to offer for sale or sell candy so packed and assembled as above alleged, or otherwise arranged and packed for sale to the purchasing public so as to involve a game of chance, and such competitors refrain therefrom.

the manner above described, and are thereby induced to purchase said candy so packed and sold by respondent, in preference to candy offered for sale and sold by said competitors of respondent who do not use the same or equivalent methods. The use of said method by respondent has the tendency and capacity, because of said game of chance, to divert to respondent trade and custom from its said competitors who do not use the same or an equivalent method; to exclude from said candy trade all competitors who are unwilling to and who do not use the same or an equivalent method because the same is unlawful; to lessen competition in said candy trade, and to tend to create a monopoly of said candy trade in respondent and such other distributors of candy as use the same or an equivalent method, and to deprive the purchasing public of the benefit of free competition in said candy trade. The use of said method by the respondent has the tendency and capacity to eliminate from said candy trade all actual competitors, and to exclude therefrom all potential competitors, who do not adopt and use said method or an equivalent method.

PAR. 6. Many of said competitors of respondent are unwilling to adopt and use said method or any method involving a game of chance or the sale of a chance to win something by chance or any other method that is contrary to public policy.

PAR. 7. The aforementioned methods, acts, and practices of the respondent are all to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors as hereinabove alleged. Said methods, acts and practices constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914.

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, on January 31, 1936, issued and served a complaint upon the respondent, Shupe-Williams Candy Company, a corporation, charging that respondent had been and was using unfair methods of competition in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in said act of Congress.

After the issuance of said complaint and the filing of respondent's answer thereto, testimony and other evidence in support of the allegations of the complaint were introduced by P. C. Kolinski, attorney for the Commission, and in opposition to the allegations of the complaint by D. B. Van Dyke and H. L. Mulliner, attorneys for the respondent, before Charles P. Vicini and Henry M. White, examiners of the Commission theretofore duly designated by it, and said testimony and other evidence were duly recorded and filed in the office of the Commission.

Thereafter, the proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on said complaint, the answer thereto, testimony and other evidence, briefs in support of the complaint and in opposition thereto, and the oral argument of Henry C. Lank, counsel for the Commission, the respondent not being represented although duly notified of the time and place of such hearing; and the Commission, having duly considered the same and being fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent, Shupe-Williams Candy Company, is a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Utah, with its principal office and place of business located at 2605 Wall Avenue, in the city of Ogden, State of Utah. Respondent is now, and for several years last past has been, engaged in the manufacture of candy in the city of Ogden and in the sale and distribution thereof to retail dealers and jobbers located in the State of Utah and in the States of Idaho, Nevada, Wyoming, Montana, Colorado, and Oregon. It causes said candy when sold to be shipped or transported from its principal place of business in the State of Utah to purchasers thereof in Utah and in the other States of the United States as mentioned above. In so carrying on said business, respondent is and has been engaged in interstate commerce, and is and has been engaged in active competition with other corporations and with partnerships and individuals engaged in the manufacture of candy and in the sale and distribution thereof in commerce between and among the various States of the United States.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of its business, as described in paragraph 1 hereof, respondent sells and has sold to wholesale dealers, jobbers, and retail dealers certain assortments of candy so packed and assembled as to involve, or which are designed to or may involve, the use of a lottery scheme when sold and distributed to the consumers thereof.

Several of such assortments manufactured, sold and distributed by respondent are composed of a number of pieces of candy of uniform size and shape, together with a number of larger pieces of candy and a small package of candy, which larger pieces of candy and small package of candy are to be given as prizes to purchasers of said pieces of candy of uniform size and shape in the following manner: The majority of the said pieces of candy of uniform size and shape have centers of the same color, but a small number of said pieces of candy have centers of a different color. The said pieces of candy of uniform size and shape retail at the price of 1¢ each, but the purchaser who procures one of the said candies having a center of a different color from the majority is entitled to receive and is to be given free of charge one of the said larger pieces of candy in said assortment. The purchaser of the last piece of candy in said assortment is entitled to receive and is to be given free of charge the small package of candy contained in said assortment. The color of the center of said pieces of candy is effectively concealed from purchasers and prospective purchasers until a selection has been made and the piece of candy selected broken open. The purchasers of said candies having a center colored differently from the majority thus procure one of the said larger pieces of candy or the small package of candy wholly by lot or chance. The respondent furnishes to said wholesale and retail dealers with said assortments a display card to be used by retail dealers in offering said candy to the public. The display card bears a legend or statement informing purchasers and prospective purchasers that the said candy is being sold in accordance with the above described sales plan.

Respondent has also distributed and does distribute assortments of candy which are composed of a number of bars of candy, together with a device commonly called a "push card". The said bars of candy are distributed to the consuming public by means of said pushcard in the following manner: The pushcard has a number of partially perforated discs, and when a push is made and the disc separated from the card a legend is disclosed. Sales are 5¢ each, and the card bears statements informing customers and prospective customers that certain specified legends entitle the customer to one bar of candy; that certain other specified legends entitle the customer to two bars of candy; others to three bars of candy; others to four bars of candy; others to five bars of candy; and that the purchaser of the last push is entitled to six bars of candy. The legends on the discs or pushes are effectively concealed from purchasers and prospective purchasers until a selection has been made and the particular disc selected separated from the card. The fact as to whether a purchaser receives one, two, three, four, five, or six bars of candy for the price of 5¢ is thus determined wholly by lot or chance.

PAR. 3. The candy assortments involving the lot or chance feature, as above described, are generally referred to in the candy trade or industry as "break and take," "draw," or "deal" assortments. Assortments of candy without the lot or chance features in connection with their resale to the public are generally referred to in the candy trade or industry as "straight" goods. These terms will be used hereafter in these findings to distinguish these separate types of assortments.

PAR. 4. The wholesale dealers or jobbers to whom respondent sells its assortments resell the same to retail dealers. Respondent also sells its said assortments direct to retail dealers. Numerous retail dealers purchase the assortments described in paragraph 2 above either from respondent or from wholesale dealers or jobbers who in turn have purchased said assortments from respondent, and such retail dealers display said assortments for sale to the public as packed by respondent, and the candy contained in said assortments is generally sold and distributed to the consuming public in accordance with respondents' sales plans, as above described.

PAR. 5. All sales made by respondent, whether to wholesalers and jobbers or to retail dealers, are absolute sales and respondent retains no control over said assortments after they are delivered to the wholesale dealer or jobber or retail dealer. The assortments are assembled and packed in such manner that they are designed to be used and are used by the retail dealer for distribution to the purchasing public by lot or chance without alteration or rearrangement. In the sale and distribution to jobbers and wholesale dealers for resale to retail dealers and to retail dealers direct of the assortments of candy described in paragraph 2, respondent has knowledge that said candy will be resold to the purchasing public by retail dealers by lot or chance, and it packs such candy in the way and manner described so that without alteration, addition or rearrangement thereof it may be resold to the public by lot or chance by said retail dealers.

PAR. 6. There are in the United States and in the territory served by this respondent many manufacturers of candy who do not manufacture and sell "break and take," "draw," or "deal" assortments of candy and who sell their "straight" goods in interstate commerce in competition with the "break and take," "draw," or "deal" candy, and manufacturers of "straight" goods have noted a marked decrease in the sales of their products whenever or wherever the "break and take,"

"draw," or "deal" assortments have appeared in their markets. This decrease in the sale of "straight" candy is due to the gambling or lottery feature connected with the "break and take," "draw," or "deal" candy. Witnesses from several branches of the candy industry testified in this proceeding to the effect that consumers preferred to purchase the "break and take," "draw," or "deal" candy because of the gambling feature connected with its sale. The sale and distribution of "break and take," "draw," or "deal" packages or assortments of candy, or of candy which has connected with its sale to the public the means or opportunity of obtaining a prize or becoming a winner by lot or chance, teaches and encourages gambling among children, who comprise a substantial number of the purchasers and consumers of this type of candy.

PAR. 7. The sale and distribution of candy by the retailers by the methods described herein is the sale and distribution of candy by lot or chance and constitutes a lottery or gaming device. The Commission finds that many competitors regard such sale and distribution as morally bad and as encouraging gambling, especially among children; as injurious to the candy industry because it results in the merchandising of a chance or lottery instead of candy; and as providing retail merchants with a means of violating the laws of the several States. Because of these reasons some competitors of respondent refuse to sell candy so packed and assembled that it can be resold to the public by lot or chance. These competitors are thereby put to a disadvantage in competing. The retailers, finding that they can dispose of more candy by the "break and take," "draw," or "deal" method, buy from respondent and others employing the same methods of sale, and thereby trade is diverted to respondent and others using similar methods from said competitors. Such competitors can compete on even terms only by giving the same or similar devices to retailers. This they are unwilling to do, and their sales of "straight" candy show a marked decrease. The sale and distribution of candy by lot or chance provides an easy means of disposing of such products. There is a constant demand for candy which is sold by lot or chance, and in order to meet the competition of manufacturers who sell and distribute candy which is sold by such methods, some competitors have begun the sale and distribution of candy to the public by lot or chance. The use of such methods by respondent, in the sale and distribution of its candy, is prejudicial and injurious to the public and its competitors, and has resulted in the diversion of trade to respondent from its said competitors, and is a restraint upon and a detriment to the freedom of fair and legitimate competition in the candy industry.

Order

PAR. 8. Respondent sells its merchandise in the States of Utah, Idaho, Nevada, Wyoming, Montana, Colorado, and Oregon. The majority of its candy is sold as "straight" merchandise, but its sales of "break and take," "draw," or "deal" assortments are substantial.

PAR. 9. The Commission further finds that the sale and distribution in interstate commerce of assortments or packages of candy so packed and assembled as to enable retail dealers, without alteration, addition or rearrangement, to resell the same to the consuming public by lot or chance, is contrary to public policy.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of respondent, Shupe-Williams Candy Company, a corporation, under the conditions and circumstances set forth in the foregoing findings of fact, are all to the prejudice of the public and respondents' competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce, within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

It is hereby ordered, That the respondent, Shupe-Williams Candy Company, a corporation, its officers, agents, representatives, and employees, in the offering for sale, sale and distribution in interstate commerce of candy, do cease and desist from:

1. Selling and distributing to wholesale dealers and jobbers, for resale to retail dealers and to retail dealers direct, candy so packed and assembled that sales of said candy to the general public are to be made, or may be made, by means of a lottery, gaming device, or gift enterprise.

2. Supplying to or placing in the hands of retail and wholesale dealers and jobbers assortments of candy which are used, or may be used, without alteration or rearrangement of the contents of such assortments, to conduct a lottery, gaming device, or gift enterprise in the sale or distribution of the candy contained in said assortments to the public.

3. Packing or assembling in the same assortment of candy for sale to the public at retail pieces of candy of uniform size and shape having centers of a different color, together with larger pieces of candy and a small package of candy, which said larger pieces of candy and small package of candy are to be given as prizes to the purchaser procuring a piece of candy with a center of a particular color.

4. Supplying to or placing in the hands of retail and wholesale dealers and jobbers assortments of candy, together with a device commonly called a "push card," for use, or which may be used, in distributing or selling said candy to the public at retail.

5. Furnishing to retail and wholesale dealers and jobbers a device commonly called a "push card," either with assortments of candy or separately, bearing a legend or legends or statements informing the purchasing public that the candy is being sold to the public by lot or chance, or in accordance with a sales plan which constitutes a lottery, gaming device, or gift enterprise.

It is further ordered, That the respondent, Shupe-Williams Candy Company, a corporation, shall, within 30 days after service upon it of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which it has complied with the order to cease and desist hereinabove set forth.

OSTLER CANDY COMPANYCOMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 26, 1914*Docket 2837. Complaint, June 8, 1936—Decision, June 17, 1937*

Where a corporation engaged in manufacture and sale of "straight" or "staple" goods candy, and also of so-called "break and take," "draw," or "deal" assortments, sale and distribution of which type candy, in constant demand and affording, in connection with sale thereof to public, means or opportunity of obtaining a prize or becoming a winner by lot or chance, and providing an easy means of disposing of such products, teaches, and encourages gambling among children, constituting substantial number of purchasers and consumers of such type, and sale and distribution of which in the markets of many manufacturers who sell their "straight" goods in interstate commerce in competition with the other, has been followed by a marked decrease in sales of such "straight" goods, due to gambling or lottery feature connected with said "break and take," "draw," or "deal" candy, preferred by consumers because of gambling feature connected therewith, and sale of which candy, so packed and assembled as to enable retail dealers, without alteration, addition or rearrangement, to resell same to consuming public by lot or chance, is contrary to public policy—

Sold, to jobbers and retailers, certain assortments of candy which were so packed and assembled as to involve, or which were designed to involve, use of a lottery scheme when sold and distributed to consumers thereof, and several of which consisted of (a) a number of candy bars, together with a push card, for sale and distribution to purchasing public under a plan, and in accordance with said card's explanatory legend, by which person received, for five cents paid, one or more additional bars of candy, depending on numbers or legends pushed by chance, and last push on card likewise received specified number of additional bars, and of other assortments involving same principal or sales plan where unit of sale was one cent rather than five cents, and varying in detail from that immediately above described in such matters as inclusion of additional pieces of candy to be given as prizes or in the furnishing of articles of merchandise other than candy to be thus given and distributed to ultimate consumers wholly by lot or chance, and (b) assortments of a number of penny pieces of candy of uniform size and shape, together with number of larger pieces to be given as prizes to purchasers of a relatively few of said uniform pieces, concealed color or colored centers of which differed from that of the majority, and also with small box of candy to be given free of charge to purchaser of last piece of uniform size in assortment; so assembled and packed that they were designed to be, and were, exposed and used by retail dealer purchasers for distribution and resale to purchasing public by lot or chance, without alteration or rearrangement, and with knowledge and intent that such candy should thus be resold to public by lot or chance by said retail dealers, in competition with many who regard such sale and distribution as morally bad and as encouraging gambling, and especially among children, and as injurious to the candy industry through resulting in the merchandising of a chance or lottery instead of candy, and as providing retail merchants with a means of violating the laws of the several States, and some of whom, for such reasons, refuse to sell candy so packed and assembled that it can be resold to public by lot or chance;

With result that such competitors were put to a disadvantage in competing, retailers, finding candy more salable by "break and take," "draw," or "deal" method, bought from it and others employing same methods of sale, trade was diverted to it and others using similar method from said competitors, who could compete on even terms only by giving similar devices to retailers, and sales of their "straight" candy, in their unwillingness so to do, showed a marked decrease, some competitors began sale and distribution of candy by lot or chance in order to meet competition of manufacturers who thus sold and distributed such products, and trade was diverted to it from its said competitors, and there was a restraint upon and a detriment to the freedom of fair and legitimate competition in the industry involved; to the prejudice and injury of the public and competitors:

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that Ostler Candy Company, a corporation, hereinafter referred to as respondent, has been and is using unfair methods of competition in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in said act of Congress, and it appearing to said Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent, Ostler Candy Company, is a corporation organized and operating under the laws of the State of Utah, with its principal place of business located at 143 South State Street, Salt Lake City, Utah. Respondent is now, and for several years last past has been, engaged in the manufacture of candy and in the sale and distribution of such products and in the sale and distribution of the products of other candy manufacturers to wholesale dealers, jobbers, and retail dealers located at points in the various States of the United States, and causes and has caused all of said products, when so sold, to be transported from its principal place of business in Salt Lake City, Utah, to purchasers thereof in other States of the United States at their respective places of business, and there is now and has been for more than one year last past a course of trade and commerce by said respondent in such candy between and among the States of the United States. In the course and conduct of its said business, respondent is in competition with other corporations and with partnerships and individuals engaged in the manufacture of candy and in the sale and distribution thereof in commerce between and among the various States of the United States.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of its business as described in paragraph 1 hereof, respondent sells and has sold to wholesale and retail dealers certain assortments of candy so packed and assembled as to involve the use of a lottery scheme when sold and distributed to the consumers thereof.

(a) Several of said assortments manufactured, sold and distributed by the respondent are composed of a number of bars of candy, together with a device commonly called a push card. The said bars of candy are distributed to the consuming public by means of said push card in the following manner. The push card has a number of partially perforated discs and when a push is made and the disc separated from the card a number or legend is disclosed. Sales are five cents each and the card bears a statement or statements informing customers and prospective customers that all the numbers or legends pushed from said card receive one bar of candy, but that certain specified numbers or legends receive one or more additional bars of candy. The push card also bears a legend stating that the last push on the card receives a specified number of additional bars of candy. All purchasers receive one bar of candy, but purchasers obtaining the specified numbers or legends receive additional bars of candy of the same size and quality. The numbers or legends on said card are effectively concealed from the purchaser or prospective purchaser until a push or sale has been made and the particular push separated from the card. The additional bars of candy in said assortment are thus distributed to purchasers of pushes from said card wholly by lot or chance.

(b) The respondent distributes several other assortments involving the same principle or sales plan, where the unit of sale is one cent, rather than five cents. These several assortments vary only in detail from the assortments described above in paragraph (a). In some of said assortments larger pieces of candy instead of additional pieces of candy are to be given as prizes and in other of the assortments, articles of merchandise other than candy are furnished and are to be given as prizes to purchasers from said assortments. The larger or additional pieces of candy and the other articles of merchandise are distributed to the ultimate consumer wholly by lot or chance.

(c) Certain other assortments manufactured, sold and distributed by respondent are composed of a number of pieces of candy of uniform size and shape, together with a number of larger pieces of candy and a small box of candy, which larger pieces of candy and the small box of candy are to be given as prizes to purchasers of said pieces of candy of uniform size and shape in the following manner. The majority of said pieces of candy of uniform size and shape are of the same color or have centers of the same color, but a small number of said pieces of candy are of different color or have centers of different color. The said pieces of uniform size and shape retail at a price of one cent each, but the purchaser who procures one of said candies colored differently or having a center colored differently from the majority, is entitled to receive and is to be given, free of charge, one of the said larger pieces of candy heretofore referred to. The purchaser of the last piece of candy of uniform size and shape in said assortments is entitled to receive and is to be given, free of charge, the small box of candy. The color of the said pieces of candy or the color of the centers of the said pieces of candy in said assortments is effectively concealed from the purchaser and prospective purchaser until a selection has been made and the wrapper removed or the piece of candy broken open. The aforesaid purchasers of said candies who procure a candy colored differently or having a center colored differently from the majority of said pieces of candy of uniform size and shape in said assortment, thus procure one of the said larger pieces of candy or the small box of candy wholly by lot or chance.

PAR. 3. The wholesale dealers and jobbers to whom respondent sells its assortment, resell the same to retail dealers and said retail dealers and the retail dealers to whom respondent sells direct, expose said assortments for sale and sell said candy to the purchasing public in accordance with the aforesaid sales plans. Respondent thus supplies to and places in the hands of others the means of conducting lotteries in the sales of its products, in accordance with the sales plans hereinabove set forth, and said sales plans have the capacity and tendency of inducing purchasers thereof to purchase respondent's said products in preference to candy offered for sale and sold by its competitors.

PAR. 4. The sale of said candy to the purchasing public in the manner above alleged involves a game of chance or the sale of a chance to procure additional or larger bars of candy or small boxes of candy or other articles of merchandise.

The use by respondent of said methods in the sale of candy and the sale of candy by and through the use thereof, and by the aid of said methods, is a practice of the sort which the common law and criminal statutes have long deemed contrary to public policy; and is contrary to an established public policy of the Government of the United States. The use by respondent of said methods has a dangerous tendency unduly to hinder competition or create monopoly in this, to wit: that the use thereof has the tendency and capacity to exclude from the branch of the candy trade involved in this proceeding competitors who do not adopt and use the same methods or equivalent or similar methods involving the same or equivalent or similar elements of chance or lottery schemes.

Many persons, firms, and corporations who make and sell candy in competition with the respondent as above alleged, are unwilling to offer for sale or sell candy so packed and assembled as above alleged or otherwise arranged and packed for sale to the purchasing public so as to involve a game of chance, and such competitors refrain therefrom.

PAR. 5. Many dealers in and ultimate purchasers of candy are attracted by respondent's said methods and manner of packing said candy and by the element of chance involved in the sale thereof in the manner above described, and are thereby induced to purchase said candies so packed and sold by respondent in preference to candy offered for sale and sold by said competitors of respondent who do not use the same or equivalent methods. The use of said methods by respondent has the tendency and capacity because of said games of chance to divert to respondent trade and custom from its said competitors who do not use the same or equivalent methods; to exclude from said candy trade all competitors who are unwilling to and who do not use the same or equivalent methods because the same is unlawful; to lessen competition in said candy trade, and to tend to create a monopoly of said candy trade in respondent and such other distributors of candy as use the same or equivalent method and to deprive the purchasing public of the benefit of free competition in said candy trade. The use of said methods by the respondent has the tendency and capacity to eliminate from said candy trade all actual competitors and to exclude therefrom all potential competitors who do not adopt and use said methods or equivalent methods.

PAR. 6. Many of said competitors of respondent are unwilling to adopt and use said methods or any method involving a game of chance or the sale of a chance to win something by chance or any other method that is contrary to public policy.

PAR. 7. The aforementioned methods, acts and practices of respondent are all to the prejudice of the public and respondent's competitors as hereinabove alleged. Said methods, acts and practices constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914.

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, on June 8, 1936, issued and served a complaint upon the respondent, Ostler Candy Company, a corporation, charging that respondent had been and was using unfair methods of competition in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in said act of Congress.

After the issuance of said complaint and the filing of respondent's answer thereto, testimony and other evidence in support of the allegations of the complaint were introduced by P. C. Kolinski, attorney for the Commission, and in opposition to the allegations of the complaint by H. L. Mulliner, attorney for the respondent, before Charles P. Vicini and Henry M. White, examiners of the Commission theretofore duly designated by it, and said testimony and other evidence were duly recorded and filed in the office of the Commission.

Thereafter, the proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on said complaint, the answer thereto, testimony and other evidence, briefs in support of the complaint and in opposition thereto, and the oral argument of Henry C. Lank, counsel for the Commission, the respondent not being represented although duly notified of the time and place of such hearing; and the Commission, having duly considered the same and being fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent, Ostler Candy Company, is a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Utah, with its principal office and place of business located at 143 South State Street, in Salt Lake City, Utah. Respondent is now, and for several years⁵ last past has been, engaged in the manufacture of candy in Salt Lake City and in the sale and distribution thereof to retail dealers and jobbers located in the State of Utah and to retail dealers in the States of Nevada, Wyoming, Idaho, and Montana. It causes the said candy when sold to be shipped or transported from its principal place of business in the State of Utah to purchasers thereof in Utah and in the other States of the United States as mentioned above. In so carrying on said business, respondent is and has been engaged in interstate commerce, and is and has been engaged in active competition with other corporations and with partnerships and individuals engaged in the manufacture of candy and in the sale and distribution thereof in commerce between and among the various States of the United States.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of its business, as described in paragraph 1 hereof, respondent sells and has sold to jobbers and retail dealers, as above described, certain assortments of candy so packed and assembled as to involve, or which are designed to involve, the use of a lottery scheme when sold and distributed to the consumers thereof. Several of such assortments manufactured, sold, and distributed by respondent are composed of a number of bars of candy, together with a device commonly called a "push card." The said bars of candy are distributed to the consuming public by means of said push card in the following manner: The push card has a number of partially perforated discs, and when a push is made and the disc separated from the card a number or legend is disclosed. Sales are 5¢ each, and the card bears a statement or statements informing customers and prospective customers that all the numbers or legends pushed from said card receive one bar of candy, but that certain specified numbers or legends receive one or more additional bars of candy. The push card also bears a legend stating that the last push on the card receives a specified number of additional bars of candy. All purchasers receive one bar of candy, but purchasers obtaining the specified numbers or legends receive additional bars of candy of the same size and quality. The numbers or legends on said card are effectively concealed from the purchaser or prospective purchaser until a push or sale has been made and the particular push separated from the card. The additional bars of candy in said assortment are thus distributed to purchasers of pushes from said card wholly by lot or chance.

Respondent has distributed and does distribute several other assortments involving the same principle or sales plan as that described above where the unit of sale is 1¢ rather than 5¢. These several assortments vary only in detail from the assortment described immediately above. In some of said assortments larger pieces of candy, instead of additional pieces of candy, are to be given as prizes, and in other assortments articles of merchandise other than candy are furnished by respondent and are to be given as prizes to purchasers from said assortments. The larger or additional pieces of candy, or the other articles of merchandise, are distributed to the ultimate consumers wholly by lot or chance.

Respondent has also distributed and does distribute assortments which are composed of a number of pieces of candy of uniform size and shape, together with a number of larger pieces of candy and a small box of candy, which larger pieces of candy and small box of candy are to be given as prizes to purchasers of said pieces of candy of uniform size and shape in the following manner: The majority of said pieces of candy of uniform size and shape are of the same color or have centers of the same color, but a small number of said pieces of candy are of different color or have centers of different color. The said pieces of candy of uniform size and shape retail at a price of 1¢ each, but the purchaser who procured one of said candies colored differently or having a center colored differently from the majority is entitled to receive and is to be given free of charge one of the said larger pieces of candy heretofore referred to. The purchaser of the last piece of candy of uniform size and shape in said assortment is entitled to receive and is to be given free of charge the small box of candy. The color of the said pieces of candy, or the color of the centers of the said pieces of candy in said assortment, is effectively concealed from the purchaser and prospective purchaser until a selection has been made and the piece of candy broken open. The aforesaid purchasers of said candies who procure a candy colored differently, or having a center colored differently from the majority of said pieces of candy of uniform size and shape in said assortment, thus procure one of the said larger pieces of candy or the small box of candy wholly by lot or chance.

PAR. 3. The candy assortments involving the lot or chance feature, as above described, are generally referred to in the candy trade or industry as "draw," "deal," or "break and take" assortments. Assortments of candy without lot or chance features in connection with their resale to the public are generally referred to in the candy trade or industry as "straight" or "staple" goods. These terms will be used hereafter in these findings to distinguish these separate types of assortments.

PAR. 4. The wholesale dealers or jobbers to whom respondent sells its assortments resell the same to retail dealers, and said retail dealers and the retail dealers to whom respondent sells direct expose said assortments for sale and sell said candy to the purchasing public in accordance with the sales plans as described above.

PAR. 5. All sales made by respondent, whether to wholesale dealers and jobbers or to retail dealers, are absolute sales and respondent retains no control over said assortments after they are delivered to the wholesale dealer or jobber or retail dealer. The assortments are assembled and packed in such manner that they are designed to be used and are used by the retail dealer for distribution to the purchasing public by lot or chance without alteration or rearrangement. In the sale and distribution to jobbers and wholesale dealers for resale to retail dealers and to retail dealers direct of the assortments of candy described in paragraph 2, respondent has knowledge that said candy will be resold to the purchasing public by retail dealers by lot or chance, and it packs such candy in the way and manner described so that without alteration, addition or rearrangement thereof it may be resold to the public by lot or chance by said retail dealers.

PAR. 6. There are in the United States many manufacturers of candy, competing with respondent in the territory served by respondent, who do not manufacture and sell "draw," "deal," or "break and take" assortments of candy and who sell their "straight" or "staple" goods in interstate commerce in competition with the "draw," "deal," or "break and take" candy, and manufacturers of "straight" or "staple" goods have noted a marked decrease in the sales of their products whenever or wherever the "draw," "deal," or "break and take" assortments have appeared in their markets. This decrease in the sale of "straight" or "staple" candy is due to the gambling or lottery feature connected with the "draw," "deal," or "break and take" candy. Witnesses from several branches of the candy industry testified in this proceeding to the effect that consumers preferred to purchase the "draw," "deal," or break and take" candy because of the gambling feature connected with its sale. The sale and distribution of "draw," "deal," or "break and take" packages or assortments of candy, or of candy which has connected with its sale to the public the means or opportunity of obtaining a prize or becoming a winner by lot or chance, teaches and encourages gambling among children who comprise a substantial number of the purchasers and consumers of this type of candy.

PAR. 7. The sale and distribution of candy by the retailers by the methods described herein is the sale and distribution of candy by lot or chance and constitutes a lottery or gaming device. The Commission finds that many competitors regard such sale and distribution as morally bad and as encouraging gambling, especially among children; as injurious to the candy industry because it results in the merchandising of a chance or lottery instead of candy; and as providing retail merchants with a means of violating the laws of the several States. Because of these reasons some competitors of respondent refuse to sell candy so packed and assembled that it can be resold to the public by lot or chance. These competitors are thereby put to a disadvantage in competing. The retailers, finding that they can dispose of more candy by the "draw," "deal," or "break and take" method, buy from respondent and others employing the same methods of sale, and thereby trade is diverted to respondent and others using similar methods from said competitors. Such competitors can compete on even terms only by giving the same or similar devices to retailers. This they are unwilling to do, and their sales of "straight" or "staple" candy show a marked decrease. The sale and distribution of candy by lot or chance provides an easy means of disposing of such products. There is a constant demand for candy which is sold by lot or chance, and in order to meet the competition of manufacturers, who sell and distribute candy which is sold by such methods some competitors have begun the sale and distribution of candy to the public by lot or chance. The use of such methods by respondent in the sale and distribution of its candy is prejudicial and injurious to the public and its competitors, and has resulted in the diversion of trade to respondent from its said competitors, and is a restraint upon and a detriment to the freedom of fair and legitimate competition in the candy industry.

PAR. 8. Respondent sells its merchandise in the States of Utah, Nevada, Idaho, Montana, and Wyoming. The majority of its candy is sold as "straight" merchandise, only a small part of its sales being assortments with which a pushcard is furnished or which is so packed and assembled as to involve a lot or chance feature when resold to the consuming public, but all of its salesmen at all times offer said "draw," "deal," or "break and take" assortments of candy to its customers and prospective customers, together with its "straight" merchandise. While the annual volume of business of respondent was not shown exactly, an officer for the respondent testified, and the Commission finds, that respondent's annual volume of business is substantial.

PAR. 9. The Commission further finds that the sale and distribution in interstate commerce of assortments or packages of candy so packed and assembled as to enable retail dealers, without alteration, addition or rearrangement, to resell the same to the consuming public by lot or chance, is contrary to public policy.

Order

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of respondent, Ostler Candy Company, a corporation, under the conditions and circumstances set forth in the foregoing findings of fact, are all to the prejudice of the public and respondent's competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

It is now ordered, That the respondent, Ostler Candy Company, a corporation, its officers, agents, representatives, and employees, in the offering for sale, sale, and distribution in interstate commerce of candy, do cease and desist from:

1. Selling and distributing to jobbers and wholesale dealers for resale to retail dealers, or to retail dealers direct, candy so packed and assembled that sales of such candy to the general public are to be made, or may be made, by means of a lottery, gaming device, or gift enterprise.

2. Supplying to or placing in the hands of wholesale dealers and jobbers or retail dealers, packages or assortments of candy which are used, or which may be used, without alteration or rearrangement of the contents of such packages or assortments, to conduct a lottery, gaming device, or gift enterprise in the sale or distribution of the candy contained in said packages or assortments to the public.

3. Packing or assembling in the same package or assortment of candy for sale to the public at retail, bars of candy, together with a device commonly called a "push card," which push card is for use, or which may be or is designed to be used, in distributing or selling said candy to the public at retail.

4. Packing or assembling in the same package or assortment of candy for sale to the public at retail, pieces of candy of uniform size and shape of different colors or having centers of a different color, together with larger pieces of candy or other articles of merchandise, which said larger pieces of candy or other articles of merchandise are to be given as prizes to the purchaser procuring a piece of candy of a particular color or having a center of a particular color.

5. Furnishing to retail and wholesale dealers and jobbers, a device commonly called a "push card," either with packages or assortments of candy or separately, bearing a legend or legends or statements informing the purchasing public that the candy is being sold to the public by lot or chance, or in accordance with a sales plan which constitutes a lottery, gaming device, or gift enterprise.

It is further ordered, That respondent, Ostler Candy Company, a corporation, within 30 days after service upon it of this order, shall file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which it has complied with the order to cease and desist hereinabove set forth.

Docket 284S. Complaint, June 19, 1936—Decision, June 17, 1937

Where a corporation engaged in manufacture and sale of "straight" goods candy, and also of so-called "break and take," "draw," or "deal" assortments, sale and distribution of which type candy, in constant demand and affording, in connection with sale thereof to public, means or opportunity of obtaining a prize or becoming a winner by lot or chance, and providing an easy means of disposing of such products, teaches and encourages gambling among children, constituting substantial number of the purchasers and consumers of such type, and particularly of candy-bar assortments with push card, and sale and distribution of which type in the markets of many manufacturers who sell their "straight" goods in interstate commerce in competition with the other, has been followed by a marked decrease in sales of such "straight" goods, due to gambling or lottery feature connected with said "break and take," "draw," or "deal" candy, preferred by consumers because of gambling feature connected therewith, and sale of which candy, so packed and assembled as to enable retail dealers, without alteration, addition, or rearrangement, to resell same to consuming public by lot or chance, is contrary to public policy,—

Sold, to jobbers and retailers, certain assortments of candy which were so packed and assembled as to involve, or were designed to involve, use of a lottery scheme when sold and distributed to consumers thereof, and several of which consisted of (a) a number of candy bars, together with push card, for sale and distribution to consuming public under a plan, and in accordance with said card's explanatory legend, by which purchaser received, for five cents paid, one or more additional bars of candy, depending upon particular number or legend pushed by chance, and last push on card also received specified number of additional bars, and (b) number of packages of candy of varying size, together with punch board, for sale and distribution to consuming public under a plan, and in accordance with said board's explanatory legend, by which purchaser received, for five cents paid, one of said packages, in accordance with number punched by chance, or nothing other than privilege of a punch; so assembled and packed that they were designed to be, and were, exposed and used by retail dealer purchasers thereof for distribution and resale to purchasing public by lot or chance, without alteration or rearrangement, and with knowledge and intent that such candy should thus be resold to public by lot or chance by said retail dealers, in competition with many who regard such sale and distribution as morally bad and as encouraging gambling, and especially among children, and as injurious to the candy industry through resulting in the merchandising of a chance or lottery instead of candy, and as providing retail merchants with a means of violating the laws of the several States, and some of whom, for such reasons, refuse to sell candy so packed and assembled that it can be resold to public by lot or chance;

25 F. T. C.

With result that such competitors were put to a disadvantage in competing, retailers, finding candy more salable by "break and take," "draw," or "deal" method, bought from it and others employing same methods of sale, trade was diverted to it and others using similar method from said competitors, who could compete on even terms only by giving similar devices to retailers, and sales of their "straight" candy, in their unwillingness so to do, showed a marked decrease, some competitors began sale and distribution of candy by lot or chance in order to meet competition of manufacturers who thus sold and distributed such products, and trade was diverted to it from its said competitors, and there was a restraint upon and a detriment to the freedom of fair and legitimate competition in the industry involved; to the prejudice and injury of the public and competitors:

Held, That such acts and practices, under the conditions and circumstances set forth, were all to the prejudice of the public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition.

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that Glade Candy Company, a corporation, hereinafter referred to as respondent, has been and is using unfair methods of competition in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in said act of Congress, and it appearing to said Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent, Glade Candy Company, is a corporation organized and operating under the laws of the State of Utah, with its principal office and place of business located at 232 South Fifth East Street, Salt Lake City, Utah. Respondent is now, and for several years last past has been, engaged in the manufacture of candies and in the sale and distribution thereof to wholesale dealers, jobbers, and retail dealers located at points in the various States of the United States, and causes and has caused its said products, when so sold, to be transported from its principal place of business in Salt Lake City, Utah to purchasers thereof in other States of the United States at their respective places of business; and there is now, and has been for several years last past, a course of trade and commerce by said respondent in such candy between and among the States of the United States. In the course and conduct of said business, respondent is in competition with other corporations and with partnerships and individuals engaged in the manufacture of candy and in the sale and distribution thereof in commerce between and among the various States of the United States.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of its business, as described in paragraph 1 hereof, respondent sells and has sold to wholesale and retail dealers packages or assortments of candy so packed and assembled as to involve the use of a lottery scheme when sold and distributed to the consumers thereof.

(a) One of said assortments, manufactured and distributed by the respondent, is composed of a number of boxes of assorted chocolate candies, together with a device commonly called a "punch-board." The said boxes of candy are distributed to the consuming public by means of said punchboard in the following manner: The sales by means of said punchboard are 5 cents each, and when a punch is made from said board a number is disclosed. The numbers begin with 1 and continue to the number of punches there are on the board, but the numbers are not arranged in numerical sequence. The board bears a statement or statements informing the prospective customer as to which numbers receive a box of candy. The purchasers of the last punch on each of three sections of the board each receive a box of chocolate candy. On a so-called two hundred hole board fourteen numbers call for a prize box of candy. A purchaser who does not qualify by obtaining one of the numbers calling for one of the boxes of candy or by punching the last number on the board receives nothing for his money other than the privilege of punching a number from the board. The boxes of candy are worth more than 5 cents each, and a purchaser who obtains one of the numbers calling for a box of candy receives the same for the price of 5 cents. The numbers on said board are effectively concealed from the purchasers or prospective purchasers until a punch or selection has been made and the particular punch separated from the board. The boxes of candy in said assortment are thus distributed to purchasers of punches from said board wholly by lot or chance.

(b) Another of said assortments is designated and described by respondent as "Play Ball," and consists of a number of candy bars together with a device commonly called a push card. The candy contained in said assortment is distributed to purchasers in the following manner:

The push card has a number of partially perforated discs, and when a push is made and the disc separated from the card, a legend is disclosed. Sales are 5 cents each, and the card bears statements informing customers and prospective customers as follows:

Complaint

25 F. T. C.

ALL WINNERS	NO BLANKS
HOME RUN.....	Receives 5 candy bars
3 Base Hit.....	Receives 4 candy bars
2 Base Hit.....	Receives 3 candy bars
1 Base Hit.....	Receives 2 candy bars
Base on Balls.....	Receives 1 candy bar
Foul Ball.....	Receives 1 candy bar
Out.....	Receives 1 candy bar
Last sale receives 6 Candy Bars

The legends on the discs or pushes are effectively concealed from the purchaser and prospective purchaser until a selection has been made and the disc separated from the card. The fact as to whether a purchaser receives one candy bar, two candy bars, four candy bars, five candy bars or six candy bars for the price of 5 cents is thus determined wholly by lot or chance.

PAR. 3. The wholesale dealers and jobbers to whom respondent sells its assortments, resells said assortments to retail dealers, and said retail dealers, and the retail dealers to whom respondent sells direct expose said assortments for sale and sell said candy to the purchasing public in accordance with the aforesaid sales plan. Respondent thus supplies to and places in the hands of others the means of conducting lotteries in the sale of its product in accordance with the sales plans hereinabove set forth, and said sales plans have the capacity and tendency of inducing purchasers thereof to purchase respondent's said products in preference to candy offered for sale and sold by its competitors.

PAR. 4. The sale of said candy to the purchasing public in the manner above alleged involves a game of chance or the sale of a chance to procure a box of candy.

The use by respondent of said method in the sale of candy, and the sale of candy by and through the use thereof and by the aid of said method, is a practice of the sort which the common law and criminal statutes have long deemed contrary to public policy; and is contrary to an established public policy of the Government of the United States. The use by respondent of said method has the dangerous tendency unduly to hinder competition or create monopoly in this, to wit: that the use thereof has the tendency and capacity to exclude from the branch of the candy trade involved in this proceeding competitors who do not adopt and use the same method or an equivalent or similar method involving the same or an equivalent or similar element of chance or lottery scheme.

Many persons, firms and corporations who make and sell candy in competition with the respondent, as above alleged, are unwilling to offer for sale or sell candy so packed and assembled as above alleged, or otherwise arranged and packed for sale to the purchasing public so as to involve a game of chance, and such competitors refrain therefrom.

PAR. 5. Many dealers in and ultimate purchasers of candy are attracted by respondent's said method and manner of packing said candy, and by the element of chance involved in the sale thereof in the manner above described and are thereby induced to purchase said candy so packed and sold by respondent in preference to candy offered for sale and sold by said competitors of respondent who do not use the same or equivalent methods. The use of said method by respondent has the tendency and capacity, because of said game of chance, to divert to respondent trade and custom from its said competitors who do not use the same or an equivalent method; to exclude from said candy trade all competitors who are unwilling to and who do not use the same or an equivalent method because the same is unlawful; to lessen competition in said candy trade, and to tend to create a monopoly of said candy trade in respondent and such other distributors of candy as use the same or an equivalent method, and to deprive the purchasing public of the benefit of free competition in said candy trade. The use of said method by the respondent has the tendency and capacity to eliminate from said candy trade all actual competitors, and to exclude therefrom all potential competitors, who do not adopt and use said method or an equivalent method.

PAR. 6. Many of said competitors of respondent are unwilling to adopt and use said method or any method involving a game of chance or the sale of a chance to win something by chance or any other method that is contrary to public policy.

PAR. 7. The aforementioned method, acts and practices of the respondent are all to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors, as hereinabove alleged. Said method, acts and practices constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914.

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, on June 19, 1936, issued and served a complaint upon the respondent, Glade Candy Company, a corporation, charging that respondent had been and was using unfair methods of competition in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in said act of Congress.

After the issuance of said complaint and the filing of respondent's answer thereto, testimony and other evidence in support of the allegations of the complaint were introduced by P. C. Kolinski, attorney for the Commission, and in opposition to the allegations of the complaint by H. L. Mulliner, attorney for the respondent, before Charles P. Vicini and Henry M. White, examiners of the Commission theretofore duly designated by it, and said testimony and other evidence were duly recorded and filed in the office of the Commission.

Thereafter, the proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on said complaint, the answer thereto, testimony and other evidence, briefs in support of the complaint and in opposition thereto, and the oral argument of Henry C. Lank, counsel for the Commission, the respondent not being represented although duly notified of the time and place of such hearing; and the Commission, having duly considered the same and being fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent, Glade Candy Company, is a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Utah, with its principal office and place of business located at 232 South 5th East Street in Salt Lake City, Utah. Respondent is now, and for several years last past has been, engaged in the manufacture of candy in Salt Lake City and in the sale and distribution thereof to retail dealers and jobbers located in the State of Utah and in the States of Nevada, Wyoming, Idaho, and Colorado. It causes said candy when sold to be shipped or transported from its principal place of business in the State of Utah to purchasers thereof in Utah and in the other States of the United States as mentioned above. In so carrying on said business, respondent is and has been engaged in interstate commerce, and is and has been engaged in active competition with other corporations and with partnerships and individuals engaged in the manufacture of candy and in the sale and distribution thereof in commerce between and among the various States of the United States.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of its business, as described in paragraph 1 hereof, respondent sells and has sold to jobbers and retail dealers certain assortments of candy so packed and assembled as to involve, or which are designed to involve, the use of a lottery scheme when sold and distributed to the consumers thereof.

Several of such assortments manufactured, sold, and distributed by respondent are composed of a number of bars of candy, together with a device commonly called a "push card." The said bars of candy are distributed to the consuming public by means of said push card in the following manner: The push card has a number of partially perforated discs, and when a push is made and the disc separated from the card a number or legend is disclosed. Sales are 5¢ each, and the card bears a statement or statements informing customers and prospective customers that all the numbers or legends pushed from said card receive one bar of candy, but that certain specified numbers or legends receive one or more additional bars of candy. The push card also bears a legend stating that the last push on the card receives a specified number of additional bars of candy. All purchasers receive one bar of candy, but purchasers obtaining the specified numbers or legends receive additional bars of candy of the same size and quality. The numbers or legends on said card are effectively concealed from the purchaser or prospective purchaser until a push or sale has been made and the particular push separated from the card. The additional bars of candy in said assortment are thus distributed to purchasers of pushes from said card wholly by lot or chance.

Respondent also distributes several assortments composed of a number of packages of candy of varying size, together with a device commonly called a "punchboard." The said packages of candy are distributed to the consuming public by means of said punchboard in the following manner: The punchboard has a number of holes in which slips of paper bearing numbers are secreted. The slips of paper and the numbers thereon are effectively concealed from purchasers and prospective purchasers until a punch or selection has been made and the particular slip of paper separated from the board. The punchboard has printed at the top thereof various statements or legends informing purchasers and prospective purchasers that certain numbers receive specified packages of candy. Sales are 5¢ each, and the packages of candy contained in said assortment are distributed to the consuming public in accordance with the legends at the top of said punchboard. The fact as to whether a purchaser receives one of the packages of candy or nothing other than the privilege of punching a number from said board for the price of 5¢ is thus determined wholly by lot or chance.

PAR. 3. The candy assortments involving the lot or chance feature, as above described, are generally referred to in the candy trade or industry as "draw" or "deal" assortments. Assortments of candy without lot or chance features in connection with their resale to the public are generally referred to in the candy trade or industry as "straight" goods. These terms will be used hereafter in these findings to distinguish these separate types of assortments.

PAR. 4. The wholesale dealers or jobbers to whom respondent sells its assortments resell the same to retail dealers, and said retail dealers and the retail dealers to whom respondent sells direct expose said assortments for sale and sell said candy to the purchasing public in accordance with the sales plans as described above.

PAR. 5. All sales made by respondent, whether to wholesale dealers and jobbers or to retail dealers, are absolute sales and respondent retains no control over said assortments after they are delivered to the wholesale dealer or jobber or retail dealer. The assortments are assembled and packed in such manner that they are designed to be used and are used by the retail dealer for distribution to the purchasing public by lot or chance without alteration or rearrangement. In the sale and distribution to jobbers and wholesale dealers for resale to retail dealers and to retail dealers direct of the assortments of candy described in paragraph 2, respondent has knowledge that said candy will be resold to the purchasing public by retail dealers by lot or chance, and it packs such candy in the way and manner described so that without alteration, addition or rearrangement thereof it may be resold to the public by lot or chance by said retail dealers.

PAR. 6. There are in the United States many manufacturers of candy, competing with respondent in the territory served by respondent, who do not manufacture and sell "draw" or "deal" assortments of candy and who sell their "straight" goods in interstate commerce in competition with the "draw" or "deal" candy, and manufacturers of "straight" goods have noted a marked decrease in the sales of their products whenever or wherever the "draw" or "deal" assortments have appeared in their markets. This decrease in the sale of "straight" candy is due to the gambling or lottery feature connected with the "draw" or "deal" candy. Witnesses from several branches of the candy industry testified in this proceeding to the effect that consumers preferred to purchase the "draw" or "deal" candy because of the gambling feature connected with its sale. The sale and distribution of "draw" or "deal" packages or assortments of candy, or of candy which has connected with its sale to the public the means or opportunity of obtaining a prize or becoming a winner by lot or chance, teaches and encourages gambling among children who comprise a substantial number of the purchasers and consumers of this type of candy, particularly the assortments of candy bars with a pushcard.

PAR. 7. The sale and distribution of candy by the retailers by the methods described herein is the sale and distribution of candy by lot or chance and constitutes a lottery or gaming device. The Commission finds that many competitors regard such sale and distribution as morally bad and as encouraging gambling, especially among children; as injurious to the candy industry because it results in the merchandising of a chance or lottery instead of candy; and as providing retail merchants with a means of violating the laws of the several States. Because of these reasons some competitors of respondent refuse to sell candy so packed and assembled that it can be resold to the public by lot or chance. These competitors are thereby put to a disadvantage in competing. The retailers, finding that they can dispose of more candy by the "draw" or "deal" method, buy from respondent and others employing the same methods of sale, and thereby trade is diverted to respondent and others using similar methods from said competitors. Such competitors can compete on even terms only by giving the same or similar devices to retailers. This they are unwilling to do, and their sales of "straight" candy show a marked decrease. The sale and distribution of candy by lot or chance provides an easy means of disposing of such products. There is a constant demand for candy which is sold by lot or chance, and in order to meet the competition of manufacturers who sell and distribute candy which is sold by such methods some competitors have begun the sale and distribution of candy to the public by lot or chance. The use of such methods by respondent in the sale and distribution of its candy is prejudicial and injurious to the public and its competitors, and has resulted in the diversion of trade to respondent from its said competitors, and is a restraint upon and a detriment to the freedom of fair and legitimate competition in the candy industry.

PAR. 8. Respondent sells its merchandise in the States of Utah, Idaho, Montana, and Colorado. The majority of its candy is sold as "straight" merchandise, but its sales of "draw" or "deal" assortments are substantial.

PAR. 9. The Commission further finds that the sale and distribution in interstate commerce of assortments or packages of candy so packed and assembled as to enable retail dealers, without alteration, addition or rearrangement, to resell the same to the consuming public by lot or chance, is contrary to public policy.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of respondent, Glade Candy Company, a corporation, under the conditions and circumstances set forth in the foregoing findings of fact, are all to the prejudice of the public and respondent's competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

Order

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

It is hereby ordered, That the respondent, Glade Candy Company, a corporation, its officers, directors, agents, representatives, and employees, in the offering for sale, sale and distribution in interstate commerce of candy, do cease and desist from:

1. Selling and distributing to wholesale dealers and jobbers, for resale to retail dealers and to retail dealers direct, candy so packed and assembled that sales of said candy to the general public are to be made, or may be made, by means of a lottery, gaming device, or gift enterprise.

2. Supplying to or placing in the hands of retail and wholesale dealers and jobbers packages or assortments of candy which are used, or may be used, without alteration or rearrangement of the contents of such packages or assortments, to conduct a lottery, gaming device, or gift enterprise in the sale or distribution of the candy contained in said assortments to the public.

3. Supplying to or placing in the hands of retail and wholesale dealers and jobbers assortments of candy, together with a device commonly called a "push card," or a device commonly called a "punchboard," for use, or which may be used, in distributing or selling said candy to the public at retail.

4. Furnishing to retail and wholesale dealers and jobbers a device commonly called a "push card," or a device commonly called a "punchboard," either with packages or assortments of candy or separately, bearing a legend or legends or statements informing the purchasing public that the candy is being sold to the public by lot or chance, or in accordance with a sales plan which constitutes a lottery, gaming device, or gift enterprise.

It is further ordered, That the respondent, Glade Candy Company, a corporation, shall, within 30 days after service upon it of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which it has complied with the order to cease and desist hereinabove set forth.

IN THE MATTER OF WOODY CANDY COMPANY

COMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION
OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 28, 1914

Docket 2697. Complaint, Jan. 31, 1936—Decision, June 19, 1937

Where a corporation engaged in manufacture and sale of candy, including certain assortments which were so packed and assembled as to involve use of a lottery scheme when sold and distributed to consumers thereof, and which included assortments such as (1) number of small candy bars, number of medium-sized bars, and number of larger bars, together with push cards, for sale under a plan, and in accordance with said card's explanatory legend, pursuant to which purchaser received, for five cents paid, one of the majority of small bars, one of the medium-sized, or one of the large bars, in accordance with particular number pushed by chance, and purchaser of last push was entitled, without charge, to one of said large pieces; and (2) number of pieces of candy, number of bars of candy, and one still larger bar, together with push card, for sale under a plan, and in accordance with said card's explanatory legend, pursuant to which purchaser received, for penny paid, one of the small pieces composing majority of said assortment, or one of the large bars, in accordance with particular number pushed by chance, and purchaser of last push was entitled to receive, without charge, the still larger bar—

Sold, to wholesalers and retailers for display and resale to purchasing public by the retailer-vendee, in accordance with aforesaid plan, such assortments, and thereby supplied to and placed in the hands of others the means of conducting lotteries in the sale of said products, in accordance with such plans, contrary to the established public policy of the several States and of the United States Government, and contrary, in many States, to local criminal statutes, and in competition with many who, unwilling to offer and sell candy so packed and assembled, or otherwise arranged and packed for sale to purchasing public, as to involve a game of chance or sale therewith of a chance to procure larger pieces, refrain therefrom, and in competition with many who are unwilling to adopt and use said or any method involving game of chance or sale of a chance to win by chance, as contrary to public policy or criminal statutes as aforesaid, or as detrimental to public morals and to morals of the purchasers of such products;

With result that many dealers in and ultimate purchasers of candy were attracted by said methods and manner of packing such product, and by element of chance involved in sale thereof as above set forth, and thereby induced to purchase same, thus packed and sold by it, in preference to that offered and sold by said competitors who do not use such or equivalent methods, many dealers were induced to purchase the candy thus offered and sold by it in preference to all others, by reason of preference given thereto by ultimate purchaser on account of such game of chance involved therein, and with tendency and capacity, because of said game of chance alone, unfairly to divert to it trade and custom from its said competitors

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that Woody Candy Company, a corporation, hereinafter referred to as respondent, has been and is using unfair methods of competition in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in said act of Congress, and it appearing to said Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent is a corporation, organized under the laws of the State of Oklahoma, with its principal place of business in the city of Oklahoma City, State of Oklahoma. Respondent is now and for several years last past has been engaged in the manufacture of candy and the sale and distribution thereof to wholesale and retail dealers located at points in the various States of the United States, and causes said products when so sold, to be transported from its place of business in Oklahoma City, State of Oklahoma, to purchasers thereof in other States of the United States, at their respective places of business, and there is now, and has been for several years last past, a course of trade and commerce by said respondent in such candy, between and among the States of the United States. In the course and conduct of the said business, respondent is in competition with other corporations and with individuals and partnerships engaged in the sale and distribution of candy and candy products in commerce between and among the various States of the United States.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of its business, as described in paragraph 1 hereof, respondent sells and has sold to wholesale and retail dealers, various packages or assortments of candy, so packed and assembled as to involve the use of a lottery scheme when sold and distributed to the consumers thereof. Certain of said packages are hereinafter described for the purpose of showing the methods used by respondent, but this list is not all inclusive of the various packages, nor does it include all the details of the several sales plans which respondent has been or is using in the distribution of candy by lot or chance:

(a) One of said assortments is composed of a number of small candy bars, a number of medium sized candy bars, and a number of larger candy bars, together with a device commonly called a push card. The candy contained in said assortment is distributed to purchasers in the following manner:

The push card has a number of partially perforated discs, and, when a push is made and the disc separated from the card, a number is disclosed. Sales are five cents each and the majority of the numbers entitle the purchaser to one of the small bars of candy. A few of the numbers entitle the purchaser to one of the medium sized bars of candy and three of the numbers entitle the purchaser to one of the large bars of candy, and the purchaser of the last push on the card is entitled to one of the large bars of candy. The card bears statements informing customers and prospective customers as to which numbers receive the small bars, which numbers receive the medium bars, and which numbers receive the large bars, and that the purchaser of the last push on said card is entitled to one of the large bars. The numbers on the discs, or pushes, are effectively concealed from the purchaser and prospective purchaser until a selection has been made, and the disc separated from the card. The fact as to whether a purchaser receives one of the small candy bars, one of the medium candy bars, or one of the large sized candy bars for the price of five cents is thus determined wholly by lot or chance.

(b) Another assortment manufactured and distributed by respondent is composed of a number of pieces of candy, a number of bars of candy, and one still larger bar of candy, together with a device commonly called a push card. The candy contained in said assortment is distributed to purchasers in the following manner:

The push card has a number of partially perforated discs, and when a push is made and the disc separated from the card a number is disclosed. Sales are one cent each, and the majority of the numbers entitle the purchaser to one of the small pieces of candy, but a few of the numbers entitle the purchaser to one of the large bars of candy, and the purchaser of the last push is entitled to receive the still larger bar of candy. The push card bears statements informing customers and prospective customers as to which numbers receive the small pieces of candy, which numbers receive the larger bars of candy, and stating that the purchaser of the last push is entitled to receive the still larger bar of candy. The numbers on the discs or pushes are effectively concealed from the purchaser and prospective purchaser until a selection has been made and the disc separated from the card. The fact as to whether a purchaser receives one of the small pieces of candy, one of the larger bars of candy, or the still larger bar of candy for the price of one cent is thus determined wholly by lot or chance.

PAR. 3. The wholesale dealers to whom respondent sells its assortments, resell said assortments to retail dealers, and said retail dealers, and the retail dealers to whom respondent sells direct, expose said assortments for sale, and sell said candy to the purchasing public in accordance with the aforesaid sales plans. Respondent thus supplies to and places in the hands of others the means of conducting lotteries in the sale of its products in accordance with the sales plans hereinabove set forth, as a means of inducing purchasers thereof to purchase respondent's said products in preference to candy offered for sale and sold by its competitors.

PAR. 4. The sale of said candy to the purchasing public as above alleged involves a game of chance or the sale of a chance to procure larger pieces or bars of candy in the manner alleged.

Such sales of candy, along with the sale of such chances to procure additional bars of candy or packages of candy or other articles of merchandise in the manner alleged, are contrary to the established public policy of the several States of the United States and of the Government of the United States, and in many of the States of the United States are contrary to local criminal statutes. The use by respondent of said method has the dangerous tendency unduly to hinder competition or create monopoly in this, to wit: that the use thereof has the tendency and capacity to exclude from the branch of the candy trade involved in this proceeding competitors who do not adopt and use the same method or an equivalent or similar method involving the same or an equivalent or similar element of chance or lottery scheme.

By reason of said facts many persons, firms and corporations who make and sell candy in competition with respondent, as above alleged, are unwilling to offer for sale or sell candy so packed and assembled as above alleged, or otherwise arranged and packed for sale to the purchasing public so as to involve a game of chance, or the sale with such candy of a chance to procure additional bars of candy or packages of candy or other articles of merchandise by chance; and such competitors refrain therefrom.

PAR. 5. Many dealers in and ultimate purchasers of candy are attracted by respondent's said methods and manner of packing said candy, and by the element of chance involved in the sale thereof in the manner above described, and are thereby induced to purchase said candy so packed and sold by respondent, in preference to candy offered for sale and sold by said competitors of respondent who do not use the same or equivalent methods. Many dealers in candy are induced to purchase said candy so offered for sale and sold by respondent, in preference to all others, because said ultimate purchasers give preference to respondent's said candy on account of the said game of chance involved therein. The use of said methods by respondent has the tendency and capacity unfairly, and because of said game of chance alone, to divert to respondent trade and custom from its said competitors who do not use the same or equivalent methods, to exclude from said candy trade all competitors who are unwilling to and who do not use the same or equivalent methods; to lessen competition in said candy trade, and to tend to create a monopoly of said candy trade in respondent and such other distributors of candy as use the same or equivalent methods, and to deprive the purchasing public of the benefits of free competition in said candy trade. The use of said methods by the respondent has the tendency and capacity unfairly to eliminate from said candy trade all actual competitors, and to exclude therefrom all potential competitors who do not adopt and use said methods or equivalent methods that are contrary to public policy and to criminal statutes, as above alleged.

PAR. 6. Many of said competitors of respondent are unwilling to adopt and use said method or any method involving a game of chance or the sale of a chance to win something by chance, because such methods are contrary to the public policy or to the criminal statutes of certain of the States of the United States, or because they are of the opinion that such methods are detrimental to public morals and to the morals of the purchasers of said candy, or because of any or all of said reasons.

PAR. 7. The aforementioned methods, acts and practices of the respondent are all to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors as hereinabove alleged. Said methods, acts and practices constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914.

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

use of unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of the provisions of said act. Thereafter, respondent filed its answer dated August 31, 1936, admitting all the material allegations of the complaint to be true and waiving the taking of further evidence and all other intervening procedure. Thereafter, this proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on the said complaint and answer thereto, briefs and oral arguments of counsel having been waived; and the Commission, having duly considered the same and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent is a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Oklahoma, with its principal place of business located in the city of Oklahoma City, State of Oklahoma. Respondent is now, and for several years last past has been, engaged in the manufacture of candy and in the sale and distribution thereof to wholesale and retail dealers located at points in the various States of the United States. It causes said products when sold, to be transported from its place of business in Oklahoma City, State of Oklahoma, to purchasers thereof in other States of the United States at their respective places of business. There is now, and has been for several years last past, a course of trade and commerce by said respondent in such candy between and among the States of the United States. In the course and conduct of the said business, respondent is in competition with other corporations and with individuals and partnerships engaged in the sale and distribution of candy and candy products in commerce between and among the various States of the United States.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of its business, as described in paragraph 1 hereof, respondent sells and has sold to wholesale and retail dealers various packages or assortments of candy so packed and assembled as to involve the use of a lottery scheme when sold and distributed to the consumers thereof. Certain of said packages are hereinafter described for the purpose of showing the methods used by respondent, but this list is not all inclusive of the various packages and it does not include all the details of the several sales plans which respondent has been or is using in the distribution of candy by lot or chance.

(a) One of said assortments is composed of a number of small candy bars, a number of medium sized candy bars, and a number of larger candy bars, together with a device commonly called a "push card." The candy contained in said assortment is distributed to purchasers in the following manner: The push card has a number of partially perforated discs, and when a push is made and the disc separated from the card a number is disclosed. Sales are 5¢ each, and the majority of the numbers entitle the purchaser to one of the small bars of candy. A few of the numbers entitle the purchaser to one of the medium sized bars of candy, and three of the numbers entitle the purchaser to one of the large bars of candy. The purchaser of the last push on the card is entitled to one of the large bars of candy. The card bears statements informing customers and prospective customers as to which numbers receive the small bars, which numbers receive the medium bars, and which numbers receive the large bars, and that the purchaser of the last push on said card is entitled to one of the large bars. The numbers on the discs or pushes are effectively concealed from the purchaser and prospective purchaser until a selection has been made and the disc separated from the card. The fact as to whether a purchaser receives one of the small candy bars, one of the medium sized candy bars, or one of the large candy bars, for the price of 5¢, is thus determined wholly by lot or chance.

(b) Another assortment manufactured and distributed by respondent is composed of a number of pieces of candy, a number of bars of candy, and one still larger bar of candy, together with a device commonly called a "push card." The candy contained in said assortment is distributed to purchasers in the following manner: The push card has a number of partially perforated discs, and when a push is made and the disc separated from the card a number is disclosed. Sales are 1¢ each, and the majority of the numbers entitle the purchaser to one of the small pieces of candy, but a few of the numbers entitle the purchaser to one of the large bars of candy, and the purchaser of the last push is entitled to receive the still larger bar of candy. The push card bears statements informing customers and prospective customers as to which numbers receive the small pieces of candy, which numbers receive the larger bars of candy, and stating that the purchaser of the last push is entitled to receive the still larger bar of candy. The numbers on discs or pushes are effectively concealed from the purchaser and prospective purchaser until a selection has been made and the disc separated from the card. The fact as to whether a purchaser receives one of the small pieces of candy, one of the larger bars of candy, or the still larger bar of candy, for the price of 1¢, is thus determined wholly by lot or chance.

and the retail dealers to whom respondent sells direct expose said assortments for sale and sell said candy to the purchasing public in accordance with the aforesaid sales plans. Respondent thus supplies to and places in the hands of others the means of conducting lotteries in the sale of its products in accordance with the sales plans hereinabove set forth, as a means of inducing purchasers thereof to purchase respondent's said products in preference to candy offered for sale and sold by its competitors.

PAR. 4. The sale of said candy to the purchasing public, as above found, involves a game of chance or the sale of a chance to procure larger pieces or bars of candy in the manner described. Such sales of candy, together with the sale of chances to procure larger pieces or bars of candy in the manner described, are contrary to the established public policy of the several States of the United States and of the Government of the United States, and in many of the States of the United States are contrary to local criminal statutes. The use by respondent of said methods has the tendency unduly to hinder competition or create monopoly in this, to wit: that the use thereof has the tendency and capacity to exclude from the branch of the candy trade involved in this proceeding competitors who do not adopt and use the same methods or equivalent or similar methods involving the same or an equivalent or similar element of chance or lottery scheme. By reason of said facts, many persons, firms, and corporations who make and sell candy in competition with respondent are unwilling to offer for sale or sell candy so packed and assembled as above described, or otherwise arranged and packed for sale to the purchasing public so as to involve a game of chance or the sale with such candy of a chance to procure larger pieces or bars of candy, and such competitors refrain therefrom.

PAR. 5. Many dealers in and ultimate purchasers of candy are attracted by respondent's said methods and manner of packing said candy and by the element of chance involved in the sale thereof in the manner above described, and are thereby induced to purchase said candy so packed and sold by respondent in preference to candy offered for sale and sold by said competitors of respondent who do not use the same or equivalent methods. Many dealers in candy are induced to purchase said candy so offered for sale and sold by respondent in preference to all others because said ultimate purchasers give preference to respondent's said candy on account of the said game of chance involved therein. The use of said methods by respondent has the tendency and capacity, because of said game of chance alone, unfairly to divert to respondent trade and custom from its said competitors who do not use the same or equivalent methods; to exclude from said candy trade all competitors who are unwilling to and who do not use the same or equivalent methods; to lessen competition in said candy trade, and to tend to create a monopoly of said candy trade in respondent and such other distributors of candy as use the same or equivalent methods; and to deprive the purchasing public of the benefits of free competition in said candy trade. The use of said methods by respondent has the tendency and capacity unfairly to eliminate from said candy trade all actual competitors, and to exclude therefrom all potential competitors who do not adopt and use said methods or equivalent methods that are contrary to public policy and to criminal statutes.

PAR. 6. Many of said competitors of respondent are unwilling to adopt and use said methods or any method involving a game of chance or the sale of a chance to win something by chance, because such methods are contrary to public policy or to the criminal statutes of certain of the States of the United States, or because they are of the opinion that such methods are detrimental to public morals and to the morals of the purchasers of said candy, or because of any or all of said reasons.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondent, Woody Candy Company, a corporation, are to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

It is ordered, That the respondent, Woody Candy Company, a corporation, its officers, representatives, agents, and employees, in connection with the offering for sale, sale and distribution of candy in interstate commerce, do cease and desist from:

1. Selling and distributing to wholesale dealers and jobbers, for resale to retail dealers and to retail dealers direct, candy so packed and assembled that sales of said candy to the general public are to be made, or may be made, by means of a lottery, gaming device, or gift enterprise.

2. Supplying to or placing in the hands of retail and wholesale dealers and jobbers packages or assortments of candy which are used, or may be used, without alteration or rearrangement of the contents of such packages or assortments, to conduct a lottery, gaming device, or gift enterprise in the sale or distribution of the candy contained in said assortments to the public.

3. Supplying to or placing in the hands of retail and wholesale dealers and jobbers assortments of candy, together with a device commonly called a "push card," for use, or which may be used, in distributing or selling said candy to the public at retail.

4. Furnishing to retail and wholesale dealers and jobbers a device commonly called a "push card," either with packages or assortments of candy or separately, bearing a legend or legends or statements informing the purchasing public that the candy is being sold to the public by lot or chance or in accordance with a sales plan which constitutes a lottery, gaming device, or gift enterprise.

It is further ordered, That the respondent, Woody Candy Company, a corporation, shall, within 30 days after service upon it of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which it has complied with the order to cease and desist hereinabove set forth.

IN THE MATTER OF FINE-REDING CANDY MANUFACTURING COMPANY, INC.

COMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION
OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 26, 1914

Docket 2699. Complaint, Jan. 31, 1936—Decision, June 19, 1937

Where a corporation engaged in manufacture and sale of candy, including certain assortments which were so packed and assembled as to involve use of a lottery scheme when sold and distributed to consumers thereof, and which included assortments such as (1) number of small pieces of candy, number of larger pieces or bars thereof, and one still larger piece, together with push cards, for sale under a plan, and in accordance with said card's explanatory legend, pursuant to which purchaser received, for penny paid, one of the small pieces, or one of the larger pieces or bars, in accordance with particular number pushed by chance, and purchaser of last push was entitled, without charge, to the aforesaid still larger bar; and (2) number of small bars of candy, number of medium-sized bars, and number of still larger bars, together with push card, for sale under a similar plan, and in accordance with said card's explanatory legend, pursuant to which purchaser received, for five cents paid, one of the aforesaid pieces of varying size—

Sold, to wholesalers and retailers for display and resale to purchasing public by the retailer-vendee, in accordance with aforesaid plan, such assortments, and thereby supplied to and placed in the hands of others the means of conducting lotteries in the sale of said products, in accordance with such plan, contrary to the established public policy of the several States and of the United States Government, and contrary, in many States, to local criminal statutes, and in competition with many who, unwilling to offer and sell candy so packed and assembled, or otherwise arranged and packed for sale to purchasing public, as to involve a game of chance or sale thereof with of a chance to procure larger pieces, refrain therefrom, and in competition with many who are unwilling to adopt and use said or any method involving game of chance or sale of a chance to win by chance, as contrary to public policy or criminal statutes as aforesaid, or as detrimental to public morals and to morals of the purchasers of such products;

With result that many dealers in and ultimate purchasers of candy were attracted by said methods and manner of packing such product, and by element of chance involved in sale thereof as above set forth, and thereby induced to purchase same, thus packed and sold by it, in preference to that offered and sold by said competitors who do not use such or equivalent methods, many dealers were induced to purchase the candy thus offered and sold by it, in preference to all others, because of the game of chance involved therein, and with tendency and capacity, because of said game of chance alone, unfairly to divert to it trade and custom from its said competitors who do not use same or equivalent methods, exclude from such trade all competitors who are unwilling to and do not use such or equivalent practices or methods, lessen competition therein and tend to create a monopoly thereof in it and such other distributors as use same

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that Fine-Reding Candy Mfg. Co. Inc., a corporation, hereinafter referred to as respondent, has been and is using unfair methods of competition in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in said act of Congress, and it appearing to said Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent is a corporation, organized under the laws of the State of Oklahoma, with its principal place of business in the city of Oklahoma City, State of Oklahoma. Respondent is now, and for several years last past has been engaged in the manufacture of candy and the sale and distribution thereof to wholesale and retail dealers located at points in the various States of the United States, and causes said products when so sold, to be transported from its place of business in Oklahoma City, State of Oklahoma, to purchasers thereof in other States of the United States, at their respective places of business, and there is now, and has been for several years last past, a course of trade and commerce by said respondent in such candy, between and among the States of the United States. In the course and conduct of the said business, respondent is in competition with other corporations and with individuals and partnerships engaged in the sale and distribution of candy and candy products in commerce between and among the various States of the United States.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of its business, as described in paragraph 1 hereof, respondent sells and has sold to wholesale and retail dealers, various packages or assortments of candy, so packed and assembled as to involve the use of a lottery scheme when sold and distributed to the consumers thereof. Certain of said packages are hereinafter described for the purpose of showing the methods used by respondent, but this list is not all inclusive of the various packages, nor does it include all the details of the several sales plans which respondent has been or is using in the distribution of candy by lot or chance:

(a) One of said assortments is composed of a number of small pieces of candy, a number of larger pieces or bars of candy, and one still larger piece of candy, together with a device commonly called a push card. The candy contained in said assortment is distributed to purchasers in the following manner:

The push card has a number of partially perforated discs and when a push is made and the disc separated from the card a number is disclosed. Sales are one cent each and the card bears statements informing customers and prospective customers that certain specified numbers receive one of the small pieces of candy, that certain other specified numbers receive one of the larger pieces or bars of candy, and that the purchaser of the last push from said card receives the still larger bar of candy. The numbers on the discs or pushes are effectively concealed from the purchaser and prospective purchaser until a selection has been made and the disc separated from the card. The fact as to whether a purchaser receives a small piece of candy, a larger piece of candy, or the still larger bar of candy for the price of one cent is thus determined wholly by lot or chance.

(b) Another assortment manufactured and distributed by the respondent is composed of a number of small bars of candy, a number of medium sized bars of candy, and a number of still larger bars of candy, together with a device commonly called a push card. The candy contained in said assortment is distributed to purchasers in the following manner:

The candy contained in said assortment is distributed to purchasers in a similar manner to that shown by the sales plan described in subparagraph (a) except that sales are five cents each instead of one cent each and the pieces or bars of candy are larger than the corresponding pieces or bars of candy in the assortment referred to in subparagraph (a).

PAR. 3. The wholesale dealers to whom respondent sells its assortments, resell said assortments to retail dealers, and said retail dealers, and the retail dealers to whom respondent sells direct, expose said assortments for sale, and sell said candy to the purchasing public in accordance with the aforesaid sales plans. Respondent thus supplies to and places in the hands of others the means of conducting lotteries in the sale of its products in accordance with the sales plans hereinabove set forth, as a means of inducing purchasers thereof to purchase respondent's said products in preference to candy offered for sale and sold by its competitors.

PAR. 4. The sale of said candy to the purchasing public as above alleged involves a game of chance or the sale of a chance to procure larger pieces or bars of candy in the manner alleged.

Such sales of candy, along with the sale of such chances to procure additional bars of candy or packages of candy or other articles of merchandise in the manner alleged, are contrary to the established public policy of the several States of the United States and of the Government of the United States, and in many of the States of the United States are contrary to local criminal statutes. The use by respondent of said method has the dangerous tendency unduly to hinder competition or create monopoly in this, to wit: that the use thereof has the tendency and capacity to exclude from the branch of the candy trade involved in this proceeding competitors who do not adopt and use the same method or an equivalent or similar method involving the same or an equivalent or similar element of chance or lottery scheme.

By reason of said facts many persons, firms, and corporations who make and sell candy in competition with respondent, as above alleged, are unwilling to offer for sale or sell candy so packed and assembled as above alleged, or otherwise arranged and packed for sale to the purchasing public so as to involve a game of chance, or the sale with such candy of a chance to procure additional bars of candy or packages of candy or other articles of merchandise by chance; and such competitors refrain therefrom.

PAR. 5. Many dealers in and ultimate purchasers of candy are attracted by respondent's said methods and manner of packing said candy, and by the element of chance involved in the sale thereof in the manner above described, and are thereby induced to purchase said candy so packed and sold by respondent, in preference to candy offered for sale and sold by said competitors of respondent who do not use the same or equivalent methods. Many dealers in candy are induced to purchase said candy so offered for sale and sold by respondent, in preference to all others, because said ultimate purchasers give preference to respondent's said candy on account of the said game of chance involved therein. The use of said methods by respondent has the tendency and capacity unfairly, and because of said game of chance alone, to divert to respondent trade and custom from its said competitors who do not use the same or equivalent methods, to exclude from said candy trade all competitors who are unwilling to and who do not use the same or equivalent methods; to lessen competition in said candy trade, and to tend to create a monopoly of said candy trade in respondent and such other distributors of candy as use the same or equivalent methods, and to deprive the purchasing public of the benefit of free competition in said candy trade. The use of said methods by the respondent has the tendency and capacity unfairly to eliminate from said candy trade all actual competitors, and to exclude therefrom all potential competitors who do not adopt and use said methods or equivalent methods that are contrary to public policy and to criminal statutes, as above alleged.

PAR. 6. Many of said competitors of respondent are unwilling to adopt and use said method or any method involving a game of chance or the sale of a chance to win something by chance, because such methods are contrary to the public policy or to the criminal statutes of certain of the States of the United States, or because they are of the opinion that such methods are detrimental to public morals and to the morals of the purchasers of said candy, or because of any or all of said reasons.

PAR. 7. The aforementioned methods, acts, and practices of the respondent are all to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors as hereinabove alleged. Said methods, acts and practices constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914.

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, on January 31, 1936, issued, and on February 3, 1936, served, its complaint in this proceeding upon respondent, Fine-Reding Candy Manufacturing Company, Inc., a corporation, charging it with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of the provisions of said act. After the issuance of said complaint and the filing of respondent's answer, the Commission, by order entered herein, granted respondent's request for permission to withdraw said answer and to substitute therefor an answer admitting all the material allegations of the complaint to be true and waiving the taking of further evidence and all other intervening procedure, which substitute answer was duly filed in the office of the Commission. Thereafter, this proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on the said complaint and the substitute answer, briefs and oral arguments of counsel having been waived; and the Commission, having duly considered the same and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent is a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Oklahoma, with its principal place of business in the city of Oklahoma City, State of Oklahoma. Respondent is now, and for several years last past has been, engaged in the manufacture of candy and in the sale and distribution thereof to wholesale and retail dealers located at points in the various States of the United States. It causes said products when sold to be transported from its place of business in Oklahoma City, State of Oklahoma, to purchasers thereof in other States of the United States at their respective places of business. There is now, and has been for several years last past, a course of trade and commerce by said respondent in such candy between and among the States of the United States. In the course and conduct of the said business, respondent is in competition with other corporations and with individuals and partnerships engaged in the sale and distribution of candy and candy products in commerce between and among the various States of the United States.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of its business, as described in paragraph 1 hereof, respondent sells and has sold to wholesale and retail dealers various packages or assortments of candy so packed and assembled as to involve the use of a lottery scheme when sold and distributed to the consumers thereof. Certain of said packages are hereinafter described for the purpose of showing the methods used by respondent, but this list is not all inclusive of the various packages, and it does not include all the details of the several sales plans which respondent has been or is using in the distribution of candy by lot or chance.

(a) One of said assortments is composed of a number of small pieces of candy, a number of larger pieces or bars of candy, and one still larger piece of candy, together with a device commonly called a push card. The candy contained in said assortments is distributed to purchasers in the following manner:

The push card has a number of partially perforated discs and when a push is made and the disc separated from the card a number is disclosed. Sales are one cent each and the card bears statements informing customers and prospective customers that certain specified numbers receive one of the small pieces of candy, that certain other specified numbers receive one of the larger pieces or bars of candy, and that the purchaser of the last push from said card receives the still larger bar of candy. The numbers on the discs or pushes are effectively concealed from the purchaser and prospective purchaser until a selection has been made and the disc separated from the card. The fact as to whether a purchaser receives a small piece of candy, a larger piece of candy, or the still larger bar of candy for the price of one cent is thus determined wholly by lot or chance.

(b) Another assortment manufactured and distributed by the respondent is composed of a number of small bars of candy, a number of medium sized bars of candy, and a number of still larger bars of candy, together with a device commonly called a push card. The candy contained in said assortment is distributed to purchasers in the following manner:

The candy contained in said assortment is distributed to purchasers in a similar manner to that shown by the sales plan described in subparagraph (a) except that sales are five cents each instead of one cent each and the pieces or bars of candy are larger than the corresponding pieces or bars of candy in the assortment referred to in subparagraph (a).

PAR. 3. The wholesale dealers to whom respondent sells its assortments resell said assortments to retail dealers, and said retail dealers and the retail dealers to whom respondent sells direct expose said assortments for sale and sell said candy to the purchasing public in accordance with the aforesaid sales plans. Respondent thus supplies to and places in the hands of others the means of conducting lotteries in the sale of its products in accordance with the sales plans hereinabove set forth, as a means of inducing purchasers thereof to purchase respondent's said products in preference to candy offered for sale and sold by its competitors.

PAR. 4. The sale of said candy to the purchasing public, as above found, involves a game of chance or the sale of a chance to procure larger pieces or bars of candy in the manner described. Such sales of candy, together with the sale of such chances to procure larger pieces or bars of candy in the manner described, are contrary to the established public policy of the several States of the United States and of the Government of the United States, and in many of the States of the United States are contrary to local criminal statutes. The use by respondent of said methods has the tendency unduly to hinder competition or create monopoly in this, to wit: that the use thereof has the tendency and capacity to exclude from the branch of the candy trade involved in this proceeding competitors who do not adopt and use the same methods or equivalent or similar methods involving the same or an equivalent or similar element of chance or lottery scheme. By reason of said facts, many persons, firms, and corporations who make and sell candy in competition with respondent are unwilling to offer for sale or sell candy so packed and assembled as above described, or otherwise arranged and packed for sale to the purchasing public so as to involve a game of chance or the sale with such candy of a chance to procure larger pieces or bars of candy by chance, and such competitors refrain therefrom.

PAR. 5. Many dealers in and ultimate purchasers of candy are attracted by respondent's said methods and manner of packing said candy and by the element of chance involved in the sale thereof in the manner above described, and are thereby induced to purchase said candy so packed and sold by respondent in preference to candy offered for sale and sold by said competitors of respondent who do not use the same or equivalent methods. Many dealers in candy are induced to purchase said candy so offered for sale and sold by respondent in preference to all others because of the said game of chance involved therein. The use of said methods by respondent has the tendency and capacity unfairly, and because of said game of chance alone, to divert to respondent trade and custom from its said competitors who do not use the same or equivalent methods; to exclude from said candy trade all competitors who are unwilling to and who do not use the same or equivalent methods; to lessen competition in said candy trade, and to tend to create a monopoly of said candy trade in respondent and such other distributors of candy as use the same or equivalent methods; and to deprive the purchasing public of the benefit of free competition in said candy trade. The use of said methods by respondent has the tendency and capacity unfairly to eliminate from said candy trade all actual competitors, and to exclude therefrom all potential competitors who do not adopt and use said methods or equivalent methods.

PAR. 6. Many of said competitors of respondent are unwilling to adopt and use said methods or any method involving a game of chance or the sale of a chance to win something by chance because such methods are contrary to the public policy or to the criminal statutes of certain of the States of the United States, or because they are of the opinion that such methods are detrimental to public morals and to the morals of the purchasers of said candy, or because of any or all of said reasons.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondent, Fine-Reding Candy Manufacturing Company, Inc., are to the prejudice of the public and respondent's competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

This proceeding having been heard by the Federal Trade Commission upon the complaint of the Commission and the answer of respondent dated August 31, 1936, admitting all the material allegations of the complaint to be true and waiving the taking of further evidence and all other intervening procedure, and the Commission having made its findings as to the facts and its conclusion that said respondent has violated the provisions of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

It is ordered, That the respondent, Fine-Reding Candy Manufacturing Company, Inc., a corporation, its officers, representatives, agents, and employees, in connection with the offering for sale, sale, and distribution of candy in interstate commerce, do forthwith cease and desist from:

1. Selling and distributing to jobbers and wholesale dealers for resale to retail dealers, or to retail dealers direct, candy so packed and assembled that sales of such candy to the general public are to be made, or may be made, by means of a lottery, gaming device, or gift enterprise.

2. Supplying to or placing in the hands of wholesale dealers and jobbers or retail dealers assortments of candy which are used, or which may be used, without alteration or rearrangement of the contents of such assortments, to conduct a lottery, gaming device, or gift enterprise in the sale or distribution of the candy contained in said assortments to the public.

3. Supplying to or placing in the hands of retail and wholesale dealers and jobbers assortments of candy, together with a device commonly called a "push card", for use, or which may be used, in distributing or selling candy to the public at retail.

4. Furnishing to retail and wholesale dealers and jobbers a device commonly called a "push card," either with assortments of candy or separately, bearing a legend or legends or statements informing the purchasing public that the candy is being sold to the public by lot or chance or in accordance with a sales plan which constitutes a lottery, gaming device, or gift enterprise.

It is further ordered, That the respondent, Fine-Reding Candy Manufacturing Company, Inc., a corporation, shall, within 30 days after service upon it of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which it has complied with the order to cease and desist hereinabove set forth.

IN THE MATTER OF
WILLIAMS-CRAHAN COMPANY

COMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION
OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 26, 1914

Docket 2704. Complaint, Jan. 31, 1936—Decision, June 19, 1937

Where a corporation engaged in manufacture and sale of candy, including certain assortments which were so packed and assembled as to involve use of a lottery scheme when sold and distributed to consumers thereof, and which included assortments such as (1) number of penny pieces of candy of uniform size and shape, the enclosed concealed centers of majority of which were cream, together with a number of larger pieces to be given as prizes to chance purchasers of aforesaid penny pieces of uniform size, etc., enclosed concealed centers of which were, instead, red cinnamon, and also to those purchasers of last one of said uniform penny pieces in each of the two trays into which assortment was divided, without further charge, and together with, also, explanatory display card for retailer's use; (2) number of small pieces of candy, together with number of larger pieces and two still larger pieces, and punchboard or push card, for sale under a plan, and in accordance with said card's explanatory legend, pursuant to which purchaser received, for five cents paid, one of the small or one of the larger pieces, in accordance with particular number pushed by chance, and maker of last push in each of the two sections into which cards were divided received one of the still larger pieces; and (3) number of bars of candy of uniform size, together with push card or punchboard, for sale under a plan, and in accordance with explanatory legend on said card or board, pursuant to which purchaser paid amount ranging from one cent to five cents for uniform size pieces thus sold, in accordance with particular number pushed by chance—

Sold, to wholesalers and retailers for display and resale to purchasing public by the retailer-vendee, in accordance with aforesaid plan, such assortments, and thereby supplied to and placed in the hands of others the means of conducting lotteries in the sale of said products, in accordance with such plans, contrary to public policy as long recognized in the common law and criminal statutes, and contrary to an established public policy of the United States Government, and in competition with many who, unwilling to offer and sell candy so packed and assembled, or otherwise arranged and packed for sale to purchasing public, as to involve a game of chance or sale therewith of a chance to procure larger pieces, refrain therefrom, and in competition with many who are unwilling to adopt and use said or any method involving game of chance, or sale of a chance to win by chance, or other method contrary to public policy;

With result that many dealers in and ultimate purchasers of candy were attracted by said methods and manner of packing such product, and by element of chance involved in sale thereof as above set forth, and thereby induced to purchase same, thus packed and sold by it, in preference to that offered and sold by said competitors who do not use such or equivalent

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that Williams-Crahan Company, a corporation, hereinafter referred to as respondent, has been and is using unfair methods of competition in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in said act of Congress, and it appearing to said Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent is a corporation, organized under the laws of the State of Oklahoma with its principal office and place of business in the city of Oklahoma City, State of Oklahoma. Respondent is now, and for several years last past, has been engaged in the manufacture of candy and in the sale and distribution thereof to wholesale and retail dealers located at points in the various States of the United States, and causes said products, when so sold, to be transported from its place of business in the city of Oklahoma City, State of Oklahoma, to purchasers thereof in other States of the United States at their respective places of business, and there is now, and has been for several years last past, a course of trade and commerce by said respondent in such candy, between and among the States of the United States. In the course and conduct of the said business, respondent is in competition with other corporations and with individuals and partnerships engaged in the sale and distribution of candy and candy products in commerce between and among the various States of the United States.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of its business, as described in paragraph 1 hereof, respondent sells and has sold to wholesale and retail dealers, various packages or assortments of candy, so packed and assembled as to involve the use of a lottery scheme when sold and distributed to the consumers thereof. Certain of said packages are hereinafter described for the purpose of showing the methods used by respondent, but this list is not all inclusive of the various packages, nor does it include all the details of the several sales plans which respondent has been or is using in the distribution of candy by lot or chance:

(a) One of said assortments is composed of a number of pieces of candy of uniform size, shape, and quality, together with a number of larger pieces of candy, which larger pieces of candy are to be given as prizes to purchasers of said pieces of candy of uniform size, shape, and quality, in the following manner:

The majority of the said pieces of candy of uniform size, shape, and quality, have cream centers, but a small number of said pieces of candy have centers containing red cinnamon. The said pieces of candy of uniform size, shape, and quality, retail at the price of one cent each, but the purchaser who procures one of the said pieces of candy having a center of red cinnamon, is entitled to receive, and is to be given free of charge, one of the said larger pieces of candy heretofore referred to. The assortment is packed in two trays, and the purchaser of the last piece of candy of uniform size, shape, and quality in each tray, is entitled to receive, and is to be given free of charge, one of the larger pieces of candy heretofore referred to. The fact as to whether the pieces of candy of uniform size, shape, and quality are of whipped cream throughout, or contain red cinnamon, is effectively concealed from the purchasers and prospective purchasers until a selection has been made and the piece of candy broken open. The aforesaid purchasers procuring a candy having red cinnamon in the center thus procure one of the said larger pieces of candy wholly by lot or chance, and the purchaser of the last piece of candy of uniform size, shape, and quality, in each of said trays, also procures one of the larger pieces of candy wholly by lot or chance.

The respondent furnishes to said wholesale and retail dealers, with said assortment, a display card to be used by the retail dealer in offering said candy to the public. The display card bears a legend or statement informing the prospective purchaser that the said candy is being sold in accordance with the above described sales plan.

(b) Another assortment manufactured and distributed by respondent is composed of a number of small pieces of candy, together with a number of larger pieces of candy, and two still larger pieces of candy, and a device commonly known as a punchboard or push card. The candy contained in said assortment is distributed to purchasers in the following manner:

The push card has a number of partially perforated discs, and when a push is made and the disc separated from the card, a number is disclosed. The discs on said card are divided into two sections and sales are 5¢ each. The card bears statements or legends informing customers and prospective customers that certain numbers indicated receive one of the small pieces of candy, that other numbers receive one of the larger pieces of candy, and that the last push in each section receives one of the still larger bars of candy. The legends on the discs or pushes are effectively concealed from the purchaser and prospective purchaser until a selection has been made and the disc separated from the card. The fact as to whether a purchaser receives one of the small pieces of candy, one of the bars of candy, or one of the still larger bars of candy in said assortment, is thus determined wholly by lot or chance.

(c) Another assortment manufactured and distributed by respondent is composed of a number of bars of candy of uniform size, together with a device commonly known as a push card or punch-board. The candy contained in said assortment is distributed to purchasers in the following manner:

The push card has a number of partially perforated discs, and when a push is made and the disc separated from the card, a number is disclosed. The numbers of said discs are 1¢, 2¢, 3¢, 4¢, or 5¢, and the customer pays the price marked on said disc. The numbers on said discs are effectively concealed from the purchasers and prospective purchasers until a selection has been made and the disc separated from the card. The fact as to whether a purchaser pays 1¢, 2¢, 3¢, 4¢, or 5¢ for a bar of candy is thus determined wholly by lot or chance.

PAR. 3. The wholesale dealers to whom respondent sells its assortments, resell said assortments to retail dealers, and said retail dealers and the retail dealers to whom respondent sells direct, expose said assortments for sale, and sell said candy to the purchasing public in accordance with the aforesaid sales plans. Respondent thus supplies to and places in the hands of others the means of conducting lotteries in the sale of its products in accordance with the sales plans hereinabove set forth, as a means of inducing purchasers thereof to purchase respondent's said products in preference to candy offered for sale and sold by its competitors.

PAR. 4. The sale of said candy to the purchasing public in the manner above alleged involves a game of chance or the sale of a chance to procure (a) and (b) larger pieces of candy; or (c) bars of candy at a price less than 5¢.

The use by respondent of the said methods of the sale of candies, and the sale of candies by and through the use thereof and by the aid of said methods is a practice of the sort which the common law and criminal statutes have long deemed contrary to public policy; and is contrary to an established public policy of the Government of the United States. The use by respondent of said methods has the dangerous tendency unduly to hinder competition or create monopoly in this, to wit: that the use thereof has the tendency and capacity to exclude from the branch of the candy trade involved in this proceeding competitors who do not adopt and use the same method or an equivalent or similar method involving the same or equivalent or similar element of chance or lottery scheme.

Wherefore, many persons, firms, and corporations who make and sell candy in competition with the respondent, as above alleged, are unwilling to offer for sale or sell candy so packed and assembled as above alleged, or otherwise arranged and packed for sale to the purchasing public so as to involve a game of chance, and such competitors refrain therefrom.

PAR. 5. Many dealers in and ultimate purchasers of candy are attracted by respondent's said method and manner of packing said candy, and by the element of chance involved in the sale thereof in the manner above described, and are thereby induced to purchase said candy so packed and sold by respondent, in preference to candy offered for sale and sold by said competitors of respondent who do not use the same or equivalent methods. The use of said method by respondent has the tendency and capacity, because of said game of chance, to divert to respondent trade and custom from its said competitors who do not use the same or an equivalent method; to exclude from said candy trade all competitors who are unwilling to and who do not use the same or an equivalent method because the same is unlawful; to lessen competition in said candy trade, and to tend to create a monopoly of said candy trade in respondent and such other distributors of candy as use the same or an equivalent method, and to deprive the purchasing public of the benefit of free competition in said candy trade. The use of said method by the respondent has the tendency and capacity to eliminate from said candy trade all actual competitors, and to exclude therefrom all potential competitors, who do not adopt and use said method or an equivalent method.

PAR. 6. Many of said competitors of respondent are unwilling to adopt and use said method or any method involving a game of chance or the sale of a chance to win something by chance or any other method that is contrary to public policy.

PAR. 7. The aforementioned methods, acts, and practices of the respondent are all to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors as hereinabove alleged. Said methods, acts, and practices constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914.

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, on January 31, 1936, issued, and on February 3, 1936, served its complaint in this proceeding upon respondent, Williams-Crahan Company, a corporation, charging it with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of the provisions of said act. Thereafter, respondent filed its answer dated August 31, 1936, admitting all the material allegations of the complaint to be true and waiving the taking of further evidence and all other intervening procedure. Thereafter, this proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on the said complaint and answer thereto, briefs and oral arguments of counsel having been waived; and the Commission having duly considered the same and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent is a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Oklahoma, with its principal office and place of business located in the city of Oklahoma City, State of Oklahoma. Respondent, is now, and for several years last past, has been engaged in the manufacture of candy and in the sale and distribution thereof to wholesale and retail dealers located at points in the various States of the United States. It causes said products when sold to be transported from its place of business in the city of Oklahoma City, State of Oklahoma, to purchasers thereof in other States of the United States at their respective places of business. There is now, and has been for several years last past, a course of trade and commerce by said respondent in such candy between and among the States of the United States. In the course and conduct of the said business, respondent is in competition with other corporations and with individuals and partnerships engaged in the sale and distribution of candy and candy products in commerce between and among the various States of the United States.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of its business, as described in paragraph 1 hereof, respondent sells and has sold to wholesale and retail dealers various packages or assortments of candy so packed and assembled as to involve the use of a lottery scheme when sold and distributed to the consumers thereof. Certain of said packages are hereinafter described for the purpose of showing the methods used by respondent, but this list is not all inclusive of the various packages and it does not include all the details of the several sales plans which respondent has been or is using in the distribution of candy by lot or chance.

(a) One of said assortments is composed of a number of pieces of candy of uniform size, shape, and quality, together with a number of larger pieces of candy, which larger pieces of candy are to be given as prizes to purchasers of said pieces of candy of uniform size, shape, and quality, in the following manner: The majority of the said pieces of candy of uniform size, shape, and quality have cream centers, but a small number of said pieces of candy have centers containing red cinnamon. The said pieces of candy of uniform size, shape and quality retail at the price of 1¢ each, but the purchaser who procures one of the said pieces of candy having a center of red cinnamon is entitled to receive and is to be given free of charge one of the said larger pieces of candy heretofore referred to. The assortment is packed in two trays, and the purchaser of the last piece of candy of uniform size, shape, and quality in each tray is entitled to receive and is to be given free of charge one of the larger pieces of candy heretofore referred to. The fact as to whether the pieces of candy of uniform size, shape, and quality are of whipped cream throughout, or contain red cinnamon, is effectively concealed from the purchasers and prospective purchasers until a selection has been made and the piece of candy selected broken open. The aforesaid purchasers procuring a candy having red cinnamon in the center thus procure one of the said larger pieces of candy wholly by lot or chance, and the purchaser of the last piece of candy of uniform size, shape, and quality in each of said trays also procures one of the larger pieces of candy wholly by lot or chance. Respondent furnishes to said wholesale and retail dealers with said assortment a display card to be used by the retail dealer in offering said candy to the public. The display card bears a statement or legend informing the prospective purchaser that the said candy is being sold in accordance with the above described plan.

(b) Another assortment manufactured and distributed by respondent is composed of a number of small pieces of candy, together with a number of larger pieces of candy and two still larger pieces of candy, and a device commonly known as a "punchboard" or "push card." The candy contained in said assortment is distributed to purchasers in the following manner: The push card has a number of partially perforated discs, and when a push is made and the disc separated from the card a number is disclosed. The discs on said card are divided into two sections, and sales are 5¢ each. The card bears statements or legends informing customers and prospective customers that certain numbers indicated receive one of the small pieces of candy, that other numbers receive one of the larger pieces of candy, and that the last push in each section receives one of the still larger pieces of candy. The legends on the discs or pushes are effectively concealed from the purchaser and prospective purchaser until a selection has been made and the disc separated from the card. The fact as to whether a purchaser receives one of the small pieces of candy, one of the larger pieces of candy, or one of the still larger pieces of candy in said assortment, is thus determined wholly by lot or chance.

(c) Another assortment manufactured and distributed by respondent is composed of a number of bars of candy of uniform size, together with a device commonly known as a "push card" or "punch-board." The candy contained in said assortment is distributed to purchasers in the following manner: The push card has a number of partially perforated discs, and when a push is made and the disc separated from the card a number is disclosed. The numbers on said discs are 1¢, 2¢, 3¢, 4¢, or 5¢, and the customer pays the price marked on said disc. The numbers on said discs are effectively concealed from the purchasers and prospective purchasers until a selection has been made and the disc separated from the card. The fact as to whether a purchaser pays 1¢, 2¢, 3¢, 4¢, or 5¢, for a bar of candy is thus determined wholly by lot or chance.

PAR. 3. The wholesale dealers to whom respondent sells its assortments resell said assortments to retail dealers, and said retail dealers and the retail dealers to whom respondent sells direct expose said assortments for sale and sell said candy to the purchasing public in accordance with the aforesaid sales plans. Respondent thus supplies to and places in the hands of others the means of conducting lotteries in the sale of its products in accordance with the sales plans hereinabove set forth, as a means of inducing purchasers thereof to purchase respondent's said products in preference to candy offered for sale and sold by its competitors.

PAR. 4. The sale of said candy to the purchasing public in the manner above described involves a game of chance or the sale of a chance to procure (a) and (b) larger pieces of candy, or (c) bars of candy at a price less than 5¢. The use by respondent of the said methods in the sale of candies, and the sale of candies by and through the use thereof and by the aid of said methods, is a practice of the sort which the common law and criminal statutes have long deemed contrary to public policy, and is contrary to an established public policy of the Government of the United States. The use by respondent of said methods has the tendency unduly to hinder competition or create monopoly in this, to wit: that the use thereof has the tendency and capacity to exclude from the branch of the candy trade involved in this proceeding competitors who do not adopt and use the same methods or equivalent or similar methods involving the same or an equivalent or similar element of chance or lottery scheme. Many persons, firms, and corporations who make and sell candy in competition with the respondent, as above found, are unwilling to offer for sale or sell candy so packed and assembled as above described, or otherwise arranged and packed for sale to the purchasing public so as to involve a game of chance, and such competitors refrain therefrom.

PAR. 5. Many dealers in and ultimate purchasers of candy are attracted by respondent's said methods and manner of packing said candy and by the element of chance involved in the sale thereof in the manner above described, and are thereby induced to purchase said candy so packed and sold by respondent in preference to candy offered for sale and sold by said competitors of respondent who do not use the same or equivalent methods. The use of said methods by respondent has the tendency and capacity, because of said game of chance, to divert to respondent trade and custom from its said competitors who do not use the same or equivalent methods; to exclude from said candy trade all competitors who are unwilling to and who do not use the same or equivalent methods because the same are unlawful; to lessen competition in said candy trade, and to tend to create a monopoly of said candy trade in respondent and such other distributors of candy as use the same or equivalent methods; and to deprive the purchasing public of the benefit of free competition in said candy trade. The use of said methods by the respondent has the tendency and capacity to eliminate from said candy trade all actual competitors, and to exclude therefrom all potential competitors who do not adopt and use said methods or equivalent methods.

PAR. 6. Many of said competitors of respondent are unwilling to adopt and use said methods or any method involving a game of chance or the sale of a chance to win something by chance, or any other method that is contrary to public policy.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondent, Williams-Crahan Company, a corporation, are to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

This proceeding having been heard by the Federal Trade Commission upon the complaint of the Commission and the answer of respondent dated August 31, 1936, admitting all the material allegations of the complaint to be true and waiving the taking of further evidence and all other intervening procedure, and the Commission having made its findings as to the facts and its conclusion that said respondent has violated the provisions of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

It is ordered, That the respondent, Williams-Crahan Company, a corporation, its officers, representatives, agents, and employees, in connection with the offering for sale, sale, and distribution of candy in interstate commerce, do cease and desist from:

1. Selling and distributing to wholesale dealers and jobbers, for resale to retail dealers and to retail dealers direct, candy so packed and assembled that sales of said candy to the general public are to be made, or may be made, by means of a lottery, gaming device, or gift enterprise.

2. Supplying to or placing in the hands of retail and wholesale dealers and jobbers, packages or assortments of candy which are used, or may be used, without alteration or rearrangement of the contents of such packages or assortments, to conduct a lottery, gaming device, or gift enterprise, in the sale or distribution of the candy contained in said assortments to the public.

3. Packing or assembling in the same package or assortment of candy for sale to the public at retail pieces of candy of uniform size and shape having centers of a different color, together with larger pieces of candy, which larger pieces of candy are to be given as prizes to the purchaser procuring a piece of candy with a center of a particular color.

4. Supplying to or placing in the hands of retail and wholesale dealers and jobbers assortments of candy, together with a device commonly called a "push card" or a "punchboard," for use or which may be used in distributing or selling said candy to the public at retail.

Order

5. Furnishing to retail and wholesale dealers and jobbers a device commonly called a "push card" or a "punchboard," either with packages or assortments of candy or separately, bearing a legend or legends or statements informing the purchasing public that the candy is being sold to the public by lot or chance or in accordance with a sales plan which constitutes a lottery, gaming device, or gift enterprise.

It is further ordered, That the respondent Williams-Crahan Company, a corporation, shall, within 30 days after service upon it of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which it has complied with the order to cease and desist hereinabove set forth.

IN THE MATTER OF STARTUP CANDY COMPANY

COMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION
OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 26, 1914

Docket 2705. Complaint, Jan. 31, 1936—Decision, June 19, 1937

Where a corporation engaged in manufacture and sale of "straight" goods candy, and also of so-called "break and take," "draw," or "deal" assortments, sale and distribution of which type candy, in constant demand and affording, in connection with sale thereof to public, means or opportunity of obtaining a prize or becoming a winner by lot or chance, and providing an easy means of disposing of such products, teaches and encourages gambling among children, comprising, by far, majority of purchasers and consumers of such type, and sale and distribution of which in the markets of many manufacturers who sell their "straight" goods in interstate commerce in competition with the other, has been followed by a marked decrease in sales of such "straight" goods due to gambling or lottery feature connected with said "break and take," "draw," or "deal" candy, preferred by consumers because of gambling feature connected therewith, and sale of which candy, so packed and assembled as to enable retail dealers, without alteration, addition or rearrangement, to resell same to consuming public by lot or chance, is contrary to public policy—

Sold, to wholesalers, jobbers, and retailers, certain packages or assortments of candy which were so packed and assembled as to involve, or which were designed to or might involve, the use of a lottery scheme when sold and distributed to the ultimate consumers thereof, and several of which were composed of (a) number of penny pieces of uniform size and shape, together with explanatory display card for retailer's use, and number of larger pieces or bars of candy, to be given as prizes to purchasers by chance of a relatively few of said uniform penny pieces, concealed colored centers of which differed from those of the majority, and also together with small package of candy, to be given free of charge to purchaser of last uniform piece in assortment, (b) number of small pieces of candy, number of larger pieces and bars of candy, and number of small packages of candy, together with push card, for sale and distribution to consuming public under a plan, and in accordance with said board's explanatory legend, by which purchaser received, for penny paid, one of small pieces, one of larger pieces, one of bars, or one of small packages, in accordance with number pushed by chance, and purchaser of last push or punch was entitled also to one of such packages, and (c) of number of candy bars, together with push card, for distribution to consuming public under a plan, and in accordance with said card's explanatory legend, by which purchaser received, for five cents paid, one, two, three, four, or five bars, dependent upon legend disclosed by chance by push, and purchaser of last push received six; so assembled and packed that they were designed to be, and were, displayed and used by retail dealer purchasers thereof for distribution and resale to purchasing public in accordance with such sales plans, by lot or chance, without alteration or rearrangement, and with knowledge and intent that such candy should thus be resold to public by lot or chance by said retail dealers, in competition with many who regard such sale and distribution as morally bad and as encouraging gambling, and especially among children, and as injurious to the candy industry through resulting in the merchandising of a chance or lottery instead of candy, and as providing retail merchants with a means of violating the laws of the several States, and some of whom, for such reasons, refuse to sell candy so packed and assembled that it can be resold to public by lot or chance;

With result that such competitors were put to a disadvantage in competing, retailers, finding candy more salable by "break and take," "draw," or "deal" method, bought from it and others employing same methods of sale, trade was diverted to it and others using similar method from said competitors, who could compete on even terms only by giving similar devices to retailers, and sales of whose "straight" candy, in their unwillingness so to do, showed a marked decrease, some competitors began sale and distribution of candy by lot or chance in order to meet competition of manufacturers who thus sold and distributed such products, and trade was diverted to it from its said competitors, and there was a restraint upon and a detriment to the freedom of fair and legitimate competition in the industry involved; to the prejudice and injury of the public and competitors:

Held, That such acts and practices, under the conditions and circumstances set forth, were all to the prejudice of the public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition.

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that Startup Candy Company, a corporation, hereinafter referred to as respondent, has been and is using unfair methods of competition in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in said act of Congress, and it appearing to said Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent is a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Utah with its principal office and place of business located in the city of Provo, State of Utah. It is now and for several years last past has been engaged in the manufacture of candies and in the sale and distribution thereof to wholesale dealers and jobbers and to retail dealers located at points in the various States of the United States and causes the said products, when so sold, to be transported from its principal place of business in the city of Provo, Utah, to purchasers thereof in other States of the United States at their respective places of business; and there is now and has been for several years last past a course of trade and commerce by said respondent in such candy between and among the States of the United States. In the course and conduct of said business, respondent is in competition with other corporations and with partnerships and individuals engaged in the manufacture of candy and in the sale and distribution thereof in commerce between and among the various States of the United States.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of its business, as described in paragraph 1 hereof, respondent sells and has sold to wholesale and retail dealers certain packages or assortments of candy so packed and assembled as to involve the use of a lottery scheme when sold and distributed to the consumers thereof. Certain of said packages are hereinafter described for the purpose of showing the methods used by respondent, but this list is not all-inclusive of the various packages nor does it include all of the details of the several sales plans which respondent has been or is using in the distribution of candy by lot or chance:

(a) One of said assortments is composed of a number of pieces of candy of uniform size, shape, and quality, together with a number of larger pieces of candy, which larger pieces of candy are to be given as prizes to purchasers of said smaller candies in the following manner:

The majority of said pieces of candy in said assortment have centers of the same color but a small number of said pieces of candy have centers of a different color. The said pieces of candy of uniform size, shape, and quality in said assortment retail at the price of one cent each but the purchasers who procure one of said candies having a center of a different color than the majority of said candies are entitled to receive and are to be given free of charge one of the said larger pieces of candy. The purchaser of the last piece of candy of uniform size, shape, and quality in said assortment is entitled to receive and is to be given free of charge one of the said larger pieces of candy. The color of the center of said pieces of candy is effectively concealed from purchasers and prospective purchasers until a selection has been made and the piece of candy broken open. The aforesaid purchasers of said candies who procure a candy having a center colored differently from the majority of said pieces of candy, and the purchaser of the last piece of candy in said assortment, thus procure one of the said larger pieces of candy wholly by lot or chance.

Respondent furnishes to said wholesale and retail dealers with said assortment of candy, a display card, to be used by the retailer in offering said merchandise for sale to the public, which display card bears a legend or statement informing the prospective purchaser which color of the said colored center candies contained in said assortment entitles the purchaser to a prize, and that by purchasing the last piece of candy in said assortment the purchaser will receive one of the said larger pieces of candy free of charge.

(b) Another assortment manufactured and distributed by the respondent is composed of a number of small pieces of candy, a number of larger pieces of candy, and a small box of candy, together with a device commonly called a push card. The candy in said assortment is distributed to the consuming public in the following manner:

The push card has a number of partially perforated discs and when a disc is separated from the card, a number is disclosed. Sales are 1¢ each and the card bears statements informing customers and prospective customers as to which numbers receive one of the small pieces of candy, which numbers receive one of the larger pieces of candy, and that the purchaser of the last push from said card receives the small box of candy. The numbers on the discs or pushes are effectively concealed from purchasers and prospective purchasers until a selection has been made and the disc separated from the card. The fact as to whether a purchaser receives one of the small pieces of candy, one of the larger pieces of candy, or the small box of candy is thus determined wholly by lot or chance.

(c) Another assortment manufactured and distributed by respondent is composed of a number of bars of candy, together with a device commonly called a push card. The candy contained in said assortment is distributed to purchasers in the following manner:

The push card has a number of partially perforated discs and when a push is made and the disc separated from the card, a legend is disclosed. Sales are 5¢ each, and the card bears statements informing customers and prospective customers as to the number of bars which are to be given with particular legends. Certain specified legends receive one bar, certain specified legends receive two bars, others three bars, others four bars, and others five bars. The purchaser of the last push on said card receives six bars. The legends on the discs or pushes are effectively concealed from the purchaser and prospective purchaser until a selection has been made and the disc separated from the card. The number of candy bars which a customer receives for the price of 5¢ is thus determined wholly by lot or chance.

PAR. 3. The wholesale dealers to whom respondent sells its assortments resell said assortments to retail dealers, and said retail dealers, and the retail dealers to whom respondent sells direct, expose said assortments for sale and sell said candy to the purchasing public in accordance with the aforesaid sales plans. Respondent thus supplies to and places in the hands of others the means of conducting lotteries in the sale of its products in accordance with the sales plans hereinabove set forth, as a means of inducing purchasers thereof to purchase respondent's said products in preference to candy offered for sale and sold by its competitors.

PAR. 4. The sale of said candy to the purchasing public as above alleged involves a game of chance or the sale of a chance to procure (a) larger pieces of candy, (b) larger pieces of candy or a box of candy, (c) additional bars of candy.

The use by respondent of said method of the sale of candies, and the sale of candies by and through the use thereof and by the aid of said method is a practice of the sort which the common law and criminal statutes have long deemed contrary to public policy; and is contrary to an established public policy of the Government of the United States. The use by respondent of said method has the dangerous tendency unduly to hinder competition or create monopoly in this, to wit: that the use thereof has the tendency and capacity to exclude from the branch of the candy trade involved in this proceeding competitors who do not adopt and use the same method or an equivalent or similar method involving the same or an equivalent or similar element of chance or lottery scheme.

Wherefore, many persons, firms, and corporations who make and sell candy in competition with the respondent, as above alleged, are unwilling to offer for sale or sell candy so packed and assembled as above alleged, or otherwise arranged and packed for sale to the purchasing public so as to involve a game of chance, and such competitors refrain therefrom.

PAR. 5. Many dealers in and ultimate purchasers of candy are attracted by respondent's said method and manner of packing said candy, and by the element of chance involved in the sale thereof in the manner above described, and are thereby induced to purchase said candy so packed and sold by respondent, in preference to candy offered for sale and sold by said competitors of respondent who do not use the same or equivalent methods. The use of said method by respondent has the tendency and capacity, because of said game of chance, to divert to respondent trade and custom from its said competitors who do not use the same or an equivalent method; to exclude from said candy trade all competitors who are unwilling to and who do not use the same or an equivalent method because the same is unlawful; to lessen competition in said candy trade, and to tend to create a monopoly of said candy trade in respondent and such other distributors of candy as use the same or an equivalent method, and to deprive the purchasing public of the benefit of free competition in said candy trade. The use of said method by the respondent has the tendency and capacity to eliminate from said candy trade all actual competitors, and to exclude therefrom all potential competitors, who do not adopt and use said method or an equivalent method.

PAR. 6. Many of said competitors of respondent are unwilling to adopt and use said method or any method involving a game of chance or the sale of a chance to win something by chance or any other method that is contrary to public policy.

PAR. 7. The aforementioned methods, acts, and practices of the respondent are all to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors as hereinabove alleged. Said methods, acts and practices constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914.

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission on January 31, 1936, issued and served a complaint upon the respondent, Startup Candy Company, a corporation, charging that respondent had been and was using unfair methods of competition in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in said act of Congress.

After the issuance of said complaint and the filing of respondent's answer thereto, testimony and other evidence in support of the allegations of the complaint were introduced by P. C. Kolinski, attorney for the Commission, and in opposition to the allegations of the complaint by H. L. Mulliner, attorney for the respondent, before Charles P. Vicini and Henry M. White, examiners of the Commission theretofore duly designated by it, and said testimony and other evidence were duly recorded and filed in the office of the Commission.

Thereafter, the proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on said complaint, the answer thereto, testimony and other evidence briefs in support of the complaint and in opposition thereto and the oral argument of Henry C. Lank, counsel for the Commission, the respondent not being represented although duly notified of the time and place of such hearing; and the Commission having duly considered the same and being fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom.

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent is a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Utah, with its principal office and place of business located in the city of Provo, State of Utah. It is now, and for several years last past, has been engaged in the manufacture of candy and in the sale and distribution thereof to wholesale dealers, jobbers, and to retail dealers located in the State of Utah and in the States of Wyoming, Idaho, Nevada, and Arizona. It causes the said candy when sold to be shipped or transported from its principal place of business in the State of Utah to purchasers thereof in Utah and in other States of the United States as mentioned above. In so carrying on said business, respondent is and has been engaged in interstate commerce and is and has been engaged in active competition with other corporations and with partnerships and individuals engaged in the manufacture of candy and in the sale and distribution thereof in commerce between and among the various States of the United States.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of its business as described in paragraph 1 hereof, the respondent sells and has sold to wholesale dealers, jobbers, and retail dealers certain packages or assortments of candy so packed and assembled as to involve or which are designed to or may involve the use of a lottery scheme when sold and distributed to the ultimate consumer thereof.

Several of said assortments are composed of a number of pieces of candy of uniform size and shape together with a number of larger pieces or bars of candy and a small package of candy, which larger pieces or bars of candy and small package of candy are to be given as prizes to purchasers of said small candies in the following manner: The majority of the said pieces of candy in the said assortments have centers of the same color but a small number of said pieces of candy have centers of a different color. The said pieces of candy of uniform size and shape in said assortments retail at the price of one cent each, but the purchaser who procures one of the said candies having a center of a color different from the majority is entitled to receive and is to be given free of charge one of the said larger pieces or bars of candy. The purchaser of the last piece of candy of uniform size and shape in said assortments is entitled to receive and is to be given free of charge the small package of candy. The color of the center of said pieces of candy of uniform size and shape is effectively concealed from purchasers and prospective purchasers until a selection has been made and the piece of candy selected broken open. The aforesaid purchasers of said candy who procure a candy having a center colored differently from the majority of the said pieces of candy and the purchaser of the last piece of candy in the said assortments thus procure one of the said larger pieces or bars of candy or the small package of candy wholly by lot or chance.

Respondent furnishes to said wholesale and retail dealers with the above described assortments a display card to be used by the retail dealers in offering said merchandise for sale to the public, which display card bears a legend or statement informing the purchaser and prospective purchaser which of the said colored center candy contained in said assortments entitles the purchasers to a prize and that by purchasing the last piece of candy in said assortments the purchaser will receive a prize.

Other assortments manufactured, sold and distributed by the respondent are composed of a number of small pieces of candy, a number of larger pieces and bars of candy, and a number of small packages of candy, together with a device commonly called a "push card." The candy in said assortments is distributed to the consuming public in the following manner: The "push card" has a number of partially perforated discs and when a disc is separated from the card, a number is disclosed. Sales are one cent each and the card bears statements or legends informing purchasers and prospective purchasers as to which numbers receive one of the small pieces of candy, which numbers receive one of the larger pieces of candy, which numbers receive one of the bars of candy, which numbers receive one of the small packages of candy, and that the purchaser of the last push or punch from said card receives one of the small packages of candy. The numbers on the discs or pushes are effectively concealed from purchasers and prospective purchasers until a selection has been made and the disc selected separated from the card. The fact as to whether a purchaser receives one of the small pieces of candy, one of the larger pieces of candy, one of the bars of candy, or one of the small packages of candy, is thus determined wholly by lot or chance.

The respondent also manufactures, sells and distributes assortments which are composed of a number of bars of candy, together with a device commonly called a "push card." The candy contained in said assortments is distributed to the consuming public in the following manner: The "push card" has a number of partially perforated discs and when a push is made and the disc selected separated from the card, a legend is disclosed. Sales are 5¢ each and the card bears statements informing purchasers and prospective purchasers as to the number of bars of candy which are to be given with particular legends. Certain specified legends receive one bar; other specified legends receive two bars; others, 3 bars; others, 4 bars; and others, 5 bars. The purchaser of the last push on said card receives 6 bars. The legends on the discs or pushes are effectively concealed from the purchasers and prospective purchasers until a selection has been made and the disc selected separated from the card. The fact as to whether a purchaser receives one, two, three, four, five or six bars of candy for the price of 5¢ is thus determined wholly by lot or chance.

PAR. 3. The candy assortments involving the lot or chance feature as above described are generally referred to in the candy trade or industry as "break and take," "draw," or "deal" assortments. Assortments of candy without the lot or chance feature in connection with their resale to the public are generally referred to in the candy trade or industry as "straight" goods. These terms will be used hereafter in these findings to distinguish these separate types of assortments.

PAR. 4. The wholesale dealers or jobbers to whom respondent sells its assortments resell the same to retail dealers. Numerous retail dealers purchase the assortments described in paragraph 2 above, either from respondent or from wholesale dealers or jobbers who in turn have purchased said assortments from the respondent and such retail dealers display said assortments for sale to the public as packed and assembled by the respondent and the candy contained in the majority of said assortment is sold and distributed to the consuming public in accordance with the sales plans as described in paragraph 2 hereof.

PAR. 5. All sales made by respondent whether to wholesale dealers or jobbers or to retail dealers are absolute sales and respondent retains no control over said assortments after they are delivered to the wholesale dealer or jobber or retail dealer. The assortments are assembled and packed in such manner that they are designed to be used and are used by the retail dealer for distribution to the purchasing public by lot or chance without alteration or rearrangement.

In the sale and distribution to jobbers and wholesale dealers for resale to retail dealers and to retail dealers direct of the assortments of candy described in paragraph 2 above, respondent has knowledge that said candy will be sold to the purchasing public by retail dealers by lot or chance and it packs such candy in the way and manner described so that without alteration or rearrangement thereof it may be sold to the purchasing public by lot or chance by said retail dealers.

PAR. 6. There are in the United States many manufacturers offering for sale and selling candy in the territory served by this respondent who do not manufacture and sell "break and take," "draw," or "deal" assortments of candy and who sell their "straight" goods in interstate commerce in competition with the "break and take," "draw," or "deal" candy and manufacturers of "straight" goods have noted a marked decrease in the sales of their product whenever or wherever the "break and take," "draw," or "deal" assortments have appeared in their markets. This decrease in the sale of "straight" candies is due to the gambling or lottery feature connected with the "break and take," "draw," or "deal" assortments.

Witnesses from several branches of the candy industry testified in this proceeding to the effect that consumers preferred to purchase the "break and take," "draw," or "deal" candy because of the gambling feature connected with its sale. The sale and distribution of "break and take," "draw," or "deal" assortments of candy or of candy which has connected with its sale to the public the means or opportunity of obtaining a prize or becoming a winner by lot or chance, teaches and encourages gambling among children who comprise by far the majority of the purchasers and consumers of this type of candy.

PAR. 7. The sale and distribution of candy by the retailers by the methods described herein is the sale and distribution of candy by lot or chance and constitutes a lottery or gaming device.

The Commission finds that many competitors regard such sale and distribution as morally bad and as encouraging gambling, especially among children; as injurious to the candy industry, because it results in the merchandising of a chance or lottery instead of candy; and as providing retail merchants with a means of violating the laws of the several states. Because of these reasons, some competitors of respondent refuse to sell candy so packed and assembled that it can be resold to the public by lot or chance. These competitors are thereby put to a disadvantage in competing. The retailers, finding that they can dispose of more candy by the "break and take," "draw," or "deal" method, buy from respondent and others employing the same methods of sale, and thereby trade is diverted to respondent and others using similar methods, from said competitors. Such competitors can compete on even terms only by giving the same or similar devices to retailers. This, they are unwilling to do and their sales of "straight" candy shows a marked decrease. The sale and distribution of candy by lot or chance provides an easy means of disposing of such products. There is a constant demand for candy which is sold by lot or chance, and, in order to meet the competition of manufacturers who sell and distribute candy which is sold by such methods, some competitors have begun the sale and distribution of candy to the public by lot or chance. The use of such methods by respondent, in the sale and distribution of its candy, is prejudicial and injurious to the public and respondent's competitors, and has resulted in the diversion of trade to respondent from its said competitors, and is a restraint upon and a detriment to the freedom of fair and legitimate competition in the candy industry.

PAR. 8. Although the volume of business of the respondent was not shown exactly, an official of the respondent corporation testified and the Commission finds that the respondent's annual volume of business is approximately $100,000.00, but that the majority of this business is "straight" merchandise and the lesser part thereof the lot or chance assortments.

PAR. 9. The Commission further finds that the sale and distribution in interstate commerce of assortments or packages of candy so packed and assembled as to enable retail dealers, without alteration, addition or rearrangement, to resell the same to the consuming public by lot or chance, is contrary to public policy.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of respondent, Startup Candy Company, a corporation, under the conditions and circumstances set forth in the foregoing findings of fact, are all to the prejudice of the public and respondent's competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

This proceeding having been heard by the Federal Trade Commission upon the complaint of the Commission, the answer of the respondent, testimony and other evidence taken before Charles P. Vicini and Henry M. White, examiners of the Commission theretofore duly designated by it, in support of the allegations of said complaint and in opposition thereto, briefs filed herein, and the oral argument of Henry C. Lank, counsel for the Commission, the respondent not being represented at said argument although duly notified of the time and place thereof; and the Commission having made its findings as to the facts and its conclusion that said respondent has violated the provisions of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

It is hereby ordered, That the respondent, Startup Candy Company, its officers, directors, agents, representatives, and employees, in the offering for sale, sale and distribution in interstate commerce of candy, do cease and desist from:

1. Selling and distributing to jobbers and wholesale dealers for resale to retail dealers or to retail dealers direct, candy so packed and assembled that sales of such candy to the general public are to be made or may be made by means of a lottery, gaming device, or gift enterprise.

2. Supplying to or placing in the hands of wholesale dealers and jobbers or retail dealers, assortments of candy which are used or which may be used without alteration or rearrangement of the contents of such assortments to conduct a lottery, gaming device, or gift enterprise in the sale and distribution of the candy contained in said assortments to the public.

3. Packing or assembling in the same assortment of candy for sale to the public at retail, pieces of candy of uniform size and shape having centers of a different color, together with larger pieces of candy or small packages of candy, which larger pieces of candy or small packages of candy are to be given as prizes to the purchasers procuring pieces of candy with a center of a particular color.

4. Supplying to, or placing in the hands of wholesale dealers and jobbers, or retail dealers assortments of candy, together with a device commonly called a "push card" for use or which may be used in distributing or selling said candy to the public at retail.

5. Furnishing to retail and wholesale dealers and jobbers a device commonly called a "push card," either with assortments of candy or separately bearing a legend or legends, or statements informing the purchasing public that the candy is being sold to the public by lot or chance, or in accordance with a sales plan which constitutes a lottery, gaming device, or gift enterprise.

It is further ordered, That the respondent, Startup Candy Company, a corporation, shall, within 30 days after the service upon it of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing, setting forth in detail the manner and form in which it has complied with the order to cease and desist hereinabove set forth.

IN THE MATTER OF UNIQUE NOVELTIES, INC.

COMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION
OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 26, 1914

Docket 3108. Complaint, Apr. 20, 1937—Decision, June 25, 1937

Where a corporation engaged in sale and distribution of candy, candy products, and chewing gum, including certain assortments so packed and assembled as to involve use of a lottery scheme when sold and distributed to consumers thereof, and which included (1) large number of individually wrapped penny caramels of uniform size and shape, of which a relatively few were red or red-centered, and of which a still smaller number were green or green-centered, together with a number of small pennants to be given free, and in accordance with explanatory display card for retailer's use included with assortment, to chance purchasers of aforesaid red or red-centered caramels, and with a number of larger pennants to be thus given to such purchasers of the green or green-centered caramels, and to be given, along with said display card, to which one of said larger pennants was attached, to purchaser of last caramel in assortment; and (2) a large number of individually wrapped penny sticks of chewing gum, together with number of small felt pennants to be given, without charge, to chance purchasers of said sticks, upon the inside of the wrapper of which were printed words "Home Run," and to be given also to purchaser of last stick in assortment, in accordance with explanatory display card supplied for retailer's use—

Sold, to wholesalers and jobbers and to retailers for display and resale, in accordance with aforesaid plan, such assortments, and thereby supplied to and placed in the hands of others the means of conducting lotteries in the sale of said products, in accordance with such plans, contrary to public policy as long recognized in the common law and criminal statutes, and contrary to an established public policy of the United States Government, and in competition with many who, unwilling to offer and sell candy and chewing gum so packed and assembled, or otherwise arranged and packed for sale to the purchasing public as to involve a game of chance, refrain therefrom, and in competition with many who are unwilling to adopt and use said or any method involving game of chance or sale of a chance to win by chance, as contrary to public policy or criminal statutes as aforesaid, or as detrimental to public morals and to morals of the purchasers of such products;

With results that consuming public was induced to purchase said caramels or gum because of chance of obtaining free, one of pennants contained in said assortments, and with capacity and tendency to induce purchasers to buy its said products in preference to those offered and sold by its competitors, and with result that many dealers in and ultimate purchasers of candy were attracted by said methods and manner of packing such products and by element of chance involved in sale thereof as above set forth, and thereby induced to purchase same, thus packed and sold by it, in preference to those offered and sold by said competitors who do not use such or

Mr. Charles W. Jablon, of New York City, for respondent.

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that Unique Novelties, Inc., a corporation, hereinafter referred to as respondent, has been and is using unfair methods of competition in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in said act, and it appearing to said Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent is a corporation organized and doing business under the laws of the State of New York, with its principal office and place of business located at 35-37 Claver Place, in the city of Brooklyn, State of New York. Respondent is now, and for several months last past has been, engaged in the sale and distribution of candy, candy products, and chewing gum to wholesale dealers and jobbers and to retail dealers located at points in the various States of the United States. Respondent causes and has caused its said products when sold to be transported from its principal place of business in Brooklyn, N. Y., to purchasers thereof in the State of New York and in other States of the United States at their respective places of business. There is now, and has been for several months last past, a course of trade and commerce by said respondent in such candy, candy products and chewing gum between and among the States of the United States. In the course and conduct of said business, respondent is in competition with other corporations and with individuals and partnerships engaged in the sale and distribution of candy, candy products, and chewing gum in commerce between and among the various States of the United States.

Complaint

25 F. T. C.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of its business, as described in paragraph 1 hereof, respondent sells and has sold to wholesale dealers and jobbers and to retail dealers assortments of candy, candy products, and chewing gum so packed and assembled as to involve the use of a lottery scheme when sold and distributed to the consumers thereof.

(a) One of said assortments is composed of 150 pieces of caramel candy of uniform size and shape, together with 20 small pennants and 11 larger pennants and a display card, hereinafter referred to, which has a still larger pennant fastened thereon. 120 of these caramels are yellow. 20 of said caramels are red or have red centers, and 10 of said caramels are green or have green centers. The said caramels are contained within non-transparent wrappers, and the color of said caramels, or the color of the center of said caramels, is effectively concealed from purchasers and prospective purchasers until a selection has been made and the wrapper removed. The said caramels retail for 1¢ each, and the purchaser procuring one of the red caramels, or one of the caramels having a red center, is entitled to receive and is to be given free of charge one of the small pennants contained in said assortment. The purchaser procuring one of the green caramels, or one of the caramels having a green center, is entitled to receive and is to be given free of charge one of the larger pennants contained in said assortment. The purchaser of the last caramel in said assortment is entitled to receive and is to be given free of charge the display card hereinbefore referred to, to which one of the large pennants is attached. The display card included with said assortment contains statements or legends informing the purchasers and prospective purchasers that the said assortment is being sold in accordance with the above described sales plan.

The said pennants are thus distributed to the purchasers of said caramel candies wholly by lot or chance, and the consuming public is induced to purchase said caramel candies because of the chance of obtaining one of the said pennants contained in said assortment.

(b) An assortment of chewing gum being sold and distributed by respondent is composed of 100 sticks of chewing gum contained within individual wrappers, together with a number of small felt pennants and a display card to which has been attached one of said pennants. The majority of the wrappers within which said sticks of chewing gum are contained have no printing on the inside, but a small number of said wrappers have the words "Home Run" printed on the inside thereof. The fact as to whether the inside of the wrapper is blank or has the words "Home Run" thereon is effectively concealed from purchasers and prospective purchasers until a selection has been made and the wrapper removed. The said sticks of chewing gum retail at 1¢ each, and the purchaser procuring a stick of chewing gum contained within a wrapper bearing the words "Home Run" is entitled to receive and is to be given free of charge one of the said felt pennants contained in said assortment. The purchaser of the last stick of chewing gum in said assortment is entitled to receive and is to be given free of charge the display card to which a pennant is attached. The display card included with said assortment contains statements or legends informing the purchasers and prospective purchasers that the said assortment is being sold in accordance with the above described sales plan. The said small felt pennants are thus distributed to purchasers of sticks of chewing gum from said assortment wholly by lot or chance, and the consuming public is induced to purchase said chewing gum because of the chance of obtaining one of the said small felt pennants.

PAR. 3. The wholesale dealers and jobbers to whom respondent sells its assortments of candy and chewing gum resell the same to retail dealers, and said retail dealers and the retail dealers to whom respondent sells direct expose said assortments for sale and sell the same to the purchasing public in accordance with the aforesaid sales plans. Respondent thus supplies to and places in the hands of others the means of conducting lotteries in the sale of its products in accordance with the sales plans hereinabove set forth. Such sales plans have the capacity and tendency of inducing purchasers thereof to purchase respondent's said products in preference to candy or chewing gum offered for sale and sold by its competitors.

PAR. 4. The sale of candy and chewing gum to the purchasing public in the manner above alleged involves a game of chance or the sale of a chance to procure a pennant.

The use by respondent of said methods in the sale of candy and chewing gum, and the sale of candy and chewing gum by and through the use thereof and by the aid of said methods, is a practice of the sort which the common law and criminal statutes have long deemed contrary to public policy, and is contrary to an established public policy of the Government of the United States. The use by respondent of said methods has the tendency unduly to hinder competition or create monopoly in this, to wit: that the use thereof has the tendency and capacity to exclude competitors of respondent who do not adopt and use the same methods or equivalent or similar methods involving the same or an equivalent or similar element of chance or lottery scheme.

Many persons, firms, and corporations who make and sell candy or chewing gum in competition with respondent, as above alleged, are unwilling to offer for sale or sell candy or chewing gum so packed and assembled as above alleged, or otherwise arranged and packed for sale to the purchasing public so as to involve a game of chance, and such competitors refrain therefrom.

PAR. 5. Many dealers in and ultimate purchasers of candy or chewing gum are attracted by respondent's said methods and manner of packing said candy and chewing gum and by the element of chance involved in the sale thereof in the manner above described, and are thereby induced to purchase said candy and chewing gum so packed and sold by respondent in preference to candy or chewing gum offered for sale and sold by said competitors of respondent who do not use the same or equivalent methods. The use of said methods by respondent has the tendency and capacity, because of said game of chance, to divert to respondent trade and custom from its said competitors who do not use the same or equivalent methods; to exclude from said candy and chewing gum trade all competitors who are unwilling to and who do not use the same or equivalent methods because the same are unlawful; to lessen competition in said candy and chewing gum trade and to tend to create a monopoly of said candy and chewing gum trade in respondent and in such other competitors of respondent as use the same or equivalent methods; and to deprive the purchasing public of the benefit of free competition in said candy and chewing gum trade. The use of said methods by respondent has the tendency and capacity to eliminate from said candy and chewing gum trade all actual competitors and to exclude therefrom all potential competitors who do not adopt and use said methods or equivalent methods.

PAR. 6. The aforementioned methods, acts and practices of respondent are all to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors, as hereinabove alleged. Said methods, acts, and practices constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission on April 20, 1937, issued and on April, 22, 1937, served its complaint in this proceeding upon the respondent, Unique Novelties, Inc., a corporation, charging it with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of the provisions of said act. After the issuance of said complaint, the respondent filed answer thereto admitting all the material allegations of the complaint to be true and waiving the taking of further evidence and all other intervening procedure. Thereafter, this proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on the said complaint and answer thereto, briefs and oral argument of counsel having been waived; and the Commission, having duly considered the same and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent is a corporation organized and doing business under the laws of the State of New York, with its principal office and place of business located at 35-37 Claver Place, in the city of Brooklyn, State of New York. Respondent is now, and for several months last past, has been engaged in the sale and distribution of candy, candy products, and chewing gum to wholesale dealers and jobbers and to retail dealers located at points in the various States of the United States. Respondent causes and has caused its said products when sold to be transported from its principal place of business in Brooklyn, N. Y., to purchasers thereof in the State of New York and in other States of the United States at their respective places of business. There is now, and has been for several months last past, a course of trade and commerce by said respondent in such candy, candy products and chewing gum between and among the States of the United States. In the course and conduct of said business, respondent is in competition with other corporations and with individuals and partnerships engaged in the sale and distribution of candy, candy products, and chewing gum in commerce between and among the various States of the United States.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of its business, as described in paragraph 1 hereof, respondent sells and has sold to wholesale dealers and jobbers and to retail dealers assortments of candy, candy products and chewing gum so packed and assembled as to involve the use of a lottery scheme when sold and distributed to the consumers thereof.

(a) One of said assortments is composed of 150 pieces of caramel candy of uniform size and shape, together with 20 small pennants and 11 larger pennants and a display card, hereinafter referred to, which has a still larger pennant fastened thereon. 120 of these caramels are yellow, 20 of said caramels are red or have red centers, and 10 of said caramels are green or have green centers. The said caramels are contained within nontransparent wrappers, and the color of said caramels, or the color of the center of said caramels, is effectively concealed from purchasers and prospective purchasers until a selection has been made and the wrapper removed. The said caramels retail for 1¢ each, and the purchaser procuring one of the red caramels, or one of the caramels having a red center, is entitled to receive and is to be given free of charge one of the small pennants contained in said assortment. The purchaser procuring one of the green caramels, or one of the caramels having a green center, is entitled to receive and is to be given free of charge one of the larger pennants contained in said assortment. The purchaser of the last caramel in said assortment is entitled to receive and is to be given free of charge the display card hereinbefore referred to, to which one of the large pennants is attached. The display card included with said assortment contains statements or legends informing the purchasers and prospective purchasers that the said assortment is being sold in accordance with the above described sales plan.

The said pennants are thus distributed to the purchasers of said caramel candies wholly by lot or chance, and the consuming public is induced to purchase said caramel candies because of the chance of obtaining one of the said pennants contained in said assortment.

(b) An assortment of chewing gum being sold and distributed by respondent is composed of 100 sticks of chewing gum contained within individual wrappers, together with a number of small felt pennants and a display card to which has been attached one of said pennants. The majority of the wrappers within which said sticks of chewing gum are contained have no printing on the inside, but a small number of said wrappers have the words "Home Run" printed on the inside thereof. The fact as to whether the inside of the wrapper is blank or has the words "Home Run" thereon is effectively concealed from purchasers and prospective purchasers until a selection has been made and the wrapper removed. The said sticks of chewing gum retail at 1¢ each, and the purchaser procuring a stick of chewing gum contained within a wrapper bearing the words "Home Run" is entitled to receive and is to be given free of charge one of the said felt pennants contained in said assortment. The purchaser of the last stick of chewing gum in said assortment is entitled to receive and is to be given free of charge the display card to which a pennant is attached. The display card included with said assortment contains statements or legends informing the purchasers and prospective purchasers that the said assortment is being sold in accordance with the above described sales plan. The said small felt pennants are thus distributed to purchasers of sticks of chewing gum from said assortment wholly by lot or chance, and the consuming public is induced to purchase said chewing gum because of the chance of obtaining one of the said small felt pennants.

PAR. 3. The wholesale dealers and jobbers to whom respondent sells its assortments of candy and chewing gum resell the same to retail dealers, and said retail dealers and the retail dealers to whom respondent sells direct expose said assortments for sale and sell the same to the purchasing public in accordance with the aforesaid sales plans. Respondent thus supplies to and places in the hands of others the means of conducting lotteries in the sale of its products in accordance with the sales plans hereinabove set forth. Such sales plans have the capacity and tendency of inducing purchasers thereof to purchase respondent's said products in preference to candy or chewing gum offered for sale and sold by its competitors.

PAR. 4. The sale of candy and chewing gum to the purchasing public in the manner above found involves a game of chance or the sale of a chance to procure a pennant. The use by respondent of said methods in the sale of candy and chewing gum, and the sale of candy and chewing gum by and through the use thereof and by the aid of said methods, is a practice of the sort which the common law and criminal statutes have long deemed contrary to public policy, and is contrary to an established public policy of the Government of the United States. The use by respondent of said methods has the tendency unduly to hinder competition or create monopoly in this, to wit: that the use thereof has the tendency and capacity to exclude competitors of respondent who do not adopt and use the same methods or equivalent or similar methods involving the same or an equivalent or similar element of chance or lottery scheme. Many persons, firms, and corporations who make and sell candy or chewing gum in competition with respondent, as above described, are unwilling to offer for sale or sell candy or chewing gum so packed and assembled, or otherwise arranged and packed for sale to the purchasing public so as to involve a game of chance, and such competitors refrain therefrom.

PAR. 5. Many dealers in and ultimate purchasers of candy or chewing gum are attracted by respondent's said methods and manner of packing said candy and chewing gum and by the element of chance involved in the sale thereof in the manner above described, and are thereby induced to purchase said candy and chewing gum so packed and sold by respondent in preference to candy or chewing gum offered for sale and sold by said competitors of respondent who do not use the same or equivalent methods. The use of said methods by respondent has the tendency and capacity because of said game of chance, to divert to respondent trade and custom from its said competitors who do not use the same or equivalent methods; to exclude from said candy and chewing gum trade all competitors who are unwilling to and who do not use the same or equivalent methods because the same are unlawful; to lessen competition in said candy and chewing gum trade, and to tend to create a monopoly of said candy and chewing gum trade in respondent and in such other competitors of respondent as use the same or equivalent methods; and to deprive the purchasing public of the benefit of free competition in said candy and chewing gum trade. The use of said methods by respondent has the tendency and capacity to eliminate from said candy and chewing gum trade all actual competitors and to exclude therefrom all potential competitors who do not adopt and use said methods or equivalent methods.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondent, Unique Novelties, Inc., a corporation, are to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

It is ordered, That the respondent, Unique Novelties, Inc., a corporation, its officers, representatives, agents, and employees, in connection with the offering for sale, sale, and distribution of candy, candy products and chewing gum in interstate commerce, do forthwith cease and desist from:

1. Selling and distributing to jobbers and wholesale dealers for resale to retail dealers, or to retail dealers direct, candy, candy products or chewing gum so packed and assembled that sales of such candy, candy products, or chewing gum to the general public are to be made, or may be made, by means of a lottery, gaming device, or gift enterprise.

2. Supplying to or placing in the hands of wholesale dealers and jobbers or retail dealers assortments of candy, candy products, or chewing gum which are used, or which may be used, without alteration or rearrangement of the contents of such assortments to conduct a lottery, gaming device, or gift enterprise in the sale or distribution of the candy, candy products, or chewing gum contained in said assortments to the public.

3. Packing or assembling in the same package or assortment of candy for sale to the public at retail pieces of candy of uniform size, shape, and quality having centers of a different color, together with felt pennants or other articles of merchandise, which said felt pennants or other articles of merchandise are to be given as prizes to the purchaser procuring a piece of candy with a center of a particular color.

4. Packing or assembling in the same package or assortment of chewing gum for sale to the public at retail pieces of chewing gum enclosed in wrappers, some of which have no legends printed on the inside thereof and others of which have a legend printed on the inside thereof, together with felt pennants or other articles of merchandise, which said felt pennants or other articles of merchandise, are to be given as prizes to the purchaser procuring a piece of chewing gum having a legend on the inside of the wrapper thereof.

5. Furnishing to wholesale dealers, jobbers and retail dealers display cards, either separately or with packages or assortments of candy, candy products, or chewing gum, bearing a legend or legends or statements informing the purchasers that the candy, candy products, or chewing gum are being sold to the public by lot or chance, or in accordance with a sales plan which constitutes a lottery, gaming device, or gift enterprise.

It is further ordered, That the respondent, Unique Novelties, Inc., a corporation, shall, within 60 days after service upon it of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which it has complied with the order to cease and desist hereinabove set forth.

IN THE MATTER OF WINTHROP NOVELTY COMPANY, INC.

Docket 3109. Complaint, Apr. 20, 1937—Decision, June 25, 1937

Where a corporation engaged in sale and distribution of candy, including certain assortments which were so packed and assembled as to involve use of a lottery scheme when sold and distributed to consumers thereof, and which included such assortments as large number of wrapped penny caramels of uniform size and shape, majority of which were uniform throughout, together with a number of Radio Star Jig Saw puzzles, to be given, without charge, to those purchasing, by chance, one of a few red-centered caramels included in assortment in question—

(a) Sold, to wholesalers and jobbers, and to retailers, for display and resale to purchasing public by the retailer-vender, in accordance with aforesaid plan, such assortments, and thereby supplied to and placed in the hands of others the means of conducting lotteries in the sale of its said products, in accordance with such plan, contrary to public policy as long recognized in the common law and criminal statutes, and contrary to an established public policy of the United States Government, and in competition with many who, unwilling to offer and sell candy so packed and assembled, or otherwise arranged and packed for sale to the purchasing public, as to involve a game of chance, refrain therefrom;

With result that consuming public was induced to buy its said candies because of chance of obtaining one of said puzzles or prizes, and with capacity and tendency to induce purchasers to buy said products in preference to those offered and sold by competitors, and with result that many dealers in and ultimate purchasers of candy were attracted by its said method or manner of packing such product and by element of chance involved in sale thereof, as above set forth, and thereby induced to purchase same, thus packed and sold by it, in preference to that offered and sold by its competitors who do not use such or equivalent methods, and with tendency and capacity, because of said game of chance, to divert to its trade and custom from its said competitors who do not use same or equivalent methods, exclude from said trade all competitors who are unwilling to and do not use such or equivalent methods as unlawful, lessen competition in said trade and tend to create a monopoly thereof in it and in such other competitors as use same or equivalent methods, deprive purchasing public of benefit of free competition therein, and eliminate from said trade all actual, and exclude therefrom all potential, competitors who do not adopt and use such or equivalent methods; and

(b) Represented to customers and prospective customers, through use of words "manufacturers of novelty candy products," that it was the manufacturer of the candy or merchandise sold and distributed by it, notwithstanding fact it neither owned, controlled, nor operated any factory whatsoever, and did not make any of its candy or merchandise;

Complaint

With effect of misleading and deceiving many of its customers into the erroneous belief that it was a business concern which controlled and operated a factory in which the candy and other merchandise sold by it was made, and that persons dealing with it were buying said products directly from the manufacturer thereof, and thereby eliminating profits of a selling agency or middleman and obtaining various advantages not had by those buying goods therefrom, and of unfairly diverting trade to it from its competitors, including many who do not falsely represent that they manufacture merchandise or candy sold by them:

Held, That such acts and practices were to the prejudice of the public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition.

Mr. Henry C. Lank and Mr. P. C. Kolinski for the Commission.

Mr. Charles W. Jablon, of New York City, for respondent.

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that Winthrop Novelty Co., Inc., a corporation, hereinafter referred to as respondent, has been and is using unfair methods of competition in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in said act, and it appearing to said Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPHS 1. Respondent is a corporation organized and doing business under the laws of the State of New York, with its principal office and place of business located at 35-37 Claver Place, in the city of Brooklyn, State of New York. Respondent is now, and for more than one year last past has been, engaged in the sale and distribution of candy to wholesale dealers and jobbers and to retail dealers located at points in the various States of the United States. Respondent causes and has caused its said products when sold to be transported from its principal place of business in Brooklyn, N. Y., to purchasers thereof in the State of New York and in other States of the United States at their respective places of business. There is now, and has been for more than one year last past, a course of trade and commerce by said respondent in such candy between and among the States of the United States. In the course and conduct of said business, respondent is in competition with other corporations and with individuals and partnerships engaged in the sale and distribution of candy in commerce between and among the various States of the United States.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of its business, as described in paragraph 1 hereof, respondent sells and has sold to wholesale dealers and jobbers and to retail dealers assortments of candy so packed and assembled as to involve the use of a lottery scheme when sold and distributed to the consumers thereof.

One of said assortments is composed of 150 pieces of caramel candy of uniform size and shape, together with 12 Radio Star Jig Saw puzzles. The majority of the caramels in said assortment have the same color throughout, but a small number of said caramels have a red center. The said caramels are wrapped in non-transparent wrappers, and the color of the center of said caramels is effectively concealed from purchasers and prospective purchasers until a selection has been made and the wrapper removed. The said caramels retail at the price of 1¢ each, and the purchaser procuring one of the caramels having a red center is entitled to receive, and is to be given free of charge, one of the Radio Star Jig Saw puzzles heretofore referred to. The said Jig Saw puzzles are thus distributed to purchasers of said caramels wholly by lot or chance, and the consuming public is induced to purchase said candies because of the chance of obtaining one of the said Jig Saw puzzles. *

The respondent sells and distributes several assortments of candy involving a game of chance or lottery scheme when sold and distributed to the consuming public, but respondent's method of packing and assembling the said assortments and the sales plan involved are similar in all major respects to that described above.

PAR. 3. The wholesale dealers and jobbers to whom respondent sells its assortments of candy resell the same to retail dealers, and the said retail dealers and the retail dealers to whom respondent sells direct expose said assortments for sale and sell the same to the purchasing public in accordance with the aforesaid sales plan. Respondent thus supplies to and places in the hands of others the means of conducting lotteries in the sale of its products in accordance with the sales plan hereinabove set forth. Such sales plan has the capacity and tendency of inducing purchasers thereof to purchase respondent's said products in preference to candy offered for sale and sold by its competitors.

PAR. 4. The sale of candy to the purchasing public in the manner above alleged involves a game of chance or the sale of a chance to procure a Jig Saw puzzle.

The use by respondent of said method in the sale of candy, and the sale of candy by and through the use thereof and by the aid of said method, is a practice of the sort which the common law and criminal statutes have long deemed contrary to public policy, and is contrary to an established public policy of the Government of the United States. The use by respondent of said method has the tendency unduly to hinder competition or create monopoly in this, to wit: that the use thereof has the tendency and capacity to exclude competitors of respondent who do not adopt and use the same method or an equivalent or similar method involving the same or an equivalent or similar element of chance or lottery scheme.

Many persons, firms, and corporations who make and sell candy in competition with respondent, as above alleged, are unwilling to offer for sale or sell candy so packed and assembled as above alleged, or otherwise arranged and packed for sale to the purchasing public so, as to involve a game of chance, and such competitors refrain therefrom.

PAR. 5. Many dealers in and ultimate purchasers of candy are attracted by respondent's said method and manner of packing said candy and by the element of chance involved in the sale thereof in the manner above described, and are thereby induced to purchase said candy so packed and sold by respondent in preference to candy offered for sale and sold by said competitors of respondent who do not use the same or an equivalent method. The use of said method by respondent has the tendency and capacity, because of said game of chance, to divert to respondent trade and custom from its said competitors who do not use the same or an equivalent method; to exclude from said candy trade all competitors who are unwilling to and who do not use the same or an equivalent method because the same is unlawful; to lessen competition in said candy trade and to tend to create a monopoly of said candy trade in respondent and in such other competitors of respondent as use the same or an equivalent method; and to deprive the purchasing public of the benefit of free competition in said candy trade. The use of said method by respondent has the tendency and capacity to eliminate from said candy trade all actual competitors and to exclude therefrom all potential competitors who do not adopt and use said method or an equivalent method.

PAR. 6. In the course and conduct of its said business, respondent has caused and causes the representation to be made to its customers and prospective customers, by the use of the words "manufacturers of novelty candy products," that it is the manufacturer of the candy or merchandise which it sells and distributes. A substantial portion of the wholesale and retail dealers have expressed, and have, a preference for dealing direct with the manufacturer of candy or candy products being purchased, such purchasers believing that they secure lower prices, superior quality, and other advantages that are not obtained when they purchase from a selling agency or middleman.

The use by respondent of said representation that it is a manufacturer has the capacity and tendency to, and does, mislead and deceive many of respondent's said customers into the erroneous belief that respondent is a business concern which controls and operates a factory in which the candy and other merchandise sold by respondent is manufactured, and that persons dealing with respondent are buying said candy or merchandise directly from the manufacturer thereof, thereby eliminating the profits of a selling agency or middleman and obtaining various advantages that are not obtained by persons purchasing goods from a selling agency or middleman. The truth and fact is that respondent neither owns, controls, nor operates any factory whatsoever and does not manufacture any candy or merchandise sold by it. There are many competitors of respondent who do not falsely represent that they manufacture the merchandise or candy sold by them. The use of said representation by respondent has the tendency and capacity to, and does, unfairly divert trade to respondent from its said competitors.

PAR. 7. The aforementioned method, acts and practices of respondent are all to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors, as hereinabove alleged. Said methods, acts, and practices constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

and oral argument of counsel having been waived; and the Commission having duly considered the same and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent is a corporation organized and doing business under the laws of the State of New York, with its principal office and place of business located at 35-37 Claver Place, in the city of Brooklyn, State of New York. Respondent is now, and for more than one year last past has been, engaged in the sale and distribution of candy to wholesale dealers and jobbers and to retail dealers located at points in the various States of the United States. Respondent causes and has caused its said products when sold to be transported from its principal place of business in Brooklyn, N. Y., to purchasers thereof in the State of New York and in other States of the United States at their respective places of business. There is now, and has been for more than one year last past, a course of trade and commerce by said respondent in such candy between and among the States of the United States. In the course and conduct of said business, respondent is in competition with other corporations and with individuals and partnerships engaged in the sale and distribution of candy in commerce between and among the various States of the United States.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of its business, as described in paragraph 1 hereof, respondent sells and has sold to wholesale dealers and jobbers and to retail dealers assortments of candy so packed and assembled as to involve the use of a lottery scheme when sold and distributed to the consumers thereof.

One of said assortments is composed of 150 pieces of caramel candy of uniform size and shape, together with 12 Radio Star Jig Saw puzzles. The majority of the caramels in said assortment have the same color throughout but a small number of said caramels have a red center. The said caramels are wrapped in non-transparent wrappers, and the color of the center of said caramels is effectively concealed from purchasers and prospective purchasers until a selection has been made and the wrapper removed. The said caramels retail at the price of 1¢ each, and the purchaser procuring one of the caramels having a red center is entitled to receive, and is to be given free of charge, one of the Radio Star Jig Saw puzzles heretofore referred to. The said Jig Saw puzzles are thus distributed to purchasers of said caramels wholly by lot or chance, and the consuming public is induced to purchase said candies because of the chance of obtaining one of the said Jig Saw puzzles.

The respondent sells and distributes several assortments of candy involving a game of chance or lottery scheme when sold and distributed to the consuming public, but respondent's method of packing and assembling the said assortments and the sales plan involved are similar in all major respects to that described above.

PAR. 3. The wholesale dealers and jobbers to whom respondent sells its assortments of candy resell the same to retail dealers, and the said retail dealers and the retail dealers to whom respondent sells direct expose said assortments for sale and sell the same to the purchasing public in accordance with the aforesaid sales plan. Respondent thus supplies to and places in the hands of others the means of conducting lotteries in the sale of its products in accordance with the sales plan hereinabove set forth. Such sales plan has the capacity and tendency of inducing purchasers thereof to purchase respondent's said products in preference to candy offered for sale and sold by its competitors.

PAR. 4. The sale of candy to the purchasing public in the manner above found involves a game of chance or the sale of a chance to procure a Jig Saw puzzle. The use by respondent of said method in the sale of candy, and the sale of candy by and through the use thereof and by the aid of said method, is a practice of the sort which the common law and criminal statutes have long deemed contrary to public policy, and is contrary to an established public policy of the Government of the United States. The use by respondent of said method has the tendency unduly to hinder competition or create monopoly in this, to wit: that the use thereof has the tendency and capacity to exclude competitors of respondent who do not adopt and use the same method or an equivalent or similar method involving the same or an equivalent or similar element of chance or lottery scheme. Many persons, firms, and corporations who make and sell candy in competition with respondent, as above described, are unwilling to offer for sale or sell candy so packed and assembled, or otherwise arranged and packed for sale to the purchasing public so as to involve a game of chance, and such competitors refrain therefrom.

for sale and sold by said competitors of respondent who do not use the same or an equivalent method. The use of said method by respondent has the tendency and capacity, because of said game of chance, to divert to respondent trade and custom from its said competitors who do not use the same or an equivalent method; to exclude from said candy trade all competitors who are unwilling to and who do not use the same or an equivalent method because the same is unlawful; to lessen competition in said candy trade and to tend to create a monopoly of said candy trade in respondent and in such other competitors of respondent as use the same or an equivalent method; and to deprive the purchasing public of the benefit of free competition in said candy trade. The use of said method by respondent has the tendency and capacity to eliminate from said candy trade all actual competitors and to exclude therefrom all potential competitors who do not adopt and use said method or an equivalent method.

PAR. 6. In the course and conduct of its said business, respondent has caused and causes the representation to be made to its customers and prospective customers by the use of the words "manufacturers of novelty candy products," that it is the manufacturer of the candy or merchandise which it sells and distributes. A substantial portion of the wholesale and retail dealers have expressed, and have a preference for dealing direct with the manufacturer of candy or candy products being purchased, such purchasers believing that they secure lower prices, superior quality, and other advantages that are not obtained when they purchase from a selling agency or middleman. The use by respondent of said representation that it is a manufacturer has the capacity and tendency to, and does mislead and deceive many of respondent's said customers into the erroneous belief that respondent is a business concern which controls and operates a factory in which the candy and other merchandise sold by respondent is manufactured, and that persons dealing with respondent are buying said candy or merchandise directly from the manufacturer thereof, thereby eliminating the profits of a selling agency or middleman and obtaining various advantages that are not obtained by persons purchasing goods from a selling agency or middleman. The truth and fact is that respondent neither owns, controls, nor operates any factory whatsoever and does not manufacture any candy or merchandise sold by it. There are many competitors of respondent who do not falsely represent that they manufacture the merchandise or candy sold by them. The use of said representation by respondent has the tendency and capacity to, and does, unfairly divert trade to respondent from its said competitors.

Order

25 F. T. C.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondent, Winthrop Novelty Company, Inc., a corporation, are to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

It is ordered, That the respondent, Winthrop Novelty Company, Inc., a corporation, its officers, representatives, agents, and employees, in connection with the offering for sale, sale, and distribution of candy in interstate commerce, do forthwith cease and desist from:

1. Selling and distributing to jobbers and wholesale dealers for resale to retail dealers, or to retail dealers direct, candy so packed and assembled that sales of such candy to the general public are to be made, or may be made, by means of a lottery, gaming device, or gift enterprise.

2. Supplying to or placing in the hands of wholesale dealers and jobbers or retail dealers assortments of candy which are used, or which may be used, without alteration or rearrangement of the contents of such assortments, to conduct a lottery, gaming device, or gift enterprise in the sale or distribution of the candy contained in said assortments to the public.

3. Packing or assembling in the same package or assortment of candy for sale to the public at retail, pieces of candy of uniform size and shape having centers of a different color, together with Jig Saw puzzles or other articles of merchandise, which said Jig Saw puzzles or other articles of merchandise are to be given as prizes to the purchaser procuring a piece of candy with a center of a particular color.

Order

4. Representing, directly or indirectly, that respondent is the manufacturer of the merchandise which it sells.

It is further ordered, That the respondent, Winthrop Novelty Company, Inc., a corporation, shall within 60 days after service upon it of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which it has complied with the order to cease and desist hereinabove set forth.

JAMES CLARK DISTILLING CORPORATION AND D. & B.
PRODUCTS CORPORATION

COMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION
OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 26, 1914, AND OF SEC. 3
OF TITLE I OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED JUNE 16, 1933¹

Docket 2411. Complaint, May 24, 1935—Decision, June 26, 1937

Where a corporation and its selling agency engaged, under common control and, as the case might be, in purchasing, rectifying, blending, bottling, and selling whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages, and in the making of gin with a still used therefor by said first-named corporation, by redistillation of purchased alcohol, not produced by it, over juniper berries and other aromatics, and in transporting their aforesaid products into and through various States to the wholesale and retail purchasers thereof in States other than State of origin, and in the District of Columbia, in substantial competition with those engaged in the manufacture, by original and continuous distillation from mash, wort, or wash, of whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages, and in selling same in trade and commerce among the various States and in said District, and with those engaged in purchasing, rectifying, blending, and bottling such various beverages and similarly selling same, and including among said competitors those who, as manufacturers and distillers from mash, wort, or wash of whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages sold by them, truthfully use words "distillery," "distilleries," "distilling," or "distillers" as a part of their corporate or trade names and on their stationery and catalogs and on the labels of the bottles in which they sell and ship their said products, and those who, engaged in purchasing, rectifying, blending, bottling, and selling such various products, do not use aforesaid words as above set forth—

Represented, through use of word "Distilling" in corporate name of said first corporation, printed on stationery and catalogs and on the labels attached to the bottles in which they sold and shipped their said various products and in various other ways to their customers, and furnished same with a means of representing to their vendees, both retailers and ultimate consuming public, that said first-named corporation was a distiller and that the whiskies, gins, cordials, brandies, and other alcoholic beverages contained in such bottles were by it made through process of distillation from mash, wort, or wash, notwithstanding fact it did not distill said various beverages, thus bottled, labeled, sold, and transported, by original and continuous distillation from mash, wort, or wash through continuous closed pipes and vessels until manufacture is complete, as long definitely understood from word "distilling" used in connection with liquor industry and products thereof in the trade and by the ultimate purchasing public, and did not own, operate, or control any place or places where such beverages are made by process of original and continuous distillation from mash, wort, or wash, and, notwithstanding (1) distillation, theretofore, for a limited time and by a separate company, but under supervision of an individual specialist in construction of distilleries and himself a distiller, of quantity of whiskey for it and its thereafter use at its rectifying plant, nor (2) distillation, under contract of sale with a separate company but in its name, for a limited time and theretofore, of quantity of whiskey, thereafter left in storage to age and bearing its name, and distiller's permit secured, and subsequently permitted to lapse, under such contract of purchase, was not a distiller, for the purchase of the bottled liquors of which there is a preference on the part of a substantial portion of the purchasing public;

With effect of misleading and deceiving dealers and purchasing public into the belief that said first-named corporation was a distiller or distilling company in the ordinarily accepted sense of those terms, and that the whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages sold by them were made or distilled by said first-named corporation from mash, wort, or wash by one continuous process, and of inducing dealers and purchasing public, acting in such beliefs, to buy their said whiskies and other beverages rectified and bottled by said first-named corporation, and with distinct tendency of giving them an unfair competitive advantage over those of their competitors who do not, through use of such terms in their trade or corporate names, represent that the package of alcoholic liquors offered to retailer, and in turn to consumers is a distillery-bottled one, and thereby to divert trade to them from such competitors; to the substantial injury of competition in commerce:

Held, That such acts and practices were to the prejudice of the public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition.

Before Mr. John L. Hornor, trial examiner.

Mr. PGad B. Morehouse and Mr. DeWitt T. Puckett for the Commission.

Mr. Mortimer S. Gordon, Mr. Max J. Miller and Mr. Herman Keller, of New York City, for respondents.

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that James Clark Distilling Corporation and D. & B. Products Corporation, hereinafter referred to as respondents, have been and are using unfair methods of competition in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in said act, and in violation of the Act of Congress approved June 16, 1933, known as the "National Industrial Recovery Act," and it appearing to the said Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint, stating its charges in that respect as follows:

Complaint

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent, James Clark Distilling Corporation, is a corporation organized, existing, and doing business under the laws of the State of New Jersey, having its principal office and place of business at 26 Exchange Place in Jersey City, in the said State. Respondent D. & B. Products Corporation is a corporation organized, existing and doing business in and under the laws of the State of New Jersey with its principal office and place of business at 26 Exchange Place, Jersey City in said State. Both respondents are subsidiaries or affiliates of Distillers and Brewers Corporation of America, a holding corporation incorporated under the laws of the State of Delaware in June 1933 and all three corporations aforesaid have interlocking officers and directors. Respondent, James Clark Distilling Corporation, is now and since its organization in August 1933, has been engaged in the business of purchasing, rectifying, blending, and bottling whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages, and in the sale thereof to the respondent, D. & B. Products Corporation aforesaid. The D. & B. Products Corporation and the James Clark Distilling Corporation, by the D. & B. Products Corporation, its distributing and selling agent, are now and since their organizations have been engaged in the sale of said products in constant course of trade and commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia. In the course and conduct of their said businesses they cause their said products when sold to be transported from their places of business in Jersey City aforesaid, into and through various States of the United States to the purchasers thereof, consisting of wholesalers and retailers, some located within the State of New Jersey and some located in other States of the United States and the District of Columbia. In the course and conduct of their businesses aforesaid, respondents are now and for more than one year last past have been in substantial competition with other corporations and with individuals, partnerships, and firms engaged in the manufacture by original and continuous distillation from mash, wort, or wash of whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages and in the sale thereof in constant course of trade and commerce between and among the various States of the United States and the District of Columbia; and in the course and conduct of their businesses as aforesaid, respondents are and have been for more than one year last past in substantial competition with other corporations and with individuals, partnerships, and firms engaged in the business of purchasing, rectifying, blending and bottling whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages and in the sale thereof in constant course of trade and commerce between and among the various States of the United States and the District of Columbia.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid, respondent, James Clark Distilling Corporation, has upon its said premises, stills used in the production of gin by a process of rectification whereby tax paid alcohol purchased but not produced by the said respondent is redistilled over juniper berries and other aromatics. Such rectification of alcoholic spirits does not make or constitute the respondent James Clark Distilling Corporation, a distiller as defined by Section 3247 of the revised statutes regulating internal revenue, nor as commonly understood by the public and the liquor industry. For a long period of time the word "distilling" when used in connection with the liquor industry and with the products thereof, has had and still has a definite significance and meaning to the minds of wholesalers and retailers in such industry and to the ultimate purchasing public, to wit, the production of such liquors by an original and continuous distillation from mash, wort or wash through continuous closed pipes and vessels until the manufacture thereof is complete, and a substantial portion of the purchasing public prefers to buy spirituous liquors prepared and bottled by the actual distillers thereof.

PAR. 3. In the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid respondent, James Clark Distilling Corporation, by the use of the word "distilling" in its corporate name, printed on its stationery and on the labels attached to the bottles in which it sells its said products to the D. & B. Products Corporation and in various other ways, and the respondent, D. & B. Products Corporation in the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid by the sale in interstate commerce as aforesaid of the products of the James Clark Distilling Corporation containing the word "distilling" on the labels attached to the bottles in which it sells and ships the said products, printed on its stationery, in its advertising, and in various other ways represent to customers and furnish them with a means of representing to their vendees, both retailers and the ultimate consuming public, that the said whiskies, gins, and the other spirituous beverages therein contained, were by the James Clark Distilling Corporation aforesaid, produced through an original and continuous process of distillation from mash, wort, or wash, through continuous closed pipes and vessels until the manufacture thereof was complete, when as a matter of fact the respondent, James Clark Distilling Corporation, is not a distiller and does not distill the said whiskies, gins, or other spirituous beverages by it so bottled and labeled and by it and the respondent, D. & B. Products Corporation so sold and transported, and merely by the use of stills as aforesaid in the rectification of alcoholic spirits by redistillation over juniper berries and other aromatics, respondent, James Clark Distilling Corporation, does not distill the gins by it so bottled and labeled and by both respondents so sold and transported, in the sense in which the word "distilled" is commonly accepted and understood by those engaged in the liquor trade and the public. The respondent James Clark Distilling Corporation is a rectifier of alcoholic liquors and does not own, operate or control any place or places where such beverages are produced by the process of distillation from mash, wort, or wash as aforesaid and respondent, D. & B. Products Corporation is solely engaged in the business of selling the alcoholic beverages aforesaid.

PAR. 4. There are among the competitors of respondents engaged in the sale of spirituous beverages as mentioned in paragraph 1 hereof corporations, firms, partnerships, and individuals who manufacture and distill from mash, wort, or wash whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages sold by them and who truthfully use the words "distillery," "distilleries," "distillers," or "distilling" as a part of their corporate or trade names and on their stationery and advertising, and on the labels of the bottles in which they sell and ship such products. There are also among such competitors corporations, firms, partnerships, and individuals engaged in the business of rectifying, blending, and bottling whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages who do not use the words "distillery," "distilleries," "distilling," or "distillers" as a part of their corporate or trade names, nor on their stationery and advertising, nor on the labels attached to the bottles in which they sell and ship their said products.

PAR. 5. The representation by respondents as set forth in paragraph 3 hereof, is calculated to and has a capacity and tendency to and does mislead and deceive dealers and the purchasing public into the belief that the whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages sold by the respondents are manufactured and distilled by James Clark Distilling Corporation from mash, wort, or wash, and is calculated to and has the capacity and tendency to and does induce dealers and the purchasing public, acting in such belief, to purchase the whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages rectified, blended, bottled, and sold as aforesaid thereby diverting trade to the respondents from their competitors who do not by their corporate or trade names or in any other manner misrepresent that they are manufacturers by distillation from mash, wort, or wash as aforesaid of whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages, and thereby respondents do substantial injury to substantial competition in interstate commerce.

PAR. 6. The acts and things above alleged to have been done and the false representations alleged to have been made by respondents are to the prejudice of the public and the competitors of respondents and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914.

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent, James Clark Distilling Corporation, is a corporation organized, existing, and doing business under the laws of the State of New Jersey, having its principal office and place of business at 26 Exchange Place in Jersey City, in the said State. Respondent D. & B. Products Corporation is a corporation organized, existing, and doing business in and under the laws of the State of New Jersey with its principal office and place of business at 26 Exchange Place, Jersey City in said State. Both respondents are subsidiaries or affiliates of Distillers and Brewers Corporation of America, a holding corporation incorporated under the laws of the State of Delaware in June 1932 and all three corporations aforesaid have interlocking officers and directors. Respondent, James Clark Distilling Corporation, is now and since its organization in August 1933 has been engaged in the business of purchasing, rectifying, blending, and bottling whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages, and in the sale thereof to the respondent, D. & B. Products Corporation aforesaid. The D. & B. Products Corporation and the James Clark Distilling Corporation, by the D. & B. Products Corporation, its distributing and selling agent, are now and since their organizations have been engaged in the sale of said products in constant course of trade and commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia. In the course and conduct of their said businesses they cause their said products when sold to be transported from their places of business in Jersey City aforesaid, into and through various States of the United States to the purchasers thereof, consisting of wholesalers and retailers, some located within the State of New Jersey and some located in other States of the United States and the District of Columbia. In the course and conduct of their businesses aforesaid, respondents are now and for more than one year last past have been in substantial competition with other corporations and with individuals, partnerships, and firms engaged in the manufacture by original and continuous distillation from mash, wort, or wash of whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages and in the sale thereof in constant course of trade and commerce between and among the various States of the United States and the District of Columbia; and in the course and conduct of their businesses as aforesaid, respondents are and have been for more than one year last past in substantial competition with other corporations and with individuals, partnerships, and firms engaged in the business of purchasing, rectifying, blending, and bottling whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages and in the sale thereof in constant course of trade and commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PARS. 2, 3, 4, and 5. As grounds for these paragraphs of this complaint, the Federal Trade Commission relies upon the matters and things set out in paragraphs 2, 3, 4, and 5 of count 1 of this complaint to the same extent as though the several allegations thereof were set out at length and in separate paragraphs herein, and the said paragraphs 2, 3, 4, and 5 of count 1 of this complaint are incorporated herein by reference and adopted as the allegations of paragraphs 2, 3, 4, and 5, respectively, of this count, and are hereby charged as fully and as completely as though the several averments of the said paragraphs of count 1 were separately set out and repeated verbatim.

PAR. 6. Under and pursuant to Title I of the National Industrial Recovery Act, approved June 16, 1933, (48 Stat. 195 C. 90), the President of the United States, by Executive Order No. 6182, of June 26, 1933, as supplemented by Executive Order No. 6207, of July 21, 1933, and Executive Order No. 6345, of October 20, 1933, delegated to H. A. Wallace as Secretary of Agriculture certain of the powers vested in the President of the United States by the aforesaid act.

Under and pursuant to the delegation of such powers, the said Secretary of Agriculture pursuant to Section 3(d) of the act and Executive orders under the act, upon his own motion presented a Code of Fair Competition for the Distilled Spirits Rectifying Industry after due notice and opportunity for hearing in connection therewith had been afforded interested parties, including respondent, in accordance with Title I of the National Industrial Recovery Act and applicable regulations issued thereunder, to the President of the United States who approved the same on the 9th day of December 1933, thereby constituting the said code a Code of Fair Competition within the meaning of the said National Industrial Recovery Act, for the regulation of the aforesaid industry.

In his written report to the President, the said Secretary of Agriculture made, among others, the following findings with respect to the said code in the following words, to wit:

That said Code will tend to effectuate the declared policy of Title I of the National Industrial Recovery Act as set forth in Section 1 of said Act in that the terms and provisions of such Code tend: (a) to remove obstructions to the free flow of foreign commerce, which tend to diminish the amount thereof; (b) to provide for the general welfare by promoting the organization of industry for the purposes of cooperative action among trade groups; (c) to eliminate unfair competitive practices; (d) to promote the fullest possible utilization of the present productive capacity of industries; (e) to avoid undue restriction of production (except as may be temporarily required); (f) to increase the consumption of industrial and agricultural products by increasing purchasing power; and (g) otherwise to rehabilitate industry.

By his approval of the said Code on December 9, 1933, the President of the United States, pursuant to the authority vested in him by Title I of the National Industrial Recovery Act aforesaid, made and issued his certain written Executive order, wherein he adopted and approved the report, recommendations and findings of the said Secretary of Agriculture, and ordered that the said Code of Fair Competition be, and the same thereby was approved, and by virtue of the National Industrial Recovery Act aforesaid, the following provision of Article V of said Code became and still is one of the standards of fair competition for the Distilled Spirits Rectifying Industry and is binding upon every member of said Industry and this respondent:

The following practices constitute unfair methods of competition and shall not be engaged in by any member of the industry:

SECTION 1. False Advertising.—To publish or disseminate in any manner any false advertisement of any rectified product. Any advertisement shall be deemed to be false if it is untrue in any particular, or if directly or by ambiguity, omission, or inference it tends to create a misleading impression.

PAR. 7. The use by respondents as aforesaid of the word "distilling" in the corporate name of James Clark Distilling Corporation, on stationery, advertising, and labels attached to the bottles in which the products of such corporation are sold and shipped and in various other ways, constitutes false advertising within the meaning of the aforesaid provision of Article V and tends to and does create the misleading impression that the whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages so sold by respondents are manufactured and distilled by the respondent, James Clark Distilling Corporation from mash, wort or wash as aforesaid and that the respondent, James Clark Distilling Corporation is engaged in the business of distilling spirits from mash, wort or wash as aforesaid and that the spirituous beverages by respondents so sold and transported have been prepared and bottled by the distillers thereof, all contrary to the provisions of Section 1, Article V of the Code aforesaid.

PAR. 8. The above alleged methods, acts, and practices of the respondents are and have been in violation of the standard of fair competition for the Distilled Spirits Rectifying Industry of the United States. Such violation of such standard in the aforesaid transactions in interstate commerce and other transactions which affect interstate commerce in the manner set forth in paragraph 5 of count 1 hereof, are in violation of Section 3 of Title I of the National Industrial Recovery Act and they are unfair methods of competition in commerce within the meaning of the Federal Trade Commission Act as amended.

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission on May 24, 1935, issued and on May 25, 1936 served its complaint in this proceeding upon the respondents, James Clark Distilling Corporation and D. & B. Products Corporation, charging them with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of the provisions of said act. After the issuance of said complaint and the filing of respondents' answer thereto, testimony and other evidence in support of the allegations of the said complaint were introduced by PGad B. Morehouse and DeWitt T. Puckett, attorneys for the Commission, before John L. Hornor, an examiner of the Commission theretofore duly designated by it, and in opposition to the allegations of the complaint by Mortimer S. Gordon, Max J. Miller, and Herman E. Keller, attorneys for the respondents, and said testimony and other evidence were duly recorded and filed in the office of the Commission. Thereafter, the proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on the said complaint, the answer thereto, testimony and other evidence and brief in support of the complaint, brief in opposition thereto and oral arguments of counsel aforesaid having been waived; and the Commission having duly considered the same and being now fully advised in the premises finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public, and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. The respondent, James Clark Distilling Corporation, is a corporation organized, existing and doing business under the laws of the State of Delaware, licensed to do business in the State of New Jersey and having its principal office and place of business at 26 Exchange Place, Jersey City, in the State of New Jersey.

The respondent, D. & B. Products Corporation, is a corporation organized, existing, and doing business in and under the laws of the State of New Jersey, with its principal office and place of business at the same address aforesaid.

Both respondents are subsidiaries or affiliates of the Distillers and Brewers Corporation of America, a holding corporation, incorporated under the laws of the State of Delaware in June, 1933, and all three corporations aforesaid are under common control through stock ownership.

The respondent, James Clark Distilling Corporation, is now, and since its organization in August 1933, has been, engaged in the business of purchasing, rectifying, blending, and bottling whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages, and in the sale thereof through the agency of the other respondent, D. & B. Products Corporation.

The D. & B. Products Corporation and the James Clark Distilling Corporation, by the D. & B. Products Corporation, its distributing and selling agent, are now and since their organization have been engaged in the sale of said products in constant course of trade and commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia. In the course and conduct of their said businesses they cause their said products when sold to be transported from their places of business in Jersey City aforesaid, into and through various States of the United States to the purchasers thereof, consisting of wholesalers and retailers, some located within the State of New Jersey and some located in other States of the United States and the District of Columbia. In the course and conduct of their businesses aforesaid, respondents are now and for more than one year last past have been in substantial competition with other corporations and with individuals, partnerships, and firms engaged in the manufacture by original and continuous distillation from mash, wort, or wash of whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages and in the sale thereof in constant course of trade and commerce between and among the various States of the United States and the District of Columbia; and in the course and conduct of their businesses as aforesaid, respondents are and have been for more than one year last past in substantial competition with other corporations and with individuals, partnerships, and firms engaged in the business of purchasing, rectifying, blending, and bottling whiskies, gins and other spirituous beverages and in the sale thereof in constant course of trade and commerce between and among the various States of the United States and the District of Columbia.

Respondent James Clark Distilling Corporation received Permit No. R-24 from the Federal Alcohol Control Administration January 10, 1934, to engage in the distilled spirits rectifying industry, which said permit became and was invalidated August 29, 1935, by reason of the passage of the Federal Alcohol Administration Act (49 Stat. 977), and since November 23, 1935, it has done the same kind of business under a permit of the same number issued by the Federal Alcohol Administration.

In April of 1934, James H. Cocks, a consulting engineer specializing in the construction of distilleries, and himself a distiller of about 40 years' experience, was employed by respondent James Clark Distilling Corporation to supervise the distillation of 3,210 barrels of whiskey at the Seagram Distillery No. 1, at Lawrenceburg, Ind., under a formula prepared by him, and he did so, inspecting the quality of the grains used and the entire fermenting up until the whiskey was drawn off in barrels, the barrels being marked and branded with said respondent's name. The first day's mash was made April 9, 1934, and this order was completed on the 28th or 30th of April 1934. Of this whiskey, 3,116 barrels were used by the respondent in its distilled spirits rectifying plant between April of 1934 and February of 1936.

On January 28, 1936, pursuant to a previous application filed October 25, 1935, a distiller's basic permit No. D-697 was issued under the Federal Alcohol Administration Act and Regulations to the respondent, James Clark Distilling Corporation, authorizing it to engage in the business of distilling whiskey at "Old 31" East Turnpike, Bardstown, Ky., under lease of the distillery of the Tom Moore Distilling Company. Under contract, the terms of which are hereinafter set forth, with the aforesaid distillery, and between the months of February and May 1936, there was produced by the Tom Moore Distilleries, in the name of James Clark Distilling Corporation, a total of 358,370.54 proof gallons of whiskey, none of which at the time of the hearings had been withdrawn or used by respondent in its business, it being desired to leave it in storage for the purpose of aging. This whiskey is in barrels or kegs bearing respondent's corporate name.

Respondent's sales volume is approximately three and one-half million dollars per year, and averages approximately 700,000 gallons of spirituous beverages annually, all of which is sold through the medium of the other respondent, D. and B. Products Corporation, as aforesaid.

The whiskey which was produced at the Tom Moore Distilleries, as aforesaid, was produced under an agreement in writing, dated August 20, 1935, between respondent and the said distilling company, which agreement, in substance, provided as follows:

Whereas on the 2d day of August, 1935, the parties hereto entered into a certain agreement whereby Tom Moore agreed to manufacture and sell to James Clark, and James Clark agreed to purchase specific quantities of manufactured distillations of certain whiskey to be manufactured by the Tom Moore Bardstown Distillery, and

Whereas James Clark is desirous of having the said whiskey manufactured by Tom Moore under the name of James Clark, now, therefore, in consideration of the sum of $10 and other good and valuable consideration in hand paid to the other by the parties hereto, the receipt of which is hereby acknowledged, the parties hereto mutually agree as follows:

(1) Whiskey to be manufactured and sold by Tom Moore to James Clark pursuant to the contract between said parties dated the 2d day of August, 1935, shall be manufactured and sold to James Clark as whiskey manufactured in the name of James Clark and all barrels of his whiskey shall be marked and branded by Tom Moore in accordance with the Internal Revenue Laws, in such a manner as to indicate the name of James Clark as the actual distiller thereof.

(2) James Clark agrees to apply to the State of Kentucky for the issuance to it of a distiller's permit in order to effectuate the distillation of whiskey by Tom Moore, in the name of James Clark, and James Clark further agrees to obtain from the United States Treasury Department and/or the latter's appropriate bureau the necessary distiller's permit and authority to have such whiskeys manufactured by Tom Moore in the name of James Clark and agrees to file with the said United States Treasury Department all necessary documents and bonds required in order to effectuate the same.

(3) Tom Moore hereby agrees to pay to James Clark no later than 60 days from the date hereof the sum of $500, the same representing a reimbursement to James Clark of one-half of the Kentucky State distiller's permit fee of $1,000 paid to the State of Kentucky by James Clark.

(4) Tom Moore hereby agrees to use his best efforts in assisting James Clark, its agents or representatives, in procuring the aforesaid distiller's permits from the State of Kentucky and the United States Treasury Department.

(5) Tom Moore hereby covenants and agrees that it will save harmless James Clark as the preceding distiller against any and all manner of liability and/or claims, suits, actions, damages, charges, and/or expenses (including attorney and counsel fees) that may be asserted, alleged, or created by any person, firm, or corporation against James Clark individually or jointly with others, by reason of the manufacture by Tom Moore and/or James Clark as superseding distiller, of any whiskey in the name of James Clark, at the Tom Moore Bardstown, Kentucky, distillery, and Tom Moore further covenants and agrees that it will cause to be effected at its own expense and with responsible insurance companies sufficient insurance to cover all distilling and manufacturing operations at its Bardstown distillery as will adequately inure to the benefit of James Clark as superseding distiller, and by reason of the manufacture of such whiskey in the name of James Clark, and by way of specification but not in limitation thereof, said insurance shall include coverage against workmen's compensation, general accident and public liability, fire, explosions of boilers, and theft, burglary, robbery, and elevator.

(6) It is definitely understood and agreed by and between the parties hereto that this memorandum of agreement shall not in any manner be considered to be in limitation or modification of the agreement between the parties hereto dated the 2d day of August, 1935, and it is definitely understood that this memorandum of agreement is intended to supplement the aforesaid agreement, and it is not intended for any other purpose.

In witness whereof the parties hereto have hereunto set their hands and seals this 26th day of August, 1935.

The agreement of August 2, 1935, referred to in the above agreement, was an agreement between Tom Moore Distillery, therein referred to as the "manufacturer," and James Clark Distilling Corporation, therein referred to as the "purchaser," whereby Tom Moore Distillery agreed to manufacture in bond for the account of James Clark during the months of August, September, October, November and December of 1935, 2,500 barrels of full-bodied straight Kentucky bourbon whiskey, setting approximately 125,000 gallons to conform to the standards of identity theretofore promulgated by the Federal Alcohol Administration. The agreement provided for the Tom Moore Distillery to pay the State of Kentucky a production tax, and if the said tax should be increased during the term of the contract, the increase was to be paid by the James Clark Distilling Company. The price included the State of Kentucky production tax.

The agreement also provided for the Tom Moore Distillery to furnish to the James Clark Distilling Corporation promptly at the manufacture of the aforementioned whiskey negotiable warehouse receipts representing 500 barrels of whiskey distilled during the then current month, said warehouse receipts to be issued in the name of James Clark Distilling Corporation, in such respective denominations as it might select.

The agreement further provided for the whiskey to be stored by the Tom Moore Distillery, the warehouse storage charges accrued to be paid by the James Clark Distilling Corporation upon withdrawal from the bonded warehouse, and the said whiskey was at James Clark's expense insured while the same was stored in the Tom Moore Distillery's bonded warehouse, except that the distillery agreed to insure the whiskey from the time it entered into bond up to the first day of the next succeeding month, which insurance furnished by the distillery was to inure to the benefit of the James Clark Distilling Corporation.

Findings

The agreement provided that the Tom Moore Distillery warranted that the whiskey made by it would be all Kentucky straight bourbon whiskey made from good sound grain, containing at least 21 percent small grain, properly mashed, and distilled in accordance with the formula to be furnished by the James Clark Distilling Corporation.

The fact of these arrangements was received in evidence subject to a later check by the Commission of the official records of the Alcohol Tax Unit and the Federal Alcohol Administration Divisions of the United States Treasury Department. Such subsequent check showed, and the Commission finds, that this respondent's basic permit D-697 was cancelled on December 28, 1936.

A check of said records also shows, and the Commission finds, that during April of 1934, the production and operation, above referred to, of Seagram Distillery No. 1, at Lawrenceburg, Indiana, was by Joseph E. Seagram & Sons Corporation, operating during that month under the name and style of James Clark Distilling Corporation, which was legally permissible arrangement. This respondent, however, filed no notice of intention to distill, no bond, application, or other document to qualify as a distiller under the Internal Revenue laws and was not at that time so qualified. Neither did it apply for, or receive, a basic distiller's permit from the former Federal Alcohol Control Administration under the then existing laws and regulations.

PAR. 2. Upon the premises of respondent James Clark Distilling Corporation are one or more stills used for the production of gin by a process of rectification whereby tax-paid alcohol, purchased but not produced by respondent, is distilled over juniper berries and other aromatics. This gin constitutes approximately 10 percent of this respondent's total rectifying business.

A method generally used in this country of producing so-called distilled gin is to redistill either purchased or manufactured alcohol over juniper berries and other aromatics usually used in the production of gin and this gin derives its main characteristic flavor from the juniper berries. The purchasing public has no preference in gins by reason of the method of manufacture as it is possible to make gin of equivalent quality by processes of original distillation, redistillation, or compounding. The public preference is predicated solely on the quality of the ingredients and the skill and reputation of the manufacturer insofar as the gin itself is concerned.

Rectifying, in the distilled spirits rectifying industry, means the mixing of whiskies of different ages and types, or the mixing of ages or types, or the mixing of other ingredients with whiskies, but reducing proof of whiskey by adding water is not rectifying. Rectifiers also blend whiskies with neutral spirits (grain alcohol). Some rectifiers blend it with cane.

Many distillers operate a separate establishment 600 feet or more away from their distilleries, known as a rectifying plant, wherein they operate in the same manner as described above for a rectifier, sometimes exclusively with spirits of their own distillation and often with spirits purchased from other distillers, or both. Some distilleries have a tax-paid bottling room on the distillery bonded premises, wherein their distilled spirits are bottled straight as they come from the still or in a bonded warehouse after aging or after reduction of proof. Any rectifying done by a distiller, however, must be done in his rectifying plant under his rectifier's permit. On all bottled liquors, whether bottled at the distillery rectifying plant or any other rectifying plant, appear the words "bottled" or "blended," as the case may be, "by the ----- Company." If the distilled spirits therein contained are bottled by a distiller, in his distillery, or are spirits of his own distillation bottled in his rectifying plant as straight whiskey, the distiller may and does on said bottles, put "distilled and bottled by ----- Company." Finally, blown in the bottom of each bottle is a symbol, consisting of a letter followed by a number, identifying the bottler. For instance, there is a "D" for a distiller and an "R" for a rectifier. The number following the said letter corresponds with the distiller's or rectifier's basic permit. Thus, "R-24" designates the James Clark Distilling Corporation, a rectifier. A distiller who also operates a rectifying plant and who has both kinds of permits may use either symbol, depending upon whether the liquor contained in the bottle was produced and bottled under a distiller's or a rectifier's permit.

The James Clark Distilling Corporation does not now and never has produced or manufactured distilled spirits of any kind from mash, wort, or wash, although its charter did authorize it to do so and although between January 28, 1936 and December 28, 1936, it was the holder of a basic distiller's permit, a warehousing and bottling permit, and otherwise qualified to own, operate, and control a place where spirituous liquors were so produced. The Commission finds that the so-called lease arrangements of August 2, 1935, and the subsequent modification thereof dated August 26, 1935, constituted a contract for the purchase by respondent of distilled spirits manufactured pursuant to such arrangement by the Tom Moore Distillery, and that during such period of time this respondent did not operate, own, or control a distillery, and was not a distilling company in the sense or significance in which such terms are generally understood in the trade and by a substantial portion of the consuming public.

Section 3247 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. C. A. Title 26, Sec. 1158 (a)) Regulating Internal Revenue defines a "distiller" as follows:

Every person who produces distilled spirits or who brews or makes a mash, wort, or wash fit for distillation or for the production of spirits, or who, by any process of evaporation, separates alcoholic spirits from any substance, or who, making or keeping, mash, wort or wash, has also in his possession or use a still, shall be regarded as a distiller.

Section 3244 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. C. A. Tit. 26, Sec. 1398 (f)) defines a "rectifier" as follows:

Every person who rectifies, purifies, or refines distilled spirits or wine by any process other than by original and continuous distillation from mash, wort, or wash, through continuous enclosed vessels or pipes, until the manufacture thereof is complete, and every wholesaler and liquor dealer who has in his possession any still or leach tub, or who keeps any other apparatus for the purpose of refining in any manner distilled spirits, and every person who without rectifying, purifying, or refining distilled spirits shall, by mixing such spirits, wine, or other liquor with any materials, manufacture any spurious imitation, or compound liquors for sale under the name of whiskey, brandy, gin, rum, wine spirits, cordials, or wine bitters, or any other name, shall be regarded as a rectifier, and that being engaged in the business of rectifying, etc.

The rectification of alcoholic spirits by this respondent as aforesaid in the production of its gin, does not make or constitute respondent a distiller or a distilling company as defined by Sec. 3247 of the Revised Statutes of the United States regulating Internal Revenue.

PAR. 3. The testimony of those having long experience in both the distilled spirits rectifying industry and the distilling industry, established, and the Commission finds, that the foregoing rectification of alcoholic spirits by redistillation over juniper berries and other aromatics in the production of gin does not make or constitute this respondent a distilling company in the sense commonly understood by the liquor industry. There were also called a large number of witnesses who were lay-members of the purchasing public, and with few exceptions, their testimony was to the effect, and the Commission also finds it to be a fact, that by such terms as "distilling" or "distillery" or "distiller" when used in the trade or corporate name of a concern handling alcoholic beverages, the public understands that that concern is engaged in the initial distilling process of producing spirituous or alcoholic beverages from fermented grain or mash, and that they have a preference for a distillery bottled package over one bottled by a rectifier.

The Commission finds that for a long period of time the word "distilling" when used in connection with the liquor industry and with the products thereof has had and still has a definite significance and meaning to the minds of wholesalers and retailers in such industry and to the ultimate purchasing public, to wit, the manufacturing of spirituous liquors by an original and continuous distillation from mash, wort, or wash, through continuous closed pipes and vessels until the manufacture thereof is complete, and a substantial portion of the purchasing public prefers to buy spirituous liquors bottled and prepared by distillers.

PAR. 4. In the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid by the use of the word "distilling" in the corporate name of James Clark Distilling Corporation printed on stationery, catalogs, and on the labels attached to the bottles in which respondents sell and ship these said products, and in various other ways, respondents represent to their customers and furnish them with the means of representing to their vendees, both retailers and the ultimate consuming public, that respondent James Clark Distilling Corporation, is a distiller and that the said whiskies, gins, cordials, brandies, and other alcoholic beverages therein contained were by said respondent manufactured through the process of distillation from mash, wort, or wash, when, as a matter of fact, James Clark Distilling Corporation is not a distiller, does not distill the said whiskies, gins, and other alcoholic beverages by respondents so bottled, labeled, sold, and transported, and, merely by the use of a still operated as aforesaid in the production of gin, James Clark Distilling Corporation does not distill the whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages by respondents so bottled, labeled, sold, and transported in the sense in which the word "distilled" is commonly accepted and understood by those engaged in the liquor trade and the public. Neither respondent owns, operates, or controls any place or places where spirituous beverages are manufactured by a process of original and continuous distillation from mash, wort, or wash.

PAR. 5. There are among the competitors of respondents engaged in the sale of spirituous beverages as mentioned in paragraph 1 hereof corporations, firms, partnerships, and individuals who manufacture and distill from mash, wort, or wash, whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages sold by them and who truthfully use the words "distillery," "distilleries," "distillers," or "distilling" as a part of their corporate or trade names and on their stationery, catalogs, and on the labels of the bottles in which they sell and ship such products. There are also among such competitors corporations, firms, partnerships, and individuals engaged in the business of purchasing, rectifying, blending, bottling, and selling whiskies, gins, and other alcoholic beverages who do not use the words "distillery," "distilleries," "distilling," or "distillers" as a part of their corporate or trade names, nor on their stationery, catalogs, advertising, nor on the labels attached to the bottles in which they sell and ship their said products.

PAR. 6. The representations by respondents, as set forth in paragraph 4 hereof, have the capacity and tendency to and do mislead and deceive dealers and the purchasing public into the beliefs that respondent James Clark Distilling Corporation is a distiller or distilling company in the ordinarily accepted sense of those terms, and that the whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages sold by respondents are manufactured or distilled by James Clark Distilling Corporation from mash, wort, or wash by one continuous process, and have the capacity and tendency to and do induce dealers and the purchasing public, acting in such beliefs, to purchase the whiskies, gins, and other alcoholic beverages rectified and bottled by the respondent James Clark Distilling Corporation. The Commission finds that the whole situation in this industry is such that the foregoing representations have a distinct tendency to give respondents what amounts to unfair competitive advantage over those of their competitors who do not, by the use of such terms in their trade or corporate names, represent that the package of alcoholic liquor offered to the retailer and in turn to the consumers, is a distillery-bottled package and this in turn tends to divert trade to respondents from such competitors and thereby respondents do substantial injury to competition in interstate commerce.

PAR. 7. Because of existing regulations promulgated under the Federal Alcohol Administration Act approved August 29, 1935 (49 Stat. 977), providing that rectifiers who redistill purchased alcohol over juniper berries and other aromatics may label such resulting product "Distilled Gin," and requiring that the labels state who distilled it, the Commission has excepted gins produced by respondent James Clark Distilling Corporation by redistillation of alcohol over juniper berries and other aromatics from the prohibitions of its order.

PAR. 8. The Commission's complaint in this case was issued on the same day as the decision of the United States Supreme Court in the case of A. L. A. Schechter Poultry Corporation, et al. vs. United States (295 U. S. 495), and contained two counts. Count 1 specifically charged a violation of the Federal Trade Commission Act, and count 2 charged that the practices of respondent, as hereinbefore set out, were unfair methods within the meaning of the Federal Trade Commission Act because they were in violation of Section 3 of Title I of the National Industrial Recovery Act, which was invalidated by the aforesaid decision. For that reason the Commission is dismissing the complaint as to count 2 thereof.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondents, James Clark Distilling Corporation and D. & B. Products Corporation, are to the prejudice of the public and of respondents' competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce, within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

It is ordered, That the respondents, James Clark Distilling Corporation and D. & B. Products Corporation, their officers, representatives, agents, and employees, in connection with the offering for sale or sale and distribution by them in interstate commerce or in the District of Columbia of whiskies, gins, or other spirituous beverages (except gins produced by them through a process of rectification whereby alcohol purchased but not produced by respondents is redistilled over juniper berries and other aromatics) do cease and desist from:

Representing, through the use of the word "distilling" in the corporate name of respondent James Clark Distilling Corporation, on all stationery, advertising, or labels attached to the bottles in which the James Clark Distilling Corporation products are sold and shipped, or in any other way by word or words of like import, (a) that James Clark Distilling Corporation is a distiller of whiskies, gins, or other spirituous beverages; or (b) that the said whiskies, gins, or other spirituous beverages were by James Clark Distilling Corporation manufactured through the process of distillation; or (c) that James Clark Distilling Corporation owns, operates or controls a place or places where any such products are by it manufactured by a process of original and continuous distillation from mash, wort or wash, through continuous closed pipes and vessels until the manufacture thereof is completed, unless and until James Clark Distilling Corporation shall actually own, operate, or control such a place or places.

It is further ordered, That the said complaint be, and the same hereby is, dismissed as to count 2 thereof.

It is further ordered, That the said respondents, within 60 days from and after the date of the service upon them of this order, shall file with the Commission a report or reports in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which they are complying and have complied with the order to cease and desist hereinabove set forth.

I. S. U. RANK AND FILE GROUP, ET AL.

COMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION
OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 26, 1914

Docket 2694. Complaint, Aug. 1, 1936¹—Decision, June 29, 1937

Where a union, known as the International Seamen's Union, with some 60,000 members scattered along the Atlantic, Pacific, and Gulf coasts and the Great Lakes, had long engaged in the regular publication and circulation of an official paper known as the "Seamen's Journal," and letters "I. S. U." through their use by said union and its local branches, had become known and understood by aforesaid and other unions and by the general public as initials for said union and as a designation thereof; and thereafter, various individual members of I. S. U. Rank and File Group, and groups and organizations thus indicated, and a corporation—

Made use of designation "I. S. U. Pilot" for a periodical sold and solicited, in competition with such "Seamen's Journal," by aforesaid individuals, acting personally and through and by said groups, notwithstanding fact said groups were not committees of the International Seamen's Union, and aforesaid "I. S. U. Pilot" was not publication of said union;

With capacity and tendency, through such unauthorized use of name "I. S. U. Pilot," to mislead and deceive members of aforesaid union, and members of other labor unions and purchasing public, into the beliefs that periodical in question was a publication of said union and into purchase of same in such erroneous beliefs, and with result that trade was thereby diverted to said individuals and groups from their competitors, who do not mislead and deceive, and have not misled and deceived, purchasing public by such misuse of name for their publications; to the substantial injury of substantial competition in commerce:

Held, That such acts and practices were to the prejudice of the public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition.

Complaint

Rank and File Group, I. S. U. Rank and File Members, Rank and File Committee of the I. S. U., Rank and File International Seamen's Union, hereinafter referred to as respondent associations, James L. Reamey, Charles Rubin, Mrs. Charles Rubin, Watson Myers, Joseph Curran, Louis Weinstock, Abraham Baskoff, Richard M. Kroon, Frank Mozer, John Anderson, William Allen, Elmer Johnson, Robert Brown, Harry Bridges, David Gordon, Elmer Brown, Ben Gerjoy, Dora Zucker, Luigi Genovese, A. W. McPherson, E. Crews, Albert Fleming, and Charles B. Killinger, hereinafter referred to as respondent individuals, and the Uptown Cooperative Press, Inc., have been and now are using unfair methods of competition in commerce as "commerce" is defined in said act, and it appearing to the Commission that proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its amended complaint, stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Each and every one of the respondent associations, "I. S. U. Rank and File Group," "I. S. U. Rank and File Members," "Rank and File Committee of the I. S. U.," and "Rank and File International Seamen's Union," is an unincorporated, voluntary association of persons, having its principal office and place of business at 1 Union Square, New York City, in the State of New York. Respondent individuals, James L. Reamey, Charles Rubin, Mrs. Charles Rubin, Watson Myers, Joseph Curran, Louis Weinstock, Abraham Baskoff, Elmer Brown, Ben Gerjoy, Dora Zucker, all of the city of New York, State of New York; Richard M. Kroon, William Allen, both of the city of Detroit, State of Michigan; Frank Mozer and Albert Fleming, both of the city of Philadelphia, State of Pennsylvania; E. Crews and A. W. McPherson, both of the city of Pittsburgh, State of Pennsylvania; Robert Brown of the city of Butte, State of Montana; Harry Bridges, of the city of San Francisco, State of California; John Anderson of the city of Washington, District of Columbia; Elmer Johnson of the city of Chicago, State of Illinois; David Gordon of Middle Village, Long Island, State of New York; Luigi Genovese of the city of Rochester, State of New York; Charles B. Killinger of the city of Flint, State of Michigan; and other persons whose names or addresses are known, are members of each and every one of the respondent associations and compose committees for the purpose of supervising and directing all of the activities of all the said respondent associations, including the publication and distribution by them of the "I. S. U. Pilot," a weekly paper, the "I. S. U. Guide," the "Union Seaman," and "The Pilot." The Uptown Cooperative Press, Inc., with office and place of business at 347 East 72nd Street, New York City, N. Y., is a corporation duly organized and existing under the laws of the State of New York, prints the said publications for the other respondents.

One of the principal purposes for the organization of the respondent associations by the respondent individuals was and is the publication by respondent individuals and respondent associations of the aforesaid paper and magazines called by them "The I. S. U. Pilot," "The I. S. U. Guide," "The Union Seaman," and "The Pilot," all of which said publications have been represented therein and are still being represented therein by the respondent individuals and respondent associations as being published by one or another of such respondent associations.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of the business of publishing and circulating the aforesaid magazines, "The I. S. U. Pilot," "The I. S. U. Guide," "The Union Seaman," and "The Pilot," the respondent individuals and their associates in the respondent associations, acting personally and through and by the aforesaid respondent associations, sell and solicit the sale of the aforesaid paper and magazines between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia, and cause copies of the aforesaid publications when sold, to be transported from the place of their publication and the principal place of business of the respondent associations in New York City, and from branch offices in Baltimore, New Orleans, Philadelphia, and other cities, to the purchasers of such copies, some located in the States of New York, Pennsylvania, Maryland, and Louisiana, and others located in various other States of the United States, and there is now and has been for more than one year last past a constant current of trade and commerce carried on by the respondent associations, respondent individuals and the Uptown Cooperative Press, Inc., in such paper and magazines between and among the various States of the United States.

In the course and conduct of their business the respondent associations, the individual respondents and their associate members of said associations, and the Uptown Cooperative Press, Inc., are now and for more than one year last past have been in substantial competition with other associations and individuals, and with corporations, firms, and partnerships engaged in the sale of papers and magazines between and among the various States of the United States. Among such competitors is the International Seamen's Union of America, hereinafter described, which now and for more than one year last past has published a monthly magazine known as the "Seamen's Journal," hereinafter described.

Complaint

PAR. 3. The International Seamen's Union of America, an unincorporated association, was organized in the United States in 1892. It is composed of mariners, seamen, and other shipping employees, with local unions and branches in the principal seacoast, lake, bay, and river ports of the United States. It has become known and has been referred to for more than twenty years last past as the "I. S. U." The initials "I. S. U.," through their use by the International Seamen's Union of America, by its local unions and branches in the various cities in the United States are now and for more than one year last past have been known and understood by the International Seamen's Union of America, its local unions and branches, the members thereof and by the general public, to mean and designate and as another name of the aforesaid International Seamen's Union of America.

The International Seamen's Union of America has since 1892 published monthly as its official magazine the "Seamen's Journal," which has had and still has a wide circulation throughout the various States of the United States.

PAR. 4. The aforesaid use by the respondents of the names "I. S. U. Rank and File Group," "I. S. U. Rank and File Members," "Rank and File Committee of the I. S. U.," "Rank and File International Seamen's Union," and of the names of said publications, "The I. S. U. Pilot," "The I. S. U. Guide," "The Union Seaman," and "The Pilot" has been and is without the authority or sanction of the aforesaid International Seamen's Union of America and the use of such names has a capacity and tendency to mislead and deceive members of the International Seamen's Union of America and the purchasing public into the beliefs that the respondent associations are committees of the aforesaid International Seamen's Union of America, that their activities are sanctioned by the aforesaid International Seamen's Union of America and that the aforesaid publications, "The I. S. U. Pilot," "The I. S. U. Guide," "The Union Seaman," and "The Pilot," are publications of the International Seamen's Union of America, and to induce them into purchasing the aforesaid "I. S. U. Pilot," "I. S. U. Guide," "Union Seaman," and "The Pilot," in such erroneous beliefs; thereby trade is diverted by respondent associations and respondent individuals from their competitors who do not by the use of false and misleading names for their publications or by the use of false and misleading names for associations, mislead and deceive the purchasing public. Thereby substantial injury is done by respondent associations and respondent individuals to competition in interstate commerce.

PAR. 5. The above alleged acts and practices of the respondent association and the respondent individuals are to the prejudice of the public and to the competitors of the said respondents, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914.

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, on August 1, 1936, issued and served its amended complaint in this proceeding upon respondents James L. Reamey, Joseph Curran, Louis Weinstock, Abraham Baskoff, Richard M. Kroon, John Anderson, William Allen, Elmer Johnson, Robert Brown, Harry Bridges, David Gordon, Elmer Brown, Doris Zucker, Luigi Genovese, A. W. McPherson, Albert Fleming, Charles B. Killinger, and Uptown Cooperative Press, Inc., charging them with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of the provisions of said act. None of the served respondents answered, but all were in default and none appeared or offered any testimony. Thereafter, testimony and other evidence in support of the allegations of said amended complaint were introduced by William T. Chantland, attorney for the Commission, before John L. Hornor, an examiner of the Commission theretofore duly designated by it, and said testimony and other evidence in support of the allegations of the amended complaint were duly recorded and filed in the office of the Commission. Thereafter the proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on the said amended complaint, testimony and evidence, and brief in support of the amended complaint, but without oral argument; and none of the respondents having filed brief nor requested oral argument, though given opportunity so to do, and the Commission having duly considered the record and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public, and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondents, James L. Reamey, Joseph Curran, Louis Weinstock, Abraham Baskoff, Richard M. Kroon, John Anderson, William Allen, Elmer Johnson, Robert Brown, Harry Bridges, David Gordon, Elmer Brown, Dora Zucker, Luigi Genovese, A. W. McPherson, Albert Fleming, and Charles B. Killinger, are members of I. S. U. Rank and File Group, I. S. U. Rank and File Members, Rank and File Committee of the I. S. U., and Rank and File International Seamen's Union, and together with respondent, Uptown Cooperative Press, Inc., are and for more than two years last past have been associated within such groups for the purpose of causing the publication and distribution of a newspaper called "I. S. U. Pilot." Respondent, Uptown Cooperative Press, Inc., has printed said paper for the other respondents.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of the business of publishing the "I. S. U. Pilot," hereinbefore mentioned, the respondent individuals, acting personally and through and by the aforesaid groups, sold and solicited the sale of the aforesaid magazine between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia, and caused copies of the aforesaid magazine when sold, to be transported from the place of publication in New York City to the purchasers of such copies, some located in the State of New York and others located in various other States of the United States, and there was for two years last past a constant current of trade and commerce by the respondent individuals in such paper between and among the various States of the United States.

In the course and conduct of their business the respondents have been in substantial competition with others engaged in the sale of papers between and among the various States of the United States. Among such competitors is the International Seamen's Union, hereinafter described, which now and since about 1895 has regularly published and circulated an official paper known as the "Seamen's Journal."

PAR. 3. The International Seamen's Union has been in existence since 1892 and for more than a quarter of a century has been habitually known and generally accepted as the "I. S. U." It has a membership of 60,000 scattered along the Atlantic, Pacific, and Gulf Coasts and the Great Lakes. Its purpose is to improve the conditions of the men who follow the sea for their livelihood.

The initials "I. S. U.," through their use by the International Seamen's Union and by its local branches, are now and for many years last past have been known and understood by the International Seamen's Union and other labor unions, and by the general public, as initials for the aforesaid International Seamen's Union, and as a designation of the aforesaid organization.

PAR. 4. Respondent groups were not committees of the International Seamen's Union nor was the aforesaid "I. S. U. Pilot" a publication of the International Seamen's Union. The use by the respondents of the name "I. S. U. Pilot" was without the authority or permission of the International Seamen's Union.

Order

25 F. T. C.

PAR. 5. The use by the respondent groups and respondent individuals of the name "I. S. U. Pilot" has had the capacity and tendency to mislead and deceive members of the International Seamen's Union, and members of other labor unions, and the purchasing public into the beliefs that the said publication was a publication of the International Seamen's Union, and to purchase the aforesaid "I. S. U. Pilot" in such erroneous beliefs; thereby trade has been diverted by respondents from their competitors who do not mislead and deceive and who have not misled and deceived the purchasing public by such misuse of names for their publications. Thereby substantial injury has been done by respondents to substantial competition in interstate commerce.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondents, James L. Reamey, Joseph Curran, Louis Weinstock, Abraham Baskoff, Richard M. Kroon, John Anderson, William Allen, Elmer Johnson, Robert Brown, Harry Bridges, David Gordon, Elmer Brown, Dora Zucker, Luigi Genovese, A. W. McPherson, Albert Fleming, Charles B. Killinger, and the Uptown Cooperative Press, Inc., are to the prejudice of the public and of respondents' competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce, within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

This proceeding having been heard by the Federal Trade Commission upon the amended complaint of the Commission, the testimony and other evidence taken before John L. Hornor, an examiner of the Commission theretofore duly designated by it, in support of the allegations of the amended complaint (the served respondents not answering, but all being in default), and brief filed herein, and the Commission having made its findings as to the facts and its conclusion that the respondents, James L. Reamey, Joseph Curran, Louis Weinstock, Abraham Baskoff, Richard M. Kroon, John Anderson, William Allen, Elmer Johnson, Robert Brown, Harry Bridges, David Gordon, Elmer Brown, Dora Zucker, Luigi Genovese, A. W. McPherson, Albert Fleming, Charles B. Killinger, and the Uptown Cooperative Press, Inc., have violated the provisions of an Act of

Order

Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled, "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

It is hereby ordered, That the respondent individuals, James L. Reamey, Joseph Curran, Louis Weinstock, Abraham Baskoff, Richard M. Kroon, John Anderson, William Allen, Elmer Johnson, Robert Brown, Harry Bridges, David Gordon, Elmer Brown, Dora Zucker, Luigi Genovese, A. W. McPherson, Albert Fleming, and Charles B. Killinger, and the Uptown Cooperative Press, Inc., and their respective agents, servants and employees, in connection with the sale and offering for sale of newspapers in interstate commerce or in the District of Columbia, do forthwith cease and desist from the use of the name "I. S. U. Pilot" and of any other name for its newspapers or other publications indicating or suggesting that the said respondents or any of their groups constitute an authorized committee of the International Seamen's Union, or that any publication by them or by any of them so sold and offered for sale is a publication of the International Seamen's Union, or authorized by it.

And it is hereby further ordered, That the aforesaid respondents, James L. Reamey, Joseph Curran, Louis Weinstock, Abraham Baskoff, Richard M. Kroon, John Anderson, William Allen, Elmer Johnson, Robert Brown, Harry Bridges, David Gordon, Elmer Brown, Dora Zucker, Luigi Genovese, A. W. McPherson, Albert Fleming, Charles B. Killinger, and the Uptown Cooperative Press, Inc., shall within 60 days after service upon them of this order, file with this Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which they have complied with this order.

COMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION
OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 26, 1914

Docket 2861. Complaint, June 30, 1936—Decision, June 29, 1937

Where a corporation engaged in manufacture, sale, and distribution, to retail dealers in State of Washington and Territory of Alaska, of assortments of candy so packed and assembled as to involve use of a lottery scheme when sold and distributed to consumers thereof, and consisting of a number of boxes of assorted chocolates, additional article of merchandise, and a punchboard, for sale under a plan, and in accordance with said card's explanatory legend, pursuant to which purchaser received, for five cents paid, one of said boxes, value of which exceeded said amount, or nothing other than privilege of making a punch, depending upon number thus secured by chance, and under which purchaser of last punch on board received said article of merchandise, and last five punches in each sections into which board was divided were without cost to person making same—

Sold, to retailers for display and resale to purchasing public, in accordance with aforesaid plan, such assortments, and thereby supplied to and placed in the hands of others means of conducting lotteries in the sale of its said products in accordance with such plan, contrary to public policy long recognized by the common law and criminal statutes and to an established public policy of the United States Government, and in competition with many who, unwilling to offer and sell candy so packed and assembled, or otherwise arranged and packed for sale to purchasing public, as to involve a game of chance, refrain therefrom, and with many who are unwilling to adopt and use said or any method involving game of chance or sale of a chance to win by chance, or other method contrary to public policy;

With result that many dealers in and ultimate purchasers of candy were attracted by said method and manner of packing the same and by element of chance involved in sale thereof as above set forth, and thereby induced to purchase such candy, so packed and sold by it, in preference to that offered and sold by said competitors who do not use same or equivalent methods, and with tendency and capacity, because of said game of chance, to divert to it trade and custom from its said competitors who do not use such or equivalent practice or method, exclude from candy trade all competitors who are unwilling to and do not use such or equivalent method as unlawful, lessen competition in said trade and tend to create a monopoly thereof in it and such other distributors as used same or equivalent practice or method, and deprive purchasing public of benefit of free competition therein, and eliminate from said trade all actual, and exclude therefrom all potential, competitors who do not adopt and use such or equivalent methods:

Held, That such acts and practices were to the prejudice of the public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition.

Mr. Henry C. Lank and Mr. P. C. Kolinski for the Commission.

Complaint

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that Schwabacher Brothers & Company, Inc., a corporation, hereinafter referred to as respondent, has been and is using unfair methods of competition in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in said act of Congress, and it appearing to said Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent, Schwabacher Brothers & Company, Inc., is a corporation organized and operating under the laws of the State of Washington, with its principal office and place of business located at 304 Occidental Avenue, Seattle, Wash. Respondent is now, and for several years last past has been, engaged in the sale and distribution of candy to retail dealers located in the State of Washington and the Territory of Alaska, and causes and has caused its said product, when sold, to be transported from its principal place of business in Seattle, Wash., to purchasers thereof in the Territory of Alaska at their respective places of business; and there is now, and has been for several years last past, a course of trade and commerce by said respondent in such candy between the State of Washington and the Territory of Alaska. In the course and conduct of said business, respondent is in competition with other corporations and with partnerships and individuals engaged in the manufacture of candy and in the sale and distribution thereof in commerce between and among the various States of the United States, and between such States and the Territory of Alaska.

Said assortment, distributed by the respondent, is composed of a number of boxes of assorted chocolate candies and another article of merchandise, together with a device commonly called a "punchboard." The said boxes of candy and additional article of merchandise are distributed to the consuming public by means of said punchboard in the following manner: The sales by means of said punchboard are 5 cents each, and when a punch is made from said board a number is disclosed. The numbers begin with 1 and continue to the number of punches there are on the board, but the numbers are not arranged in numerical sequence. The board bears a statement or statements informing the prospective customer as to which numbers receive a box of candy. The purchaser of the last punch on the board receives the additional article of merchandise. The last five punches on each of ten sections of a 1,200 hole board are free. On a so-called twelve hundred hole board thirty-four numbers call for a prize box of candy. A purchaser who does not qualify by obtaining one of the numbers calling for one of the boxes of candy or by punching the last number on the board receives nothing for his money other than the privilege of punching a number from the board. The boxes of candy are worth more than 5 cents each, and a purchaser who obtains one of the numbers calling for a box of candy receives the same for the price of 5 cents. The numbers on said boards are effectively concealed from the purchasers or prospective purchasers until a punch or selection has been made and the particular punch separated from the board. The boxes of candy and the additional article of merchandise in said assortment are thus distributed to purchasers of punches from said board wholly by lot or chance.

PAR. 3. Retail dealers to whom respondent sells said assortment expose said assortment for sale and sell said candy to the purchasing public in accordance with the aforesaid sales plan. Respondent thus supplies to and places in the hands of others the means of conducting lotteries in the sale of its product in accordance with the sales plan hereinabove set forth, and said sales plan has the capacity and tendency of inducing purchasers thereof to purchase respondent's said products in preference to candy offered for sale and sold by its competitors.

PAR. 4. The sale of said candy to the purchasing public in the manner above alleged involves a game of chance or the sale of a chance to procure a box of candy.

The use by respondent of said method in the sale of candy, and the sale of candy by and through the use thereof and by the aid of said method, is a practice of the sort which the common law and criminal statutes have long deemed contrary to public policy; and is contrary to an established public policy of the Government of the United States. The use by respondent of said method has the dangerous tendency unduly to hinder competition or create monopoly in this, to wit: that the use thereof has the tendency and capacity to exclude from the branch of the candy trade involved in this proceeding competitors who do not adopt and use the same method or an equivalent or similar method involving the same or an equivalent or similar element of chance or lottery scheme.

Findings

Many persons, firms, and corporations who make and sell candy in competition with the respondent, as above alleged, are unwilling to offer for sale or sell candy so packed and assembled as above alleged, or otherwise arranged and packed for sale to the purchasing public so as to involve a game of chance, and such competitors refrain therefrom.

PAR. 5. Many dealers in and ultimate purchasers of candy are attracted by respondent's said method and manner of packing said candy, and by the element of chance involved in the sale thereof in the manner above described, and are thereby induced to purchase said candy so packed and sold by respondent, in preference to candy offered for sale and sold by said competitors of respondent who do not use the same or equivalent methods. The use of said method by respondent has the tendency and capacity, because of said game of chance, to divert to respondent trade and custom from its said competitors who do not use the same or an equivalent method; to exclude from said candy trade all competitors who are unwilling to and who do not use the same or an equivalent method because the same is unlawful; to lessen competition in said candy trade, and to tend to create a monopoly of said candy trade in respondent and such other distributors of candy as use the same or an equivalent method, and to deprive the purchasing public of the benefit of free competition in said candy trade. The use of said method by the respondent has the tendency and capacity to eliminate from said candy trade all actual competitors, and to exclude therefrom all potential competitors, who do not adopt and use said method or an equivalent method.

PAR. 6. Many of said competitors of respondent are unwilling to adopt and use said method or any method involving a game of chance or the sale of a chance to win something by chance or any other method that is contrary to public policy.

PAR. 7. The aforementioned method, acts and practices of the respondent are all to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors, as hereinabove alleged. Said method, acts, and practices constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914.

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

its complaint in this proceeding upon the respondent, Schwabacher Brothers & Company, Inc., a corporation, charging it with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of the provisions of said act. After the issuance of said complaint and the filing of respondent's answer, the Commission, by order entered herein, granted respondent's request for permission to withdraw said answer and to substitute therefor an answer admitting all the material allegations of the complaint to be true and waiving the taking of further evidence and all other intervening procedure, which substitute answer was duly filed in the office of the Commission. Thereafter this proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on the said complaint and the substitute answer, briefs and oral argument of counsel having been waived; and the Commission, having duly considered the same and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent is a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Washington, with its principal office and place of business located at 304 Occidental Avenue, in the city of Seattle, State of Washington. Respondent is now, and for several years last past has been, engaged in the sale and distribution of candy to retail dealers located in the State of Washington and the Territory of Alaska. It causes and has caused its said products when sold to be transported from its principal place of business in Seattle, Wash., to purchasers thereof in the Territory of Alaska at their respective places of business. There is now, and has been for several years last past, a course of trade and commerce by said respondent in such candy between the State of Washington and the Territory of Alaska. In the course and conduct of said business, respondent is in competition with other corporations and with partnerships and individuals engaged in the manufacture of candy and in the sale and distribution thereof in commerce between and among the various States of the United States, and between such States and the Territory of Alaska.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of its business, as described in paragraph 1 hereof, respondent sells and has sold to retail dealers an assortment of candy so packed and assembled as to involve the use of a lottery scheme when sold and distributed to the consumers thereof.

Said assortment distributed by the respondent is composed of a number of boxes of assorted chocolate candies and another article of merchandise, together with a device commonly called a "punch-board." The said boxes of candy and additional article of merchandise are distributed to the consuming public by means of said punch-board in the following manner: Sales are 5¢ each, and when a punch is made from said board a number is disclosed. The numbers begin with one and continue to the number of punches there are on the board, but the numbers are not arranged in numerical sequence. The board bears a statement or statements informing customers and prospective customers as to which numbers receive a box of candy, and the statement that the purchaser of the last punch on the board receives the other article of merchandise. The punches on said board are arranged in sections, and the last five punches in each section are free. A purchaser who does not qualify by obtaining one of the numbers calling for one of the boxes of candy, or by punching the last number on the board, receives nothing for his money other than the privilege of punching a number from the board. The boxes of candy are worth more than 5¢ each, and a purchaser obtaining one of the numbers calling for a box of candy receives the same for the price of 5¢. The numbers on said board are effectively concealed from purchasers and prospective purchasers until a punch or selection has been made and the particular punch separated from the board. The boxes of candy and the additional article of merchandise in said assortment are thus distributed to purchasers of punches from said board wholly by lot or chance.

PAR. 3. Retail dealers to whom respondent sells said assortment expose said assortment for sale and sell said candy to the purchasing public in accordance with the aforesaid sales plan. Respondent thus supplies to and places in the hands of others the means of conducting lotteries in the sale of its products in accordance with the sales plan hereinabove set forth, and said sales plan has the capacity and tendency of inducing purchasers thereof to purchase respondent's said products in preference to candy offered for sale and sold by its competitors.

PAR. 4. The sale of said candy to the purchasing public in the manner above found involves a game of chance or the sale of a chance to procure a box of candy or another article of merchandise. The use by respondent of said method in the sale of candy, and the sale of candy by and through the use thereof and by the aid of said method, is a practice of the sort which the common law and criminal statutes have long deemed contrary to public policy, and is contrary to an established public policy of the Government of the United States. The use by respondent of said method has the tendency unduly to hinder competition or create monopoly in this, to wit: that the use thereof has the tendency and capacity to exclude from the branch of the candy trade involved in this proceeding competitors who do not adopt and use the same method or an equivalent or similar method involving the same or an equivalent or similar element of chance or lottery scheme. Many persons, firms, and corporations who make and sell candy in competition with respondent, as above described, are unwilling to offer for sale or sell candy so packed and assembled as above described, or otherwise arranged and packed for sale to the purchasing public so as to involve a game of chance, and such competitors refrain therefrom.

PAR. 5. Many dealers in and ultimate purchasers of candy are attracted by respondent's said method and manner of packing said candy and by the element of chance involved in the sale thereof in the manner above described, and are thereby induced to purchase said candy so packed and sold by respondent in preference to candy offered for sale and sold by said competitors of respondent who do not use the same or equivalent methods. The use of said method by respondent has the tendency and capacity, because of said game of chance, to divert to respondent trade and custom from its said competitors who do not use the same or an equivalent method; to exclude from said candy trade all competitors who are unwilling to and who do not use the same or an equivalent method because the same is unlawful; to lessen competition in said candy trade, and to tend to create a monopoly of said candy trade in respondent and such other distributors of candy as use the same or an equivalent method; and to deprive the purchasing public of the benefit of free competition in said candy trade. The use of said method by the respondent has the tendency and capacity to eliminate from said candy trade all actual competitors, and to exclude therefrom all potential competitors who do not adopt and use said method or an equivalent method.

PAR. 6. Many of said competitors of respondent are unwilling to adopt and use said method or any method involving a game of chance or the sale of a chance to win something by chance, or any other method that is contrary to public policy.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondent, Schwabacher Brothers & Company, Inc., a corporation, are to the prejudice of the public and respondent's competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

This proceeding having been heard by the Federal Trade Commission upon the complaint of the Commission and the answer of respondent dated August 10, 1936, admitting all the material allegations of the complaint to be true and waiving the taking of further evidence and all other intervening procedure, and the Commission having made its findings as to the facts and its conclusion that said respondent has violated the provisions of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

It is ordered, That the respondent, Schwabacher Brothers & Company, Inc., a corporation, its officers, representatives, agents, and employees, in connection with the offering for sale, sale, and distribution of candy in interstate commerce and between the State of Washington and the Territory of Alaska, do forthwith cease and desist from:

1. Selling and distributing to retail dealers candy so packed and assembled that sales of such candy to the general public are to be made, or may be made, by means of a lottery, gaming device, or gift enterprise.
2. Supplying to or placing in the hands of retail dealers assortments of candy which are used, or which may be used, without alteration or rearrangement of the contents of such assortments, to conduct a lottery, gaming device, or gift enterprise in the sale or distribution of the candy contained in said assortments to the public.
3. Supplying to or placing in the hands of retail dealers assortments of candy, together with a device commonly called a "punch-board," for use, or which may be used, in distributing or selling candy to the public at retail.
4. Furnishing to retail dealers a device commonly called a "punch-board," either with assortments of candy or separately, bearing a legend or legends or statements informing the purchasing public that the candy is being sold to the public by lot or chance or in accordance with a sales plan which constitutes a lottery, gaming device, or gift enterprise.

It is further ordered, That the respondent, Schwabacher Brothers & Company, Inc., a corporation, shall, within 30 days after service upon it of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which it has complied with the order to cease and desist hereinabove set forth.

IN THE MATTER OF
GLENN LABORATORIES, INC.

COMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION
OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 26, 1914

Docket 3061. Complaint, Feb. 16, 1937—Decision, June 29, 1937

Where a corporation engaged in manufacture, sale and distribution of "Dr. Thomas' I&L 157" obesity treatment, composed of several ingredients, including, undisclosed, as only one effective in ridding body of fat, powerful and dangerous drug desiccated thyroid, which (1) is indicated only in relatively rare cases of obesity due to deficiency of thyroid gland, (2) is dangerous to use, in quantities contained in said preparation and in dosage suggested, in all other cases without examination and advice and direction of a competent physician, (3) may not be taken by some people in their natural and normal state without harmful results, (4) is harmful to take, present certain conditions or defects or abnormalities, and (5) possibility of use of which, in a given case, without harmful results, is contingent upon thorough examination by competent physician, or experimental use by person in question under medical supervision, or both—

Represented, in advertising aforesaid preparation and treatment in newspapers and periodicals of general circulation, and by radio broadcasts, and in pamphlets and by other methods, directly or by implication, that aforesaid product was new and constituted a simple new method, use of which converted food into fuel and energy, and that it could be taken safely by members of the laity without direction from a physician, and that it was safe, harmless and efficacious in all types or classes of obesity, without disclosing presence, as hereinbefore set forth, of said desiccated thyroid and implications of such presence in quantity and dosage involved in preparation in question, and notwithstanding fact that such thyroid has been used by physicians in type of obesity due to defective thyroid glands for many years, use thereof does not always convert food into fuel and energy, or either of them, inability of the laity, unskilled in medical science and necessarily dependent, in many cases, when seeking a remedy for excess weight, for their information as to what treatment, remedy, method or system they may safely purchase, take or use, upon statements and representations, largely, of makers and sellers thereof, to tell whether or not their obesity is due to deficient thyroid gland, which may only be ascertained by examination of competent physician, and notwithstanding facts implicit in aforesaid nondisclosure;

With tendency and capacity to induce members of the public and prospective purchasers to form the mistaken and erroneous belief that such representations were true, and that said product was a safe, harmless and competent remedy or treatment for all classes and types of obesity, and to induce them to purchase said preparation in preference to, and to the exclusion of, preparations, systems, methods or other means of treatment offered for sale in commerce by competitors thus engaged, and with result of unfairly diverting thereby trade to it from its said competitors; to the injury of competition in commerce:

Held, That such acts and practices were to the prejudice of the public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition.

Mr. E. J. Hornibrook for the Commission.

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that Glenn Laboratories, Inc., a corporation, has been and now is using unfair methods of competition in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in said act, and it appearing to said Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint and states its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent, Glenn Laboratories, Inc., is a corporation organized, existing, and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of New York, with its principal office and place of business located at 287 W. 127th Street, New York City, in said State.

Respondent corporation is now and for several years last past has been engaged, among other things, in the manufacture, sale, and distribution of a proprietary remedy or medicine which it calls "Dr. Thomas' B; 157" for use in the treatment of obesity. Respondent ships, or causes to be shipped or transported, its said product, when sold, from its place of business in the State of New York to purchasers thereof located at points in various States of the United States other than the State of New York. Respondent sells its said product to wholesale and retail druggists. Said wholesale druggists sell and ship the same to retail druggists. Retail druggists in various States of the United States sell the same to their customers, who are generally members of the laity. There is now, and has been during all the times herein mentioned, a constant current of trade in such product so sold by the respondent in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of its said business respondent corporation is now and has been during all the times herein mentioned, engaged in substantial competition with various other corporations, copartners, firms, and individuals, selling and offering for sale obesity remedies or like or otherwise competitive products, to wit: preparations, systems, methods, or other means of treatment for obesity or reduction of weight of the human body.

Complaint

25 F. T. C.

PAR. 3. Respondent in aid of so offering for sale and selling said "Dr. Thomas' I \ddot{b} 157," as aforesaid, has advertised the same in newspapers, magazines, periodicals of general circulation, by means of radio broadcasts and in pamphlets, and in, by and through other advertising media. In, by and through each and all of the advertising media above enumerated, respondent represents, expressly or by implication:

- A. That said product is new;
- B. That its use constitutes a simple new method;
- C. That the use of said product converts food into fuel and energy;
- D. That said product can be safely taken by members of the laity without the advice and direction of a physician;
- E. That said product is safe, harmless, and efficacious in all types of classes of obesity.

Typical of its said advertisements are the following which are caused to be published by respondent in newspapers in cities and towns in various States of the United States where said product is handled by druggists:

NO MORE UGLY FAT

Pounds of ugly fat melt away as if by magic! No starvation diet or strenuous exercise! Eat as much as you want—everything you like within reason! Away goes that hideous flesh! New Beauty—new health—for you! I \ddot{b} 157 is a Doctor's prescription! Simply take one capsule after each meal. Get a bottle of Dr. Thomas' I \ddot{b} 157 at your drug store and begin taking it TODAY. Two sizes $1 and $2.50. Guaranteed not to contain dinitrophenol. REMEMBER; RESULTS GUARANTEED OR MONEY REFUNDED! Sold at Grant Drug Co., Morgan Drug Co., Tarrant Drug Co., L. T. Wright Drug Co., and all other good drug stores.

If everything you eat seems to turn to fat, the chances are your system is lacking in natural glandular substance which nature provides to control the fat making process. Instead of fat turning into energy, it remains unused. However, through a New York Doctor's prescription, you can provide this natural regulating substance.

PAR. 4. Dr. Thomas' I \ddot{b} 157 is a product made of several ingredients. Its only ingredient which is effectual in ridding human bodies of portions of fat or other body tissue or weight is desiccated thyroid. The reducing effect produced by the use of "Dr. Thomas' I \ddot{b} 157" is the same as the effect produced by taking an equal amount of desiccated thyroid. "Dr. Thomas' I \ddot{b} 157" contains $\frac{1}{2}$ grain of desiccated thyroid. It is put up in capsules and is to be taken three times daily orally—amounting to $1\frac{1}{2}$ grains of desiccated thyroid per day.

Desiccated thyroid is made from the thyroid glands of domestic animals. It is a powerful and dangerous drug.

There are persons whose bodies in their natural and normal state are so constituted that they may not take or use thyroid without harmful results to their bodies. As to any person, the only way in which it may be ascertained whether or not such person may take or use thyroid without harmful result to the body, is through examination by a competent physician or by experimental use by such person under medical supervision, or by both such methods combined. Only by the same means may it be ascertained in how large a quantity thyroid may be taken or used by such person without harmful results.

There are conditions of the human body which make it harmful to take or use thyroid. Among these is pregnancy. Other such conditions are defects, or abnormalities of the heart or kidneys. Any defect or abnormality of the body is apt to make the taking or use of thyroid harmful to the user.

Only by examination made by a competent physician may it be ascertained whether or not the body of such person has any such condition, defect or abnormality which makes it harmful for such person to take or use thyroid.

Obesity is generally caused from over-eating but it may be the result of more than one cause. One of the causes is a deficient or abnormally active thyroid gland. Deficiency of thyroid glands causes obesity or abnormal excess fat in only the rare and exceptional cases. In a large majority of the total number of such cases the persons affected do not have deficient thyroid glands and such obesity or abnormal excess weight is the result of a cause or causes other than deficient thyroid glands. Only in cases of obesity due to deficiency of thyroid glands is the use of desiccated thyroid indicated. In all other cases it is dangerous for a person to use thyroid in the quantities contained in "Dr. Thomas' I 157" without an examination and the advice and direction of a competent physician. The laity cannot tell whether or not obesity is due to a deficient thyroid gland. This can only be ascertained by the examination of a competent physician.

PAR. 5. There are many persons in and throughout the several States of the United States and the District of Columbia who are seeking some safe and dependable means whereby they may quickly, easily, certainly, and permanently remove from their bodies obesity or abnormal excess weight or other weight or flesh.

Such persons are unskilled in medical science and depend for their information as to what treatment, remedy, method, or system they may safely purchase, take or use, largely upon statements and representations of the makers and sellers thereof.

PAR. 6. Respondent's said advertising described in paragraph 3 above is false, misleading, and deceptive in that:

1. Desiccated thyroid has been used by physicians in the type of obesity due to defective thyroid gland for many years and is not new;

2. The use of desiccated thyroid does not always convert food into fuel and energy or either of them;

3. In that respondent fails to disclose that:

(a) Dr. Thomas' R 157 contains desiccated thyroid in quantities such as to make it a powerful and dangerous medicine;

(b) That it is only suitable as a medicine for obesity in the cases of deficiency of the thyroid gland and that these cases are rare and exceptional and can only be diagnosed as such by a competent physician;

(c) That medical science and physicians justify the use of thyroid as a treatment for obesity or excess weight only in cases where obesity or excess abnormal fat is caused by deficiency of thyroid gland and that competent physicians prescribe its use only in such cases;

(d) That in cases of obesity or abnormal fat not caused by deficiency of thyroid gland the use of thyroid is not indicated and its use therein may be and is likely to be harmful to the health of the user;

(e) That many persons are so constituted that they may not use Dr. Thomas' R 157 with safety to physical health;

(f) That respondent's preparation, Dr. Thomas' R 157, is one which can not be used with safety to physical health except under medical prescription and advice.

PAR. 7. Said statements and representations so made by respondent and said failures to disclose have the tendency and capacity to induce the members of the public and prospective purchasers to form the mistaken and erroneous belief that said representations as set out in paragraph 3 are true and that said product is a safe, harmless and competent remedy or treatment for all classes and types of obesity and into the purchase of Dr. Thomas' R 157 in preference to and to the exclusion of preparations, systems,, methods or other means of treatment being offered for sale in said commerce by said competitors of respondent as hereinabove alleged. Thereby trade is unfairly diverted to respondent from its said competitors to the injury of competition in commerce among and between the various States of the United States and to the injury of the public.

PAR. 8. The above alleged acts and practices are all to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors and constitute unfair methods of competition within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914.

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, on the 16th day of February 1937, issued, and on February 18, 1937, served its complaint in this proceeding upon respondent, Glenn Laboratories, Inc., a corporation, charging it with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of the provisions of said act. After the issuance of said complaint, and the filing of respondent's answer, the Commission, by order entered herein, granted respondent's motion for permission to withdraw said answer and to substitute therefor an answer admitting all the material allegations of the complaint to be true and waiving the taking of further evidence and all other intervening procedure, which substitute answer was duly filed in the office of the Commission. Thereafter, this proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on the said complaint and the substitute answer, briefs and oral arguments of counsel having been waived, and the Commission having duly considered the same and being now duly advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent, Glenn Laboratories, Inc., is a corporation, organized, existing, and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of New York, with its principal office and place of business located at 287 West 127th Street, New York City, in said State.

Respondent corporation is now and, for several years last past, has been engaged, among other things, in the manufacture, sale, and distribution of a proprietary remedy or medicine which it designates and calls "Dr. Thomas' B 157" and is for use in the treatment of obesity. Respondent ships, or causes to be shipped or transported, its said product, when so sold, from its place of business in the State of New York to purchasers thereof located at points in various States of the United States other than in the State of New York.

Respondent sells its said product to wholesale and retail druggists. Said wholesale druggists sell and ship the same to retail druggists.

Such retail druggists in various States of the United States sell the same to their customers, who are usually members of the laity. There is now and has been during all the times herein mentioned, a constant current of trade in such product so sold by the respondent in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of its said business respondent corporation is now and during all of the times herein mentioned engaged in substantial competition with various other corporations, copartnerships, firms, and individuals, selling and offering for sale, obesity remedies of like or otherwise competitive products, to wit: preparations, systems, methods, or other means of treatment for obesity or reduction of weight from the human body.

PAR. 3. Respondent in aid of so offering and selling "Dr. Thomas' B 157" as aforesaid, advertised the same in newspapers, magazines, periodicals of general circulation, by means of radio broadcasts, in pamphlets and in and by other methods of advertising media. In, by and through each of the advertising media above-enumerated, respondent represents expressly, or by implication, (a) that said product is new; (b) that its use constitutes a simple new method; (c) that the use of said product converts food into fuel and energy; (d) that said product can be safely taken by members of the laity without direction from a physician; (e) that said product is safe, harmless and efficacious in all types or classes of obesity.

Typical of its said advertisements are the following, which are caused to be published by respondent in newspapers, in cities and towns in various States of the United States where said product is handled by druggists:

NO MORE UGLY FAT

Pounds of ugly fat melt away as if by magic! No starvation diet or strenuous exercise! Eat as much as you want—everything you like within reason! Away goes that hideous flesh! New Beauty—new health—for you! B 157 is a Doctor's prescription! Simply take one capsule after each meal. Get a bottle of Dr. Thomas' B 157 at your drug store and begin taking it TODAY Two sizes—$1 and $2.50. Guaranteed not to contain dinitrophenol. REMEMBER: RESULTS GUARANTEED OR MONEY REFUNDED! Sold at Grant Drug Co., Morgan Drug Co., Tarrant Drug Co., L. T. Wright Drug Co., and all other good drug stores.

If everything you eat seems to turn to fat, the chances are your system is lacking in natural glandular substance which nature provides to control the fat-making process. Instead of fat turning into energy, it remains unused. However, through a New York Doctor's prescription, you can provide this natural regulating substance.

PAR. 4. Dr. Thomas' B 157 is a product made of several ingredients. Its only ingredient which is effectual in ridding human bodies of portions of fat or other body tissue or weight, is desiccated thyroid. The reducing effect produced by the use of Dr. Thomas' B 157 is the same as the effect produced by taking an equal amount of desiccated thyroid. Dr. Thomas' B 157 contains one-half grain of desiccated thyroid. It is put up in capsules and is to be taken three times daily orally, i. e. one and one-half grains of desiccated thyroid per day.

Desiccated thyroid is made from the thyroid gland of domestic animals. It is a powerful and dangerous drug.

There are persons whose bodies in their natural and normal state are so constituted that they may not take or use thyroid without harmful results to their bodies. As to any person, the only way in which it may be ascertained whether or not such person may take or use thyroid without harmful results to the body, is through examination by a competent physician or by experimental use by such person under medical supervision, or by both such methods combined. Only by the same means may it be ascertained in how large a quantity thyroid may be taken or used by such a person without harmful results.

There are conditions of the human body which make it harmful to take or use thyroid. Among these is pregnancy. Other such conditions are defects, or abnormalities of the heart or kidneys. Any defect or abnormality of the body is apt to make the taking or the use of thyroid harmful to the user.

Only by examination made by a competent physician may it be ascertained whether or not the body of such person has any such condition, defect, or abnormality which makes it harmful for such person to take or use thyroid.

Obesity is generally caused from overeating, but it may be the result of more than one cause. One of the causes is a deficient or abnormally inactive thyroid gland. Deficiency or abnormal inactivity of thyroid glands causes obesity or abnormal excess fat in only rare and exceptional cases. In a large majority of the total number of cases of obesity the persons affected do not have deficient thyroid glands and such obesity or abnormal excess weight is the result of a cause or causes other than deficient thyroid glands. Only in cases of obesity due to deficiency of thyroid glands is the use of desiccated thyroid indicated. In all other cases it is dangerous for a person to use thyroid in the quantities contained in Dr. Thomas' B 157 and in the dosage suggested by respondent without an examination and the advice and direction of a competent physician. The laity cannot tell whether or not obesity is due to a deficient thyroid gland. This can only be ascertained by the examination of a competent physician.

PAR. 5. There are many persons in and throughout the several States of the United States and the District of Columbia, who are seeking some safe and dependable means whereby they may quickly, easily, certainly, and permanently remove from their bodies obesity or abnormal excess weight or other weight or flesh.

Such persons are unskilled in medical science and depend for their information as to what treatment, remedy, method, or system they may safely purchase, take, or use, largely upon the statements and representations of the makers and sellers thereof.

PAR. 6. Respondent's said advertising described in paragraph 3 above is false, misleading, and deceptive in that:

1. Desiccated thyroid has been used by physicians in the type of obesity due to defective thyroid gland for many years and is not new;

2. The use of desiccated thyroid does not always convert food into fuel and energy or either of them;

3. In that respondent fails to disclose:

(a) Dr. Thomas' B; 157 contains desiccated thyroid in quantities such as to make it a powerful and dangerous medicine;

(b) That it is only suitable as a medicine for obesity in the cases of deficiency of the thyroid gland and that these cases are rare and exceptional and can only be diagnosed by a competent physician;

(c) That medical science and physicians justify the use of thyroid as a treatment for obesity or excess weight only in cases where obesity or excess abnormal fat is caused by deficiency of the thyroid gland, that competent physicians prescribe its use only in such cases;

(d) That in cases of obesity or abnormal fat not caused by deficiency of thyroid gland the use of thyroid is not indicated and its use therein may be and is likely to be harmful to the user;

(e) That many persons are so constituted that they may not use Dr. Thomas' B; 157 with safety to physical health;

(f) That respondent's preparation, Dr. Thomas' B; 157, is one which cannot be used with safety to physical health except under medical prescription and advice.

PAR. 7. Said statements and representations so made by respondent and said failures to disclose as set forth in paragraph 6 hereof have the tendency and capacity to induce the members of the public and prospective purchasers to form the mistaken and erroneous belief that such representations as set forth in paragraph 3 are true and that said product is a safe, harmless and competent remedy or treatment for all classes and types of obesity and to induce them to purchase "Dr. Thomas' B 157" in preference to and to the exclusion of preparations, systems, methods, or other means of treatment being offered for sale in said commerce by said competitors of respondent as hereinabove alleged; thereby trade is unfairly diverted to respondent from its said competitors to the injury of competition in commerce among the various States of the United States and to the injury of the public.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondent, Glenn Laboratories, Inc., a corporation, are to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce, within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

It is ordered, That respondent, Glenn Laboratories, Inc., a corporation, its officers, representatives, agents, and employees, in connection with the offering for sale, sale and distribution of "Dr. Thomas' B 157" in interstate commerce or in the District of Columbia, so long as said product contains desiccated thyroid or other form of thyroid, do forthwith cease and desist from representing, expressly or by implication, in newspapers, magazines, periodicals, in radio broadcasts, in pamphlets, on cartons containing said product, and in, by and through other advertising media:

1. That said product is new;
2. That its use constitutes a simple new method of treating obesity;
3. That the use of said product converts food into fuel and energy;
4. That said product can be safely taken by members of the laity without a physical examination by a competent physician and without the advice and direction of a competent physician during the taking thereof;

5. That said product is safe, harmless, and efficacious, or either of them, in all types or classes of obesity;

6. Or any other statement or representation of like import, including failure to affirmatively disclose by, in and through each and all of the said media that said product contains a dangerous and powerful ingredient and cannot be safely taken by members of the laity without a physical examination by a competent physician and without the advice and direction of a competent physician during the taking thereof.

It is further ordered, That the respondent shall, within 60 days after service upon it of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing, setting forth in detail the manner and form in which it has complied with this order.

Complaint

IN THE MATTER OF
EUCATHOL COMPANY, INC.¹

COMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION
OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 26, 1914

Docket 3069. Complaint, Mar. 4, 1937—Decision, June 29, 1937

Where a corporation engaged in manufacture and sale of "Eucathol" compound or medicine for use in treatment of coughs, colds, scalds and other afflictions, and also for use as after-shaving cream, through rubbing or massaging same on skin or through inhalation of vapors thereof, in substantial competition with those engaged in sale or offer to general public of compounds, medicines, salves, and ointments used for purposes for which its said preparation was offered—

Falsely represented, in advertising its said product in newspapers and periodicals of general circulation, and through radio broadcasts, and in pamphlets and printed testimonials, and other printed matter, as set forth, through use of photographs, pictures, and legends, on cartons containing same, and in circulars enclosed therewith, and in other advertising media, that use of such "Eucathol" would prevent and cure, or was beneficial in treatment of "insect bites, sunburn, piles and hemorrhoids, asthma and hay-fever, catarrh, colds, skin irritations, scalds and burns, skin disorders, flu and pneumonia";

With tendency and capacity to induce members of the public and prospective purchasers to form mistaken and erroneous beliefs that said statements and representations were true, and with result that such purchasing public, acting in such erroneous belief, was induced to buy and bought its said product, and thereby unfairly diverted trade to it from its competitors; to the injury of competition in commerce, and to that of the public:

Held, That such acts and practices were to the prejudice of the public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition.

Mr. E. J. Hornibrook for the Commission.

Stanard, Carey & Stanard, of Shawnee, Okla., for respondent.

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that The Eucathol Company, Inc., a corporation, has been and now is using unfair methods of competition in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in said act, and it appearing to said Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint and states its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent, The Eucathol Company, Inc., is a corporation, organized and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Oklahoma, with its office and principal place of business located in the city of Shawnee, in said State. Respondent is now, and has been for several years last past, engaged at said location in the manufacture and sale of a compound for use in the treatment of coughs, colds, scalds, burns, sunburn, insect bites, hay fever, asthma, and other human afflictions. Said compound is also sold for use as an after shaving cream. Said compound is put up in containers and is to be applied by rubbing or massaging it onto the flesh, or by inhaling its vapors. Respondent has designated said compound as "Eucathol." Respondent sells said product to wholesale druggists who sell said product to retail druggists, and also direct to retail druggists. The retail druggists sell said product directly to the consumers thereof.

In the course and conduct of said business respondent ships, or causes to be shipped or transported, said product when so sold from the city of Shawnee in the State of Oklahoma to said wholesale and retail druggists, many of whom are located in points in various States other than the State of Oklahoma. There is now, and has been during all of the times herein mentioned, a constant current of trade in said product so sold by said respondent in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of said business, respondent is now, and has been during all of the times herein mentioned, engaged in substantial competition with various corporations, firms, and individuals selling, or offering for sale, to the general public compounds, medicines, salves, and ointments and other remedies used for the purposes described in paragraph 1 hereof.

PAR. 3. In the course and conduct of the business as aforesaid, respondent, in soliciting the sale of and selling said product, has advertised the same in newspapers, magazines, periodicals of general circulation, by means of radio broadcasts, and in pamphlets, printed testimonials, and other printed matter. It has also made use of photographs, other pictures and legends on cartons containing said compound and in circulars inclosed in said cartons, and in other advertising media. In and through each and all of the advertising media above enumerated, respondent has made, and is making, expressly or by implication, the following representations:

That the use of Eucathol will prevent and cure, or is beneficial in the treatment of: insect bites, sunburn, piles and hemorrhoids, asthma and hay fever, catarrh, colds, skin irritations, scalds and burns, skin disorders, flu and pneumonia, and other ailments.

Findings

PAR. 4. The representations described and set forth in paragraph 3 above are false and misleading, in that the use of Eucathol will not prevent and cure, and is not beneficial in the treatment of, insect bites, sunburn, piles and hemorrhoids, asthma and hay fever, catarrh, colds, skin irritations, skin disorders, scalds and burns, flu and pneumonia, or other ailments or afflictions of the human body for which it is recommended by the respondent.

PAR. 5. Said statements and representations set forth in paragraph 3 so made by respondent have, and have had, the tendency and capacity to induce members of the public and prospective purchasers to form the mistaken and erroneous belief that said statements and representations are true, and, acting in such erroneous belief, the said purchasing public has been induced to purchase, and has purchased, respondent's product, thereby unfairly diverting trade to respondent from its said competitors, to the injury of competition in commerce among and between the various States of the United States, and to the injury of the public.

PAR. 6. The above alleged acts and practices are each and all to the prejudice of the public, and of respondent's competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in interstate commerce within the meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914.

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

duly considered the same, and being now fully advised in the premises finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public and makes this its findings as to the facts and conclusion drawn therefrom.

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent, the Eucathol Company, Inc., is a corporation, organized and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Oklahoma, with its office and principal place of business located in the city of Shawnee, in said State.

Respondent is now, and has been for several years last past, engaged at said location in the manufacture and sale of a compound, or medicine, for use in the treatment of coughs, colds, scalds, burns, sunburn, insect bites, hay fever, asthma, influenza and other human afflictions. Said compound is also sold for use as an after-shaving cream. Said compound is put up in containers and is to be applied by rubbing or massaging it on the flesh, or by inhaling its vapors. Respondent has designated the said compound as "Eucathol." Respondent sells said product to wholesale druggists who sell said product to retail druggists, and also direct to retail druggists. The retail druggists sell said product directly to the consumers thereof.

In the course and conduct of said business respondent ships, or causes to be shipped or transported, said product when so sold, from the city of Shawnee in the said State of Oklahoma to said wholesale and retail druggists, many of whom are located at points in various States other than the State of Oklahoma. There is now, and has been, during all the times herein mentioned, a constant current of trade in said product so sold by said respondent in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of said business, respondent is now and has been, during all of the times herein mentioned, engaged in substantial competition with various corporations, copartnerships, firms, and individuals, selling, or offering for sale, to the general public, compounds, medicines, salves, and ointments and other medicines used for the purposes described in paragraph 1 hereof.

PAR. 3. In the course and conduct of the business as aforesaid, respondent, in soliciting the sale and selling said product, has advertised the same in newspapers, magazines, periodicals of general circulation by means of radio broadcasts, and in pamphlets, printed testimonials and other printed matter, and in, by and through the use of photographs, other pictures and legends on cartons containing the said compound, and in circulars enclosed in said cartons, and in other advertising media. In and through each and all of the advertising media above enumerated, respondent has made and is making, expressly or by implication, the following representations: That the use of Eucathol will prevent and cure, or is beneficial in the treatment of insect bites, sunburn, piles, hemorrhoids, asthma, and hay fever, catarrh, colds, skin irritations, scalds and burns, skin disorders, influenza, pneumonia and other ailments.

PAR. 4. The statements and representations set forth in the preceding paragraph are false and misleading in that the use of Eucathol will not prevent and cure, nor is its use beneficial in the treatment of "insect bites, sunburn, piles and hemorrhoids, asthma and hay fever, catarrh, colds, skin irritations, scalds and burns, skin disorders, flu and pneumonia."

PAR. 5. Said statements and representations set forth in paragraph 3 herein, so made by respondent, have, and have had a tendency and capacity to induce members of the public and prospective purchasers to form the mistaken and erroneous belief that said statements and representations are true and, acting in such erroneous belief, the said purchasing public has been induced to purchase, and has purchased, respondent's said product, thereby unfairly diverting trade to respondent from its said competitors to the injury of competition in commerce among and between the various States of the United States and to the injury of the public.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondent, Eucathol Company, Inc., a corporation, are the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

This proceeding having been heard by the Federal Trade Commission upon the complaint of the Commission and the substitute answer filed herein on the first day of May 1937, by respondent, admitting all the material allegations of the complaint to be true and waiving the taking of further evidence and all other intervening procedure, and the Commission having made its findings as to the facts and its conclusion that said respondent has violated the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes.”

It is ordered, That the respondent, Eucathol Company, Inc., a corporation, its officers, representatives, agents, and employees, in connection with the offering for sale, sale and distribution of its product now known as “Eucathol” in interstate commerce or in the District of Columbia, do forthwith cease and desist from representing, expressly or by implication, in newspapers, magazines, periodicals, in radio broadcasts, in pamphlets, and in, by and through other advertising media, that the use of its said product “Eucathol,” or any other product composed of substantially the same ingredients as the product now known as “Eucathol,” will prevent or cure, or is beneficial in the treatment of insect bites, sunburn, piles and hemorrhoids, asthma and hay fever, catarrh, colds, skin irritations, scalds, and burns, skin disorders, influenza and pneumonia.

It is further ordered, That respondent shall, within 60 days after service upon it of this order file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which it has complied with this order.

IN THE MATTER OF

GEORGE C. MILLER & COMPANY, INC.

COMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION
OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 26, 1914

Docket 3106. Complaint, Apr. 15, 1937—Decision, June 29, 1937

Where a corporation engaged in manufacture and sale of candy, including assortments so packed and assembled as to involve use of a lottery scheme when sold and distributed to consumers thereof, and consisting of a number of boxes or packages of candy of varying size, together with punch-board, for sale under a plan, and in accordance with said card's explanatory legend, pursuant to which purchaser received, for five cents paid, one of said boxes or packages as a prize and without additional charge, or, except as hereinbelow set forth, nothing other than privilege of making a punch, depending upon number secured by chance, and purchaser of last punch in each section, and purchaser of last punch on board, similarly received specified box or package without additional charge—

Sold, to wholesalers and jobbers for display and resale to purchasing public by their retailer-vendees, in accordance with aforesaid plan, such assortments, and thereby supplied to and placed in the hands of others means of conducting lotteries in sale of said products, in accordance with such plan, contrary to public policy long recognized by the common law and criminal statutes, and to an established public policy of the United States Government, and in competition with many who, unwilling to offer and sell candy so packed and assembled, or otherwise arranged and packed for sale to the purchasing public, as to involve game of chance, refrain therefrom;

With capacity and tendency of inducing purchasers to buy its said products in preference to candy offered and sold by its competitors, and with result that many dealers in and ultimate purchasers of candy were attracted by said method and manner of packing said product and by element of chance involved in sale thereof as above set forth, and thereby induced to purchase such candy, thus packed and sold by it, in preference to that offered and sold by said competitors who do not use same or equivalent methods, and with tendency and capacity, because of said scheme of chance, to divert to it trade and custom from its said competitors who do not use same or equivalent methods, exclude from such trade all competitors who are unwilling to and do not use such or an equivalent method as unlawful, lessen competition therein and tend to create a monopoly thereof in it and such other competitors as use same or equivalent method, deprive purchasing public of benefits of free competition in trade involved, and eliminate from said trade all actual, and exclude therefrom all potential, competitors who do not adopt and use such or equivalent method:

Held, That such acts and practices were to the prejudice of the public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition.

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that the George C. Miller & Co., Inc., hereinafter referred to as respondent, has been and is using unfair methods of competition in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in said act, and it appearing to said Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent is a corporation organized and doing business under the laws of the State of Massachusetts, with its principal office and place of business located at 927 Washington Street, in the city of Boston, State of Massachusetts. It is now, and for several years last past has been, engaged in the manufacture of candies and in the sale and distribution thereof to wholesale dealers and jobbers located at points in the various States of the United States. It causes and has caused its said products when sold to be transported from its principal place of business in Boston, Mass., to purchasers thereof in the State of Massachusetts and in other States of the United States at their respective places of business. There is now, and has been for several years last past, a course of trade and commerce by said respondent in such candy between and among the States of the United States.

In the course and conduct of said business, respondent is in competition with other corporations and with partnerships and individuals engaged in the manufacture of candy and in the sale and distribution thereof in commerce between and among the various States of the United States.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of its business, as described in paragraph 1 hereof, respondent sells and has sold to wholesale dealers and jobbers assortments of candy so packed and assembled as to involve the use of a lottery scheme when sold and distributed to the consumers thereof.

Such assortments are composed of a number of boxes or packages of candy of varying size, together with a device commonly called a "punchboard." The boxes or packages of candy contained in said assortments are distributed to purchasers in substantially the following manner:

Said punchboards contain a number of holes divided into sections. In each hole a slip of paper bearing a printed number is secreted.

The punchboard also bears at the top thereof a number of printed legends or statements informing customers and prospective customers which numbers receive a box of candy and the size thereof. Sales are 5¢ each, and a purchaser who obtains one of the numbers calling for a box of candy is entitled to receive the same as a prize without additional charge. The purchaser of the last punch in each section and the purchaser of the last punch on the board are entitled to receive a specified box or package of candy as a prize and without additional charge. Purchasers of punches who do not procure one of the numbers calling for a box of candy receive nothing for their money other than the privilege of punching a number from said board. The numbers on said printed slips secreted in said punchboard are effectively concealed from purchasers and prospective purchasers until a selection has been made and the printed slip separated from the board. The boxes or packages of candy are thus distributed to the consuming public wholly by lot or chance.

PAR. 3. The wholesale dealers and jobbers to whom respondent sells its assortments resell the same to retail dealers, and such retail dealers expose said assortments for sale and sell said packages of candy to the purchasing public in accordance with the aforesaid sales plan. Respondent thus supplies to and places in the hands of others the means of conducting lotteries in the sale of its products in accordance with the sales plan hereinabove set forth. Such sales plan has the capacity and tendency of inducing purchasers thereof to purchase respondent's said products in preference to candy offered for sale and sold by its competitors.

PAR. 4. The sale of candy to the purchasing public in the manner above alleged involves a game of chance or the sale of a chance to procure a box or package of candy.

The use by respondent of said method in the sale of candy, and the sale of candy by and through the use thereof and by the aid of said method, is a practice of the sort which the common law and criminal statutes have long deemed contrary to public policy, and is contrary to an established public policy of the Government of the United States. The use by respondent of said method has the tendency unduly to hinder competition or create monopoly in this, to wit: that the use thereof has the tendency and capacity to exclude competitors of respondent who do not adopt and use the same method or an equivalent or similar method involving the same or an equivalent or similar element of chance or lottery scheme.

Many persons, firms, and corporations who make and sell candy in competition with the respondent, as above alleged, are unwilling to offer for sale or sell candy so packed and assembled as above alleged, or otherwise arranged and packed for sale to the purchasing public so as to involve a game of chance, and such competitors refrain therefrom.

PAR. 5. Many dealers in and ultimate purchasers of candy are attracted by respondent's said method and manner of packing said candy and by the element of chance involved in the sale thereof in the manner above described, and are thereby induced to purchase said candy so packed and sold by respondent in preference to candy offered for sale and sold by said competitors of respondent who do not use the same or equivalent methods. The use of said method by respondent has the tendency and capacity, because of said game of chance, to divert to respondent trade and custom from its said competitors who do not use the same or an equivalent method; to exclude from said candy trade all competitors who are unwilling to and who do not use the same or an equivalent method because the same is unlawful; to lessen competition in said candy trade and to tend to create a monopoly of said candy trade in respondent and such other competitors of candy as use the same or an equivalent method; and to deprive the purchasing public of the benefit of free competition in said candy trade. The use of said method by respondent has the tendency and capacity to eliminate from said candy trade all actual competitors and to exclude therefrom all potential competitors who do not adopt and use said method or an equivalent method.

PAR. 6. The aforementioned method, acts, and practices of respondent are all to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors, as hereinabove alleged. Said method, acts, and practices constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Thereafter, this proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on the said complaints and answer thereto, briefs and oral argument of counsel having been waived; and the Commission having duly considered the same and being now fully advised in the premises finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent is a corporation organized and doing business under the laws of the State of Massachusetts, with its principal office and place of business located at 927 Washington Street, in the city of Boston, State of Massachusetts. It is now, and for several years last past has been engaged in the manufacture of candies and in the sale and distribution thereof to wholesale dealers and jobbers located at points in the various States of the United States. It causes and has caused its said products when sold to be transported from its principal place of business in Boston, Mass., to purchasers thereof in the State of Massachusetts and in other States of the United States at their respective places of business. There is now, and has been for several years last past, a course of trade and commerce by said respondent in such candy between and among the States of the United States. In the course and conduct of said business, respondent is in competition with other corporations and with partnerships and individuals engaged in the manufacture of candy and in the sale and distribution thereof in commerce between and among the various States of the United States.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of its business, as described in paragraph 1 hereof, respondent sells and has sold to wholesale dealers and jobbers assortments of candy so packed and assembled as to involve the use of a lottery scheme when sold and distributed to the consumers thereof.

Such assortments are composed of a number of boxes or packages of candy of varying size, together with a device commonly called a "punchboard." The boxes or packages of candy contained in said assortments are distributed to purchasers in substantially the following manner: Said punchboards contain a number of holes divided into sections. In each hole a slip of paper bearing a printed number is secreted. The punchboard also bears at the top thereof a number of printed legends or statements informing customers and prospective customers which numbers receive a box of candy and the size thereof. Sales are 5¢ each, and a purchaser who obtains one of the numbers calling for a box of candy is entitled to receive the same as a prize without additional charge. The purchaser of the last punch in each section and the purchaser of the last punch on the board are entitled to receive a specified box or package of candy as a prize and without additional charge. Purchasers of punches who do not procure one of the numbers calling for a box of candy receive nothing for their money other than the privilege of punching a number from said board. The numbers on said printed slips secreted in said punchboard are effectively concealed from purchasers and prospective purchasers until a selection has been made and the printed slip separated from the board. The boxes or packages of candy are thus distributed to the consuming public wholly by lot or chance.

PAR. 3. The wholesale dealers and jobbers to whom respondent sells its assortments resell the same to retail dealers, and such retail dealers expose said assortments for sale and sell said packages of candy to the purchasing public in accordance with the aforesaid sales plan. Respondent thus supplies to and places in the hands of others the means of conducting lotteries in the sale of its products in accordance with the sales plan hereinabove set forth. Such sales plan has the capacity and tendency of inducing purchasers thereof to purchase respondent's said products in preference to candy offered for sale and sold by its competitors.

PAR. 4. The sale of candy to the purchasing public in the manner above found involves a game of chance or the sale of a chance to procure a box or package of candy. The use by respondent of said method in the sale of candy, and the sale of candy by and through the use thereof and by the aid of said method, is a practice of the sort which the common law and criminal statutes have long deemed contrary to public policy, and is contrary to an established public policy of the Government of the United States. The use by respondent of said method has the tendency unduly to hinder competition or create monopoly in this, to wit: that the use thereof has the tendency and capacity to exclude competitors of respondent who do not adopt and use the same method or an equivalent or similar method involving the same or an equivalent or similar element of chance or lottery scheme. Many persons, firms, and corporations who make and sell candy in competition with the respondent are unwilling to offer for sale or sell candy so packed and assembled as above described, or otherwise arranged and packed for sale to the purchasing public so as to involve a game of chance, and such competitors refrain therefrom.

Order

PAR. 5. Many dealers in and ultimate purchasers of candy are attracted by respondent's said method and manner of packing said candy and by the element of chance involved in the sale thereof in the manner above described, and are thereby induced to purchase said candy so packed and sold by respondent in preference to candy offered for sale and sold by said competitors of respondent who do not use the same or an equivalent method. The use of said method by respondent has the tendency and capacity, because of said game of chance, to divert to respondent trade and custom from its said competitors who do not use the same or an equivalent method; to exclude from said candy trade all competitors who are unwilling to and who do not use the same or an equivalent method because the same is unlawful; to lessen competition in said candy trade and to tend to create a monopoly of said candy trade in respondent and such other competitors of candy as use the same or an equivalent method; and to deprive the purchasing public of the benefit of free competition in said candy trade. The use of said method by respondent has the tendency and capacity to eliminate from said candy trade all actual competitors and to exclude therefrom all potential competitors who do not adopt and use said method or an equivalent method.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondent, George C. Miller & Co., Inc., a corporation, are to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

This proceeding having been heard by the Federal Trade Commission upon the complaint of the Commission and the answer filed herein on April 29, 1937 by the respondent admitting all the material allegations of the complaint to be true, and the respondent having waived filing of briefs and oral argument, and the Commission having made its findings as to the facts and its conclusion that said respondent has violated the provisions of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

Order

25 F. T. C.

It is ordered, That the respondent, George C. Miller & Co., Inc., a corporation, its officers, representatives, agents, and employees, in connection with the offering for sale, sale and distribution of candy in interstate commerce, do forthwith cease and desist from:

1. Selling and distributing to jobbers and wholesale dealers for resale to retail dealers candy so packed and assembled that sales of such candy to the general public are to be made, or may be made by means of a lottery, gaming device, or gift enterprise.

2. Supplying to or placing in the hands of wholesale dealers or jobbers assortments of candy which are used, or which may be used without alteration or rearrangement of the contents of such assortments, to conduct a lottery, gaming device, or gift enterprise in the sale or distribution of the candy contained in said assortments to the public.

3. Supplying to or placing in the hands of wholesale dealers or jobbers assortments of candy, together with a device commonly called a "punchboard" for use, or which may be used, in distributing or selling said candy to the public at retail.

4. Furnishing to wholesale dealers or jobbers a device commonly called a "punchboard," either with assortments of candy or separately, bearing a legend or legends or statements informing the purchasing public that the candy is being sold to the public by lot or chance, or in accordance with a sales plan which constitutes a lottery, gaming device, or gift enterprise.

It is further ordered, That the respondent, George C. Miller & Co., Inc., a corporation, shall, within 30 days after service upon it of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which it has complied with the order to cease and desist hereinabove set forth.

IN THE MATTER OF

WOLF CREEK SOAP COMPANY

Docket 3116. Complaint, Apr. 26, 1937—Decision, June 29, 1937

Where a corporation engaged in manufacture, sale, and distribution of soap to retailers and peddlers and direct to consuming public, in substantial competition with those engaged in manufacture and distribution of like and similar products and sale thereof in commerce among the various States and in the District of Columbia—

- (a) Described many articles and items listed in its price lists as possessing retail values or prices many times in excess of their actual selling price to retailer or other purchaser, and many times in excess of actual retail price thereof, and thus included items and articles such as soaps and cold creams and combinations with retail prices stamped or printed thereon, or on labels attached thereto, or on containers in which offered and sold to public, which similarly exceeded actual selling price of particular item or article sold by peddler or retailer to consuming public, and were many times in excess of true and actual value, and constituted false and fictitious retail prices representing in no sense either true value or selling price of articles thus marked, and thus placed in hands of aforesaid peddler and retailer purchasers instrument and means enabling them to commit a fraud upon substantial portion of consuming public through representing and offering said articles as genuinely superior products produced by manufacturers for sale in usual course of trade to general consuming public at and for retail price stamped thereon or on containers thereof; and
- (b) Falsely represented, through use of abbreviation "Dr.", and name of individual, and word "Medicated" in name of one of its aforesaid products or offerings, that medical doctor was connected with derivation of formula from which said soap combination was made, and that it had ingredients of such a character as to give it substantial therapeutic value as a true medicated soap, facts being no physician was in any way connected with such formula or manufacture of said product, which contained no ingredients of the therapeutic nature in such quantities, if present at all, as to give such soap any such value;
- With effect of misleading substantial portion of consuming public in the several States and in said District by inducing them mistakingly and erroneously to believe that items of merchandise described as aforesaid were of superior value and sold and distributed by it with intent that they should be resold at retail prices closely approximating those stamped thereon, and that such products, because of prices thus affixed or stamped, were composed of superior ingredients and ordinarily retailed, in usual course of trade, for prices closely approximating those marked thereon as aforesaid, and that a doctor of medicine derived formula from which aforesaid soap combination was made, or was connected with manufacture thereof, and with tendency and capacity to mislead and deceive distributors and purchasing public into erroneous and mistaken belief that such statements and representations were true, and with effect of inducing members of public to buy its said products by reason of such erroneous beliefs, and of thereby unfairly diverting trade to it from competitors who do not make use of same or similar acts or practices; to the substantial injury of competition in commerce:

Held, That such acts and practices were to the prejudice of the public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition.

Mr. S. Brogdyne Teu II for the Commission.

Holland & Holland, of Dayton, Ohio, for respondent.

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that the Wolf Creek Soap Company, an Ohio corporation, hereinafter referred to as respondent, has been and is using unfair methods of competition in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in said act, and it appearing to said Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent, Wolf Creek Soap Company, is a corporation organized and doing business under the laws of the State of Ohio, having its principal place of business in the city of Dayton, State of Ohio. It is now, and has been for more than one year last past, engaged in the manufacture and in the sale and distribution of soap in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of its said business, respondent is now and has been in substantial competition with other corporations, and with individuals, firms, and partnerships likewise engaged in the business of manufacturing and selling soaps and other household novelties in commerce among and between the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 3. When said products are sold, respondent transports, or causes same to be transported, from its place of business in the State of Ohio to purchasers thereof located in States of the United States other than the State of Ohio, and in the District of Columbia. There has been for more than one year last past, and still is, a constant current of trade and commerce in said products so sold by respondent between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

Complaint

PAR. 4. Respondent in soliciting the sale and in the selling of its commodities, and for the purpose of creating a demand on the part of the consuming public for certain commodities, has advertised its commodities through the media of price lists and other printed matter published, issued and circulated through the United States mails to its customers and prospective customers in the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 5. In the aforesaid ways and by the aforesaid means, respondent makes and has made to the general public false and misleading statements with reference to the commodities offered for sale by it. Many articles and items of merchandise are priced and described as possessing retail prices and values greatly in excess of the respondent's actual selling price to the retailers or other purchasers, and greatly in excess of the actual value thereof. A number of the said items and articles of merchandise described as aforesaid have fictitious retail prices stamped on the product itself or printed on the labels attached thereto, or on the containers in which they are offered for sale and sold to the public.

PAR. 6. Representative of such statements and representations made by respondent on the containers regarding the selling price and value of the commodities thus offered by it for sale, are the following: "Majestic Assortment of Toilet Soaps—Estimated total value $1.00;" "Majestic Baby Castile Soap—Price $.50;" "Lady Estel Cold Cream Soap Combination—Price 75¢;" and "Dr. Bernard's Medicated Health Soap Combination—Price 75¢."

On other labels and cartons used by the respondent many other fictitious retail prices are imprinted. As a result of the use of such fictitious price marks as described, the respondent has led the members of the purchasing public to mistakenly believe that said soaps have retail values approximating said fictitious prices and are made from superior ingredients and are of superior quality.

As a result of the use of the words "Dr. Bernard's" the purchasing public is led into the mistaken and erroneous belief that a medical doctor was, or is, connected with the formation of the formula from which the so-called "Dr. Bernard's Medicated Health Soap Combination" is made, and that said soap has ingredients of such character as to give it substantial therapeutic value as a true medicated soap.

PAR. 7. In truth and in fact, the Majestic Assortment of Toilet Soaps is sold to retail dealers for 8¢ per unit; Majestic Baby Castile Soap is sold to retail dealers for 8¢ per unit; Lady Estel Cold Cream Soap Combination is sold to retail dealers for 8¢ per unit; and Dr. Bernard's Medicated Health Soap is sold to retail dealers for 8¢ per unit.

All of said soaps are in fact made from cheap and inferior ingredients and said soaps themselves are of cheap and inferior quality and are not of such quality as to justify a retail price in any way closely approximating the retail price or value represented.

Further, in truth and in fact, no doctor or physician was in any way connected with the discovery of the formula for, or is now in any way connected with the manufacture of, the so-called "Dr. Bernard's Medicated Health Soap." Said soap does not contain any ingredients that are of therapeutic character in such quantity, if at all, as to give said soap any therapeutic value.

PAR. 8. The respective items above referred to are usually and regularly sold to retail dealers and peddlers for the price indicated in paragraph 7.. The said retail prices at which the products are actually sold to retail customers do not appear on the containers.

PAR. 9. Over a period of many years, manufacturers in many trades have adopted and followed the custom of marking or stamping on an article or item of manufacture, or on the carton thereof, the retail price at which the said manufacturer suggests that the retailer should sell the item or article to the ultimate consumer or purchaser. This suggested retail price so stamped or marked is intended to represent the cost to the manufacturer of the article, plus a reasonable profit for the manufacturer and retailer, and, consequently, to represent the approximate retail sale value of the item. The public generally understands this custom, and has been lead to and does place its confidence in the price marking so stamped and the representations so made as to the quality of the product, to the extent that it purchases a substantial volume of merchandise in reliance upon this aforesaid custom.

PAR. 10. For many years a substantial part of the consuming public has had and has expressed a preference for soaps and for similar household articles which are composed of superior ingredients, and which are produced by the manufacturers thereof with the intent and design of selling said products for prices in excess of the general and usual range of prices for similar products or for products made of inferior ingredients. Said manufacturers, following the custom herein detailed, have marked or stamped the suggested retail price on said products as indicating the superior quality and character of the products and their higher value.

Whenever a genuinely superior product so stamped or marked with the retail price thereon is offered for sale at a substantially reduced price, the general purchasing public is lead to believe and does believe that in purchasing said product it is securing a bargain not ordinarily obtainable in the usual course of trade. The purchasing public has a preference for purchasing genuinely superior products sold at less than the customary retail price thereof over ordinary products sold for their regular price, which is lower than the normal retail value of the superior products in the customary course of trade:

PAR. 11. The retail prices so stamped or printed as aforesaid upon respondent's products are greatly in excess of the selling price of the said items or articles or merchandise by the retailer to the consuming public and are in excess of their true and actual value. The retail prices so stamped or printed as aforesaid are false and fictitious and in no sense represent either the true value or the selling price of the articles so price-marked.

PAR. 12. The aforesaid false and misleading advertising and representations, together with the aforesaid false and fictitious price-markings on the part of the respondent, place in the hands of the aforesaid peddlers and retailers buying for resale, an instrument and means whereby said peddlers and retailers may commit a fraud upon a substantial portion of the consuming public, by enabling such dealers to represent and offer for sale and sell respondent's soaps as being genuinely superior products produced by the manufacturer thereof with the intent and purpose of selling the said products in the usual course of trade to the general consuming public at and for approximately the retail price stamped on said products or on their containers.

PAR. 13. There are among the competitors of the respondent in commerce, as described in paragraph 2 above, manufacturers and distributors of like and similar products who truthfully advertise and represent the nature, merit, and value of their respective products. There are also among the competitors of the respondent manufacturers and distributors of like and similar products who refrain from representing, by fictitious price markings, that the merchandise offered for sale by them has merit or value that it does not have.

PAR. 14. The effect of the foregoing false and misleading representations and acts of the respondent in selling and offering for sale such items of merchandise as hereinbefore referred to, is to mislead a substantial portion of the purchasing and consuming public in the several States of the United States by inducing them to erroneously and mistakenly believe:

1. That the various soaps sold and distributed by respondent were and are of superior value and were and are made and compounded by respondent with the intent and purpose that said products should be sold at retail prices closely approximating the prices stamped thereon.

Findings

25 F. T. C.

2. That the said products, because of the price marks stamped or fixed thereon, are composed of superior ingredients and are products which ordinarily retail in the usual course of trade for prices closely approximating the prices stamped on the merchandise.

3. That a medical doctor is connected with the compounding and manufacturing of Dr. Bernard's Medicated Health Soap; that said product is made under the formula of a medical doctor; and that said product has substantial therapeutic value.

PAR. 15. The foregoing false and misleading statements and representations on the part of respondent have induced, and still induce, a substantial number of retail merchants, as well as the consumer purchasers of said commodities, to buy the products offered for sale, sold, and distributed by respondent, on account of the aforesaid erroneous and mistaken beliefs. As a result thereof, trade has been diverted from those competitors of respondent engaged in similar businesses, referred to in paragraph 13 above. As a consequence thereof, substantial injury has been and is being done by respondent to competition in commerce between and among the various States of the United States.

PAR. 16. The aforementioned methods, acts, and practices of respondent are all to the prejudice of the public and respondent's competitors, as hereinabove alleged. Said methods, acts, and practices constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914.

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, on April 26, 1937, issued and served its complaint in this proceeding upon respondent, Wolf Creek Soap Company, charging it with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of the provisions of said act. After the issuance of said complaint and the filing of respondent's answer thereto, a stipulation as to the facts was entered into between W. T. Kelley, Chief Counsel of the Commission, and George F. Holland, counsel for respondent, which said stipulation was thereafter approved by the Commission. Thereafter the proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on the said complaint and answer thereto, and the stipulation as to the facts (respondent having waived the filing of a brief); and the Commission

having duly considered same, and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public, and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. The respondent, Wolf Creek Soap Company, is an Ohio corporation organized and doing business by virtue of and under the laws of the State of Ohio.

PAR. 2. Respondent has been for more than one year last past engaged in the business of manufacturing, selling, and distributing soap to retailers and peddlers, and direct to the consuming public.

PAR. 3. In the sale of said product respondent has transported or caused the same to be transported from its principal place of business in the State of Ohio to purchasers thereof located in States of the United States other than the State from which shipment originated, and in the District of Columbia.

There has been for more than one year last past, and still is, a constant current of trade and commerce in said soap so sold and distributed by respondent between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 4. For more than one year last past the respondent has been engaged in substantial competition with other individuals, partnerships, firms, and corporations engaged in the manufacture and distribution of like and similar products and in the sale thereof in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 5. In the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid the respondent, in soliciting the sale of and in selling its product, and for the purpose of creating a demand on the part of the consuming public for said product, has for more than one year last past caused its product to be advertised through the media of price lists and other printed matter published, issued, and circulated through the United States mails to its customers and prospective customers in the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia. In said ways and by said means, respondent has made to the general public many unfair, false, and misleading statements with reference to the commodities offered by it for sale.

PAR. 6. Many articles and items of merchandise listed in said price lists have been described as possessing retail values or prices many times in excess of the actual selling price by the respondent to the retailer or other purchaser, and many times in excess of the actual retail price thereof.

A number of the said items and articles of merchandise described in said price lists have retail prices stamped or printed thereon, on the labels attached thereto, or on the containers in which they have been offered for sale and sold to the public.

The retail prices so stamped or printed as aforesaid are many times in excess of the actual selling price of the said items or articles of merchandise sold by the peddler or retailer to the consuming public, and are many times in excess of their true and actual value. The retail prices so stamped or printed as aforesaid are false and fictitious and in no sense represent either the true value or the true selling price of the articles so price marked.

PAR. 7. Among the misleading and fictitious price markings, false branding, and mislabeling appearing on cartons and containers and described by respondent in its price lists and other advertising matter are the following:

1. "Majestic Assortment of Toilet Soaps—estimated total value $1," whereas this item is sold by respondent at retail for 8¢ per unit.
2. "Majestic Baby Castile Soap—price 50¢," whereas this item is sold by respondent at retail at 8¢ per unit.
3. "Lady Estel Cold Cream Soap Combination—price 75¢," whereas this item is sold by respondent at retail for 8¢ per unit, and
4. "Dr. Bernard's Medicated Health Soap Combination—price 75¢," whereas this item is sold by respondent at retail for 8¢ per unit.

PAR. 8. The false and misleading advertising and representations hereinabove set out together with the false and fictitious price markings herein set out on the part of the respondent place in the hands of the aforesaid peddlers and retailers buying for resale an instrument and means whereby said peddlers and retailers may, and do, commit a fraud upon a substantial part of the consuming public by enabling such dealers to represent and offer for sale and sell the said soaps as genuinely superior products produced by the manufacturers thereof with the intent and purpose of selling the said products in the usual course of trade to the general consuming public at and for the retail price stamped on the products or on their containers.

PAR. 9. Over a period of many years manufacturers have in many trades formed the custom of marking or stamping on the article or item of manufacture, or on the container thereof, the retail price at which said manufacturer suggests the retailer should sell the item or article to the ultimate consumer purchaser. This suggested retail price so stamped or marked is intended to represent the cost of the manufacture of the article, plus a reasonable profit for the manufacturer and retailer and, consequently, to represent the approximate retail sales value of the item. The range of the suggested retail price is intended by the manufacturer to be indicative of the quality and character of the ingredients used and the process by which the item is manufactured. The public generally understands the custom herein detailed and has been led to, and does, place its confidence in the price markings so stamped and the representations thereby made as to the quality of the product to the extent that it purchases a substantial volume of merchandise in reliance on this aforesaid custom.

PAR. 10. For many years a substantial portion of the consuming public has expressed, and has had, a marked preference for soaps and toilet articles that are composed of superior ingredients and are produced by the manufacturer thereof with the intent and the design of selling said products for the prices in excess of the general and usual range of prices for similar products manufactured with the usual and customary ingredients. Said manufacturers, following the custom herein detailed, have marked or stamped the suggested retail prices on said products as an indication of the superior quality and character of the product in its resulting higher value. Whenever a genuinely superior product so stamped or marked with the retail price thereof is offered for sale at a substantially reduced price the general purchasing public has been led to believe, and does believe, that in purchasing said product it is securing a bargain not ordinarily obtainable in the usual course of trade. The purchasing public has a preference for purchasing genuinely superior products sold at less than the customary retail value thereof over ordinary products sold for the regular price, which is lower than the normal retail price of the superior product in the customary course of trade.

PAR. 11. Through the use of the words "Dr. Bernard's" the purchasing public is led into the mistaken and erroneous belief that a medical doctor was or is connected with the derivation of the formula from which the so-called "Dr. Bernard's Medicated Health Soap Combination" was and is made and that said soap has ingredients of such character as to give it substantial therapeutic value as a true medicated soap.

No doctor or physician was or is in any way connected with the derivation of the formula for, or in any way connected with the manufacture of, the so-called "Dr. Bernard's Medicated Health Soap Combination." The said soap does not contain any ingredients that are of therapeutic nature in such quantity, if present at all, as to give the said soap any therapeutic value.

PAR. 12. The effect of the foregoing false and misleading representations and acts of the respondent in selling and offering for sale the items of merchandise herein described is to mislead a substantial portion of the consuming public in the several States of the United States and in the District of Columbia by inducing them to mistakenly and erroneously believe:

1. That the various items of merchandise described in respondent's price lists and other advertising media are of superior value and are sold and distributed by respondent with the intent and purpose that said products should be sold at retail prices closely approximating the prices stamped thereon.

2. That the said products, because of the price marks affixed or stamped thereon, are composed of superior ingredients and are products which ordinarily retail in the usual course of trade for prices closely approximating the prices stamped on the merchandise.

3. That a medical doctor or doctor of medicine derived the formula from which the so-called "Dr. Bernard's Medicated Health Soap Combination" is made or is connected with the manufacture of said soap.

PAR. 13. The use of each and all the foregoing false and misleading statements and representations as herein set out has had, and now has, the tendency and capacity to mislead and deceive distributors and the purchasing public into the erroneous and mistaken belief that said statements and representations are true, and has induced, and now induces, members of the public to purchase the products of the said respondent on account of such erroneous beliefs. Said representations have thereby unfairly diverted trade to said respondent from competitors who do not make use of the same or similar acts and practices and substantial injury has been done by respondent to competition in commerce among and between the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

CONCLUSION

The aforementioned acts and practices of the respondent, Wolf Creek Soap Company, a corporation, are to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

the respondent herein, Wolf Creek Soap Company, and W. T. Kelley, Chief Counsel for the Commission, which provides, among other things, that without further evidence or other intervening procedure, the Commission may issue and serve upon the respondent herein findings as to the facts and conclusion based thereon and an order disposing of the proceeding, and the Commission having made its findings as to the facts and conclusion that said respondent has violated the provisions of an act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes,"

It is ordered, That the respondent, Wolf Creek Soap Company, its officers, representatives, agents, and employees, in connection with the offering for sale, sale, and distribution of soap in commerce among and between the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia, do forthwith cease and desist from:

1. Representing, directly or indirectly, through use of the word "Doctor" or the abbreviation "Dr.," alone or in conjunction with any other word or words or through the use of any other word or words of similar import, meaning, and effect, or through any other means or device, or in any other manner, that any of its soap products is made pursuant to the formula of, or under the supervision and direction of, any doctor;

2. Representing, directly or indirectly, through the use of the word "Medicated," alone or in conjunction with any other word or words, or through the use of any other word or words of similar import, meaning and effect, or through any other means or device, or in any other manner that any of its soaps and soap products have any medicinal and therapeutic properties or value unless said products actually contain ingredients of a medicinal and therapeutic nature in such quantity as to give said products a substantial medicinal and therapeutic value;

3. Representing, directly or indirectly, through use of fictitious or exaggerated price markings and labels, or through any other means or device, or in any manner, that its soaps and soap products have retail values or prices in excess of their actual retail values or prices or in excess of the prices at which they are ordinarily sold or offered for sale at retail.

It is further ordered, That respondent shall, within 60 days from the date of service upon it of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which it has complied with the order herein set forth.

IN THE MATTER OF WOLVERINE GUM, INC.

COMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION
OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 26, 1914

Docket 3145. Complaint, June 4, 1937—Decision, June 29, 1937

Where a corporation engaged in manufacture, sale, and distribution of chewing gum including assortments which were so packed and assembled as to involve, or which might involve, use of a lottery scheme when sold and distributed to ultimate consumers thereof, and which consisted of a number of individually wrapped penny sticks of gum, of which a relatively few of the individual wrappers differed from that of the majority, together with a number of other articles of merchandise, to be given as prizes to chance purchasers of individual sticks, wrappers of which, upon opening, were thus found to differ as aforesaid—

Sold, to wholesalers and jobbers for display and resale by retailer-customers to purchasing public, in accordance with said sales plan, said assortments, and thereby supplied to and placed in the hands of others means of conducting lotteries in the sale of its products in accordance with such plan, contrary to public policy long recognized by the common law and criminal statutes, and to an established public policy of the United States Government, and in competition with many who, unwilling to sell gum or other confections so packed and assembled, or otherwise arranged and packed for sale to purchasing public as to involve a game of chance, refrain therefrom;

With result that many dealers in and ultimate purchasers of chewing gum or other confections were attracted by said method and manner of packing said gum and by element of chance involved in sale thereof as aforesaid, and were thereby induced to purchase such gum, thus packed and sold by it, in preference to gum or other confections offered and sold by said competitors who do not use same or equivalent methods, and with tendency and capacity, because of said game of chance, to divert to it trade and custom from its said competitors who do not use same or equivalent practice or method, exclude from trade involved all competitors who are unwilling to and do not use same or equivalent method as unlawful, lessen competition in said trade, and tend to create a monopoly thereof in it and in such other distributors of such products as do use same or equivalent practice or method, deprive purchasing public of benefit of free competition in said chewing gum trade, and eliminate from said trade all actual, and exclude therefrom all potential, competitors who do not adopt and use such or an equivalent method:

Held, That such acts and practices were to the prejudice of the public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition.

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that Wolverine Gum, Inc., a corporation, hereinafter referred to as respondent, has been and is using unfair methods of competition in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in said act of Congress, and it appearing to said Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. The respondent, Wolverine Gum, Inc., is a corporation organized and doing business under the laws of the State of Michigan, with its principal office and place of business located at 5625 Lauderdale Avenue, in the city of Detroit, State of Michigan. Respondent is now, and for several years last past has been, engaged in the manufacture of chewing gum and in the sale and distribution thereof to wholesale dealers, jobbers, and retail dealers located at points in the various States of the United States. Respondent causes and has caused its said products when sold to be transported from its principal place of business in the city of Detroit, State of Michigan, to purchasers thereof in Michigan and in other States of the United States and the District of Columbia at their respective points of location. There is now, and has been for several years last past, a course of trade and commerce by said respondent in such chewing gum between and among the States of the United States. In the course and conduct of said business, respondent is in competition with other corporations and with partnerships and individuals engaged in the manufacture of chewing gum and other confections and in the sale and distribution thereof in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and the District of Columbia.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of its business, as described in paragraph 1 hereof, respondent sells and has sold to wholesale and retail dealers assortments of chewing gum so packed and assembled as to involve, or which are designed to or may involve, the use of a lottery scheme when sold and distributed to the ultimate consumers thereof. Such assortments are composed of a number of sticks of chewing gum and a number of other articles of merchandise, which said other articles of merchandise are to be given as prizes to purchasers of individual sticks of chewing gum in the following manner: The said sticks of chewing gum in said assortments are wrapped in individual wrappers, and the majority of the said wrappers are identical but a small number of said wrappers are different from the majority of the wrappers. The individual sticks of chewing gum retail at the price of 1¢ each, and the purchaser who procures a stick of chewing gum contained within a wrapper different from the majority is entitled to receive free of charge and is to be given as a prize one of the other articles of merchandise in said assortments. The fact as to which wrappers are different from the majority is effectively concealed from purchasers and prospective purchasers until a selection has been made and the wrapper removed. The articles of merchandise other than chewing gum contained in said assortments are thus distributed to purchasers of chewing gum from said assortments wholly by lot or chance.

PAR. 3. The wholesale dealers and jobbers to whom respondent sells its assortments resell said assortments to retail dealers, and said retail dealers and the retail dealers to whom respondent sells direct expose said assortments for sale and sell said chewing gum to the purchasing public in accordance with the aforesaid sales plan. Respondent thus supplies to and places in the hands of others the means of conducting lotteries in the sale of its products in accordance with the sales plan hereinabove set forth; and said sales plan has the capacity and tendency of inducing purchasers thereof to purchase respondent's said products in preference to chewing gum or other confections offered for sale and sold by its competitors.

PAR. 4. The sale of said chewing gum to the purchasing public in the manner above alleged involves a game of chance or the sale of a chance to procure other articles of merchandise. The use by respondent of said method in the sale of chewing gum, and the sale of chewing gum by and through the use thereof and by the aid of said method, is a practice of the sort which the common law and criminal statutes have long deemed contrary to public policy, and is contrary to an established public policy of the Government of the United States. The use by respondent of said method has the tendency unduly to hinder competition or create monopoly in this, to wit: that the use thereof has the tendency and capacity to exclude from the chewing gum trade competitors who do not adopt and use the same method or an equivalent or similar method involving the same or an equivalent or similar element of chance or lottery scheme. Many persons, firms, and corporations who make and sell chewing gum or other confections in competition with respondent, as above alleged, are unwilling to offer for sale or sell chewing gum or other confections so packed and assembled as above alleged, or otherwise arranged and packed for sale to the purchasing public so as to involve a game of chance, and such competitors refrain therefrom.

PAR. 5. Many dealers in and ultimate purchasers of chewing gum or other confections are attracted by respondent's said method and manner of packing said chewing gum and by the element of chance involved in the sale thereof in the manner above described, and are thereby induced to purchase said chewing gum so packed and sold by respondent in preference to chewing gum or other confections offered for sale and sold by said competitors of respondent who do not use the same or an equivalent method. The use of said method by respondent has the tendency and capacity, because of said game of chance, to divert to respondent trade and custom from its said competitors who do not use the same or an equivalent method; to exclude from said chewing gum trade all competitors who are unwilling to and who do not use the same or an equivalent method because the same is unlawful; to lessen competition in said chewing gum trade and to tend to create a monopoly of said chewing gum trade in respondent and in such other distributors of chewing gum or other confections as use the same or an equivalent method; and to deprive the purchasing public of the benefit of free competition in said chewing gum trade. The use of said method by respondent has the tendency and capacity to eliminate from said chewing gum trade all actual competitors, and to exclude therefrom all potential competitors who do not adopt and use said method or an equivalent method.

PAR. 6. The aforementioned method, acts and practices of respondent are all to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors, as hereinabove alleged. Said method, acts, and practices constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

answer thereto; and the Commission having duly considered the same and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. The respondent, Wolverine Gum, Inc., is a corporation organized and doing business under the laws of the State of Michigan, with its principal office and place of business located at 5625 Lauderdale Avenue, in the city of Detroit, State of Michigan. Respondent is now, and for several years last past has been engaged in the manufacture of chewing gum and in the sale and distribution thereof to wholesale dealers, jobbers, and retail dealers located at points in the various States of the United States. Respondent causes and has caused its said products when sold to be transported from its principal place of business in the city of Detroit, State of Michigan, to purchasers thereof in Michigan and in other States of the United States and the District of Columbia at their respective points of location. There is now, and has been for several years last past, a course of trade and commerce by said respondent in such chewing gum between and among the States of the United States. In the course and conduct of said business, respondent is in competition with other corporations and with partnerships and individuals engaged in the manufacture of chewing gum and other confections and in the sale and distribution thereof in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and the District of Columbia.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of its business, as described in paragraph 1 hereof, respondent sells and has sold to wholesale and retail dealers assortments of chewing gum so packed and assembled as to involve, or which are designed to or may involve, the use of a lottery scheme when sold and distributed to the ultimate consumers thereof. Such assortments are composed of a number of sticks of chewing gum and a number of other articles of merchandise, which said other articles of merchandise are to be given as prizes to purchasers of individual sticks of chewing gum in the following manner: The said sticks of chewing gum in said assortments are wrapped in individual wrappers, and the majority of the said wrappers are identical, but a small number of said wrappers are different from the majority of the wrappers. The individual sticks of chewing gum retail at the price of 1¢ each, and the purchaser who procures a stick of chewing gum contained within a wrapper different from the ma-majority is entitled to receive free of charge and is to be given as a prize one of the other articles of merchandise in said assortments. The fact as to which wrappers are different from the majority is effectively concealed from purchasers and prospective purchasers until a selection has been made and the wrapper removed. The articles of merchandise other than chewing gum contained in said assortments are thus distributed to purchasers of chewing gum from said assortments wholly by lot or chance.

PAR. 3. The wholesale dealers and jobbers to whom respondent sells its assortments resell said assortments to retail dealers, and said retail dealers and the retail dealers to whom respondent sells direct expose said assortments for sale and sell said chewing gum to the purchasing public in accordance with the aforesaid sales plan. Respondent thus supplies to and places in the hands of others the means of conducting lotteries in the sale of its products in accordance with the sales plan hereinabove set forth; and said sales plan has the capacity and tendency of inducing purchasers thereof to purchase respondent's said products in preference to chewing gum or other confections offered for sale and sold by its competitors.

PAR. 4. The sale of said chewing gum to the purchasing public in the manner above found involves a game of chance or the sale of a chance to procure other articles of merchandise. The use by respondent of said method in the sale of chewing gum, and the sale of chewing gum by and through the use thereof and by the aid of said method, is a practice of the sort which the common law and criminal statutes have long deemed contrary to public policy, and is contrary to an established public policy of the Government of the United States. The use by respondent of said method has the tendency unduly to hinder competition or create monopoly in this, to wit: that the use thereof has the tendency and capacity to exclude from the chewing gum trade competitors who do not adopt and use the same method or an equivalent or similar method involving the same or an equivalent or similar element of chance or lottery scheme. Many persons, firms, and corporations who make and sell chewing gum or other confections in competition with respondents are unwilling to offer for sale or sell chewing gum or other confections so packed and assembled as above described, or otherwise arranged and packed for sale to the purchasing public so as to involve a game of chance, and such competitors refrain therefrom.

PAR. 5. Many dealers in and ultimate purchasers of chewing gum or other confections are attracted by respondent's said method and manner of packing said chewing gum and by the element of chance involved in the sale thereof in the manner above described, and are thereby induced to purchase said chewing gum so packed and sold by respondent in preference to chewing gum or other confections offered for sale and sold by said competitors of respondent who do not use the same or an equivalent method. The use of said method by respondent has the tendency and capacity because of said game of chance to divert to respondent trade and custom from its said competitors who do not use the same or an equivalent method; to exclude from said chewing gum trade all competitors who are unwilling to and who do not use the same or an equivalent method because the same is unlawful; to lessen competition in said chewing gum trade and to tend to create a monopoly of said chewing gum trade in respondent and in such other distributors of chewing gum or other confections as use the same or an equivalent method; and to deprive the purchasing public of the benefit of free competition in said chewing gum trade. The use of said method by respondent has the tendency and capacity to eliminate from said chewing gum trade all actual competitors, and to exclude therefrom all potential competitors who do not adopt and use said method or an equivalent method.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondent, Wolverine Gum, Inc., a corporation, are to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

This proceeding having been heard by the Federal Trade Commission upon the complaint of the Commission and the answer filed herein on June 10, 1937, by the respondent admitting all the material allegations of the complaint to be true and waiving hearing on the charges set forth in said complaint, and the Commission having made its findings as to the facts and its conclusion that said respondent has violated the provisions of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

It is ordered, That the respondent, Wolverine Gum, Inc., a corporation its officers, representatives, agents, and employees, in connection with the offering for sale, sale, and distribution of chewing gum in interstate commerce, do forthwith cease and desist from:

Order

1. Selling and distributing to jobbers and wholesale dealers for resale to retail dealers, or to retail dealers direct, chewing gum so packed and assembled that sales of such chewing gum to the general public are to be made, or are designed to be made, by means of a lottery, gaming device, or gift enterprise.

2. Supplying to or placing in the hands of wholesale dealers and jobbers or retail dealers assortments of chewing gum which are used, or which are designed to be used, without alteration or rearrangement of the contents of such assortments, to conduct a lottery, gaming device, or gift enterprise in the sale or distribution of the chewing gum contained in said assortments to the public.

3. Packing or assembling in the same package or assortment of chewing gum for sale to the public at retail pieces of chewing gum contained within individual wrappers of the same general design and appearance but differing in particular respects, together with other articles of merchandise, which other articles of merchandise are to be given as prizes to the purchaser procuring a piece of chewing gum contained within a wrapper of a particular design, pattern, or composition.

It is further ordered, That the respondent, Wolverine Gum, Inc., a corporation, shall within 30 days after service upon it of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which it has complied with the order to cease and desist hereinabove set forth.

IN THE MATTER OF

CRYSTALSTONE RADIO CORPORATION AND SAMUEL
GLICK, INDIVIDUALLY, AND TRADING AS PONTIAC
RADIO COMPANYCOMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 26, 1914*Docket 2225. Complaint, Aug. 18, 1934—Decision, June 30, 1937*

Where the names and symbols "Edison," "Victor," and "Brunswick," as names and designations of well-known, famous, or long-established individuals or companies and corporations, had long been extensively advertised and featured by the various owners thereof and had come to be standard brands and symbols when used as company, corporate, and trade names and as well-known marks and brands on radio sets, radio parts, and like products which, thus marked, had a fixed and stable value in the trade and industry generally throughout the United States and foreign countries, and were relied upon by purchasing public, when used on radio sets and like products, and in said industries as indicating high standard, reliable, and genuine products, and use thereof influenced purchase of such products and increased sales, value of which were increased by number of dealers in said products, and said names, letters, and symbols, attached to said products, had value to the thousands of dealers engaged in the sale and distribution of such standard brand products and were valuable to the owners thereof in their use and employment in commerce; and thereafter, a corporation and an individual, officer, and director thereof, engaged in the manufacture, sale, and distribution of radio sets, upon which they placed, and caused to be placed, escutcheons and name plates with names, letters, marks, brands, and symbols etched or stamped thereon, to designate the makers or brand names of said sets; in furtherance of a scheme to deceive the public and compete unfairly with other manufacturers of and dealers in such products—

Adopted and made use of names, marks, brands, and symbols of corporations and individuals well-known and long-established in the radio and like industries, without the authority of the legal owners and users thereof, and included among such names, marks, brands, and symbols, thus adopted and used by it, "Edison," "Victor," and "Brunswick," and such colorable imitations and simulations thereof as "Edison" with representation of a bell, "Victor International," and "Bronswick," and made, sold, and shipped in interstate commerce their said sets, upon which were placed escutcheons and name plates bearing such names, marks, brands, and symbols;

With result that public was led to believe that products thus sold, marked and identified were those of the well-known companies or interests referred to and identified, there was an appropriation by them of the good will of, and an unfair diversion of business from, such competitor companies and interests and from other competitors who do not resort to such practices, their said goods were given a salability which they would not otherwise have, and they, themselves, had an advantage over their competitors who do not similarly misrepresent true origin of their goods and conceal the same under a reputable, but false, origin, and with effect of deceiving public purchasing said products into the false belief that they originated with well-known and reputable concerns, and of placing in the hands of others by whom their said products were sold, means whereby injury might be and was done to competitors dealing in genuine products honestly marked; to the injury of the lawful owners and users of said marks and symbols of said competitor companies and interests, and of competitors, and of manufacturers of and dealers in the legitimate products, and of substantial competition in commerce, and to the prejudice and injury of the public: Held, That such acts and practices were to the prejudice of the public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition.

Mr. Carrel F. Rhodes for the Commission.

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that Crystalstone Radio Corporation and Samuel Glick, individually and trading as Pontiac Radio Company and as Crystalstone Radio Corporation, hereinafter referred to as respondents, have been or are using unfair methods of competition in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in said act, and it appearing to said Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint, stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. (a) Respondent, Crystalstone Radio Corporation, is a corporation organized and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the State of New York in November 1933, with its principal office and place of business located at 611 Broadway in the city of New York, State of New York. The officers of respondent corporation are Samuel Glick, president and treasurer, and Edith Marcus, secretary. Since its incorporation, said respondent has been engaged in the business of manufacturing or assembling, and selling and distributing radio sets to the retail trade. Respondent sells its said radio sets to retail dealers located in various States of the United States other than in the State of New York, and when so sold respondent causes said radio sets to be transported from the city of New York, State of New York, through and into other States of the United States, to the purchasers thereof at their respective locations. In the course and conduct of its said business the respondent is in competition with various other persons, partnerships, and corporations engaged in the business of manufacturing or assembling and selling and distributing radio sets to retail dealers and the public in interstate commerce.

(b) Respondent, Samuel Glick, is an individual and from June 1933 to November 1933 was engaged in business under the trade name and style of Pontiac Radio Company, with his principal office and place of business located at 44 Bond Street in the city of New York, State of New York. Said trade name Pontiac Radio Company is owned by said respondent Glick, and is registered as a trade name in the County Clerk's Office of the County of New York, State of New York. During the time that he was engaged in business under the trade name Pontiac Radio Company, respondent Glick manufactured or assembled radio sets and sold them to the retail trade. Respondent Glick sold the radio sets manufactured or assembled by him to retail dealers located in various States of the United States other than in the State of New York, and when so sold respondent caused said radio sets to be transported from the city of New York, State of New York, through and into other States of the United States to the purchasers thereof at their respective locations. In the course and conduct of his said business respondent Glick was in competition with various other persons, partnerships, and corporations engaged in the business of manufacturing or assembling radio sets, and selling them to retail dealers in interstate commerce. Respondent Glick still owns the name "Pontiac Radio Company," which is registered as a trade name, as heretofore set forth.

Immediately upon the incorporation of respondent, Crystaltone Radio Corporation, said respondent succeeded to the business theretofore conducted by the respondent Glick, under the name and style of Pontiac Radio Company and said business is now being conducted by respondent corporation. Respondent Samuel Glick at all times since the organization of the respondent Crystaltone Radio Corporation has been president thereof, has owned and controlled substantially all of its issued and outstanding capital stock, and has controlled and dominated said Crystaltone Radio Corporation. Said respondent Crystaltone Radio Corporation, although a corporation, is a means by which said respondent Samuel Glick as an individual carries on the business hereinbefore described of said Crystaltone Radio Corporation.

PAR. 2. Respondent, Crystaltone Radio Corporation, and respondent Samuel Glick, in the course and conduct of their respective businesses have adopted and followed the scheme or method of appropriating the names of well-known manufacturers and applying them to the radio sets manufactured or assembled and sold by them, thereby appropriating to themselves their goodwill by the sale of their radio sets to the purchasing public as sets made by such manufacturers.

Complaint

PAR. 3. For more than thirty years prior to his death on October 18, 1931, Thomas A. Edison had been known and recognized throughout the various States of the United States and foreign countries as the inventor, patentee, owner, and manufacturer of numerous electrical devices of various kinds and descriptions, and of machines for the reproduction of the human voice, which have acquired a wide and favorable reputation, and are in great demand by the trade and purchasing public who desire Edison products. Among the machines for the reproduction of the human voice manufactured by companies which the said Thomas A. Edison organized and controlled are phonographs, dictaphone and transcribing machines, radios, combination radios and phonographs, and many other articles of various kinds and character such as storage batteries, spark plugs, ignition coils, and household electrical appliances. Many of the machines and articles above referred to bear the name "Edison" as part of their brand names, and said name "Edison" has acquired a valuable good will as identifying the manufacturer of such machines or articles.

Among the companies organized and controlled by the said Thomas A. Edison before his death is Thomas A. Edison, Inc., which said company is still engaged in the manufacture of many of the machines and articles invented and developed by Thomas A. Edison. Thomas A. Edison, Inc., during the years 1928 to 1930, inclusive, manufactured and sold radio sets valued at many millions of dollars, and during the said period spent several millions of dollars in advertising its said radio products. All of the radio sets manufactured and sold by Thomas A. Edison, Inc., featured the name "Edison" as part of their brand name.

PAR. 4. Respondents, Crystalstone Radio Corporation and Samuel Glick, individually and trading as Pontiac Radio Company and as Crystalstone Radio Corporation, in the course and conduct of their business have purchased what is known as escutcheon plates, which escutcheon plates bear various names, and which are attached in a prominent place to radio sets. Respondents have purchased and attached to radio sets manufactured or assembled, and sold by them, escutcheon plates bearing the name "Edison" together with the representation of a bell. Respondents have no authority or license from Thomas A. Edison, Inc., to use the name "Edison" on the radio sets manufactured or assembled, and sold by them, and their said use of that name in the manner described has a capacity and tendency to and does mislead and deceive the trade and purchasing public into the erroneous belief that the radio sets manufactured, or assembled and sold, by respondents are radio sets which have been manufactured by Thomas A. Edison, Inc., and to cause the trade and purchasing public to buy said radio sets in that belief.

PAR. 5. For many years last past the Victor Talking Machine Company, Camden, N. J., has been manufacturing and selling phonographs and phonograph records, which phonographs have acquired a wide and favorable reputation, and have been in great demand by the trade and purchasing public. During all this period the phonographs, phonograph records, and other articles manufactured and sold by said company have featured the name "Victor" as part of their brand names, which said name has been attached in a prominent place to said machines. In 1929 the Radio Corporation of America obtained control of said Victor Talking Machine Company, and organized a company under the corporate name RCA Victor Company, which company is engaged in the manufacture and sale of radio sets, combination radio and phonograph sets, and other articles. All of said machines bear the name "Victor," either alone or in combination with other letters or words, in a prominent place on said machines. Said radio sets and combination radio and phonograph sets are sold to the purchasing public by retail dealers throughout the United States. During the past 25 years, the Victor Talking Machine Company and its successor corporation, RCA Victor Company, have spent approximately $70,000,000 advertising their products, and the word "Victor" has always prominently appeared in said advertising. At the present time the RCA Victor Company is advertising its radio sets in a number of magazines having a large national circulation, and in other publications and newspapers.

PAR. 6. Respondents, Crystaltone Radio Corporation and Samuel Glick, individually and trading as Pontiac Radio Company and as Crystaltone Radio Corporation, in the course and conduct of their business, have purchased radio sets with escutcheon plates attached thereto bearing the words "Victor," and "Victor International," which sets they sell to the retail trade. On the escutcheon plates attached to said radio sets the name "Victor" is in large and prominent letters, and the word "International" is in small letters which are not readily seen by a prospective purchaser. Respondents have no authority or license from the RCA Victor Company to use the name "Victor" on the radio sets sold by them, and their said use of that name, in the manner described, has the capacity and tendency to and does mislead and deceive the trade and purchasing public into the erroneous belief that the radio sets sold by respondents are radio sets which have been manufactured by the RCA Victor Company, and to cause the trade and purchasing public to buy said radio sets in that belief.

PAR. 7. During many years last past the Brunswick-Balke-Collender Company has been a large manufacturer of billiard and pocket billiard tables, bowling alleys, and various other articles, and its products have acquired a wide and favorable reputation, and have been in great demand by the trade and purchasing public. During all this period the products manufactured and sold by said company have featured the name "Brunswick" as part of their brand names, which said name has been attached in a prominent place to said products. In 1915 the Brunswick-Balke-Collender Company began the manufacture and sale of phonographs and phonograph records and sometime later began the manufacture and sale of radio sets and combination radio and phonograph sets, on all of which articles the name "Brunswick" was featured in a prominent place on said machines. In 1930 the radio and phonograph division of the business was sold to Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc., which company organized under the corporate name of "Brunswick Radio Corporation" to operate the business. Said latter company obtained the exclusive right to use the name "Brunswick" in connection with said radio sets, phonographs, and accessories thereto. Until January 1, 1933, Brunswick Radio Corporation continued the manufacture and sale of radio sets and combination radio and phonograph sets, on all of which sets the name "Brunswick" was prominently featured. Since January 1, 1933, the manufacture of radio sets has been stopped, but said Brunswick Radio Corporation still owns the manufacturing plants in which said sets were manufactured, and may resume such manufacture at some time in the future. The radio sets and combination radio and phonograph sets manufactured by Brunswick-Balke-Collender Company and Brunswick Radio Corporation were sold to the purchasing public by retail dealers throughout the United States. During all of the time that the Brunswick-Balke-Collender Company and the Brunswick Radio Corporation were manufacturing and selling radio sets and combination radio and phonograph sets, said companies expended large sums of money advertising said sets, and the name "Brunswick" has at all times been prominently displayed in said advertising.

PAR. 8. Respondents, Crystaltone Radio Corporation and Samuel Glick, individually and trading as Pontiac Radio Company and as Crystaltone Corporation, in the course and conduct of their business have purchased radio sets with escutcheon plates attached thereto bearing the word "Bronswick," which sets they resell to the retail trade. The said name "Bronswick" is so nearly like the name "Brunswick" in appearance and sound that it is difficult for a purchaser to distinguish the difference, and the use of said name "Brunswick" by respondents in the manner described on radio sets sold by them has the capacity and tendency to and does mislead and deceive the trade and purchasing public into the erroneous belief that the radio sets sold by respondents are radio sets which have been manufactured by the Brunswick Radio Corporation, and to purchase such radio sets in such erroneous belief.

PAR. 9. The use by respondents on the radio sets manufactured, or assembled, and sold by them of the names "Edison," "Victor," "Victor International," and "Brunswick," in the manner set forth hereinabove is false, deceptive and misleading to the trade and purchasing public, and tends to and does, divert trade to respondents from their said competitors who do not use such false, deceptive and misleading names for the radio sets manufactured, assembled, and sold by them. Thereby substantial injury has been done and is being done by all of the said respondents to substantial competition in interstate commerce.

PAR. 10. The above alleged acts and things done by respondents are each and all of them to the prejudice of the public and respondents' competitors and constitute unfair methods of competition in interstate commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission on the 18th day of August 1934, issued, and served, its complaint in this proceeding upon respondents, Crystaltone Radio Corporation and Samuel Glick, individually, and trading as Pontiac Radio Company, charging them with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of the provisions of said act. The respondents filed a consolidated answer to the complaint with the Commission dated June 12, 1937, in which they admit all the material allegations of the complaint to be true, and waive hearings on the charges set forth in the complaint, and consent that without further evidence or other intervening procedure, the Commission may issue and serve upon them findings as to the facts and conclusion drawn therefrom and an order to cease and desist from the violations of law charged in the complaint.

Thereafter the proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on said complaint and answer thereto; and the Commission having duly considered the matter and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the public interest and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. The respondent, Crystalstone Radio Corporation, is a corporation existing and doing business under the laws of the State of New York. Respondent, Samuel Glick, is an individual operating under the trade name of Pontiac Radio Company, and is also an officer and director of respondent, Crystalstone Radio Corporation. All of the respondents aforesaid have their principal place of business at 44 West 18th Street, New York City, N. Y., and are now, and for several years last past, have been engaged in the manufacture, sale, and distribution of radio sets, upon which said products they place and cause to be placed escutcheons and nameplates, with names, letters, marks, brands, and symbols etched or stamped thereon to designate the makers or brand names of said radio sets. Respondents sell and transport said products so marked from their place of business in the State of New York to purchasers thereof at their respective points of location in the States of the United States other than the State of origin of the shipment, and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 2. For the purpose of selling radio sets and inducing the public to buy said products, the respondent corporation and respondent individual, individually, and as officer, agent, and representative of said respondent corporation, herein set out and described in paragraph 1, have been for several years last past, and are now engaged in a scheme to deceive the public and to compete unfairly with other manufacturers and dealers in radio sets who are in competition with the said respondents in interstate and foreign commerce. In furtherance of said scheme, the respondents have adopted, made, used and sold, and now make, use, sell and ship in interstate commerce to distributors, dealers and others, radio sets upon which are placed escutcheons and nameplates bearing the names, marks, brands, and symbols of corporations and individuals well known and long established in the radio and like industries, which names, marks, brands and symbols were adopted and used, and are now being used, by said respondents and others without authority or consent of the legal owners and users of said names, marks, brands and symbols.

Among the names, marks, brands, and symbols so adopted and used by the respondents are the following:

"Edison" and also "Edison" with the representation of a bell, which is found to be a colorable imitation and simulation of said name "Edison";

"Victor" and also "Victor International," which is found to be a colorable imitation and simulation of said name "Victor";

"Brunswick" and also "Bronswick," which is found to be a colorable imitation and simulation of said name "Brunswick."

Said respondent corporation and said respondent individual, individually, and trading under the name Pontiac Radio Company, and as officer, agent, and representative of said respondent, Crystalltone Radio Corporation, with respect to radio sets and like products marked and branded with the said well known and established names, marks, brands, and symbols hereinabove set out and described, sell and ship said products so marked from their place of business to purchasers thereof located in the District of Columbia and in States other than the State or place of origin of said shipments, in interstate commerce without the authority or consent of the legal owners of said names, marks, brands, and symbols.

PAR. 3. (a) For more than thirty years prior to his death on October 16, 1931, Thomas A. Edison had been known and recognized throughout the various States of the United States and foreign countries as the inventor, patentee, owner, and manufacturer of numerous electrical devices of various kinds and descriptions and of machines for the reproduction of the human voice, which have acquired a wide and favorable reputation and are in great demand by the trade and purchasing public who desire Edison products. Among the machines for the reproduction of the human voice manufactured by companies which the said Thomas A. Edison organized and controlled, are phonographs, dictaphones, and transmitting machines, radios, combination radios and phonographs and many other articles of various kinds and character such as storage batteries, spark plugs, ignition coils, and household electrical appliances. Many of the machines and articles above referred to bear the name "Edison" as part of their brand, and such name "Edison" has acquired a valuable goodwill as identifying the manufacturer of said machines or articles.

Among the companies organized and controlled by the said Thomas A. Edison before his death is Thomas A. Edison, Inc., which said company is still engaged in the manufacture of the machines and articles invented and developed by Thomas A. Edison. Thomas A. Edison, Inc., during the years 1926-30, inclusive, manufactured and sold radio sets valued at many millions of dollars, and during the said period spent several millions of dollars in advertising its said radio products. All the radio sets manufactured and sold by Thomas A. Edison, Inc., feature the name "Edison" as part of their brand name.

The name "Edison" refers to Thomas A. Edison, the great inventor in the electrical field and the pioneer in the talking machine and radio industry, the right to the use of which name was vested in Thomas A. Edison, Inc., by Thomas A. Edison and was extensively advertised and has long previously been used and is now used by Thomas A. Edison, Inc., on radio sets, phonographs and other electrical devices and appliances, sold and shipped in interstate and foreign commerce. Neither Thomas A. Edison nor the said Thomas A. Edison, Inc., have ever granted to respondents the right to the use of the name "Edison" in any manner or consented to such use.

(b) For many years last past the Victor Talking Machine Company, Camden, New Jersey, has been manufacturing and selling phonographs and phonograph records, which have acquired a wide and favorable reputation and have been in great demand by the trade and purchasing public. During all this period the phonographs, phonograph records, and other articles manufactured and sold by said company have featured the name "Victor" as part of their trade name, which said name has been attached in a prominent place to said machines, sold and shipped in interstate and foreign commerce.

In 1929 the Radio Corporation of America obtained control of said Victor Talking Machine Company and organized a company under the corporate name "RCA-Victor Co.," and also organized a company under the name of "The RCA Manufacturing Co., Inc., which company is engaged in the manufacture and sale of radio sets and combination radio and phonograph sets. All of said sets bear the name "Victor," either alone or in combination with other letters or words in a prominent place on said sets. Said radio sets and combination radio and phonograph sets are sold to the purchasing public by retail dealers throughout the United States. During the past twenty-five years the Victor Talking Machine Company has spent approximately $70,000,000 in advertising, and the word "Victor" has always prominently appeared in said advertising. At the present time RCA-Victor Company is advertising its radio sets and radio tubes in a number of magazines having a large national circulation and in other publications and newspapers.

The name "Victor" when used on radio sets and radio tubes and like products is the rightful property of the RCA-Victor Company and the Victor Division of the RCA Manufacturing Company.

Neither the said Victor Talking Machine Company, Radio Corporation of America, The RCA Manufacturing Company, Inc., nor any of their subsidiaries or assigns have ever granted to respondents the right to use the name "Victor" in any manner or consented to such use.

(c) During many years last past the Brunswick-Balke-Collender Company has been a large manufacturer of billiard and pocket billiard tables, bowling alleys, and various other articles, and its products have acquired a wide and favorable reputation and have been in great demand by the trade and purchasing public for many years last past. During all this period the products manufactured and sold by said Company have featured the name "Brunswick" as part of their brand name, which said name has been attached in a prominent place to said products. In 1915 the Brunswick-Balke-Collender Company began to manufacture and sell phonographs and phonograph records, and sometime later began the manufacture and sale of radio sets and combination radio and phonograph sets, on all of which articles the name "Brunswick" was featured in a prominent place on said products. In 1930 the radio and phonograph division of said Brunswick-Balke-Collender Company was sold to Warner Brothers Pictures, Inc., which company organized the corporation under the corporate name Brunswick Radio Corporation to operate the business. Said latter company obtained the exclusive right to use the name "Brunswick" in connection with said radio sets, phonographs and combination radio and phonograph sets.

Until January 1, 1933, Brunswick Radio Corporation continued the manufacture and sale of radio sets and combination radio and phonograph sets, on all of which sets the name "Brunswick" has been prominently featured. Since January 1, 1933, the manufacture of radio sets by Brunswick Radio Corporation has been suspended but said Brunswick Radio Corporation still owns the manufacturing plants in which said sets were manufactured and may resume such manufacture at some time in the future. The radio sets and combination radio and phonograph sets manufactured by Brunswick-Balke-Collender Company and Brunswick Radio Corporation were sold to the purchasing public by retail dealers throughout the United States and in foreign countries. During all the time the Brunswick-Balke-Collender Corporation and the Brunswick Radio Corporation were manufacturing and selling radio sets and combination radio and phonograph sets said companies expended large sums of money in advertising said sets, and the name "Brunswick" has at all times been prominently displayed in said advertising.

"Bronswick," the name used by respondents, is a colorable imitation of the name "Brunswick" which has long been used by the Brunswick-Balke-Collender Company and the Brunswick Radio Corporation on radio sets, phonographs and combination radio and phonograph sets. Neither Brunswick-Balke-Collender Company, Warner Brothers Pictures, Inc., nor Brunswick Radio Corporation have ever granted (or consented) to respondents the right to the use of the name Brunswick (or Bronswick, a colorable imitation thereof) in any manner.

Said names, letters, and symbols are the names and designations of said well known and long established individuals, companies, and corporations, and are standard brands and symbols when used as company, corporate and trade names, and as marks and brands on radio sets, radio parts and like products, and said products so marked have a fixed and stable value in the trade and industry generally throughout the United States and foreign countries. The purchasing public relies upon said well known brands, marks and symbols when used on radio sets and like products, and in said industries as indicating high standard, reliable and genuine products. The use of such names, letters and symbols influences the purchase of said products and increases sales. The number of dealers in said products so marked, increase sales value. The said names, letters, and symbols attached to said products have value to the thousands of dealers engaged in the sale and distribution of said standard brand products. The said names, letters and symbols are valuable to those persons, partnerships, and corporations owning them, and who have used and now use and employ them in commerce.

Because of the popularity of the names "Edison," "Victor," "Brunswick," and the products bearing these names and symbols, manufactured and sold by the lawful owners thereof; the use by respondents of said names and symbols, and simulations thereof, has led and has the capacity and tendency to lead the public to believe that the products sold by respondents and so marked or identified are the products of said well known respective companies or interests hereinabove referred to and identified and results in the appropriation by the respondents of the good will of, and an unfair diversion of business from said respective competitor companies and interests, and an unfair diversion of business from other competitors who do not resort to such practices, to the injury of the owners of said marks and symbols and of said competitors, and to the prejudice and injury of the public.

PAR. 4. The use by respondents of the names, marks, brands, symbols, and devices as set out in paragraphs 2 and 3 is wholly unauthorized by the owners of said names, marks, brands, symbols and devices and gives to respondents' goods a salability which they would not otherwise have, and gives to said respondents an advantage over their competitors who do not similarly misrepresent the true origin of their goods and conceal the same under a reputable but false origin as do respondents. The said appropriation and use by said respondents of the reputation and good will of others at the expense of and injury to such others who have created such reputation and good will, has the capacity and tendency to deceive, and deceives the public purchasing said products into believing that respondents' products originate with well known and reputable concerns contrary to the fact. Thereby substantial injury is done by respondents to competitors and substantial competition in interstate and foreign commerce.

The purchasing public buying radio sets and like products, marked or branded with the said well known names and symbols are of a common mind or belief, regardless of the selling price or of the source of supply, that said products are manufactured and sold by the lawful owners and users of said names, marks, brands, and symbols, and when said names, marks, brands, and symbols are placed upon radio sets, radio parts, and like products, such products are accepted as the products of those who have lawfully used and now use such names as marks, brands, and symbols upon like products as set out in paragraph 3 hereof. The name or brand being depended upon influences the sale of said products.

Members of the purchasing public have purchased radio sets and like products branded and sold to the trade by respondents and others, which products were imitations of or less than the genuine products entered in trade by the lawful owners and users of said standard names, and have been deceived in such purchases.

The manufacture, sale and delivery by respondents set out and described in paragraph 1, of radio sets and like products, marked and branded with the names, and symbols set out and described hereinabove, without authority or consent of the legal owners and lawful users thereof, places in the hands of others to whom said products are sold, the means whereby injury might be and is done to competitors dealing in the genuine products honestly marked. Injury to manufacturers and dealers in the legitimate products is suffered by the sale by respondents of said products falsely marked, sold, and shipped in interstate and foreign commerce. Injury to the lawful owners and users of said standard brands, names, marks, and symbols is suffered because of the manufacture, sale, and competition of said respondents' said products.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of the said respondents, Crystalstone Radio Corporation, and Samuel Glick individually and trading as Pontiac Radio Company, are to the prejudice of the public and respondents' competitors and are unfair methods of competition in interstate commerce and constitute a violation of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

This proceeding having been heard by the Federal Trade Commission upon the complaint of the Commission and the answer filed herein on the 12th day of June 1937 by respondents admitting all the material allegations of the complaint to be true and waiving the taking of further evidence and all other intervening procedure, and the Commission having made its findings as to the facts and its conclusion that said respondents have violated the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes,"

It is ordered, That the respondents, Crystalstone Radio Corporation, its officers, agents, and representatives, and respondent, Samuel Glick, individually, and trading under the name Pontiac Radio Company or under any other name, and their respective agents and representatives, in connection with the offering for sale and sale in interstate commerce and in the District of Columbia of radio sets and like products, do forthwith cease and desist from representing:

Directly or indirectly through the use in any manner of the trade names or marks "Edison," "Victor," or "Brunswick," or through the use in any manner of any colorable imitations and simulations thereof, such as, but without limitation, "Edison" with the representation of a bell, "Victor International," and "Brunswick," or through the use of any other trade names or marks of which they are not the legal owners without the permission of the lawful owners thereof, or through any other means or device, or in any manner, that the radio sets and like products, devices, or appliances manufactured and sold by any of said respondents are manufactured, assembled, sold, sponsored, endorsed, approved, or licensed by Thomas A. Edison, Thomas A. Edison, Inc., Radio Corporation of America, Victor Talking Machine Company, Brunswick-Balke-Collender Company, Warner Brothers Pictures, Inc., or the successors or assigns of any of said persons, partnerships, or corporations, or that said products are manufactured, assembled, sold, sponsored, endorsed, approved, or licensed by any corporation, association, partnership, or person who, in fact, did not and does not manufacture, assemble, and sell said products.

It is further ordered, That the respondents shall, within 60 days after service upon them of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing, setting forth in detail the manner and form in which they have complied with this order.

IN THE MATTER OF HELEN ARDELLE, INC.

COMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION
OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 26, 1914

Docket 2775. Complaint, Apr. 20, 1936—Decision, June 30, 1937

- Where a corporation engaged in manufacture and sale of so-called "draw" or "deal" assortments of candy, sale and distribution of which type candy, by retailers by lot or chance, has capacity and tendency to and does decrease sale of candy sold without any sales plan or device involving lottery or game of chance, i. e., the "straight" goods, and sale of which type, providing, in connection with its sale to public, means or opportunity of obtaining a box of candy as a prize or becoming a winner by lot or chance, teaches and encourages gambling, and is in violation of various municipal ordinances and regulations and state statutes and constitutions, and provides retail merchants with a means of violating the laws of the several states, and sale of which candy, so packed and assembled as to enable retail dealers, without alteration, addition or rearrangement, to resell same to consuming public by lot or chance, is contrary to public policy—
- Sold*, to wholesale and retail dealers, certain assortments of candy which were so packed and assembled as to involve, or were designed to involve, use of lottery scheme when sold and distributed to consumers thereof, and which included assortment composed of a number of boxes of assorted chocolate candies, together with a punchboard, for sale to consuming public under a plan, and in accordance with said board's explanatory legend, pursuant to which purchaser received, for five cents paid, and dependent upon number punched by chance or purchase of last punch on board, one of aforesaid boxes, value of which was in excess of aforesaid amount, or nothing other than privilege of making a punch; so assembled and packed that such assortments might be and were displayed and sold to consuming public by retail dealer purchasers thereof by lot or chance, and with knowledge and intent that such assortments could and would thus be resold to public by retail dealers without alteration, addition, or rearrangement as above set forth, in competition with many who do not make and sell "draw" or "deal" assortments, but sell their "straight" goods in interstate commerce in competition with the others;
- With* result that competitors who refused to, or do not, sell candy so packed and assembled that it can be resold to public by lot or chance, were put to a disadvantage by competing with it and with others employing methods similar to those described herein, trade was diverted to it and others using similar methods from those who do not use same, by reason of attraction to customers of so-called "draw" or "deal" assortments, there was diversion of trade to it from its said competitors, and a restraint upon and a detriment to the freedom of fair competition in trade concerned; to the prejudice and injury of the public and of competitors:
- Held*, That such acts and practices were to the prejudice of the public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition.

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that Helen Ardelle, Inc., a corporation, hereinafter referred to as respondent, has been and is using unfair methods of competition in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in said act of Congress, and it appearing to said Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent is a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Washington, with its principal office and place of business located at 1401 East 41st Street, in the city of Seattle, State of Washington. It is now, and for several years last past has been, engaged in the manufacture of candies and in the sale and distribution thereof to wholesale dealers, jobbers, and retail dealers, located at points in the various States of the United States, and causes and has caused its products, when so sold, to be transported from its principal place of business in the city of Seattle, Wash., to purchasers thereof in other States of the United States at their respective places of business; and there is now, and has been for several years last past, a course of trade and commerce by said respondent in such candy between and among the States of the United States. In the course and conduct of said business, respondent is in competition with other corporations and with partnerships and individuals engaged in the manufacture of candy and in the sale and distribution thereof in commerce between and among the various States of the United States.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of its business, as described in paragraph 1 hereof, respondent sells and has sold to wholesale and retail dealers packages or assortments of candy so packed and assembled as to involve the use of a lottery scheme when sold and distributed to the consumers thereof.

One of said assortments, manufactured and distributed by the respondent, is composed of a number of boxes of assorted chocolate candies, together with a device commonly called a "punchboard." The said boxes of candy are distributed to the consuming public by means of said punchboard in the following manner: The sales by means of said punchboard are 5¢ each, and when a punch is made from said board a number is disclosed. The numbers begin with 1 and continue to the number of punches there are on the board, but the numbers are not arranged in numerical sequence. The board bears a statement or statements informing the prospective customer as to which numbers receive a box of candy. The purchaser of the last punch on the board receives a three-pound box of chocolate candy. A purchaser who does not qualify by obtaining one of the numbers calling for one of the boxes of candy or by punching the last number on the board receives nothing for his money other than the privilege of punching a number from the board. The boxes of candy are worth more than 5¢ each, and a purchaser who obtains one of the numbers calling for a box of candy receives the same for the price of 5¢. The numbers on said board are effectively concealed from the purchasers or prospective purchasers until a punch or selection has been made and the particular punch separated from the board. The boxes of candy in said assortment are thus distributed to purchasers of punches from said board wholly by lot or chance.

PAR. 3. The wholesale dealers and jobbers, to whom respondent sells its assortment, resell said assortment to retail dealers, and said retail dealers, and the retail dealers to whom respondent sells direct, expose said assortment for sale and sell said candy to the purchasing public in accordance with the aforesaid sales plan. Respondent thus supplies to and places in the hands of others the means of conducting lotteries in the sale of its product in accordance with the sales plan hereinabove set forth, as a means of inducing purchasers thereof to purchase respondent's said product in preference to candy offered for sale and sold by its competitors.

PAR. 4. The sale of said candy to the purchasing public in the manner above alleged involves a game of chance or the sale of a chance to procure a box of candy.

The use by respondent of said method in the sale of candy, and the sale of candy by and through the use thereof and by the aid of said method, is a practice of the sort which the common law and criminal statutes have long deemed contrary to public policy; and is contrary to an established public policy of the Government of the United States. The use by respondent of said method has the dangerous tendency unduly to hinder competition or create monopoly in this, to wit: that the use thereof has the tendency and capacity to exclude from the branch of the candy trade involved in this proceeding competitors who do not adopt and use the same method or an equivalent or similar method involving the same or an equivalent or similar element of chance or lottery scheme.

Many persons, firms, and corporations who make and sell candy in competition with the respondent, as above alleged, are unwilling to offer for sale or sell candy so packed and assembled as above alleged, or otherwise arranged and packed for sale to the purchasing public so as to involve a game of chance, and such competitors refrain therefrom.

PAR. 5. Many dealers in and ultimate purchasers of candy are attracted by respondent's said method and manner of packing said candy, and by the element of chance involved in the sale thereof in the manner above described, and are thereby induced to purchase said candy so packed and sold by respondent, in preference to candy offered for sale and sold by said competitors of respondent who do not use the same or equivalent methods. The use of said method by respondent has the tendency and capacity, because of said game of chance, to divert to respondent trade and custom from its said competitors who do not use the same or an equivalent method; to exclude from said candy trade all competitors who are unwilling to and who do not use the same or an equivalent method because the same is unlawful; to lessen competition in said candy trade, and to tend to create a monopoly of said candy trade in respondent and such other distributors of candy as use the same or an equivalent method, and to deprive the purchasing public of the benefit of free competition in said candy trade. The use of said method by the respondent has the tendency and capacity to eliminate from said candy trade all actual competitors, and to exclude therefrom all potential competitors, who do not adopt and use said method or an equivalent method.

PAR. 6. Many of said competitors of respondent are unwilling to adopt and use said method or any method involving a game of chance or the sale of a chance to win something by chance or any other method that is contrary to public policy.

PAR. 7. The aforementioned method, acts and practices of the respondent are all to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors, as hereinabove alleged. Said method, acts, and practices constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914.

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Findings

Federal Trade Commission on April 20, 1936, issued and served its complaint in this proceeding upon the respondent, Helen Ardelle, Inc., a corporation, charging it with the use of unfair methods of competition in commence in violation of the provisions of said act. After the issuance of said complaint and the filing of respondent's answer thereto, testimony and other evidence in support of the allegations of said complaint were introduced by P. C. Kolinski, attorney for the Commission, and in opposition to the allegations of the complaint by Emmett G. Lenihan, attorney for the respondent, before Charles P. Vicini, and Henry M. White, examiners of the Commission theretofore duly designated by it, and said testimony and other evidence were duly recorded and filed in the office of the Commission. Thereafter, the proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on said complaint, the answer thereto, testimony and other evidence, briefs in support of the complaint and in opposition thereto, and the oral arguments of Henry C. Lank, counsel for the Commission, and Emmett G. Lenihan, counsel for the respondent; and the Commission, having duly considered the matter and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom;

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. The respondent, Helen Ardelle, Inc., is a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Washington, with its principal office and place of business located at 1401 East 41st Street, in the city of Seattle, State of Washington. Respondent is now, and for several years last past has been engaged in the manufacture of candy in the city of Seattle and in the sale and distribution thereof to retail and wholesale dealers and jobbers located in the State of Washington and in the States of Oregon, Idaho, Montana, and Wyoming. It causes the said candy when sold to be shipped or transported from its principal place of business in the State of Washington to purchasers thereof in Washington and in other States of the United States, as mentioned above. In so carrying on said business, respondent is and has been engaged in interstate commerce and is and has been engaged in active competition with other corporations and with partnerships and individuals engaged in the manufacture of candy and in the sale and distribution thereof in commerce between and among the various States of the United States.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of its business, as described in paragraph 1 hereof, respondent sells and has sold to wholesale and retail dealers, as above described, certain assortments of candy so packed and assembled as to involve, or which are designed to involve, the use of a lottery scheme when sold and distributed to the consumers thereof.

One of said assortments is composed of a number of boxes of assorted chocolate candies, together with a device commonly called a "punchboard." The boxes of candy contained in said assortment are distributed to the consuming public by means of said punchboard in the following manner: The sales by means of said punchboard are 5¢ each, and when a punch is made from said board a number is disclosed. The numbers begin with 1 and continue to the number of punches there are on the board, but the numbers are not arranged in numerical sequence. The board bears a statement or statements informing the prospective customer as to which numbers receive a box of candy. The purchaser of the last punch on the board receives a three-pound box of chocolate candy. A purchaser who does not qualify by obtaining one of the numbers calling for one of the boxes of candy or by punching the last number on the board receives nothing for his money other than the privilege of punching a number from the board. The boxes of candy are worth more than 5¢ each, and a purchaser who obtains one of the numbers calling for a box of candy receives the same for the price of 5¢. The numbers on said board are effectively concealed from the purchasers or prospective purchasers until a punch or selection has been made and the particular punch separated from the board. The boxes of candy in said assortment are thus distributed to purchasers of punches from said board wholly by lot or chance.

PAR. 3. The candy assortments involving the lot or chance feature as above described, are generally referred to in the candy trade or industry as "draw" or "deal" assortments. Assortments of candy without lot or chance features in connection with their resale to the public are generally referred to in the candy trade or industry as "straight" goods. These terms will be used hereafter in these findings to distinguish these separate types of assortments.

PAR. 4. The wholesale dealers or jobbers to whom respondent sells its assortments resell the same to retail dealers, and said retail dealers and the retail dealers to whom respondent sells direct expose said assortments for sale and sell said candy to the purchasing public in accordance with the sales plans as described above.

PAR. 5. All sales made by respondent, whether to wholesale dealers and jobbers or to retail dealers, are absolute sales and respondent retains no control over said assortments after they are delivered to the wholesale dealer or jobber or retail dealer. The assortments are assembled and packed in such manner that they are designed to be used and are used by the retail dealer for distribution to the purchasing public by lot or chance without alteration or rearrangement. In the sale and distribution to jobbers and wholesale dealers for resale to retail dealers and to retail dealers direct of the assortments of candy described in paragraph 2 hereof, respondent has knowledge that said candy will be resold to the purchasing public by retail dealers by lot or chance, and it packs such candy in the way and manner described so that without alteration, addition or rearrangement thereof it may be resold to the public by lot or chance by said retail dealers.

PAR. 6. There are in the United States many manufacturers of candy competing with respondent in the territory served by respondent who do not manufacture and sell "draw" or "deal" assortments of candy and who sell their "straight" goods in interstate commerce in competition with the "draw" or "deal" assortments. The sale or distribution of candy by retail dealers by lot or chance, has the capacity and tendency to and does decrease the sale of candy sold without any sales plan or device involving a lottery or game of chance.

Several witnesses testified, and the Commission finds, that customers coming into retail establishments and desiring candy similar to that distributed by respondent would take chances or make purchases by means of said push cards or punchboards, and that in such cases when unsuccessful in obtaining candy by means of said push card or punchboard some of such customers would then purchase candy as a "straight" purchase and without the use of the lottery device; that the gambling feature connected with the sale of respondent's assortments as described above, was attractive to customers; and that before making "straight" purchases it was not unusual for customers to endeavor to procure the candy desired by means of such lottery devices rather than to make a "straight" purchase.

PAR. 7. The sale and distribution of "draw" or "deal" assortments of candy, or of candy which has connected with its sale to the public the means or opportunity of obtaining a box of candy as a prize or becoming a winner by lot or chance, teaches and encourages gambling and is in violation of various municipal ordinances and regulations and various State statutes and constitutions. The sale and distribution of candy by retailers by the methods described herein is the sale and distribution of candy by lot or chance and constitutes a lottery or gaming device, and the Commission finds that the sale and distribution of assortments of candy as described herein provides retail merchants with a means of violating the laws of the several States. Competitors who refuse to or who do not sell candy so packed and assembled that it can be resold to the public by lot or chance are put to a disadvantage in competing with respondent and with others employing similar methods to those described herein. Because the "draw" or "deal" assortments are attractive to customers purchasing from retail dealers, the Commission finds that trade is diverted to respondent and others using similar methods from competitors who do not use such methods. The use of such methods by respondent in the sale and distribution of its candy is prejudicial and injurious to the public and to respondent's competitors, and has resulted in the diversion of trade to respondent from its said competitors, and is a restraint upon and a detriment to the freedom of fair and legitimate competition in the candy industry.

PAR. 8. Respondent sells its merchandise in the States of Washington, Idaho, Montana, Oregon, and in Alaska. In the State of Washington, the respondent sells to wholesale dealers and jobbers and to retail dealers. In the States other than the State of Washington, approximately 90% of respondent's sales are to jobbers, making only about 10% of its sales direct to retail dealers. In Alaska, the respondent sells to retail dealers exclusively. The total annual volume of respondent's sales is between $100,000 and $150,000. Between 40% and 50% of the total annual volume of its sales is made up of assortments with which a punchboard is furnished.

PAR. 9. The Commission further finds that the sale and distribution in interstate commerce of assortments of candy so packed and assembled as to enable retail dealers, without alteration, addition, or rearrangement, to resell the same to the consuming public by lot or chance, is contrary to public policy.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of respondent, Helen Ardelle, Inc., a corporation under the conditions and circumstances set forth in the foregoing findings of fact, are all to the prejudice of the public and respondent's competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

This proceeding having been heard by the Federal Trade Commission upon the complaint of the Commission, the answer of respondent, testimony and other evidence taken before Charles P.

Order

Vicini and Henry M. White, examiners of the Commission theretofore duly designated by it, in support of the allegations of said complaint and in opposition thereto, briefs filed herein, and oral arguments of Henry C. Lank, counsel for the Commission, and Emmett G. Lenihan, counsel for the respondent; and the Commission having made its findings as to the facts and its conclusion that said respondent has violated the provisions of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

It is ordered, That the respondent, Helen Ardelle, Inc., a corporation, its officers, representatives, agents, and employees, in connection with the offering for sale, sale, and distribution in interstate commerce of candy, do forthwith cease and desist from:

1. Selling and distributing to jobbers and wholesale dealers for resale to retail dealers, or to retail dealers direct, candy so packed and assembled that sales of such candy to the general public are to be made, or may be made, by means of a lottery, gaming device, or gift enterprise.

2. Supplying to or placing in the hands of wholesale dealers and jobbers or retail dealers assortments of candy which are used, or which may be used, without alteration or rearrangement of the contents of such assortments, to conduct a lottery, gaming device, or gift enterprise in the sale or distribution of the candy contained in said assortments to the public.

3. Packing or assembling in the same assortment of candy for sale to the public at retail boxes of candy, together with a device commonly called a "punchboard," which punchboard is for use, or which may be or is designed to be used, in distributing or selling said candy to the public at retail.

4. Furnishing to retail and wholesale dealers and jobbers a device commonly called a "punchboard," either with assortments of candy or separately, bearing a legend or legends or statements informing the purchasing public that the candy is being sold to the public by lot or chance or in accordance with a sales plan which constitutes a lottery, gaming device, or gift enterprise.

It is further ordered, That respondent, Helen Ardelle, Inc., a corporation, shall, within 30 days after service upon it of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which it has complied with the order to cease and desist hereinabove set forth.

IN THE MATTER OF BROWN & HALEY

COMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION
OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 26, 1914

Docket 2782. Complaint, Apr. 24, 1936—Decision, June 30, 1937

Where a corporation engaged in manufacture and sale of so-called "draw" or "deal" assortments of candy, sale and distribution of which type candy, by retailers by lot or chance, has capacity and tendency to and does decrease sale of candy sold without any sales plan or device involving lottery or game of chance, i. e., the "straight" goods, and sale of which type, providing, in connection with its sale to public, means or opportunity of obtaining a box of candy as a prize or becoming a winner by lot or chance, teaches and encourages gambling, and is in violation of various municipal ordinances and regulations and State statutes and constitutions, and provides retail merchants with a means of violating the laws of the several states, and sale of which candy, so packed and assembled as to enable retail dealers, without alteration, addition, or rearrangement, to resell same to consuming public by lot or chance, is contrary to public policy—

Sold, to wholesale and retail dealers, certain assortments of candy which were so packed and assembled as to involve, or were designed to involve, use of a lottery scheme when sold and distributed to consumers thereof, and which included assortment composed of a number of boxes of assorted chocolate candies, together with a punchboard, for sale to consuming public under a plan, and in accordance with said board's explanatory legend, pursuant to which purchaser received, for five cents paid, and dependent upon number punched by chance or purchase of last punch on board, one of aforesaid boxes, value of which was in excess of aforesaid amount, or nothing other than privilege of making a punch; so assembled and packed that such assortments might be and were displayed and sold to consuming public by retail dealer purchasers thereof by lot or chance, and with knowledge and intent that such assortments could and would thus be resold to public by retail dealers without alteration, addition, or rearrangement as above set forth, in competition with many who do not make and sell "draw" or "deal" assortments, but sell their "straight" goods in interstate commerce in competition with the other;

With result that competitors who refused to, or do not, sell candy so packed and assembled that it can be resold to public by lot or chance, were put to a disadvantage in competing with it and with others employing methods similar to those described herein, trade was diverted to it and others using similar methods from those who do not use same, by reason of attraction to customers of so-called "draw" or "deal" assortments, and there was diversion of trade to it from its said competitors, and a restraint upon and a detriment to the freedom of fair competition in trade concerned; to the prejudice and injury of the public and of competitors;

Held, That such acts and practices were to the prejudice of the public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition.

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that Brown & Haley, a corporation, hereinafter referred to as respondent, has been and is using unfair methods of competition in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in said act of Congress, and it appearing to said Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent is a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Washington, with its principal office and place of business located at 110 East 26th Street, in the city of Tacoma, State of Washington. It is now, and for several years last past has been, engaged in the manufacture of candies and in the sale and distribution thereof to wholesale dealers, jobbers, and retail dealers, located at points in the various States of the United States, and causes and has caused its products, when so sold, to be transported from its principal place of business in the city of Tacoma, Washington, to purchasers thereof in other States of the United States at their respective places of business; and there is now, and has been for several years last past, a course of trade and commerce by said respondent in such candy between and among the States of the United States. In the course and conduct of said business, respondent is in competition with other corporations and with partnerships and individuals engaged in the manufacture of candy and in the sale and distribution thereof in commerce between and among the various States of the United States.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of its business, as described in paragraph 1 hereof, respondent sells and has sold to wholesale and retail dealers packages or assortments of candy so packed and assembled as to involve the use of a lottery scheme when sold and distributed to the consumers thereof.

One of said assortments, manufactured and distributed by the respondent, is composed of a number of boxes of assorted chocolate candies, together with a device commonly called a "punchboard." The said boxes of candy are distributed to the consuming public by means of said punchboard in the following manner: The sales by means of said punchboard are 5¢ each, and when a punch is made from said board a number is disclosed. The numbers begin with 1 and continue to the number of punches there are on the board, but the numbers are not arranged in numerical sequence. The board bears a statement or statements informing the prospective customer as to which numbers receive a box of candy. The purchaser of the last punch on the board receives a three-pound box of chocolate candy. A purchaser who does not qualify by obtaining one of the numbers calling for one of the boxes of candy or by punching the last number on the board receives nothing for his money other than the privilege of punching a number from the board. The boxes of candy are worth more than 5¢ each, and a purchaser who obtains one of the numbers calling for a box of candy receives the same for the price of 5¢. The numbers on said board are effectively concealed from the purchasers or prospective purchasers until a punch or selection has been made and the particular punch separated from the board. The boxes of candy in said assortment are thus distributed to purchasers of punches from said board wholly by lot or chance.

PAR. 3. The wholesale dealers and jobbers, to whom respondent sells its assortment, resell said assortment to retail dealers, and said retail dealers, and the retail dealers to whom respondent sells direct, expose said assortment for sale and sell said candy to the purchasing public in accordance with the aforesaid sales plan. Respondent thus supplies to and places in the hands of others the means of conducting lotteries in the sale of its product in accordance with the sales plan hereinabove set forth, as a means of inducing purchasers thereof to purchase respondent's said product in preference to candy offered for sale and sold by its competitors.

PAR. 4. The sale of said candy to the purchasing public in the manner above alleged involves a game of chance or the sale of a chance to procure a box of candy.

The use by respondent of said method in the sale of candy, and the sale of candy by and through the use thereof and by the aid of said method, is a practice of the sort which the common law and criminal statutes have long deemed contrary to public policy; and is contrary to an established public policy of the Government of the United States. The use by respondent of said method has the dangerous tendency unduly to hinder competition or create monopoly in this to wit: that the use thereof has the tendency and capacity to exclude from the branch of the candy trade involved in this proceeding competitors who do not adopt and use the same method or an equivalent or similar method involving the same or an equivalent or similar element of chance or lottery scheme.

Many persons, firms, and corporations who make and sell candy in competition with the respondent, as above alleged, are unwilling to offer for sale or sell candy so packed and assembled as above alleged, or otherwise arranged and packed for sale to the purchasing public so as to involve a game of chance, and such competitors refrain therefrom.

PAR. 5. Many dealers in and ultimate purchasers of candy are attracted by respondent's said method and manner of packing said candy, and by the element of chance involved in the sale thereof in the manner above described, and are thereby induced to purchase said candy so packed and sold by respondent, in preference to candy offered for sale and sold by said competitors of respondent who do not use the same or equivalent methods. The use of said method by respondent has the tendency and capacity, because of said game of chance, to divert to respondent trade and custom from its said competitors who do not use the same or an equivalent method; to exclude from said candy trade all competitors who are unwilling to and who do not use the same or an equivalent method because the same is unlawful; to lessen competition in said candy trade, and to tend to create a monopoly of said candy trade in respondent and such other distributors of candy as use the same or an equivalent method, and to deprive the purchasing public of the benefit of free competition in said candy trade. The use of said method by the respondent has the tendency and capacity to eliminate from said candy trade all actual competitors, and to exclude therefrom all potential competitors, who do not adopt and use said method or an equivalent method.

PAR. 6. Many of said competitors of respondent are unwilling to adopt and use said method or any method involving a game of chance or the sale of a chance to win something by chance or any other method that is contrary to public policy.

PAR. 7. The aforementioned method, acts and practices of the respondent are all to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors, as hereinabove alleged. Said method, acts and practices constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914.

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, on April 24, 1936, issued and on April 28, 1936, served its complaint in this proceeding upon the respondent, Brown & Haley, a corporation, charging it with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of the provisions of said act. After the issuance of said complaint and the filing of respondent's answer thereto, testimony and other evidence in support of the allegations of said complaint were introduced by P. C. Kolinski, attorney for the Commission, and in opposition to the allegations of the complaint by Emmett G. Lenihan, attorney for respondent, before Charles P. Vicini and Henry M. White, examiners of the Commission theretofore duly designated by it, and said testimony and other evidence were duly recorded and filed in the office of the Commission. Thereafter, the proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on said complaint, the answer thereto, testimony and other evidence, briefs in support of the complaint and in opposition thereto, and the oral arguments of Henry C. Lank, counsel for the Commission, and Emmett G. Lenihan, counsel for the respondent; and the Commission, having duly considered the matter and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. The respondent, Brown & Haley, is a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Washington, with its principal office and place of business located at 110 East 26th Street, in the city of Tacoma, State of Washington. Respondent is now, and for several years last past has been, engaged in the manufacture of candy in the city of Tacoma and in the sale and distribution thereof to retail and wholesale dealers and jobbers located in the State of Washington and in the States of Oregon, Idaho, Montana, and California. It causes the said candy when sold to be shipped or transported from its principal place of business in the State of Washington to purchasers thereof in Washington and in other States of the United States, as mentioned above. In so carrying on said business, respondent is and has been engaged in interstate commerce and is and has been engaged in active competition with other corporations and with partnerships and individuals engaged in the manufacture of candy and in the sale and distribution thereof in commerce between and among the various States of the United States.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of its business, as described in paragraph 1 hereof, respondent sells and has sold to wholesale and retail dealers, as above described, certain assortments of candy so packed and assembled as to involve, or which are designed to involve, the use of a lottery scheme when sold and distributed to the consumers thereof.

One of said assortments is composed of a number of varying sized boxes of assorted chocolate candies, together with a device commonly called a "punchboard." The boxes of candy contained in said assortment are distributed to the consuming public by means of said punchboard in the following manner: The sales by means of said punchboard are 5¢ each, and when a punch is made from said board a number is disclosed. The numbers begin with one and continue to the number of punches there are on the board, but the numbers are not arranged in numerical sequence. The board bears a statement or statements informing customers and prospective customers as to which numbers receive a box of candy and the size thereof. The purchaser of the last punch on the board receives a specified box of candy. The purchaser who does not qualify by obtaining one of the numbers calling for one of the boxes of candy, or by punching the last number on the board, receives nothing for his money other than the privilege of punching a number from the board. The boxes of candy are worth more than 5¢ each, and a purchaser who obtains one of the numbers calling for a box of candy receives the same for the price of 5¢. The numbers on said board are effectively concealed from the purchasers or prospective purchasers until a punch or selection has been made and the particular punch separated from the board. The boxes of candy in said assortment are thus distributed to purchasers of punches from said board wholly by lot or chance.

PAR. 3. The candy assortments involving the lot or chance feature, as above described, are generally referred to in the candy trade or industry as "draw" or "deal" assortments. Assortments of candy without lot or chance features in connection with their resale to the public are generally referred to in the candy trade or industry as "straight" goods. These terms will be used hereafter in these findings to distinguish these separate types of assortments.

PAR. 4. The wholesale dealers or jobbers to whom respondent sells its assortments resell the same to retail dealers, and said retail dealers and the retail dealers to whom respondent sells direct expose said assortments for sale and sell said candy to the purchasing public in accordance with the sales plan as described above.

PAR. 5. All sales made by respondent, whether to wholesale dealers and jobbers or to retail dealers, are absolute sales and respondent retains no control over said assortments after they are delivered to the wholesale dealer or jobber or retail dealer. The assortments are assembled and packed in such manner that they are designed to be used and are used by the retail dealer for distribution to the purchasing public by lot or chance without alteration or rearrangement. In the sale and distribution to jobbers and wholesale dealers for resale to retail dealers and to retail dealers direct of the assortments of candy described in paragraph 2 hereof, respondent has knowledge that said candy would be resold to the purchasing public by retail dealers by lot or chance, and it packs such candy in the way and manner described so that without alteration, addition, or rearrangement thereof it may be resold to the public by lot or chance by said retail dealers.

PAR. 6. There are in the United States many manufacturers of candy competing with respondent in the territory served by respondent who do not manufacture and sell "draw" or "deal" assortments of candy and who sell their "straight" goods in interstate commerce in competition with the "draw" or "deal" assortments. The sale or distribution of candy by retail dealers by lot or chance has the capacity and tendency to and does decrease the sale of candy sold without any sales plan or device involving a lottery or game of chance.

Several witnesses testified, and the Commission finds, that customers coming into retail establishments and desiring candy similar to that distributed by respondent would take chances or make purchases by means of said push cards or punchboards, and that in such cases when unsuccessful in obtaining candy by means of said push-card or punchboard some of such customers would then purchase candy as a "straight" purchase and without the use of the lottery device; that the gambling feature connected with the sale of respondent's assortments, as described above, was attractive to customers; and that before making "straight" purchases it was not unusual for customers to endeavor to procure the candy desired by means of such lottery devices rather than to make a "straight" purchase.

PAR. 7. The sale and distribution of "draw" or "deal" assortments of candy, or of candy which has connected with its sale to the public the means or opportunity of obtaining a box of candy as a prize or becoming a winner by lot or chance, teaches and encourages gambling and is in violation of various municipal ordinances and regulations and various State statutes and constitutions. The sale and distribution of candy by retailers by the method described herein is the sale and distribution of candy by lot or chance and constitutes a lottery or gaming device, and the Commission finds that the sale and distribution of assortments of candy as described herein provides retail merchants with a means of violating the laws of the several States. Competitors who refuse to or who do not sell candy so packed and assembled that it can be resold to the public by lot or chance are put to a disadvantage in competing with respondent and with others employing similar methods to those described herein. Because the "draw" or "deal" assortments are attractive to customers purchasing from retail dealers, the Commission finds that trade is diverted to respondent and others using similar methods from competitors who do not use such methods. The use of such methods by respondent in the sale and distribution of its candy is prejudicial and injurious to the public and to respondent's competitors, and has resulted in the diversion of trade to respondent from its said competitors, and is a restraint upon and a detriment to the freedom of fair and legitimate competition in the candy industry.

PAR. 8. An officer of the respondent corporation testified, and the Commission finds, that the total annual volume of respondent's sales is between $350,000 and $400,000. Approximately 60% of respondent's total annual volume of sales is made to purchasers outside of the State of Washington, and approximately 25% of the total annual volume of its sales consists of assortments with which a punchboard is furnished.

PAR. 9. The Commission further finds that the sale and distribution in interstate commerce of assortments of candy so packed and assembled as to enable retail dealers, without alteration, addition or rearrangement, to resell the same to the consuming public by lot or chance, is contrary to public policy.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of respondent, Brown & Haley, a corporation, under the conditions and circumstances set forth in the foregoing findings of fact, are all to the prejudice of the public and respondent's competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

This proceeding having been heard by the Federal Trade Commission upon the complaint of the Commission, the answer of respondent, testimony and other evidence taken before Charles P. Vicini and Henry M. White, examiners of the Commission theretofore duly designated by it, in support of the allegations of said complaint and in opposition thereto, briefs filed herein, and oral arguments of Henry C. Lank, counsel for the Commission, and Emmett G. Lenihan, counsel for the respondent; and the Commission having made its findings as to the facts and its conclusion that said respondent has violated the provisions of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

It is ordered, That the respondent, Brown & Haley, a corporation, its officers, representatives, agents, and employees, in connection with the offering for sale, sale, and distribution in interstate commerce of candy, do forthwith cease and desist from:

1. Selling and distributing to jobbers and wholesale dealers for resale to retail dealers, or to retail dealers direct, candy so packed and assembled that sales of such candy to the general public are to be made, or may be made, by means of a lottery, gaming device, or gift enterprise.

2. Supplying to or placing in the hands of wholesale dealers and jobbers or retail dealers assortments of candy which are used, or which may be used, without alteration or rearrangement of the contents of such assortments, to conduct a lottery, gaming device, or gift enterprise in the sale or distribution of the candy contained in said assortments to the public.

3. Packing or assembling in the same assortment of candy for sale to the public at retail boxes of candy, together with a device commonly called a "punchboard," which punchboard is for use, or which may be or is designed to be used, in distributing or selling said candy to the public at retail.

4. Furnishing to retail and wholesale dealers and jobbers a device commonly called a "punchboard," either with assortments of candy or separately, bearing a legend or legends or statements informing the purchasing public that the candy is being sold to the public by lot or chance or in accordance with the sales plan which constitutes a lottery, gaming device, or gift enterprise.

It is further ordered, That the respondent, Brown & Haley, a corporation, shall, within 30 days after service upon it of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which it has complied with the order to cease and desist hereinabove set forth.

Syllabus

IN THE MATTER OF
CALIFORNIA PACKING CORPORATION, ET AL.COMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 26, 1914*Docket 2786. Complaint, Apr. 25, 1936—Decision, June 30, 1937*

Where (1) a corporation which (a) was engaged in packing and distributing, and selling and transporting by truck, railway, and steamship lines, a wide line of food products, consisting principally of dried fruits and canned fruits, vegetables, fish, pineapples, and coffee, (b) was one of the largest packers and distributors of dried fruits and vegetables in the world and was, and had been, for a number of years, an important factor in the Hawaiian pineapple industry and in the packing of sardines and tuna fish, (c) owned, controlled, and operated more than one hundred canning factories, fruit drying plants, and other factories in California, Wisconsin, Illinois, Florida, New York, and other States scattered across the country, and in the Territories of Alaska and Hawaii, in which were packed, for sale and shipment in wholesale and retail trade throughout the several States and in foreign countries, food products under such brands or trade names as "Del Monte," "Sunkist," and others; and (2) its subsidiary, (a) engaged exclusively in the packing and selling of salmon, with nine factories in Alaska and one on Puget Sound, and (b) owner of a terminal corporation engaged as a public wharfinger on the east side of San Francisco Bay in the operation and maintenance of such necessary facilities as wharves, sheds, warehouses, and switch tracks, in competition with a number of other similarly engaged terminals; and together engaged, in the course and conduct of their businesses, in the purchase of substantial quantities of raw materials and manufactured products, such as wood, paper, and fiber boxes, containers, and cartons, tin, steel, copper, paint, and numerous other articles, from the manufacturers and producers thereof located throughout the several States and in foreign countries, for utilization in the several manufacturing processes of their said products, and in substantial competition, in the course and conduct of their said businesses, with others in the various States engaged in the canning and packing of fruits, vegetables, fish, and other products, and in sale and distribution thereof to jobbers and wholesalers throughout the several States and in foreign countries, and also in purchasing substantial quantities of raw materials and other manufactured products, as hereinbefore set forth, from manufacturers and producers throughout the several States, and in selling products to many of such industrial concerns, and in utilizing instrumentalities of distribution and transportation similar to those made use of by said first named corporation, as above set forth, but without engaging in such practices as those below described; acting directly and through and in cooperation with six individuals, general officers and directors of said corporation and subsidiary, or, as case might be, purchasing agent for said corporation, vice president, director, and general manager of such subsidiary, and former traffic director and president of said terminal corporation, and present traffic manager of corporation first named—

- (a) Sought to induce, coerce, and compel, and induced, coerced, and compelled, a substantial number of large industrial concerns and shippers of substantial tonnages of freight, including companies from which they and their competitors purchased supplies of raw materials and manufactured products as aforesaid, and which companies would, but for the activities herein described, normally and usually route their products through various and respective terminals located on San Francisco Bay and rivers tributary thereto, to divert and shift said large industrial concerns' routing of shipments so as to utilize the facilities of their own aforesaid terminal to the exclusion of said others through (1) promises or assurances that they would purchase the products of such concerns or increase volume of purchases therefrom, in the event said concerns routed shipments of merchandise and products sold and shipped by them and others subject to their control, including competitors of said corporations, theretofore routed through competitive terminals, through aforesaid terminal of said corporation; and (2) threats of reducing or discontinuing purchase of raw materials or manufactured products from said concerns, in the event of their declining to route their shipments of merchandise and products, or those of other concerns under their control, through aforesaid terminal, and continuing to route such shipments through said competitive terminals;
- (b) Sought to induce, coerce, and compel all or a majority of the steamship companies operating as coast-wise, intercoastal and foreign cargo carriers in carrying freight to and from various ports on said Bay and tributary waters, and did induce, coerce, and compel a substantial number of such companies, and often at extra expense to them, to divert freight tonnage theretofore moving through such other terminals to their own aforesaid terminal, and notwithstanding fact service and facilities of said other terminals were equal to those of their own aforesaid terminal and, in many instances, more economical to such companies and the shippers of the products carried by them than those of the other, by (1) promises or assurances of substantial tonnages or a substantial increase therein of freight to be shipped over the lines of said companies from aforesaid terminal by said corporation and subsidiary, in the event of such companies' diverting the tonnage theretofore moving through said others to aforesaid terminal; and (2) threats of withdrawing or discontinuing shipment of freight or reduction of tonnage of freight shipped over lines of said companies from aforesaid terminal by said corporation and subsidiary, in the event of said companies' failing to divert tonnage theretofore moving through such others to aforesaid terminal; and
- (c) Sought to induce, coerce, and compel all or a majority of the above described steamship companies, and did induce, coerce, and compel a substantial number thereof, through the methods hereinabove set forth, to disclose the identity of consignees and receivers of shipments of freight cargo carried by said companies, and to allow representatives of said corporation and subsidiary to inspect confidential records and manifests of said steamship companies to enable such corporation and subsidiary to bring pressure and influence to bear upon said consignees and receivers to divert their shipments through aforesaid terminal of said corporation and subsidiary; and

Where aforesaid individuals, together constituting an executive committee—

- (d) Cooperated with and assisted said corporation and its subsidiary in the execution of a plan, formulated and inaugurated, and since directed, by one of said individuals, of using the tonnage of freight shipped by said corporation and subsidiary over steamship lines and their buying power to influence routing of tonnage to their own aforesaid terminal, and in the execution of the herein described acts and practices by utilizing their official positions in said corporation and subsidiary to induce, coerce, and compel the officials of said steamship companies and said industrial concerns to give undue preference to the facilities of their own aforesaid terminal through means of the promises and threats hereinbefore described and set forth; and

Where aforesaid corporation and subsidiary, acting directly through and in cooperation with aforesaid individuals—

(e) Spied upon the business of their said competitors by securing, from their aforesaid terminal company, names and addresses of customers of said competitors to enable them, i. e., said corporation and its subsidiary, to bring pressure and influence to bear upon said customers to divert their shipments of products purchased from said competitors through their own aforesaid terminal, as herein set forth; and

(f) Induced, coerced, and compelled their said competitors to divert, change and shift their shipments of products sold by them in interstate and foreign commerce so as to utilize the facilities of the aforesaid terminal of said corporation and subsidiary, to the exclusion of said other terminals on the before referred to Bay, by bringing undue pressure to bear upon the industrial concerns to whom such competitors were selling their products, or from whom they were purchasing supplies of raw materials and manufactured goods as hereinabove set forth;

With result of reducing their own distribution expenses and enhancing and increasing their own revenues, to the unfair competitive disadvantage of aforesaid competitors, by compelling them and said other industrial concerns, against their interest, to route shipments of products sold by them through aforesaid terminal, and to require said competitors to pay more for such raw materials and manufactured products from such industrial concerns than they were required to pay, and to give to said corporation and subsidiary an unfair competitive advantage over said competitors who do not control large tonnage of freight and do not engage in such practices, and to unfairly divert business from one to another of such concerns, from whom said corporation and its subsidiary and their competitors purchased raw materials and manufactured products as above set forth, by requiring that the principal consideration for the purchase of such products be volume of tonnage routed by such concerns through aforesaid terminal as above set forth, instead of usual and normal competitive considerations such as quality, service, and price, and thus to deprive such concerns as do not control large tonnages of freight from fairly competing with the business of said corporation and subsidiary, and with tendency to hinder and suppress competition between said corporation and subsidiary and their said competitors, and to create a monopoly in the sale and distribution of food products, including California canned and dried fruits and vegetables and canned fish and coffee, in interstate, coast-wise and foreign trade in commerce, and to hinder and suppress competition between said industrial concerns from whom such corporation and subsidiary purchased their supplies of raw materials and manufactured products:

Held, That such acts and practices were to the prejudice of the public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition.

COMPLAINT

PARAGRAPH 1. Said corporate respondent, California Packing Corporation, is a corporation organized under and by virtue of the laws of the State of New York, October 19, 1916, with its principal office located at 101 California Street, in the city of San Francisco, State of California. Said corporate respondent now has an authorized capitalization of 1,500,000 common stock no par value, of which there are now outstanding 965,073 shares, with a valuation of approximately $40,000,000. The gross assets of said corporate respondent after reserve for depreciation amount to approximately $56,000,000. Said corporate respondent, since its organization, acquired approximately 84% of the capital stock of the corporate respondent, Alaska Packers Association.

Said corporate respondent, California Packing Corporation, is engaged in the business of packing and distributing a wide line of food products consisting principally of dried fruits, canned fruits, canned vegetables, canned fish, canned Hawaiian pineapples, and coffee. Said corporate respondent is the largest packer and distributor of dried fruits and vegetables in the world, and is an important factor in the Hawaiian pineapple industry and in the packing of sardines and tuna fish since the year 1926. Said corporate respondent owns, controls, and operates more than 100 canning factories, fruit drying plants, and other factories located in the States of California, Oregon, Washington, Idaho, Utah, Wisconsin, Illinois, Minnesota, Florida, New York, and in the Territories of Alaska and Hawaii, in which food products under the brands or trade names, "Del Monte," "Sunkist," "Goldbar," "Glass Jar," "President," and "Luxury," are packed for sale and shipment to the wholesale and retail trade throughout the several States of the United States and in foreign countries, sales of said products being made through sales representatives located in leading trade centers of the several States of the United States and in all foreign countries. Said corporate respondent causes said products, when sold, to be transported from the several factories, located as aforesaid, to the purchasers thereof by means of various methods of transportation, namely, automobile truck, railway, and steamship lines, and there has been and now is a constant course of commerce in said respondent's products between and among the several States of the United States and with foreign countries, through the various ports, docks, wharves, and terminals located on San Francisco Bay and tributary waters.

PAR. 2. Said corporate respondent, Alaska Packers Association, is a corporation organized under the laws of the State of California, with its principal office located at 111 California Street in the city of San Francisco in said State, and is engaged exclusively in the packing of salmon and in the sale thereof, with nine canning factories located in the Territory of Alaska and one on Pudget Sound in the State of Washington. Said corporate respondent has an authorized capitalization of 75,000 shares of common stock, par value $100 per share, of which 57,508 shares are outstanding and approximately 84% of which is owned by the said corporate respondent, California Packing Corporation, which operates the business of said Alaska Packers Association as a subsidiary corporation.

PAR. 3. Said corporate respondents, in the course and conduct of their respective businesses as described herein, purchase substantial quantities of raw materials and manufactured products, such as wood, paper, and fiber boxes, containers, and cartons, tin, steel, copper, paint, and other articles too numerous to mention, from the manufacturers and producers thereof located throughout the several States of the United States and in foreign countries, and utilize said products in the several manufacturing processes of their said products, and there is a constant current of said raw materials and other manufactured products purchased by said corporate respondents between and among the several States of the United States and with foreign countries, through the various ports, docks, wharves, and terminals located on San Francisco Bay and tributary waters.

PAR. 4. In the course of conduct of their said businesses, said corporate respondents are in substantial competition with other individuals, firms, and corporations located in the various States of the United States engaged in the canning and packing of fruits, vegetables, fish, and other products, and in the sale and distribution thereof to jobbers and wholesalers of said products located throughout the several States of the United States and in foreign countries, which said competitors also purchase substantial quantities of raw materials and other manufactured products, as hereinbefore set forth, from manufacturers and producers thereof located throughout the several States of the United States and said competitors also sell products to many of said industrial concerns. Said competitors utilize instrumentalities of distribution and transportation similar to those utilized by the said corporate respondent as aforesaid, but do not engage in practices similar to those described herein.

PAR. 5. Encinal Terminals is a corporation organized under the laws of the State of California, with its principal office and place of business located in the city of Alameda in said State, with an authorized capitalization of 25,000 shares of stock of a par value of $100 per share, of which 8,815 shares are outstanding, and all of which shares are owned and held by the said corporate respondent, Alaska Packers Association. Said Encinal Terminals is, and has been since the year 1925, engaged in the public wharfinger business in the city of Alameda on the east side of San Francisco Bay, where it operates and maintains facilities necessary in said business, including wharves, sheds, warehouses, and switch tracks for handling freight directed to or from railroad cars and steamships at the wharves, which it leases from said corporate respondent, Alaska Packers Association. The function of said Encinal Terminals in commerce is the same as other terminals located on San Francisco Bay, as hereinafter set forth in paragraph 6.

Said corporate respondents organized the said Encinal Terminals and now direct and control its affairs as a subsidiary of the said corporate respondent, California Packing Corporation, and have utilized since the year 1925, and now utilize the facilities and services of the said Encinal Terminals in the distribution and transportation of the products manufactured and sold by them as aforesaid.

PAR. 6. San Francisco Bay, upon which the cities of San Francisco, Oakland, and Alameda are located, is a land-locked harbor, forty-eight miles long, with 100 miles of shore line, and is fed by two navigable rivers, the Sacramento and the San Joaquin, flowing from the interior of the State of California. It has for many years been recognized as the principal harbor for steamship vessels on the Pacific Coast and ranks second only to New York harbor in the United States with respect to the number of steamship lines landing their cargoes at docks and wharves located thereon, and in the value of the cargoes handled. Approximately 166 steamship lines, operating as coastwise, intercoastal, and foreign, serving in various trades every port of importance throughout the world, carry freight to and from the various ports on San Francisco Bay.

The port of San Francisco, under the immediate control of the Board of State Harbor Commissioners, is owned by the State of California and is operated on a non-profit basis. This port provides a fruit and produce terminal, a grain terminal, a banana terminal, and a ship-side refrigeration terminal. Originally all water-borne freight cargo entering or leaving the Bay of San Francisco passed over these wharves located in the city of San Francisco.

State Terminal Company, Ltd., was organized in June 1931, and since that time has been engaged in the public wharfing business at the Port of San Francisco at Third and Channel Streets. Said Terminal Company occupies buildings and facilities which it rents from the State of California and conducts a general merchandise terminal, and, in addition, handles canned and dried fruits, fishmeal, and lumber.

The Howard Terminal is located at First and Market Streets, Oakland, Calif., having been organized in 1900, and was originally conducted as a general merchandising terminal handling, principally, coal and grain, and offering storage facilities. In 1916 a pier was constructed to accommodate the docking of deep water vessels, and since that time it has been operated as a ship-side terminal. Said Howard Terminal has equipment for handling freight, including railroad tracks, docks for steamers, loading accommodations for motor trucks, and terminal buildings to accommodate the handling of freight cargo for shippers from carrier to vessel, and also extensive warehousing facilities.

The Parr Terminal Company, organized in 1918, was engaged in the public wharfing business in the city of Oakland, Calif., until October 1, 1934, when its operations were discontinued. The Parr, Richmond Corporation, a subsidiary of the said Parr Terminal Company, now conducts, and since 1927 has conducted, a wharfing business in the city of Richmond, Calif., operating four terminals for this purpose.

The port of Oakland, which is owned by the municipality of Oakland, Calif., began operation as a public wharfing in 1927. It is situated on the mainland side of San Francisco Bay and offers the usual facilities for the interchange of freight cargo between land and water carriers. It operates three large terminals for ocean-going vessels and a fourth designed for inland water-way carriers. There are a large number of industrial plants located close to the port of Oakland which would normally utilize its facilities.

The port of Stockton, Calif., located on the San Joaquin River, about ninety miles from San Francisco, began its operations as a public wharfinger in February 1933, and has four public wharves and a grain terminal. Much of the cargo handled through this port's facilities is received from or consigned to interior towns in California. The said port of Stockton, because of its geographical location, has a competitive advantage in securing freight from certain of these towns due to the fact that railroad and truck rates to the port are $1 per ton cheaper than they are to San Francisco and East Bay ports, including Oakland and Alameda.

The above-described terminals were, during the periods of time of their existence, or are now competitors of said Encinal Terminals, and their function is to act as connecting links between the transportation of products from railroad freight cars or motor trucks into the terminal and to ocean carriers outbound; they operate as the agent of shippers of products being transported and exported, unloading, accumulating and distributing said products to steamships outbound. In addition, said terminals act as the agents for inbound steamers, furnishing them a berth and assisting them in unloading their cargoes and in the assorting and distribution of the same on the docks ready for transportation to interior points in trucks and in railroad cars; said terminals also act as agents for the railroads carrying products to and from said terminals by loading and unloading freight cars, sealing cars, making out switch lists, damage reports, and other similar activities. The steamship companies utilizing said terminals are required to pay a service charge for all cargo received or discharged, and, in addition, the terminals have a charge for loading or unloading railroad cars and trucks, this being paid by the shipper, who is also required to pay a toll charge on a tonnage basis.

PAR. 7. Said individual respondent, L. E. Wood, is president of the said corporate respondent, California Packing Corporation, and vice president of the said corporate respondent, Alaska Packers Association. Said individual respondent, A. M. Lester, is vice president of said corporate respondent, California Packing Corporation, and a director of said corporate respondent, Alaska Packers Association. Said individual respondent, W. H. Levy, is purchasing agent for said corporate respondent, California Packing Corporation. Said individual respondent, A. K. Tichenor, is vice president, general manager and director of said corporate respondent, Alaska Packers Association. Said individual respondent, H. E. Van Horn, was traffic director of said corporate respondent, California Packing Corporation, from 1918 to 1928, and is now president of said Encinal Terminals. Said individual respondent, Irving F. Lyons, is now traffic manager of the said corporate respondent, California Packing Corporation.

PAR. 8. Said corporate respondents, acting directly, through and in cooperation with the said individual respondents, for more than one year last past, and particularly since the year 1929, have sought to induce, coerce, and compel, and have induced, coerced, and compelled a substantial number of large industrial concerns, shippers of substantial tonnages of freight, including the various and several corporations from whom said corporate respondents and their said competitors, purchase supplies of raw materials and manufactured products, as aforesaid, and who would, but for the activities of said respondents described herein, normally and usually route their products through various and respective terminals located on San Francisco Bay and the rivers tributary thereto, as described in paragraph 6 herein, to divert, change, and shift their routing of shipments so as to utilize the facilities of the said Encinal Terminals to the exclusion of said other terminals by the following methods, to wit:

(a) By promises or assurances that the said corporate respondents would purchase the products of said industrial concerns or would increase their volume of purchases from said industrial concerns, if the said industrial concerns would route the shipments of merchandise and products sold and shipped by them and by other concerns subject to their control, including the competitors of said respondent corporations, through the said Encinal Terminals, which had theretofore been routed through said other terminals.

(b) By threats of reduction or discontinuance of the purchase of said raw materials or manufactured products from said industrial concerns if they declined to route their shipments of merchandise and products, or the merchandise and products of other concerns under their control, through the said Encinal Terminals, and continued to route said shipments through the said other terminals.

PAR. 9. Said corporate respondents, through and in cooperation with the said individual respondents, for more than one year last past, and particularly since the year 1929, have sought to induce, coerce and compel all or a majority of the steamship companies operating as coastwise, intercoastal, and foreign cargo carriers engaged in carrying freight to and from various ports on San Francisco Bay and tributary waters, and has induced, coerced, and compelled a substantial number of said steamship companies, often at extra expense to said steamship companies to divert freight tonnage theretofore moving through said other terminals described in paragraph 6 herein, to said Encinal Terminals, although the service and facilities of the said other terminals are equal to those of the said Encinal Terminals and in many instances more economical to said steamship companies and the shippers of the products carried by them, than of the said Encinal Terminals, by the use of the following methods, to wit:

(a) By promises or assurances of substantial tonnages, or a substantial increase of tonnages, of freight to be shipped over the lines of said steamship companies from the said Encinal Terminals by said corporate respondents if the said steamship companies would divert the tonnage theretofore moving through said other terminals, to said Encinal Terminals.

(b) By threats of withdrawal or discontinuance of the shipment of freight or the reduction of tonnage of freight shipped over the lines of said steamship companies from said Encinal Terminals by the said corporate respondents if the said steamship companies would not divert tonnage theretofore moving through said other terminals to said Encinal Terminals.

PAR. 10. Said corporate respondents, through and in cooperation with the said individual respondents, for more than one year last past and particularly since the year 1929, have sought to induce, coerce and compel all or a majority of the steamship companies operating as coastwise, intercoastal and foreign cargo carriers engaged in carrying freight to and from various ports on San Francisco Bay and tributary waters, and have induced, coerced and compelled a substantial number of said steamship companies, by methods described in sub-paragraphs (a) and (b) of paragraph 9 herein, to disclose the identity of consignees and receivers of shipments of freight cargo carried by said steamship companies and to allow representatives of said corporate respondents to inspect confidential records, including manifests, of said steamship companies, to enable said respondents to bring pressure and influence to bear upon said consignees and receivers to divert their shipments through said Encinal Terminals, as set forth and described in paragraph 8 herein.

PAR. 11. Said individual respondent, H. E. Van Horn, while traffic manager of said corporate respondent, California Packing Corporation, formulated and inaugurated and has since directed the execution of a plan of using the tonnage of freight shipped by said corporate respondents over steamship lines and the buying power of said corporate respondents to influence the routing of tonnage to said Encinal Terminals, and together with other said individual respondents described in paragraph 7 herein, composed what is known as the "Encinal Executive Committee," and all of said individual respondents have cooperated with and assisted the said corporate respondents in the execution of the said plan and of the acts and practices described and set forth herein, by utilizing their official positions in said corporate respondents to induce, coerce, and compel the officials of said steamship companies and said industrial concerns to give undue preference to the facilities of the said Encinal Terminals by means of said promises and threats as described and set forth in sub-paragraphs (a) and (b) of paragraphs 8, 9, and 10 herein.

PAR. 12. Said corporate respondents, acting directly through and in cooperation with said individual respondents, have spied upon the business of said competitors of said corporate respondents, by securing from said Encinal Terminals the names and addresses of customers of said competitors, to enable said corporate respondents to bring pressure and influence to bear upon said customers, to divert their shipments of products purchased from said competitors, through said Encinal Terminals, as set forth herein.

PAR. 13. Said corporate respondents, acting directly and in cooperation with said individual respondents, induced, coerced, and compelled said competitors of said corporate respondents to divert, change, and shift their shipments of products sold by them in interstate and foreign commerce so as to utilize the facilities of the said Encinal Terminals to the exclusion of said other terminals located on San Francisco Bay, by bringing undue pressure to bear upon the said industrial concerns to whom said competitors were selling their products or from whom said competitors were purchasing supplies of raw materials and manufactured products as more particularly set forth in paragraph 8 herein.

PAR. 14. The effect of the said practices of the said corporate and individual respondents, as set forth herein, has been and now is, to reduce the distribution expenses and to enhance and increase the revenues of said corporate respondents to the unfair competitive disadvantage of said competitors by compelling said competitors and said other industrial concerns, against their interest, to route shipments of products sold by them as aforesaid, through said Encinal Terminals; and to require the said competitors to pay more for said raw materials and manufactured products from said industrial concerns than said corporate respondents are required to pay and to give to said respondent corporations an unfair competitive advantage over said competitors who do not control large tonnage of freight and who do not engage in said practices; and also to unfairly divert business from one to another of the said industrial concerns from whom said respondent corporations and their said competitors purchase raw materials and manufactured products as aforesaid, by requiring that the principal consideration for the purchase of said products be the volume of tonnage routed by said industrial concerns through the said Encinal Terminals, as hereinbefore set forth, instead of the usual and normal competitive considerations such as quality, service, and price, and thus to deprive those said industrial concerns that do not control large tonnages of freight from fairly competing for the business of said respondent corporations.

PAR. 15. The foregoing alleged acts and practices of the said corporate and individual respondents have been and still are to tend to hinder and suppress competition between said corporate respondents and their said competitors, and to create a monopoly in said corporate respondents, in the sale and distribution of food products, including California canned and dried fruits, canned Hawaiian pineapple, California canned vegetables, and canned fish, and coffee, in interstate, coastwise and foreign trade and commerce; and to hinder and suppress competition between said industrial concerns from whom said corporate respondents purchase their supplies of raw materials and manufactured products.

PAR. 16. The foregoing alleged acts and practices of the said corporate and individual respondents have been and still are to the prejudice of the public and competitors of said respondent corporations, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, and entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, on April 25, 1936, issued, and on April 29, 1936, served, its complaint in this proceeding upon respondents California Packing Corporation, Alaska Packers Association, L. E. Wood, A. M. Lester, W. H. Levy, A. K. Tichenor, H. E. Van Horn, and Irving F. Lyons, charging them with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of the provisions of said act. After the issuance and service of said complaint, respondents filed their answer thereto, making general denial of the substantial allegations of the complaint. Subsequently all the respondents petitioned the Federal Trade Commission for permission to withdraw said answer and to file their substituted answer to the complaint, in which respondents admitted, for the purposes of this proceeding only, all the material allegations of said complaint. Pursuant to permission granted by the Commission, said original answer was withdrawn by said respondents and said substituted answer was filed in lieu thereof. Said respondents also consented therein that the Commission might proceed to make its findings of fact without further proceedings and that an order might issue and be served upon the respondents requiring them to cease and desist from the unfair methods of competition alleged in the complaint. The said Commission having duly considered the above and being fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom.

Findings

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent, California Packing Corporation, is a corporation organized under and by virtue of the laws of the State of New York, October 19, 1916, with its principal office located at 101 California Street, in the city of San Francisco, State of California. Said corporate respondent now has an authorized capitalization of 1,500,000 common stock no par value, of which there are now outstanding 965,073 shares, with a valuation of approximately $40,000,000. The gross assets of said corporate respondent after reserve for depreciation amount to approximately $56,000,000. Said corporate respondent, since its organization, acquired approximately 84% of the capital stock of the corporate respondent, Alaska Packers Association.

Said corporate respondent, California Packing Corporation, is engaged in the business of packing and distributing a wide line of food products consisting principally of dried fruits, canned fruits, canned vegetables, canned fish, canned pineapples, and coffee. Said corporate respondent is one of the largest packers and distributors of dried fruits and vegetables in the world, and is an important factor in the Hawaiian pineapple industry and in the packing of sardines and tuna fish since the year 1926. Said corporate respondent owns, controls, and operates more than 100 canning factories, fruit drying plants and other factories located in the States of California, Oregon, Washington, Idaho, Utah, Wisconsin, Illinois, Minnesota, Florida, New York and in the Territories of Alaska and Hawaii, in which food products under the brands or trade names, "Del Monte," "Sunkist," "Goldbar," "Glass Jar," "President," and "Luxury," are packed for sale and shipment to the wholesale and retail trade throughout the several States of the United States and in foreign countries, sales of said products being made through sales representatives located in leading trade centers of the several States of the United States and in all foreign countries. Said corporate respondent causes said products, when sold, to be transported from the several factories, located as aforesaid, to the purchasers thereof by means of various methods of transportation, namely, automobile truck, railway, and steamship lines, and there has been and now is a constant course of commerce in said respondent's products between and among the several States of the United States and with foreign countries, through the various ports, docks, wharves, and terminals located on San Francisco Bay and tributary waters.

PAR. 2. Said corporate respondent, Alaska Packers Association, is a corporation organized under the laws of the State of California, with its principal office located at 111 California Street in the city of San Francisco in said State, and is engaged exclusively in the packing of salmon and in the sale thereof, with nine canning factories located in the Territory of Alaska and one on Puget Sound in the State of Washington. Said corporate respondent has an authorized capitalization of 75,000 shares of common stock, par value $100 per share, of which 57,508 shares are outstanding and approximately 84% of which is owned by the said corporate respondent, California Packing Corporation, which operates the business of said Alaska Packers Association as a subsidiary corporation.

PAR. 3. Said corporate respondents, in the course and conduct of their respective businesses as described herein, purchase substantial quantities of raw materials and manufactured products, such as wood, paper, and fiber boxes, containers and cartons, tin, steel, copper, paint, and other articles too numerous to mention, from the manufacturers and producers thereof located throughout the several States of the United States and in foreign countries, and utilize said products in the several manufacturing processes of their said products, and there is a constant current of said raw materials and other manufactured products purchased by said corporate respondents between and among the several States of the United States and with foreign countries, through the various ports, docks, wharves, and terminals located on San Francisco Bay and tributary waters.

PAR. 4. In the course and conduct of their said businesses, said corporate respondents are in substantial competition with other individuals, firms, and corporations located in the various States of the United States engaged in the canning and packing of fruits, vegetables, fish, and other products, and in the sale and distribution thereof to jobbers and wholesalers of said products located throughout the several States of the United States and in foreign countries, which said competitors also purchase substantial quantities of raw materials and other manufactured products, as hereinbefore set forth, from manufacturers and producers thereof located throughout the several States of the United States and said competitors also sell products to many of said industrial concerns. Said competitors utilize instrumentalities of distribution and transportation similar to those utilized by the said corporate respondent as aforesaid, but do not engage in practices similar to those described herein.

PAR. 5. Encinal Terminals is a corporation organized under the laws of the State of California, with its principal office and place of business located in the city of Alameda in said State, with an authorized capitalization of 25,000 shares of stock of a par value of $100 per share, of which 8,815 shares are outstanding, and all of which shares are owned and held by the said corporate respondent, Alaska Packers Association. Said Encinal Terminals is, and has been since the year 1925, engaged in the public wharfinger business in the city of Alameda on the east side of San Francisco Bay, where it operates and maintains facilities necessary in said business, including wharves, sheds, warehouses, and switch tracks for handling freight directed to or from railroad cars and steamships at the wharves. It leases from said corporate respondent, Alaska Packers Association, the land on which said terminal facilities are located. The function of said Encinal Terminals in commerce is the same as other terminals located on San Francisco Bay, as hereinafter set forth in paragraph 6. Said corporate respondents organized the said Encinal Terminals and now direct and control its affairs as a subsidiary of the said corporate respondent, California Packing Corporation, and have utilized since the year 1925, and now utilize the facilities and services of the said Encinal Terminals in the distribution and transportation of the products manufactured and sold by them as aforesaid.

PAR. 6. San Francisco Bay, upon which the cities of San Francisco, Oakland, and Alameda are located, is a land-locked harbor, forty-eight miles long, with 100 miles of shore line, and is fed by two navigable rivers, the Sacramento and the San Joaquin, flowing from the interior of the State of California. It has for many years been recognized as the principal harbor for steamship vessels on the Pacific Coast and ranks second only to New York harbor in the United States with respect to the number of steamship lines landing their cargoes at docks and wharves located thereon, and in the value of the cargoes handled. Approximately 166 steamship lines, operating as coastwise, inter-coastal and foreign, serving in various trades every port of importance throughout the world, carry freight to and from the various ports on San Francisco Bay.

The port of San Francisco, under the immediate control of the Board of State Harbor Commissioners, is owned by the State of California and is operated on a non-profit basis. This port provides a fruit and produce terminal, a grain terminal, a banana terminal and a ship-side refrigeration terminal. Originally all water-borne freight cargo entering or leaving the Bay of San Francisco passed over these wharves located in the city of San Francisco.

State Terminal Company, Ltd., was organized in June 1931, and since that time has been engaged in the public wharfinger business at the Port of San Francisco at Third and Channel Streets. Said Terminal Company occupies buildings and facilities which it rents from the State of California and conducts a general merchandise terminal, and, in addition, handles canned and dried fruits, fishmeal, and lumber.

The Howard Terminal is located at First and Market Streets, Oakland, Calif., having been organized in 1900, and was originally conducted as a general merchandising terminal handling, principally, coal and grain, and offering storage facilities. In 1916 a pier was constructed to accommodate the docking of deep water vessels, and since that time it has been operated as a ship-side terminal. Said Howard Terminal has equipment for handling freight, including railroad tracks, docks for steamers, loading accommodations for motor trucks, and terminal buildings to accommodate the handling of freight cargo for shippers from carrier to vessel, and also extensive warehousing facilities.

The Parr Terminal Company, organized in 1918, was engaged in the public wharfinger business in the city of Oakland, Calif., until October 1, 1931, when its operations were discontinued. The Parr, Richmond Corporation, a subsidiary of the said Parr Terminal Company, now conducts, and since 1927 has conducted, a wharfinger business in the city of Richmond, Calif., operating four terminals for this purpose.

The port of Oakland, which is owned by the municipality of Oakland, Calif., began operation as a public wharfinger in 1927. It is situated on the mainland side of San Francisco Bay and offers the usual facilities for the interchange of freight cargo between land and water carriers. It operates three large terminals for ocean-going vessels and a fourth designed for inland water-way carriers. There are a large number of industrial plants located close to the port of Oakland which would normally utilize its facilities.

The port of Stockton, Calif., located on the San Joaquin River, about ninety miles from San Francisco, began its operations as a public wharfinger in February 1933, and has four public wharves and a grain terminal. Much of the cargo handled through this port's facilities is received from or consigned to interior towns in California. The said port of Stockton, because of its geographical location, has a competitive advantage in securing freight from certain of these towns due to the fact that railroad and truck rates to the ports are $1 per ton cheaper than they are to San Francisco and East Bay ports, including Oakland and Alameda.

The above-described terminals were, during the periods of time of their existence, or are now competitors of said Encinal Terminals, and their function is to act as connecting links between the transportation of products from railroad freight cars or motor trucks into the terminal and to ocean carriers outbound; they operate as the agent of shippers of products being transported and exported, unloading, accumulating, and distributing said products to steamships outbound. In addition, said terminals act as the agents for inbound steamers, furnishing them a berth and assisting them in unloading their cargoes and in the assorting and distribution of the same on the docks ready for transportation to interior points in trucks and in railroad cars; said terminals also act as agents for the railroads carrying products to and from said terminals by loading and unloading freight cars, sealing cars, making out switch lists, damage reports, and other similar activities. The steamship companies utilizing said terminals are required to pay a service charge for all cargo received or discharged, and, in addition, the terminals have a charge for loading or unloading railroad cars and trucks, this being paid by the shipper, who is also required to pay a toll charge on a tonnage basis.

PAR. 7. Said individual respondent, L. E. Wood, is president of the said corporate respondent, California Packing Corporation, and vice president of the said corporate respondent, Alaska Packers Association. Said individual respondent, A. M. Lester, is vice president of said corporate respondent, California Packing Corporation, and a director of said corporate respondent, Alaska Packers Association. Said individual respondent, W. H. Levy is purchasing agent for said corporate respondent, California Packing Corporation. Said individual respondent, A. K. Tichenor, is vice president, general manager and director of said corporate respondent, Alaska Packers Association. Said individual respondent, H. E. Van Horn was traffic director of said corporate respondent, California Packing Corporation, from 1918 to 1928, and is now president of said Encinal Terminals. Said individual respondent, Irving F. Lyons, is now traffic manager of the said corporate respondent, California Packing Corporation.

PAR. 8. Said corporate respondents, acting directly, through and in cooperation with the said individual respondents, for more than one year last past, and particularly since the year 1929, have sought to induce, coerce and compel, and have induced, coerced and compelled a substantial number of large industrial concerns, shippers of substantial tonnages of freight, including the various and several corporations from which said corporate respondents and their said competitors, purchase supplies of raw materials and manufactured products, as aforesaid, and who would, but for the activities of said respondents described herein, normally and usually route their products through various and respective terminals located on San Francisco Bay and the rivers tributary thereto, as described in paragraph 6 herein, to divert, change and shift their routing of shipments so as to utilize the facilities of the said Encinal Terminals to the exclusion of said other terminals by the following methods, to wit:

(a) By promises or assurances that the said corporate respondents would purchase the products of said industrial concerns or would increase their volume of purchases from said industrial concerns, if the said industrial concerns would route the shipments of merchandise and products sold and shipped by them and by other concerns subject to their control, including the competitors of said respondent corporations, through the said Encinal Terminals, which had theretofore been routed through said other terminals.

(b) By threats of reduction or discontinuance of the purchase of said raw materials or manufactured products from said industrial concerns if they declined to route their shipments of merchandise and products, or the merchandise and products of other concerns under their control, through the said Encinal Terminals, and continued to route said shipments through the said other terminals.

PAR. 9. Said corporate respondents, through and in cooperation with the said individual respondents, for more than one year last past, and particularly since the year 1929, have sought to induce, coerce and compel all or a majority of the steamship companies operating as coastwise, intercoastal, and foreign cargo carriers engaged in carrying freight to and from various ports on San Francisco Bay and tributary waters, and have induced, coerced and compelled a substantial number of said steamship companies, often at extra expense to said steamship companies to divert freight tonnage theretofore moving through said other terminals described in paragraph 6 herein, to said Encinal Terminals, although the service and facilities of the said other terminals are equal to those of the said Encinal Terminals and in many instances more economical to said steamship companies and the shippers of the products carried by them, than those of the said Encinal Terminals, by the use of the following methods, to wit:

Findings

(a) By promises or assurances of substantial tonnages, or a substantial increase of tonnage, of freight to be shipped over the lines of said steamship companies from the said Encinal Terminals by said corporate respondents if the said steamship companies would divert the tonnage theretofore moving through said other terminals, to said Encinal Terminals.

(b) By threats of withdrawal or discontinuance of the shipment of freight or the reduction of tonnage of freight shipped over the lines of said steamship companies from said Encinal Terminals by the said corporate respondents if the said steamship companies would not divert tonnage theretofore moving through said other terminals to said Encinal Terminals.

PAR. 10. Said corporate respondents, through and in cooperation with the said individual respondents, for more than one year last past and particularly since the year 1929, have sought to induce, coerce, and compel all or a majority of the steamship companies operating as coastwise, intercoastal and foreign cargo carriers engaged in carrying freight to and from various ports on San Francisco Bay and tributary waters, and have induced, coerced and compelled a substantial number of said steamship companies, by methods described in subparagraphs (a) and (b) of paragraph 9 herein, to disclose the identity of consignees and receivers of shipments of freight cargo carried by said steamship companies and to allow representatives of said corporate respondents to inspect confidential records, including manifests, of said steamship companies, to enable said respondents to bring pressure and influence to bear upon said consignees and receivers to divert their shipments through said Encinal Terminals, as set forth and described in paragraph 8 herein.

PAR. 11. Said individual respondent, H. E. Van Horn, while traffic manager of said corporate respondent, California Packing Corporation, formulated and inaugurated and has since directed the execution of a plan of using the tonnage of freight shipped by said corporate respondents over steamship lines and the buying power of said corporate respondents to influence the routing of tonnage to said Encinal Terminals, and who together with other said individual respondents described in paragraph 7 herein, composed what is known as the "Encinal Executive Committee," and all of said individual respondents have cooperated with and assisted the said corporate respondents in the execution of the said plan and of the acts and practices described and set forth herein, by utilizing their official positions in said corporate respondents to induce, coerce and compel the officials of said steamship companies and said industrial concerns to give undue preference to the facilities of the said Encinal Terminals by means of said promises and threats as described and set forth in subparagraphs (a) and (b) of paragraphs 8, 9, and 10 herein.

PAR. 12. Said corporate respondents, acting directly through and in cooperation with said individual respondents, have spied upon the business of said competitors of said corporate respondents, by securing from said Encinal Terminals the names and addresses of customers of said competitors, to enable said corporate respondents to bring pressure and influence to bear upon said customers, to divert their shipments of products purchased from said competitors, through said Encinal Terminals, as set forth herein.

PAR. 13. Said corporate respondents, acting directly and in cooperation with said individual respondents, induced, coerced, and compelled said competitors of said corporate respondents to divert, change and shift their shipments of products sold by them in interstate and foreign commerce so as to utilize the facilities of the said Encinal Terminals to the exclusion of said other terminals located on San Francisco Bay, by bringing undue pressure to bear upon the said industrial concerns to whom said competitors were selling their products or from whom said competitors were purchasing supplies of raw materials and manufactured products as more particularly set forth in paragraph 8 herein.

PAR. 14. The effect of the said practices of the said corporate and individual respondents, as set forth herein, has been and now is, to reduce the distribution expenses and to enhance and increase the revenues of said corporate respondents to the unfair competitive disadvantage of said competitors by compelling said competitors and said other industrial concerns, against their interest, to route shipments of products sold by them as aforesaid, through said Encinal Terminals; and to require the said competitors to pay more for said raw materials and manufactured products from said industrial concerns than said corporate respondents are required to pay and to give to said respondent corporations an unfair competitive advantage over said competitors who do not control large tonnage of freight and who do not engage in said practices; and also to unfairly divert business from one to another of the said industrial concerns from whom said respondent corporations and their said competitors purchase raw materials and manufactured products as aforesaid, by requiring that the principal consideration for the purchase of said products be the volume of tonnage routed by said industrial concerns through the said Encinal Terminals, as hereinbe-fore set forth, instead of the usual and normal competitive considerations such as quality, service, and price, and thus to deprive those said industrial concerns that do not control large tonnages of freight from fairly competing for the business of said respondent corporations.

PAR. 15. The foregoing alleged acts and practices of the said corporate and individual respondents have been and still are to tend to hinder and suppress competition between said corporate respondents and their said competitors, and to create a monopoly in said corporate respondents, in the sale and distribution of food products, including California canned and dried fruits, canned pineapple, California canned vegetables, and canned fish, and coffee, in interstate, coastwise and foreign trade and commerce; and to hinder and suppress competition between said industrial concerns from whom said corporate respondents purchase their supplies of raw materials and manufactured products.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondents, California Packing Corporation, Alaska Packers Association, L. E. Wood, A. M. Lester, W. H. Levy, A. K. Tichenor, H. E. Van Horn and Irving F. Lyons, are to the prejudice of the public and of respondents' competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce, within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

It is ordered, That the respondents California Packing Corporation and Alaska Packers Association and their respective officers, agents, representatives, servants, and employees, and L. E. Wood, A. M. Lester, W. H. Levy, A. K. Tichenor, H. E. Van Horn, and Irving

F. Lyons, in connection with the offering for sale, sale and distribution of food products in interstate commerce by said California Packing Corporation and Alaska Packers Association for use or resale within the United States or any territory thereof, or in the District of Columbia, cease and desist from:

1. Inducing, coercing, or compelling in any manner the routing of shipments of commodities purchased or sold by concerns which are in competition with the California Packing Corporation or Alaska Packers Association in the sale and distribution of food products, including dried fruits, canned fruits, canned vegetables, canned fish, canned pineapples, or coffee, to or through Encinal Terminals, Alameda, California, or any public terminal owned or controlled by said California Packing Corporation or Alaska Packers Association; provided, that nothing in this paragraph shall prevent voluntary cooperation in the normal course of business between the said competitors and said California Packing Corporation or Alaska Packers Association in lawfully making up pooled cars, in arranging enclosures, or other cooperative shipping arrangements.

2. Inducing, coercing, or compelling industrial concerns from which the California Packing Corporation or Alaska Packers Association purchase supplies of raw materials and manufactured products, to divert, change or shift to or through Encinal Terminals or any such subsidiary terminal, the routing made by such concerns of shipments of commodities sold by them to, or purchased from, industrial concerns other than the California Packing Corporation or Alaska Packers Association; provided, that nothing in this paragraph shall prevent the solicitation of tonnage consisting of shipments of commodities to the extent that they are to be used in the manufacture of finished products which said California Packing Corporation or Alaska Packers Association have previously contracted to purchase.

3. Inducing, coercing, or compelling companies operating or controlling steamship lines operating as coastwise, intercoastal, or foreign cargo carriers engaged in carrying freight to and from various points on San Francisco Bay and tributary waters to divert freight tonnage, the routing of which such steamship lines control and in which tonnage the California Packing Corporation and the Alaska Packers Association have no proprietary or contractual interest, to Encinal Terminals, or any such subsidiary terminal, or to utilize the facilities thereof for the handling of commodities in which the California Packing Corporation and the Alaska Packers Association have no such interest, provided, that nothing in this paragraph shall prevent the solicitation of such freight under the control of said steamship companies undertaken for the purpose of facilitating or expediting the movement of specific shipments of commodities being made to or by said California Packing Corporation or Alaska Packers Association.

4. Inducing, coercing, or compelling steamship companies operating as coastwise, intercoastal or foreign cargo carriers engaged in carrying freight to and from various ports in San Francisco Bay and tributary waters unlawfully to disclose the identity of consignees and receivers of shipments of freight cargo carried by said steamship companies, or unlawfully to allow representatives of said California Packing Corporation or Alaska Packers Association to inspect records including manifests, of such steamship companies, except insofar as such records concern or relate to freight shipped or received by the California Packing Corporation or the Alaska Packers Association or are open to public inspection.

5. Inspecting or examining any such confidential records of said steamship companies, except insofar as same concern or relate to freight shipped or received by the corporate respondents or are open to public inspection.

6. Pursuing a plan or policy of using directly or indirectly the tonnage of freight shipped or received by said California Packing Corporation or Alaska Packers Association or their buying power to induce, coerce or compel said steamship companies or said industrial concerns to route tonnage to or through Encinal Terminals or any such subsidiary terminal, or to use the facilities thereof, in violation of this order, through threats of withdrawing or diminishing, or promises of making or increasing, directly or indirectly, purchases or shipments by said California Packing Corporation or Alaska Packers Association.

Provided, Nothing in this order shall prohibit the independent solicitation of traffic for said Encinal Terminals, by H. E. Van Horn, as an officer or agent of said Encinal Terminals, or by any other agent of said Encinal Terminals, in the normal course of business of a public terminal, without reliance upon or reference to the affiliation of said Encinal Terminals with said California Packing Corporation or Alaska Packers Association or their bargaining power as purchasers or shippers.

It is further ordered, That the respondents and each of them shall, within 60 days after service upon them of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which they have complied with this order.

IN THE MATTER OF THE RIESER COMPANY, INC.

COMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION
OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 26, 1914

Docket 2799. Complaint, May 8, 1936—Decision, June 30, 1937

Where a corporation engaged in manufacture and sale of tissues, in competition with those engaged in sale and distribution of handkerchiefs and of compounds, medicaments, or preparations of various kinds of treatment, relief, or cure of colds, hay fever, and sinus troubles, and including among said various competitors those who truthfully describe their said handkerchiefs or truthfully advertise, describe, and represent their said remedies, etc., on labels and in advertisements thereof—

Described its said products, on packages and cartons in which sold, as "MENTHO-KERCHIEF The Mentholated Tissue Handkerchief," and stated thereon "RELIEVES HEAD COLDS SINUS AND HAY FEVER * * * CLEAR NASAL PASSAGES," and on reverse side of package or carton, and under statement "WHY DOCTORS RECOMMEND MENTHO-KERCHIEF," "They are better than ordinary handkerchiefs, because they are disposable and sanitary . . . They are better than ordinary tissues, because they are mentholated," and "Nothing like Mentho-kerchief to relieve all types of Head Colds, Sinus Trouble, and Hay Fever, etc," facts being its said tissue products, thus designated, described, and represented, had not been and were not recommended by doctors as a cure or remedy for head colds and other ailments above set forth, and use thereof did not, and could not, have any beneficial effects as remedy or cure for hay fever or sinus trouble, or afford any appreciable relief to those suffering therefrom, and any benefits which a patient might derive through use of such tissues would be purely psychological and not physical, and said products were not, as signified to consuming public from unqualified words "handkerchief" or "kerchief," articles for use in connection with nose, face, or hands and made of silk, linen or cotton, and said products were not better than ordinary handkerchiefs, either because disposable or mentholated, or for any other cause;

With capacity and tendency to unfairly divert trade to it and thereby injure competitors above designated:

Held, That such acts and practices were to the prejudice of the public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition.

Mr. William L. Taggart for the Commission.

Mr. Fulton Brylawski, of Washington, D. C., for respondent.

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the

Complaint

Federal Trade Commission having reason to believe that The Rieser Company, Inc., hereinafter designated respondent, has been and is using unfair methods of competition in commerce as "commerce" is defined in said act, and it appearing to said Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. The Rieser Company, Inc., is a corporation organized, existing and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of New York, with its principal place of business at One Hundred Nineteen (119) West Fortieth (40th) Street, in the city and State of New York, engaged in the manufacture of tissues and in the sale and distribution of such products in commerce between the States of New York and Pennsylvania and the various other States of the United States. The factory in which it manufactures its said products is located at Shamokin, in the State of Pennsylvania. Respondent causes and has caused its products when sold to be transported either from its place of business in the State of New York or from its said factory in the State of Pennsylvania to purchasers in the various other States of the United States.

In the course and conduct of its business The Rieser Company, Inc., has been at all times hereinafter mentioned, and now is, in competition with individuals, partnerships, and corporations engaged in the sale and distribution in interstate commerce, of handkerchiefs, and of compounds, medicaments or preparations of various kinds offered for sale or sold for the treatment, relief, or cure of colds, hay fever, and sinus troubles.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of its business, as described in paragraph 1 hereof, respondent has caused its tissue products to be offered for sale or sold in packages or cartons on which there have appeared the following representations, to wit:

MENTHIO-KERCHIEF

The Mentholated Tissue Handkerchief

RELIEVES HEAD COLDS

SINUS AND HAY FEVER

* * *

CLEARs NASAL PASSAGES

The reverse side of the packages or cartons bears the following statements:

WHY DOCTORS RECOMMEND MENTHIO-KERCHIEF

They are better than ordinary handkerchiefs, because they are disposable and sanitary . . . They are better than ordinary tissues, because they are mentholated!

Complaint

25 F. T. C.

Nothing like Mentho-kerchief to relieve all types of Head Colds, Sinus Trouble and Hay Fever, etc.

In truth and in fact, the word "handkerchief" signifies and means to the consuming public an article for use in connection with the nose, face or hands manufactured from silk, linen, or cotton, and the tissue products of respondent is manufactured neither from silk, nor linen, nor cotton, and is not a handkerchief as the term is understood by the consuming public. They are not better than ordinary handkerchiefs either because they are disposable and sanitary or mentholated, or for any other cause.

The tissue products of respondent designated, described and represented as aforesaid have not been and are not recommended by doctors as a cure for head colds, sinus trouble, hay fever, or similar ailments, and the use of respondent's product has not had, does not have and cannot have any beneficial effect as a remedy for hay fever or sinus trouble, nor does it have or afford any appreciable or noticeable relief to those suffering from sinus trouble or hay fever. Such relief as might be obtained by sufferers from head colds would be limited to a conceivable, or possibly momentary, clearing of the nasal passages, yielding a relief so slight, temporary, and transient as to be negligible.

PAR. 3. There have been and are individuals, partnerships, and corporations offering for sale and selling in interstate commerce handkerchiefs truthfully described.

There are also and have been for many years last past individuals, partnerships, and corporations engaged in the sale in interstate commerce of compounds, remedies, medicaments, or medical preparations of various kinds for the cure of or as a remedy for, or for the treatment or relief of colds, hay fever and sinus troubles, truthfully advertised, described, and represented, both on labels appearing on their cartons or other containers of their product, and in advertisements thereof.

PAR. 4. The sale by respondent of its said product by means of the false and misleading representations described in paragraph 2 hereof has had and has the capacity and tendency to mislead and deceive the purchasing public into the belief that the said product has been recommended by doctors as a cure or remedy for, and that it may successfully serve for, the treatment and relief of sinus trouble, hay fever, and head colds and into the purchase of respondent's products in reliance on such erroneous belief.

The aforesaid practices of respondent have had and have the capacity and tendency to divert trade to respondent from, and thereby to injure, competitors described or designated in paragraph 3 hereof, offering for sale and selling in interstate commerce handkerchiefs of various kinds, compounds, remedies, medicaments or medical preparations for the treatment, relief, or cure of sinus trouble, hay fever, or colds.

PAR. 5. The above and foregoing practices of respondent, described in paragraph 2 hereof, have been and are all to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors, and have constituted and constitute unfair methods of competition within the meaning of Section 5 of the Act of Congress entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914.

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, on May 8, 1936, issued and served its complaint in this proceeding upon respondent, namely, The Rieser Company, Inc., a corporation, charging it with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce, in violation of the provisions of said act. After the issuance of said complaint and the filing of respondent's answer thereto, testimony and other evidence in support of the allegations of said complaint were introduced by W. L. Taggart, attorney for the Commission, before Robert S. Hall, an examiner of the Commission theretofore duly designated by it, and in opposition to the allegations of the complaint by Fulton Brylawski, attorney for the respondent; and said testimony and other evidence were duly recorded and filed in the office of the Commission. Thereafter the proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on the said complaint, the answer thereto, testimony and other evidence, briefs in support of the complaint and in opposition thereto, and the oral arguments of counsel aforesaid; and the Commission, having duly considered the same and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. The Rieser Company, Inc., is a corporation organized, existing, and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of New York, with its principal place of business at 119 West Fortieth Street in the city and State of New York. It is engaged in the manufacture of tissues and in the sale and distribution of such products in commerce between the States of New York and Pennsylvania and the various other States of the United States. The factory in which it manufactures its said products is located at Shamokin, in the State of Pennsylvania. Respondent causes and has caused its products, when sold, to be transported from its place of business in the State of New York, or from its said factory in the State of Pennsylvania, to purchasers in the various other States of the United States.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of its business, the Rieser Company, Inc., has been at all times hereinafter mentioned, and now is, in competition with individuals, partnerships, and corporations engaged in the sale and distribution in interstate commerce, of handkerchiefs and of compounds, medicaments, or preparations of various kinds offered for sale or sold for the treatment, relief, or cure of colds, hay fever, and sinus troubles.

PAR. 3. Respondent causes its tissue products to be offered for sale or sold in packages or cartons on which there have appeared the following representations, to wit:

MENTHO-KERCHIEF

The Mentholated Tissue Handkerchief

RELIEVES HEAD COLDS

* * *

CLEARs NASAL PASSAGES

The reverse side of the packages or cartons bears the following statements:

WHY DOCTORS RECOMMEND MENTHO-KERCHIEF

They are better than ordinary handkerchiefs, because they are disposable and sanitary * * * They are better than ordinary tissues, because they are mentholated.

Nothing like Mentho-kerchief to relieve all types of Head Colds, Sinus Trouble and Hay Fever, etc.

PAR. 4. The tissue products of respondent, designated, described, and represented, as aforesaid, have not been and are not recommended by doctors as a cure or remedy for head colds, sinus trouble, hay fever, or similar ailments. The use of respondent's product has not had, does not have, and cannot have any beneficial effect as a remedy or cure for hay fever or sinus trouble. Said products do not afford any appreciable relief to those suffering from sinus trouble or hay fever.

PAR. 5. There are individuals, partnerships and corporations offering for sale and selling in interstate commerce handkerchiefs truthfully described in competition with respondent's tissue products:

There are also, and have been for many years last past, individuals, partnerships, and corporations engaged in competition with respondent who have been offering for sale and selling in interstate commerce compounds, remedies, medicaments, or medical preparations of various kinds designed for the cure of, or as a remedy for or for the treatment or relief of colds, hay fever, and sinus troubles which are truthfully advertised, described, and represented, both on labels appearing on their cartons or other containers of their products and in advertisements thereof.

PAR. 6. It is the consensus of medical opinion that menthol externally applied will not relieve head colds, sinus trouble, or hay fever, but that a patient suffering from a head cold may by the inhalation of menthol vapors of considerable strength get a soothing sensation through the respiratory tract. The consensus of medical opinion is that common colds are caused by an unfilterable virus; that one of the effects of the cold is congestion of the nasal passages, that menthol when mixed with oil is frequently inserted into the nostrils for the purpose of easing this congestion. The effect of the menthol is to create a cooling and soothing sensation within the nostrils, and unless the congestion is too severe the patient has less difficulty in breathing. This is not, however, a treatment for the common cold in the strict sense, but is simply a temporary palliative in that the effect of the menthol is slightly astringent. Menthol has no effect on sinus trouble except in so far as it may give a cooling sensation to the nostrils and has no curative value in the treatment of hay fever. The claim of the respondent that the mentholated tissue in question will relieve colds, hay fever, and sinus trouble is a gross exaggeration and the tissues of respondent would be absolutely worthless in the treatment of common colds, hay fever, and sinus trouble. Any benefits which a patient might derive through the use of said tissues would be purely psychological and not physical.

PAR. 7. The claim that said tissues relieve colds, hay fever and sinus trouble is erroneous. The amount of menthol vapor that can be inhaled from the tissues in question is barely perceptible to a person not suffering from any of the ailments mentioned, that is to say, common colds, hay fever, and sinus trouble and would be entirely imperceptible to one suffering from common cold or sinus trouble.

Order

25 F. T. C.

PAR. 8. The use of the words handkerchief or kerchief unaccompanied by such qualifying and descriptive words as "paper" or "tissue paper" signifies and means to the consuming public an article for use in connection with the nose, face, or hands, manufactured from silk, linen, or cotton and does not include the type of product manufactured by respondent. The tissue products of respondent are not manufactured from silk, linen, or cotton and are not a handkerchief as the term is now understood by the consuming public. When the words "tissue paper" or "paper" accompanying the words handkerchief or kerchief the public is placed on notice as to the nature of the product described. Respondent's tissue product is not better than ordinary handkerchiefs either because they are disposable or mentholated or for any other cause.

PAR. 9. The aforesaid practices of respondent have had, and now have, the capacity and tendency to unfairly divert trade to respondent from, and thereby to injure, competitors designated in paragraph 2 hereof, selling in commerce among and between the various States of the United States handkerchiefs of various kinds, and compounds, remedies, medicaments, or medical preparations for the treatment, relief or cure of sinus trouble, hay fever or colds.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondent, The Rieser Company, Inc., are to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

Order

It is ordered, That the respondent, The Rieser Company, Inc., its officers, representatives, agents, and employees, in connection with the offering for sale, sale, and distribution of its tissue products in interstate commerce or in the District of Columbia, do forthwith cease and desist:

(1) From representing that its tissue products are better than or superior to ordinary handkerchiefs because they are sanitary and disposable or because they are mentholated; that use of its tissue products will clear the nasal passages; that its tissue products have been recommended by doctors as a cure or remedy for sinus trouble, hay fever, and head colds or that said products are beneficial in the treatment of such ailments and conditions.

(2) From using the words "handkerchief" or "kerchief" as descriptive of its tissue products unless there also appears in close proximity thereto and in equal prominence therewith the words "tissue paper" or "paper" written or printed in letters of clear and easily readable type.

It is further ordered, That the respondent shall, within 60 days after service upon it of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which it has complied with this order.

IN THE MATTER OF
MISS MORRIS CANDIES, INC.

COMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION
OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 26, 1914

Docket 3132. Complaint, May 15, 1937—Decision, June 30, 1937

Where a corporation engaged in manufacture and sale of candy, including certain assortments which were so packed and assembled as to involve, or which were designed to or might involve, use of a lottery scheme when sold and distributed to ultimate consumers thereof, and which included such assortments as a number of packages of candy of varying size, together with a punchboard, for sale to the consuming public under a plan, and in accordance with said board's explanatory legend, by which those punching by chance certain numbers received specified package of candy, and person making last punch in each of sections into which board was divided received specified package, and others received nothing for their five cents other than privilege of making a punch—

Sold, to wholesalers and jobbers, such assortments for display and resale to purchasing public by retail dealers therein in accordance with aforesaid sales plan, and thereby supplied to and placed in the hands of others the means of conducting a lottery in the sale of its said products in accordance with such plan, contrary to public policy long recognized by the common law and criminal statutes and to an established public policy of the United States Government, and in competition with many who, unwilling to offer or sell candy so packed and assembled, or otherwise arranged and packed for sale to purchasing public, as to involve a game of chance, refrain therefrom;

With capacity and tendency to induce purchasers to buy its said product in preference to that offered and sold by its competitors, and with result that many dealers in and ultimate purchasers of candy were attracted by said method and manner of packing same and by element of chance involved in sale thereof as aforesaid, and thereby induced to purchase said candy, thus packed and sold by it, in preference to that offered and sold by said competitors who do not use same or equivalent method, and with tendency and capacity, because of said game of chance, to divert to it trade and custom from its aforesaid competitors, exclude from candy trade all competitors who are unwilling to and do not use same or equivalent method because unlawful, lessen competition in such trade, tend to create a monopoly thereof in it and such other distributors as do use same or equivalent method, deprive purchasing public of benefit of free competition therein, and eliminate from said trade all actual, and exclude therefrom all potential, competitors who do not adopt and use such or an equivalent method;

Held, That such acts and practices were to the prejudice of the public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition.

Mr. Henry C. Lank and Mr. P. C. Kolinski for the Commission.

Complaint

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that Miss Morris Candies, Inc., a corporation, hereinafter referred to as respondent, has been and is using unfair methods of competition in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in said act of Congress and it appearing to said Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. The respondent, Miss Morris Candies, Inc., is a corporation organized and doing business under the laws of the State of Minnesota, with its principal office and place of business located at 517-19 Third Street North, in the city of Minneapolis, State of Minnesota. Respondent is now and for several years last past has been engaged in the manufacture of candy and in the sale and distribution thereof to wholesale dealers and jobbers located at points in the State of Minnesota and in the States of Wisconsin and Iowa. Respondent causes and has caused its said products when sold to be transported from its principal place of business in the city of Minneapolis, State of Minnesota, to purchasers thereof in the States of Minnesota, Wisconsin, and Iowa at their respective points of location. There is now, and has been for several years last past, a course of trade and commerce by said respondent in such candy between and among the States of the United States above named. In the course and conduct of said business, respondent is in competition with other corporations and with partnerships and individuals engaged in the manufacture of candy and in the sale and distribution thereof in commerce between and among the various States of the United States.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of its business as described in paragraph 1 hereof, respondent sells and has sold to wholesale dealers and jobbers various assortments of candy so packed and assembled as to involve, or which are designed to or may involve, the use of a lottery scheme when sold and distributed to the ultimate consumers thereof. Such assortments are composed of a number of packages of candy of varying sizes, together with a device commonly called a "punchboard." The said packages of candy are sold and distributed to the consuming public by means of said punchboard in the following manner:

The said boards have a number of holes within which are secreted slips of paper bearing a printed number, and the area of the boards in which the said holes are placed is divided into sections. Sales are 5¢ each, and each purchaser is entitled to one punch from said board. When a punch is made, the slip of paper bearing a printed number and secreted in said hole is disclosed. The numbers begin with one and continue to the number of holes there are on the board, but the numbers are not arranged in numerical sequence. The board bears statements informing purchasers and prospective purchasers that certain numbers receive a specified package of candy, and that the last punch in each section receives a specified package of candy. Persons who do not qualify by punching one of the specified numbers from the board, or by punching the last punch from one of the sections, receive nothing for their money other than the privilege of punching a number from said board. The slips bearing the printed numbers are effectively concealed from purchasers and prospective purchasers until a selection has been made and the particular punch separated from the board. The fact as to whether a purchaser receives one of the packages of candy, or nothing other than the privilege of punching a number from said board, for the payment of 5¢, is thus determined wholly by lot or chance.

Respondent manufactures, sells, and distributes several assortments of candy involving the use of a punchboard in the sale and distribution thereof to the consuming public, but all of the said assortments involve the same principle as set forth above, and vary only in detail.

PAR. 3. The wholesale dealers and jobbers to whom respondent sells its assortments resell said assortments to retail dealers, and said retail dealers expose said assortments for sale and sell the same to the purchasing public in accordance with the aforesaid sales plan. Respondent thus supplies to and places in the hands of others the means of conducting lotteries in the sale of its product in accordance with the sales plan hereinabove set forth; and said sales plan has the capacity and tendency of inducing purchasers thereof to purchase respondent's said product in preference to candy offered for sale and sold by its competitors.

PAR. 4. The sale of said candy to the purchasing public in the manner above alleged involves a game of chance or the sale of a chance to procure packages of candy. The use by respondent of said method in the sale of candy, and the sale of candy by and through the use thereof and by the aid of said method, is a practice of the sort which the common law and criminal statutes have long deemed contrary to public policy, and is contrary to an established public policy of the Government of the United States. The use by respondent of said method has the tendency unduly to hinder competition or create monopoly in this, to wit: that the use thereof has the tendency and capacity to exclude from the candy trade competitors who do not adopt and use the same method or an equivalent or similar method involving the same or an equivalent or similar element of chance or lottery scheme. Many persons, firms, and corporations who make and sell candy in competition with the respondent, as above alleged, are unwilling to offer for sale or sell candy so packed and assembled as above alleged, or otherwise arranged and packed for sale to the purchasing public so as to involve a game of chance, and such competitors refrain therefrom.

PAR. 5. Many dealers in and ultimate purchasers of candy are attracted by respondent's said method and manner of packing said candy and by the element of chance involved in the sale thereof in the manner above described, and are thereby induced to purchase said candy so packed and sold by respondent in preference to candy offered for sale and sold by said competitors of respondent who do not use the same or equivalent methods. The use of said method by respondent has the tendency and capacity, because of said game of chance, to divert to respondent trade and custom from its said competitors who do not use the same or an equivalent method; to exclude from said candy trade all competitors who are unwilling to and who do not use the same or an equivalent method because the same is unlawful; to lessen competition in said candy trade and to tend to create a monopoly of said candy trade in respondent and such other distributors of candy as use the same or an equivalent method; and to deprive the purchasing public of the benefit of free competition in said candy trade. The use of said method by respondent has the tendency and capacity to eliminate from said candy trade all actual competitors, and to exclude therefrom all potential competitors who do not adopt and use said method or an equivalent method.

PAR. 6. The aforementioned method, acts, and practices of respondent are all to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors, as hereinabove alleged. Said method, acts, and practices constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914.

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, on May 15, 1937, issued and on May 17, 1937, served its complaint in this proceeding upon the respondent, Miss Morris Candies, Inc., a corporation, charging it with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of the provisions of said act. After the issuance of said complaint and the filing of respondent's answer thereto, the Commission, by order entered herein, granted respondent's request for permission to withdraw said answer and to substitute therefor an answer admitting all the material allegations of the complaint to be true and waiving the taking of further evidence and all other intervening procedure, which substitute answer was duly filed in the office of the Commission. Thereafter, this proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on the said complaint and the substitute answer, briefs and oral argument of counsel having been waived; and the Commission, having duly considered the same and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. The respondent, Miss Morris Candies, Inc., is a corporation organized and doing business under the laws of the State of Minnesota, with its principal office and place of business located at 517-19 Third Street North, in the city of Minneapolis, State of Minnesota. Respondent is now, and for several years last past has been, engaged in the manufacture of candy and in the sale and distribution thereof to wholesale dealers and jobbers located at points in the State of Minnesota and in the States of Wisconsin and Iowa. Respondent causes and has caused its said products when sold to be transported from its principal places of business in the city of Minneapolis, State of Minnesota, to purchasers thereof in the States of Minnesota, Wisconsin, and Iowa at their respective points of location. There is now, and has been for several years last past, a course of trade and commerce by said respondent in such candy between and among the States of the United States above named. In the course and conduct of said business, respondent is in competition with other corporations and with partnerships and individuals engaged in the manufacture of candy and in the sale and distribution thereof in commerce between and among the various States of the United States.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of its business, as described in paragraph 1 hereof, respondent sells and has sold to wholesale dealers and jobbers various assortments of candy so packed and assembled as to involve, or which are designed to or may involve, the use of a lottery scheme when sold and distributed to the ultimate consumers thereof. Such assortments are composed of a number of packages of candy of varying sizes, together with a device commonly called a "punchboard." The said packages of candy are sold and distributed to the consuming public by means of said punchboard in the following manner:

The said boards have a number of holes within which are secreted slips of paper bearing a printed number, and the area of the boards in which the said holes are placed is divided into sections. Sales are 5c each, and each purchaser is entitled to one punch from said board. When a punch is made, the slip of paper bearing a printed number and secreted in said hole is disclosed. The numbers begin with one and continue to the number of holes there are on the board but the numbers are not arranged in numerical sequence. The board bears statements informing purchasers and prospective purchasers that certain numbers receive a specified package of candy, and that the last punch in each section receives a specified package of candy. Persons who do not qualify by punching one of the specified numbers from the board, or by punching the last punch from one of the sections, receive nothing for their money other than the privilege of punching a number from said board. The slips bearing the printed numbers are effectively concealed from purchasers and prospective purchasers until a selection has been made and the particular punch separated from the board. The fact as to whether a purchaser receives one of the packages of candy, or nothing other than the privilege of punching a number from said board, for the payment of 5c, is thus determined wholly by lot or chance.

Respondent manufactures, sells, and distributes several assortments of candy involving the use of a punchboard in the sale and distribution thereof to the consuming public, but all of the said assortments involve the same principle as set forth above, and vary only in detail.

PAR. 3. The wholesale dealers and jobbers to whom respondent sells its assortments resell said assortments to retail dealers, and said retail dealers expose said assortments for sale and sell the same to the purchasing public in accordance with the aforesaid sales plan. Respondent thus supplies to and places in the hands of others the means of conducting lotteries in the sale of its product in accordance with the sales plan hereinabove set forth; and said sales plan has the capacity and tendency of inducing purchasers thereof to purchase respondent's said product in preference to candy offered for sale and sold by its competitors.

PAR. 4. The sale of said candy to the purchasing public in the manner above found involves a game of chance or the sale of a chance to procure packages of candy. The use by respondent of said method in the sale of candy, and the sale of candy by and through the use thereof and by the aid of said method, is a practice of the sort which the common law and criminal statutes have long deemed contrary to public policy, and is contrary to an established public policy of the Government of the United States. The use by respondent of said method has the tendency unduly to hinder competition or create monopoly in this, to wit: that the use thereof has the tendency and capacity to exclude from the candy trade competitors who do not adopt and use the same method or an equivalent or similar method involving the same or an equivalent or similar element of chance or lottery scheme. Many persons, firms, and corporations who make and sell candy in competition with the respondent are unwilling to offer for sale or sell candy so packed and assembled as above described, or otherwise arranged and packed for sale to the purchasing public so as to involve a game of chance, and such competitors refrain therefrom.

PAR. 5. Many dealers in and ultimate purchasers of candy are attracted by respondent's said method and manner of packing said candy and by the element of chance involved in the sale thereof in the manner above described, and are thereby induced to purchase said candy so packed and sold by respondent in preference to candy offered for sale and sold by said competitors of respondent who do not use the same or an equivalent method. The use of said method by respondent has the tendency and capacity, because of said game of chance, to divert to respondent trade and custom from its said competitors who do not use the same or an equivalent method; to exclude from said candy trade all competitors who are unwilling to and who do not use the same or an equivalent method because the same is unlawful; to lessen competition in said candy trade and to tend to create a monopoly of said candy trade in respondent and such other distributors of candy as use the same or an equivalent method; and to deprive the purchasing public of the benefit of free competition in said candy trade. The use of said method by respondent has the tendency and capacity to eliminate from said candy trade all actual competitors, and to exclude therefrom all potential competitors who do not adopt and use said method or an equivalent method.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondent, Miss Morris Candies, Inc., a corporation, are to the prejudice of the public and respondent's competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

This proceedings having been heard by the Federal Trade Commission upon the complaint of the Commission and the substitute answer of respondent, dated June 18, 1937, admitting all the material allegations of the complaint to be true and waiving the taking of further evidence and all other intervening procedure, and the Commission having made its findings as to the facts and its conclusion that said respondent has violated the provisions of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

It is ordered, That the respondent, Miss Morris Candies, Inc., a corporation, its officers, representatives, agents, and employees, in connection with the offering for sale, sale, and distribution of candy in interstate commerce, do forthwith cease and desist from:

1. Selling and distributing to jobbers and wholesale dealers for resale to retail dealers candy so packed and assembled that sales of such candy to the general public are to be made, or may be made, by means of a lottery, gaming device, or gift enterprise.
2. Supplying to or placing in the hands of wholesale dealers and jobbers assortments of candy which are used, or which may be used, without alteration or rearrangement of the contents of such assortments, to conduct a lottery, gaming device, or gift enterprise in the sale or distribution of the candy contained in said assortments to the public.
3. Supplying to or placing in the hands of wholesale dealers and jobbers assortments of candy, together with a device commonly called a "punchboard" for use, or which may be used, in distributing or selling said candy to the public at retail.

Order

25 F. T. C.

4. Furnishing to wholesalers and jobbers a device commonly called a "punchboard," either with assortments of candy or separately, bearing a legend or legends or statements informing the purchasing public that the candy is being sold to the public by lot or chance or in accordance with a sales plan which constitutes a lottery, gaming device, or gift enterprise.

It is further ordered, That the respondent, Miss Morris Candies, Inc., a corporation, shall, within 30 days after service upon it of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which it has complied with the order to cease and desist hereinabove set forth.

Modified Order

IN THE MATTER OF MID WEST MILLS, INC.

MODIFYING CEASE AND DESIST ORDER

Docket 2526. Order, July 2, 1937

Order modifying, pursuant to decision of United States Circuit Court of Appeals in Federal Trade Commission v. Mid West Mills, Inc., 90 F. (2d) 723, Commission's prior order in Midwest Mills, Inc., Docket 2526, 22 F. T. C. 566, 573, prohibiting, as there set forth, use of respondent's corporate or trade name "Mid West Mills, Inc.," so as to permit such use, if qualified, as below set forth, by words "Jobbers and Converters, Not Mill Owners or Mill Operators."

Before Mr. William C. Reeves, trial examiner.

Mr. George Foulkes for the Commission.

Kamfner, Halligan & Marks, of Chicago, Ill., for respondent.

MODIFIED ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

This proceeding, having been heard by the Federal Trade Commission upon the complaint of the Commission, the answer of respondent, testimony and evidence taken before William C. Reeves, an examiner of the Commission theretofore duly designated by it, in support of the charges of said complaint and in opposition thereto, briefs filed herein, and the Commission, having made its findings as to the facts and its conclusion that said respondent has violated the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," and having entered its order directing the respondent, its officers, agents, representatives, servants, and employees, to cease and desist from the unfair methods of competition set forth in its said findings as to the facts; and the Commission, having thereafter filed, in the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit, an application for the enforcement of its said order to cease and desist; and thereafter, in said proceeding in said Court, such proceedings having been had that, on the 15th day of June 1937, said Court stated in its opinion that if respondent did not voluntarily strike the word "Mills" from its name, it should clearly inform its prospective customers of the true facts, and having denied the Commission's said application for enforcement, but without prejudice to an order being entered by the Commission directing the addition of appropriate words which will clearly convey to the public the fact that respondent neither owns nor operates a mill—

Modified Order

25 F. T. C.

It is ordered, That the respondent, Mid West Mills, Inc., a corporation, its officers, agents, representatives, servants, and employees, in connection with the offering for sale and sale of upholstering fabrics, wooden frames, padding, felt, springs, and all other such material, relative to the construction of furniture, in interstate commerce;

1. Cease and desist from the use of the corporate name Mid West Mills, Inc., or any other name of the same or familiar import, unless and until there be used, in type of the same size and equally conspicuous, in immediate connection and conjunction with said name, wherever used, whether on stationery, garment labels, tickets, invoices, or other written or printed matter, the words "Jobbers and Converters, Not Mill Owners or Mill Operators"—or

2. If respondent desires not to use the qualifying and modifying terms set forth in paragraph 1 hereinabove, that it cease and desist altogether from the use of the word "Mills" either standing alone, or in connection or conjunction with any other word or words, in its corporate name, and on stationery, garment labels, tickets, invoices, or other written or printed matter.

It is further ordered, That the respondent above named, within 30 days after the service upon it of this order shall file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner in which this order has been complied with.

IN THE MATTER OF
 VISCOSE COMPANY ET AL.

COMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION
 OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 26, 1914

Docket 2161. Complaint, Feb. 1, 1934—Decision, July 3, 1937

Where ten corporations engaged in the manufacture of substantially all the viscose rayon yarn made in the United States, and in the sale and distribution thereof to rayon cloth knitters for manufacture into cloth, and subsequent sale, distribution, and use for making of articles of wear therefrom, and constituting sole source of supply of such rayon yarn for knitters, users of approximately forty-five percent of all such yarn used by all classes or kinds of purchasers, and also sole source of supply for other users of such yarn, and, prior to the acts below set forth, in competition as to price with one another in the sale thereof between and among States, Territories, and District of Columbia—

For the purpose of eliminating price competition among themselves, entered into an agreement, combination, understanding, and conspiracy among themselves to fix and maintain uniform prices to be exacted by them from their purchasers of rayon yarn, and thus to fix the price of said product entering into interstate commerce, and did, during a period, thus fix and maintain such uniform prices;

With effect of actually hindering and preventing price competition in the sale, among the various States, the Territories, and the District of Columbia, of such yarn, increasing prices therefor paid by users thereof, prices of cloth made therefrom, and prices of rayon articles of wear, and with dangerous tendency so to hinder and prevent such price competition:

Held, That such acts and practices were to the prejudice of the public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition.

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission having reason to believe that the Viscose Company, DuPont Rayon Company, Inc., Tubize Chatillon Corporation, Industrial Rayon Corporation, American Glanzstoff Corporation, American Enka Corporation, Skenandoa Rayon Corporation, Delaware Rayon Company, Acme Rayon Corporation, The Belamose Corporation and George Oliver May, William B. Campbell, Joseph Edmund Sterrett, Robert O. Berger, John H. Bowman, Charles P. Carruthers, David L. Grey, John C. Scobie, Frank C. Belser, John Medlock, William D. Bonthron, Ismay G. Pattinson, Thomas Jackson, Donald Arthur, Geoffrey G. Rowbotham, Francis B. Byerly, Percival F. Brundage, W. W. Law, J. P. Dawson, A. L. Brockway, E. Christensen and R. F. Starkey, copartners, trading as Price, Waterhouse and Company have been and are using unfair methods of competition in commerce as "commerce" is defined in said act and it appearing to the Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint, stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent, the Viscose Company, is a corporation organized, existing, and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Pennsylvania, with its principal office and place of business at New York City, and with branch offices in Providence, R. I., Charlotte, N. C., Chicago, Ill., and Philadelphia, Pa., and with factories located in Pennsylvania, Virginia, and West Virginia.

Complaint

Respondent, DuPont Rayon Company, Inc., is a corporation organized, existing, and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Delaware, with its principal office and place of business located at New York City, N. Y., and with manufacturing plants located at Buffalo, N. Y., Old Hickory, Tenn., and Ampthill, Va.

Respondent, Tubize Chatillon Corporation, is a corporation organized, existing, and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Delaware, with its principal office and place of business in New York City, and with manufacturing plants located at Hopewell, Va., and Rome, Ga.

Respondent, Industrial Rayon Corporation, is a corporation organized, existing, and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Delaware, with its principal office and place of business located in New York City, and with a manufacturing plant located in Cleveland, Ohio.

Respondent, American Glanzstoff Corporation, is a corporation organized, existing, and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Delaware, with its principal office and place of business located in New York City, N. Y., where its manufacturing plant is also located.

Respondent, American Enka Corporation, is a corporation organized, existing, and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Delaware, with its principal office and place of business located in New York City, N. Y., and with a manufacturing plant located at Enka, N. C.

Respondent, Skenandoa Rayon Corporation, is a corporation organized, existing, and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of New York, with its principal office, place of business and manufacturing plant located in Utica, in said State of New York.

Respondent, Delaware Rayon Company, is a corporation organized, existing, and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Delaware, with its principal office and place of business and manufacturing plant located at New Castle, in the said State of Delaware.

Respondent, Acme Rayon Corporation, is a corporation organized, existing, and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Ohio, with its principal office and place of business and manufacturing plant located in the city of Cleveland, in said State of Ohio.

Respondent, The Belamose Corporation, is a corporation organized, existing, and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Connecticut, with its principal office and place of business and manufacturing plant located at Rocky Hill, in the State of Connecticut.

PAR. 2. Respondents, George Oliver May, William B. Campbell, Joseph Edmund Sterrett, Robert O. Berger, John H. Bowman, Charles P. Carruthers, David L. Grey, John C. Scobie, Frank C. Belser, John Medlock, William D. Bonthron, Ismay G. Pattinson, Thomas Jackson, Donald Arthur, Geoffrey G. Rowbotham, Francis B. Byerly, Percival F. Brundage, W. W. Law, J. P. Dawson, A. L. Brockway, E. Christensen, and R. F. Starkey, are and have been since January 1931, a copartnership doing business as Price, Waterhouse and Company, with their office and principal place of business in the city of New York, State of New York, and with branch offices located in various other cities of the United States. As such copartnership they are, and since their organization (which was prior to 1931) have been, engaged in the practice of public accounting and of auditing the books and accounts of various individuals, partnerships, and corporations in various cities of the United States.

PAR. 3. The respondents named in paragraph 1 hereof are now, and since their organizations, have been engaged in the manufacture at their respective manufacturing plants, of Viscose rayon yarn and in the sale thereof throughout the various States of the United States, the Territories thereof, and the District of Columbia. In the course and conduct of their businesses all of the said respondents named in paragraph 1 hereof, for more than five years last past, have caused, and still cause, such Viscose rayon yarn when sold by them, to be transported in interstate commerce from their respective places of business to, into and through various States of the United States other than the States in which they respectively have their factories and places of business, to the purchasers in such other States to whom such Viscose rayon yarn is and has been sold. Such viscose rayon yarn is knitted by the purchasers thereof located in various States of the United States into rayon cloth, which is sold by such purchasers to manufacturers of garments and of other articles of wear, located in various cities in the United States, and such purchasers cause such rayon cloth, when sold by them, to be transported in interstate commerce from their respective places of business to, into, and through States of the United States other than the States in which they respectively have their factories and places of business to the purchasers thereof in such other States to whom such rayon cloth is sold. Manufacturers of such rayon garments and of other rayon articles of wear made from cloth sold to them, by purchasers of viscose rayon yarn made by the respondents named in paragraph 1 hereof, cause such rayon garments and other rayon articles of wear when sold, to be transported, in interstate commerce, from their respective places of business into and through States of the United States other than the States in which such manufacturers of rayon garments and of such other rayon articles of wear have their factories and places of business, to their purchasers in such other States to whom such rayon garments and other rayon articles of wear are and have been sold. And the sale by respondents of viscose rayon yarn in interstate commerce, is thus followed by interstate commerce in rayon cloth knitted from such yarn and subsequent thereto by interstate commerce in rayon garments and other articles of wear made from such cloth.

PAR. 4. The amount of viscose rayon yarn manufactured and sold by the respondents named in paragraph 1 hereof constitutes, and at all times since October 1931, has constituted, substantially all of the viscose rayon yarn manufactured in the United States. The amount of viscose rayon yarn used by rayon cloth knitters constitutes approximately 45% of all the viscose rayon yarn sold in the United States and is greater than the amount of viscose rayon yarn used by any other class or kind of purchasers of such viscose rayon yarn. As a consequence the price paid by knitters of viscose rayon yarn influences and controls the price of viscose rayon yarn purchased by users other than knitters. Knitters of viscose rayon yarn and other users of viscose rayon yarn have no source of supply and, since October 1931, have had no source of supply for viscose rayon yarn excepting from the said respondents. The said respondents were, prior to October 1931, in competition as to price with one another in the sale of viscose rayon yarn between and among the various States of the United States, the Territories thereof and the District of Columbia and but for the combination, agreement, understanding, and conspiracy hereinafter described, said respondents would have been at all times since October 1931, and would now be, in such competition with one another. Knitters and other users of viscose rayon yarn were, prior to October 1931, respectively in price competition with one another in the sale of rayon cloth and other articles made from viscose rayon yarn, between and among the various States of the United States, the Territories and the District of Columbia and but for the combination, agreement, understanding, and conspiracy hereinafter described, said knitters and other users would have been at all times since October 1931, and would still be, respectively in competition as to price with one another.

PAR. 5. In October 1931, or thereabouts, the respondents named in paragraph 1 hereof, for the purpose of eliminating price competition among themselves, entered into, have since carried out and are still carrying out, an agreement, combination, understanding, and conspiracy among themselves, to fix and maintain and by which they have fixed and maintained uniform prices to be exacted by them from their purchasers of viscose rayon yarn and thus to fix the price of viscose rayon yarn entering into interstate commerce. Pursuant to and for the purpose of carrying out the said agreement, combination, understanding, and conspiracy, the said respondents have, among other things, done the following:

(a) By agreement among themselves have fixed and maintained and still fix and maintain uniform prices for viscose rayon yarn sold by them and by each of them;

(b) Agreed to curtail and limit, and pursuant to such agreement, have curtailed and limited and still curtail and limit the amount of viscose rayon yarn produced and sold by them and thus by agreement they have limited and still limit the supply of viscose rayon yarn, of rayon cloth and of rayon garments and other articles of rayon wear entering into interstate commerce;

(c) In order to detect and find any variation by any of them from the prices of viscose rayon yarn so fixed by them, and in order to detect and find any violation by any of them of their said agreement to curtail and limit the sale and production by any of them of viscose rayon yarn, hired the services of the said respondents named in paragraph 2 hereof, who assisted and furthered and who still assist and further the said agreement, combination, understanding, and conspiracy by compiling and determining from the books and from the manufacturing plants of the respondents named in paragraph 1 hereof, among other things, the viscose rayon yarn production capacity of each of the said respondents named in paragraph 1 hereof, the unsold stock of viscose rayon yarn in the possession of each of the said respondents named in paragraph 1 hereof at certain intervals of time, the percentage of capacity at which each of the said respondents named in paragraph 1 hereof operated and operates over certain periods of time, the prices charged and received by each of the said respondents named in paragraph 1 hereof for viscose rayon yarn sold by them, the names and addresses of the purchasers of viscose rayon yarn manufactured and sold by each of the said respondents named in paragraph 1 hereof.

(d) Because the price of knitted rayon cloth influences the price of viscose rayon yarn and because a decrease in the price of knitted rayon cloth has a tendency to lower the price of viscose rayon yarn, the said respondents named in paragraph 1 hereof have fixed and maintained and still fix and maintain uniform prices at which knitters of cloth manufactured from viscose rayon yarn purchased from the said respondents, should sell such cloth and thus have fixed the price of knitted rayon cloth entering into interstate commerce.

(e) Sought and secured agreements from knitters of rayon cloth manufactured from viscose rayon yarn purchased from the respondents named in paragraph 1 hereof, by which agreements said knitters obligated themselves not to sell such rayon cloth at prices less than those fixed by the said respondents named in paragraph 1 hereof.

(f) Have refused, and still refuse to continue to sell viscose rayon yarn to knitters of rayon cloth made from viscose rayon yarn purchased from respondents named in paragraph 1 hereof, who would not agree with them not to sell such cloth at prices less than those fixed by the said respondents named in paragraph 1 hereof.

(g) Have refused, and still refuse to continue to sell viscose rayon yarn to all knitters who sold or who would sell rayon cloth knitted from viscose rayon yarn purchased from the said respondents at prices for such rayon cloth less than those so fixed by the said respondents.

(h) Respondent, Industrial Rayon Corporation, a corporation of strong financial resources and of large production capacity of viscose rayon yarn, entered into the manufacture and sale of knitted rayon cloth, so that all of the said respondents named in paragraph 1 hereof, through the said respondent, Industrial Rayon Corporation, might punish price cutters of knitted rayon cloth by underselling them to take away their customers and thus to force such knitters of rayon cloth, if they would remain in business, to sell knitted rayon cloth at the prices so fixed by the said respondents named in paragraph 1 hereof.

PAR. 6. The respondents named in paragraph 2 hereof, in performing for the respondents named in paragraph 1 hereof the services described in sub-paragraph (c) of paragraph 5 hereof, had full knowledge of the agreement, combination, understanding, and conspiracy described in paragraph 5 hereof; by such services they assisted respondents named in paragraph 1 hereof to carry into effect the said agreement, understanding, combination, and conspiracy; thus became parties to the said conspiracy; and for these reasons are made parties respondents herein.

PAR. 7. The alleged acts and practices of the respondents are all to the prejudice of the public and to the prejudice of competitors of the respondents named in paragraph 1 hereof, have a dangerous venuecy to and have actually hindered and prevented price competition in the sale between and among the various States of the United States, the territories thereof and the District of Columbia, of viscose rayon yarn and of knitted rayon cloth; have increased the prices of viscose rayon yarn paid by knitters and other users of viscose rayon yarn; have increased the prices of knitted rayon cloth paid by manufacturers of rayon garments and of other rayon articles of wear; have increased the prices paid by the purchasing public for rayon garments and for other rayon articles of wear; have created, in the respondents named in paragraph 1 hereof, a monopoly in the sale in interstate commerce of viscose rayon yarn; have unreasonably restrained interstate commerce in viscose rayon yarn, in knitted rayon cloth, and in rayon garments and other rayon articles of wear, and constitute unfair methods of competition in interstate commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, entitled, "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914.

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

After the issuance of said complaint and the filing of respondents' answers thereto, testimony and other evidence in support of the allegations of said complaint were introduced by Edward L. Smith, Esq., and Harry A. Babcock, Esq., attorneys for the Commission, before John W. Addison, Esq., an examiner of the Commission theretofore duly designated by it, and in opposition to the allegations of the complaint by Messrs. Jackson, Fuller, Nash and Brophy (John Parsons, Esq., of counsel), attorneys for respondent The Belamose Corporation; and by Messrs. Cravath, DeGersdorff, Swaine and Wood (G. W. Haight, Esq., of counsel), attorneys for respondents Price, Waterhouse and Company; and said testimony and other evidence were duly recorded and filed in the office of the Commission.

Thereafter the proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on the said complaint, the answers thereto, testimony and other evidence, briefs in support of the complaint and in opposition thereto filed by respondents Tubize Chatillon Corporation, American Enka Corporation, and Delaware Rayon Company (the other respondents not having filed briefs), and the oral arguments by Edward L. Smith, attorney for the Commission, by F. Sims McGrath of counsel for respondent Tubize Chatillon Corporation and American Enka Corporation, and by Thomas Searing Jackson, Esq., of counsel for respondent Delaware Rayon Company (no oral argument being made in behalf of the other respondents); and the Commission having duly considered the said complaint, answers, testimony and evidence, briefs and oral arguments, and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public, and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondents, Viscose Company, The Belamose Corporation, and Acme Rayon Corporation are corporations organized, existing, and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the States of Pennsylvania, Connecticut, and Ohio, respectively. Respondents, DuPont Rayon Company, Inc., Tubize Chatillon Corporation, American Enka Corporation, Industrial Rayon Corporation, North American Rayon Corporation, Skenandoa Rayon Corporation, and Delaware Rayon Company are Delaware corporations.

PAR. 2. The respondents named in paragraph 1 hereof are now, and since their organizations, have been engaged in the manufacture at their respective manufacturing plants, of viscose rayon yarn and in the sale thereof throughout the various States of the United States, the Territories thereof, and the District of Columbia. In the course and conduct of their businesses, all of the said respondents named in paragraph 1 hereof, for more than five years last past, have caused, and still cause, such viscose rayon yarn when sold by them, to be transported in interstate commerce from their respective places of business to, into and through various States of the United States other than the States in which they respectively have their factories and places of business, to the purchasers in such other States to whom such viscose rayon yarn is and has been sold. Such viscose rayon yarn is manufactured by the purchasers thereof, located in various States of the United States, into rayon cloth, which is sold by such purchasers to manufacturers of rayon articles of wear, located in various cities in the United States, and such purchasers cause such rayon cloth, when sold by them, to be transported in interstate commerce from their respective places of business to, into and through States of the United States other than the States in which they respectively have their factories and places of business, to the purchasers thereof in such other States to whom such rayon cloth is sold. Manufacturers of such rayon articles of wear made from cloth sold to them by purchasers of viscose rayon yarn made by the respondents named in paragraph 1 hereof, cause such rayon articles of wear when sold, to be transported, in interstate commerce, from their respective places of business into and through States of the United States other than the States in which such manufacturers of rayon articles of wear have their factories and places of business, to their purchasers in such other States, to whom such rayon articles of wear are and have been sold. And the sale by said respondents of viscose rayon yarn in interstate commerce, is thus followed by interstate commerce in rayon cloth manufactured from such yarn and subsequent thereto by interstate commerce in rayon articles of wear made from such cloth.

PAR. 3. The amount of viscose rayon yarn manufactured and sold by the respondents named in paragraph 1 hereof constitutes and at all times since October 1931 has constituted substantially all of the viscose rayon yarn manufactured in the United States. The amount of viscose rayon yarn used by rayon cloth knitters constituted during the period from October 21, 1931, to May 23, 1932, approximately 45 percent of all the viscose rayon yarn used by all classes or kinds of purchasers of such viscose rayon yarn. As a consequence, the price paid by knitters of viscose rayon yarn influenced and controlled, during said period, the price of viscose rayon yarn purchased by users other than knitters. Knitters of viscose rayon yarn and other users of viscose rayon yarn have no source of supply and between October 21, 1931, and May 23, 1932, had no source of supply for viscose rayon yarn excepting from the said respondents. The said respondents were prior to October, 1931, in competition as to price with one another in the sale of viscose rayon yarn between and among the various States of the United States, the Territories thereof and the District of Columbia, and but for the combination, agreement, understanding, and conspiracy hereinafter described, said respondents would have been at all times between October 21, 1931, and May 23, 1932, in such competition with one another.

PAR. 4. On October 21, 1931, or thereabouts, the respondents named in paragraph 1 hereof, for the purpose of eliminating price competition among themselves, entered into and until May 23, 1932, carried out an agreement, combination, understanding and conspiracy among themselves to fix and maintain, and by which, during said period, they fixed and maintained uniform prices to be exacted by them from their purchasers of viscose rayon yarn, and thus to fix the price of viscose rayon yarn entering into interstate commerce.

PAR. 5. During said period the said acts and practices of the respondents named in paragraph 1 hereof had a dangerous tendency to and actually hindered and prevented price competition in the sale between and among the various States of the United States, the Territories thereof and the District of Columbia, of viscose rayon yarn, increased the prices of viscose rayon yarn paid by the users thereof, the prices of cloth made from such yarn and the prices of rayon articles of wear.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of said respondent rayon producers were to the prejudice of the public and of respondents' competitors and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

This proceeding having been heard by the Federal Trade Commission upon the complaint of the Commission, the answers of respondents, testimony and other evidence taken before John W. Addison, Esq., an examiner of the Commission theretofore duly designated by it, in support of the allegations of said complaint and in opposition thereto, briefs filed herein by respondents Tubize Chatillon Corporation, American Enka Corporation and Delaware Rayon Company (the other respondents not having filed briefs), and oral arguments by Edward L. Smith, Esq., counsel for the Commission, by F. Sims. McGrath, Esq., counsel for respondents Tubize Chatillon Corporation and American Enka Corporation, and by Thomas Scaring Jackson, Esq., counsel for respondent Delaware Rayon Company (no oral argument having been made in behalf of the other respondents), and the Commission having made its findings as to the facts and its conclusion that respondents Viscose Company, DuPont Rayon Company, Inc., Tubize Chatillon Corporation, Industrial Rayon Corporation, North American Rayon Corporation, American Enka Corporation, Skenandoa Rayon Corporation, Delaware Rayon Company, Acme Rayon Corporation, and The Belamose Corporation have violated the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled, "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

It is ordered, That the respondents, Viscose Company, DuPont Rayon Company, Inc., Tubize Chatillon Corporation, American Enka Corporation, Industrial Rayon Corporation, North American Rayon Corporation, Skenandoa Rayon Corporation, Delaware Rayon Company, Acme Rayon Corporation, and The Belamose Corporation, and their agents, representatives, servants, and employees in connection with the sale or offering for sale of Viscose rayon yarn in interstate commerce or in the District of Columbia, do cease and desist from entering into and carrying out any agreement, combination, understanding, or conspiracy among themselves or with any other corporation, person, firm, or partnership, to fix and maintain uniform prices to be exacted by them from purchasers of Viscose rayon yarn.

It is further ordered, That the said respondents shall, within 60 days after service upon them of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which they have complied with this order.

It is further ordered, That the complaint in this proceeding as to George Oliver May, William B. Campbell, Joseph Edmund Sterrett, Robert O. Berger, John H. Bowman, Charles P. Carruthers, David L. Grey, John C. Scobie, Frank C. Belser, John Medlock, William D. Bonthron, Ismay G. Pattinson, Thomas Jackson, Donald Arthur, Geoffrey G. Rowbotham, Francis B. Byerly, Percival F. Brundage, W. W. Law, J. P. Dawson, A. L. Brookway, E. Christensen and R. F. Starkey, copartners, trading as Price, Waterhouse and Company, be, and the same is hereby, dismissed.

IN THE MATTER OF CANTERBURY CANDY MAKERS, INC.

COMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION
OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 26, 1914

Docket 2800. Complaint, May 11, 1936—Decision, July 6, 1937

Where a corporation engaged in manufacture and sale of so-called "draw" or "deal" assortments of candy, sale and distribution of which type candy, by retailers by lot or chance, has capacity and tendency to and does decrease sale of candy sold without any sales plan or device involving lottery or game of chance, i. e., the "straight" goods, and sale of which type, providing, in connection with its sale to public, means or opportunity of obtaining a box of candy as a prize or becoming a winner by lot or chance, teaches and encourages gambling, and is in violation of various municipal ordinances and regulations and State statutes and constitutions, and provides retail merchants with a means of violating the laws of the several States, and sale of which candy, so packed and assembled as to enable retail dealers, without alteration, addition, or rearrangement, to resell same to consuming public by lot or chance, is contrary to public policy—

Sold, to wholesale and retail dealers, certain assortments of candy which were so packed and assembled as to involve, or were designed to involve, use of a lottery scheme when sold and distributed to consumers thereof, and one of which included, together with a punchboard, a number of boxes of assorted chocolates of varying size and of a value in excess of five cents, for sale and distribution to consuming public under a plan, and in accordance with said board's explanatory legend, under which persons punching by chance certain numbers received specified box of candy, and purchaser of last punch on board received specified box, and others received nothing other than privilege of making a punch for the five cents paid; so assembled and packed that such assortments might be and were displayed and sold to consuming public by retail dealer purchasers thereof by lot or chance, and with knowledge and intent that such assortments could and would thus be resold to public by retail dealers without alteration, addition, or rearrangement as above set forth, in competition with many who do not make and sell "draw" or "deal" assortments, but sell their "straight" goods in interstate commerce in competition with the others;

With result that competitors who refuse to, or do not, sell candy so packed and assembled that it can be resold to public by lot or chance, were put to a disadvantage in competing with it and with others employing methods similar to those described herein, trade was diverted to it and others using similar methods from those who do not use same, by reason of attraction to customers of so-called "draw" or "deal" assortments, there was diversion of trade to it from its said competitors, and a restraint upon and a detriment to the freedom of fair competition in trade concerned; to the prejudice and injury of the public and of competitors:

Held, That such acts and practices were to the prejudice of the public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition.

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that Canterbury Candy Makers, Inc., a corporation, hereinafter referred to as respondent, has been and is using unfair methods of competition in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in said act of Congress, and it appearing to said Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent is a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Washington, with its principal office and place of business located at 93 Marion Street, in the city of Seattle, State of Washington. It is now, and for several years last past has been, engaged in the sale and distribution of candy to wholesale dealers, jobbers, and retail dealers, located at points in the various States of the United States, and causes and has caused its products, when so sold, to be transported from its principal place of business in the city of Seattle, Wash., to purchasers thereof in other States of the United States at their respective places of business; and there is now, and has been for several years last past, a course of trade and commerce by said respondent in such candy between and among the States of the United States. In the course and conduct of said business, respondent is in competition with other corporations and with partnerships and individuals engaged in the manufacture of candy and in the sale and distribution thereof in commerce between and among the various States of the United States.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of its business, as described in paragraph 1 hereof, respondent sells and has sold to wholesale and retail dealers packages or assortments of candy so packed and assembled as to involve the use of a lottery scheme when sold and distributed to the consumers thereof.

One of said assortments, manufactured and distributed by the respondent, is composed of a number of boxes of assorted chocolate candies, together with a device commonly called a "punchboard." The said boxes of candy are distributed to the consuming public by means of said punchboard in the following manner: The sales by means of said punchboard are 5¢ each, and when a punch is made from said board a number is disclosed. The numbers begin with 1 and continue to the number of punches there are on the board, but the numbers are not arranged in numerical sequence. The board bears a statement or statements informing the prospective customer as to which numbers receive a box of candy. The purchaser of the last punch on the board receives a five-pound box of chocolate candy. A purchaser who does not qualify by obtaining one of the numbers calling for one of the boxes of candy or by punching the last number on the board receives nothing for his money other than the privilege of punching a number from the board. The boxes of candy are worth more than 5¢ each, and a purchaser who obtains one of the numbers calling for a box of candy receives the same for the price of 5¢. The numbers on said board are effectively concealed from the purchasers or prospective purchasers until a punch or selection has been made and the particular punch separated from the board. The boxes of candy in said assortment are thus distributed to purchasers of punches from said board wholly by lot or chance.

PAR. 3. The wholesale dealers and jobbers, to whom respondent sells its assortment, resell said assortment to retail dealers, and said retail dealers, and the retail dealers to whom respondent sells direct, expose said assortment for sale and sell said candy to the purchasing public in accordance with the aforesaid sales plan. Respondent thus supplies to and places in the hands of others the means of conducting lotteries in the sale of its product in accordance with the sales plan hereinabove set forth, and with the capacity and tendency of inducing purchasers thereof to purchase respondent's said product in preference to candy offered for sale and sold by its competitors.

PAR. 4. The sale of said candy to the purchasing public in the manner above alleged involves a game of chance or the sale of a chance to procure a box of candy.

The use by respondent of said method in the sale of candy, and the sale of candy by and through the use thereof and by the aid of said method, is a practice of the sort which the common law and criminal statutes have long deemed contrary to public policy; and is contrary to an established public policy of the Government of the United States. The use by respondent of said method has the dangerous tendency unduly to hinder competition or create monopoly in this, to wit: that the use thereof has the tendency and capacity to exclude from the branch of the candy trade involved in this proceeding competitors who do not adopt and use the same method or an equivalent or similar method involving the same or an equivalent or silimar element of chance or lottery scheme.

Many persons, firms, and corporations who make and sell candy in competition with the respondent, as above alleged, are unwilling to offer for sale or sell candy so packed and assembled as above alleged, or otherwise arranged and packed for sale to the purchasing public so as to involve a game of chance, and such competitors refrain therefrom.

PAR. 5. Many dealers in and ultimate purchasers of candy are attracted by respondent's said method and manner of packing said candy, and by the element of chance involved in the sale thereof in the manner above described, and are thereby induced to purchase said candy so packed and sold by respondent, in preference to candy offered for sale and sold by said competitors of respondent who do not use the same or equivalent methods. The use of said method by respondent has the tendency and capacity, because of said game of chance, to divert to respondent trade and custom from its said competitors who do not use the same or an equivalent method; to exclude from said candy trade all competitors who are unwilling to and who do not use the same or an equivalent method because the same is unlawful; to lessen competition in said candy trade, and to tend to create a monopoly of said candy trade in respondent and such other distributors of candy as use the same or an equivalent method, and to deprive the purchasing public of the benefit of free competition in said candy trade. The use of said method by the respondent has the tendency and capacity to eliminate from said candy trade all actual competitors, and to exclude therefrom all potential competitors, who do not adopt and use said method or an equivalent method.

PAR. 6. Many of said competitors of respondent are unwilling to adopt and use said method or any method involving a game of chance or the sale of a chance to win something by chance or any other method that is contrary to public policy.

PAR. 7. The aforementioned method, acts, and practices of the respondent are all to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors, as hereinabove alleged. Said method, acts, and practices constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914.

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, on May 11, 1936, issued and on May 16, 1936, served its complaint in this proceeding upon the respondent, Canterbury Candy Makers, Inc., a corporation charging it with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of the provisions of said act. After the issuance of said complaint and the filing of respondent's answer thereto, testimony and other evidence in support of the allegations of said complaint were introduced by P. C. Kolinski, attorney for the Commission, and in opposition to the allegations of the complaint by Emmett G. Lenihan, attorney for respondent, before Charles P. Vicini and Henry M. White, Examiners of the Commission theretofore duly designated by it, and said testimony and other evidence were duly recorded and filed in the office of the Commission. Thereafter, the proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on said complaint, the answer thereto, testimony and other evidence, briefs in support of the complaint and in opposition thereto, and the oral arguments of Henry C. Lank, counsel for the Commission, and Emmett G. Lenihan, counsel for the respondent; and the Commission, having duly considered the matter and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. The respondent, Canterbury Candy Makers, Inc., is a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Washington, with its principal office and place of business located at 93 Marion Street, in the city of Seattle, State of Washington. Respondent is now, and for several years last past has been, engaged in the manufacture of candy in the city of Seattle and in the sale and distribution thereof to retail and wholesale dealers and jobbers located in the State of Washington and in the States of Oregon, Idaho, Montana, California, Wyoming, and the Territory of Alaska. It causes the said candy when sold to be shipped or transported from its principal place of business in the State of Washington to purchasers thereof in Washington and in other States of the United States and the Territory of Alaska, as mentioned above. In so carrying on said business, respondent is and has been engaged in interstate commerce and is and has been engaged in active competition with other corporations and with partnerships and individuals engaged in the manufacture of candy and in the sale and distribution thereof in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and the Territory of Alaska.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of its business, as described in paragraph 1 hereof, respondent sells and has sold to wholesale and retail dealers, as above described, certain assortments of candy so packed and assembled as to involve, or which are designed to involve, the use of a lottery scheme when sold and distributed to the consumers thereof.

One of said assortments is composed of a number of varying sized boxes of assorted chocolate candies, together with a device commonly called a "punchboard." The boxes of candy contained in said assortment are distributed to the consuming public by means of said punchboard in the following manner: The sales by means of said punchboard are 5¢ each, and when a punch is made from said board a number is disclosed. The numbers begin with one and continue to the number of punches there are on the board, but the numbers are not arranged in numerical sequence. The board bears a statement or statements informing customers and prospective customers as to which numbers receive a box of candy and the size thereof. The purchaser of the last punch on the board receives a specified box of candy. The purchaser who does not qualify by obtaining one of the numbers calling for one of the boxes of candy, or by punching the last number on the board, receives nothing for his money other than the privilege of punching a number from the board. The boxes of candy are worth more than 5¢ each, and a purchaser who obtains one of the numbers calling for a box of candy receives the same for the price of 5¢. The numbers on said board are effectively concealed from the purchasers or prospective purchasers until a punch or selection has been made and the particular punch separated from the board. The boxes of candy in said assortment are thus distributed to purchasers of punches from said board wholly by lot or chance, and the fact as to whether a purchaser receives one of the boxes of candy or nothing other than the privilege of punching a number from said board for his money is thus determined wholly by lot or chance.

PAR. 3. The candy assortments involving the lot or chance feature, as above described, are generally referred to in the candy trade or industry as "draw" or "deal" assortments. Assortments of candy without lot or chance features in connection with their resale to the public are generally referred to in the candy trade or industry as "straight" goods. These terms will be used hereafter in these findings to distinguish these separate types of assortments.

PAR. 4. The wholesale dealers or jobbers to whom respondent sells its assortments resell the same to retail dealers, and said retail dealers and the retail dealers to whom respondent sells direct expose said assortments for sale and sell said candy to the purchasing public in accordance with the sales plan as described above.

PAR. 5. All sales made by respondent, whether to wholesale dealers and jobbers or to retail dealers, are absolute sales and respondent retains no control over said assortments after they are delivered to the wholesale dealer or jobber or retail dealer. The assortments are assembled and packed in such manner that they are designed to be used and are used by the retail dealer for distribution to the purchasing public by lot or chance without alteration or rearrangement. In the sale and distribution to jobbers and wholesale dealers for resale to retail dealers and to retail dealers direct of the assortments of candy described in paragraph 2 hereof, respondent has knowledge that said candy will be resold to the purchasing public by retail dealers by lot or chance, and it packs such candy in the way and manner described so that without alteration, addition, or rearrangement thereof it may be resold to the public by lot or chance by said retail dealers.

PAR. 6. There are in the United States many manufacturers of candy competing with respondent in the territory served by respondent who do not manufacture and sell "draw" or "deal" assortments of candy and who sell their "straight" goods in interstate commerce in competition with the "draw" or "deal" assortments. The sale or distribution of candy by retail dealers by lot or chance has the capacity and tendency to and does decrease the sale of candy sold without any sales plan or device involving a lottery or game of chance.

Several witnesses testified, and the Commission finds, that customers coming into retail establishments and desiring candy similar to that distributed by respondent would take chances or make purchases by means of said push cards or punchboards, and that in such cases when unsuccessful in obtaining candy by means of said push card or punchboard some of such customers would then purchase candy as a "straight" purchase and without the use of the lottery device; that the gambling feature connected with the sale of respondent's assortments, as described above, was attractive to customers; and that before making "straight" purchases it was not unusual for customers to endeavor to procure the candy desired by means of such lottery devices rather than to make a "straight" purchase.

PAR. 7. The sale and distribution of "draw" or "deal" assortments of candy, or of candy which has connected with its sale to the public the means or opportunity of obtaining a box of candy as a prize or becoming a winner by lot or chance, teaches and encourages gambling and is in violation of various municipal ordinances and regulations and various State statutes and constitutions. The sale and distribution of candy by retailers by the method described herein is the sale and distribution of candy by lot or chance and constitutes a lottery or gaming device, and the Commission finds that the sale and distribution of assortments of candy as described herein provides retail merchants with a means of violating the laws of the several States. Competitors who refuse to or who do not sell candy so packed and assembled that it can be resold to the public by lot or chance or put to a disadvantage in competing with respondent and with others employing similar methods to those described herein. Because the "draw" or "deal" assortments are attractive to customers purchasing from retail dealers, the Commission finds that trade is diverted to respondent and others using similar methods from competitors who do not use such methods. The use of such methods by respondent in the sale and distribution of its candy is prejudicial and injurious to the public and to respondent's competitors, and has resulted in the diversion of trade to respondent from its said competitors, and is a restraint upon and a detriment to the freedom of fair and legitimate competition in the candy industry.

PAR. 8. An officer of the respondent corporation testified, and the Commission finds, that the total annual volume of respondent's sales is approximately $100,000; that approximately 40% of respondent's total annual volume of sales is made to purchasers outside of the State of Washington; and that approximately 40% of respondent's total annual volume of sales consists of assortments of candy with which a punchboard is furnished.

PAR. 9. The Commission further finds that the sale and distribution in interstate commerce of assortments of candy so packed and assembled as to enable retail dealers, without alteration, addition, or rearrangement, to resell the same to the consuming public by lot or chance, is contrary to public policy.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of respondent, Canterbury Candy Makers, Inc., a corporation, under the conditions and circumstances set forth in the foregoing findings of fact, are all to the prejudice of the public and respondent's competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

It is ordered, That the respondent Canterbury Candy Makers, Inc., a corporation, its officers, representatives, agents, and employees, in connection with the offering for sale, sale, and distribution in interstate commerce of candy, do forthwith cease and desist from:

1. Selling and distributing to jobbers and wholesale dealers for resale to retail dealers, or to retail dealers direct, candy so packed and assembled that sales of such candy to the general public are to be made, or may be made, by means of a lottery, gaming device, or gift enterprise.

2. Supplying to or placing in the hands of wholesale dealers and jobbers or retail dealers assortments of candy which are used, or which may be used, without alteration or rearrangement of the contents of such assortments, to conduct a lottery, gaming device, or gift enterprise in the sale or distribution of the candy contained in said assortments to the public.

3. Packing or assembling in the same assortment of candy for sale to the public at retail boxes of candy, together with a device commonly called a "punchboard," which punchboard is for use, or which may be or is designed to be used, in distributing or selling said candy to the public at retail.

4. Furnishing to retail and wholesale dealers and jobbers a device commonly called a "punchboard," either with assortments of candy or separately, bearing a legend or legends or statements informing the purchasing public that the candy is being sold to the public by lot or chance or in accordance with a sales plan which constitutes a lottery, gaming device, or gift enterprise.

It is further ordered, That the respondent, Canterbury Candy Makers, Inc., a corporation, shall, within 30 days after service upon it of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which it has complied with the order to cease and desist hereinabove set forth.

AS FEDERAL CIVIL SERVICE TRAINING BUREAU

COMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION
OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 26, 1914

Docket 2795. Complaint, May 2, 1936—Decision, July 7, 1937

Where two individuals engaged in sale and distribution of correspondence courses for Civil Service positions under the United States Government—

- (a) Made use of trade name including words "Federal Civil Service Training Bureau" in conduct of their said business, and thereby represented and implied that such business, thus designated, was a part of, or was connected with, or an agency of, the Government of the United States, or of the United States Civil Service Commission, notwithstanding fact neither of said individuals, nor business or school in question, nor anyone connected therewith, had any connection whatsoever with either said Government or Commission, or in any way represented either of them;
- (b) Represented and set forth, in advertisements of their said courses of study and instruction, that said school would prepare the prospective student for coming Civil Service examinations, and that, due to deaths, natural growth of service, etc., many examinations were being announced, and that in one year the Government pay-roll had increased some sixty-odd thousand, as therein set forth, and that many examinations were being announced and would "be held convenient to you," and thereby represented and implied that examinations in the various Civil Service classifications for which they gave training were being held at frequent intervals and that appointments to Government positions were constantly being made from eligibles thus obtained, facts being that few, if any, examinations were being held during much of time concerned, and few, if any, appointments made in some of classifications for which they proposed to and did give training, and that increase in appointments referred to was not, in the main, in the Classified Civil Service, but in appointments made regardless of Civil Service requirements; and
- (c) Made use of a contract form containing so-called "Refund Agreement," careful reading of which belied its import and implication that a Government appointment was assured within a year or money paid would be refunded, and which was rendered inoperative, in the main, due to the fact that examinations, taking of which were a prerequisite, were not being held during a part of the time, at least, when it was in use, and consequently could not be taken by the students in the subjects which they had studied so as to entitle them to refund during such time and under agreement in question;

With tendency and capacity to confuse, mislead and deceive members of the public into believing that said school was a branch or bureau of, or connected with, the Government of the United States, and that civil service examinations were being held at frequent intervals in classifications for which they offered training, Government positions in such classifications were available and appointments therein were being and would be made, and that vacancies existed in the Government service and were to be filled, and that students who enrolled for courses in question and did not secure Government positions would receive their money back upon conditions reasonably possible of fulfillment, and to induce members of public to answer their said advertisements, sign their contracts, pay money to them, and purchase said courses of study and instruction as above described, by reason of erroneous beliefs thus engendered, and to divert trade to them from competitors engaged in sale of correspondence courses in similar and in other lines of study, including therein competitors who do not make the same or similar misleading misrepresentations, but truthfully and accurately state the private character of their undertakings, without implying Government connection, and the facts in regard to civil service examinations and availability of Government positions in civil service, and who do not make use of refund agreements which mislead in their terms or failure to disclose pertinent facts upon which agreements depend, from whom said acts and practices tended to and did in fact unfairly divert business to themselves; to the substantial injury and prejudice of competition in commerce:

Held, That such acts and practices were to the prejudice of the public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition.

Before Mr. John W. Addison, trial examiner.

Mr. Harry D. Michael for the Commission.

Mr. Noble W. Lee, of Chicago, Ill., for Harvey E. Wagley.

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission having reason to believe that John Hartford and Harvey E. Wagley, doing business under the name and style of Federal Civil Service Training Bureau, have been and are using unfair methods of competition in commerce as "commerce" is defined in said act, and it appearing to said Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. That said respondents, John Hartford and Harvey E. Wagley, doing business under the name and style of Federal Civil Service Training Bureau, are now and have been engaged for more than six months last past in the sale and distribution of courses of study and instruction designed and intended for preparing students thereof for examination for various civil service positions under the United States Government, which said courses of study and instruction are pursued by correspondence. Said respondents, in conducting their said business, have their offices and principal place of business in the city of Chicago, in the State of Illinois. Respondents, in the course and conduct of their said business, cause their said courses of study and instruction, consisting of pamphlets, study and question sheets, and other printed or mimeographed matter, to be transported from their said place of business in Illinois to, into, and through States of the United States other than Illinois to various and numerous persons to whom said course of study and instruction are or have been sold.

The relationship existing between said respondents in connection with said business is that the said John Hartford is the owner thereof while the said Harvey E. Wagley is a creditor and in active operation and charge of the same for the purpose of securing and liquidating such indebtedness.

PAR. 2. That, during the time above mentioned, other individuals, firms, and corporations in various States of the United States are and have been engaged in the sale and distribution of courses of study and instruction designed and intended for the purpose of preparing students thereof for examination for various civil service positions under the United States Government, and also engaged in the sale and distribution of other courses of study and instruction in other lines, all of which are pursued by correspondence. Such other individuals, firms, and corporations have caused and do now cause their said courses of study and instruction, when sold by them, to be transported from various States of the United States to, into and through States other than the State of origin of the shipment thereof. Said respondents have been, during the aforesaid time, in competition in interstate commerce in the sale of their said courses of study and instruction with such other individuals, firms, and corporations.

PAR. 3. That the name, Federal Civil Service Training Bureau, used by respondents in conducting their said business, implies and has the tendency and capacity to create the belief among persons solicited to pursue respondents' courses of study that said Federal Civil Service Training Bureau is a part of, or is connected with, or is an agency of, the Government of the United States or of the United States Civil Service Commission. That the word "Federal" is a term frequently used in referring to the United States Government or its agencies or to institutions under its direction or supervision. That the term "Civil Service" is used to designate a class of employees of the United States Government or to apply to the work in which they are engaged. That the word "Bureau" is a term frequently and generally used in officially or otherwise describing various governmental agencies. That, in fact, neither respondents nor their school nor anyone connected therewith have any connection whatsoever with the United States Government or with the United States Civil Service Commission or in any way represent either of them.

PAR. 4. That respondents, in advertising their said course of study and instruction, make use of advertising matter in which the following statements appear:

FEDERAL CIVIL SERVICE TRAINING BUREAU

Will Prepare You for Coming Civil Service Examinations.

Due to deaths and retirements, the natural growth of the service, promotions, etc., many examinations are being announced. In one year, 1933 to 1934, the payroll of Federal Executive Employees increased from 563,488 to 623,599.

EXAMINATIONS BEING HELD—Many examinations are now being announced; they will be held convenient to you.

Said statements, so made by respondents, carry the implications to the general public that examinations in the various civil service classifications for which respondents give training are being held at frequent intervals and that appointments to government positions are constantly being made from eligibles thus obtained; when, in fact, during much of the time respondents have been giving their said training, few, if any, examinations were being held and few, if any, appointments were being made in many of the classifications for which respondents proposed to give and did give training. Said statements are further misleading from the fact that the appointments referred to therein were not, in the main, in the civil service, but appointments made regardless of civil service requirements.

PAR. 5. That respondents, in the sale of their said course of study and instruction, make use of a contract form containing a so-called "Refund Agreement," reading as follows:

It is understood that I am to complete the entire training, sending in all work for correction; try the first examination covered by this training; then, if I fail to pass the examination, or pass and am not offered an appointment within one year from date that my name is placed on the government eligible list, I am, upon written application, to receive a refund of the entire amount paid for this training, or I will be trained for every examination for the above stated position, without further payment, until my name is placed on the Government eligible list.

The import and implication of the above quoted agreement is that a government appointment is assured within one year or the money paid will be refunded; when, in fact, such agreement, by careful reading thereof, means nothing of the kind. Said agreement is further meaningless, and was so during the period of its use by respondents, on account of the fact that it was rendered inoperative, in the main, because examinations for which respondents gave training were not being held and it was consequently impossible for their students to be placed on an eligible list and thereby become entitled to a refund under such agreement.

PAR. 6. That the representations of respondents, as aforesaid, have had and do have the tendency and capacity to confuse, mislead and deceive members of the public into the belief that respondents' school is representative of or connected with the Government of the United States; that civil service examinations are being held at frequent intervals in the classifications for which respondents offer training; that Government positions in such classifications are available and that appointments therein are being made and will be made; that vacancies exist in the government service that are to be filled; and that students who enroll for respondents' courses will receive their money back upon conditions reasonably possible of fulfillment; when, in truth and in fact, such are not the facts. Said representations of respondents have had and do have the tendency and capacity to induce members of the public to answer respondents' advertisements, to sign their said contracts, to pay money to respondents, and to purchase said courses of study and instruction, as herein described, because of the erroneous beliefs engendered, as above set forth, and to divert trade to respondents from competitors engaged in the sale of correspondence courses in interstate commerce in similar lines to those offered by respondents, as well as those so engaged in such sale in other lines of study. There are among the competitors of respondents those who do not make the same or similar misleading representations as made by respondents, as herein set out, but who truthfully and accurately state the private character of their undertakings without implying Government connection and who truthfully state the facts in regard to civil service examinations and availability of government positions in the civil service and who agree to make refunds on clear conditions that are possible of fulfillment. As a result of respondents' practices, as herein set forth, injury has been and is now being done by respondents to competition in commerce between and among the various States of the United States.

PAR. 7. The above acts and things done by respondents are all to the injury and prejudice of the public and the competitors of respondents in interstate commerce within the meaning and intent of Section 5 of an Act of Congress entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914.

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, on May 2, 1936, issued its complaint in this proceeding, charging the respondents, John Hartford and Harvey E. Wagley, doing business under the name and style of Federal Civil Service Training Bureau, with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of the provisions of said act. Said respondent John Hartford was not found and was not served with the complaint herein. Said respondent Harvey E. Wagley was duly served with complaint and filed answer. After the issuance of said complaint and the filing of answer thereto by respondent Harvey E. Wagley, testimony and other evidence in support of the allegations of said complaint were introduced by Harry D. Michael, attorney for the Commission, before John W. Addison, an examiner of the Commission, theretofore duly designated by it, respondent Harvey E. Wagley having failed to introduce testimony and other evidence in opposition to the allegations of the complaint; and said testimony and other evidence were duly recorded and filed in the office of the Commission. Thereafter the proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on the said complaint, the answer of the respondent Harvey E. Wagley, testimony and other evidence, and brief in support of the complaint, counsel for respondent Harvey E. Wagley having waived the filing of briefs and having elected to submit the case on the record; and the Commission having duly considered the same and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPHS 1. The said respondents, John Hartford and Harvey E. Wagley, were engaged in business under the name and style of Federal Civil Service Training Bureau for the period of time and under the circumstances hereinafter stated and were engaged in the sale and distribution in commerce between and among the various States of the United States of courses of study and instruction designed and intended for preparing students thereof for examinations for various civil service positions under the United States Government, which said courses of study and instructions were pursued by correspondence. Said respondents, in the conduct of said business, had their offices and principal place of business at No. 508 South Dearborn Street, in the city of Chicago, State of Illinois. Respondents, in the course and conduct of their said business, caused their said courses of study and instruction, consisting of pamphlets, study, and question sheets and other printed or mimeographed material, when sold by them, to be transported in commerce from their said place of business in the State of Illinois to, into and through States of the United States other than Illinois to various and numerous persons in such other States to whom said courses of study and instruction were sold.

PAR. 2. During the time respondents conducted said business, as herein set out, other individuals, firms, and corporations in various States of the United States were engaged in the sale and distribution in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia of courses of study and instruction designed and intended for the purpose of preparing students thereof for examinations for various civil service positions under the United States Government, and also engaged, as aforesaid, in the sale and distribution of other courses of study and instruction in other lines, all of which are and were pursued by correspondence. Such other individuals, firms, and corporations have caused and do now cause their said courses of study and instruction, when sold by them, to be transported from the various States of the United States where they are located to, into, and through States other than the States of origin of the shipment thereof to the purchasers of the same in such other States. Said respondents were, during the time of the conduct of their said business, in substantial competition, in the sale of their said courses of study and instruction in commerce between and among the various States of the United States, with such other individuals, firms, and corporations.

PAR. 3. Said business conducted under the name of Federal Civil Service Training Bureau was originally established by the said respondent John Hartford. Said respondent Hartford made arrangements with the said respondent Wagley whereby the said Wagley did a considerable volume of the printing and mimeographing work used in the conduct of the business of said correspondence school conducted under the trade name aforesaid. Said respondent Hartford subleased offices from said respondent Wagley for the conduct of said business. The business was started early in the year 1935. On November 23, 1935, respondent Hartford entered into an agreement with respondent Wagley, by the terms of which said business and the property appertaining thereto were set over to respondent Wagley in trust for the purpose of securing an indebtedness amounting to $5,077.77. By the terms of this agreement respondent Wagley was authorized to collect and receive money owing to said respondent Hartford in the conduct of said correspondence school under the said name Federal Civil Service Training Bureau. He was further authorized under said agreement to apply the proceeds so received and collected to the payment of said indebtedness.

Pursuant to said agreement, respondent Wagley took charge of the office of said Federal Civil Service Training Bureau and had general charge of the financial affairs thereof, at least in the absence of respondent Hartford. During much of the time when said agreement was in effect, respondent Hartford was in the field selling courses of instruction. Also, during the time when said agreement was in effect, office work was conducted by Mr. Charles Raymond, an employee of respondent Wagley, who devoted part time work to the affairs of said correspondence school as an employee of the school. During the period of time when said business was so conducted, the name Federal Civil Service Training Bureau was used in the conduct thereof, and the printed matter and contract forms as herein set out and which had previously been used by the respondent Hartford were continued in use. Courses of instruction were sold to students during said period, and such courses were serviced and money collected thereon. A small sum was applied to respondent Wagley's indebtedness during the period when said agreement was in effect.

On or about January 21, 1936, respondent Hartford turned the entire business over to respondent Wagley, and the latter thereupon assumed control. No new business was solicited by respondent Wagley from such time until in March 1936, when the name of the business was changed to Commercial Training Institute. Solicitation of business was then resumed and the name of the business was later changed to Public Training Service. These were merely trade names, the business being owned and operated by respondent Wagley individually.

The relationship of said respondent Wagley with said respondent Hartford, as above specified, and the acts and things done by the said respondent Wagley in pursuance thereof, and as a result thereof, made the said respondent Wagley responsible for the acts and things done and the practices used in the conduct of said business as herein set out and made him a principal therein.

Findings

25 F. T. C.

PAR. 4. The name, Federal Civil Service Training Bureau, used by respondents in the conduct of said business, implied and had the tendency and capacity to create the belief among persons solicited to pursue the courses of study sold under such name that said Federal Civil Service Training Bureau was a part of, or was connected with, or was an agency of, the Government of the United States or of the United States Civil Service Commission. The word "Federal" is a term frequently used in referring to the United States Government or its agencies or to institutions under its direction or supervision. The term "Civil Service" is used to designate a class of employees of the United States Government or to apply to the work in which they are engaged. The word "Bureau" is a term frequently and generally used in officially or otherwise describing various Governmental agencies. Neither respondents, nor either of them, nor said school, nor anyone connected therewith, had any connection whatsoever with the United States Government or with the United States Civil Service Commission, or in any way represented either of them.

PAR. 5. Respondents, in advertising said courses of study and instruction, made use of advertising matter in which the following statements appeared:

FEDERAL CIVIL SERVICE TRAINING BUREAU

Will Prepare You for Coming Civil Service Examinations.

Due to deaths and retirements, the natural growth of the service, promotions, etc., many examinations are being announced. In one year, 1933 to 1934, the payroll of Federal Executive Employees increased from 503,488 to 623,500.

EXAMINATIONS BEING HELD — Many examinations are now being announced; they will be held convenient to you.

Said statements directly and by implication served as representations to the general public that examinations in the various civil service classifications for which respondents gave training were being held at frequent intervals and that appointments to Government positions were constantly being made from eligibles thus obtained. In fact, during much of the time respondents were giving their said training few, if any, examinations were being held and few, if any, appointments were being made in some of the classified civil service, but were appointments made regardless of training. Said statements were also misleading in that the increase in appointments referred to therein were not, in the main, in the classified civil service, but were appointments made regardless of civil service requirements.

PAR. 6. Respondents, in the sale of said courses of study and instruction, made use of a contract form containing a so-called "Refund Agreement" reading as follows:

It is understood that I am to complete the entire training, sending in all work for correction; try the first examination covered by this training; then if I fail to pass the examination, or pass and am not offered an appointment within one year from date that my name is placed on the Government eligible list, I am, upon written application, to receive a refund of the entire amount paid for this training, or I will be trained for every examination for the above stated position, without further payment, until my name is placed on the Government eligible list.

The import and implication of the above quoted agreement was that a Government appointment was assured within one year or the money paid would be refunded; when, in fact, such agreement, by careful reading thereof, meant otherwise. Said agreement was also valueless on account of the fact that it was rendered inoperative, in the main, because examinations for which respondents gave training were not being held, at least during a part of the time it was in use, and it was consequently impossible for their students to take the examination in the subjects which they had studied and thereby become entitled to a refund under such agreement during such time.

PAR. 7. The representations of respondents, as aforesaid, had the tendency and capacity to confuse, mislead, and deceive members of the public into the beliefs that respondents' school was a branch or bureau of or connected with the Government of the United States; that Civil Service examinations were being held at frequent intervals in the classifications for which respondents offered training; that Government positions in such classifications were available and that appointments therein were being made and would be made; that vacancies existed in the Government service that were to be filled; and that students who enrolled for such courses and did not secure Government positions would receive their money back upon conditions reasonably possible of fulfillment. Said representations of respondents had the tendency and capacity to induce members of the public to answer respondents' advertisements, to sign their said contracts, to pay money to respondents, and to purchase said courses of study and instruction as herein described, because of the erroneous beliefs engendered, as above set forth, and to divert trade to respondents from competitors engaged in the sale of correspondence courses in similar lines to those offered by respondents, as well as those so engaged in such sale in other lines of study in interstate commerce. There were and are among the competitors of respondents those who do not make the same or similar misleading representations as made by respondents, as herein set out, but who truthfully and accurately state the private character of their undertakings without implying Government connection and who truthfully state the facts in regard to civil service examinations and availability of Government positions in the civil service, and who do not make use of refund agreements that are misleading in their terms or that are misleading because of failure to disclose pertinent facts upon which such agreements depend. Respondents' said acts and practices tended to and did in fact unfairly divert business to respondents from their said competitors, to the substantial injury and prejudice of competition in commerce among and between the various States of the United States.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of respondent Harvey E. Wagley, doing business under the name and style of Federal Civil Service Training Bureau, are to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

This proceeding having been heard by the Federal Trade Commission upon the complaint of the Commission, the answer of respondent Harvey E. Wagley (respondent John Hartford not having been served with the complaint herein), testimony and other evidence taken before John W. Addison, an examiner of the Commission theretofore duly designated by it, in support of the allegations of the complaint, and brief in support of complaint, respondent Harvey E. Wagley having failed to introduce evidence in his behalf, and having elected to submit the case upon the record without brief or oral argument, and the Commission having made its findings as to the facts and its conclusion that said respondent Harvey E. Wagley has violated the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

It is ordered, That said case be closed as to the respondent John Hartford, on account of failure of service of the complaint upon him, without prejudice to the right of the Commission, should the facts so warrant, to reopen the same and resume prosecution of the complaint in accordance with its regular procedure.

Order

It is further ordered, That the respondent Harvey E. Wagley, doing business under the name and style of Federal Civil Service Training Bureau, or under any other name or in any other manner, his representatives, agents, and employees, in connection with the offering for sale, sale, and distribution of courses of study and instruction, or of books, study material, pamphlets, or printed or mimeographed matter, designed or intended for preparing students thereof for examinations for civil service positions under the United States Government, in interstate commerce, or in the District of Columbia, do forthwith cease and desist from:

1. Representing, through the use of the words "Federal" or "Bureau" or the term "Civil Service" or any other words or terms of similar import, meaning and effect, that respondent's business is a part of, is connected with, or is a branch, bureau or agency of, the Government of the United States or the United States Civil Service Commission;

2. Representing that the number and character of appointments to positions in the United States Classified Civil Service or the character of examinations held therefor are other than the facts, existing at the time such representations are made, may warrant;

3. Representing that the total number of appointments to Government positions not in the Classified Civil Service are indicative of the opportunities for appointment to the Classified Civil Service;

4. Representing that the total number of appointments to the Classified Civil Service are indicative of the opportunities for appointment therein of those who may complete the training offered by the respondents' courses, unless such number be limited to those appointments made in the classifications for which said courses are adapted;

5. Representing, through the use of inoperative, misleading or deceptive refund agreement that a Government position is assured to those purchasing respondents' courses of instruction and that if said position is not obtained the money paid for said courses will be refunded.

It is further ordered, That said respondent Harvey E. Wagley shall, within 60 days after service upon him of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which he has complied with this order.

IN THE MATTER OF TOLPIN STUDIOS, INC.

COMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION
OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 26, 1914

Docket 2950. Complaint, Oct. 16, 1936—Decision, July 7, 1937

Where a vitreous, translucent, and glazed ware designated, described, and known as china, was and had been, for some 150 years, made at Limoges, France, and had long been exported therefrom into the various countries of Europe and America, and particularly into the United States, and had acquired a favorable reputation in the latter country as a china of utility and beauty, and had come to possess a goodwill which developed an increasingly popular demand for the products of said city, and china made at said city and imported into the United States had long been widely and generally known as Limoges china, and word "Limoges" applied to and used in describing or designating china or chinaware had long since come to signify and mean, and still signified and meant, china made at Limoges in France; and thereafter, a corporation engaged in processing and decorating foreign and domestic made, undecorated china or chinaware products, and in offering, selling and distributing certain of its decorated china or chinaware products to wholesale and retail dealers, including department stores and auctioneers, and purchasers thereof in various States—

Branded, imprinted, and otherwise caused to appear, words and description "Limoges" and "French Decoration" on its said products, notwithstanding fact products thus described and referred to were not, as thus represented, made in, and did not originate in Limoges, France, but were obtained by it from other countries, and said products were not decorated in France or with French designs and decorations peculiar to country of France and French artistry;

With result of placing in the hands of dealers selling its products means by which to mislead and deceive consuming public into purchase of its china or chinaware products, and with tendency and capacity to mislead and deceive, and with effect of misleading and deceiving, members of public and of retail trade into false and erroneous belief that representations thus made by said branding and imprinting were true, and that products thus represented as "Limoges" originated and were made in said city, and that products represented by words "French Decoration" were decorated in France and with French designs and decorations, as above set forth, and of thereby causing members of public and of retail trade to buy and deal in its products in lieu and in place of competing products of competitors, and of thus diverting trade to it from its competitors who do not misbrand, or falsely and misleadingly label, mark, or otherwise misrepresent their products:

Held, That such acts and practices were to the prejudice of the public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition.

Complaint

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission having reason to believe that Tolpin Studios, Inc., a corporation, hereinafter designated respondent, has been and is using unfair methods of competition in commerce as "commerce" is defined in said act, and it appearing to said Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint, stating its charge in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent, Tolpin Studios, Inc., is now, and since 1927 has been, a corporation organized, existing, and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Illinois. Its office and principal place of business are located at 2129 West Van Buren Street in the city of Chicago in said State. It has been since its said organization, and now is, engaged in purchasing and decorating imported china and chinaware, and in its sale to wholesale and retail dealers, including department stores and auctioneers, in commerce between and among the State of Illinois and the various other States of the United States and the District of Columbia. It transports from its said place of business or causes to be transported therefrom, such china and chinaware when sold, to purchasers in the various States of the United States other than the said State of Illinois and in the District of Columbia.

In the course and conduct of its said business, respondent has been and is in substantial competition in interstate commerce with individuals, partnerships, and corporations engaged in offering for sale and selling china, chinaware, earthenware, glassware, and other pottery in like commerce.

PAR. 2. There is now, and for more than one hundred and fifty years approximately there has been manufactured at Limoges, in France, a vitreous, translucent, and glazed ware which is now, and has been during said period of time, designated, described, and known as china by reason of its original or initial manufacture in China before its introduction into Europe. In the early part of the Nineteenth Century, china, as it gradually came to be called, began to be exported from Limoges in France, into the various countries of Europe and America and particularly into the United States of America and into and through the several States thereof. Such china immediately thereupon acquired a favorable reputation in the United States, as china of utility and beauty resulting in the establishment of a goodwill which developed from time to time an increasing popular demand for the products of Limoges. In 1927 when respondent was incorporated, this china manufactured at Limoges in France and imported into the United States had long been widely and generally known as Limoges china. The word "Limoges" applied to, or used in describing or designating china or chinaware, had for many years theretofore come to signify and mean, and ever since has signified and meant, and now signifies and means, china manufactured at Limoges, France.

PAR. 3. In the course and conduct of its business, it has been and is the practice of respondent to buy china and chinaware which is imported by it directly, or is purchased from the importers thereof. Said china and chinaware are produced in Japan, China, Czechoslovakia, and other countries, plain and undecorated, and are known and described by the trade as "blanks." Thereupon the respondent decorates such imported products and imprints, stamps, paints, or otherwise impresses on some of it, or causes it to bear pictorial representations of French scenes and designs or other decorations illustrative or suggestive of Limoges china or chinaware, or characteristic of France and causes the same to bear the following or similar legends:

Limoges
French
Decoration
Hand-painted

Respondent has also offered for sale and sold other china and chinaware decorated by it with scenes painted thereon suggestive and characteristic of countries in which it was neither produced nor decorated.

In truth and in fact, the china and chinaware decorated by respondent and bearing the legend

Limoges
French
Decoration
Hand-painted

have not been and are not produced in Limoges, France or in any other part of France, have not been and are not Limoges china or chinaware, have not been and are not decorated or painted in France, but in the United States of America. The so-called "blanks" so decorated by respondent have been cheaper or less expensive for decorating purposes than Limoges china or chinaware. Respondent has been enabled by such practices, that is to say, by selling as and for Limoges china or chinaware so-called "blanks" produced in other countries than France and decorated by it in the United States, to derive a more substantial profit than could have been acquired or derived by it if the china or chinaware offered for sale and sold by it had been Limoges china or chinaware decorated or hand-painted at Limoges, France.

It has also been one of the practices of respondent to remove, erase or eliminate from so-called "blanks" or to cover with a design of some kind, the word or words stamped or appearing on such blanks or undecorated china or chinaware, indicating, as required by law, the country in which such china or chinaware originated or was produced. By this practice respondent has been enabled to evade, preclude, and nullify the purpose of the law by concealment or suppression of the origin of such china or chinaware or of the place of its manufacture or production, and more easily to convey the impression that it is Limoges china or chinaware and has been painted and decorated at Limoges or elsewhere in France, or that it has been produced and decorated in the country or countries, suggested or indicated by scenes painted thereon typical or characteristic of such country or countries.

PAR. 4. In competition with respondent there are now and for several years last past have been individuals, partnerships, and corporations offering for sale and selling Limoges china or chinaware, decorated and undecorated, in the United States and still other individuals, partnerships, and corporations offering for sale and selling china or chinaware, decorated and undecorated, produced in the United States and in other countries of Europe and Asia than France, who have truthfully represented, stamped, branded, and described it.

PAR. 5. The aforesaid practices of respondent described in paragraph 3 hereof, have had and have, and each of them has had and has, the capacity and the tendency to mislead and deceive, have misled and deceived, and do mislead and deceive the purchasing or consuming public into the belief that the china or chinaware offered for sale and sold by respondent described and designated as in paragraph 3 hereof, has been produced at Limoges, France, and has been decorated, processed and painted in Limoges, France, and that other china and chinaware offered for sale and sold by it was produced in the country suggested by scenes painted thereon typical or characteristic of such country, and in the purchase of such china or chinaware in reliance upon such erroneous belief or beliefs.

The aforesaid practices of respondent have had, and have the capacity and tendency to, and do, unfairly divert trade to respondent from its competitors mentioned in paragraph 4 hereof, and, as a result, of such practices of respondent injury has been and is being done to such competitors in commerce among and between the various States of the United States.

PAR. 6. The aforementioned methods, acts, and practices of respondent are all to the prejudice of the public and respondent's competitors as hereinabove alleged. Said methods, acts, and practices constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914.

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission on October 16, 1936, issued, and on October 19, 1936, served, its complaint in this proceeding upon respondent, Tolpin Studios, Inc., charging it with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of the provisions of said act. After the issuance of said complaint and the filing of respondent's answer, the Commission, by order entered herein, granted respondent's motion for permission to withdraw said answer and to substitute therefor an answer admitting all the material allegations of the complaint to be true, except the allegations of the last sub-paragraph of paragraph 3 of said complaint, and waiving the taking of further evidence and all other intervening procedure, which substitute answer was duly filed in the office of the Commission. Thereafter, this proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on the said complaint and the substitute answer, briefs, and oral arguments having been waived, and the Commission having duly considered the same and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPHS 1. Respondent, Tolpin Studios, Inc., is a corporation organized and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Illinois, with its principal place of business located at 2129 West Van Buren Street, in the city of Chicago of said State.

PAR. 2. Said respondent engages, and prior and subsequent to the 16th day of October 1936, has been engaged, in the business of processing and decorating foreign and domestic made undecorated china or chinaware products, and in selling, offering for sale, and distributing the same in commerce among and between the various States of the United States, and in the District of Columbia, and has caused, and now causes, said products, when sold or ordered, to be shipped and transported from the State of Illinois to various States of the United States other than the State of Illinois, and to and in the District of Columbia, in the course and conduct of which said respondent has been, and is, in competition with other corporations, firms, partnerships, and individuals engaged in the sale, offering for sale, and distribution of decorated china or chinaware products in commerce among and between the various States of the United States, and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 3. There is now, and for more than one hundred and fifty years approximately there has been, manufactured at Limoges, in France, a vitreous, translucent, and glazed ware which is now, and has been during said period of time, designated, described, and known as china by reason of its original or initial manufacture in China before its introduction into Europe. In the early part of the Nineteenth Century, china, as it gradually came to be called, began to be exported from Limoges in France, into the various countries of Europe and America and particularly into the United States of America and into and through the several States thereof. Such china immediately thereupon acquired a favorable reputation in the United States as china of utility and beauty resulting in the establishment of a goodwill which developed from time to time an increasing popular demand for the products of Limoges. In 1927, when respondent was incorporated, this china manufactured at Limoges in France and imported into the United States had long been widely and generally known as Limoges china. The word "Limoges" applied to, or used in describing or designating china or chinaware, had for many years theretofore come to signify and mean, and ever since has signified and meant, and now signifies and means, china manufactured at Limoges, France.

PAR. 4. In the course and conduct of respondent's business, as above described, respondent offered for sale, sold, and distributed certain of its decorated china or chinaware products to wholesale and retail dealers, including department stores and auctioneers, and purchasers thereof in various States of the United States, on which products respondent branded, imprinted, and otherwise caused to appear, the words and description "Limoges" and "French Decoration," thereby representing that the products bearing the word "Limoges" originated and were made in the city of Limoges and the country of France, and that the products bearing the words and description "French Decoration" were decorated with French designs and decorations peculiar to the country of France and to French artistry and that the same were decorated in France; whereas, contrary to the representations so made, respondent's products so described and referred to were not made and did not originate in Limoges, France, but were obtained by respondent from countries other than the country of France, and the same were not decorated in France or with French designs and decorations peculiar to the country of France and French artistry.

PAR. 5. The branding, imprinting, and representations of respondent, as described and referred to in the foregoing paragraphs, have placed and place, and each of them has placed and places, in the hands of dealers selling the products of respondent the means by which to mislead and deceive the consuming public into the purchase of respondent's china or chinaware products, and the same have had and have, and each of them has had and has, the tendency and capacity to mislead and deceive, and did and do mislead and deceive, members of the public and of the retail trade into the false and erroneous belief that the representations made by said branding or imprinting are true and that the products so represented as "Limoges" originated and were made in Limoges, France, and that the products so represented by the words "French Decoration" were decorated in France and with French designs and decorations peculiar to the country of France and French artistry, all thereby causing members of the public and of the retail trade to buy and deal in products of respondent in lieu and in place of competing products of competitors of respondent, in consequence of which trade has been and is diverted to respondent from its competitors who do not misbrand or falsely and misleadingly label, mark, or otherwise represent their products.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondent, Tolpin Studios, Inc., are to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

This proceeding having been heard by the Federal Trade Commission upon the complaint of the Commission and the answer filed herein on May 21, 1937, by respondent admitting all the material allegations of the complaint to be true, except the allegations of the last sub-paragraph of paragraph 3 of said complaint, and waiving the taking of further evidence and all other intervening procedure, and the Commission having made its findings as to the facts and its conclusion that said respondent has violated the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

It is ordered, That the respondent, Tolpin Studios, Inc., its officers, representatives, agents, and employees, in connection with the offering for sale, sale, and distribution of china or chinaware products in interstate commerce, or in the District of Columbia, do forthwith cease and desist from:

1. Branding, labeling, marking, or otherwise causing the word "Limoges" to appear on china or chinaware products of respondent, or in any way representing said products, or causing said products to be represented, as Limoges china or chinaware when such products have not had their origin and have not been manufactured in the city of Limoges, in the country of France;

2. Branding, labeling, marking, or otherwise causing the words "French Decoration" to appear on china or chinaware products of respondent, or in any way representing said products, or causing said products to be represented, as products decorated in France or with French designs and decorations peculiar to the country of France and to French artistry when such products were not decorated in France and the designs and decorations appearing thereon were not and are not French designs and decorations peculiar to the country of France and to French artistry.

It is further ordered, that the respondent shall, within 60 days after service upon it of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which it has complied with this order.

IN THE MATTER OF THE TIMES SALES COMPANY, INC., ET AL.

Docket 2801. Complaint, May 14, 1936.¹—Decision, July 9, 1937

Where a corporation and three individuals engaged, as the case might be, as executive officers thereof in carrying on or continuing the business of said corporation or in conducting the business successor thereto, engaged in selling, by direct solicitation of purchasers in various States and in the District of Columbia, through their agents thereunto authorized, a certain encyclopedia, supplement or revision service, certificate evidencing membership in the "Bureau of Research," and certain magazines, in combination, for specified sums and under specified terms, through the medium of printed contract forms, altered at times by certain agents through writing thereon different and other terms than those covered by printed form and different and other magazines than those provided for and authorized—

Represented and insisted to purchasers and signers of such altered contracts that the printed terms of the contracts put them on notice of selling agents' limitation of authority in such respect, and through letters, collection agents, and attorneys, disavowed and denied the authority of the selling agents to make such alterations, and represented and insisted that such contracts were legally enforceable against signers, according to printed terms thereof, as if unaltered in writing and regardless of written alterations in printed terms appearing on face thereof, and sued and threatened purchasers and signers with suit for legal enforcement of same and for collection of the unpaid portion of the consideration, and thereby, through force, duress, and undue influence, and under false pretenses that said contracts were legally enforceable against signers without reference to written alterations in printed terms thereof, converted acts and conduct of said selling agents to the benefit and profit of their business, and achieved sale and distribution of said "combination sale" encyclopedia deal, inclusive of books, services, and magazines; Facts being printed terms of notices set forth in contracts were not sufficient to put purchasers and prospective purchasers and signers on notice that selling agents were without authority to make alterations or changes in writing on face of contracts over printed terms thereof with respect to time or terms under which consideration was to be paid or payable, or to the effect that said agents' authority to substitute magazines was limited to certain periodicals only, but it was consistent with such printed terms and provisions that such alterations or changes should take precedence over the other, and said contracts, as thus altered, were not in fact subject to legal enforcement, except in accordance with said alterations and changes;

¹ Complaint published as amended as of July 9, 1937.

Complaint

With result that acts and practices of said selling agents in representing that they had authority to alter printed terms as above set forth, and in making such alternations, had tendency and capacity to mislead and deceive purchasers and prospective purchasers of encyclopedias, with and without revision and research services, and of magazine subscriptions, into false and erroneous belief that said representations were true, and into purchase of said encyclopedias, etc., and into signing of contracts therefor in reliance upon such erroneous belief and upon terms of said contracts as thus written in by said agents, and with further result that said various acts, threats, force, duress, undue influence, and false pretenses in performing, enforcing, and endeavoring to enforce such altered contracts, signed as above set forth, deceived purchasers and signers into false and erroneous belief that they were bound thereto according to printed terms thereof, and thus into performance of said contracts in accordance with such terms, and of inducing purchasers and signers into such performance, in accordance with such printed terms, and into completed purchase of said encyclopedia, services and magazines offered and sold by them, and with tendency and capacity to divert trade to them from their competitors who do not make false and misleading statements and representations in connection with the sale of their products, and do not promote and achieve such sales by means of false and misleading representations or by threats, force, duress, undue influence, or false pretenses:

Held, That such acts and practices were to the prejudice of the public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition.

Mr. Jay L. Jackson for the Commission.

Mr. Edward Davis, of Philadelphia, Pa., for respondent.

COMPLAINT

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent, The Times Sales Company, Inc., is a corporation organized and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Pennsylvania, with its principal place of business located at 152½ Chestnut Street, in the city of Philadelphia, in the State of Pennsylvania. All or approximately all of the controlling and voting capital shares of stock of said corporate respondent are owned, held or controlled by one or more of the other respondents named herein. Since the 8th day of May 1934, the assets, business, and affairs of said corporate respondent have been, and now are, held by and under the control, direction, and management of one or more of the other named respondents herein.

Respondent, The Times Sales Company, is a proprietorship organized and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Pennsylvania, registered under the "Fictitious Name Act" of said State, under the name of the respondent, Edward B. Seegar, with its principal place of business located at 1524 Chestnut Street, in the city of Philadelphia of said State.

Respondent, Edward B. Seegar, is an individual trading under the name and style of The Times Sales Company, with his principal office and place of business located at 1524 Chestnut Street, in the city of Philadelphia, in the State of Pennsylvania. On or about the 8th day of May 1934, the said Edward B. Seegar became the successor in interest to the assets, business, and affairs theretofore owned and operated by The Times Sales Company, Inc., corporate respondent named herein.

Respondents, William Heim and George G. Heim, are individuals and officers of The Times Sales Company, Inc., corporate respondent named herein, and members and officers of The Times Sales Company, copartnership respondent named herein, with their principal place of business located at 1524 Chestnut Street, in the city of Philadelphia, State of Pennsylvania, and at all times material to this complaint said respondents have been and are now engaged in and with the business of said corporate and copartnerships respondents named herein, and with the advertising, promotion, and management thereof.

The aforesaid respondents have been, and each of them has been, for more than two years last past, and now are, engaged in the business of selling, offering for sale, and distributing in commerce among and between the various States of the United States, and in the District of Columbia, an encyclopedia consisting of eight volumes, called and described as "The Times Encyclopedia" and sometimes as "The Times Encyclopedia and Gazetteer," in combination with a 10 years supplemental loose leaf extension or revision service issued periodically for said encyclopedia, and a membership in a bureau of research, together with magazine subscriptions and periodicals. Respondents have described and do describe such transactions as being a "combination sale" and as an "encyclopedia deal." In the course and conduct of the said business, respondents have caused, and each of them has caused, and now cause, said books, encyclopedia, services, magazines, and periodicals, composing said deal, when sold or ordered, to be shipped and transported from the State of origin thereof to various States of the United States other than the State of origin of said shipments, and to and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of the business of respondents, as aforesaid, respondents, at all times material to this complaint, have been and are now in competition with other corporations, firms, partnerships, and individuals engaged in the same and similar business and in like commerce.

PAR. 3. It has been and now is the practice of respondents and of each of them to offer for sale, sell, and distribute the said combination sale and encyclopedia deal, including encyclopedia of eight volumes, 10 years revision service, 10 years research bureau membership, and magazine subscriptions, by use of the mails, interstate carriers, and other channels of commerce in and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia; by means of sales agents, canvassers, and employees; by means of contracts, credit instruments, collection agents, employees, and attorneys, and by means of circulars, letters, pamphlets, literature, and by oral, printed, written, and pictorial displays, statements, and representations in the course and conduct of which respondents have made and now make false and misleading statements, representations, and promises, and otherwise have used and now use unfair methods in the solicitation of and sale to purchasers and prospective purchasers of respondents' said combination sale and encyclopedia deal, all to the injury of the public and to the injury of competitors of respondents.

PAR. 4. In the course and conduct of the business of respondents, as aforesaid, respondents and their agents and employees have used and use printed forms of contracts, to which the signatures of purchasers and subscribers have been and now are solicited and secured by agents, canvassers, and employees of respondents thereunto duly authorized. One form of such contract used by respondents during the year 1935 and theretofore, or as late as the month of December, 1934, purported on its face to be a "Special Advertising Contract" offered by The Times Sales Company, Inc., of Philadelphia, Pa., respondent herein, and among other things stated and represented that respondents' encyclopedia referred to therein was and is "Kept Constantly Up-To-Date." A later form of contract, used by respondents during and since the year 1934, purports on its face to be the contract offered by The Times Sales Company, Inc., of Philadelphia, Pa., and carries on its face a pictorial display of the eight volumes constituting the encyclopedia and of the binder for the loose leaf revision service. Common to the printed terms of the contracts just described, and to the form of contract used by respondents during the years 1935 and 1936 to date, are the following terms and provisions, to wit:

On receipt of final payment I am to receive Magazine Subscriptions and Coupon Bond for Loose Leaf Service and Membership Certificate, for Bureau of Research. I am retaining a copy of this agreement, and have no verbal or written understanding with your representative other than the terms herein stated. This contract is not subject to change or cancellation. The Times Sales Co. guarantees their Publications to be equal in every respect to samples shown; hence no solicitor is authorized to take orders subject to approval. No subscriptions accepted from newsdealers or libraries.

In the course and conduct of the business of respondents, as aforesaid, it has been and is the practice of respondents' sales agents and employees to solicit, induce and secure the names and signatures of purchasers and subscribers to the aforesaid contracts and to close sales for respondents' said combination sale and encyclopedia deal, including books, services, research bureau membership, and magazine subscriptions, by stating, representing, and implying that the printed terms of said contracts were and are open to alterations and changes, in the matters of time and terms of payment, and with reference to the magazines named in the printed terms thereof, that other magazines not so named and printed but desired by purchasers and subscribers might be substituted for those named in the printed contract form, whereupon said agents did and do make in writing upon the face of said contracts certain alterations and changes in the printed terms thereof by altering and changing either the time of payment or the terms of payment, or both time and terms of payment, and by substituting for one or more of the magazines named in print on the contract form the names of and subscriptions to magazines not so named in print, all in accordance with the particular agreements and understanding as made and had with said purchasers and subscribers signing their names and signatures to said contracts.

PAR. 5. Upon receipt of said contracts above described, signed by persons solicited by respondents' sales agents, in which the printed terms have been and are altered and changed in writing on the face thereof, as aforesaid, it has been and is the practice of respondents, and of each of them, verbally to disavow and deny the authority of said agents in making any of the alterations and changes in the printed terms of respondents' contract form, as described in paragraph 4 above, but nevertheless to enforce, or seek to enforce, and otherwise to treat the said contracts as binding and enforceable against signers thereto according to the printed terms thereof and as being unaffected and uninduced by the alterations and changes made in writing on the face thereof, or by false, misleading, and unauthorized statements, representations, and promises made by respondents' sales agents, in the course and conduct of which, while refusing to honor said contracts according to the alterations and changes in the printed terms made in writing on the face thereof, both as to time and terms of payment and with reference to the substitution of magazine subscriptions, respondents have held and hold to, and have enforced and enforce, the printed terms of said contracts against signers thereto, and through and by means of letters, collection agents, and attorneys, did and do threaten suit for the legal enforcement of said contracts, and otherwise by force, duress, undue influence, and under the false pretense that said contracts are legally enforceable against signers thereto according to the printed terms thereof as against the aforesaid alterations and changes made in writing on the face thereof, have held and hold to the benefits of said contracts the same as if said contracts had been and were induced, secured, and closed in reliance upon the printed terms and offer therein; thereby converting the acts and conduct of respondents' sales agents to respondents' benefit and achieving the sale and distribution of respondents' combination sale and encyclopedia, inclusive of the books, services, membership, and magazines named in the print appearing on the face of said contracts.

PAR. 6. In the course and conduct of the business of respondents, as aforesaid, respondents and their agents and employees did and do falsely and misleadingly state, represent, and promise that the said combination sale and encyclopedia deal includes a 10 years revision service in the form of loose leaf supplements issued and distributed quarterly each year, by means of which the encyclopedia of eight volumes is kept "up-to-date" and "abreast of the times"; whereas in truth and in fact it has not been and is not the practice of respondents to perform said promise or to cause said revision service to be rendered to purchasers of said combination sale and encyclopedia deal, and whereas in truth and in fact the said revision service did not and does not keep the said encyclopedia up-to-date or abreast of the times.

PAR. 7. Respondents' said false and misleading statements, representations, acts, and course of conduct, as set forth in paragraph 6 above, and respondents' threats, force, duress, undue influence, and false pretenses in the enforcement of contracts, as set forth in paragraphs 4 and 5 above, have had and have, and each of them has had and has, the tendency and capacity to mislead and to deceive purchasers and prospective purchasers of encyclopedias, with and without revision services, reference books, and magazine and periodical subscriptions, into the false and erroneous belief that respondents' statements and representations in connection with the sale of respondents' encyclopedias, revision and research services, and magazine subscriptions were and are true, and into the purchase of said encyclopedias, services, and subscriptions in reliance upon such erroneous belief.

The aforesaid acts and practices have had and have, and each of them has had and has, the tendency and capacity to divert trade to respondents from their competitors who do not falsely and misleadingly represent their products and who do not promote and achieve the sale of their said products by means of false and misleading statements and representations or by means of threats, force, duress, undue influence, or false pretenses.

PAR. 8. The above and foregoing course of conduct, acts, and practices of respondents have been and are all to the prejudice of the public and respondents' competitors, and have been and are unfair methods of competition within the meaning and intent of Section 5 of an Act of Congress entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914.

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914 (38 Stat. 719), the Federal Trade Commission on the 14th day of May, 1936, issued, and on the 15th day of May 1936, served, its complaint in this proceeding upon respondents The Times Sales Company, Inc., a corporation; The Times Sales Company; Edward B. Seegar, doing business as The Times Sales Company, and William Heim and George G. Heim, charging them with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of the provisions of said act. On the 11th day of November 1936, respondents filed their substituted and amended answer in this proceeding. Thereafter, a stipulation as to the facts, dated May 20, 1937, was entered into, whereby it was stipulated and agreed that the statement of facts contained therein, executed by and on behalf of respondents through their counsel, Edward Davis, Esq., and by W. T. Kelley, Chief Counsel for the Federal Trade Commission, subject to the approval of the Commission, might be taken as the facts in this proceeding and in lieu of testimony in support of the charges stated in the complaint, or in opposition thereto, and that the Commission might proceed upon such statement of facts to make its report, stating its findings as to the facts (including inferences which it might draw from said facts) and its conclusion based thereon, and enter its order disposing of the proceeding without the presentation of argument or the filing of briefs. Thereafter, the said complaint, in accordance with the said stipulation as to the facts, was amended to accord with the facts as shown by respondents' said substituted and amended answer and said stipulation as to the facts. Thereafter, this proceeding regularly came on for hearing before the Commission on said complaint, as amended, and on said substituted and amended answer and stipulation, the said stipulation having been approved and accepted, and the Commission having duly considered the same and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom.

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent The Times Sales Company, Inc., is a corporation, organized and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Pennsylvania, and since the date of its incorporation, October 3, 1929, was actively and continuously engaged in business until the 17th day of April 1934, with its principal place of business located at 1524 Chestnut Street, in the city of Philadelphia, State of Pennsylvania. On the said 17th day of April 1934, said corporate respondent was marked "out of existence," on the records of the Department of Revenue of the State of Pennsylvania, in accordance with the laws of the State of Pennsylvania, and since said date has been and remained inactive with respect to engaging in the business of selling and distributing its products in commerce among and between the several States of the United States. Said respondent has never been legally dissolved and is subject to revival for active business upon the payment of certain corporation taxes in accordance with the laws of the State of Pennsylvania. The last duly elected and acting executive officers of said corporate respondent are respondents William Heim and George G. Heim, who were also the duly elected and acting executive officers of said corporation, engaged in the control, direction, and management of the business and affairs thereof, from the date of its said incorporation to and including the 17th day of April 1934. During the period between April 17, 1934, and May 10, 1934, the assets, business, and affairs of said corporate respondent were under the control, direction, and management of respondent William Heim. On or about the 9th day of May 1934, the business and affairs of said corporate respondent were acquired by respondent Edward B. Seegar, trading under the name of The Times Sales Company, respondent named herein, and the said business and affairs of said corporation are now held and controlled by the said respondent Edward B. Seegar.

Respondent The Times Sales Company is a proprietorship organized and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Pennsylvania and as such is owned and controlled by respondent Edward B. Seegar, and registered under the name of respondent Edward B. Seegar, on the 10th day of May 1934, under the "Fictitious Name Act" of the State of Pennsylvania. Its principal place of business is located at 1524 Chestnut Street, in the city of Philadelphia, State of Pennsylvania.

Respondent Edward B. Seegar is an individual doing business and trading under the name and style of "The Times Sales Company", respondent named herein, and has his principal office and place of business located at 1524 Chestnut Street, in the city of Philadelphia, State of Pennsylvania.

Respondent William Heim is an individual and the last duly elected, acting, and managing executive officer of the corporate respondent. The Times Sales Company, Inc., and since the organization of respondent The Times Sales Company has been, and now is the manager of said company, and as such has been, and now is, engaged in and with the business and affairs of said respondent companies and in the business promotion and management thereof.

PAR. 2. Respondents, The Times Sales Company, Edward B. Seegar, trading as The Times Sales Company, and William Heim, for more than two years next preceding the issuance of the Commission's complaint in the instant proceeding have been, and now are, engaged in and with the business of selling, offering for sale, and distributing in commerce among and between the various States of the United States, and in the District of Columbia, an encyclopedia consisting of eight books or volumes, called and described as "The Times Encyclopedia," and sometimes as "The Times Enyclopedia and Gazetteer," together and in combination with a ten years supplement or revision service issued periodically for said encyclopedia, a membership in a so-called "Bureau of Research," and subscriptions to various magazines and periodicals of interstate circulation. During the years 1932, 1933, and 1934, but not after April 17, 1934, corporate respondent The Times Sales Company, Inc., was engaged in the same and like line of commerce as aforesaid, although certain contract forms bearing the name of said The Times Sales Company, Inc., were used subsequent to April 17, 1934. Subsequent to said date, and more particularly from May 8, 1934, the business of selling and distributing the said encyclopedia, supplement or revision service, membership in the Bureau of Research, and magazines and periodicals, was conducted by respondents The Times Sales Company, Edward B. Seegar, trading as The Times Sales Company, and William Heim.

Respondents have described and do describe the aforesaid sales transactions as being a "combination sale" and as an "encyclopedia deal."

In the course and conduct of the business aforesaid, respondents have caused and each of them has caused, and respondents The Times Sales Company, Edward B. Seegar, trading as The Times Sales Company, and William Heim, now cause the said books, encyclopedia, supplement or revision service, and a certificate evidencing membership in the Bureau of Research, entitling the member to research services, and magazines and periodicals, composing the so-called "combination sale" and "encyclopedia deal," when sold or ordered, to be shipped and transported from the State of origin thereof, to various States of the United States other than the State of origin of said shipments, and to and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 3. During the course and conduct of the business of respondents, as aforesaid, respondents, including corporate respondent The Times Sales Company, Inc., when active, have been and are in competition with other corporations, firms, partnerships, and individuals engaged in the business of selling, offering for sale, and distributing in commerce among and between the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia, so-called reference books and encyclopedias, both with and without supplemental or revision service, and subscriptions to magazines and periodicals.

PAR. 4. In the course and conduct of the business of respondents, all as aforesaid, it has been and is their practice to offer for sale and sell said combination sale or encyclopedia deal, inclusive of "The Times Encyclopedia," supplement or revision and research services, together with subscriptions to magazines or periodicals, by means of direct solicitation of purchasers thereof, located in various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia, by agents thereunto authorized by said respondents, which agents receive and take orders therefor in the form of written contracts and forward the same to respondents' principal place of business in the city of Philadelphia, State of Pennsylvania. Upon receipt of such orders, it has been and is the practice of respondents to fill the same by causing the said encyclopedia, supplement or revision service, research services, and magazines, or subscriptions thereto, to be sent through the United States mails. Subscriptions to magazines are cleared through the agencies of their publishers. It has also been and is the practice of respondents to supply the said agents with a list of names of those magazines for which said respondents were and are authorized by publishers to take orders, including, among others, Harpers, Asia, Modern Mechanics, Forbes, and Redbook. Respondent The Times Sales Company and respondent Edward B. Seegar, trading under the name The Times Sales Company, now employ three agents or salesmen, but said respondents have variously employed between ten and fifteen of such agents or salesmen during the times hereinabove mentioned. Said agents or salesmen are paid no salaries, work on a commission basis, and are free to solicit orders and to sell in territories of their own choice.

PAR. 5. The contract forms supplied by respondents to the aforesaid agents and salesmen, and used by them and by the said agents and salesmen in soliciting and taking orders, bear on their face certain printed terms and provisions, together with certain representations with respect to the said combination sale or encyclopedia deal, together with spaces for the signatures of, and for certain collateral information concerning, purchasers and subscribers. One form of such contract, which was used by respondents and the aforesaid agents and salesmen during the years 1934 and 1935, bears on its face, among other things, a pictorial display and representation of the eight volumes constituting the encyclopedia and of a binder for the supplement or revision service and purports to be the offer and contract of respondent The Times Sales Company, Incorporated. Another form of such contract used by respondents and the aforesaid agents and salesmen during the years 1934 and 1935 purports to be the offer and contract of respondent The Times Sales Company and represents on its face to be a "Special Advertising Contract," and among other things further represents that "The Times Encyclopedia" and "Loose Leaf Extension Service," therein referred to, are "Kept Constantly Up-to-Date." A further form of contract which was used by respondent The Times Sales Company, Inc., and its agents and salesmen during the year 1933 and until April 17, 1934, and by respondent The Times Sales Company, and by its owner, respondent Edward B. Seegar, and its manager, respondent William Heim, and their agents and salesmen, subsequent to May 10, 1934, until the year 1935, purports on its face to be the offer and contract of The Times Sales Company, Inc., and further represents that the same is a "Special Advertising Contract," and that "The Times Encyclopedia" and the "Loose Leaf Extension Service," therein referred to, are "Kept Constantly Up-to-Date."

Common to the printed terms of the contract forms above referred to and described, and to the form of contract used by respondents The Times Sales Company, Edward B. Seegar trading as The Times Sales Company, and William Heim, and their agents and salesmen, during the year 1936, are the following terms and provisions, to wit:

Which I promise to pay to your order as follows: $5.00 with order, balance as follows: $6.50 upon delivery of Encyclopedia, Plus Parcel Post or Express Charges and $3.50 in 30 days. On receipt of final payment I am to receive Magazine Subscriptions and Coupon Bond for Loose Leaf Service and Membership Certificate, for Bureau of Research. I am retaining a copy of this agreement, and have no verbal or written understanding with your representative other than the terms herein stated. This contract is not subject to change or cancellation. The Times Sales Co. guarantees their Publications to be equal in every respect to samples shown; hence no solicitor is authorized to take orders subject to approval. No subscriptions accepted from newsdealers or libraries.

PAR. 6. Respondents did not and do not affirmatively authorize the aforesaid selling agents to represent the terms and provisions of the offer made by respondents other than as set forth in the printed terms of the contracts used by said agents, or to make oral or written changes or alterations in the printed terms thereof, except with reference to the substitution of certain magazines, the names of which are supplied by respondents and known to said selling agents. Nevertheless, certain of said agents, in selling and soliciting purchasers and prospective purchasers of respondents' combination sale or encyyclopedia deal, and in soliciting, inducing, and securing signatures of purchasers to said contracts, did and do in fact represent that they have authority to alter and change the printed terms thereof with respect to the time, terms, and conditions therein providing for the payment of the consideration of $15.00, and with respect to magazines named in the printed terms thereof, to substitute therefor other magazines of the purchaser's choice not so named in print. Thereupon the said agents did and do make in writing upon the face of said contracts certain alterations and changes in the printed terms thereof, altering and changing the time of payment, or terms of payment, or both the time and terms of payment, and by substituting for one or more of the magazines, named in print therein, the names of, and subscriptions to, magazines not so named in print, but all in accordance with the particular agreements and understandings had and made with the purchasers or subscribers signing their names to said contracts.

In the foregoing connection, for example, the printed terms of the contract forms, hereinabove described, provide for $5.00 payment with the order, $6.50 upon delivery of encyclopedia, plus parcel post or express charges, and $3.50 in thirty days. Nevertheless, certain of said agents did and do agree with purchasers to accept a down payment of less than $5.00, and upon receipt of such amount, acknowledge the same in writing upon the face of the contracts signed by the purchasers and thereon further indicate in writing the balance of moneys due under such contracts. A further form of alteration, demonstrative of the conduct of said agents, is that by which said agents, in accordance with agreements had and made with purchasers and signers thereto, acknowledge in writing upon the face of said contracts the receipt of the down payment of $5.00, and further to provide in writing that the balance of $10.00 is payable in two subsequent payments and that the purchaser is to be billed for such balance or balances in lieu of C. O. D. With respect to the substitution of the names of magazines other than those named in the printed forms of said contracts, certain of said selling agents did and do write in the names of magazines for which they or respondents have no authority to sell or take subscriptions, such as Atlantic Monthly as a substitute for Life, or for Asia, Christian Century for Asia, and Readers Digest for Life. By the above means and methods purchasers and signers to said contracts are induced to purchase and sign their names to said contracts.

PAR. 7. Upon receipt of the contracts, altered and changed by the said agents in writing upon the face thereof, as aforesaid, it has been and is the practice of respondents to proceed to the performance of such contracts in accordance with the printed terms thereof, the same as if no such alterations were made or so appeared and as being unaffected and uninduced by the representations and terms written in by the said agents on the face of the contract, by sending the encyclopedia C. O. D. for balances due, when the purchaser and person signing said contract, according to the written alterations thereon, is to be billed for the balance or balances in lieu of C. O. D., and by clearing subscriptions to the magazines named in print on said contracts, and otherwise insisting upon said purchasers accepting the magazines so named, instead of the magazines actually subscribed for by said purchasers and the names of which have been and are written in on the face of said contracts in substitution of one or more of the magazines named in print therein, more particularly when the magazines substituted are ones for which respondents have no authority to sell or take subscriptions, or otherwise cannot be supplied by respondents.

In dealing with purchasers and signers to contracts altered in writing as above described, it has been and is the further practice of respondents, through and by means of letters, collection agents, and attorneys, to disavow and deny the authority of the selling agents to make the alterations above described, to represent and insist that the printed terms of the contracts put such purchasers and signers on notice of the selling agent's limitation of authority in this respect, and to represent and insist that the said contracts are legally enforceable against signers thereto according to the printed terms thereof, the same as if unaltered in writing and regardless the written alterations in the printed terms appearing on the face thereof. In connection therewith respondents sue and threaten purchasers and signers to said contracts with suit for the legal enforcement of the same and for collection of the unpaid portion of the consideration $15.00 and hold to the down payments made by purchasers in such contracts. By these means of force, duress, and undue influence, and under the false pretense that said contracts are legally enforceable against signers thereto, without reference to the written alterations in the printed terms thereof, respondents have converted and convert the acts and conduct of the said selling agents to the benefit and profit of the business conducted by respondents, and did and do achieve the sale and distribution of the said combination sale or encyclopedia deal, inclusive of the books, services, and magazines.

PAR. 8. The printed terms and notices set forth in the contracts hereinabove described are not sufficient to put purchasers and prospective purchasers and signers thereto on notice that the said selling agents are without authority to make alterations or changes in writing on the face of the contracts over the printed terms thereof with respect to the time or terms under which payment of the consideration is paid or payable, or that the authority of said agents with respect to the substitution of magazines is limited to certain magazines only.

It is consistent with the printed terms and provisions of the contracts hereinabove described that alterations or changes made on the face thereof in writing, with respect to the time or terms of payment and substitution of magazines, shall take precedence over the printed terms thereof relating to time and terms of payment and substitution of magazines, and said contracts, as so altered, are not in fact subject to legal enforcement except in accordance with the said alterations and changes.

PAR. 9. The combination sale of encyclopedia deal hereinabove described does in fact include a 10-year revision service, in the form of supplements or booklets which are issued and distributed quarterly each year, by which certain items or portions of the encyclopedia are amended and supplemented from time to time. In connection with this service, purchasers are supplied with so-called "tear slips," which provide spaces for the name and address of purchaser and person entitled to such service. As a condition precedent to mailing and receipt of each issue of the supplement or revision service, purchasers are required to fill in the blanks and send the same to the office of respondents. The purpose of this practice is to provide respondents with the correct names and addresses of the persons entitled to such supplements prior to mailing thereof, this for the reason that the purchase price of the combination sale or encyclopedia deal does not allow or include the cost of periodical circularization of customers to ascertain correct address, and for the reason that constant changes of address among purchasers otherwise results in the loss of supplements in the course of delivery.

PAR. 10. The aforesaid acts and practices of respondents' selling agents in representing that they have authority to alter the printed terms of contracts with respect to time and terms of payment and substitution of magazines, and pursuant to such representations, in making such alterations in writing upon the face of said contracts, all as set forth in paragraph 6 above, have had and have, and each of them has had and has, the tendency and capacity to mislead and deceive purchasers and prospective purchasers of encyclopedias, with and without revision and research services, and of magazine subscriptions, into the false and erroneous belief that said representations are true, and into the purchase of encyclopedias, services, and magazine subscriptions of respondents, and into the signing of contracts therefor in reliance upon such erroneous belief and in reliance upon the terms of said contracts as written in and on the face thereof by said agents. The aforesaid acts, representations, threats, force, duress, undue influence, and false pretenses, of respondents in performing, enforcing, and endeavoring to enforce contracts signed by persons relying upon written alterations appearing on the face thereof over the printed terms thereof, all as set forth in paragraphs 7 and 8 above, have the tendency and capacity to, and did and do in fact, deceive purchasers and signers to said contracts into the false and erroneous belief that they were bound thereunto according to the printed terms thereof, and thus, into the performance of said contracts in accordance with said printed terms; and the said practices otherwise have the tendency and capacity to, and did and do, induce purchasers and signers to such contracts into the performance thereof in accordance with said printed terms and into the completed purchase of the encyclopedias, services, and magazines offered for sale and sold by respondents.

PAR. 11. The aforesaid acts and practices of respondents and of the said selling agents have had and have, and each of them has had and has, the tendency and capacity to divert trade to the business of respondents from their competitors who do not make false and misleading statements and representations in connection with the sale of their products and who do not promote and achieve the sale thereof by means of false and misleading representations or by means of threats, force, duress, undue influence, or false pretenses.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of respondents, and of their agents, under the conditions and circumstances set forth in the foregoing findings, are to the prejudice of the public and of respondents, competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce, within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

This proceeding having been heard by the Federal Trade Commission upon the complaint of the Commission, as amended, and the substitute and amended answer filed herein by respondents on November 11, 1936, and upon the agreed stipulation as to the facts, dated

Order

25 F. T. C.

May 20, 1936, entered into between respondents herein, The Times Sales Company, Inc., a corporation; The Times Sales Company; Edward B. Seegar, trading as The Times Sales Company, and William Heim, and W. T. Kelley, Chief Counsel for the Commission, which stipulation provides, among other things, that without further evidence or other intervening procedure, the Commission may issue and serve upon said respondents findings as to the facts (including inferences which it may draw from said stipulated facts) and its conclusion based thereon, and the Commission having made its findings as to the facts and its conclusion that said respondents have violated the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

It is hereby ordered, That the respondents, The Times Sales Company, Inc., a corporation; The Times Sales Company; Edward B. Seegar, individually, and trading as The Times Sales Company; and William Heim; their respective officers, agents, representatives, and employees, in connection with the sale of encyclopedias, revision and research services, magazines or other similar commodities in interstate commerce or in the District of Columbia, cease and desist from:

Representing in any manner that contracts for the purchase of the products or commodities sold by them, the terms and provisions of which have been altered, changed, or modified by their respective agents, employees, or representatives pursuant to agreement or understanding with the purchasers of such commodities, are subject to performance and are legally enforceable against said purchasers in accordance with the printed terms and provisions of said contracts irrespective of the alterations, changes, or modifications so made.

It is further ordered, That the respondents shall, within 60 days after service upon them of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which they have complied with this order.

IN THE MATTER OF
 IMPERIAL CANDY COMPANY

COMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION
 OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 26, 1914

Docket 2833. Complaint, June 4, 1936—Decision, July 9, 1937

Where a corporation engaged in manufacture and sale of so-called "draw" or "deal" assortments of candy, sale and distribution of which type candy by retailers by lot or chance has capacity and tendency to and does decrease sale of candy sold without any sales plan or device involving lottery or game of chance, i. e., "straight" goods, and sale of which type, providing, in connection with its sale to public, means or opportunity of obtaining a box of candy as a prize or becoming a winner by lot or chance, teaches and encourages gambling and is in violation of various municipal ordinances and regulations and State statutes and constitutions, and provides retail merchants with means of violating the laws of the several States, and sale of which candy, so packed and assembled as to enable retail dealers, without alteration, addition, or rearrangement, to resell same to consuming public by lot or chance, is contrary to public policy—

Sold, to wholesale and retail dealers, certain assortments of candy which were so packed and assembled as to involve, or were designed to involve, use of a lottery scheme when sold and distributed to consumers thereof, and one of which included, together with a punchboard, a number of boxes of assorted chocolate candies of a value of more than five cents each, for sale to consuming public under a plan, and in accordance with said board's explanatory legend, pursuant to which purchasers received, for five cents paid, and dependent upon number punched by chance or purchase of last punch on board, one of aforesaid boxes of candy, or nothing other than privilege of making a punch; so assembled and packed that such assortments might be and were used by retail dealers for distribution thereof to purchasing public by lot or chance, without alteration or rearrangement, and with knowledge and intent that such assortments would and could thus be resold to public by lot or chance by such retail dealers, in competition with many who do not make and sell "draw" or "deal" assortments, but sell their "straight" goods in interstate commerce in competition with the other;

With result that competitors who refused to and do not sell candy so packed and assembled that it can be resold to public by lot or chance were put to a disadvantage in competing with it and with others employing similar methods to those described, trade was diverted to it and others using similar methods by reason of customers' attraction to such "draw" or "deal" assortments from those who do not use such methods, trade was diverted to it from its said competitors, and there was a restraint upon and a detriment to the freedom of fair and legitimate competition in industry concerned; to the prejudice and injury of the public and competitors:

Complaint

25 F. T. C.

Held, That such acts and practices were to the prejudice of the public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition.

Before Mr. Charles P. Vicini and Mr. Henry M. White, trial examiners.

Mr. P. C. Kolinski and Mr. Henry C. Lank for the Commission.

Roberts & Skeel and Flood, Lenihan & Ivers, of Seattle, Wash., for respondent.

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that Imperial Candy Co., a corporation, hereinafter referred to as respondent, has been and is using unfair methods of competition in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in said act of Congress, and it appearing to said Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent, Imperial Candy Co., is a corporation organized and operating under the laws of the State of Washington, with its principal office and place of business located at 800 Western Avenue, Seattle, Wash. Respondent is now, and for several years last past has been, engaged in the manufacture of candies and in the sale and distribution thereof to wholesale dealers, jobbers, and retail dealers located at points in the various States of the United States, and causes and has caused its said products, when so sold, to be transported from its principal place of business in the city of Seattle, Wash., to purchasers thereof in other States of the United States at their respective places of business; and there is now, and has been for several years last past, a course of trade and commerce by said respondent in such candy between and among the States of the United States. In the course and conduct of said business, respondent is in competition with other corporations and with partnerships and individuals engaged in the manufacture of candy and in the sale and distribution thereof in commerce between and among the various States of the United States.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of its business, as described in paragraph 1 hereof, respondent sells and has sold to wholesale and retail dealers packages or assortments of candy so packed and assembled as to involve the use of a lottery scheme when sold and distributed to the consumer thereof.

(a) One of said assortments, manufactured and distributed by the respondent, is composed of a number of large items of candy and a number of boxes of candy of varying sizes, together with a device commonly called a "punchboard." The said boxes of candy are distributed to the consuming public by means of said punchboard in the following manner: The sales by means of said punchboard are 5¢ each, and when a punch is made from said punchboard a number is disclosed. The numbers begin with 1 and continue to the number of punches there are on the board, but the numbers are not arranged in numerical sequence. The board bears a statement or statements informing the prospective customer as to which numbers receive a large item of candy and which numbers receive a box of candy and the size thereof. The purchaser of the last six punches in each section pays for only one punch, the last five punches being free, and the purchaser of the last punch on the board wins a large item of candy irrespective of the number on the punch. A purchaser who does not qualify by obtaining one of the numbers calling for one of the boxes of candy or one of the large items of candy by punching the last number on the board receives nothing for his money other than the privilege of punching a number from the board. The large items of candy and the boxes of candy are worth more than 5¢ each, and a purchaser who obtains one of the numbers calling for a box of candy receives the same for the price of 5¢. The numbers on said board are effectively concealed from the purchasers or prospective purchasers until a punch or selection has been made and the particular punch separated from the board. The boxes of candy and large items of candy in said assortment are thus distributed to purchasers of punches from said board wholly by lot or chance.

The respondent manufactures and distributes several assortments involving the same lot or chance feature, but varying only in detail. Some of the boards have one thousand numbers, others have fifteen hundred numbers, some of the boards are divided into two sections, and some are divided into six sections.

(b) Another of said assortments manufactured and distributed by the respondent is composed of a box of candy, together with a device commonly called a "push card." The said box of candy is distributed to the consuming public by means of said push card in the following manner: Said push card contains fifteen discs numbered from one to fifteen, but not arranged in numerical sequence, and with the numbers concealed. The purchaser of a punch from said push card pays the amount in cents represented by the number which the displaced disc exposes; the push card bears a legend stating that the lucky number under seal wins the box of candy. A purchaser who does not qualify by obtaining the lucky number receives nothing for his money other than the privilege of punching a number from said push card. The box of candy is worth more than the highest priced punch on said push card, fifteen cents, and a purchaser who obtains the number calling for the box of candy receives the same wholly by lot or chance.

PAR. 3. The wholesale dealers and jobbers, to whom respondent sells its assortments, resell said assortments to retail dealers, and said retail dealers, and the retail dealers to whom respondent sells direct, expose said assortments for sale and sell said candy to the purchasing public in accordance with the aforesaid sales plans. Respondent thus supplies to and places in the hands of others the means of conducting lotteries in the sale of its product in accordance with the sales plans hereinabove set forth, and said sales plans have the capacity and tendency of inducing purchasers thereof to purchase respondent's said product in preference to candy offered for sale and sold by its competitors.

PAR. 4. The sale of said candy to the purchasing public in the manner above alleged involves a game of chance or the sale of a chance to procure a box of candy, or items of candy.

The use by respondent of said method in the sale of candy, and the sale of candy by and through the use thereof and by the aid of said method, is a practice of the sort which the common law and criminal statutes have long deemed contrary to public policy; and is contrary to an established public policy of the Government of the United States. The use by respondent of said method has the dangerous tendency unduly to hinder competition or create monopoly in this, to wit: that the use thereof has the tendency and capacity to exclude from the branch of the candy trade involved in this proceeding competitors who do not adopt and use the same method or an equivalent or similar method involving the same or an equivalent or similar element of chance or lottery scheme.

Many persons, firms, and corporations who make and sell candy in competition with the respondent, as above alleged, are unwilling to offer for sale or sell candy so packed and assembled as above alleged, or otherwise arranged and packed for sale to the purchasing public so as to involve a game of chance, and such competitors refrain therefrom.

candy so packed and sold by respondent, in preference to candy offered for sale and sold by said competitors of respondent who do not use the same or equivalent methods. The use of said method by respondent has the tendency and capacity, because of said game of chance, to divert to respondent trade and custom from its said competitors who do not use the same or an equivalent method; to exclude from said candy trade all competitors who are unwilling to and who do not use the same or an equivalent method because the same is unlawful; to lessen competition in said candy trade, and to tend to create a monopoly of said candy trade in respondent and such other distributors of candy as use the same or an equivalent method, and to deprive the purchasing public of the benefit of free competition in said candy trade. The use of said method by the respondent has the tendency and capacity to eliminate from said candy trade all actual competitors, and to exclude therefrom all potential competitors, who do not adopt and use said method or an equivalent method.

PAR. 6. Many of said competitors of respondent are unwilling to adopt and use said method or any method involving a game of chance or the sale of a chance to win something by chance or any other method that is contrary to public policy.

PAR. 7. The aforementioned method, acts and practices of the respondent are all to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors, as hereinabove alleged. Said method, acts, and practices constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914.

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

ners of the Commission theretofore duly designated by it, and said testimony and other evidence were duly recorded and filed in the office of the Commission. Thereafter, this proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on said complaint, the answer thereto, testimony and other evidence, briefs in support of the complaint and in opposition thereto, and the oral arguments of Henry C. Lank, counsel for the Commission, and Emmett G. Lenihan, counsel for the respondent; and the Commission, having duly considered the matter and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. The respondent, Imperial Candy Company, is a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Washington, with its principal office and place of business located in the city of Seattle, State of Washington. Respondent is now, and for several years last past has been, engaged in the manufacture of candy in the city of Seattle and in the sale and distribution thereof to retail and wholesale dealers and jobbers located in the State of Washington and in the States of Oregon, Montana, Idaho, California, Arizona, New Mexico, Utah, Wyoming, and in the Territories of Alaska and the Hawaiian Islands. It causes the said candy when sold to be shipped or transported from its principal place of business in the State of Washington to purchasers thereof in Washington and in the other States and Territories of the United States, as mentioned above. In so carrying on said business, respondent is and has been engaged in interstate commerce and is and has been engaged in active competition with other corporations and with partnerships and individuals engaged in the manufacture of candy and in the sale and distribution thereof in commerce between and among the various States and Territories of the United States, as mentioned above.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of its business, as described in paragraph 1 hereof, respondent sells and has sold to wholesale and retail dealers, as above described, certain assortments of candy so packed and assembled as to involve, or which are designed to involve, the use of a lottery scheme when sold and distributed to the consumers thereof.

One of said assortments is composed of a number of boxes of assorted chocolate candies, together with a device commonly called a "punchboard." The boxes of candy contained in said assortment are distributed to the consuming public by means of said punchboard in the following manner: The sales by means of said punchboard are 5¢ each, and when a punch is made from said board a number is disclosed. The numbers begin with 1 and continue to the number of punches there are on the board, but the numbers are not arranged in numerical sequence. The board bears a statement or statements informing the prospective customer as to which numbers receive a box of candy. The purchaser of the last punch on the board receives a specified box of candy. A purchaser who does not qualify by obtaining one of the numbers calling for one of the boxes of candy, or by punching the last number on the board, receives nothing for his money other than the privilege of punching a number from the board. The boxes of candy are worth more than 5¢ each, and a purchaser who obtains one of the numbers calling for a box of candy receives the same for the price of 5¢. The numbers on said board are effectively concealed from the purchasers or prospective purchasers until a punch or selection has been made and the particular punch separated from the board. The boxes of candy in said assortment are thus distributed to purchasers of punches from said board wholly by lot or chance, and the fact as to whether a purchaser receives one of the boxes of candy or nothing other than the privilege of punching a number from said board for his money is thus determined wholly by lot or chance.

PAR. 3. The candy assortments involving the lot or chance feature, as above described, are generally referred to in the candy trade or industry as "draw" or "deal" assortments. Assortments of candy without lot or chance features in connection with their resale to the public are generally referred to in the candy trade or industry as "straight" goods. These terms will be used hereafter in these findings to distinguish these separate types of assortments.

PAR. 4. The wholesale dealers or jobbers to whom respondent sells its assortments resell the same to retail dealers, and said retail dealers and the retail dealers to whom respondent sells direct expose said assortments for sale and sell said candy to the purchasing public in accordance with the sales plan as described above.

PAR. 5. All sales made by respondent, whether to wholesale dealers and jobbers or to retail dealers, are absolute sales and respondent retains no control over said assortments after they are delivered to the wholesale dealer or jobber or retail dealer. The assortments are assembled and packed in such manner that they are designed to be used and are used by the retail dealer for distribution to the purchasing public by lot or chance without alteration or rearrangement.

In the sale and distribution to jobbers and wholesale dealers for resale to retail dealers and to retail dealers direct the assortments of candy described in paragraph 2 hereof, respondent has knowledge that said candy will be resold to the purchasing public by retail dealers by lot or chance, and it packs such candy in the way and manner described so that without alteration, addition or rearrangement thereof it may be resold to the public by lot or chance by said retail dealers.

PAR. 6. There are in the United States many manufacturers of candy competing with respondent in the territory served by respondent who do not manufacture and sell "draw" or "deal" assortments of candy and who sell their "straight" goods in interstate commerce in competition with the "draw" or "deal" assortments. The sale or distribution of candy by retail dealers by lot or chance has the capacity and tendency to and does decrease the sale of candy sold without any sales plan or device involving a lottery or game of chance.

Several witnesses testified, and the Commission finds, that customers coming into retail establishments and desiring candy similar to that distributed by respondent would take chances or make purchases by means of said push cards or punchboards, and that in such cases when unsuccessful in obtaining candy by means of said push card or punchboard some of such customers would then purchase candy as a "straight" purchase and without the use of the lottery device; that the gambling feature connected with the sale of respondent's assortment, as described above, was attractive to customers; and that before making "straight" purchases it was not unusual for customers to endeavor to procure the candy desired by means of such lottery devices rather than to make a "straight" purchase.

PAR. 7. The sale and distribution of "draw" or "deal" assortments of candy, or of candy which has connected with its sale to the public the means or opportunity of obtaining a box of candy as a prize or becoming a winner by lot or chance, teaches and encourages gambling and is in violation of various municipal ordinances and regulations and various State statutes and constitutions. The sale and distribution of candy by retailers by the methods described herein is the sale and distribution of candy by lot or chance and constitutes a lottery or gaming device, and the Commission finds that the sale and distribution of assortments of candy as described herein provides retail merchants with a means of violating the laws of the several states. Competitors who refuse to or who do not sell candy so packed and assembled that it can be resold to the public by lot or chance are put to a disadvantage in competing with respondent and with others employing similar methods to those described herein. Because the "draw" or "deal" assortments are attractive to customers purchasing from retail dealers, the Commission finds that trade is diverted to respondent and others using similar methods from competitors who do not use such methods. The use of such methods by respondent in the sale and distribution of its candy is prejudicial and injurious to the public and to respondent's competitors, and has resulted in the diversion of trade to respondent from its said competitors, and is a restraint upon and a detriment to the freedom of fair and legitimate competition in the candy industry.

PAR. 8. An officer of the respondent corporation testified, and the Commission finds, that respondent's total annual volume of sales is approximately $750,000, of which approximately 60 percent represents sales to customers outside of the State of Washington. Between 10 percent and 15 percent of respondent's total sales consists of assortments of candy with which a punchboard is furnished.

PAR. 9. The Commission further finds that the sale and distribution in interstate commerce of assortments of candy so packed and assembled as to enable retail dealers, without alteration, addition or rearrangement, to resell the same to the consuming public by lot or chance, is contrary to public policy.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of respondent, Imperial Candy Company, a corporation, under the conditions and circumstances set forth in the foregoing findings of fact, are all to the prejudice of the public and respondent's competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

This proceeding having been heard by the Federal Trade Commission upon the complaint of the commission, the answer of respondent, testimony and other evidence taken before Charles P. Vicini and Henry M. White, Examiners of the Commission theretofore duly designated by it, in support of the allegations of said complaint and in opposition thereto, briefs filed herein, and oral arguments of Henry C. Lank, counsel for the Commission, and Emmett

G. Lenihan, counsel for the respondent; and the Commission having made its findings as to the facts and its conclusion that said respondent has violated the provisions of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and other purposes."

It is ordered, That the respondent, Imperial Candy Company, a corporation, its officers, representatives, agents, and employees, in connection with the offering for sale, sale, and distribution in interstate commerce of candy, do forthwith cease and desist from:

1. Selling and distributing to jobbers and wholesale dealers for resale to retail dealers, or to retail dealers direct, candy so packed and assembled that sales of such candy to the general public are to be made, or may be made, by means of a lottery, gaming device, or gift enterprise.

2. Supplying to or placing in the hands of wholesale dealers and jobbers or retail dealers assortments of candy which are used, or which may be used, without alteration or rearrangement of the contents of such assortments, to conduct a lottery, gaming device, or gift enterprise in the sale or distribution of the candy contained in said assortments to the public.

3. Packing or assembling in the same assortment of candy for sale to the public at retail boxes of candy, together with a device commonly called a "punchboard," which punchboard is for use, or which may be or is designed to be used, in distributing or selling said candy to the public at retail.

4. Furnishing to retail and wholesale dealers and jobbers a device commonly called a "punchboard," either with assortments of candy or separately, bearing a legend or legends or statements informing the purchasing public that the candy is being sold to the public by lot or chance or in accordance with a sales plan which constitutes a lottery, gaming device, or gift enterprise.

It is further ordered, That respondent, Imperial Candy Company, a corporation, shall, within 30 days after service upon it of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which it has complied with the order to cease and desist hereinabove set forth.

OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 28, 1914*Docket 2542. Complaint, Mar. 17, 1936¹—Decision, July 10, 1937*

Where an individual engaged, under several trade names, in manufacture, sale, and distribution of athletic goods, publication of a periodical devoted to development of health and strength, and sale of a course of physical training through the mail to customers throughout the United States, in substantial competition with other individuals, etc., engaged in sale and distribution in interstate commerce of athletic appliances and courses in physical training or culture, including among his said competitors those who sell such courses and apparatus and do not misrepresent their products and publish misleading and deceptive advertisements or in any manner unfairly disparage their competitors; in soliciting sale of and selling his said commodities as above described—

- (a) Set forth in advertisements two "Before and After" pictures of himself, together with statement that he had increased his weight from 210 to 250 pounds by use of York bar-bell exercises, and created thereby impression that decided development of his physique was due entirely to use of a system of training and use of bar-bells, facts being the "before" picture was taken just after a serious illness caused by an automobile accident and which had reduced his weight by about 40 pounds, and substantial part of gain in weight and development was due to his recovery therefrom, and "after" picture had been so retouched as to cause muscles to appear in stronger relief and give impression of greater strength than was apparent in the other;
- (b) Set forth in his "Strength and Health" periodical, picture of man of unusual muscular development, together with words "What would you give to have a body like this? * * * The wonderful strength athletes turned out by the famous York System of Physical Training are the amazement of the body building world today. They came as ordinary fellows but finished stars," with result that impression was created that phenomenal development disclosed was result of his said training course, notwithstanding fact picture was that of a foreign athlete who had never practiced said individual's system and flourished many years before individual in question entered upon business of physical training;
- (c) Set forth, in catalogs widely circulated among customers and prospective customers, and among depictions of athletes using aforesaid York bar-bells, "Before and After" pictures of one Joe Miller, depicting said individual as a boy and young man, and accompanied with words "The story of this pupil is an everyday occurrence among York bar-bell stu-

AMENDED COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission having reason to believe that Robert C. Hoffman, trading as York Bar Bell Company, Strength and Health Publishing Co., and as York Athletic Supply Company, has been and is using unfair methods of competition in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in said act, and it appearing to said Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest hereby issues its amended complaint stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent, Robert C. Hoffman, is an individual trading under the respective names and styles of York Bar Bell Company, Strength and Health Publishing Co., and as York Athletic Supply Company, with his principal office and place of business located at York, in the State of Pennsylvania. He is now and for more than one year last past has been engaged in the manufacture of athletic goods and in the sale and distribution of same between and among various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia; in the publication of a periodical devoted to development of health and strength entitled, "Strength and Health," which is circulated widely in interstate commerce; and in the sale of a series of lessons in physical culture, all of which are advertised in said periodical and elsewhere, and which lessons are distributed through the mails in interstate commerce. He causes said products, when sold, to be shipped from his place of business in the State of Pennsylvania to purchasers thereof located in a State or States of the United States other than the State of Pennsylvania, and in the District of Columbia. In the course and conduct of his business, the said respondent was, and is, at all times herein referred to, in competition with other individuals, firms, partnerships, and corporations likewise engaged in the sale and distribution, in interstate commerce, of similar commodities.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of his business as described in paragraph 1 hereof, respondent, in soliciting the sale of and selling his said commodities in interstate commerce, used the following methods and practices:

(a) Caused two portraits of himself to appear in advertisements and advertising matter, one of which was a photograph taken just after a serious illness which had reduced his weight by about forty pounds, and the other of a photograph taken some twenty weeks later, together with a statement that he had increased his weight from 210 to 250 pounds by the use of York bar-bell exercises; when in truth and in fact, a substantial part of the gain in weight was due to his recovery from illness;

(b) Caused the picture of the back of a man of unusual muscular development to appear in the periodical, "Strength and Health," accompanied by the words:

What would you give to have a body like this? * * * The wonderful strength athletes turned out by the famous York System of Physical Training are the amazement of the body building world today. They came as ordinary fellows but finished stars.

when in truth and in fact, the man whose back appears in the picture referred to is a European athlete whose picture has appeared in other publications, and whose muscular system was not developed by the York bar-bell system;

(c) In a catalogue widely circulated among customers and prospective customers, caused two portraits of one Joe Miller to appear among other portraits of athletes who use York bar-bells, one of such pictures representing Miller as a boy and the other as a young man, and accompanied by the words:

The story of this pupil is an everyday occurrence among York bar-bell students. It can be yours if you have the determination to get started.

when in truth and in fact, said Miller did not reach his development as a student of the York bar-bell system, but before taking it up had already made a championship record;

(d) In the same publication caused pictures of "Bob Hoffman's War Medals" to appear, conspicuous among which was a pictorial representation of the American Distinguished Service Cross; when in truth and in fact, the decoration referred to was never awarded to said Hoffman;

(e) In another advertisement, reference is made to the muscular development made by one Roger Eells, of Lisbon, Ohio, who, it was stated, "built himself from a sick man weighing 121 pounds to 162 pounds of powerful, shapely, muscular manhood. After he had failed with other systems he succeeded with York methods"; when in truth and in fact, neither of the two pictorial representations which accompanied such reading matter was a portrait of said Eells, although the language used and the combination of the portraits with the reading matter had the capacity and tendency to confuse, mislead, and deceive readers into the belief that said portraits were of said Eells;

(f) In the catalogue referred to, caused a pictorial representation of the building where his business is carried on to appear, having the words "York Bar Bell Co." in large and conspicuous letters across the top thereof; when in truth and in fact, said Hoffman does not occupy said building exclusively, but shares the same with another company, and the words "York Bar Bell Co." do not appear on the front as represented.

PAR. 3. In the course and conduct of his business as described in paragraph 1 hereof, the respondent, in a manner and form designed and well calculated to injure and to bring into disrepute generally competitors selling courses in physical training in commerce, among and between the various States of the United States, has been widely publishing, through the medium of the magazine "Strength and Health," which is published by the respondent and which is circulated by him throughout the various States of the United States and the District of Columbia, false, defamatory, and misleading statements purporting to be descriptive of the method of training taught by those of his competitors who sell courses for physical training and who in developing the physical strength of their pupils depend entirely upon exercises involving the resistance of one part of the body against another part. The respondent publishes from time to time in said magazine "Strength and Health" articles written by himself and by some of his employees which said articles are written for the purpose of disparaging and maligning said competitors. By making the false and misleading claim that no physical strength and development can be attained without the use of bar bells, dumbbells or other apparatus, respondent thereby implies and represents that the systems of training taught by those competitors who do not advocate the use of such dumbbells, bar bells, and other apparatus is of little or no value whatever; when in truth and in fact those systems of training which depend entirely upon certain resistance exercises and tensions of muscles without the use of any apparatus do develop physical strength as effectively as the system taught by respondent which requires the use of appliances manufactured and sold by him.

PAR. 4. The aforesaid false and misleading representations and the said defamatory and disparaging statements made in said periodical "Strength and Health" and elsewhere, as above alleged have the tendency and capacity to mislead and deceive the public into the false and erroneous belief that said statements and implications are true and that the various athletes whose portraits appear therein have been developed to their present extraordinary physical condition by the sole and exclusive use of the York Bar Bell Company's products and methods. As a direct consequence of the false, misleading and disparaging statements, made by the respondent as hereinabove set forth, a substantial number of the public has purchased a substantial number of training courses from the respondent, and athletic equipment. Further, said false and misleading statements and disparaging implications have the tendency and capacity to divert trade unfairly from competitors of respondent in like businesses to the respondent, and otherwise to injure said competitors who do not engage in unfair methods of competition.

PAR. 5. The above acts and things done by respondent are all to the injury and prejudice of the public and accomplish substantial injury to substantial competitors of respondent in commerce, within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914.

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

use of unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of the provisions of said act. After the issuance of said complaint and amended complaint and the filing of respondent's answer to the complaint and answer to the amended complaint, testimony and other evidence in support of the allegations of said complaint and amended complaint were introduced by William L. Pencke, attorney for the Commission, before Robert S. Hall, an examiner of the Commission, theretofore duly designated by it, and in opposition to the allegations of the complaint and the amended complaint by Herbert S. Ward, attorney for the respondent, and said testimony and other evidence were duly recorded and filed in the office of the Commission. Thereafter the proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on the said complaint and amended complaint and the respective answers thereto, testimony and other evidence, briefs in support of the complaint and amended complaint, and in opposition thereto, and the oral arguments of counsel aforesaid; and the Commission having duly considered the same, being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent, Robert C. Hoffman, is an individual trading under the respective names and styles of York Bar Bell Company, Strength and Health Publishing Co., and as York Athletic Supply Company, with his principal office and place of business located at York in the State of Pennsylvania. He is now and for more than one year last past has been engaged in the manufacture of athletic goods and in the sale and distribution of the same in the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia; in the publication of a periodical devoted to the development of health and strength entitled, "Strength and Health," which is circulated widely throughout the United States; and in the sale of a course of physical training, likewise sold and distributed through the mails to customers throughout the United States. Respondent causes his said athletic goods when sold to be shipped from his place of business in Pennsylvania to purchasers thereof located in States other than the State of Pennsylvania and in the District of Columbia. The respondent is in substantial competition with other individuals, firms, copartnerships, and corporations likewise engaged in the sale and distribution in interstate commerce of athletic appliances and courses in physical training or culture.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of his business as described in paragraph 1 hereof, respondent, in soliciting the sale of and selling his said commodities as aforesaid, used the following methods and practices:

(a) Caused two portraits of himself to appear in advertisements, one of which was a photograph taken just after a serious illness which had reduced his weight by about forty pounds, and the other of a photograph taken some twenty weeks later, together with a statement that he had increased his weight from 210 to 250 pounds by the use of York bar-bell exercises;

(b) Caused the picture of the back of a man of unusual muscular development to appear in the periodical, "Strength and Health," accompanied by the words:

What would you give to have a body like this? * * * The wonderful strength athletes turned out by the famous York System of Physical Training are the amazement of the body building world today. They came as ordinary fellows but finished stars.

(c) In a catalogue widely circulated among customers and prospective customers, caused two portraits of one Joe Miller to appear among other portraits of athletes who use York bar-bells, one of such pictures representing Miller as a boy and the other as a young man, and accompanied by the words:

The story of this pupil is an everyday occurrence among York bar-bell students. It can be yours if you have the determination to get started.

(d) In the same publication caused pictures of "Bob Hoffman's War Medals" to appear, conspicuous among which is a pictorial representation of the American Distinguished Service Cross;

(e) In another advertisement, reference is made to the muscular development made by one Roger Eells of Lisbon, Ohio, who, it was stated, "built himself from a sick man weighing 121 pounds to 162 pounds of powerful, shapely, muscular manhood. After he had failed with other systems he succeeded with York methods";

(f) In the catalogue referred to, caused a pictorial representation of the building where his business is carried on to appear, having the words "York Bar Bell Co." in large and conspicuous letters across the top thereof.

PAR. 3. In the course and conduct of his business, the respondent, in a manner and form designed and well calculated to injure and to bring into disrepute generally competitors selling courses in physical training in commerce, among and between the various States of the United States, has been widely publishing, through the medium of said magazine, "Strength and Health," false, defamatory, and misleading statements purporting to be descriptive of the method of training taught by those of his competitors who sell courses for physical training and who in developing the physical strength of their pupils depend entirely upon exercises involving the resistance of one part of the body against another part. The respondent publishes from time to time in said magazine, "Strength and Health," articles written by himself and by some of his employees which said articles are written for the purpose of disparaging and maligning said competitors. By making the false and misleading claim that no physical strength and development can be attained without the use of bar bells, dumbbells or other apparatus, respondent thereby implies and represents that the systems of training taught by those competitors who do not advocate the use of such dumbbells, bar bells and other apparatus is of little or no value whatever.

PAR. 4. In the use of the "Before and After" pictures of himself the respondent creates the impression that the decided development of his physique is due entirely to the use of his system of training and the use of bar bells, when in fact a substantial part of the gain in weight and development was due to his recovery from an illness caused by an automobile accident. Moreover, the "After" picture alone was retouched in such a manner that the muscles appeared in stronger relief and gave the impression of greater strength than is apparent in the "Before" picture.

In using the picture of the back of a man of unusual development, and the descriptive text accompanying the picture, the impression is created that the phenomenal development of the back muscles is the result of respondent's training course. It was shown, however that the picture is one of a foreign athlete who never practiced respondent's system and who in fact flourished many years before the respondent entered upon the business of physical training.

Again, in using the "Before and After" pictures of one Joe Miller, the reader and prospective customer of respondent is led to believe that the decided and unusual development of Miller was due exclusively to respondent's course of training. No mention is made in the descriptive text of the facts that when the first picture of Joe Miller was taken he was an undeveloped boy of 14 years of age, and that the second picture was made when he had reached physical maturity; nor that Joe Miller had trained for a number of years with other teachers and had taken other physical training courses and was an athlete of some reputation at the time he commenced using respondent's course and apparatus.

Findings

25 F. T. C.

Conspicuous in the advertisement picturing the respondent with his "War Medals" there appears the picture of the American Distinguished Service Cross. Although the respondent rendered valiant service as a soldier in the United States army during the World War and did in fact receive numerous decorations for bravery, and although he was recommended for the Distinguished Service Cross, it was not awarded to him because the War Department ruled that the particular feat of gallantry performed by respondent was not of such a nature as to entitle him to the award of the Distinguished Service Cross; therefore the representation in the advertisement that he had in fact received said decoration was not in accordance with the facts.

The respondent published several advertisements in his said magazine, "Strength and Health," containing statements by one Roger Eells and other individuals testifying to the beneficial results achieved through training with respondent's equipment. These advertisements are accompanied by pictures of athletes, and the reader is led to believe that such pictures are of the persons about whom the story is written. In fact, the pictures are those of professional athletes who are in respondent's employ, yet the text fails to indicate that these pictures have no connection with the story about the individuals named in the advertisement.

One of the advertisements in respondent's catalog contains a picture of the building owned by respondent. Across the entire length of said building appears the sign "York Bar Bell Company." There was in fact no such sign on the building at the time the picture was taken. Said inscription was superimposed on the picture at the time the catalog was prepared for publication, and the impression is created that the entire building is occupied by the York Bar Bell Company alone, whereas the building housed not only the offices of the York Bar Bell Company and Strength and Health Publishing Company, but also of the York Oil Burner Company, another enterprise owned by respondent. A small sign near the entrance contains the names of all three companies; but it does not appear in the picture.

Under the pen name of Alan Carse, the respondent published an article in his magazine, "Strength and Health," entitled "The Old Athlete Tells a Secret." The writer relates the story of a meeting of a group of athletes in Atlantic City at which most of the greatest figures teaching physical training by mail were present. Among the speakers was one who is known for having won the title, "The World's Most Perfectly Developed Man" and who admitted that his system of training without any apparatus was largely the result of chance; that he was advertising a course of training and was beginning to receive orders and money, while he was still casting about for novel and different apparatus to be used in said course; that senders of the orders complained to the Post Office or the Federal Trade Commission; that the strong man had to do something and sent the course without apparatus; that to his surprise he eliminated most of the complaints; that while his system helped most of his pupils on the principle that any exercise is better than none, no great strength, such as his own, could be developed without the use of weights. That ever since then, he has sold his course without apparatus; that, after all it is business, that he still gets five dollars for a few sheets of paper as a last offer after everything else has failed and "Every dollar counts."

In other articles written by respondent and by some of his employees, false, disparaging and defamatory statements are made, in that they refer to a competitor's system as "dynamic hooley," imply that no strength can be developed without the use of apparatus, that the use of dumbbells or bar bells is absolutely essential to the development of strength and that no athlete can attain great strength without the use of apparatus.

Among respondent's competitors is one Charles Atlas who has his principal place of business in New York City. Said Atlas likewise sells a course in physical training by mail in interstate commerce. He has developed a system of training in which he employs no apparatus whatever and which he has called "Dynamic Tension." Said system is based entirely upon the resistance of one part of the body against another part. The records show that he has employed and developed his said system since he was seventeen years of age and has attained his own great strength by the use of his own methods without relying upon apparatus. Some years ago there was awarded to him in a competitive meeting of athletes in New York City the title of "The World's Most Perfectly Developed Man," and he is widely known throughout the athletic world by that title.

By reason of the said false, defamatory, and disparaging magazine articles, said competitor has suffered substantial injury in that trade has been diverted from him to the respondent and in that many pupils canceled their courses and demanded moneys refunded which they had paid for tuition.

PAR. 5. There are among the competitors of respondent, as set forth herein, other individuals, firms, corporations, or partnerships who sell physical training courses and physical culture apparatus in interstate commerce who do not misrepresent their products and who do not publish misleading and deceptive advertisements and who do not in any manner unfairly disparage their competitors.

PAR. 6. The acts and practices of respondent in using deceptive and misleading "Before and After" pictures; in using pictures of certain individuals calculated to deceive prospective purchasers of training courses into the belief that such individuals have attained their physical development through the use of respondent's courses when such is not the fact; in representing that respondent has been awarded the Distinguished Service Cross in connection with advertising his own prowess and accomplishments; in using pictures of professional athletes in connection with stories of pupils contained in advertisements of the respondent without indicating in any manner that said pictures are not the pictures of the individuals concerning whom the stories are written; in employing the picture of the building in which respondent does business and having across the top "York Bar Bell Company," when in fact such building is not exclusively for the athletic business; and in publishing false, defamatory, and unfairly disparaging articles about competitors, are all calculated to mislead and deceive and have and had the capacity and tendency and effect of misleading and deceiving and have misled and deceived a substantial portion of the purchasing and consuming public into the erroneous belief that all of said representations are true and into the purchase of respondent's products, trading system and publication on account of such belief.

As a result thereof trade is unfairly diverted to the respondent from competitors engaged in the sale in interstate commerce of physical training courses and physical culture apparatus, who truthfully represent their courses and their merchandise. Further, as a result thereof substantial injury has been and is being done by respondent to the purchasing public and to competition in commerce among and between the various States of the United States and the District of Columbia.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondent, Robert C. Hoffman, an individual doing business under the firm names and styles of York Bar Bell Company, Strength and Health Publishing Co., and as York Athletic Supply Company, are to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

This proceeding having been heard by the Federal Trade Commission upon the complaint and amended complaint of the Commission, the testimony and other evidence taken before Robert S. Hall, an examiner of the Commission, theretofore duly designated by it, in support of the allegations of said complaint and amended complaint and in opposition thereto, briefs filed herein, and oral arguments by William L. Pencke, counsel for the Commission and by Herbert S. Ward, counsel for the respondent, and the Commission having made its findings as to the facts and its conclusion that said respondent Robert C. Hoffman, trading as York Bar Bell Company, Strength and Health Publishing Company and York Athletic Supply Company, has violated the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

It is ordered, That the respondent, Robert C. Hoffman, individually and trading and doing business as York Bar Bell Company, Strength and Health Publishing Company and York Athletic Supply Company, his representatives, agents and employees, in connection with the offering for sale, sale and distribution in interstate commerce and in the District of Columbia, of courses in physical culture, of appliances for use in connection with physical culture and of the magazine "Strength and Health" do cease and desist:

From falsely representing in advertisements, catalogs, magazine articles, or any written or printed matter, through the use of pictures, photographs, cuts, "before and after" pictures or fabricated photographs or through any other means or device, or in any other manner;

(a) That the physical improvement of any person or pupil was due to the use of respondent Robert C. Hoffman's course of training, when such improvement is due wholly or partly to other causes;

(b) That the individuals whose pictures are reproduced are the individuals described or referred to in the accompanying text when such is not a fact;

(c) That respondent Robert C. Hoffman's athletic enterprises occupy an entire building when such building is in fact partly occupied by an enterprise other than the athletic business;

(d) That respondent Robert C. Hoffman has been awarded military decorations unless such decorations have actually been awarded to him;

(e) That the system or courses of training offered and sold by competitors of respondent are ineffectual or that said competitors misrepresent the facts concerning their own personal achievements and physical development, thereby unfairly disparaging and defaming said competitors.

It is further ordered, That the respondent shall, within 30 days after service upon him of this order file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which he has complied with this order.

IN THE MATTER OF
THE COOLERATOR COMPANYCOMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 26, 1914*Docket 2770. Complaint, Apr. 16, 1936—Decision, July 10, 1937*

Where a corporation engaged in distribution and sale of non-mechanical or ice refrigerators for resale by retail dealer purchasers thereof, in advertising its said non-mechanical refrigerators through large numbers of booklets and through folders, circulars, and other advertising literature distributed to members of the purchasing public in the various States or furnished to its customers for distribution to such public, and also through advertisements in newspapers and periodicals of general circulation—

(a) Represented that temperature of from 45 to 50 degrees is established or required standard necessary in all types of refrigerators for most satisfactory preservation of foods, and that in mechanical or electric refrigerators proper temperature for such preservation cannot be maintained without detrimentally disturbing natural composition of air and natural composition of food in the refrigerator, and that foods kept therein dehydrate to such an extent that their nutritive properties are impaired, whereas foods kept in the other do not, to any extent whatever, dehydrate, and that only with ice is it possible to produce proper temperature control of foods without disturbing natural composition of air or food;

Facts being, among others, there is no such established or required standard temperature necessary for satisfactory food preservation in all types of refrigerators, temperature range is not limited to that between 45 and 50 degrees, but food can properly be preserved at lower temperatures, maintained temperature of 50 degrees or lower is generally accepted by experts as adequate for proper preservation of perishable foods in edible condition for normal length of time in domestic refrigerators, proper temperatures for satisfactory preservation of usual foods in mechanical refrigerators for domestic use can generally be maintained without detrimentally disturbing natural composition thereof, foods stored therein for ordinary length of time do not dehydrate to such extent as to impair their nutritive properties, and while foods kept in non-mechanical refrigerators dehydrate to some extent, depending upon various factors, it is possible, through use of refrigerants other than ice, as well as ice, to produce proper food temperature control without disturbing natural composition of air or food in the refrigerator to any harmful extent, and representations hereinabove set forth were, as thus indicated, too general, lacking in specific limitation, misleading, and, in some instances, not true;

(b) Represented that various gases used in electric refrigerators as part of refrigerant escape from coils in which contained, permeate food chamber, and have a deleterious effect on and taint foods contained in refrigerator, and that certain poisonous gases, such as sulphur dioxide and chlorine, are formed from decay of food stored in such refrigerators in such quantities that they have a harmful effect in tainting foods and reducing nutritive value thereof, whereas in non-mechanical refrigerators any poisonous gases formed from decay of foods are entirely absorbed by water from melting ice and carried away through drain pipes thereof, as contrasted with other in which they are not absorbed but remain in the ice cubes made in such refrigerators, and that gelatinous matter found in drain pipes of non-mechanical refrigerators is formed by absorption of gases emanating from food contained therein and carried away by water from the melting ice, and that in electric refrigerators ice cubes frozen therein contain same matter as is contained in drain pipe of the non-mechanical products;

Facts being, among others, that while there have been instances in which mechanical or electric refrigerating units have developed defects and refrigerant has escaped into food chamber and tainted food contained therein, such cases are relatively very infrequent, and various gases used as aforesaid do not generally escape from the coils as above set forth, there is generally no substantial decay or decomposition of foods stored in refrigerators holding a maintained temperature of 50 degrees or lower under usual conditions, type of refrigeration used has no bearing on formation of gases formed by decay and decomposition, it does not appear to have been scientifically established to what extent such gases are soluble in water, if at all, or to what extent they may be thus absorbed and carried away in drain pipe of the non-mechanical product, or be absorbed by water in ice cube trays or frost on cooling unit of the mechanical refrigerator, such gases do not form to any substantial or noticeable extent when temperatures are maintained at a point sufficient to inhibit bacterial growth and activity, and under such circumstances have no harmful effect in tainting foods or reducing their nutritive value, and it has not been scientifically determined to what extent contents of drain pipe of non-mechanical refrigerator are made up of gases and odors from food or from growth of bacteria, algae and molds in the pipe itself, and representations to effect that such matter may be found in ice cubes frozen in mechanical refrigerator are untrue and deficient in specific limitation; and

(c) Represented that users of electric refrigerators would not be able to eat food therefrom without tasting other foods stored in refrigerator at same time;

Facts being, that if two types of food are placed in refrigerator at the same time, namely, type of foods having characteristic and inherent odors constantly thrown off, irrespective of any process of decomposition or decay, and type of foods which, upon coming in contact with air, absorbs odors already contained therein, transference of odors from former to latter will take place to such extent that person consuming same may taste odor of the other, irrespective of type of refrigerator used, and it has not been scientifically determined to what extent such transference takes place in a non-mechanical or in a mechanical refrigerator, users of latter product will be able to consume food therein without tasting other foods therein stored, except as hereinabove noted, and many foods which do not absorb odors from others may be consumed by users of the electric or mechanical product without tasting others stored therein at same time;

With tendency and capacity to confuse and mislead public with respect to true facts as to the relative merits and operating factors of non-mechanical refrigerators and mechanical refrigerators, and into erroneous and mistaken beliefs that latter are undesirable and ineffective in use and harmful and dangerous to users thereof, and into purchase of its said non-mechanical product by reason of such beliefs thus induced, and thereby to unfairly divert trade to it from its competitors who do not make use of similar statements; to the injury of competition in commerce:

Held, That such acts and practices were to the prejudice of the public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition.

Belt & Wallace, of Chicago, Ill., for respondent.

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that The Coolerator Company, a corporation, hereinafter referred to as respondent, has been and now is using unfair methods of competition in commerce as "commerce" is defined in said act, and it appearing to the Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent, The Coolerator Company, is a corporation, organized, existing, and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Minnesota, with its principal office and place of business at 50th Avenue W. and Wadena, in the city of Duluth, State of Minnesota. Respondent is now, and has been for some time, engaged in the business of distributing and selling to dealers for resale, in commerce as herein set out, refrigerators using natural or artificial ice as the cooling element therein.

PAR. 2. Said respondent, being engaged in business as aforesaid, causes said refrigerators, when sold, to be transported from its office and principal place of business in the State of Minnesota to purchasers thereof located in various States of the United States other than the State of Minnesota and in the District of Columbia. There is now, and has been at all times since the organization of respondent company, a constant current of trade in commerce in said refrigerators so distributed and sold by the respondent, between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 3. Certain persons, partnerships, and corporations have been, and are now, engaged in offering for sale and selling, in commerce as hereinabove set out, refrigerators that depend for their cooling processes upon the use of ice that is placed therein for that purpose. Such refrigerators have been for many years commonly known in the trade and by the public as "non-mechanical" refrigerators and are generally so designated.

Certain persons, partnerships, and corporations have been, and are now, engaged in offering for sale and selling, in commerce as hereinabove set out, refrigerators that do not depend for their cooling processes upon the use of ice that is placed therein for that purpose. Such non-ice-using refrigerators are commonly known in the trade and by the public as "mechanical" refrigerators and are so designated. One type of such mechanical refrigerators depends for its cooling processes upon certain appliances, attachments, and equipment operated by currents of electricity. Mechanical refrigerators of this type are commonly known in the trade and by the public as "electric" refrigerators and are so designated. In recent years, many electric refrigerators have been sold to the public and are now in use in large numbers by the public. A substantial portion of the public has expressed, and actually has, a preference for such electric refrigerators over any other type of refrigerators and the number of said electric refrigerators in use and operation is rapidly increasing.

In the course and conduct of its said business respondent is now, and has been, in competition, in commerce among and between various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia, with other corporations and with partnerships and individuals likewise engaged in distributing and selling such nonmechanical refrigerators in said commerce and is also in competition in said commerce with corporations, partnerships, and individuals distributing and selling in such commerce said mechanical refrigerators, including said electric refrigerators. All of the sellers of the several types of refrigerators are, and have been, in competition, in commerce as hereinabove set out, between and among themselves as to each and all of said types of refrigerators.

PAR. 4. In such competition between the sellers of nonmechanical refrigerators and the sellers of electric refrigerators, one of the controlling influences upon the purchasing public is the popular opinion as to the comparative desirability, effectiveness, and safety in actual operation of the said two types of refrigerators.

The use of ice in refrigerators has long been practiced and its desirability, effectiveness, and safety, such as it may be, is well-known and understood by the purchasing public. Electric refrigerators were only recently invented and introduced into popular use. The public is not generally so well-informed as to the desirability, effectiveness, and safety of such electric refrigerators as it is with respect to these qualities in a nonmechanical refrigerator.

Sellers and distributors of nonmechanical, or ice-using refrigerators, are interested in, and engaged in, presenting to the purchasing public all available reasons or arguments against, or tending to lessen, the desirability, effectiveness, and safety of said electric refrigerators in actual use.

The use of said electric refrigerators destroys, to the extent of the use thereof, the demand for and sale of ice for use in refrigerators. The increasing sale of electric refrigerators has caused the sellers of nonmechanical refrigerators and the sellers of ice for use therein to attempt to create public sentiment adverse to the use of said electric refrigerators.

PAR. 5. To meet the needs of its customers, the same being sellers of non-mechanical refrigerators and sellers of ice for use therein, respondent has compiled, printed, and published a certain booklet of propaganda against the desirability, effectiveness, and safety of electric refrigerators. Said booklet purports to state certain facts which respondent claims to have discovered which, it represents, demonstrates that electric refrigerators are in actual use undesirable, ineffective, and unsafe in their effect upon food kept therein and upon persons eating such food. Respondent names and designates such booklet as "Why Ice is Best for Refrigeration." In order to make such propaganda effective in behalf of sellers of non-mechanical refrigerators and sellers of ice for use therein, respondent furnishes copies of said booklet to its customers to be placed by them, in such ways as they deem most effective, in the hands of members of the purchasing public so as to influence public opinion and create sales resistance against such electric refrigerators and to promote and increase the sale of said non-mechanical refrigerators. Respondent also causes the distribution of said booklet direct to the members of the purchasing public.

Practically all of the purchasers of non-mechanical refrigerators from the respondent are manufacturers or distributors of natural or artificial ice, who resell said refrigerators in connection with their sale of ice for use therein. In some instances, several manufacturers and distributors of ice have organized sales agencies, which agencies purchase said refrigerators from the respondent and resell them to the public for use.

The said booklet is furnished by the respondent to said purchasers, same being manufacturers or distributors of ice, and their respective sales agencies. As furnished to said purchasers, the booklets sometimes do not have imprinted thereon the respondent's name and address but do have imprinted the name and address of the respective purchaser who actually distributes the booklet to members of the public and actually sells respondent's refrigerators to members of the public.

In the ways hereinabove indicated and by reason of the facts above alleged, sellers of ice for use in non-mechanical refrigerators, as well as sellers of such refrigerators, have an interest adverse to the sale of electric refrigerators and are in practical effect in competition with such sellers of electric refrigerators along with the sellers of non-mechanical refrigerators. The purpose and effect of said booklet is the dissemination of misleading and disparaging propaganda in aid of the sale of non-mechanical refrigerators and of ice therefor.

PAR. 6. For the purpose and intent, and with the effect of disparaging electric refrigerators sold in commerce, as hereinabove set out, and for the purpose and with the intent and effect of promoting the sale in commerce, as aforesaid, of non-mechanical refrigerators and the sale of ice for use therein, the respondent in such booklet, designated as "Why Ice is Best for Refrigeration," by use of false and misleading statements or representations, has falsely represented, directly and by implication and inference, among other things:

1. That a temperature of from 45 to 50 degrees is the established or required standard temperature necessary to be obtained in all types of refrigerators for the most satisfactory preservation of foods;
2. That in mechanical or electric refrigerators the proper temperature for the preservation of foods cannot be maintained without detrimentally disturbing the natural composition of the air in the refrigerator and the natural composition of the food;
3. That the various gases used in electric refrigerators as part of the refrigerant escape from the coils in which they are contained, permeate the food chamber and have a deleterious effect on and taint the foods contained in said refrigerator;
4. That foods kept in electric refrigerators lose water, or dehydrate to such an extent that their nutritive properties are impaired, destroying essential parts of the chemical combination of various foods in their natural state;
5. That foods kept in non-mechanical refrigerators do not dehydrate or lose water, to any extent whatever.
6. That it is possible only with ice to produce the proper temperature control of foods without disturbing the natural composition of the air or food in the refrigerator, and that similar or comparable results can not be obtained by use of electric refrigerators;
7. That certain poisonous gases, such as sulphur dioxide and chlorine, are formed from the decay of foods stored in electric refrigerators in such quantities that said gases have a harmful effect in tainting foods and in reducing their nutritive value;
8. That in non-mechanical refrigerators any poisonous gases formed from decay of foods are entirely absorbed by the water from the melting ice and are carried away through the drain pipes thereof, but that in electric re-

refrigerators such poisonous gases are not absorbed, and said gases remain in the ice cubes made in said refrigerator;

9. That the gelatinous matter found in drain pipes of non-mechanical refrigerators is formed from gases emanating from food contained therein being absorbed and carried away by the water from the melting ice, and that the ice cubes frozen in an electric refrigerator contain the same matter as is claimed to be contained in the drain pipe of a non-mechanical refrigerator; and,

10. That the users of electric refrigerators will not be able to eat food therefrom, without tasting other food that was stored in the refrigerator at the same time.

PAR. 7. In truth and in fact a temperature of from 45 to 50 degrees is not an established or required standard temperature for the preservation of goods. Foods are generally better preserved at a temperature of from 40 to 45 degrees. In truth and in fact it is possible and practical to use electric refrigerators in such a manner that the proper temperature for the preservation of foods can be maintained without detrimentally disturbing the natural composition of the air in the refrigerator or the natural composition of the food therein. The various gases and liquids used as refrigerants in electric refrigerators do not escape from the coils in which they are contained, do not permeate the food chamber and do not have a deleterious effect on or taint the foods contained in electric refrigerators. In truth and in fact foods kept in electric refrigerators, and in the proper appliances and attachments furnished therewith, do not lose water or dehydrate to such an extent that their nutritive properties are impaired or that essential parts of their chemical combination in the natural state are destroyed. A great number of foods, when kept in an electric refrigerator, do not dehydrate to any noticeable or harmful extent. Foods kept in non-mechanical refrigerators do dehydrate or lose water to a certain extent. A proper temperature control of foods can be maintained with refrigerants other than ice, without disturbing the natural composition of the air or of the foods themselves. Poisonous gases, such as sulphur dioxide and chlorine, are not formed from the decay of foods stored in electric refrigerators in such quantities, if at all, that said gases have any harmful effect in tainting foods or have any harmful effect on the eaters of such foods. In truth and in fact no poisonous gases are formed from the decay of foods when the temperature of the refrigerator is properly controlled and such gases as may be formed from the decay of said foods are not harmful in the quantities found, and are not generally absorbed by the ice cubes made in said electric refrigerators. The gelatinous matter formed in the drain pipes of non-mechanical refrigerators is not formed from any gases thrown off by foods contained in said refrigerators. In truth and in fact the ice cubes made in an electric refrigerator do not contain the same gelatinous matter contained in the drain-pipe of a non-mechanical refrigerator. The users of electric refrigerators are able to eat food therefrom without tasting the other foods stored therein.

PAR. 8 The aforesaid false, misleading and disparaging representations so made in respondent's booklet, "Why Ice is Best for Refrigeration," as above alleged, have had, and now have, the tendency and capacity to mislead and deceive a substantial portion of the purchasing public into the false and erroneous beliefs that said statements are true and that electric refrigerators are undesirable, ineffective, and harmful in the ways alleged and are dangerous to the eaters of food kept in said refrigerators, and that the statements and representations made by respondent with reference to non-mechanical refrigerators and the results to be obtained from a use thereof are true. Further, said false and misleading statements and representations have the tendency and capacity to, and do, divert trade to the sellers of non-mechanical refrigerators, including the respondent and its customers, from sellers of electric refrigerators and induce the public to purchase non-mechanical refrigerators and ice to be used therein, in and because of such erroneous beliefs brought about as hereinabove set out. As a result thereof, substantial injury has been, and is now, being done by respondent to substantial competition in commerce among and between various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 9. The above and foregoing acts, practices and representations of the respondent have been, and are, all to the prejudice of the public and respondent's competitors, as aforesaid, and have been, and are, unfair methods of competition within the meaning and intent of Section 5 of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

thereto, testimony and other evidence in support of the allegations of said complaint were introduced by J. T. Welch, attorney for the Commission, before John J. Keenan, an examiner of the Commission, theretofore duly designated by it, and in opposition to the allegations of the complaint by William O. Belt and Robert K. Belt, Charles Aaron, and Franklin Raber, and Jay P. Taggart, attorneys for the respondent; and said testimony and other evidence were duly recorded and filed in the office of the Commission. Thereafter, a stipulation was entered into whereby it was stipulated and agreed that a statement of facts signed and executed by the respondent's counsel and W. T. Kelley, Chief Counsel for the Federal Trade Commission, subject to the approval of the Commission, may be taken as facts in this proceeding in addition to the testimony theretofore taken and that the said Commission may proceed upon such statement of facts and upon the evidence and testimony theretofore taken to make its report, stating its findings as to the facts and its conclusion based thereon and enter its order disposing of the proceeding without the presentation of argument or the filing of briefs. Thereafter, the proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on said complaint, the answer thereto, the testimony and other evidence and said stipulation as to the facts, said stipulation having been approved and accepted by the Commission, and the Commission having considered the same and being fully advised in the premises finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent, The Coolerator Company, is a corporation, organized in 1928 under the laws of the State of Minnesota as The Duluth Refrigerator Company. Its corporate name was subsequently changed to The Coolerator Company. Its principal office and place of business is located at Fiftieth Avenue, West and Wadena in the city of Duluth, State of Minnesota. Since its incorporation, it has been, and now is, engaged in the business of distributing and selling to retail dealers for resale refrigerators using natural or artificial ice as the cooling element therein.

PAR. 2. The Coolerator Company causes said refrigerators, when sold, to be transported from its office and principal place of business in the State of Minnesota, or from one of its warehouses, to purchasers thereof located in various States of the United States other than the State of Minnesota or other than the State of the origin of said shipment and in the District of Columbia. Respondent's customers are located in every State of the Union and in many foreign countries. The purchasers of said refrigerators in turn sell them to the members of the purchasing public for commercial and domestic use. The Coolerator Company has, at all times since its incorporation, maintained a constant current of trade in said refrigerators so distributed and sold by it in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia. In the year 1932, it sold approximately 9,000; in 1933, approximately 15,000; in 1934, approximately 35,000; in 1935, approximately 70,000; and from October 1, 1935 to July 1, 1936, approximately 85,000. The retail sale price of respondent's refrigerators designed for domestic use ranges from $30.00 to $175.00 per unit.

PAR. 3. There are two distinct types of refrigeration: one known as ice or non-mechanical refrigeration and the other as mechanical refrigeration. The refrigerators employing these two types of refrigeration are respectively referred to hereinafter as non-mechanical and mechanical refrigerators. In both types, the refrigeration is accomplished by use of an insulated cabinet in which the refrigerant is installed. In a non-mechanical refrigerator either natural or artificial ice is placed in a compartment known as the ice chamber. The melting of the ice absorbs the heat from the air as it circulates past the ice and through the food chamber. In a mechanical refrigerator, an apparatus known as a cooling unit or coil is installed in the food chamber and refrigeration is obtained by forcing a volatile gas under pressure through the coil. As this gas passes through the coil, it absorbs the heat from the air in the food chamber that comes in contact with the coil. Although mechanical refrigeration is a comparatively recent invention and has been in use a comparatively short period of time, it has developed in popularity and is widely used throughout the United States as a method of refrigeration. The manufacture and sale of various types of mechanical refrigerators has developed into a large industry. One type of such mechanical refrigerators depends upon certain appliances, attachments and equipment operated by electricity for its cooling processes.

PAR. 4. Other corporations have been, and are now, likewise engaged in offering for sale and selling refrigerators that depend upon the use of ice for their cooling processes and which retail for approximately the same amount as respondent's refrigerators. Among such are: Raney Refrigerator Company, Ice Cooling and Appliance Corporation, Progress Refrigerator Company, Tennessee Furniture Company, and McKee Refrigerator Company.

Other corporations have been, and are now, engaged in offering for sale and selling, refrigerators that depend upon the use of substances other than ice for their cooling processes and which retail from approximately $100.00 to $300.00 each. Among such are: Kelvinator Corporation, Frigidaire Corporation, General Electric Company, and Westinghouse Electric & Manufacturing Company.

The corporations and firms hereinabove named, and others not specifically named, which sell refrigerators, either non-mechanical or mechanical, ship said refrigerators, when orders therefor are received, from their respective places of business or warehouses to the purchasers thereof located in States other than the State in which said places of business or warehouses are located, or other than the State from which the respective shipments originate.

In the course and conduct of its business, The Coolerator Company is engaged in substantial competition, in commerce among and between the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia, with many corporations and with partnerships and individuals, including those herein named, likewise engaged in distributing and selling non-mechanical refrigerators in said commerce; and is also in substantial competition, in said commerce, with many corporations, partnerships, and individuals, including those herein named, likewise engaged in distributing and selling in such commerce mechanical or electric refrigerators.

PAR. 5. In such competition between the sellers of non-mechanical refrigerators and the sellers of mechanical or electric refrigerators, one of the controlling influences upon the purchasing public is the popular opinion as to the comparative desirability, effectiveness and safety in actual operation of the two types of refrigerators. The use of ice in refrigerators has long been practiced and its desirability, effectiveness and safety as a method of refrigeration are well known and understood by the purchasing public. Because of its comparatively recent invention, the public is not generally so well informed as to the desirability, effectiveness and safety of mechanical or electric refrigerators as it is with respect to these qualities in non-mechanical refrigerators.

PAR. 6. In advertising the non-mechanical refrigerators which it sells, and for the purpose of promoting the sale of said refrigerators by retail dealers, The Coolerator Company has made use of booklets, folders, circulars and other advertising literature, some of which it distributes to members of the purchasing public located in the various States of the United States, and some of which it furnishes to its customers, to be by them placed in the hands of members of the purchasing public. It has also made use of advertisements inserted in newspapers and magazines having a general circulation throughout the various States of the United States. It has also, in the past, made use of a certain booklet entitled "Why Ice is Best for Refrigeration." This booklet was first published and distributed by the respondent in the year 1930 and was also published in each succeeding year until 1935. In the fall of 1935, the respondent discontinued the publication of said booklet and since that time no copies have been published by it. The distribution of said booklet was discontinued about the middle of the year 1936 and has not been resumed. Approximately 150,000 copies of this booklet were published and distributed each year.

In said booklet entitled "Why Ice is Best for Refrigeration," the respondent, by direct statement and by implication, made the following representations:

1. That a temperature of from 45 to 50 degrees is the established or required standard temperatures necessary to be obtained in all types of refrigerators for the most satisfactory preservation of foods;
2. That in mechanical or electric refrigerators the proper temperature for the preservation of foods cannot be maintained without detrimentally disturbing the natural composition of the air in the refrigerator and the natural composition of the food;
3. That the various gases used in electric refrigerators as part of the refrigerant escape from the coils in which they are contained, permeate the food chamber and have a deleterious effect on and taint the foods contained in said refrigerator;
4. That foods kept in electric refrigerators lose water, or dehydrate to such an extent that their nutritive properties are impaired, destroying essential parts of the chemical combination of various foods in their natural state;
5. That foods kept in non-mechanical refrigerators do not dehydrate or lose water, to any extent whatever;
6. That it is possible only with ice to produce the proper temperature control of foods without disturbing the natural composition of the air or food in the refrigerator, and that similar or comparable results can not be obtained by use of electric refrigerators;
7. That certain poisonous gases, such as sulphur dioxide and chlorine are formed from the decay of foods stored in electric refrigerators in such quantities that said gases have a harmful effect in tainting foods and in reducing their nutritive value;
8. That in non-mechanical refrigerators any poisonous gases formed from decay of foods are entirely absorbed by the water from the melting ice and are carried away through the drain pipes thereof, but that in electric refrigerators such poisonous gases are not absorbed, and said gases remain in the ice cubes made in said refrigerators;

9. That the gelatinous matter found in drain pipes of non-mechanical refrigerators is formed from gases emanating from food contained therein being absorbed and carried away by the water from the melting ice, and that the ice cubes frozen in an electric refrigerator contain the same matter as is claimed to be contained in the drain pipe of a non-mechanical refrigerator;

10. That the users of electric refrigerators will not be able to eat food therefrom, without tasting other food that was stored in the refrigerator at the same time.

Certain other advertising literature distributed by the respondent in commerce among and between the various States of the United States contains language which may serve as representations to the same effect as some of the representations hereinabove set out.

PAR. 7. A temperature of from 45 to 50 degrees Fahrenheit is not the established or required standard temperature necessary to be obtained in all types of refrigerators for the most satisfactory preservation of food and those temperatures have not been established as a standard in the industry or among doctors and food experts generally. At this time, there appears to be no established or required standard temperature necessary to be maintained in all types of refrigerators for the most satisfactory preservation of food. Doctors and food experts are not now entirely in accord on the question of the temperatures required in order to most satisfactorily preserve food stored in refrigerators. Such temperatures as will produce the desired preservation of food are not limited, however, to the range between 45 to 50 degrees Fahrenheit and food can properly be preserved at temperatures lower than 45 degrees Fahrenheit. The temperature necessary to preserve food depends, in part, upon the character of the food and the length of time it is to be preserved. Some foods will keep longer under a given temperature than other foods. It is generally understood and agreed by experts that a maintained temperature of 50 degrees Fahrenheit or lower will properly preserve perishable foods in an edible condition for the length of time that such foods are ordinarily kept for human consumption in a domestic refrigerator. Spoilage of food, so far as its edibility is concerned, takes place when it is dehydrated to such an extent that it becomes desiccated, or when there is excessive bacterial growth in or on the food. The rate and extent of dehydration, as well as of bacterial growth, depend upon the character of the food, the temperature, the relative humidity and the length of time the food is kept. A maintained temperature of 50 degrees Fahrenheit or lower is generally sufficient to retard the growth of bacteria and preserve perishable foods in an edible condition for the length of time that such foods are ordinarily kept for human consumption in a domestic refrigerator. The representation to the effect that a temperature of from 45 to 50 degrees is the established or required standard temperature necessary to be obtained in all types of refrigerators for the most satisfactory preservation of food is susceptible of the mistaken meaning that those temperatures have been established as a standard in the industry and that a temperature of 45 degrees is the minimum temperature at which foods may properly be preserved in a refrigerator contrary to the facts.

PAR. 8. The natural composition of air is a mixture of nitrogen, oxygen, carbon dioxide, certain rare gases and water vapor. The water vapor or moisture content is the only factor involved in this proceeding. Air containing the maximum amount of moisture it can hold at a given temperature is said to be saturated or at 100% relative humidity. Air containing less moisture than it is capable of holding is unsaturated. Its degree of saturation at a given temperature is expressed by the ratio of its actual moisture content to its maximum possible moisture content divided by 100 and is expressed as percent relative humidity.

The quantity of water vapor or moisture content in the air is variable, depending upon the temperature of the air, the amount of available moisture and the temperature of the surrounding medium with which the air comes in contact. Until air reaches the saturation point, it has a tendency to absorb moisture from any moisture laden substance with which it comes in contact if the temperature of the substance is at the temperature of the air or at a higher temperature than the air. The higher the temperature of the air, the greater its capacity to hold moisture. Further, at any temperature, liquid water if it is at the same temperature or warmer than the surrounding air can evaporate into the surrounding air mixture until such air becomes saturated. Such process of taking up moisture by air is generally known as dehydration since this is the effect on the substance from which the water is taken. For the purpose of determining moisture loss the temperature of the air in a refrigerator is principally controlled by the temperature of the cooling medium, the temperature of the food and the temperature of any air coming into the refrigerator when opened. The cooling medium of a refrigerator, being colder than the air which passes it, chills the air and in so doing reduces its capacity to hold moisture. The air leaving the cooling element is at or near saturation (100% relative humidity) but it carries less moisture than it did before contacting the cooling element because it is at a lower temperature. The surplus moisture is condensed on the surface of the cooling element (as water when ice is used or as water or frost when a mechanically cooled coil is used).

As the air passes through the refrigerator, it warms up. In so doing it regains its capacity to carry moisture and its relative humidity decreases. As this air passes over foods containing moisture, it picks up moisture in an amount which is dependent upon its relative humidity, the difference between the temperatures of the substances it contacts and the type and area of the substances or food surfaces exposed. Wet surfaces and leafy foods such as lettuce or celery give up moisture readily while foods protected by rinds or heavy skins give up moisture slowly.

Air at any given temperature requires a greater quantity of water to raise it from any given degree of saturation (percent relative humidity) to any other given degree of saturation than does air at any lower temperature and the same degree of saturation. For example: At a temperature of 40 degrees Fahrenheit and 40% relative humidity, air can hold approximately 0.002 lb. of water per lb. of dry air. At saturation point air at the same temperature can hold approximately 0.00525 lb. of water per lb. of dry air. In raising the relative humidity from 40% to saturation, 0.00325 lb. of water per lb. of dry air must be added.

At a temperature of 50 degrees Fahrenheit and 40% relative humidity, air can hold approximately 0.0031 lb. of water per lb. of dry air. At saturation air of the same temperature can hold approximately 0.00765 lb. of water per lb. of dry air. In raising the relative humidity from 40% to saturation, 0.00455 lb. of water per lb. of dry air must be added. By increasing the initial relative humidity of the 50 degrees Fahrenheit air to 50%, we find that the air can hold 0.0038 lb. of water per lb. of dry air. In raising the relative humidity from 50% to saturation, 0.00385 lb. of water per pound of dry air must be added. Thus, air at 50 degrees Fahrenheit and 50% relative humidity requires more water to raise it to saturation than does air at 40 degrees Fahrenheit and 40% relative humidity. The amount of water foods in a refrigerator can lose depends also upon how fast the water is evaporating from the foods (rate of evaporation) and the length of time the foods are kept in the refrigerator. The rate of evaporation from a substance depends principally upon the difference between the vapor pressure of the water in the substance and the vapor pressure of the moisture in the air. The vapor pressure of the water in the substance is generally the same as the temperature of the substance. The vapor pressure of the air is its saturation moisture content (dew point temperature). When foods are placed in a refrigerator for a sufficient time to cool down to the temperature of the air, the vapor pressure of the water in the substance and the vapor pressure of the moisture in the air become substantially equal.

Because of the operation of the foregoing principles, the amount of moisture that can be taken up to bring air from any degree of saturation to its saturation point depends on the temperature of the air, its relative humidity and the rate of evaporation. In view of the foregoing, under certain conditions, there will be no greater dehydration in a mechanical refrigerator than in a non-mechanical refrigerator even though the relative humidity of the air therein is lower, because the differences in the vapor pressures of the substances and the vapor pressures of the air in the two types of refrigerators will be substantially equal.

Dehydration of food takes place in both mechanical or electric refrigerators and non-mechanical or ice refrigerators to a varying amount, depending upon the various factors herein set out. Excessive dehydration of food affects its appearance and its texture, and makes it less appetizing, even though it does not affect its nutritive properties. In an effort to overcome the factor of dehydration, manufacturers of mechanical or electric refrigerators have provided covered containers which are placed in the food chamber. These containers are not, however, standard equipment in all makes or types of mechanical or electric refrigerators. Foods that are readily susceptible to dehydration, like leaf vegetables, are placed in these covered containers, when provided, so that the air as it circulates in the food chamber does not come in direct contact with that food. By the use of these covered containers the dehydration of foods stored therein has been practically eliminated, and the dehydration that takes place in food stored in covered containers is substantially less than it would be if the same foods were stored in the open food compartments of a mechanical or electric refrigerator, or a non-mechanical or ice refrigerator. Such containers may also readily be used in non-mechanical or ice refrigerators with comparable results.

The representations of the respondent set out in sub-sections 2, 4, 5, and 6 of paragraph 6 hereof are too general, are lacking in specific limitation, are misleading and, in some instances, are not true. Proper temperatures for the satisfactory preservation of foods usually kept in mechanical refrigerators for domestic use can generally be maintained without detrimentally disturbing the natural composition of the food. Foods stored in mechanical refrigerators for the length of time that foods are ordinarily and customarily stored in refrigerators when intended for domestic use do not dehydrate or lose water to such an extent as to impair their nutritive properties or to destroy the essential parts of the chemical combinations thereof. Foods kept in non-mechanical refrigerators do dehydrate or lose water to some extent, depending upon the factors herein set out. Refrigeration by use of ice as a refrigerant or by use of other refrigerants does disturb the natural composition of the air in a refrigerator. The extent of this disturbance depends upon the variable factors above referred to, but in refrigerators of both types, the extent of this disturbance is not generally sufficient to affect the natural composition of the food stored in the refrigerator to such an extent as to make it undesirable for human consumption. It is possible by use of refrigerants other than ice, as well as by use of ice, to produce the proper temperature control of foods without disturbing the natural composition of the air or the food in the refrigerator to any harmful extent.

The refrigerants most commonly used in mechanical or electric refrigerators are: sulphur dioxide, SO_2 , dichloro diflura methane, CCl_2F_2 , commonly known as Freon or Freon₁₂, dichlorotetra fluor-ethane, $\text{C}_2\text{Cl}_2\text{F}_4$, or certain derivatives, and dichloro methane DH_2Cl_2 , commonly known as Carrene. The refrigerant most commonly used is sulphur dioxide which is a corrosive and suffocating gas. However, in recent years, certain of the manufacturers of mechanical or electric refrigerators have used and are now using Freon, or other derivatives, and Carrene, none of which are corrosive or suffocating gases, as refrigerants. These refrigerants, when placed in the refrigerating unit of a mechanical or electric refrigerator, are under pressure as they pass through the cooling unit on the inside of the food chamber and if there is any defect in the tubing or in the connection from carelessness or misuse, these refrigerants may be forced out into the food chamber. There have been instances in which mechanical or electric refrigerating units have developed defects either as a result of construction or of improper use and in which the refrigerant has escaped into the food chamber and tainted the food contained therein. Such cases, however, are very infrequent considering the number of units in use.

The various gases used as refrigerants in mechanical or electric refrigerators do not generally escape from the coils into the food chamber and taint the foods contained therein.

The representation stating or implying that the various gases used as refrigerants in mechanical or electric refrigerators escape from the coils into the food chamber and taint the foods contained therein is too general and is deficient in specific limitation as to the conditions under which the refrigerant may escape.

PAR. 9. There is generally no substantial decay or decomposition of foods that are stored in refrigerators holding a maintained temperature of 50 degrees Fahrenheit or lower when such storage is for the relatively short period of time usually encountered in the use of refrigerators for domestic use. At maintained temperatures below 50 degrees Fahrenheit, bacterial growth and activity are generally inhibited and the lower the temperature, the greater the capacity to inhibit such activity. Bacterial growth or activity is the primary cause of the decay or decomposition of food and various gases are formed by such decay and decomposition. The type of refrigeration used has no bearing on the formation of such gases. The extent to which these gases may be formed depends on the length of time the food has been separated from its source, upon the temperature at which it has been preserved, and upon the relative humidity of the air. Some of these gases are poisonous. The nature of the gases thus formed depends on the type of food and the type of bacteria involved. Such gases as may be formed from the decay or decomposition of food do not include sulphur dioxide or chlorine though they may include hydrogen sulphide and various chlorides and some, though not all of them, may be partially soluble in water. When food decays or decomposes, the gases thus formed may be given off into the air and be absorbed to a certain extent by other foods. In a non-mechanical refrigerator, a certain portion of those gases which may be soluble in water may be absorbed by the water from the melting ice as the air passes it and then carried down the drain pipe. In mechanical refrigerators, except as herein later discussed, a certain portion of those gases which may be soluble in water may be absorbed by the water in the ice cube trays and the frost on the cooling unit. It does not appear to have been scientifically established to what extent such gases as may be formed from food decay are soluble in water, if at all, and to what extent they may be absorbed by the water and carried away in the drain pipe of a non-mechanical refrigerator, or to what extent they may be absorbed by the water in the ice cube trays or the frost on the cooling unit of a mechanical refrigerator.

The representations by the respondent set out in sub-sections 7 and 8 of paragraph 6 hereof are deficient in specific limitation, indefinite, exaggerated and untrue in the particulars above set out.

Such gases as may be formed from the decay or decomposition of foods are not formed to any substantial or noticeable extent when temperatures are maintained at a point sufficient to inhibit bacterial growth and activity and under such circumstances do not have any harmful effect in tainting foods or in reducing their nutritive value.

PAR. 10. The gelatinous mass sometimes found in the drain pipe of non-mechanical refrigerators is made up of gases and odors emanating from food and from the growth of bacteria, algae and mold in the drain pipe itself. It has not been scientifically determined to what extent the contents of the drain pipe of a non-mechanical refrigerator are made up from gases, odors and bacteria emanating from the food or to what extent the contents are made up of growth of bacteria, algae and molds taking place in the drain pipe itself. The gelatinous matter found in a drain pipe of a non-mechanical refrigerator will not be found in ice cubes frozen in a mechanical refrigerator. The growth of bacteria, algae and molds which may take place in the drain pipe of a non-mechanical refrigerator cannot take place in the cube trays or on a cooling unit of a mechanical refrigerator under normal operating conditions.

The representations to the effect that the gelatinous matter found in the drain pipes of non-mechanical refrigerators may be found in ice cubes frozen in a mechanical refrigerator are untrue and are deficient in specific limitation.

Many mechanical refrigerators are equipped with covers over the cube trays or with doors to the cube tray compartment of the cooling units as standard equipment. Some mechanical refrigerators do not have such equipment. In those types of mechanical refrigerators which do have such equipment, there is, for all practical purposes, no flow of air from the food chamber through the cube compartment of the cooling unit that can come in direct contact with the water in the cube trays. For that reason, there is, for all practical purposes, no absorption by the water in the cube trays of gases that may be formed from the decay or decomposition of foods in the food chamber or of any food odors.

PAR. 11. There are certain foods that have characteristic and inherent odors which are constantly being thrown off into the air, irrespective of any process of decomposition or decay. There are certain other foods which upon coming in contact with air will absorb odors already contained therein. If these two types of foods are placed in a refrigerator at the same time, the foods which have a tendency to absorb odors will absorb such odors of the other food to such an extent that a person eating such foods may taste the odor of the other foods. This transferring of odors from one food to another will take place in refrigerators of any type to a certain extent. It has not been scientifically determined to what extent this takes place in a non-mechanical refrigerator or in a mechanical refrigerator.

Order

25 F. T. C.

Users of mechanical or electric refrigerators will be able to eat the food stored therein without tasting other foods that were stored in the refrigerator at the same time except as to the type of food in which such transference of odors does actually take place. Many foods, however, do not absorb odors from other foods and as to those foods, users of electric or mechanical refrigerators may eat said foods without tasting other foods that were stored in the refrigerator at the same time.

PAR. 12. The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondent in making the representations hereinabove detailed, in selling and promoting the sale of its non-mechanical refrigerators, have had, and now have, a tendency and capacity to confuse and mislead the public with respect to the true facts as to the relative merits and operating factors of non-mechanical refrigerators and mechanical refrigerators and into the erroneous and mistaken beliefs that mechanical refrigerators are undesirable and ineffective in use and are harmful and dangerous to the users thereof, and into the purchase of respondent's non-mechanical refrigerators on account of said beliefs induced as aforesaid. As a result thereof there has been, and is, a capacity and tendency to unfairly divert trade to the respondent from its competitors who do not make use of similar statements, to the injury of competition in commerce among and between the various States of the United States.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondent, The Coolerator Company, are to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce, within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

This proceeding having been heard by the Federal Trade Commission upon the complaint of the Commission, the answer of respondent, testimony and other evidence taken before John J. Keenan, an examiner of the Commission heretofore duly designated by it, in support of the allegations of said complaint and in opposition thereto, and a stipulation as to the facts executed by W. T. Kelley, Chief Counsel of said Commission and the respondent, and the Commission having made its findings as to the facts and its conclusion that said respondent has violated the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes.”

It is ordered, That the respondent, The Coolerator Company, a corporation, its officers, servants, employees, agents, and representatives, in the course of the sale and distribution in interstate commerce of non-mechanical, or ice refrigerators, cease and desist from representing:

1. That a temperature of 45 to 50 degrees Fahrenheit is the established or required standard temperature necessary to be obtained in any or all types of refrigerators for the most satisfactory preservation of food; provided that the respondent is not hereby prohibited from representing that a maintained temperature of 50 degrees Fahrenheit, or lower, in a domestic refrigerator is a generally satisfactory temperature for the preservation of perishable foods usually kept in refrigerators for domestic use;

2. That in mechanical refrigerators a proper temperature for the preservation of foods cannot be maintained without detrimentally disturbing the natural composition of the air in the refrigerator or the natural composition of the food; provided that the respondent is not hereby prohibited from representing that the natural composition of air in both non-mechanical and mechanical refrigerators, except the air in hydrators or covered containers, is changed to the extent that its moisture content is diminished in the process of refrigeration and that the natural composition of certain foods stored in all refrigerators is affected to the extent to which moisture is absorbed by the air coming in contact with said foods;

3. That the various gases used in mechanical refrigerators as part of the refrigerant escape from the coils in which they are contained, permeate the food chamber and have a deleterious effect on and taint the food therein; provided that the respondent is not hereby prohibited from representing that sulphur dioxide is one of the gases commonly used as a refrigerant in stated or specified mechanical refrigerators; that it is a poisonous gas and that if it should escape from the coil in the refrigerating unit, it might permeate the food chamber and have a deleterious effect on and taint the foods contained therein;

4. (a) That foods kept in mechanical refrigerators lose water or dehydrate to such an extent that their nutritive properties are impaired and essential parts of the chemical combinations of various foods in their natural state destroyed; and (b) that foods kept in a non-mechanical refrigerator do not dehydrate or lose water to any extent whatever; provided that the respondent is not hereby prohibited from representing to what extent, under stated conditions,

Order

certain specified foods kept in a non-mechanical refrigerator dehydrate or lose water and to what extent, under the same conditions, the same specified foods kept under comparable conditions in a mechanical refrigerator dehydrate or lose water;

5. That sulphur dioxide or chlorine is formed from the decay of foods contained in mechanical refrigerators;

6. That poisonous or other gases are formed from the decay of foods stored in mechanical refrigerators in such quantities that they have a harmful effect in tainting said foods and in reducing their nutritive value;

7. (a) That in a non-mechanical refrigerator, such poisonous or other gases as may be formed from the decay of foods are entirely absorbed by water from the melting ice and are carried away through the drain pipe thereof, but that in mechanical refrigerators such poisonous or other gases as may be formed from the decay of foods remain in the ice cubes made in said refrigerators and are not absorbed and carried away; and (b) that the gelatinous matter found in the drain pipe of a non-mechanical refrigerator is formed solely and entirely or principally from gases emanating from foods contained therein being absorbed and carried away by the water from the melting ice and that the ice cubes frozen in a mechanical refrigerator contain the same matter contained in the gelatinous matter found in the drain pipe of a non-mechanical refrigerator;

8. That the users of mechanical refrigerators will not be able to eat the food therefrom without tasting such other food that was stored in the refrigerator at the same time; provided that the respondent is not hereby prohibited from representing what foods, under stated conditions, give off odors and what foods will absorb such odors and to what extent such transferring of odors from one food to another will take place.

It is further ordered, That the respondent shall, within 90 days after service upon it of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which it has complied with this order.

IN THE MATTER OF
ROGERS CANDY COMPANYCOMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 26, 1914*Docket 2834. Complaint, June 4, 1936—Decision, July 14, 1937*

Where a corporation engaged in manufacture and sale of so-called "draw" or "deal" assortments of candy, sale and distribution of which type candy by retailers by lot or chance has capacity and tendency to, and does, decrease sale of candy sold by many manufacturers without any sales plan or device involving lottery or game of chance, i. e., the "straight" goods, and sale of which type, providing, in connection with its sale to public, means or opportunity of obtaining a box of candy as a prize or becoming a winner by lot or chance, teaches and encourages gambling, and is in violation of various municipal ordinances and regulations and State statutes and constitutions, and provides retail merchants with a means of violating the laws of the several States, and sale of which candy, so packed and assembled as to enable retail dealers, without alteration, addition, or rearrangement, to resell same to consuming public by lot or chance, is contrary to public policy—

Sold, to wholesale and retail dealers, certain assortments of candy which were so packed and assembled as to involve, or were designed to involve, use of a lottery scheme when sold and distributed to consumers thereof, and several of which were composed of a punchboard, together with a number of boxes of candy and other articles of merchandise, exceeding in value five cents each, for sale and distribution to consuming public under a plan, and in accordance with said board's explanatory legend, by which purchaser received, for five cents paid, one of said boxes of varying size, or one of said other articles of merchandise, or nothing other than privilege of making a punch, dependent upon number punched by chance, and purchaser of last punch was entitled to specified prize; so assembled and packed that such assortments might be, and were, exposed and sold to purchasing public, in accordance with aforesaid sales plan, by retail dealer purchasers thereof, and with knowledge and intent that such assortments could and would thus be used by retail dealer for distribution and resale to purchasing public by lot or chance, without alteration or rearrangement, in competition with many who do not make and sell "draw" or "deal" assortments, but sell their "straight" goods in interstate commerce in competition with the others;

With result that competitors who refused to, or do not, sell candy so packed and assembled that it can be resold to public by lot or chance, were put to a disadvantage in competing with it and with others employing methods similar to those described herein, trade was diverted to it and others using similar methods from those who do not use same, by reason of attraction to customers of so-called "draw" or "deal" assortments, there was diversion of trade to it from its said competitors, and a restraint upon and a detriment to the freedom of fair competition in trade concerned; to the prejudice and injury of the public and of competitors:

Complaint

25 F. T. C.

Held, That such acts and practices were to the prejudice of the public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition.

Before Mr. Charles P. Vicini and Mr. Henry M. White, trial examiners.

Flood, Lenihan & Ivers, of Seattle, Wash., for respondent.

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that Rogers Candy Company, a corporation, hereinafter referred to as respondent, has been and is using unfair methods of competition in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in said act of Congress, and it appearing to said Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent, Rogers Candy Company, is a corporation organized and operating under the laws of the State of Washington, with its principal place of business located at 4547 University Way, Seattle, Wash. Respondent is now, and for several years last past has been engaged in the manufacture of candy and in the sale and distribution thereof to wholesale dealers, jobbers, and retail dealers, located at points in the various States of the United States, and causes and has caused said products when so sold to be transported from its principal place of business in Seattle, Wash., to purchasers thereof in other States of the United States at their respective places of business; and there is now, and has been for more than one year last past, a course of trade and commerce by said respondent in such candy between and among the States of the United States. In the course and conduct of its said business, respondent is in competition with other corporations and with partnerships and individuals engaged in the manufacture of candy and in the sale and distribution thereof in commerce between and among the various States of the United States.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of its business, as described in paragraph 1 hereof, respondent sells and has sold to wholesale and retail dealers packages or assortments of candy so packed and assembled as to involve the use of a lottery scheme when sold and distributed to the consumers thereof.

Several of the said assortments manufactured, sold and distributed by the respondent are composed of a number of boxes of candy, together with a number of other articles of merchandise and a device commonly called a "punchboard." The said boxes of candy and other articles of merchandise are distributed to the consuming public by means of the said punchboard in the following manner: The punchboard has a fixed number of holes and in each hole is secreted a slip of paper bearing a number. The numbers begin with one and continue to the number of punches there are on the board, but the numbers are not arranged in numerical sequence. Sales are five cents each and when a punch is made from said board, a number is disclosed. The board bears a statement or statements informing customers and prospective customers as to which numbers receive a box of candy and the size thereof, and which numbers receive the other articles of merchandise. The board also bears a statement that the purchaser of the last punch on the board receives a specified prize. A purchaser who does not qualify by obtaining one of the numbers calling for one of the boxes of candy or one of the other articles of merchandise or by punching the last punch from the board, receives nothing for his money other than the privilege of punching a number from the board. The boxes of candy and other articles of merchandise are each worth more than five cents and a purchaser who obtains one of the numbers calling for a box of candy or one of the other articles of merchandise, receives the same for the price of five cents. The numbers on said board are effectively concealed from said purchaser or purchasers until a punch or selection has been made and the particular punch separated from the board. The boxes of candy and other articles of merchandise in said assortment are thus distributed to the purchasers from said board wholly by lot or chance.

PAR. 3. The wholesale dealers and jobbers to whom respondent sells its assortments, resell said assortments to retail dealers, and said retail dealers, and the retail dealers to whom respondent sells direct, expose said assortments for sale and sell said candy to the purchasing public in accordance with the aforesaid sales plan. Respondent thus supplies to and places in the hands of others the means of conducting lotteries in the sale of its product in accordance with the sales plan hereinabove set forth, and said sales plan has the capacity and tendency of inducing purchasers thereof to purchase respondent's said products in preference to candy offered for sale and sold by its competitors.

PAR. 4. The sale of said candy to the purchasing public in the manner above alleged involves a game of chance or the sale of a chance to procure a box of candy or another article of merchandise.

The use by respondent of said method in the sale of candy, and the sale of candy by and through the use thereof and by the aid of said method, is a practice of the sort which the common law and criminal statutes have long deemed contrary to public policy; and is contrary to an established public policy of the Government of the United States. The use by respondent of said method has the dangerous tendency unduly to hinder competition or create monopoly in this, to wit: that the use thereof has the tendency and capacity to exclude from the branch of the candy trade involved in this proceeding competitors who do not adopt and use the same method or an equivalent or similar method involving the same or an equivalent or similar element of chance or lottery scheme.

Many persons, firms, and corporations who make and sell candy in competition with the respondent, as above alleged, are unwilling to offer for sale or sell candy so packed and assembled as above alleged, or otherwise arranged and packed for sale to the purchasing public so as to involve a game of chance, and such competitors refrain therefrom.

PAR. 5. Many dealers in and ultimate purchasers of candy are attracted by respondent's said method and manner of packing said candy, and by the element of chance involved in the sale thereof in the manner above described, and are thereby induced to purchase said candy so packed and sold by respondent, in preference to candy offered for sale and sold by said competitors of respondent who do not use the same or equivalent methods. The use of said method by respondent has the tendency and capacity, because of said game of chance, to divert to respondent trade and custom from its said competitors who do not use the same or an equivalent method; to exclude from said candy trade all competitors who are unwilling to and who do not use the same or an equivalent method because the same is unlawful; to lessen competition in said candy trade, and to tend to create a monopoly of said candy trade in respondent and such other distributors of candy as use the same or an equivalent method, and to deprive the purchasing public of the benefit of free competition in said candy trade. The use of said method by the respondent has the tendency and capacity to eliminate from said candy trade all actual competitors, and to exclude therefrom all potential competitors, who do not adopt and use said method or an equivalent method.

PAR. 6. Many of said competitors of respondent are unwilling to adopt and use said method or any method involving a game of chance or the sale of a chance to win something by chance or any other method that is contrary to public policy.

PAR. 7. The aforementioned method, acts, and practices of the respondent are all to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors, as hereinabove alleged. Said method, acts, and practices constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914.

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, on June 4, 1936, issued and on June 9, 1936, served its complaint in this proceeding upon the respondent, Rogers Candy Company, a corporation, charging it with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of the provisions of said act. After the issuance of said complaint and the filing of respondent's answer thereto, testimony and other evidence in support of the allegations of said complaint were introduced by P. C. Kolinski, attorney for the Commission, and in opposition to the allegations of the complaint by Emmett G. Lenihan, attorney for the respondent, before Charles P. Vicini and Henry M. White, examiners of the Commission theretofore duly designated by it, and said testimony and other evidence were duly recorded and filed in the office of the Commission. Thereafter, this proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on said complaint, the answer thereto, testimony and other evidence, briefs in support of the complaint and in opposition thereto, and the oral arguments of Henry C. Lank, counsel for the Commission, and Emmett G. Lenihan, counsel for the respondent; and the Commission, having duly considered the matter and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. The respondent, Rogers Candy Company, is a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Washington, with its principal office and place of business located at 4547 University Way, in the city of Seattle, State of Washington. Respondent is now, and for several years last past has been, engaged in the manufacture of candy in the city of Seattle and in the sale and distribution thereof to retail and wholesale dealers and jobbers located in the State of Washington and in the States of Oregon, Idaho, Montana, California, and the Territory of Alaska. It causes the said candy when sold to be shipped or transported from its principal place of business in the State of Washington to purchasers thereof in Washington and in other States of the United States and the Territory of Alaska, as mentioned above. In so carrying on said business, respondent is and has been engaged in interstate commerce and is and has been engaged in active competition with other corporations and with partnerships and individuals engaged in the manufacture of candy and in the sale and distribution thereof in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the Territory of Alaska, as mentioned above.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of its business, as described in paragraph 1 hereof, respondent sells and has sold to wholesale and retail dealers, as above described, certain assortments of candy so packed and assembled as to involve, or which are designed to involve, the use of a lottery scheme when sold and distributed to the consumers thereof.

Several of said assortments are composed of a number of boxes of candy, together with a number of other articles of merchandise and a device commonly called a "punchboard." The said boxes of candy and other articles of merchandise are distributed to the consuming public by means of the said punchboard in the following manner: The punchboard has a fixed number of holes, and in each hole is secreted a slip of paper bearing a number. The numbers begin with one and continue to the number of punches there are on the board, but the numbers are not arranged in numerical sequence. Sales are 5¢ each, and when a punch is made from said board a number is disclosed. The board bears a statement or statements informing customers and prospective customers as to which numbers receive a box of candy and the size thereof, and which numbers receive the other articles of merchandise. The board also bears a statement that the purchaser of the last punch on the board receives a specified prize. A purchaser who does not qualify by obtaining one of the numbers calling for one of the boxes of candy or one of the other articles of merchandise, or by punching the last punch from the board, receives nothing for his money other than the privilege of punching a number from the board. The boxes of candy and other articles of merchandise are each worth more than 5¢, and a purchaser who obtains one of the numbers calling for a box of candy or one of the other articles of merchandise receives the same for the price of 5¢. The numbers on said board are effectively concealed from said purchasers or prospective purchasers until a punch or selection has been made and the particular punch separated from the board. The boxes of candy and other articles of merchandise in said assortment are thus distributed to the purchasers from said board wholly by lot or chance, and the fact as to whether a purchaser receives a box of candy or one of the other articles of merchandise or nothing for his money is also determined wholly by lot or chance.

PAR. 3. The candy assortments involving the lot or chance feature, as above described, are generally referred to in the candy trade or industry as "draw" or "deal" assortments. Assortments of candy without lot or chance features in connection with their resale to the public are generally referred to in the candy trade or industry as "straight" goods. These terms will be used hereafter in these findings to distinguish these separate types of assortments.

PAR. 4. The wholesale dealers or jobbers to whom respondent sells its assortments resell the same to retail dealers, and said retail dealers and the retail dealers to whom respondent sells direct expose said assortments for sale and sell said candy to the purchasing public in accordance with the sales plan as described above.

PAR. 5. All sales made by respondent, whether to wholesale dealers and jobbers or to retail dealers, are absolute sales and respondent retains no control over said assortments after they are delivered to the wholesale dealer or jobber or retail dealer. The assortments are assembled and packed in such manner that they are designed to be used and are used by the retail dealer for distribution to the purchasing public by lot or chance without alteration or rearrangement. In the sale and distribution to jobbers and wholesale dealers for resale to retail dealers and to retail dealers direct of the assortments of candy described in paragraph 2 hereof, respondent has knowledge that said candy will be resold to the purchasing public by retail dealers by lot or chance, and it packs such candy in the way and manner described so that without alteration, addition, or rearrangement thereof it may be resold to the public by lot or chance by said retail dealers.

PAR. 6. There are in the United States many manufacturers of candy competing with respondent in the territory served by respondent who do not manufacture and sell "draw" or "deal" assortments of candy and who sell their "straight" goods in interstate commerce in competition with the "draw" or "deal" assortments. The sale or distribution of candy by retail dealers by lot or chance has the capacity and tendency to and does decrease the sale of candy sold without any sales plan or device involving a lottery or game of chance.

Several witnesses testified, and the Commission finds, that customers coming into retail establishments and desiring candy similar to that distributed by respondent would take chances or make purchases by means of said pushcards or punchboards, and that in such cases when unsuccessful in obtaining candy by means of said pushcard or punchboard some of such customers would then purchase candy as a "straight" purchase and without the use of the lottery device; that the gambling feature connected with the sale of respondent's assortments, as described above, was attractive to customers; and that before making "straight" purchases it was not unusual for customers to endeavor to procure the candy desired by means of such lottery devices rather than to make a "straight" purchase.

PAR. 7. The sale and distribution of "draw" or "deal" assortments of candy, or of candy which has connected with its sale to the public the means or opportunity of obtaining a box of candy as a prize or becoming a winner by lot or chance, teaches and encourages gambling and is in violation of various municipal ordinances and regulations and various state statutes and constitutions. The sale and distribution of candy by retailers by the method described herein is the sale and distribution of candy by lot or chance and constitutes a lottery or gaming device and the Commission finds that the sale and distribution of assortments of candy as described herein provides retail merchants with a means of violating the laws of the several states. Competitors who refuse to or who do not sell candy so packed and assembled that it can be resold to the public by lot or chance are put to a disadvantage in competing with respondent and with others employing similar methods to that described herein. Because the "draw" or "deal" assortments are attractive to customers purchasing from retail dealers, the Commission finds that trade is diverted to respondent and others using similar methods from competitors who do not use such methods. The use of such method by respondent in the sale and distribution of its candy is prejudicial and injurious to the public and to respondent's competitors, and has resulted in the diversion of trade to respondent from its said competitors, and is a restraint upon and a detriment to the freedom of fair and legitimate competition in the candy industry.

PAR. 8. An officer of the respondent corporation testified, and the Commission finds, that the total annual volume of respondent's sales is approximately $60,000, and further that approximately 25% of respondent's business consists of assortments of candy with which a punchboard is furnished.

PAR. 9. The Commission further finds that the sale and distribution in interstate commerce of assortments of candy so packed and assembled as to enable retail dealers, without alteration, addition, or rearrangement, to resell the same to the consuming public by lot or chance, is contrary to public policy.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of respondent, Rogers Candy Company, a corporation, under the conditions and circumstances set forth in the foregoing findings of fact, are all to the prejudice of the public and respondent's competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

It is ordered, That the respondent, Rogers Candy Company, a corporation, its officers, representatives, agents, and employees, in connection with the offering for sale, sale, and distribution in interstate commerce of candy, do forthwith cease and desist from:

1. Selling and distributing to jobbers and wholesale dealers for resale to retail dealers, or to retail dealers direct, candy so packed and assembled that sales of such candy to the general public are to be made, or may be made, by means of a lottery, gaming device, or gift enterprise.

2. Supplying to or placing in the hands of wholesale dealers and jobbers or retail dealers assortments of candy which are used, or which may be used, without alteration or rearrangement of the contents of such assortments, to conduct a lottery, gaming device, or gift enterprise in the sale or distribution of the candy contained in said assortments to the public.

3. Packing or assembling in the same assortment of candy for sale to the public at retail boxes of candy, together with a device commonly called a "punchboard," which punchboard is for use, or which may be or is designed to be used, in distributing or selling said candy to the public at retail.

4. Furnishing to retail and wholesale dealers and jobbers a device commonly called a "punchboard," either with assortments of candy or separately, bearing a legend or legends or statements informing the purchasing public that the candy is being sold to the public by lot or chance or in accordance with a sales plan which constitutes a lottery, gaming device, or gift enterprise.

It is further ordered, That respondent, Rogers Candy Company, a corporation, shall, within 30 days after service upon it of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which it has complied with the order to cease and desist hereinabove set forth.

KRAFT-PHENIX CHEESE CORPORATION

COMPLAINT, OPINION, AND ORDER OF DISMISSAL IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION OF SEC. 2 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED OCT. 15, 1914, AS AMENDED BY AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED JUNE 19, 1938

Docket 2935. Complaint, Sept. 30, 1936—Order, July 17, 1937

DISCRIMINATING IN PRICE—CLAYTON ACT, SEC. 2, SUBSEC. (A)—“COMMERCE”—RETAILER PURCHASER OF PRODUCER SELLER'S JOBBERS UNDER PRODUCER SELLER'S INTEGRATED NATION-WIDE PRICING SYSTEM AND PLAN, WHERE DIRECT PRODUCER SELLER TO RETAILER CONTACT, SOLICITATION AND SERVICE AND UNINTERRUPTED FLOW FROM WAREHOUSE TO JOBBER TO RETAILER, AS “PURCHASER.”

Complaint charged with unlawful discrimination in violation of aforesaid section, respondent, engaged on a nation-wide scale in distributing and selling its extensively advertised processed cheese, packaged cheese and salad dressing from its various warehouses to jobbers and wholesalers for resale to retailers, contacted by its salesmen, serviced by it, and supplied by continuous flow and current of commerce in its products from factories to warehouses and from warehouse to retailer over regularly established routes to known retailers, business of which, as aforesaid, it personally solicited, and as to which it made effective price policies and schedules of its own:

Held, Respondent, in setting up and putting into effect, as aforesaid, its said price system to retailers, engaged in interstate commerce, and sales of its products to retailers likewise in course of such commerce, and retailer, purchasing its said goods from jobbers and wholesalers, equally “purchaser” under act with retailer buying direct.

DISCRIMINATING IN PRICE—CLAYTON ACT, SEC. 2, SUBSEC. (A)—QUANTITY AND VOLUME DISCOUNTS AND DIFFERENTIALS—COSTS—WHERE PRACTICAL IMPOSSIBILITY OF ACCURATE ALLOCATIONS TO EACH KIND AND AMOUNT OF PRODUCT FROM SAME DELIVERING INSTRUMENTALITY, BUT REASONABLE PRESUMPTION OF SUPPORTING DIFFERENCE.

Where any reasonable allocation of delivery cost would unquestionably leave a difference large enough to support a given difference in price on the basis of certain varying quantity purchases and delivery methods, and there is a reasonable presumption that such difference would justify entire price differential, practical impossibility of making accurate allocation of costs to each kind and amount of product delivered from same truck is no ground for ignoring such reasonable inference.

DISCRIMINATING IN PRICE—CLAYTON ACT, SEC. 2, SUBSEC. (A)—QUANTITY AND VOLUME DISCOUNTS AND DIFFERENTIALS—WHERE REASONABLE IN PURPOSE AND AVAILABILITY AND ADVERSE COMPETITIVE EFFECT ON PRODUCER SELLER'S COMPETITORS NEITHER INTENDED NOR EVIDENT, NOR INJURY PERCEPTIBLE AS BETWEEN FAVORED AND NON-FAVORED RETAILER PURCHASERS

Where, on complaint charging respondent, engaged as aforesaid, with unlawful discrimination in violation of section in question in allowing from one-half cent to two and one-half cents discount, as case might be, on certain quantity purchases of loaf cheese, and five per cent discount upon weekly purchases of $5.00 worth of package cheese or salad products, subject to certain delivery limitation (and extended to group purchasers contracting for $100.00 or more of such products), it appeared, among other things, as respects the effect on producer seller's competitors, that use of such discounts was prevalent in the industry, no adverse competitive effect was intended or evident, nor ground to apprehend one, and, as respects differentials and effect on favored and unfavored retail sellers of its said products, that such discounts, as case might be, were reasonable in purpose, and reasonably open to all, were justified by cost, and benefit conferred, and did not operate prejudicially to any perceptible extent as between those who received or failed to receive particular discount, or as between those falling within certain different discount ranges: Held, That price differentials established by it in sales of its said products to retailers did not tend to create a monopoly in it or to lessen or injure competition between it and its competitors, nor to injure competition between retailers reselling its said products, no violation of aforesaid section, and order of dismissal should issue.

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress, approved October 15, 1914, entitled "An Act to supplement existing laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes" as amended by an Act of Congress, approved June 19, 1936, entitled "An Act to amend Section 2 of the Act entitled 'An Act to supplement existing laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes', approved October 15, 1914, as amended (U. S. C., title 15, section 13), and for other purposes", the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that Kraft-Phenix Cheese Corporation is violating and has been violating the provisions of Section 2 (a) of said Act, hereby issues its complaint stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent, Kraft-Phenix Cheese Corporation is a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Delaware, with its principal office and place of business located at 400 Rush Street, Chicago, Ill. Respondent corporation maintains five division or branch offices located as follows: Eastern Division Office, New York, N. Y.; Southeastern Division Office, Atlanta, Ga.; Southwestern Division Office, Denison, Tex.; Central Division Office, Chicago, Ill.; and Western Division Office, San Francisco, Calif.

PAR. 2. Said respondent corporation is and has been prior to June 19, 1936, engaged in the business of manufacturing, processing, offering for sale, selling and distributing cheese, cheese products, and salad products. Respondent sells and distributes said products in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and the District of Columbia, causing said products to be shipped and transported from the respective places of origin or concentration thereof, located in various States of the United States, to purchasers of such products, located in all States of the United States and the District of Columbia, and there is and has been, at all times herein mentioned, a continuous current of trade and commerce in said products between respondent's factories, processing plants, branch offices, and distributing points and purchasers located in all of the States of the United States and the District of Columbia; that said commodities are so sold and distributed for use, consumption, and resale within all of said States and the District of Columbia.

PAR. 3. In the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid, respondent is now and during the time herein mentioned, has been in substantial competition with other corporations, individuals, partnerships, and firms engaged in the business of manufacturing, processing, offering for sale, selling, and distributing cheese, cheese products and salad products in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and the District of Columbia.

PAR. 4. In the course and conduct of its business as above described, respondent since on or about August 29, 1936 has discriminated in price and is now discriminating in price between different purchasers buying such products of like grade and quality for resale to consumers, by giving and allowing to some of its said purchasers of cheese, cheese products and salad products lower prices than those given or allowed other of its said purchasers competitively engaged one with the other in the resale of said products to the consumer within the United States. Said discriminations consist in the following:

1. In connection with the offering for sale and sale of Kraft Loaf Cheese in five pound boxes, in the granting of an allowance of a one cent discount from the unit pound price set for lots of 5 pounds to 29 pounds of such product for purchases in lots of 30 pounds to 149 pounds; in the allowance of a one cent per pound discount from the price set for lots of 30 pounds to 149 pounds for purchases of lots from 150 pounds to 749 pounds; in the allowance of a one-half cent per pound discount from the price set for lots of 150 pounds to 749 pounds for purchases of 750 pounds or over.

2. In connection with the offering for sale and selling of Kraft package cheese and cheese products, except loaf cheese:

(a) In the allowance of a five percent discount on all specific purchases of such products amounting to $5.00 or more in which one delivery is required;

(b) In the allowance of a five percent discount to all group purchasers contracting for $100.00 or more of such products per week, where store-door delivery is made and one billing only required.

3. In connection with the offering for sale and selling of Kraft salad products:

(a) In the allowance of a five percent discount on all specific purchases of such products amounting to $5.00 or more in which one delivery is required;

(b) In the allowance of a five percent discount to all group purchasers contracting for $100.00 or more of such products per week, where store-door delivery is made and one billing only required.

PAR. 5. That the purchasers of such commodities from respondent, so bought and sold in interstate commerce, are in competition in the resale of such products to the consumer with other such purchasers in the different States of the United States in which said purchasers are respectively located and engaged in business; that the effect of such discriminatory prices is to enable some of said purchasers to purchase such commodities at a lower price than competing purchasers can buy the same products, solely because of the variation of volume of resale trade done in such products by the different purchasers thereof.

PAR. 6. The general effect of said systematic discriminations in price, made by said respondent as above set forth has been or may be to substantially lessen competition or to injure, destroy, or prevent competition in the sale and distribution of cheese, cheese products and salad products, between the said respondent and other manufacturers and distributors of similar products engaged in interstate commerce, and also between the said favored purchasers of said products receiving such discriminatory prices and other unfavored competing purchasers of said products not receiving said discriminatory prices; and the effect of said discriminations has been or may be to tend to create a monopoly in respondent in said line of commerce and also in the said favored purchasers receiving said discriminatory prices from said respondent, in the resale of said products in different localities or trade territories in the United States in which such purchasers respectively operate.

PAR. 7. The foregoing alleged acts of the said respondent are in violation of Section 2 (a) of said Act of Congress, approved June 19, 1936, entitled "An Act to amend Section 2 of the Act entitled 'An Act to supplement existing laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes' approved October 15, 1914, as amended (U. S. C. title 15, section 13), and for other purposes."

MEMORANDUM OPINION

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved October 15, 1914, entitled "An Act to supplement existing laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes" as amended by an Act of Congress approved June 19, 1936, entitled "An Act to amend Section 2 of the Act entitled 'An Act to supplement existing laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes' approved October 15, 1914, as amended (U. S. C. title 15, sec. 13), and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, on September 30, 1936, issued and served its complaint in this proceeding upon the respondent Kraft-Phenix Cheese Corp., charging it with violating the provisions of Subsection A of Section 2 of said Act as amended. After the issuance of said complaint and the filing of respondent's answer thereto, testimony and other evidence in support of the allegations of the complaint were introduced by Allen C. Phelps, attorney for the Commission, before Charles F. Diggs, an examiner of the Commission theretofore duly designated by it, and in opposition to the allegations of the complaint by Nicholson, Snyder, Chadwell & Fagerburg, attorneys for said respondent; and said testimony and other evidence was duly recorded and filed in the office of the Commission. Thereafter the proceeding regularly came on for consideration by the Commission on the said complaint, the answer thereto and the testimony and other evidence constituting the record herein; and the Commission having considered the same and being fully advised in the premises, issues this memorandum statement of pertinent facts deduced from the record and the conclusions which it has drawn therefrom.

Respondent Kraft-Phenix Cheese Corporation, individually and through subsidiaries, manufactures and distributes on a nationwide scale a line of processed cheese, package cheese, and salad dressing. Respondent itself ships these products across State lines from factories to warehouses and the products are usually distributed from warehouses to retailers by truck by sales subsidiaries of respondent or independently owned jobbers and wholesalers. The distribution from the warehouses to retailers is usually within the confines of a single State, although in some cases this distribution crosses State lines. Respondent advertises its products extensively to the purchasing public and maintains a force of salesmen who contact retailers, most of whom buy Kraft products from independent jobbers. There is a continuous, uninterrupted flow and current of commerce in respondent's products from the factories to warehouses and from the warehouses over regularly established routes to retailers, whose identity is known in advance. The course of such commerce runs between, among, across, and within all the States of the United States and the District of Columbia.

Considered in their character as interstate commerce, respondent's products, upon reaching the warehouse, do not become mixed with or a part of the general mass of property within the State in which such warehouse is located. On the contrary, such warehouses are clearing houses or distributing points, serving one function in respondent's system of making its perishable products available for sale by retailers to the ultimate consumer, the purchasing public. Respondent's advertising, its solicitation of retailers, and the facilities which it provides for the sale and distribution of its products to the retailer, are all vital and essential elements in the process of marketing these commodities.

The purpose and intent of respondent in manufacturing and processing its products, in transporting them to warehouses, and in selling them directly and indirectly to retailers, is from beginning to end to reach through the channels of interstate commerce retailers who sell to consumers. Respondent's plan of doing business is an integrated whole and, in so far as its character as interstate commerce is concerned, cannot be separated into parts. The various steps by which this plan and policy as a whole are made workable and successful are inextricably commingled and intertwined. Respondent's products in a large majority of cases, cross State lines from the factory to the warehouse, and the interstate character of this commerce continues, under the facts and circumstances in this case, down to and including the sale and delivery of such products to the retailer.

Respondent admits that it attempts to make its prices and discounts available to all retailers by one means or another, and that its efforts are in the main successful. It issues price lists to jobbers and wholesalers to be used by them in selling retailers. The evidence shows that respondent exercises a control over the distributing channels through which its products move. This control is made effective until such products come into the hands of the retailer where the control ends. The passing of the naked legal title to the goods from respondent to a jobber in the course of this flow of commerce before the products reach their ultimate destination, the retailer, is not determinative of the question as to where the flow stops. In fact, in this case the current of commerce in respondent's products terminates when and only when the merchandise reaches the retailer.

Respondent is charged with unlawful price discrimination in the use of quantity discounts and volume discounts in sales to retailers. A 5 percent discount upon package cheese and cheese products, other than loaf cheese, is available to retailers who buy more than $5.00 worth in a single purchase, and to group buyers who buy more than $100 worth in a single week and who are billed jointly. The same discounts are available upon the same conditions to retailers who buy salad products. Buyers of loaf cheese receive a discount of one cent for purchases of from 30 to 149 pounds, an additional cent for purchases of from 150 to 749 pounds, and an additional half cent for purchases of 750 pounds or over.

Discounts are made unlawful by the Clayton Act, as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act, when their effect may be substantially to lessen competition or to tend to create a monopoly in any line of commerce, or to injure, destroy, or prevent competition with those who grant or receive the discounts. Evidence introduced relevant to the charge of a lessening of competition or a tendency toward monopoly as between respondent and its competitors indicates generally that the use of discounts similar to those used by respondent is prevalent in the industry. Moreover, the evidence indicates that respondent's products are sold to the retailer at prices which in most cases exceed those of its competitors. While respondent sells a very considerable proportion of the loaf and packaged cheese and salad dressings sold in the United States, there is no reason to infer from the evidence that the system of discounts set up by respondent are used to unfairly deprive competitors of business or that it is promotive of monopoly. Nor does such system of discounts appear to have been used to effect a lessening of competition between respondent and its competitors or to injure such competition.

There remains the question of the effect of such differentials in price on competition between favored and unfavored retailers reselling Kraft-Phenix products.

The five percent discount upon $5.00 worth of package cheese and cheese products or salad products is denied only to those concerns which are unable or unwilling to handle $5.00 worth of the respondent's products within a period of two or three weeks.

In an effort to preserve the freshness of its products and to encourage their use, respondent undertakes to exchange new goods for any of its products which may have deteriorated in the retailer's stock. Consequently, in spite of the perishable character of cheese and salad products, a retailer who wishes to do so may safely buy a two or three weeks' supply at one time without fear of spoilage.

Although, even under these conditions, an appreciable number of retailers do not obtain the discount, the Commission does not believe that respondent is required by law to make no distinction between these and other retailers. Respondent maintains a system of truck delivery to retailers designed to insure the freshness of the product when delivered, to facilitate the return of products which are not fresh, and to stimulate the retailer's interest in cheese. This system of deliveries is by nature expensive, its cost averaging about 13 or 14 percent of the gross value of sales so made. Witnesses for the respondent testified that the respondent's ability to use such a delivery system without loss depends upon the size of the average sale, and that the discount for $5.00 purchases was intended to make sales large enough to justify such a method of delivery. The evidence shows, too, that the freshness and uniformity of packaged cheese and salad products to which this system of merchandising contributes has been the cause of a considerable increase in the use of such products. To encourage the purchase of packaged cheese and salad products in quantities sufficient to make this system of distribution economically possible is a reasonable policy in the promotion of competition.

Moreover, the discount by which such purchase is encouraged does not appear to inflict any perceptible injury upon those who do not receive it. The prices of the more frequently sold package cheese items at retail vary by as much as two or three cents; whereas the difference in the purchase price of such cheese products because of the five percent discount would amount to $\frac{3}{4}$ of a cent a package or less. Concerns which do not receive a discount are among those with the lowest retail prices, and concerns which do receive a discount among those with the highest. The retail price depends so much upon the character of the store, the buying power of its customers, the importance of its cheese trade, and the nearness of other competing stores that there is no basis for concluding that the price of these products is governed by the receipt of the discount. Considerable evidence in the record indicates that there is no appreciable diversion of trade in cheese products even where a two or three cent price difference exists; but, apart from this evidence, diversion of trade, which is one of the elements of injury to competition, can only be attributed to price differentials, if such differentials exercise a perceptible influence upon retail prices.

Evidence of injury to competition by impairment of the profits of some competitors is likewise absent. The profit margins of retailers who receive no discount are apparently adequate. The general testimony of such retailers that they are satisfied is reinforced by the fact that their operating margins in sales of cheese are roughly equivalent to the average margin in the sale of grocery products, in spite of the fact that the turnover of cheese products is more rapid than the average. The effect of failure to receive the discount is not the necessity of selling at a loss, but at most the receipt of a somewhat smaller profit than is received by others who pursue the same price policy. But even this effect upon profits is negligible. To a concern purchasing $5.00 worth of Kraft packaged cheese products every two weeks throughout the year the aggregate annual discount would be $6.50. Such remote and minute effects upon the income of certain competitors can not be regarded as injurious to competition within the meaning of the Statute.

The discount to group buyers who buy more than $100 worth of products in a week is alternative to the discount upon individual purchases of $5.00 worth. Its effect, therefore, is to make the discount available to certain groups when individual purchases are so low that they would not earn the discount. Instead of increasing, it reduces the disparities in purchase price which follow from the individual purchase discount already considered. The fact that this reduction operates only on behalf of group buyers means that such buyers are treated more favorably than certain stores which do not engage in group buying. Nevertheless, the considerations already set forth apply to this discount also, and lead to the conclusion that it does not work an injury to competition.

The range of discounts upon loaf cheese is greater than upon package cheese and salad products. The buyer who falls in the highest of four quantity brackets pays $2\frac{1}{2}$ cents a pound less than his competitor who falls in the lowest. However, respondent's method of delivering to buyers in the two upper brackets differs from that to buyers in the two lower brackets. Purchasers of 150 pounds or more of loaf cheese receive it direct from the warehouse at a delivery cost of about $7\frac{1}{2}$ cents per hundred pounds, which is roughly equivalent to $\frac{1}{10}$ of 1 percent of the sale price. Purchasers of less than 150 pounds receive it from the same truck which delivers package cheese and salad products. If the cost of loaf cheese deliveries from such trucks were considered equal to the average cost of delivery of all products by this means, the difference in cost between the two methods would be about \$3.70 per hundred pounds. Although there might well be argument that the delivery of loaf cheese is less expensive than the average, any reasonable allocation of cost would unquestionably leave a difference large enough to support the difference in price of one cent per 100 pounds which has been established between those who buy less than 150 pounds and those who buy 150 pounds or over. Indeed, there is a reasonable presumption that this difference in cost would justify the entire difference of $2\frac{1}{2}$ cents per pound between the prices paid by those who buy 750 pounds or more of loaf cheese and those who buy less than 30 pounds. The practical impossibility of making an accurate allocation of costs to each kind and amount of product delivered from the same truck is no ground for ignoring this reasonable inference.

Since the difference in price between those who buy loaf cheese in the two upper brackets and those who buy it in the two lower brackets is justified by cost, there is no need to examine further the question of competitive injury which may arise from this difference. There remain, however, price differences between the lowest and next lowest brackets and the highest and next highest brackets. These differences are not accounted for by differences in method of delivery. The discount of one cent a pound which becomes available to those who buy 30 pounds or over is roughly analogous to the five percent discount upon purchases of \$5.00 worth of package cheese, but amounts to less than 5 percent. The considerations pertinent to the question of injury to competition are not different in the case of this loaf cheese from those already raised about package cheese. Therefore, this discount can not be held injurious. The discount to buyers of 750 pounds or more of loaf cheese is only $\frac{1}{2}$ a cent a pound. This smaller rate of discount may be presumed to be of even less significance as a possible source of injury to competition, and nothing appears in evidence to counteract this presumption.

The Commission concludes that respondent, in setting up its pricing system to retailers and putting it into effect by the means which it uses, is engaged in interstate commerce and that the sales of its products to retailers are likewise made in the course of such commerce. A retailer who purchases respondent's goods from jobbers and wholesalers is considered by the Commission to be a "purchaser" within the meaning of the Robinson-Patman Act as well as retailers buying direct. This is because of the fact that respondent recognizes the retailers buying through jobbers as customers by personally soliciting them and by making effective its price policies and schedules as applied to them. A retailer is none the less a purchaser because he buys indirectly if, as here, the manufacturer deals with him directly in promoting the sale of his products and exercises control over the terms upon which he buys.

The Commission further concludes that the price differentials established by the respondent in the sales of its products to retailers do not tend to create a monopoly in respondent or to lessen or injure competition between respondent and its competitors. The Commission also concludes that such price differentials do not tend to injure competition between retailers reselling said products.

For the reasons herein stated the Commission is of the opinion that respondent is not violating subsection (a) of Section 2 of the Clayton Act, as amended, as charged in the complaint herein, and that an order of dismissal should issue.

ORDER DISMISSING COMPLAINT

This matter coming on to be heard by the Commission, and the Commission having duly considered the record herein and being now fully advised in the premises;

It is ordered that the complaint herein be, and the same hereby is dismissed, for the reasons set forth in a memorandum opinion filed simultaneously herewith.

COMPLAINT, OPINION, AND ORDER OF DISMISSAL IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION OF SEC. 2 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED OCT. 15, 1914, AS AMENDED BY AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED JUNE 19, 1936

Docket 2937. Complaint, Sept. 30, 1936—Decision, July 17, 1937

DISCRIMINATING IN PRICE—CLAYTON ACT, SEC. 2, SUBSEC. (a)—SELECTION OF CUSTOMERS—ACT'S SCOPE

The Act declares that nothing in it "shall prevent persons engaged in selling goods, wares, and merchandise in commerce from selecting their own customers in bona fide transactions and not in restraint of trade." So the Act does not purport to interfere with the right of a seller to select his customers. He may discriminate in the choice of his customers. Not until there is a discrimination in price among those chosen does Section 2 (a) of the Act have any application.

DISCRIMINATING IN PRICE—CLAYTON ACT, SEC. 2, SUBSECS. (a) AND (f)—SELECTION OF CUSTOMER—CHANGE OF POLICY AND TRANSITION PERIOD—WHERE SUPPORTING COSTS FOR DIFFERING PRICES AND BUSINESS INVOLVED NEGLIGIBLE

Where, on complaint charging respondent manufacturer of hard-surfaced felt base floor coverings sold as yard goods or in form of rugs under trade names "Neponset" and "Economy," and its sales subsidiary, with unlawfully discriminating in price in prices allowed to mail-order houses as compared with prices allowed to competitively engaged retailers, in violation of subsec. (a) of Sec. 2 of aforesaid act, and respondent mail-order house with violation of subsec. (f) of said Sec. 2, in knowingly receiving from said first described seller respondents such discrimination, it appeared that (1) at time of passage of aforesaid amending act only about 1 percent of all sales of said seller respondents was made to ordinary retailers direct, as a result of change in sales policy inaugurated about a year and a half prior to said time, and not long thereafter such seller respondents had discontinued all their warehouses and sales agents, no goods were sold direct to retailers, and jobbers and mail-order houses were sold at same net prices; (2) difference between cost of selling direct to ordinary retailers during period of discrimination concerned and cost of selling to mail-order houses exceeded difference in alleged unlawful discriminatory prices involved; (3) new sales policy of seller respondents was not one of discrimination in price between or among the two classes of customers which, exclusively, they had selected to sell in order to reduce distribution costs; and (4) any discrimination involved was only during four months' period of transition of policy of selling ordinary retailers direct, to one of supplying them through sales made to jobbers, and was incidental thereto and involved negligible proportion and amount of seller respondents' business:

Held, No violation by seller respondents and, case failing against them, so does case against buyer respondent, and entry of order for dismissal of complaint and termination of proceeding directed.

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress, approved June 19, 1936, Public 692 (the Robinson-Patman Act), amending Section 2 of an Act approved October 15, 1914 (the Clayton Act), the Federal Trade Commission hereby issues its complaint against Bird & Son, Inc., Bird Floor Covering Sales Corporation and Montgomery Ward & Co., Inc., stating its charges in that respect as follows:

I

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent, Bird & Son, Inc., is a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Massachusetts, with its office and principal place of business in the city of East Walpole, Mass. It maintains branch offices in New York and Chicago.

Respondent, Bird Floor Covering Sales Corporation is a subsidiary selling corporation wholly owned and operated by respondent Bird & Son, Inc., whose office and principal place of business is the same as that of respondent, Bird & Son, Inc.

Respondents, Bird & Son, Inc. and Bird Floor Covering Sales Corporation, are now and for many years have been engaged in the business of manufacturing, selling and distributing a hard surfaced felt base floor covering sold as yard goods or in the form of rugs under the trade names of "Neponset" and "Economy."

Respondent, Montgomery Ward & Co., Inc. is an Illinois corporation, with its office and principal place of business in the city of Chicago, State of Illinois, and is engaged in selling, among other articles of commerce, floor covering direct to consumers in the United States by means of mail orders and catalogs, and also through retail stores owned or controlled by it.

Respondents sell and distribute their products in commerce to their customers located in the several States of the United States causing said products when sold to be shipped from their respective places of business in the States of Massachusetts, New York, and Illinois to purchasers thereof located in the several States of the United States other than said stores.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of their businesses as aforesaid, respondents are now and for many years have been in substantial competition with other corporations, individuals, partnerships, and firms engaged in the business of selling and distributing floor covering in commerce between and among the various States of the United States.

PAR. 3. In the course and conduct of their businesses, as described in paragraphs 1 and 2 hereof, respondents, Bird & Son, Inc. and Bird Floor Covering Sales Corporation, since June 19, 1936, have been and are now discriminating in price, between different purchasers of their said product of like grade and quality by giving and allowing certain purchasers of floor covering different prices than given or allowed other of their said purchasers, competitively engaged in the resale of their product within the United States, as is more specifically shown in the following price list, #19-A dated July 1, 1936, issued by the respondent, Bird Floor Covering Sales Corporation. The prices shown below are net, after deducting rebates, cash allowances and handling allowances. The prices at which mail order house retail stores are sold refer to any quantity and are lower than the prices at which competing retailers are sold.

PAR. 4. The effect of said discriminations in price made by respondents, Bird & Son, Inc. and Bird Floor Covering Sales Corporation, as set forth in paragraph 3 hereof, has been, or may be substantially to lessen competition, or to injure, destroy, or prevent competition, in the sale and distribution of the said floor covering between the said respondents and other manufacturers and distributors of floor covering, and also between the respondent, Montgomery Ward & Co., Inc. and other purchasers of said product in granting said discriminatory prices; and the effect of said discriminations has been, or may be, to tend to create a monopoly in the said favored customer receiving said discriminatory price from said respondents in the distribution of said product in the United States.

PAR. 5. The foregoing alleged acts of said respondents, Bird & Son, Inc. and Bird Floor Covering Sales Corporation are a violation of Section 2 (a) of said Act of Congress, approved June 19, 1936, entitled "An Act to amend Section 2 of the Act entitled 'An Act to supplement existing laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes', approved October 15, 1914, as amended (U. S. C., title 15, sec. 13), and for other purposes."

II

PARAGRAPH 1. Paragraphs 1 and 2 of the first charge hereof are hereby adopted and made a part of this charge as fully as if set out herewith verbatim.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of its business as described in paragraphs 1 and 2 of charge 1 hereof, respondent, Montgomery Ward & Co., Inc., since June 19, 1936, has knowingly received and is now knowingly receiving from respondents Bird & Son, Inc., and Bird Floor Covering Sales Corporation, a discrimination in price as more fully set forth in paragraph 3 of the first charge hereof, by receiving a lower price than given or allowed other purchasers of like grade and quality of floor covering purchased from the aforesaid respondents. Respondent Montgomery Ward & Co., Inc. is enabled to purchase floor covering, by reason of, to wit, a certain contract entered into on or about June 10, 1936 with Bird Floor Covering Sales Corporation, 9 x 12 rugs for $3.82 apiece, regardless of quantities purchased and by warehouse and carload lot shipments at a price of $3.64 apiece, whereas rugs of like grade and quality are purchased by retailers from said respondents, Bird & Son, Inc. and Bird Floor Covering Sales Corporation for from $4.85 to $4.24 apiece and similar differences in price exist on the other floor covering, as more fully set forth in paragraph 3 of charge 1 hereof.

PAR. 3. The foregoing alleged acts of said respondent, Montgomery Ward & Co., Inc. are in violation of Section 2 (f) of said Act of Congress approved June 19, 1936 entitled "An Act to amend Section 2 of the Act entitled 'An Act to supplement existing laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes', approved October 15, 1914, as amended (U. S. C., title 15, sec. 13), and for other purposes."

MEMORANDUM OPINION

This case involves a complaint charging respondents with unlawful discrimination in price contrary to the provisions of the so-called Clayton Act of 1914, as amended by the so-called Robinson-Patman Act approved June 19, 1936. Respondents, Bird & Son, Inc., and Bird Floor Covering Sales Corporation, are charged with selling at discriminatory prices in favor of respondent, Montgomery Ward & Company, Inc., in violation of Section 2 (a) of the act, and Montgomery Ward & Company is charged with knowingly receiving such prices, all to the injury of retail dealers competing with the latter concern. The commodity involved is hard surfaced felt base floor covering.

The case was tried and a record of the evidence presented in support and in defense of the charges is before the Commission.

The facts are that between the passage of the Robinson-Patman Act and issuance of the complaint on September 30, 1936, retailer-competitors of Montgomery Ward & Company, when purchasing from the seller-respondents, were subject to prices that were higher than those paid by Montgomery Ward & Company and other mail order houses by as much as 14 and 18 per cent. At the time of passage of the Robinson-Patman Act, however, only about 1 per cent of all the sales of seller-respondents was made to ordinary retailers direct. The remainder was being sold to jobbers for resale to retailers and to mail order houses such as Montgomery Ward. This was the outcome of a change in sales policy inaugurated about a year and a half before the Robinson-Patman Act was passed. Under the new policy, direct sales to retailers were discontinued and their needs were supplied through jobbers. By the time the complaint could be tried, the seller-respondents had discontinued all their warehouses and sales agencies, and in fact, most of them had been discontinued before the act was passed. By the end of October 1936, no goods were being sold direct to retailers, while jobbers and mail order houses were being sold at the same net prices.

With reference to the amount of the price discrimination which existed during the 4-month period following passage of the Act, evidence was introduced by seller-respondents showing that the cost of selling to mail order houses was 18.6 percent as against a cost of selling direct to ordinary retailers at 47.1 percent. Thus, costs differed by over 28 percent while the difference in price was less than 20 percent. This evidence was corroborated by an accountant for the Commission. Since the Act specifically permits differentials in price that "make only due allowance for differences in the cost of manufacture, sale, or delivery resulting from the differing methods or quantities in which such commodities are to such purchasers sold or delivered," the amount of discrimination existing in this case was apparently within the terms of this proviso. These considerations would appear to be controlling.

It also appears, however, that the present sales policy of seller-respondents is not one of discrimination in price between or among the only two classes of customers they have chosen to sell. The Act declares that nothing in it "shall prevent persons engaged in selling goods, wares, and merchandise in commerce from selecting their own customers in bona fide transaction and not in restraint of trade." So the act does not purport to interfere with the right of a seller to select his customers. He may discriminate in the choice of his customers. Not until there is a discrimination in price among those chosen does Section 2 (a) of the act have any application. There is no suggestion that the selection of customers here involved was the result of any combination in restraint of trade. Rather, it was in order to reduce seller-respondents' costs of distribution. The courts have consistently upheld the right of individual traders to select their customers in the absence of such combination.

The price discrimination alleged is to be found only during a 4-month period of transition from a policy of selling ordinary retailers direct, to one of supplying them through sales made to jobbers. Any price discrimination during that period was incidental to that transition and involved a negligible proportion and amount of seller-respondents' business.

Since the case against seller-respondents fails for the reasons above stated, the case against buyer-respondent, for receiving an unlawful price discrimination, also fails.

The Commission therefore directs the entry of an order for dismissal of the complaint and termination of the proceeding herein.

Now, therefore, it is hereby ordered, That the complaint in this proceeding be, and the same hereby is dismissed, for the reasons set forth in a memorandum opinion filed simultaneously herewith.

Complaint

IN THE MATTER OF
HOLLYWOOD HAT COMPANY, INC.

COMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION OF SUBSEC. (A) OF SEC. 2 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED OCT. 15, 1914, AS AMENDED BY AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED JUNE 19, 1936, AND OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 26, 1914

Docket 3020. Complaint, Dec. 23, 1936—Decision, July 17, 1937

Where a corporation engaged in manufacture, sale, and distribution of women's hats to customers in the several States, largest customer of which was a syndicate maintaining in excess of 200 millinery departments in stores located throughout the United States, in competition with, in many cases, other customers of such hat manufacturer—

- (a) Sold, to said customer, in practically all instances, assorted suede hats at $21.00 per dozen and assorted velours at $36.00 per dozen, while contemporaneously selling competitor-purchasers, of much smaller volume, assorted suede and assorted velour hats of same style, grade, and quality at prices of $24.00 or $27.00 per dozen for the former, and $39.00 or $42.00 per dozen for the latter; without justification therefor by reason of differences in cost of manufacture, sale, or delivery resulting from differing methods or quantities in which such commodities were to such purchasers sold and delivered, or other justification under the saving exceptions or provisos of the statute, and with result that effect of such discrimination might be to destroy, injure, or prevent competition with such customers who received benefit thereof;

Held, That such discriminations were in violation of Section 2 of the Clayton Act, as amended; and

Where aforesaid corporation—

- (b) Shipped, pursuant to order offered a customer of style line #200 hats at $27.00 per dozen, and placed and accepted, at $24.00 a dozen, substituted hats of a cheaper grade and quality than that shown and priced in sample line at $27.00, as above set forth, without knowledge or consent of customer placing order for the superior grade and quality; and
- (c) Shipped a jobber, pursuant to order therefrom for its assorted #100 line of Ballibuntl hats at a price of $25.50 per dozen, Ballibuntl hats of the cheapest grade customarily sold by it for $24.00 a dozen;

With result of misleading its customers, in that articles of millinery of a grade and quality inferior to that ordered were received:

Held, That such acts and practices were to the prejudice of the public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition.

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress, approved October 15, 1914, (the Clayton Act) as amended by an Act approved

June 19, 1936, Public 692 (the Robinson-Patman Act); and pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission hereby issues its complaint against Hollywood Hat Company, Inc., stating its charges in respect thereto as follows:

I

PARAGRAPH 1. The respondent, Hollywood Hat Company, Inc., is a corporation organized under the laws of New York with its principal place of business at 42 West 39th Street, New York City, and is and has been engaged in the business of manufacturing and selling women's hats. Pursuant to such sales, and as a part thereof, respondent ships and has shipped its hats from its place of business through and into various other States of the United States to the purchasers thereof.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid, respondent is now, and for many years past has been, in substantial competition with other corporations, individuals, partnerships, and firms engaged in the business of selling and distributing women's hats in commerce between and among the various States of the United States; and the customers of respondent have been and are now in competition with each other.

PAR. 3. In the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid, said respondent, contrary to the provisions of subsection (a) of Section 2 of said Act of Congress approved October 15, 1914, as amended, has been, since June 19, 1936, and now is, discriminating in price between different purchasers of its said hats of like grade and quality, sold for resale within the United States, by giving and allowing certain purchasers, particularly Si Fish, Inc., a retail dealer of women's hats with retail stores at San Francisco, Sacramento, and Oakland, Calif., different prices than those given or allowed other of its purchasers competitively engaged in the resale of women's hats, particularly in said cities of San Francisco, Sacramento, and Oakland, Calif., and other cities of the United States. Respondent discriminates as aforesaid by allowing the said Si Fish, Inc., and others, a lower price for women's hats than it allows other customers of respondent competing with them.

PAR. 4. The effect of said discriminations in price made by respondent, as described in paragraph 3 hereof, has been, or may be, substantially to lessen competition, or to injure, destroy, or prevent competition in the sale and distribution of women's hats between those of respondent's customers who receive the benefit of such discrimination and lower prices, and competing customers who do not receive such benefits and are charged higher prices.

PAR. 5. The foregoing alleged acts of said respondent, Hollywood Hat Company, Inc., are a violation of subsection (a) of Section 2 of said Act of Congress entitled "An Act to supplement existing laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes," approved October 15, 1914, as amended by said Act approved June 19, 1936.

II

PARAGRAPH 1. Paragraphs 1 and 2 of charge 1 hereof are hereby adopted and made a part of this charge as fully as if set out herein verbatim.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid, respondent has followed the practice of filling orders for its hats with hats of a grade and quality lower than its customers are led to believe they will receive by the exhibition of samples by, and representations of, its salesmen and other agents at the time of soliciting and receiving such orders.

PAR. 3. The foregoing acts and practices of respondent, as described in paragraph 2 of this charge, constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce in that said acts and practices have a tendency to lead its said customers to believe that they are receiving women's hats of a higher grade and quality than they do in fact receive, and of a higher grade and quality than the women's hats they are offered by competitors of respondent at the same or similar prices, thus diverting business to respondent from its said competitors.

PAR. 4. The acts and things hereinabove in this charge alleged to have been done by respondent are to the prejudice of the public and the competitors of respondent, and constitute an unfair method of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914.

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress entitled "An Act to supplement existing laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes," approved October 15, 1914, as amended (U. S. C., title 15, sec. 13) and pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914 (U. S. C., title 15, sec. 45), the Federal Trade Commission, on December 23, 1936, issued and served its complaint in this proceeding upon the respondent, Hollywood Hat Company, Inc., a corporation, charging it with discriminating in price between different purchasers of hats in violation of subsection (a) of Section 2 of the aforesaid act of October 15, 1914, and charging it with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of the said act of September 26, 1914.

After the issuance of said complaint, the respondent herein filed answer thereto. Thereafter said respondent petitioned the Commission to allow it to withdraw the answer theretofore filed and, pursuant to permission granted by the Commission, filed its substituted answer thereto, in which substituted answer the respondent stated that it waived hearing on the charges set forth in the complaint, that it admitted all of the material facts alleged in the complaint, and the Commission having duly considered the same, and being now fully advised in the premises, makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusions drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. Said corporate respondent, Hollywood Hat Company, Inc., now is, and at all times since June 19, 1936, has been a corporation organized under the laws of the State of New York, with its principal office and manufacturing plant located at 65 West 39th Street, New York, N. Y. At all times herein mentioned said respondent has been engaged in the business of selling and distributing women's hats to customers located in the several States of the United States.

PAR. 2. The millinery industry consists of approximately 1200 establishments, more than 50% of which are located in New York City. New York milliners comprise about 70% of the industry by volume. The gross annual business of all milliners in the United States is approximately one hundred million dollars.

PAR. 3. Said respondent purchases the so-called "body" of the hat which it styles, reshapes and frequently ornaments with brilliants or similar articles. Straw and felt hats are seasonally manufactured and sold. The straw hat manufacturing season extends from December to May inclusive and reaches its height between February 1 and March 15. The manufacturing season for felt, suede or velour hats made from fur felts commences about July 1 and extends through October. The respondent has a longer season than most manufacturers in the industry. Generally, the straw hats are first sold in Florida and California and according to public acceptance the styles are developed. Each design or style is given a number by the respondent herein and generally so in the industry. There are certain variations from such style numbers by reason of desire of the buyers for certain ornaments or different grade and quality of bodies.

PAR. 4. Fur felt bodies were purchased by respondent during the period from June 19, 1936 to January 1, 1937 at prices of $8.00, $8.50 and $10.00 per dozen, the prices depending upon size and quality and the advancement of the season. Bodies advanced in price steadily from June to August 1936. Price of fur felts for the bodies of the same general class did not vary at the same time by reason of grade and quality more than 50¢ a dozen. Suede is produced by brushing and clipping a felt base which, prior to being sueded, is somewhat thicker than the felt of which plain felt hats are constructed. Poorer grades of suedes can easily be distinguished from the higher grades but it is difficult to distinguish the intermediate successive grades.

PAR. 5. There is a great variation in the number of hats sold in the several style numbers. Many styles are developed early in the season and manufacturing processes completed for production, and styles which do not attract consumers are closed out as the season progresses. The designers, stock room employees, blockers, and other employees engaged in the preparation of the hat for trimming are carried on a weekly wage, but other operations in forming the hat and the important operation of trimming are on a piece work basis. The unit cost of trimming does not vary between large and small orders in the production styles in which there is considerable selling. Differentials are established for trimming graduated with selling prices. Thus, for labor in trimming hats of the $16.50 to $19.50 per dozen grade the prices for stated operations in applying similar trim are $1.25, $2.00 and $2.50. Whereas, hats that sell for $19.50 to $28.50 per dozen required, in one instance, labor costs for trimming of $1.40, $2.35 and $2.75. Similar trimming on hats of like style, but higher quality, selling from $28.50 to $39.00 a dozen necessitated labor costs from $1.65, $2.75 and $3.30 per dozen. Occasionally, buyers require variation from the standard trim for a given style, usually for small lots of a few dozen hats. In such instances, special piece work rates are contemporaneously agreed upon between the manufacturer and the head of the labor committee representing the employees who do the trimming. Whereas, the labor contracts of the respondent are all graduated in accordance with price range classifications. Certain other manufacturers producing hats of more restricted quality variation have labor contracts with the unions which are fixed regardless of selling price. The respondent's business is almost exclusively with jobbers and "syndicates," representing numerous retail outlets and in the quantities customarily purchased there is no major variation in production costs by reason of the quantity involved in a particular order so far as the piece work labor is concerned. Hats are customarily packed in lots of three to the box.

PAR. 6. The largest customer of respondent is a syndicate maintaining in excess of two hundred millinery departments in stores located throughout the United States, many of said departments being competitive with other customers of Hollywood Hat Company, Inc.

PAR. 7. During the felt hat buying season, commencing about July 1, 1936, and extending through the fall of 1936, the respondent, Hollywood Hat Company, Inc., sold, in practically all instances, to its said largest customer suede hats, usually designated as assorted suede, at $21.00 per dozen. Similarly assorted velours were, in practically all instances, sold to such customer at $36.00 per dozen. Competitors of this largest customer, purchasers of much smaller volume, were sold assorted suede and assorted velour hats of the same style, grade and quality, at the same time, at prices of $24.00 or $27.00 per dozen for suede hats and at $39.00 or $42.00 per dozen for velour hats.

PAR. 8. Si Fish, Inc. is a corporation located in the State of California, engaged in the retail sale of millinery in competition with others engaged in similar business. It operates five retail stores in California. It employs a salaried buyer located in the city of New York who purchases millinery for its account. The salaried buyer representing Si Fish, Inc. likewise represents some 500 retail outlets and purchases approximately $2,500,000 worth of millinery per year.

PAR. 9. In the cities where Si Fish, Inc., operates its several retail stores are located competitors who purchase millinery from the Hollywood Hat Company, Inc., respondent herein. Said competitors purchase frequently directly from the manufacturers and the respondent and otherwise.

PAR. 10. The respondent herein, Hollywood Hat Company, Inc., during the months of July and August employed a salesman in the State of California to sell its millinery. During the month of June 1936, the aforesaid sales representative of the respondent, Hollywood Hat Company, Inc., called upon Si Fish, Inc. in the State of California and offered to sell an assortment of style line #200 hats at $27.00 a dozen. This sales representative was advised by Si Fish, Inc. that the same hat could be purchased by Si Fish, Inc. through its salaried buyer in New York for $24.00 a dozen. Thereupon the salesman in California accepted an order for seven dozen assorted style line #200 hats at $24.00 a dozen and advised the respondent herein that he had accepted the order at $24.00 a dozen rather than at $27.00 per dozen because of the statement made by Si Fish, Inc. Thereafter on July 3, 1936, Hollywood Hat Company, Inc. accepted the order at $24.00 per dozen and so advised its salesman in Los Angeles by letter, stating also that "in order for me to fill the order at this price I will be compelled to use a cheaper price body. The reason I did not want to return this order is that I do not want to get in wrong with their New York office." And further advising that the salesman not tell Si Fish, Inc. of the substitution of a cheaper grade and quality than that shown which was priced in the sample line at $27.00 per dozen. Replacement orders for style #200 hats were placed by Si Fish, Inc. through its salaried buyer in New York City and shipped on August 4 and August 27, 1936 as evidenced respectively by invoices A 2043, A 2342, and A 2343, all at a price of $24.00 per dozen.

Findings

PAR. 11. In manufacturing straw hats, the respondent purchases an imported straw body known as Ballibuntl which is purchased by the respondent in assorted lots containing approximately 10% of the finest quality, grade 1, 40% each of intermediate grades, designated as 2 and 3, and 10% of the cheapest grade, designated as grade 4. The casual observer can detect little, if any, difference between grades 1 and 2 or 2 and 3 but there is a marked difference between grades 1 and 4. For practical economic reasons, the respondent separates the Ballibuntl bodies into two quality lines for which during the past season prices of $25.50 and $24.00 were charged, grades 1 and 2 being used in the hats sold for $25.50 and grades 3 and 4 were consumed in the manufacture of the $24.00 price line.

PAR. 12. During the month of March 1937 respondent, Hollywood Hat Company, Inc., sold a jobber in the city of Chicago assorted #100 line Ballibuntl hats at a price of $25.50 per dozen and shipped, pursuant to the order for $25.50 per dozen hats, Ballibuntl hats of the cheapest grade customarily sold by respondent for $24.00 per dozen.

PAR. 13. Respondent's acts in the matters referred to in paragraphs 10 and 12 resulted in misleading its customers in that articles of millinery of a grade and quality inferior to that ordered were received. The difference between the $27.00 per dozen grade of suede hats and the $24.00 per dozen grade of similar merchandise is so slight as not to be readily discernible by the average retailer unless samples of each grade are at the same time available for comparison.

PAR. 14. The Commission concludes that the aforesaid acts and practices of the respondent, Hollywood Hat Company, Inc., are to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce, within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

PAR. 15. The Commission concludes that the price discriminations found in paragraph 7 were not justified by reason of differences in the cost of manufacture, sale or delivery resulting from the differing methods or quantities in which such commodities were to such purchasers sold or delivered, nor justified by any other exception or proviso contained in Section 2 of the Clayton Act as amended. The Commission further concludes that the effect of such discrimination may be to injure, destroy or prevent competition with such customers who receive the benefit of the said discrimination. The Commission, therefore, finds that the said discriminations were and are in violation of Section 2 of said Clayton Act as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act.

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

This proceeding having been heard by the Federal Trade Commission upon the complaint of the Commission and the substituted answer filed herein on July 6, 1937 by respondent admitting all the material allegations of the complaint to be true and waiving the taking of further evidence and all other intervening procedure, and the Commission having made its findings as to the facts and its conclusions, which findings and conclusions are hereby made a part hereof, that said respondent has violated the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," and also violated the provisions of an Act of Congress entitled "An Act to supplement existing laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes," approved October 15, 1914, as amended;

It is ordered, That the respondent, Hollywood Hat Company, Inc., its officers, representatives, agents, and employees, in connection with the offering for sale, sale and distribution of hats in interstate commerce or in the District of Columbia, do forthwith cease and desist from, selling, shipping, and invoicing millinery of a grade and quality different from the goods ordered, unless the buyer is advised of such difference.

It is further ordered, That the respondent, Hollywood Hat Company, Inc., its officers, representatives, agents, and employees, do forthwith cease and desist from the unlawful discriminations in price found in paragraph 7 of the aforesaid findings as to the facts and conclusions.

It is further ordered, That the respondent, Hollywood Hat Company, Inc., its officers, representatives, agents, and employees cease and desist from engaging in any similar discrimination in price in sales in interstate commerce under substantially like circumstances and conditions between purchasers competitively engaged with one another in the resale of suede hats of like assortment, style, grade and quality.

It is further ordered, That the said respondent, Hollywood Hat Company, Inc., within 60 days from the date of the service upon it of this order, shall file with the Commission a report in writing, setting forth in detail the manner and form in which it is complying and has complied with the order to cease and desist hereinabove set forth.

OF SUBSEC. C OF SEC. 2 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED OCT. 15, 1914,
AS AMENDED BY AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED JUNE 19, 1936

Docket 3032. Complaint, Jan. 13, 1937—Decision, July 17, 1937

Where manufacturers, processors, and producers engaged in sale of commodities, in course of interstate commerce, to distributing concerns and buyers of such commodities in course of such commerce, through orders placed with it in behalf of such buyers by a purchasing agency engaged in (1) sale under contract of a market information service to over 2,400 distributing concerns scattered over the United States, and consisting principally of wholesalers of groceries, drugs, hardware, plumbing, automobile and electrical supplies, lumber, stationery, and other general merchandise, and in (2) providing, under said contract as interpreted, optional purchasing service for its contracting buyers under which service by it, if any, to seller was incidental, seller shipped direct to buyer in response to order placed with such purchasing agency by buyer, buyers rendered no service to sellers or to agency which, as agent and representative of buyer and subject to his control, received and accepted, for use of and payment over to buyer, in its entirety, such brokerage, with result that such payments, in effect, were actually made from seller to buyer, and latter received a discount in price equivalent to brokerage fee paid, and such buyers secured a lower price on commodities thus purchased than others, not members of such purchasing organization, received, on similar goods in like quantity bought direct from such sellers; in pursuance of a general plan and scheme whereby fees and commissions paid by sellers were made available to and transmitted to buyer—

(a) Payed fees and commissions as brokerage on the sale of commodities to various distributing concerns and buyers engaged in purchase of commodities in course of interstate commerce, with knowledge of the fact that such fees were intended to be and were being paid over to such buyers by aforesaid purchasing company, as above set forth; and

Where distributing concerns engaged in sale of commodities in course of interstate commerce, and purchasers of the market information service and purchasing service of the purchasing company or agency hereinabove described—

(b) Received and accepted fees and commissions paid as brokerage by such various sellers, as hereinabove set forth, in connection with purchase of commodities by such buyers through such purchasing agency; and

Where such purchasing agency, as hereinabove set forth, as instrumentality and means through which such sellers unlawfully were enabled to make payment of such fees and commissions as brokerage to such buyers and latter were enabled to receive and accept same—

(c) Received such fees and commissions as brokerage from aforesaid sellers; and

(d) Transmitted and paid over same to aforesaid buyers:

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress, approved October 15, 1914, entitled "An Act to supplement existing laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes," as amended by an Act of Congress, approved June 19, 1936, entitled "An Act to amend Section 2 of the Act entitled 'An Act to supplement existing laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes,' approved October 15, 1914, as amended (U. S. C. title 15, sec. 13), and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that the respondents named above in the caption hereof and hereinafter more particularly designated and described, have violated, and are now violating, the provisions of Subsection (c) of Section 2 of said act as amended, hereby issues its complaint against the said respondents, stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent, Biddle Purchasing Company, is a corporation organized and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the State of New Jersey with its office and principal place of business located at 107 Chambers Street in the city and State of New York.

PAR. 2. Respondent, General Grocer Company, is a corporation organized and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Delaware, with an office and principal place of business located at 301 South Eighth Street, in the city of St. Louis, State of Missouri. Respondent, Smart & Final Co., Ltd., is a corporation organized and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the State of California, with an office and principal place of business located at 315 Marine Avenue, in the city of Wilmington, State of California. Respondent, The Eavey Co., is a corporation organized and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Ohio, with an office and principal place of business located at Detroit and Third Streets, in the city of Xenia, State of Ohio. Respondent, Michigan Trading Corporation, is a corporation organized and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Michigan, with an office and principal place of business located at 140 Twelfth Street, in the city of Detroit, State of Michigan. Respondent, C. G. Meaker Co., Inc., is a corporation organized and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the State of New York, with an office and principal place of business located at 139 Wall Street in the city of Auburn, State of New York. Respondent, Midden-dorf & Rohrs, is a copartnership composed of Peter Rohrs and John Rohrs, with an office and principal place of business located at 3 Little West Twelfth Street in the city and State of New York. Respondent, Koll Grocer Company, is a corporation organized and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Kentucky, with an office and principal place of business located in the city of Owensboro, State of Kentucky.

PAR. 3. Respondent, Dannemiller Coffee Company, is an importing corporation organized and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the State of New York with an office and principal place of business located at 116 39th Street, in the city of Brooklyn, State of New York. Respondent, Colonial Molasses Company, Inc., is a corporation organized and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the State of New York, with an office and principal place of business located at 616 Kent Avenue, in the city of Brooklyn, State of New York. Respondent, Albert Dickinson Company, is a corporation organized and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Illinois, with an office and principal place of business located at 2750 West 35th Street, in the city of Chicago, State of Illinois. Respondent, Ervin A. Rice Company, is a corporation organized and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Illinois, with an office and principal place of business located at 2230 South LaSalle Street, in the city of Chicago, State of Illinois. Respondent, Cava Packing Company, is a corporation organized and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the State of California, with an office and principal place of business located in the city of Salinas, State of California. Respondent, Godchaux Sugars, Inc., is a corporation organized and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Louisiana, with an office and principal place of business located at Masonic Temple Building in the city of New Orleans, State of Louisiana.

PAR. 4. Said respondent, Biddle Purchasing Company, is engaged in the business of providing market information and purchasing services for numerous and divers wholesalers, jobbers, merchants, and dealers located in the several States of the United States, certain of whom are named in paragraph 2 above and joined as respondents herein, and being hereinafter more particularly described and referred to for convenience as respondent buyers. Said respondent, Biddle Purchasing Company, in the course and conduct of its business, as aforesaid, pursues a policy and practice of purchasing commodities, particularly foodstuffs, for the wholesalers, jobbers, merchants, and dealers above referred to, from numerous and divers manufacturers, processors, importers, and producers, located in the several States of the United States, certain of whom are named in paragraph 3 above and joined as respondents herein, and being hereinafter more particularly described and referred to for convenience as respondent sellers. In the course and conduct of its business, as aforesaid, said respondent, Biddle Purchasing Company, represents and acts for or on behalf of said respondent buyers and the other buyers above mentioned generally and as a group or class engaged in common practices, and specifically for each and every named respondent buyer, in the purchase of commodities, which are transported between and among the several States, whenever specifically requested so to do, and in the manner and form specified, directed, and ordered by said respondent buyers, and such other buyers acting individually.

PAR. 5. That said respondent buyers named in paragraph 2 above are each engaged in the business of buying commodities usually from sellers located in States other than the State in which such buyers are located and of reselling such commodities to their customers.

Said respondent buyers are fairly typical and representative members of a large group or class of wholesalers, jobbers, merchants, and dealers all of whom have by contract subscribed to the market and buying service furnished by respondent Biddle Purchasing Company. Said group or class embraces approximately 2,400 of such dealers and is so numerous as to make it impracticable to specifically name each and every one of them as respondents herein or to bring them before the Commission in this proceeding. All of said buyers are or have been engaged in similar practices to those hereinafter charged against the respondent buyers.

PAR. 6. Said respondent sellers named in paragraph 3 above are each engaged in the business of selling commodities usually to buyers located in States other than the State in which said sellers are respectively located. Said respondent sellers are fairly typical and representative members of a large group or class of manufacturers, processors, importers, and producers, engaged in the common practice of selling some of their commodities, in interstate commerce, through respondent Biddle Purchasing Company, to said respondent buyers and other buyers of the above class or group who use the purchasing services of said respondent Biddle Purchasing Company. Said group or class of said sellers comprises a large number of such manufacturers, processors, importers, and producers and are too numerous to be individually named herein as respondents.

PAR. 7. Respondent Biddle Purchasing Company, in the course and conduct of its said business, receives orders to purchase commodities, particularly groceries and foodstuffs, from members of said group of buyers, including respondent buyers, located in the various States of the United States, and transmits such orders to and executes the same with members of said group of sellers, including respondent sellers, who in most cases are located in States of the United States other than the State in which such buyer or buyers are located. As a result of the transmission of said orders by such buyers to respondent Biddle Purchasing Company, the execution of the same by said respondent at the instance and request of said buyer or buyers, and the acceptance of said orders by said sellers or one or more of them, goods, wares and merchandise particularly foodstuffs, are in the case of each order and in a continuous succession of such orders sold and delivered by one or more of the said sellers to one or more of the said buyers. By such means and in the manner stated all of the respondents cause to be transported from one State to another goods and commodities to be resold to the buyers' customers or to consumers. In the operations and activities referred to, each and every one of the respondents is engaged in interstate commerce, in practices which contemplate and result in the transportation of commodities in interstate commerce and in making sales and purchases which directly affect and bring about such commerce.

PAR. 8. In the course of the buying and selling transactions hereinabove referred to, resulting in the delivery of commodities from one or more of the said sellers to one or more of the said buyers, by means of the purchasing services of respondent Biddle Purchasing Company, as agent for said buyers, said sellers have transmitted and do transmit, pay to and deliver to said respondent Biddle Purchasing Company, a so-called brokerage fee or commission, the amount of which varies, but which is usually between one and five per cent of the quoted sale price agreed upon by buyer and seller. Said respondent Biddle Purchasing Company has and does receive such fees and commissions for the use and benefit of said buyers and has transmitted and does transmit and pay over said fees or commissions to said buyers, in the amount and to the extent to which such fees or commissions are received by it, such payments to the individual buyer being the amount paid by the individual seller in the given transaction to which such buyer is a party.

PAR. 9. In all of said transactions respondent Biddle Purchasing Company is the agent and representative of said buyers, acting for them and in their behalf and under their direct control. In fact, such so-called brokerage fees or commissions are not transmitted by said sellers to respondent Biddle Purchasing Company nor are the same received, held or retained by said Biddle Purchasing Company as payment for any services rendered by said respondent Biddle Purchasing Company to said sellers, but on the contrary such fees and commissions are so paid and received for the use of said buyers. In fact such fees or commissions are not paid to said buyers by respondent Biddle Purchasing Company as compensation for any services rendered to it by said buyers. The payment of said fees or commissions by said sellers to said buyers through the intermediary respondent Biddle Purchasing Company and the receipt and acceptance of such fees and commissions by said buyers from said sellers, through said intermediary, in the manner and under the circumstances hereinabove set forth, is in violation of the provisions of section 2, subsection (C) of the act described in the preamble hereof. The receipt of said fees and commissions by respondent Biddle Purchasing Company from said sellers and the acceptance thereof for the benefit of said buyers, and the transmission of and payment of the same by respondent Biddle Purchasing Company to said buyers is in violation of the terms of said statute.

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved October 15, 1914, entitled "An Act to supplement existing laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes", as amended by an Act of Congress approved June 19, 1936, entitled "An Act to amend Section 2 of the Act entitled 'An Act to supplement existing laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes' approved October 15, 1914, as amended (U. S. C. title 15, sec. 13), and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission on January 13, 1937, issued and served its complaint in this proceeding upon the respondents named in the caption hereof, charging them with violating the provisions of subsection C of section 2 of the said act as amended. After the issuance of said complaint and the filing of respondents' answers thereto, testimony and other evidence in support of the allegations of said complaint were introduced by Allen C. Phelps and Albert W. Chapman, Attorneys for the Commission, before John W. Addison, an examiner of the Commission, theretofore duly designated by it, and in opposition to the allegations of the complaint by Davies, Richberg, Beebe, Busick & Richardson and Samuel J. Rawak, attorneys for all of the above named respondents except respondents Dannemiller Coffee Company, Albert Dickinson Company, Cava Packing Co., and Godchaux Sugars, Inc., and by Tenney, Harding, Sherman & Rogers, Attorneys for respondent Albert Dickinson Company, Erwin C. Easton, Attorney for respondent Cava Packing Co., Milling, Godchaux, Sall & Milling, Attorneys for respondent Godchaux, Sugars, Inc.; and said testimony and other evidence was duly recorded and filed in the office of the Commission. Thereafter, the proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on the said complaint, the answer thereto, testimony and other evidence, briefs in support of the complaint and in opposition thereto, and the oral arguments of counsel aforesaid; and the Commission having duly considered the same, and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public, and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent Biddle Purchasing Company is a corporation organized and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the State of New Jersey with its office and principal place of business located at 107 Chambers Street in the city and State of New York.

PAR. 2. Respondent, General Grocer Company, is a corporation organized and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Delaware, with an office and principal place of business located at 301 South Eighth Street, in the city of St. Louis, State of Missouri. Respondent, Smart & Final Co., Ltd., is a corporation organized and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the State of California, with an office and principal place of business located at 315 Marine Avenue, in the city of Wilmington, State of California. Respondent, the Eavey Co., is a corporation organized and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Ohio, with an office and principal place of business located at Detroit and Third Streets, in the city of Xenia, State of Ohio. Respondent, Michigan Trading Corporation, is a corporation organized and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Michigan, with an office and principal place of business located at 140 Twelfth Street, in the city of Detroit, State of Michigan. Respondent, C. G. Meaker Co., Inc., is a corporation organized and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the State of New York, with an office and principal place of business located at 139 Wall Street in the city of Auburn, State of New York. Respondent, Middendorf & Rohrs, is a copartnership composed of Peter Rohrs and John Rohrs, with an office and principal place of business located at 3 Little West Twelfth Street in the city and State of New York. Respondent, Koll Grocery Company, is a corporation organized and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Kentucky, with an office and principal place of business located in the city of Owensboro, State of Kentucky.

PAR. 3. Respondent, Dannemiller Coffee Company, is an importing corporation organized and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the State of New York with an office and principal place of business located at 116 39th Street, in the city of Brooklyn, State of New York. Respondent, Colonial Molasses Company, Inc., is a corporation organized and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the State of New York, with an office and principal place of business located at 616 Kent Avenue, in the city of Brooklyn, State of New York. Respondent, Albert Dickinson Company, is a corporation organized and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Illinois, with an office and principal place of business located at 2750 West 35th Street, in the city of Chicago, State of Illinois. Respondent, Ervin A. Rice Company, is a corporation organized and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Illinois, with an office and principal place of business located at 2230 South LaSalle Street, in the city of Chicago, State of Illinois. Respondent, Cava Packing Company, is a corporation organized and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the State of California, with an office and principal place of business located in the city of Salinas, State of California. Respondent, Godchaux Sugars, Inc., is a corporation organized and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Louisiana, with an office and principal place of business located at Masonic Temple Building in the city of New Orleans, State of Louisiana.

PAR. 4. Respondent Biddle Purchasing Company is engaged in the business of selling a market information service and also purchasing services to over 2,400 distributing concerns scattered over the United States, who are principally wholesalers of groceries, drugs, hardware, plumbing, automobile and electrical supplies, lumber, stationery, and other general merchandise. These distributing concerns are located in 744 cities in every State of the United States, except Nevada, and in Hawaii, Canada, and the District of Columbia. Respondents named in paragraph 2 hereof are among the distributing concerns purchasing the market information service and the purchasing services of respondent Biddle Purchasing Company and they are representative members of the entire group, insofar as the practices charged in the complaint are concerned. This group will hereafter be referred to as buyers. In making available and providing its purchasing services to the said buyers, the Biddle Purchasing Company agrees to and does purchase merchandise for said buyers from more than 5,000 individual manufacturers, processors, importers, or producers who are scattered over the United States. Respondent manufacturers, processors, and producers named in paragraph 3 hereof are representative of this entire group, all of whom in making sales to the buyers above mentioned through respondent Biddle Purchasing Company use the same methods as the named respondents. This group will hereafter be referred to as sellers.

PAR. 5. Respondent sellers are engaged in selling commodities in the course of interstate commerce. Respondent buyers are engaged in purchasing commodities in the course of interstate commerce. Respondent Biddle Purchasing Company transmits orders for merchandise from respondent buyers to respondent sellers, as a result of which commodities are shipped from sellers to buyers usually from one State to another. All of said respondents are engaged in interstate commerce in participating in the commercial transactions hereafter more specifically described.

PAR. 6. Respondent Biddle Purchasing Company is an 1893 New Jersey corporation, successor to a company formed in 1879. It has branch offices in Meridian, Miss., Chicago, Ill., Pittsburgh, Pa., Baltimore, Md., San Francisco, Calif., and Seattle, Wash. It has a force of from five to ten salesmen who habitually travel throughout the United States and parts of Canada and Hawaii to solicit distributing concerns to purchase the Biddle market information service and purchasing services. These men at times also contact manufacturers and processors. It also has thirty-two buyers and twenty-five assistant buyers who place orders for the Biddle subscribers and who contact manufacturers, processors, and producers on behalf of Biddle clients. Respondent Biddle Purchasing Company often examines and tests the wares of such manufacturers and producers and get descriptions of goods and prices, which information is sent to the Biddle subscribers. It sends bulletins, surveys, forecasts, tables, charts, and cards to subscribers, to keep them posted on general market conditions and on the merchandise which can be purchased by them. Bulletins go weekly or twice a week from New York, Chicago, San Francisco, Meridian, and Seattle and seasonally from Baltimore, giving prices and all data requisite on hundreds of items offered. It also supplies subscribers in some of its lines with indexed wooden trays in which to keep for ready reference the price cards, revisions of which it sends in constantly. It is in a favorable position to furnish accurate, constant, regular and reliable market information service. It handles, through its buying operations, the goods upon which it reports to its clients. Among its employees are specialists who have devoted many years to their respective lines of merchandise and who are in constant contact with the markets in performing their duties with said respondent.

PAR. 7. The Biddle Purchasing Company subscribers severally employ Biddle at a stipulated monthly sum ranging from $50.00 to $25.00 or under. This employment is evidenced by a contract between Biddle and the subscriber which is in the following form:

The Undersigned hereby employs BIDDLE PURCHASING COMPANY OF NEW YORK, to purchase such material as they may order from time to time, with reasonable credit limits, and agree to pay BIDDLE PURCHASING CO., for such services.....dollars per month from..... for twelve months. This arrangement will continue thereafter at the same monthly rate until thirty days' written notice is given by either party to the other of desire to discontinue.

THE BIDDLE PURCHASING CO., will issue frequent Bulletins or other mediums reporting price changes, quotations and such market information as may seem advisable.

No subscriber has any exclusive right to the Biddle services, but they are sold to any wholesaler who wants them, subject only to the requirement that we have good credit rating. The Biddle services are quite often bought by several dealers in the same line in the same town. Biddle yearly buys for its subscribers from said sellers several million dollars worth of commodities for resale by the buyers and as a result of said purchases such merchandise is shipped and transported from the State in which the same is located when the order is placed into and through other States of the United States, where they are delivered to purchasers who are Biddle subscribers. Biddle receives daily from its subscribers from 1,000 to 1,500 orders. When a subscriber forwards an order to Biddle, usually at a specified price, Biddle transmits the order to the seller. The seller ships the product direct to the buyer, in most cases billing the buyer at the price specified in the order. The buyer in most cases makes payment direct to the seller. The seller then sends Biddle a commission or brokerage on the transaction and Biddle pays this to the buyer or credits it to his account. If a buyer fails to name the purchase price, he expects to get the last price quoted by Biddle in its bulletins, or a lower price. If Biddle finds that the market has advanced he communicates with the buyer and confirms the order at the new price before transmitting it to the seller. The buyer in some cases names the seller whose products are wanted, but in some cases he relies upon Biddle to transmit the order to some producer who will supply goods of the quality and standard required.

PAR. 8. All respondent sellers have made sales of commodities in interstate commerce through Biddle Purchasing Company to respondent buyers and other Biddle buyers and have paid brokerage fees on such transactions to respondent Biddle Purchasing Company, which brokerage fees were later paid over or credited by respondent Biddle Purchasing Company to the particular respondent buyer or other buyer. Respondent Dannemiller Coffee Company, after some correspondence in August 1936, discontinued the practice of paying the Biddle Purchasing Company brokerage on sales made to the Biddle buyers through the Biddle Purchasing Company. Respondent Albert Dickinson Company has secured Biddle Purchasing Company's promise to refund brokerage fees if the law is construed to make it illegal for it to pay such fees to Biddle. Respondent Godchaux Sugars, Inc. stopped selling sugar through the Biddle Purchasing Company early in August 1936. All of the respondent sellers at the time of payment of brokerage fees to respondent Biddle Purchasing Company had knowledge of the fact that the Biddle Purchasing Company paid such fees over to the buyer placing the order and to whom the goods were shipped.

PAR. 9. The sellers from whom respondent Biddle Purchasing Company buys for its clients pay to Biddle brokerage fees at the same rate that they pay other brokers who sell goods for them. This rate ranges from 1 to 5% usually. It is a matter of common knowledge in the trade that the Biddle Purchasing Company receives these fees for the use of its subscribers and pays them over in their entirety to the buyers. Respondent Biddle Purchasing Company receives and accepts these brokerage fees for the use and benefit of its subscribers and does not claim any right, title, or interest in such fees. The buyers receive and accept these brokerage fees from respondent Biddle Purchasing Company and know that they are to receive them at the time they place orders for merchandise for execution by Biddle. The Biddle buyers, by reason of the fact that they receive the brokerage fees paid to Biddle, get a lower price on commodities purchased through Biddle from the sellers than other buyers who are not members of the Biddle organizations get on similar goods in like quantity bought direct from said sellers.

PAR. 10. In all of the purchasing transactions which the respondent Biddle Purchasing Company executes for its buyers, the Biddle Company is the agent and representative of the buyer, and acts in fact for such buyer and in his behalf, and is subject to his control, insofar as such purchasing transaction is concerned. Said respondent Biddle Purchasing Company in such purchasing transactions is neither the agent nor representative of the seller nor does it act for or in behalf or is it under the control of such seller. Such services as respondent Biddle Purchasing Company may render to the seller in selling his commodities are incidental to the particular purchase and sale transaction, and if any services are so rendered by Biddle in connection with the sale or purchase of such commodities, such services are donated by the Biddle company to the seller. There is not, in fact, any payment of brokerage commissions made by any of respondent sellers to respondent Biddle Purchasing Company, which is not intended for the buyer and which does not reach the buyer. Such brokerage commissions, being intended for the buyers, are not in fact paid in satisfaction of any contractual or other indebtedness due from the seller to respondent Biddle Purchasing Company for services rendered, or otherwise. These payments, in effect, are actually made from the seller to the buyer and the buyer receives a discount in price equivalent to the brokerage fees paid to him. Respondent buyers render no service to respondent sellers in connection with the purchase of commodities through respondent Biddle Purchasing Company. Respondent buyers render no service to respondent Biddle Purchasing Company in connection with the purchase of goods, wares and merchandise made for them by said respondent Biddle Purchasing Company.

PAR. 11. The contract between respondent Biddle Purchasing Company and its subscribers is construed by the parties thereto as being a contract for the sale and purchase of the Biddle market information service with a privilege extended to the buyers of using the Biddle purchasing services at their option. The buyers pay the monthly fee stipulated in the contract for the market information service. The buyers exercise their option to use the Biddle Purchasing Company's purchasing services in order to secure a discount in price from the current marketing price and the buyers when purchasing commodities through Biddle compute the net price at which the purchase is made as being the quoted price less the fee or commission paid by the seller as brokerage to Biddle and by Biddle transmitted to them. The buyers, in their bookkeeping, do not treat the brokerage fees and commissions received from respondent Biddle Purchasing Company as being an offset to the monthly fee paid by them to Biddle. The amount of the monthly fee paid by the buyers to Biddle is fixed at the time the contract is made, but the amount of the brokerage fees and commissions which may be received by a given buyer from the utilization of the Biddle purchasing services is unknown and incapable of ascertainment at the time the contract is entered into.

PAR. 12. All payments of brokerage fees made by respondents as hereinabove set forth are made as a part of a general plan or scheme which contemplates and results in payment of brokerage fees from the seller to the buyer through the respondent Biddle Purchasing Company, and which enables the buyers to secure discounts in price from the sellers under the guise of brokerage payments.

CONCLUSION

The Commission concludes that respondents Dannemiller Coffee Company, Colonial Molasses Company, Inc., Albert Dickinson Company, Ervin A. Rice Company, Cava Packing Company and Godchaux Sugars, Inc., have violated and are violating Subsection C, Section 2 of the Clayton Act as amended, by paying fees and commissions as brokerage to respondent Biddle Purchasing Company in the sale of commodities to respondent buyers and other buyers, with knowledge of the fact that such fees and commissions were and are intended to be and were and are being paid over by said respondent Biddle Purchasing Company to said buyers.

The Commission further concludes that respondents General Grocer Company, Smart & Final Company, Ltd., The Eavey Company, Michigan Trading Corporation, C. G. Meaker Company, Inc., Middendorf & Rohrs and Koll Grocery Company have violated and are violating the provisions of subsection C, section 2 of said statute, by receiving and accepting fees and commissions paid as brokerage by said respondent sellers and other sellers, in connection with the purchase of commodities by said buyers through respondent Biddle Purchasing Company.

The Commission further concludes that respondent Biddle Purchasing Company has violated and is violating the provisions of subsection C, section 2 of said statute, by receiving such fees and commissions as brokerage from respondent sellers and transmitting and paying over the same to respondent buyers; further, that said respondent Biddle Purchasing Company is the instrumentality and means by which respondent sellers unlawfully are enabled to make payment of such fees and commissions as brokerage to respondent buyers, and by which respondent buyers are enabled to receive and accept the same.

The Commission further concludes that the violations of said statute referred to are in pursuance of a general plan and scheme whereby fees and commissions paid by the sellers are made available to and transmitted to the buyers.

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

It is ordered, That respondents Dannemiller Coffee Company, Colonial Molasses Co. Inc., Albert Dickinson Company, Ervin A. Rice Co., Cava Packing Company and Godchaux Sugars, Inc., and their officers, representatives, agents, and employees, in connection with the offering for sale, sale and distribution of commodities in interstate commerce or in the District of Columbia, do forthwith cease and desist from paying or granting to respondent Biddle Purchasing Company any fee or commission on sales of commodities, as brokerage or as an allowance in lieu thereof, which fee or commission is intended to be paid over or which is in fact subsequently to be paid over, in whole or in part, by said respondent Biddle Purchasing Company to any purchaser of such commodities.

It is further ordered, That respondents General Grocer Company, Smart & Final Company, Ltd., The Eavey Co., Michigan Trading Corporation, C. G. Meaker Co., Inc., Middendorf & Rohrs and Koll Grocery Company, and their officers, representatives, agents, and employees, in connection with the purchase of commodities in interstate commerce or in the District of Columbia, do forthwith cease and desist from accepting or receiving from respondent Biddle Purchasing Company any fee or commission which has been paid or granted to said Biddle Purchasing Company, as brokerage or as an allowance in lieu thereof, by a seller of commodities on sales made by such seller to said respondents.

It is further ordered, That respondent Biddle Purchasing Company, its officers, representatives, agents, and employees, in connection with the purchase or sale of commodities in interstate commerce or in the District of Columbia, do forthwith cease and desist from:

1. Receiving or accepting any fee or commission, as brokerage or as an allowance in lieu thereof, from any seller of commodities, which fee or commission is intended to be paid over to the purchaser of such commodities, or which is to be applied for the use and benefit of such purchaser;

2. Paying or granting to any purchaser of commodities any fee or commission received or accepted by said Biddle Purchasing Company, as brokerage or an allowance in lieu thereof, from the seller of such commodities.

It is further ordered, That the respondents and each of them shall within 90 days after service upon them of this order file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which they have complied with this order.

Complaint

IN THE MATTER OF
EASTERN PHARMACAL COMPANY, INC.

COMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION
OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 26, 1914

Docket 2948. Complaint, Oct. 16, 1936—Decision, July 19, 1937

Where a corporation engaged in distribution and sale of a certain liquid pharmaceutical product, in substantial competition with others engaged in distribution and sale of acetyl salicylic acid products, such as aspirin, in commerce among the various States and in the District of Columbia, and including among such competitors those who make, sell and distribute acetyl salicylic acid products, such as aspirin, as above set forth, without in any wise misrepresenting the composition, nature, quality, or effectiveness of their products—

Made use of name "Aspiral" in designating its said product in advertising literature of various types circulated to prospective purchasers, and featured said name on the cartons in which its said product was displayed for sale to purchasing public, and set forth in its advertising literature that its said "Elixir Aspiral offers the better way of prescribing aspirin," facts being its said "Aspiral" was neither true acetyl salicylic acid nor aspirin, as commonly designated and long, well, and favorably known to drug trade and to purchasing public as meaning acetyl salicylic acid preparation of recognized merit and value;

With capacity and tendency to mislead and deceive substantial number of purchasing public into erroneous and mistaken belief that said product was aspirin and designed and intended for treatment of same ills and conditions as aspirin, and that it contained all ingredients contained in aspirin, and with effect of causing a substantial volume of such public to buy substantial volume of its said product on account of such belief, and of causing an unfair diversion of trade from, and otherwise substantially injuring, competitors in commerce:

Held, That such acts and practices were all to the prejudice of the public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition.

Before Mr. John J. Keenan, trial examiner.

Mr. Morton Nesmith for the Commission.

Mr. George H. Rosen, of New York City, and Mr. Isaac Silberman, of Monticello, N. Y., for respondent.

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled, "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that Eastern Pharmacal Company, Inc., hereinafter referred to as respondent, has been and now is using unfair methods of competition in commerce as "commerce" is defined in said act, and it appearing to the Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent, Eastern Pharmacal Company, Inc., is a corporation, organized, existing, and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of New York, with its principal office and place of business at 151 Ludlow Street, Yonkers, N. Y. Respondent is now, and has been for some time, engaged in the business of distributing and selling, in commerce as herein set out, a certain product designated by it as "Aspiral." It causes said product, when sold, to be transported from its principal place of business in the State of New York to purchasers thereof located at various points in other States of the United States and in the District of Columbia. It has, at all times since its incorporation, maintained a constant current of trade in the product distributed and sold by it, in commerce among and between the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia. In the course and conduct of its business, it is now, and has been, in substantial competition with other corporations and with firms and individuals engaged in the business of distributing and selling acetyl salicylic acid products such as aspirin, in commerce among and between the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 2. In the course and operation of its business, and for the purpose of inducing individuals, firms, and corporations to purchase said "Aspiral," respondent has caused advertising literature of various types to be circulated, through the United States mails and through other means, to prospective purchasers of its product. In said advertising literature, the product is designated by the respondent as "Aspiral" and the following statement is also used:

Elixir Aspiral offers the better way of prescribing aspirin.

On the cartons in which said product is displayed for sale to the purchasing public, the product is also designated by the name "Aspiral" appearing in large and conspicuous letters. The statement, hereinabove set out, appearing in respondent's advertising matter, together with the respondent's use of the name "Aspiral" to designate its product, and other similar statements and designations, serve as representations on the part of the respondent to the effect that the product designated by it as "Aspiral" is in fact aspirin, or the same as aspirin, and is designed and intended for similar usage.

Complaint

PAR. 3. For a number of years, various competitors of the respondent have been manufacturing, distributing, and selling a certain pharmaceutical preparation, acetyl salicylic acid, commonly designated as aspirin. Through use, over a period of many years, this product has become well and favorably known to the drug trade and to the purchasing public under the designation aspirin. It has been, and now is, generally used in the treatment of certain ills and conditions of the human body and in relieving the pain attendant to certain ills and conditions of the human body. The word "aspirin," when used in connection with pharmaceutical preparations, means, and the public well understands it to mean, that the product being referred to is an acetyl salicylic acid preparation and is of recognized merit, as herein detailed.

PAR. 4. The representations made by the respondent with respect to the nature of its product are false, misleading, and untrue. In truth and in fact, respondent's product, designated by it as "Aspiral," is not an acetyl salicylic acid product, is not the same as aspirin and is not designed and intended for all of the usages for which aspirin may be used.

PAR. 5. The use by the respondent of the statements and representation, hereinabove set out, and the use of the designation "Aspiral" to describe its product, have the capacity and tendency to, and do, mislead and deceive the purchasing public into the erroneous and mistaken belief that said product is aspirin and is designed and intended for the treatment of the same ills and conditions of the human body as aspirin and that said product contains all of the ingredients contained in aspirin. Acting in said beliefs, induced as aforesaid, a substantial portion of the purchasing public has purchased a substantial volume of respondent's product on account of such beliefs. As a result thereof, trade is unfairly diverted to the respondent from competitors engaged in the distribution and sale of acetyl salicylic acid products, commonly designated as aspirin, who truthfully advertise and represent the nature and effectiveness of said products. In consequence thereof, injury has been, and is now being, done by the respondent to competition in commerce among and between the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 6. The above and foregoing acts, practices and representations of the respondent have been, and are, all to the prejudice of the public and respondent's competitors as aforesaid, and constitute unfair methods of competition within the meaning and intent of Section 5 of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled

“An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes.”

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled “An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes,” the Federal Trade Commission issued and served its complaint upon the respondent herein, Eastern Pharmacal Company, Inc., a corporation organized, existing and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of New York, charging said respondent with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of the provisions of said act.

The respondent having entered its appearance and having filed its answer herein did on the 21st day of June 1937, the date set for hearing, execute its motion to withdraw said answer and file a consent answer attached to said motion waiving hearing on the charges set forth in the complaint and consenting that without further evidence or other intervening procedure the Commission may issue and serve upon it findings as to the facts and conclusion drawn therefrom, and an order to cease and desist from the violations of law charged in the complaint. Contemporaneously respondent entered into a stipulation as to the facts which stipulation was dictated into the record. All of this was done, of course, subject to the approval of the Commission:

And, thereupon, this proceeding came on for final hearing and the respondent having waived the filing of briefs and oral argument herein before the Commission, and the Commission having approved and accepted said stipulation as to the facts and having duly considered the record and being fully advised in the premises, makes this its findings as to the facts and conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. The respondent, Eastern Pharmacal Company, Inc., was incorporated under and by virtue of the laws of the State of New York in 1931. Its principal office and place of business is located at 1 Herriot Street, Yonkers, N. Y. The respondent is now and has been for some time engaged in the business of distributing and selling in commerce a certain pharmaceutical product designated by it as “Aspiral.” This product has been and is now sold and transported by the respondent in substantial quantities in commerce among and between the several States of the United States and in the District of Columbia. It has at all times since its incorporation maintained and still maintains a constant current of trade in "Aspiral" in commerce among and between the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia. The respondent sells its product designated as "Aspiral" in substantial competition with other corporations, firms, and individuals engaged in the business of distributing and selling acetyl salicylic acid products, such as aspirin, in commerce among and between the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 2. In the course and operation of its business, and for the purpose of inducing individuals, firms, and corporations to purchase said "Aspiral," respondent has caused advertising literature of various types to be circulated through the United States mails and through other means to prospective purchasers of this product. In this advertising literature the product is designated by the respondent as "Aspiral," and the following statement was also used in literature accompanying or descriptive of the product:

Elixir Aspiral offers the better way of prescribing aspirin.

This statement, however, was discontinued in respondent's advertising in June 1936. On the cartons in which respondent's product is displayed for sale to the purchasing public, appears the name "Aspiral" in large and conspicuous type.

PAR. 3. For a number of years there have been many persons, firms, and corporations, competitors of the respondent, who have manufactured, distributed, and sold a certain pharmaceutical preparation known as acetyl salicylic acid, commonly designated as aspirin. Through use over a period of many years, this product has become well and favorably known to the drug trade and to the purchasing public under the designation "Aspirin." Aspirin has been and is now generally used in the treatment of certain ills and conditions of the human body for relieving the pain attendant to said ills and conditions of the human body. The word "Aspirin" when used in connection with pharmaceutical preparations means, and the public well understands it to mean, that the product being referred to is an acetyl salicylic acid preparation and is of recognized merit and value.

PAR. 4. Respondent's product "Aspiral" is sold only in liquid form, and although pure acetyl salicylic acid may have been used in its preparation, nevertheless, when this acid was mixed with the liquid vehicle the acetyl salicylic acid was broken up into free salicylic acid, a sodium aspirin, sodium salicylate acetic, and sodium acetate, the result being that after this break-down less than 50 percent true acetyl salicylic acid remained. In truth and in fact the respondent's product designated by it as "Aspiral" is neither true acetyl salicylic acid nor aspirin, and the use by the respondent of the name "Aspiral" together with the representation that "Elixir Aspiral offers the better way of prescribing aspirin" has the capacity and tendency to mislead and deceive a substantial number of the purchasing public into the erroneous or mistaken belief that said product is aspirin and is designed and intended for the treatment of the same ills and conditions of the human body as aspirin and that said product contains all the ingredients contained in aspirin, and has caused a substantial portion of the purchasing public to purchase a substantial volume of respondent's product on account of such belief.

PAR. 5. There are among the competitors of the respondent many persons, firms, and corporations who manufacture, sell, and distribute acetyl salicylic acid products such as aspirin in commerce among and between the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia, who in no wise misrepresent the composition, nature, quality, or effectiveness of their products.

PAR. 6. The designation by the respondent of its product as "Aspiral" and the representation by it that "Elixir Aspiral offers the better way of prescribing aspirin" are misleading and untrue and have caused an unfair diversion of trade from, and otherwise substantially injured, competitors of respondent in commerce.

CONCLUSION

The acts and practices of the respondent are all to the prejudice of the public and the competitors of the respondent and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

This proceeding coming on for final hearing by the Federal Trade Commission upon the record, including the complaint of the Commission, the answer of the respondent admitting all of the material allegations to be true, and waiving the taking of further evidence and of other intervening procedure, and a stipulation as to the facts, and the Commission having made its findings as to the facts and conclusion that said respondent, Eastern Pharmacal Company, Inc., a corporation, has violated the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes.”

It is now ordered, That the respondent, Eastern Pharmacal Company, Inc., a corporation, its officers, representatives, agents, and employees in connection with the offering for sale, sale, and distribution in interstate commerce and in the District of Columbia of its pharmaceutical preparation known as “Aspiral” forthwith cease and desist from:

Using the name “Aspiral” or any word or words containing the letters “Aspir” as a trade name or designation for its product unless said product is aspirin or acetyl salicylic acid at the time of its sale.

It is further ordered, That the respondent, Eastern Pharmacal Company, Inc., a corporation, its officers, representatives, agents, and other employees, in connection with the offering for sale, sale, and distribution in interstate commerce or in the District of Columbia of its pharmaceutical preparation known as “Aspiral,” do forthwith cease and desist from representing directly or indirectly in advertising matter, circular letters, by means of radio broadcasting, or by any other means:

1. That “Aspiral” is aspirin.
2. That Elixir Aspiral offers the better way of prescribing aspirin.

It is further ordered, That the said respondent within 90 days from and after the date of service upon it of this order, shall file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which it is complying and has complied with the order to cease and desist as hereinabove set forth.

IN THE MATTER OF FAIRFIELD DISTILLING COMPANY

COMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION
OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 26, 1914

Docket 2447. Complaint, June 20, 1935—Decision, July 20, 1937

Where a corporation engaged, as rectifier of distilled spirits, in purchasing, rectifying, and blending whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages, and in producing gin with a still used therefor by redistillation of purchased alcohol, not produced by it, over juniper berries and other aromatics, and in selling its aforesaid various products among the various states to wholesaler-purchasers thereof, in substantial competition with those engaged in the manufacture by true distillation of whiskies, gins and other spirituous beverages from mash, wort, or wash, and in selling same in trade and commerce among the various States and in the District of Columbia, and with those engaged in purchasing, rectifying, blending, and bottling such various beverages and similarly selling same, and including among said competitors those who, as manufacturers and distillers by original and continuous distillation from mash, wort, or wash, through closed pipes and vessels until manufacture is complete, of whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages sold by them, truthfully use words "distillery," "distilleries," "distillers," or "distilling," as a part of their corporate or trade names and on their stationery and advertising and on the labels of the bottles in which they sell and ship their said products, and those who, engaged in purchasing, rectifying, blending, bottling, and selling such various products, do not use aforesaid words as above set forth—

Represented, through use of word "Distilling" in its corporate name, on its stationery, mailing cards, and invoices, and on the labels attached to the bottles in which it sold and shipped its said products, that it was a producer of distilled spirits from raw materials, and so represented to its customers, and furnished same with means of representing to their vendees, both retailers and ultimate consuming public, that it was a distiller, and that the whiskies and other spirituous beverages contained in such bottles were by it made through process of distillation, as aforesaid, from mash, wort or wash, notwithstanding fact it did not thus distill said various beverages, thus bottled, labelled, sold, and transported by it, through aforesaid process of original and continuous distillation, as long definitely understood from word "distilling" used in connection with liquor industry and products thereof in the trade and by the ultimate purchasing public, and did not own, operate, or control any place or places where such beverages are made by process of distillation from mash, wort, or wash, and was not a distiller, for the purchase of the bottled liquors of which there is a preference on the part of a substantial portion of the purchasing public;

With effect of misleading and deceiving dealers and purchasing public into the belief that it was a distiller, and that the whiskies and other spirituous beverages sold by it were by it made and distilled from mash, wort, or wash, and with capacity and tendency to induce dealers and purchasing public, acting in such beliefs, to buy its said whiskies and other spirituous beverages bottled and sold by it, and of thereby diverting trade to it from its competitors who did not, by their corporate or trade names or in any other manner, misrepresent that they were manufacturers by distillation from mash, wort, or wash of whiskies or other spirituous beverages; to the substantial injury of competition in commerce:

Held, That such acts and practices were to the prejudice of the public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition.

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that Fairfield Distilling Co., Incorporated, a corporation, hereinafter referred to as respondent, has been and is using unfair methods of competition in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in said act, and it appearing to the said Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint, stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent is a corporation organized, existing, and doing business under the laws of the State of Kentucky, with its office and principal place of business in the city of Louisville, in said State. It is now, and for more than one year last past has been, engaged in the business of a wholesaler and rectifier of distilled spirits, purchasing, rectifying, blending, and bottling whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages and selling the same in constant course of trade and commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia. In the course and conduct of its said business it causes its said products when sold to be transported from its place of business aforesaid into and through various States of the United States to the purchasers thereof, consisting of wholesalers and retailers, located in other States of the United States and the District of Columbia. In the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid, respondent is now, and for more than one year last past has been, in substantial competition with other corporations and with individuals, partnerships, and firms engaged in the manufacture by true distillation of whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages from mash, wort, or wash, and in the sale thereof in trade and commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia; and in the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid respondent is, and for more than one year last past has been, in substantial competition with other corporations and with individuals, firms, and partnerships engaged in the business of purchasing, rectifying, blending, and bottling whiskies, gins, and other alcoholic beverages in rectifying plants and in the sale thereof in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid respondent has, upon its said premises, a still which it uses in the production of gin by a process of rectification whereby alcohol, purchased but not produced by respondent, is redistilled over juniper berries and other aromatics. Such rectification of alcohol spirits does not make or constitute respondent a distiller, as defined by Section 3247 of the Revised Statutes regulating Internal Revenue, nor as commonly understood by the public and the liquor industry. For a long period of time the word "distilling" when used in connection with the liquor industry and with the products thereof has had and still has a definite significance and meaning to the minds of wholesalers and retailers in such industry and to the ultimate purchasing public, to wit, the manufacturing of spirituous liquors by an original and continuous distillation from mash, wort, or wash, through continuous closed pipes and vessels until the manufacture thereof is complete, and a substantial portion of the purchasing public prefers to buy spirituous liquors bottled and prepared by distillers.

PAR. 3. In the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid by the use of the word "Distilling" in its corporate name, printed on its stationery, catalogs, advertising, and on the labels attached to the bottles in which it sells and ships its said products, and in various other ways, respondent represents to its customers and furnishes them with the means of representing to their vendees, both retailers and the ultimate consuming public, that it is a distiller and that the said whiskies, gins, and other alcoholic beverages therein contained were by it manufactured through the process of distillation from mash, wort, or wash, when, as a matter of fact, respondent is not a distiller, does not distill the said whiskies, gins, and other alcoholic beverages by it so bottled, labeled, sold and transported. Respondent does not own, operate or control any place or places where alcoholic beverages are manufactured by a process of original and continuous distillation from mash, wort, or wash.

PAR. 4. There are among the competitors of respondent engaged in the sale of spirituous beverages, as mentioned in paragraph 1 hereof, corporations, firms, partnerships, and individuals who manufacture and distill from mash, wort, or wash, as aforesaid, whiskies, gins, and other alcoholic beverages sold by them and who truthfully use the words "distillery," "distilleries," "distillers," or "distilling" as a part of their corporate or trade names and on their stationery, catalogs, advertising, and on the labels of the bottles in which they sell and ship such products. There are also among such competitors corporations, firms, partnerships, and individuals engaged in the business of purchasing, rectifying, blending, bottling, and selling whiskies, gins, and other alcoholic beverages who do not use the words "distillery," "distilleries," "distilling," or "distillers" as a part of their corporate or trade names, nor on their stationery, catalogs, advertising, nor on the labels attached to the bottles in which they sell and ship their said products.

PAR. 5. The representations by respondent, as set forth in paragraph 3 hereof, are calculated to and have a capacity and tendency to and do mislead and deceive dealers and the purchasing public into the beliefs that respondent is a distiller and that the whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages sold by respondent are manufactured or distilled by it from mash, wort, or wash, by one continuous process and are calculated to and have the capacity and tendency to and do induce dealers and the purchasing public, acting in such beliefs, to purchase the whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages bottled and sold by the respondent, thereby diverting trade to respondent from its competitors who do not by their corporate or trade name or in any other manner misrepresent that they are distillers, and thereby respondent does substantial injury to substantial competition in interstate commerce.

PAR. 6. The acts and things above alleged to have been done and the false representations alleged to have been made by respondent are to the prejudice of the public and the competitors of respondent and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914.

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Findings

25 F. T. C.

1935, served its complaint in this proceeding upon respondent Fairfield Distilling Company, a corporation, charging it with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of the provisions of said act. After the issuance of said complaint, and the filing of respondent's answer thereto, testimony and other evidence in support of the allegations of the said complaint were introduced by DeWitt T. Puckett, attorney for the Commission, before John L. Hornor, an examiner of the Commission, theretofore duly designated by it, and said testimony and other evidence were duly recorded and filed in the office of the Commission. No testimony or other evidence in opposition to the allegations of the complaint were introduced by J. W. Fowler, attorney for the respondent. Thereafter the proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on the said complaint, the answer thereto, testimony and other evidence and brief in support of the complaint (no brief in opposition thereto having been filed and no oral argument having been made); and the Commission having duly considered the foregoing and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent is a Kentucky corporation organized April 26, 1934, and was engaged in the distilled spirits rectifying business from October 1934, until December 31, 1936, at which time it gave up its rectifier's permit. During said period respondent operated under a basic rectifier's permit from the government known as "R-501" a rectifying establishment with a capacity of approximately 180,000 gallons of whiskey and gin annually, at 234 East Main Street, Louisville, Ky., rectifying all kinds of whiskies, using distilled spirits purchased from the Empire Distilling Company and other distillers. Upon its premises, aforesaid, there was a still for use in the production of gins by a process of rectification whereby alcohol purchased but not produced by respondent was redistilled over juniper berries and other aromatics.

During the period between October 1934, and December 31, 1936, respondent was engaged in the business of purchasing, rectifying and blending whiskies, gins and other spirituous beverages in its aforesaid plant under its said permit, and in the sale thereof in constant course of trade and commerce between and among the various States of the United States. In the course and conduct of its said business it caused its said products when sold to be transported from its place of business in Louisville, Ky., into and through various States of the United States to the purchasers thereof, consisting of wholesalers located in States of the United States other than the State of origin of said shipments.

In the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid respondent, during said period, was in substantial competition with other corporations and with individuals, partnerships, and firms engaged in the manufacture by true distillation of whiskies, gins and other spirituous beverages from mash, wort, or wash, and in the sale thereof in trade and commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia, and in the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid, respondent was in substantial competition with other corporations and with individuals, firms, and partnerships, engaged in the business of purchasing, rectifying, blending, and bottling whiskies, gins and other spirituous beverages in rectifying plants under rectifiers' permits, and in the sale thereof in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 2. "Rectifying" in the distilled spirits rectifying industry means the mixing of whiskies of different ages or types, or the mixing of other ingredients with whiskies, but reducing proof of whiskey by adding water is not rectifying. Rectifiers also blend whiskies with neutral spirits (grain alcohol).

Many distillers operate a separate establishment 500 feet or more away from their distillery, known as a rectifying plant, wherein they operate in the same manner as described above—for a rectifier—sometimes exclusively with spirits of their own distillation and sometimes with spirits purchased from other distillers, or both. Some distillers have a tax paid bottling room on the distillery bonded premises wherein their distilled spirits are bottled straight as they come from the still, or in a bonded warehouse after aging, or after reduction of proof. Any rectifying by a distiller, however, must be done in his rectifying plant under his rectifier's permit. On all bottled liquors, whether bottled at the distillery or at any rectifying plant, appear the words "Bottled" or "Blended" (as the case may be) "by the ----- Company." If the distilled spirits therein contained are bottled by a distiller in his distillery or are spirits of his own distillation bottled in his rectifying plant, the distiller may and does put "Distilled and Bottled by----- Company." If, in the distiller's rectifying plant, other spirits have been blended or rectified, he puts on the bottle "Blended and Bottled by ----- Company."

Finally, blown in the bottom of each bottle is a symbol consisting of a letter followed by a number, identifying the bottler, viz, "D" for a distiller and "R" for a rectifier, the number following said letter corresponding with the distiller's or rectifier's permit. Thus, "R-501" designates this respondent. A distiller who also operates a rectifying plant, having both kinds of permits, may use either symbol depending upon whether the liquor contained in the bottle was produced and bottled under his distiller's or his rectifier's permit. This number is placed on the bottle to identify the bottler.

Knowledge of these details is not widespread among the retail trade and is very limited among the general public. All whiskeys, whether coming from a distillery or rectifier, are generally conceded to be "distilled" products. Therefore, it is not possible to determine from the presence of the phrase "Blended and Bottled by" alone, or the phrase "Bottled by" alone on the label whether the package was bottled by a rectifier who is a distiller, or by a rectifier who is not a distiller.

This respondent does not now and never has produced or manufactured distilled spirits of any kind from mash or raw materials, although its charter would authorize it so to do. Its rectifier's permit authorizes it to engage in the business of rectifying and blending, and is conditioned upon compliance by respondent with all applicable regulations made pursuant to law, which are or may hereafter be in force.

PAR. 3. The evidence adduced in this case from approximately eight competitive trade witnesses (both rectifiers and distillers) and nineteen members of the purchasing public shows, and the Commission finds, that for a long period of time the word "distilling," when used in connection with the liquor industry and the products thereof, has had and still has a definite significance and meaning to the minds of the wholesalers and retailers in such industry and to the ultimate purchasing public, to wit, the manufacturing of such liquors by the process of original and continuous distillation from mash, wort or wash, through continuous closed pipes and vessels until the manufacture thereof is completed; and a substantial portion of the purchasing public prefers to buy spirituous liquors prepared and bottled by distillers.

The rectification of alcoholic spirits by this respondent as aforesaid in the production of its gin, does not make or constitute it a distiller or a distilling company as defined by Sec. 3247 of the Revised Statutes of the United States regulating Internal Revenue.

The testimony of those having long experience in both the distilled spirits rectifying industry and the distilling industry, established, and the Commission finds that the foregoing rectification of alcoholic spirits by redistillation over juniper berries and other aromatics in the production of gin does not make or constitute this respondent a distilling company in the sense commonly understood by the liquor industry or by the general public.

PAR. 4. This respondent, by the use of the word "distilling" in its corporate name, on its stationery, mailing cards, invoices, and on the labels attached to the bottles in which it sold and shipped its products in interstate commerce, represented itself as a producer of distilled spirits from raw materials, and was so regarded, by virtue of said representations, by the trade and purchasing public. It thus represented to its customers and furnished them with the means of representing to their vendees, both wholesalers and the ultimate consuming public, that it was a distiller and that the whiskies and other spirituous beverages in said bottles contained were by it manufactured by the process of distillation from mash, wort, or wash, as aforesaid, when, as a matter of fact, respondent is not now and never was a distiller, does not now and never did distill the said whiskies, or other spirituous beverages, by it so bottled, labeled, sold, and transported, and does not now and never did own, operate, or control any place or places where such beverages are or were manufactured by the process of distillation from mash, wort, or wash.

PAR. 5. There were among the competitors of respondent engaged in the sale of spirituous beverages as mentioned in paragraph 1 hereof corporations, firms, partnerships, and individuals who manufactured and distilled from mash, wort, or wash, as aforesaid, whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages sold by them and who truthfully used the words "distillery," "distilleries," "distillers," or "distiller" as a part of their corporate or trade names and on their stationery and advertising, and on the labels, of the bottles in which they sold and shipped such products. There were also among such competitors corporations, firms, partnerships, and individuals engaged in the business of purchasing, rectifying, blending, bottling, and selling whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages who did not use the words "distillery," "distilleries," "distiller," or "distillers" as a part of their corporate or trade names, on their stationery or advertising, or on the labels attached to the bottles in which they sold and shipped their said products.

PAR. 6. Representations by the respondent as hereinabove set forth had the capacity and tendency to and did mislead and deceive dealers and the purchasing public into the belief that respondent was a distiller and that the whiskies and other spirituous beverages by it sold were manufactured and distilled by it from mash, wort, or wash, and had the capacity and tendency also to induce dealers and the purchasing public, acting in such beliefs, to purchase the whiskies and other spirituous beverages bottled and sold by the respondent, thereby diverting trade to respondent from its competitors who did not by their corporate or trade names, or in any other manner, misrepresent that they were manufacturers by distillation from mash, wort, or wash of whiskies or other spirituous beverages. Thereby respondent did substantial injury to competition in interstate commerce.

PAR. 7. Because of existing regulations promulgated under the Federal Alcohol Administration Act, approved August 29, 1935 (49 Stat. 977), providing that rectifiers who redistill purchased alcohol over juniper berries and other aromatics may label such resulting product "Distilled Gin," and requiring that the labels state who distilled it, the Commission has excepted gins produced by respondent by redistillation of alcohol over juniper berries and other aromatics from the prohibitions of its order.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondent Fairfield Distilling Company were to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce, within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

This proceeding having been heard by the Federal Trade Commission upon the complaint of the Commission, the answer of the respondent, testimony and other evidence taken before John L. Hornor, an examiner of the Commission theretofore duly designated by it, in support of the allegations of the said complaint, brief filed herein by DeWitt T. Puckett, counsel for the Commission (no testimony or other evidence having been offered on behalf of respondent, and no brief having been filed on behalf of respondent, and no oral argument having been made), and the Commission having made its findings as to the facts and its conclusion that said respondent has violated the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled, "An Act to create a Federal

Memorandum

Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes,"

It is ordered, That the respondent, Fairfield Distilling Company, a corporation, its officers, representatives, agents, and employees, in connection with the offering for sale, or sale and distribution by it, in interstate commerce or in the District of Columbia of whiskies, gins, or other spirituous beverages (except gins produced by it through a process of rectification whereby alcohol purchased but not produced by respondent, is redistilled over juniper berries, and other aromatics), do cease and desist from:

Representing, through the use of the word "distilling" in its corporate name, on its stationery, advertising, or on the labels attached to the bottles in which it sells and ships said products, or in any other way by word, or words of like import, (a) that it is a distiller of whiskies, gins, or other spirituous beverages; or (b) that the said whiskies, gins, or other spirituous beverages were by it manufactured through the process of distillation; or (c) that it owns, operates, or controls a place or places where any such products are by it manufactured by a process of original and continuous distillation from mash, wort or wash, through continuous closed pipes and vessels until the manufacture thereof is completed, unless and until respondent shall actually own, operate, or control such a place, or places.

It is further ordered, That the said respondent, within 60 days from and after the date of the service upon it of this order, shall file with the Commission a report or reports in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which it is complying and has complied with the order to cease and desist hereinabove set forth.

MEMORANDUM

BYRD DISTILLING COMPANY, Docket 2454. Commission, as of July 20, 1937, also issued similar findings and order in aforesaid case, in which complaint issued on June 22, 1935, and in which it appeared, from the first paragraph of the findings, otherwise similar to those in the Fairfield case, above reported in full, that respondent was a Kentucky corporation organized on Jan. 4, 1934, and engaged since then in distilled spirits rectifying business at 1730 Brook Street, Louisville, Kentucky, operating under basic rectifier's government permit "R-201," "a rectifying establishment with a production capacity of approximately 200,000 proof gallons annually, rectifying all kinds of whiskies purchased from various distillers," with the

IN THE MATTER OF

KELPE'KOE, INC., AND C. C. HANSON

COMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 26, 1914

Docket 2353. Complaint, Apr. 6, 1935—Decision, July 24, 1937

Where a corporation engaged in sale and distribution of "Kelp'e'Koe," alleged medicinal preparation, purported to possess therapeutic or curative properties, through sales, principally, direct to users thereof, and an individual, agent, and representative thereof, engaged in sale and distribution of said product direct to ultimate users, principally, in various States; in advertising their said preparation through distribution of circulars, leaflets, booklets, form letters, and other printed advertising matter—

- (a) Falsely represented and implied that said preparation might with safety be substituted for product insulin in treatment of diabetes, and that it would cure or be of substantial benefit in treatment of some twenty-five or twenty-six other ailments, afflictions, diseases, and conditions, including nervous disorders, undue fatigue, neuritis, rheumatism, arthritis, kidney trouble, etc.;
- (b) Falsely represented and implied that said preparation was of great benefit as a tonic and builder of children of all ages, and more particularly those who showed a tendency to be backward, and those who were ill-nourished, defective, stunted, and puny, and that it would supply vital elements required by nature in the building and formation of bone, tissue and cell structure, and provided elements required to harmonize glandular activity during childhood;
- (c) Falsely represented and implied that it was an effective tonic for men and women, and especially so during the trying periods of a woman's life, and that its regular use exerted a normalizing influence upon organs and toned up the system generally, building up the blood, and that use thereof had an invigorating effect, not temporary, on the body; and
- (d) Falsely represented and implied that use thereof would result in remineralization of the body, noticeably reflected in a keener expression, more youthful appearance, etc., and that regular use thereof by one in a weak and run-down condition would "bring one power," "quicken the brain and body activities," and make one healthier and happier, etc., and that it supplied the salts necessary to maintain a strong and vigorous body and insure a greater expectancy for a happier and healthier life;

Facts being only therapeutic value of preparation in question was an eliminant, possibly, and as a tonic, possibly, for use by persons suffering from anemia or other ailments requiring an extra amount of iron in the diet, it was not efficacious as a treatment or palliative for diabetes and did not act in same manner or with same effect as, and was not a substitute for, insulin, unique product, as long recognized by medical profession, useful in control of said dangerous and progressively destructive disease, for which no cure is known, and aforesaid representations and implications were grossly exaggerated and false, and preparation in question was not of any benefit as a tonic and a builder of children of all ages, etc., as an effective tonic for men and women, and of any benefit to a woman at any period of her life, and did not have an invigorating or other effect on the body, as hereinabove set forth, or bring about results claimed therefor, and did not cure and was of no substantial therapeutic value in the treatment of any of the enumerated ailments, afflictions, diseases, and conditions;

With effect of misleading and deceiving many prospective purchasers of remedies for such ailments, etc., about which said representations and implications were made, and of causing a substantial portion of such persons erroneously to believe that such representations and implications were true and that preparation in question possessed therapeutic efficacy represented and implied by them, and was a competent and effective treatment and corrective for use in remedying said ailments, etc., for which recommended, and that users thereof, for purposes other than as a treatment for specific ailments, etc., would derive the general benefits represented and implied by them, and of causing a substantial portion of prospective purchasers to buy said preparation, thereby unfairly and unlawfully diverting trade in commerce to them from competitors engaged in substantial competition with them in offer, sale and distribution of mineral salts, drugs, remedies, and other medicants used and useful in treatment of ailments, etc., for which said "Kelp'e'Koe" was recommended, and who truthfully represent their products; to substantial injury of such competitors and to injury of public:

Held, That such acts and practices were to the prejudice of the public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition.

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, and entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that Kelp'e'Koe, Inc., a corporation, and C. C. Hanson, hereinafter referred to as respondents, have been and are using unfair methods of competition in commerce as "commerce" is defined in said act of Congress, and it appearing to said Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent Kelp'e'Koe, Inc., is a corporation organized, existing, and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Arizona, with its principal office and place of business in the city of Seattle, State of Washington. It is now and has been for more than two years last past engaged in the distribution and sale in both liquid and solid form, of a shale-like mineral of alleged therapeutic or curative properties which it designates as "Klepe'Koe". In solid form this mineral is a shale-like clay containing iron and aluminum sulphates with a trace of sulphur, and in liquid form it is an aqueous solution of iron and aluminum sulphates with traces of calcium, magnesium and potassium salts. When this said product of said respondent, designated as aforesaid as Kelpé'Koe, is packed or bottled, the said respondent causes the same when sold to be transported from its said place of business in Seattle, Wash., into and through the various other States of the United States of America for delivery to the purchasers thereof located in such various other States of the United States. In the advertising and in the promotion of the sale of said Kelpé'Koe between and among the various States of the United States, the said respondent transmits through the mails of the United States from its said principal place of business to various and divers places in the several other States of the United States, circulars, leaflets, and other advertising literature, soliciting various persons in the different States of the United States to buy said product, Kelpé'Koe.

Respondent, C. C. Hanson, is a resident of the city of Memphis in the State of Tennessee, and is an agent of said respondent Kelpé'Koe, Inc., in the sale and distribution of the aforementioned products sold and distributed by said Kelpé'Koe, Inc. From his place of business in the city of Memphis, Tenn., the said C. C. Hanson ships the said product aforesaid known and designated as Kelpé'Koe, into and through divers other States of the United States, to various customers and purchasers who have bought said product, and from the said city of Memphis, Tenn., said respondent, C. C. Hanson, transmits through the United States mails, pamphlets, leaflets, and circulars furnished him by said respondent Kelpé'Koe, Inc., in the selling and the promoting of sales of Kelpé'Koe in commerce between and among the various States of the United States.

In the course and conduct of the business aforesaid, both respondents are and have been at all times hereinafter referred to, in substantial competition with other individuals and corporations and with partnerships, associations, and firms engaged in the sale and distribution in interstate commerce of mineral salts, drugs, remedies, and other medicants of therapeutic value.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of their business aforesaid the said respondents in soliciting the sale by them of said Kelpé'Koe in commerce among the various States of the United States, have represented and still represent by circulars, leaflets, labels, and other advertising matter, through and by means of the United States mails, that Kelpé'Koe, in both liquid and solid form, and when used either externally or internally, according to directions, will be of substantial therapeutic benefit, remedy, and cure for that Kelpé'Koe has been found a great benefit as a tonic and builder of children of all ages, particularly those who show a tendency to be backward, ill-nourished, defective, stunted, and puny, that it supplies vital elements required by nature in the building and formation of bone, tissue, and cell structure, and provides elements required to harmonize glandular activity at this important time of life; that it is an effective tonic for women as well as for men; that for all ages during the trying periods of a woman's life, including adolescence, pregnancy, and the menopause, the regular use of Kelpé'Koe exerts a normalizing influence upon the organs and tones up the system generally; that it is a powerful blood builder and tonic, and has a remarkable invigorating effect which is not temporary in duration; that the remineralization of the body through the Kelpé'Koe treatment is noticeably reflected in a keener expression, clearer complexion and more youthful appearance; that if one is in a weak and run-down condition, the regular use of Kelpé'Koe should bring one power, quicken the brain and bodily activities, and make one healthier and happier; that Kelpé'Koe supplies the body with the mineral salts required in maintaining a strong and vigorous body, and that the use of Kelpé'Koe assures a greater expectancy for a happier and more healthy life.

PAR. 3. In truth and in fact the said product of respondents, Kelpé'Koe, was not and is not in either liquid or solid form and when used either externally or internally, according to directions, or in any other way, of substantial therapeutic benefit, remedy, or cure for

neuritis	diabetes	goiter
lumbago	mal-nutrition	sexual weakness
acidosis	general debility	dropsy

Kelpe'Koe has not been found, nor is it of great benefit nor of any benefit, as a tonic or builder of children of all ages, particularly those who show a tendency to be backward, ill-nourished, defective, stunted, and puny; it does not supply vital elements required by nature in the building of bone, tissue and cell structure; it does not provide elements required to harmonize glandular activity at this important time of life, and it is not an effective tonic for women as well as for men; for all ages during the trying periods of a woman's life, including adolescence, pregnancy, and the menopause the regular use of Kelpe'Koe will not exert a normalizing influence upon the organs, nor will it tone up the system generally; Kelpe'Koe is not a powerful blood builder and tonic; it has no invigorating effect which is not temporary in duration; the remineralization of the body through the Kelpe'Koe treatment is not noticeably reflected in a keener expression, clearer complexion and more youthful appearance; if one is in a weak and run-down condition the regular use of Kelpe'Koe will not bring one power, quicken the brain and bodily activities and will not make one healthier and happier; Kelpe'Koe does not supply the body with the mineral salts required in maintaining a strong and vigorous body, and the use of Kelpe'Koe does not assure a greater expectancy for a happier and more healthy life.

PAR. 4. The respondents in the conduct of their said business between and among the various States of the United States, by their advertisements, consisting of circulars, labels, pamphlets, personal letters and other forms of publicity, which are mailed to various customers and prospective customers, and to certain of the public at large in the various States of the United States of America, while not claiming that said product designated aforesaid as Kelpe'Koe is a cure for diabetes, yet by suggestion, implication, and innuendo, endeavor to create, and do create the impression that said Kelpe'Koe is a cure for diabetes, and that it is superior as a treatment for diabetes to insulin. While not directly advising diabetic patients to discontinue the use of insulin and to use in its room and stead said

Kelpe'Koe, yet the general tenor and purpose of its said advertisements have a tendency and capacity to create on the minds of diabetic patients the belief and impression that Kelpe'Koe as a treatment for diabetes is superior to insulin, and that insulin should be discontinued by them and Kelpe'Koe substituted in its room and stead.

PAR. 5. In truth and in fact, respondents' said product, Kelpe'Koe, is not a cure, remedy, or palliative for diabetes, and is in no sense superior to the insulin treatment which for a number of years has been recognized by the medical profession, both in the United States of America and in other countries, as the approved, standard and regular treatment for diabetes, and has been, and is now extensively used therefor.

The said mineral material contained in Kelpe'Koe in both solid and liquid form, and when used externally or internally or both, according to respondents' directions, acts and operates as an antiseptic astringent mineral oil, and will not act and operate as a benefit, remedy, or cure to or of persons afflicted with the maladies and diseases heretofore set out, and has little or no therapeutic value for any disease.

PAR. 6. The foregoing misrepresentations and exaggerations advertised, published, and distributed by respondents in the manner and form as aforesaid, in interstate commerce, are calculated to, and do have a tendency and capacity to mislead and deceive the public, and particularly that portion thereof which is suffering from various forms of human ailments hereinbefore set out, by creating in their minds the erroneous impression and belief that by purchasing and using respondents' Kelpe'Koe according to directions, they will be benefited, remedied, or cured of their diseases and ailments. By such misrepresentations and exaggerations the purchasing public, and particularly that portion thereof which is suffering from the various forms of human ailments hereinbefore set out, are induced to purchase respondents' said Kelpe'Koe under the erroneous impressions and with the erroneous beliefs hereinbefore stated.

PAR. 7. The foregoing misrepresentations and exaggerations of facts have a capacity and tendency to, and do unfairly divert trade to respondents from other individuals, corporations, associations, and firms selling and distributing in interstate commerce similar or like products and remedies to that of respondents' Kelpe'Koe, but which are honestly and truthfully advertised and labeled; thereby substantial injury is done by respondents to substantial competition in interstate commerce.

PAR. 8. The acts and things done as herein alleged by respondents are to the prejudice of the public and the competitors of the respondents and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, entitled, "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914.

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, on April 6, 1935, issued, and thereafter served its complaint in this proceeding upon respondents Kelpé' Koe, Inc. and C. C. Hanson, charging them with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of the provisions of said act. After the issuance of said complaint, and the filing of respondents' answer thereto, testimony and other evidence in support of the allegations of said complaint were introduced by John W. Hilldrop, attorney for the Commission, before Edward M. Averill, an examiner of the Commission theretofore duly designated by it, no testimony or other evidence was offered in opposition to the allegations of the complaint; and said testimony and other evidence were duly recorded and filed in the office of the Commission. Thereafter, the proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on the complaint, the answer thereto, testimony and other evidence and brief in support of the complaint; and the Commission having duly considered the same, and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public, and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. The respondent Kelpé'Koe, Inc. is a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Arizona, and has its office and principal place of business in the city of Seattle, State of Washington. The respondent is now and has been for more than two years last past engaged in the sale and distribution of an alleged medicinal preparation, purported to possess therapeutic or curative properties, under the name Kelpé'Koe.

Respondent markets the preparation Kelpé'Koe principally through sales direct to the users thereof located in the several States of the United States and in the District of Columbia, and causes said preparation Kelpé'Koe when sold to be transported from its place of business in Seattle, Wash., to the said purchasers thereof located at various points in the said several States of the United States other than the State of Washington and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 2. The respondent C. C. Hanson is an individual residing in the city of Memphis, in the State of Tennessee, and he acts as an agent for and the representative of the respondent Kelpé'Koe, Inc. in the sale and distribution of said preparation Kelpé'Koe. He maintains an office and principal place of business in the city of Memphis, Tenn., from which point he solicits customers in nearby States.

The respondent C. C. Hanson sells the preparation Kelpé'Koe principally direct to the ultimate users located in various of the States of the United States and causes said preparation when sold to be transported from his said place of business in the city of Memphis, State of Tennessee, to the purchasers thereof located at various points in the several States of the United States other than the State of Tennessee.

The respondents Kelpé'Koe, Inc. and C. C. Hanson have acted together and cooperated with each other in doing the acts and things hereinafter set out.

PAR. 3. Respondents Kelpé'Koe, Inc. and C. C. Hanson, in offering for sale, selling, and distributing the preparation "Kelpé'Koe" in commerce, as above set out, are in substantial competition with other corporations and individuals and with partnerships, firms, and associations engaged in said commerce in offering for sale, selling, and distributing mineral salts, drugs, remedies, and other medicants possessing therapeutic and used and useful in the treatment of the ailments, afflictions, diseases, and conditions for which the respondents recommend the preparation "Kelpé'Koe."

PAR. 4. The preparation "Kelpé'Koe" is a "natural" product "mined" in the State of Oregon from what are claimed to be crystallized deposits of kelp, or seaweed, found underground.

An analysis of the preparation "Kelpé'Koe" on April 27 1935, by The A. L. Kinsely Chemical Laboratory of Seattle, Wash., produced the results indicated in the following report:

The preparation is sold in its natural state and is "put up" in capsule form. The user of the preparation in its natural state concocts a tea for drinking by brewing the "ore," and the user of the preparation in capsule form uses it as purchased by taking the capsules by mouth.

PAR. 5. The respondents advertise the preparation Kelpé'Koe by distributing circulars, leaflets, booklets, form letters and other printed advertising matter. In said advertising matter, respondents make many representations and implications concerning the therapeutic efficacy of the preparation Kelpé'Koe and concerning the symptoms, and the treatment and cure, of various of the ailments, afflictions, diseases, and conditions from which mankind suffers. Many representations and implications are made concerning the benefits which users derive from Kelpé'Koe, other than as a treatment for specific ailments, afflictions, diseases, and conditions.

In said advertisements, respondents represent and imply that the preparation Kelpé'Koe when used according to directions will cure or be of substantial therapeutic benefit in the treatment of the following ailments, afflictions, diseases, and conditions:

nervous disorders	stomach ulcers	mal-nutrition anemia	kidney trouble	general debility
undue fatigue	glandular trouble	hay fever
asthma	prostate trouble	rheumatism
catarrh	liver trouble	arthritis
neuritis	eczema	abnormal blood
lumbago	rickets	pressure
acidosis	diabetes	constipation

Findings

25 F. T. C.

indigestion
feminine disorders gotter

sexual weakness dropsy skin infections and hemorrhoids.

The preparation Kelpé'Koe will not cure, nor is it of substantial therapeutic benefit in the treatment of the above enumerated ailments, afflictions, diseases, and conditions.

In said advertisements respondents represent and imply that the preparation Kelpé'Koe is of great benefit as a tonic and builder of children of all ages, more particularly those who show a tendency to be backward and those who are ill-nourished, defective, stunted, and puny, that it will supply vital elements required by nature in the building and formation of bone, tissue and cell structure, and that it provides the elements required to harmonize glandular activity during childhood. Respondents also represent and imply that the preparation Kelpé'Koe is an effective tonic for men and women, especially so during the trying periods of a woman's life, such as adolescence, pregnancy and the menopause and that its regular use exerts a normalizing influence upon the organs and tones up the system generally, building up the blood. Respondents also represent and imply that the use of the preparation Kelpé'Koe has an invigorating effect on the human body, which is not temporary in its duration, and that the remineralization of the body through the use of the preparation is noticeably reflected in a "keener expression," "clearer complexion" and a "more youthful appearance." Respondents also represent and imply that, if one is in a weak and run-down condition, regular use of the preparation will "bring one power," "quicken the brain and body activities" and make one healthier and happier, and that its use supplies the body with the mineral salts necessary to maintain a strong and vigorous body and assures a greater expectancy for a happier and healthier life.

The preparation Kelpé'Koe is not of great benefit, or of any benefit at all, as a tonic or builder of children of all ages, and is of no benefit to children who are backward, ill-nourished, defective, stunted or puny, and it does not supply vital elements required by nature in the building and formation of bone, tissue, and cell structure, and it does not provide the elements required to harmonize glandular activity during childhood. The preparation Kelpé'Koe is not an effective tonic for men and women and is of no benefit to a woman at any period of her life, and its regular use does not exert a normalizing influence upon the organs and tone the system generally, nor does it build up the blood.

The use of the preparation Kelpé'Koe does not have an invigorating effect on the human body. It does not result in remineralization of the human body nor does it result in a "keener expression," "clearer complexion," or a "more youthful appearance." The use of the preparation Kelpé'Koe will not "bring one power," "quicken the brain and body activities," and "make one healthier and happier" nor will it supply the body with the mineral salts necessary to maintain a strong and vigorous body, nor does it assure one of a greater expectancy for a happier and healthier life.

PAR. 6 In said advertisements, respondents represent and imply that the preparation Kelpé'Koe may be substituted for insulin as a treatment or palliative for diabetes. The preparation Kelpé'Koe is not efficacious as a treatment or palliative for diabetes, and will not and does not act in the same manner or with the same effect as, and is not a substitute for, insulin in the treatment and control of diabetes. For many years insulin has been recognized in the medical profession as the one product useful in the control of diabetes, which is a dangerous and progressively destructive disease and for which there is no known cure. The representations and implications of respondents as above stated in regard to the use of the preparation Kelpé'Koe as a treatment or palliative for diabetes or as a substitute for the product insulin in the control of diabetes lead many sufferers from this disease to discontinue the use of insulin in the treatment of diabetes and to substitute therefor the preparation Kelpé'Koe to the injury of such sufferers.

PAR. 7. The representations and implications made by the respondents for the preparation Kelpé'Koe as hereinabove set out are grossly exaggerated and false, for the preparation does not possess the therapeutic efficacy represented and implied by the respondents, its only therapeutic value being as an eliminant, possibly, due to the presence in the preparation of magnesium and sodium sulphate, and as a "tonic," possibly, for use by persons suffering from anemia or other ailments requiring an extra amount of iron in the diet, due to the presence in the preparation of ferrous and ferric sulphate.

PAR. 8. The representations and implications so used by the respondents in connection with the sale of the preparation Kelpé'Koe in said commerce, in the manner hereinabove set out, have had, and do have, the tendency and capacity to and do mislead and deceive many prospective purchasers of remedies for the ailments, afflictions, diseases, and conditions hereinabove mentioned and about which said representations and implications are made, and cause a substantial portion of such persons erroneously to believe that said representations and implications are true and that the preparation Kelpé'Koe possesses the therapeutic efficacy represented and implied by the respondents, and that it is a competent and effective treatment and corrective for use in remedying the ailments, afflictions, diseases, and conditions for which it is recommended, and that the users of Kelpé'Koe for purposes other than as a treatment for specific ailments, afflictions, diseases, and conditions will derive the general benefits as represented and implied by the respondents as hereinabove set out. The acts and practices of the respondent as above described cause a substantial portion of prospective purchasers to purchase the preparation Kelpé'Koe, thereby unfairly and unlawfully diverting trade in said commerce to the respondents from their competitors, as described in paragraph 3 hereof, who truthfully represent their products, to the substantial injury of such competitors and to the injury of the public.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondents Kelpé'Koe, Inc., and C. C. Hanson are to the prejudice of the public and of the respondents' competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce, within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

It is ordered, That the respondents Kelpé'Koe, Inc., a corporation, its officers, agents and employees, and C. C. Hanson, his representatives, agents, and employees, in connection with the offering for sale, sale and distribution of the product now known as, and sold under the name, Kelpé'Koe, or any other product or preparation, under whatever name sold, composed of similar ingredients and possessing therapeutic properties similar to the product Kelpé'Koe, in interstate commerce or in the District of Columbia, forthwith cease and desist from representing, directly or by implication:

1. That the use of said preparation will cure, or be of substantial benefit in the treatment of, the following ailments, afflictions, diseases and conditions:

nervous disorders	rheumatism	abnormal blood pressure
undue fatigue	arthritis	indigestion
asthma	acidosis	feminine disorders
catarrh	stomach ulcers	goiter
neuritis	kidney trouble	sexual weakness
lumbago	glandular trouble	dropsy
diabetes	prostate trouble	skin infections
mal-nutrition	liver trouble	hemorrhoids;
general debility	eczema
hay fever	rickets

2. That said preparation provides the elements required to harmonize glandular activity during childhood or that it will supply vital elements required by nature in the building and formation of bone, tissue and cell structure;

3. That said preparation is an effective tonic for use by women during adolescence, pregnancy and the menopause, or that its regular use will exert a normalizing influence upon the organs and tone up the system generally or build up the blood;

4. That the use of said preparation will result in remineralization of the body or that its use will supply the body with the mineral salts necessary to maintain a strong and vigorous body;

5. That said preparation may, with safety, be substituted for the product insulin in the the treatment of diabetes;

6. That said preparation has any therapeutic value except as an eliminant and as a "tonic" where additional iron in the diet is indicated.

It is further ordered, That the respondents shall, within 60 days after service upon them of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which they have complied with this order.

IN THE MATTER OF
JOE ANDERSON, TRADING AS THE A & O COMPANY

COMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION
 OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 26, 1914

Docket 3121. Complaint, May 1, 1937—Decision, July 24, 1937

Where an individual engaged in compounding, distributing, and selling, in commerce, his "A & O" pharmaceutical preparation; in advertisements circulated among the general public in various forms of printed matter and by radio broadcasts and otherwise—

- (a) Represented that said product opened the head, let one breathe freely, healed irritated membranes, checked fever, etc., and relieved and cured the most stubborn cold when other treatments failed, and protected one from influenza, pneumonia, and serious lung trouble;
- (b) Represented that it gave instant, guaranteed, and effective relief and opened the bowels and cleared the digestive tract, and restored system to normal, and was quicker and safer than pills and salves, and that there was nothing else that acted as quickly and thoroughly; and
- (c) Represented that said product was a secret combination of ingredients which doctors prescribe for colds, and was based on a secret formula within his exclusive knowledge, making product entirely different from any other known preparation;

Facts being said statements and representations were exaggerated, preparation in question was not a sure, quick, and effective remedy and cure for colds and did not relieve the systemic causes thereof or give instant and thorough relief, check fever, etc., or protect patient from influenza, pneumonia, or other cold complications, was not unique, as claimed, in its action nor based on a secret formula sponsored by reliable physician, could not with safety be given to any and all children indiscriminately, was not entirely different from any other known preparation in view of substantially similar composition of many competing products, and representations in question as to nature, curative value, and effect of said preparation were exaggerated, misleading and deceptive;

With capacity and tendency to mislead a substantial portion of the purchasing public into the belief that all said representations were true, and into purchase of said product in such beliefs, and with result that a number of the consuming public, as a direct consequence of mistaken and erroneous beliefs thus induced, purchased substantial volume of his said product, and trade was thereby unfairly diverted to him from competitors likewise engaged in distribution and sale of like and similar pharmaceutical preparations, and who truthfully represent effectiveness of their said products and results to be obtained from use thereof; to the injury of competition in commerce:

Held, That such acts and practices were to the prejudice of the public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition.

Mr. Joseph C. Fehr for the Commission.

Mr. Clinton Robb, of Washington, D. C., for respondent.

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that Joe Anderson, an individual doing business under the trade name of The A & O Company, hereinafter referred to as respondent, has been and is using unfair methods of competition in commerce as "commerce" is defined in said act, and it appearing to said Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent, Joe Anderson, is an individual doing business under the trade name of The A & O Company, with his principal office and place of business located in the city of New Bern, State of North Carolina. Respondent, for more than one year last past, has been, and still is, engaged in the manufacture and sale of a pharmaceutical preparation known as "A & O" which he represents to be an adequate treatment for colds. In the course and conduct of his business respondent offers said product for sale and sells the same in commerce between the State of North Carolina and the several States of the United States, and in the District of Columbia.

When said product is sold, respondent transports same from his place of business in the State of North Carolina to the purchasers thereof located in States of the United States other than the State of North Carolina, and in the District of Columbia. There has been for more than one year last past, and still is, a constant current of trade and commerce in said product so manufactured and sold by respondent, between and among the various States of the United States, and in the District of Columbia. Respondent is now and for more than one year last past has been engaged in substantial competition with other individuals and with firms, partnerships, and corporations engaged in the manufacture of like and similar products and in the sale thereof in commerce between and among the various States of the United States, and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of his business, as aforesaid, the respondent, in soliciting the sale of and in selling his "A & O," and for the purpose of creating a demand upon the part of the consuming public for said product, now causes and for more than one year last past has caused advertisements to be issued, published, and circulated to and among the general public of the United States in various forms of printed matter, by radio broadcasts, and in other ways. In said ways and by said means respondent makes and has made to the general public many unfair, false, and misleading statements with reference to the alleged therapeutic value of said product and its effect upon the users thereof, a portion of which is as follows:

Opens bowels.

Quicker and safer than pills and salve.

Unconditionally guaranteed.

Gives quick guaranteed relief.

For instant relief take A & O.

Relieves the most stubborn colds when all other treatments fail.

Acts instantly and thoroughly.

Restores the system to normal order.

Reliable for adults and children.

A & O starts giving relief from the first dose.

Even the most stubborn colds respond to A & O.

For colds and coughs due to colds, there is absolutely nothing else that acts as quickly and thoroughly as A & O.

A & O soothes and heals irritated membranes, clears the nasal passages, opens the head, checks fever and clears the digestive tract.

Colds tear down the system, subject you to influenza, pneumonia and serious lung troubles.

The ORIGINAL liquid prescription for colds . . . and did you know that users say A and O is, by far, the most effective colds prescription yet discovered?

A and O is a secret combination of ingredients that doctors everywhere prescribe for colds.

This great colds prescription is compounded by a secret process and differs entirely from any other preparation for colds they've ever tried.

A and O is ONE colds prescription that "WORKS"!

PAR. 3. The statements and representations set forth in paragraph 2 hereof, and many others similar thereto, serve, and have served, as representations on the part of respondent to purchasers and prospective purchasers as to the nature of the product and its effectiveness as a cure and remedy in use. Said representations are that "A & O" opens the head and lets one breathe freely; that it checks fever; that it opens the bowels; that it relieves bodily discomfort and restores the system to normal; that it gives instant, guaranteed or thorough relief; that it relieves and cures the most stubborn colds when other treatments fail; that it starts giving relief from the first dose; that it heals irritated membranes, clears the nasal passages, clears the digestive tract; that it is quicker and safer than pills and salve; that it protects one from influenza, pneumonia, or serious lung trouble; that it is a secret combination of ingredients which doctors prescribe for colds; that respondent has exclusive knowledge of a formula which is the basis of his product and that it is entirely different from any other known preparation.

In truth and in fact, respondent's said product is not a sure and quick remedy and cure for colds, nor does it relieve the systematic causes of colds. It has no effect on the causatives of colds. It does not give instant and thorough relief nor does it check fever or open the head and bowels or protect the patient from influenza or pneumonia or other complications of a cold. It is not true that there is absolutely nothing else that acts as quickly and thoroughly as "A & O," nor is it true that a secret formula is the basis of said product sponsored by reliable physicians. Said preparation can not with safety be given to any and all children indiscriminately. It is not true that said "A & O" is entirely different from any other known preparation, as there are many competing products which contain essentially the same ingredients. In truth and in fact, the representations made by respondent as to the nature, curative value, and effect of his preparation, when used, are grossly exaggerated, false, misleading, and untrue, as said preparation will not accomplish the results claimed for it.

PAR. 4. There are among the competitors of the respondent in interstate commerce, manufacturers and distributors of like and similar products who truthfully advertise and represent the nature, merit, and therapeutic value of their respective products. There are also among such competitors of the respondent, sellers and distributors of like and similar products who do not advertise and otherwise represent that such products have the merit or therapeutic value which they do not have.

PAR. 5. The above alleged acts and practices of respondent have the capacity and tendency to mislead and deceive purchasers and prospective purchasers into the erroneous beliefs that respondent's representations set out in paragraph 3 hereof are true and into the purchase of respondent's product in such beliefs. Thereby trade is unfairly diverted to respondent from respondent's competitors, as hereinabove alleged, and as a consequence thereof substantial injury is done by respondent to competition in commerce as herein described.

PAR. 6. Said acts and practices of respondent are all to the prejudice of the public and respondent's competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914.

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

the Federal Trade Commission, on the 1st day of May, A. D., 1937, issued and served its complaint in this proceeding upon respondent, Joe Anderson, an individual doing business under the trade name of The A & O Company, charging him with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce, in violation of the provisions of said act. After the issuance of said complaint and the filing of said respondent's answer thereto, a stipulation as to the facts was entered into by and between Clinton Robb, Esq., attorney for respondent, and W. T. Kelley, Chief Counsel for the Commission, by which it was agreed that, subject to the approval of the Commission, the statement of facts so agreed upon should be taken as the facts in this proceeding, and in lieu of testimony in support of the charges stated in the complaint or in opposition thereto; and by which stipulation it was further agreed that the Commission might proceed upon said statement of facts to issue its report stating its findings as to the facts (including inferences which it might draw from the said stipulated facts) and its conclusion based thereon, and enter its order disposing of the proceeding without the presentation of arguments or the filing of briefs. Said stipulation as to the facts has been duly filed in the office of the Commission, and approved by it. Thereafter, the proceeding came on for final hearing before the Commission in said complaint, the answer thereto, and the statement of facts as agreed upon in lieu of testimony, briefs and arguments have been waived, and the Commission, having duly considered the same and being fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public, and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent, Joe Anderson, trading and doing business under the trade name of The A & O Company, has his principal office and place of business located at New Bern, N. C. He has been for more than one year last past, and is now, engaged in the business of compounding, distributing and selling in commerce, as herein set out, a pharmaceutical preparation known as "A & O," which he represents to be an adequate treatment for colds. In the course and conduct of his business, respondent offers said product for sale, and sells the same, in commerce between the State of North Carolina and the several States of the United States, and in the District of Columbia.

When said product is sold, respondent transports it from his place of business in the State of North Carolina to the respective purchasers thereof located at various points in the States of the United States other than the State of North Carolina, and in the District of Columbia. Respondent has at all times maintained a constant current of trade and commerce in said product so manufactured and sold by respondent between and among the various States of the United States, and in the District of Columbia. Respondent is now, and for more than one year last past has been, engaged in substantial competition with other individuals and with firms, partnerships, and corporations engaged in the manufacture of like and similar products, and in the sale thereof in commerce between and among the various States of the United States, and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 2. In directing the operation of his said business, and for the purpose of inducing the purchase of this product, respondent now causes, and for more than one year last past has caused, advertisements to be issued, published, and circulated to and among the general public of the United States in various forms of printed matter, by radio broadcasts, and in other ways. In said ways and by said means respondent makes, and has made, to the general public misleading and deceptive statements with reference to the alleged therapeutic value of said product and its effect upon the users thereof, a portion of which is as follows:

Opens bowels.

Quicker and safer than pills and salve.

Unconditionally guaranteed.

Gives quick guaranteed relief.

For instant relief take A & O.

Relieves the most stubborn colds when all other treatments fail.

Acts instantly and thoroughly.

Restores the system to normal order.

Reliable for adults and children.

A & O starts giving relief from the first dose.

Even the most stubborn colds respond to A & O.

For colds and coughs due to colds, there is absolutely nothing else that acts as quickly and thoroughly as A & O.

A & O soothes and heals irritated membranes, clears the nasal passages, opens the head, checks fever and clears the digestive tract.

Colds tear down the system, subject you to influenza, pneumonia, and serious lung troubles.

In June, 1936, the respondent stipulated and agreed with the Federal Trade Commission to discontinue making and advertising the foregoing representations and statements, and other representations and statements equivalent thereto in form and substance. Among the statements and representations made by the respondent since June 12, 1936 have been the following:

The original liquid prescription for colds * * * and did you know that users say A & O is, by far, the most effective colds prescription yet discovered?

A & O is a secret combination of ingredients that doctors everywhere prescribe for colds.

This great colds prescription is compounded by a secret process and differs entirely from any other preparation for colds they've ever tried.

A & O is ONE colds prescription that "WORKS"!

PAR. 3. The statements and representations set forth in paragraph 2 hereof, and others similar thereto, serve, and have served, as representations on the part of respondent to purchasers and prospective purchasers as to the nature of his product and its effectiveness as a cure and remedy in use. Said representations are that "A & O" opens the head and lets one breathe freely; that it checks fever; that it opens the bowels; that it relieves bodily discomfort and restores the system to normal; that it gives instant, guaranteed or thorough relief; that it relieves and cures the most stubborn colds when other treatments fail; that it starts giving relief from the first dose; that it heals irritated membranes, clears the nasal passages, clears the digestive tract; that it is quicker and safer than pills and salves; that it protects one from influenza, pneumonia, or serious lung trouble, that it is a secret combination of ingredients which doctors prescribe for colds; that respondent has exclusive knowledge of a formula which is the basis of his product and that it is entirely different from any other known preparation.

PAR. 4. The said statements and representations made by the respondent, as herein set out in paragraph 2, are exaggerated and have the capacity and tendency to deceive and mislead purchasers and prospective purchasers of respondent's said product. In truth and in fact, respondent's said product is not a sure, quick and effective remedy and cure for colds, nor does it relieve the systemic causes of colds. It has no effect on the causatives of colds. It does not give instant and thorough relief nor does it check fever or open the head and bowels, or protect the patient from influenza or pneumonia or other complications of a cold. It is not true that there is absolutely nothing else that acts as quickly and thoroughly as "A & O," nor is it true that a secret formula is the basis of said product sponsored by reliable physicians. Said preparation cannot with safety be given to any and all children indiscriminately, nor is it true that said "A & O" is entirely different from any other known preparation, as there are many competing products which contain essentially the same ingredients. In truth and in fact, the representations made by respondent as to the nature, curative value, and the effect of his preparation, when used, are exaggerated, misleading, and deceptive, as said preparation will not accomplish the results claimed for it.

PAR. 5. There are, among the respondent's competitors in commerce, as herein described, manufacturers and distributors of like and similar products who truthfully advertise and represent the nature, merit, and therapeutic value of their respective products, and who do not advertise and otherwise represent that such products have merit and therapeutic value which they do not have.

PAR. 6. Each and all of the misleading and deceptive statements and representations made by the respondent, as herein set out, in offering for sale and selling his said product, had and now have a capacity and tendency to mislead a substantial portion of the purchasing public into the erroneous belief that all of said representations are true, and into the purchase of respondent's product in such beliefs. Further, as a direct consequence of the mistaken and erroneous beliefs thus induced by the acts and representations made by the respondent, as hereinabove detailed, a number of the consuming public have purchased a substantial volume of respondent's product, with the result that trade has been and is unfairly diverted to respondent from competitors likewise engaged in the business of distributing and selling like and similar pharmaceutical preparations who truthfully represent the effectiveness of their products and the results to be obtained from their use. As a result, injury has been, and is now being done, by respondent to competition in commerce, as herein set out.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondent, Joe Anderson, an individual doing business under the trade name of The A & O Company, are to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce, within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

vening procedure, the Commission may issue and serve upon the respondent herein findings as to the facts and conclusion based thereon and an order disposing of the proceeding, and the Commission having made its findings as to the facts and conclusion that said respondent has violated the provisions of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

It is ordered, That the respondent, Joe Anderson, an individual doing business under the trade name of The A & O Company, his representatives, agents, and employees, in connection with the advertising, offering for sale, and sale and distribution in interstate commerce, or in the District of Columbia, of a pharmaceutical preparation now known as "A & O," or of said preparation or of any similar preparation containing substantially the same ingredients, sold under the same, or under any other, name or names, cease and desist, directly or indirectly, from:

Representing in newspapers and magazines, and through circulars, catalogues, labels, or in any other form of printed matter, or by radio broadcasting, or in any other way or manner:

1. That said product opens the head, lets one breathe freely, heals irritated membranes, clears the nasal passage, checks fever, relieves and cures the most stubborn colds when other treatments fail, protects one from influenza, pneumonia, or serious lung trouble;

2. That said product gives instant, guaranteed, or effective relief, or starts giving relief from the first dose;

3. That said product opens the bowels, clears the digestive tract, restores the system to normal, and is quicker and safer than pills and salve;

4. That said product is a secret combination of ingredients which doctors prescribe for colds, and that it is based on a formula within the exclusive knowledge of respondent, making the product entirely different from any other known preparation; and from making any other representation of similar tenor or import.

And it is hereby further ordered, That the said respondent shall, within 60 days from the date of the service upon him of this order, file with this Commission a report in writing, setting forth the manner and form in which he has complied with this order.

IN THE MATTER OF
LECHLER LABORATORIES, INC.

COMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION
OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 26, 1914

Docket 3115. Complaint, Apr. 26, 1937—Decision, July 27, 1937

Where a corporation engaged in manufacture, sale and distribution of its "569 Instantaneous Hair Lightener," direct to consuming public, in substantial competition with those engaged in manufacture and distribution of like and similar products and sale thereof in commerce among the various States and in the District of Columbia, in advertising its said preparation through media of price lists, advertisements, and other printed matter, published and circulated through the United States mails to customers and prospective customers in the various States and in said District—

- (a) Represented that bleaching agent of said product was not similar to peroxide and that it performed its bleaching action without said substance, and that it did not require or contain the same, and was superior to products which did contain such substance; and
- (b) Represented that said product was beneficial to permanent waves and bleached hair, and was harmless to the hair, and that it was the only preparation that would lighten the scalp, and that through use thereof there would be no more dark roots;

Facts being product in question did require peroxide, bleaching action of said product was not chemically different from those containing such substance of like strength, it did not perform its bleaching action without said substance, was not more beneficial to permanent waves and bleached hair than other similar and like preparations, or not only preparation that would lighten scalp, was not harmless to hair of users in many cases, and would not prevent dark roots, and aforesaid various representations were unfair, false, and misleading;

With effect of misleading substantial portion of consuming public in the several States and in said District, by inducing them mistakenly and erroneously to believe that said preparation required no peroxide, and that other representations with respect thereto, as hereinabove set forth, were true, and with tendency and capacity so to mislead and deceive distributors and purchasing public, and with effect of inducing members thereof to buy its said product on account of such erroneous beliefs, and of thereby unfairly diverting trade to it from competitors who do not make use of same or similar representations, acts or practices; to the substantial injury of competition in commerce:

Held. That such acts and practices were to the prejudice of the public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition.

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission having reason to believe that Lechler Laboratories, Inc., a corporation, hereinafter referred to as respondent, has been and is now using unfair methods of competition in commerce as "commerce" is defined in said act, and it appearing to said Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint, stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent, Lechler Laboratories, Inc., is a corporation organized and doing business under the laws of the State of New York, having its principal place of business at 334 Audubon Avenue, city of New York, State of New York. It is now, and for more than one year last past has been, engaged in the manufacture, sale, and distribution of a certain hair bleaching product designated as "Lechler '569' Instantaneous Hair Lightener" in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 2. When said product is sold, respondent transports or causes the same to be transported from its principal place of business in the city of New York, State of New York, to purchasers thereof located in other States of the United States and in the District of Columbia. There is now, and has been at all times mentioned herein, a constant current of trade and commerce in said above described product sold by respondent between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 3. In the course and conduct of its said business, respondent is now and has been in substantial competition with other corporations and with individuals, partnerships, and firms likewise engaged in business of distributing and selling hair bleaching and dyeing products in commerce among and between various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 4. In the course and conduct of its said business, respondent has caused to be printed and circulated through the United States mails to its customers and prospective customers in the various States of the United States catalogues, price lists and other printed matter. The respondent has also caused and still causes advertisements to be inserted in newspapers and magazines having a general interstate circulation. Each and all of the catalogues, price lists, and advertisements contain statements which purport to be descriptive of the efficacy, value, and merit of the respondent's product. Among the statements made in the aforesaid catalogue, price list, newspaper and magazine advertisements, the following are representative:

LIGHTEN YOUR HAIR WITHOUT PEROXIDE

* * * to ANY shade you Desire

* * * SAFELY in 5 to 15 minutes

Careful, fastidious women avoid the use of peroxide because peroxide makes hair brittle. LECHLER'S INSTANTANEOUS HAIR LIGHTENER requires NO peroxide. Used as a paste, it can not streak. Eliminates "straw" look. BENEFICIAL TO PERMANENT WAVES AND BLEACHED HAIR. Lightens blonde hair grown dark. This is the only preparation that also lightens the scalp. No more dark roots. Used over 20 years by famous beauties, stage and screen stars and children. Harmless. Guaranteed. Mailed complete with brush for application. $1.

PAR. 5. Through use of the foregoing statements and others similar thereto, the respondent represents, either directly or by implication, that the said Lechler's Instantaneous Hair Lightener requires no peroxide; that the bleaching agent of its product is not similar to peroxide and performs its bleaching action without peroxide; that its product does not contain peroxide and is superior to products containing peroxide; that it is beneficial to permanent waves and bleached hair; that it is the only preparation that will lighten the scalp; that through its use there will be no more dark roots; that it is harmless to the hair of the user.

PAR. 6. In truth and in fact, the respondent's product is composed of such ingredients that when said product is used its bleaching action is actually accomplished by hydrogen peroxide. Respondent's product does contain peroxide and its bleaching action is not substantially different from other products containing peroxide. Said product is not beneficial to permanent waves and bleached hair and has the same, or similar effect as other products using peroxide. It is not the only preparation that will lighten the scalp and its use will not prevent dark roots. As hair grows out, the new hair showing above the scalp will be the same color as the hair before use of the product. The respondent's product is not harmless to the hair of the user in many cases.

PAR. 7. Each and all of the false and misleading statements and the representations made by the respondent in designating or describing its product and the effectiveness of said product for lightening the hair and treating conditions of the hair and scalp in offering for sale and selling its said product were and are calculated to and had and now have a tendency and capacity to mislead a substantial portion of the purchasing public into the erroneous belief that all of said representations are true and that said product will in truth accomplish the results claimed.

Further, as a direct consequence of the mistaken and erroneous beliefs induced by the acts and representations of the respondent as hereinabove detailed, a number of the consuming public have purchased a substantial volume of respondent's product with the result that trade has been unfairly diverted to the respondent from competitors likewise engaged in the business of distributing and selling similar products or other products designed and sold for use in the treatment of various conditions of the scalp and hair and other conditions named herein who truthfully represent the effectiveness of their respective products.

PAR. 8. The foregoing false and misleading statements and representations on the part of respondent are inducements for a substantial number of consuming purchasers to form the mistaken and erroneous beliefs above referred to and to buy the product distributed and offered for sale by respondent. And as a result, a substantial volume of trade has been and is now being diverted to respondent from competitors engaged in similar business who truthfully advertise and represent, through their catalogues, prices lists, and advertisements, the nature, merit and value of their products. As a consequence thereof, a substantial injury has been done to substantial competition in commerce among the several States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 9. The above and foregoing acts, practices, and representations of respondent have been and are all to the prejudice of the public and respondent's competitors and have been and are unfair methods of competition within the meaning and intent of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

a stipulation as to the facts was entered into between W. T. Kelley, Chief Counsel of the Commission, and Willis B. Rice, counsel for respondent, which said stipulation was thereafter approved by the Commission. Thereafter, the proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on the said complaint, and answer thereto, and the stipulation as to the facts (respondent having waived the filing of brief); and the Commission having duly considered the same and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom :

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent, Lechler Laboratories, Inc., is a New York corporation organized and doing business by virtue of and under the laws of the State of New York.

PAR. 2. Respondent has been for more than one year last past engaged in the business of manufacturing, selling, and distributing "Lechler '569 Instantaneous Hair Lightener'" direct to the consuming public.

PAR. 3. In the sale of said product respondent has transported or caused the same to be transported from its principal place of business in the State of New York to purchasers thereof located in States of the United States other than the State from which shipment originated and in the District of Columbia.

There has been for more than one year last past, and still is, a constant current of trade and commerce in said "Lechler '569 Instantaneous Hair Lightener'" so sold and distributed by respondent between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 4. For more than one year last past the respondent has been engaged in substantial competition with individuals, partnerships, firms, and other corporations engaged in the manufacture and distribution of like and similar products, and in the sale thereof in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 5. In the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid, the respondent, in soliciting the sale of, and in selling, its product, and for the purpose of creating a demand on the part of the consuming public for said product, has for more than one year last past caused the product to be advertised through the media of price lists, advertisements, and other printed matter published, issued, and circulated through the United States mails to its customers and prospective customers in the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia. In said ways and by said means respondent has made to the general public many unfair, false, and misleading statements with reference to the commodities offered for sale by it.

PAR. 6. Among the unfair, false, and misleading statements made by the respondent with reference to the commodities offered for sale by it are the following:

That Lechler Instantaneous Hair Lightener requires no peroxide; that the bleaching agent of said product is not similar to peroxide; that the said product performs its bleaching action without peroxide; that said product does not contain peroxide; that said product is superior to products containing peroxide; that said product is beneficial to permanent waves and bleached hair; that said product is the only preparation that will lighten the scalp; that through the use of said product there will be no more dark roots; and that said product is harmless to the hair of the user.

PAR. 7. The aforesaid representations are untrue in that Lechler Instantaneous Hair Lightener does require peroxide, and that the bleaching action of said product is not chemically different from the products containing peroxide of like strength. Said product does not perform its bleaching action without peroxide. Said product does contain peroxide. Said product is not more beneficial to permanent waves and bleached hair than other similar and like preparations. Said product has the same or similar action as other products using peroxide of like strength. Said product is not the only preparation that will lighten the scalp, and its use will not prevent dark roots, and said product is not harmless to the hair of the users in many cases.

PAR. 8. The effect of the foregoing false and misleading representations and acts of the respondent in selling and offering for sale the items of merchandise herein described is to mislead a substantial portion of the consuming public in the several States of the United States and in the District of Columbia by inducing them to mistakenly and erroneously believe that:

Lechler Instantaneous Hair Lightener requires no peroxide; the bleaching agent of the Hair Lightener is not similar to peroxide; the Hair Lightener performs its bleaching action without peroxide; its product does not contain peroxide; it is superior to products containing peroxide; it is beneficial to permanent waves and bleached hair; it is the only preparation that will lighten the scalp; through its use there will be no more dark roots; and it is harmless to the hair of the user.

PAR. 9. The use of each and all of the foregoing false and misleading statements and representations as herein set out has had, and now has, a tendency and capacity to mislead and deceive distributors and the purchasing public into the erroneous and mistaken belief that the said statements and representations are true, and has induced and still induces members of the public to purchase the product of said respondent on account of said erroneous beliefs. Said representations have thereby unfairly diverted trade to said respondent from competitors who do not make use of the same or similar representations, acts, or practices, and substantial injury has been done by respondent to competition in commerce among and between the several States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondent, Lechler Laboratories, Inc., a corporation, are to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce, within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

It is ordered, That respondent, Lechler Laboratories, Inc., its officers, representatives, agents, and employes, in connection with the advertising, offering for sale, sale, and distribution, in interstate commerce, or in the District of Columbia, of a hair bleaching product now known as Lechler Instantaneous Hair Lightener, or of any similar preparation containing substantially the same ingredients under the same or under any other name or names, do forthwith cease and desist from representing, directly or indirectly, through price lists, circulars, labels, or any other form of printed matter, or by radio broadcasting or in any other manner:

1. That the bleaching agent of said product is not similar to peroxide, and that it performs its bleaching action without peroxide;
2. That said product does not require or contain peroxide;
3. That said product is superior to products containing peroxide;
4. That said product is beneficial to permanent waves and bleached hair, and is harmless to the hair of the user; and
5. That said product is the only preparation that will lighten the scalp, and that through the use of said product there will be no more dark roots.

It is further ordered, That the respondent shall, within 60 days after service upon it of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which it has complied with the order herein set forth.

IN THE MATTER OF
NODOZ LABORATORIES, INC.

COMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION
OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 26, 1914

Docket 2840. Complaint, June 10, 1936—Decision, July 28, 1937

Where a corporation engaged in sale and distribution, to wholesale and retail dealers for ultimate resale to public, of "NoDoz Awakeners," vegetable concentrate with caffeine, made for it by the manufacturer in accordance with its formula, and designed to keep users from drowsiness and to keep them awake when sleepy or tired, in general competition with sellers of the class of refreshment and invigorator containing caffeiens, such as coffee, tea, and coca-cola, and with the same general therapeutic effects, and who do not advertise and otherwise represent their said products as having merit and therapeutic value which they do not have; in soliciting sale of and selling said products through advertisements in newspapers and periodicals, and in other forms of printed matter, and through radio broadcasts, circulated among the various States to members of the public—

- (a) Represented that use of said product would counteract or overcome effects of drinking alcoholic beverages, and would have beneficial effect on persons indulging in use of alcoholics, counteracting "alcoholic effects during the party and the 'morning after'", etc.;
- (b) Represented that said "NoDoz Awakeners" were "tablets made of a pure vegetable concentrate under the U. S. Pure Food and Drug Laws"; and
- (c) Represented that more than a million automobile drivers take said preparation to keep awake and alert in long hours of driving, and that said tablets "Keep awake the sleepy motorist, truck driver," etc.;

Facts being said tablets did not overcome or counteract effects of use of alcoholic beverages or have any beneficial effect on indulgers in use thereof, they were not made under formula approved by Pure Food and Drug Administration, number of users and endorsers of said product was greatly exaggerated, and representations aforesaid were grossly exaggerated, false, misleading, and untrue;

With capacity and tendency to mislead a substantial portion of the purchasing public into the erroneous belief that all of its aforesaid representations were true, and with result that number of the consuming public, as a direct consequence of the mistaken and erroneous beliefs induced by its said acts and representations, purchased a substantial volume of its product, and trade was unfairly diverted to it from competitors likewise engaged in sale and distribution of like and similar caffeine-containing preparations, and who truthfully represent the effectiveness of their products and results to be obtained from use thereof; to the injury of competition in commerce:

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that NoDoz Laboratories, Inc., a corporation, hereinafter referred to as respondent, has been and is using unfair methods of competition in commerce as "commerce" is defined in said act, and it appearing to said Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent, NoDoz Laboratories, Inc., is a corporation organized and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the State of California, having its principal office and place of business located at 307 Mitau Building, in the city of Sacramento, in the State of California. Respondent for more than one year last past has been, and still is, engaged in the manufacture of a pharmaceutical preparation known as "NoDoz Awakeners," made of a mixture of caffeine citrate and sugar of milk, and in offering said product for sale, and selling the same in commerce between the State of California and the several States of the United States and in the District of Columbia. When said product is sold, respondent transports or causes the same to be transported from its place of business in the State of California to the purchasers thereof located in States of the United States other than the State of California and in the District of Columbia. There has been for more than one year last past, and still is, a constant current of trade and commerce in said product so manufactured by respondent, between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia. Respondent is now and for more than one year last past has been in substantial competition with other corporations and with individuals, partnerships, and firms engaged in the manufacture of like and similar products and in the sale thereof between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of its business, as aforesaid, the respondent, in soliciting the sale of and selling "NoDoz Awakeners" and for the purpose of creating a demand upon the part of the consuming public for said product, now causes and for more than one year last past has caused advertisements to be issued, published, and circulated to and among the general public of the United States in various periodicals and publications and in other forms of printed matter, and by radio broadcasting and in other ways. In said ways and by said means respondent makes and has made to the general public many unfair, false, and misleading statements with reference to the alleged therapeutic value of said product and its effect upon the users thereof, a portion of which are as follows:

NoDoz Awakeners—Particularly beneficial, when driving at night, when effects of alcohol are to be overcome, when working at night, when mentally depressed, when keen thinking, accurate and rapid work are important and upon hundreds of other daily occasions.

Counteracts alcoholic effects during the party and the "morning after." Restores energy—when tired or sleepy—when working or playing.

NoDoz Awakeners are tablets made of a pure vegetable concentrate under the U. S. Pure Food and Drug Laws.

Keep awake the sleepy motorist, truck driver—overcome alcoholic depression.

There is a marked stimulation of the intellectual functions, especially those of reason, judgment, and self-control. Muscular strength, speed and accuracy are all increased. A sense of energy and vitality add to one's capacity for work or pleasure without apparent fatigue.

When energy is exhausted. When you've taxed your powers to the limit, and yet have long hours of work ahead, take a NoDoz Awakener and feel the steady, natural return of vitality, the "lift" in morale and general sense of well-being which follows.

Taken before or during indulgence, NoDoz Awakeners will preserve a clear head and perfect poise under the most difficult circumstances. Taken afterwards—NoDoz Awakeners will restore sobriety.

More than a million automobile drivers now take a NoDoz Awakener to keep awake and alert in long hours of driving.

If you feel like dozing, but your job won't let you—NoDoz keeps you fit. But NoDoz doesn't get you.

One little NoDoz Awakener'll keep you bright three, four hours, for driving, working, studying, playing nights.

PAR. 3. The statements and representations set forth in paragraph 2 hereof have the capacity and tendency to mislead and deceive purchasers and prospective purchasers of respondent's product into the belief:

(a) That the use of NoDoz Awakeners will keep one equipped for duties, or awake while driving;

(b) That the use of said preparation will—

1. Put one back on his feet;
2. Put bright ideas in the head;
3. "Conquer" mental dullness or fatigue;
4. Enable one to steer clear of accidents while driving;
5. "Overcome" alcoholic depression;

(c) That said preparation restores energy or "counteracts" alcoholic effects;

(d) That by the use of said preparation—

1. There is a stimulation of "intellectual" powers;

2. Muscular strength, speed, accuracy are all increased; or
3. Energy or vitality will be added to one's capacity for work or pleasure without fatigue;

(e) That said preparation taken before or during indulgence will preserve a clear head or perfect poise under the most difficult circumstances;

(f) That by the use of said preparation one may feel the natural return of vitality, the "lift" in morale, or a general sense of well being;

(g) That more than a million automobile drivers, or any other number not established by competent evidence, now take said preparation to keep awake on long hours of driving, or approve the same as the safe, sure way to stay awake while driving;

(h) That said preparation is made under the United States Pure Food and Drug Laws;

(i) That said preparation is a pure vegetable concentrate;

whereas, in truth and in fact, "NoDoz Awakeners" do not keep persons awake when tired or sleepy, or when working or driving automobiles at night; nor do they overcome the effects of the use of alcohol. The number of users and endorsers of this product is greatly exaggerated, and the representation that "NoDoz Awakeners" are manufactured upon a formula conforming to the Pure Food and Drug Law is unauthorized. It is not true, as represented, that a "NoDoz Awakener" is a pure vegetable concentrate. In truth and in fact, the representations made by the respondent with respect to the nature and effect of its pharmaceutical preparation when used, are grossly exaggerated, false, misleading, and untrue, as said preparation will not accomplish in all cases the results claimed for it.

PAR. 4. There are among the competitors of the respondent in interstate commerce manufacturers of like and similar products who truthfully advertise and represent the nature, merit, and therapeutic value of their respective products. There are also among such competitors of the respondent sellers and distributors of like and similar products who do not advertise and otherwise represent that such products have the merit or the therapeutic value which they do not have.

PAR. 5. The above alleged acts and practices of respondent have the capacity to mislead and deceive purchasers and prospective purchasers into the erroneous beliefs described in paragraph 3 hereof and into the purchase of respondent's product in such beliefs. Thereby trade is diverted by respondent from respondent's competitors in interstate commerce referred to in paragraph 4 and as a consequence thereof substantial injury is done by respondent to competition in interstate commerce.

PAR. 6. Said acts and practices of respondent are all to the prejudice of the public and respondent's competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914.

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, on June 10, 1936, issued and served its complaint in this proceeding upon respondent, NoDoz Laboratories, Inc., a corporation, charging it with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce, in violation of the provisions of said act. After the issuance of said complaint, and the filing of respondent's answer thereto, testimony and other evidence in support of the allegations of said complaint were introduced by P. C. Kolinski, attorney for the Commission, and in opposition to the allegations of the complaint by Wm. A. Sitton, attorney for the respondent, before Chas. P. Vicini and Miles J. Furnas, examiners of the Commission theretofore duly designated by it, and said testimony and other evidence was duly recorded and filed in the office of the Commission. Thereafter this proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on said complaint, the answer thereto, testimony and evidence, and brief in support of the complaint (respondent having filed no brief and having not requested oral argument), and the Commission having duly considered the same and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public, and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent, NoDoz Laboratories, Inc., is a California corporation, with its principal office and place of business in Sacramento, Calif. Respondent began doing business as a corporation in the month of August 1934. Respondent is now, and ever since August, 1934, has been, engaged in the sale and distribution of a pharmaceutical preparation known as "NoDoz Awakeners."

Respondent's said product, known as "NoDoz Awakeners," is a vegetable concentrate containing caffeine, which is designed to keep users from drowsiness and to keep them awake when sleepy or tired. Respondent sells and distributes its said product to wholesale and retail dealers for ultimate resale to members of the public, and also sells direct to members of the purchasing public located in the various States of the United States other than the State of California. In the course and conduct of its business, the respondent causes its said product, when sold by it, to be transported in commerce from its place of business in California to, into and through said other States, and in the District of Columbia, to the purchasers to whom said product was sold by the respondent.

PAR. 2. The respondent herein, in soliciting the sale of and in selling said product known as "NoDoz Awakeners," has made use of advertisements inserted in newspapers and magazines and in other forms of printed matter, and broadcasts by radio, which are circulated in and among the various States of the United States to members of the public. Said advertisements contain many misleading and deceptive statements with reference to the alleged therapeutic value of said "NoDoz Awakeners" and their effect upon the users thereof.

Among such statements so used in advertising said "NoDoz Awakeners" are the following:

NoDoz Awakeners—Particularly beneficial when driving at night, when effects of alcohol are to be overcome, when working at night, when mentally depressed, when keen thinking, accurate and rapid work are important and upon hundreds of other daily occasions.

Counteracts alcoholic effects during the party and the "morning after." Restores energy—when tired or sleepy—when working or playing.

"NoDoz Awakeners" are tablets made of pure vegetable concentrate under the U. S. Pure Food and Drug Laws.

Keep awake the sleepy motorist, truck driver—overcome alcoholic depression.

There is a marked stimulation of the intellectual functions, especially those of reason, judgment and self-control. Muscular strength, speed and accuracy are all increased. A sense of energy and vitality add to one's capacity for work or pleasure without apparent fatigue.

When energy is exhausted. When you've taxed your powers to the limit, and you yet have long hours of work ahead, take a NoDoz Awakener and feel the steady, natural return of vitality, the "lift" in morale and general sense of well-being which follows.

Taken before or during indulgence, NoDoz Awakeners will preserve a clear head and perfect poise under the most difficult circumstances. Taken afterwards—NoDoz Awakeners will restore sobriety.

More than a million automobile drivers now take a NoDoz Awakener to keep awake and alert in long hours of driving.

If you feel like dozing, but your job won't let you—NoDoz keeps you fit. But NoDoz doesn't get you.

One little NoDoz Awakener'll keep you bright three, four hours, for driving, working, studying, playing nights.

PAR. 3. Respondent's "NoDoz Awakeners" are manufactured for it by McKesson-Robbins, of Bridgeport, Conn., and Boericke & Runyan, of San Francisco, Calif., both of which firms are manufacturing pharmacists. Said product is manufactured according to a formula submitted to said manufacturers by the respondent. The formula consists of a mixture of three and one-half grains of caffeine citrate and one and one-half grains of sugar of milk. When manufactured, said product is shipped in bulk by the aforementioned manufacturing pharmacists to respondent's plant in Sacramento, Calif., where it is packaged in two sizes, one containing two tablets, designed to sell for ten cents (10¢) each (or $3.20 for thirty-two packages), and the other package containing fifteen tablets, designed to sell for fifty cents (50¢) per package (or $6.00 per dozen packages). Thus packaged, the product is sold and shipped by respondent to wholesale druggists throughout the country, by whom it is resold to retailers who sell and distribute the product to the consuming public. More than eighty per cent (80%) of respondent's said "NoDoz Awakeners" are sold on the Pacific Coast and in the Rocky Mountain States, where the product is well known and has a ready market.

PAR. 4. Several witnesses, two of them doctors of medicine, testified that they had used "NoDoz Awakeners," and that the preparation counteracted sleepiness and drowsiness, without harmful effect. One doctor of medicine testified that the drug caffeine, used by a human, would tend to increase mental invigoration, to stimulate the motor areas of the brain, to increase the motor activities of the spinal cord, and to stimulate the muscles. He further testified that the drug caffeine, applied to humans in tablet form, as prepared in respondent's "NoDoz Awakeners," was not desirable for use by persons who partake of liquor to the point of intoxication. This witness also testified that said "NoDoz Awakeners" act as a diuretic. All witnesses testified that the use of three and one-half grains of citrate of caffeine would and did stimulate the brain and restore vitality.

There is also undisputed medical testimony of record that the use of citrate of caffeine by way of respondent's product by children of the age of five years or over would have no different effect on them than the use of ordinary coffee. One doctor of medicine stated that three and one-half grains of citrate of caffeine are equivalent to the amount of caffeine in an ordinary cup of coffee represented by a tablespoonful of ground coffee, and that three and one-half grains of caffeine citrate would serve to stimulate the individual taking it by increasing his blood supply to the brain, stimulating the action of the muscles and the cord, thereby increasing the flow of blood to the brain. This witness further stated that such an amount of citrate of caffeine would tend to clarify the individual's thinking apparatus and make it function a little more rapidly, and that it would also stimulate the kidneys.

The evidence, however, establishes the fact that caffeine, which is the active ingredient in respondent's product, will not counteract or overcome the effects of alcoholism, as represented by respondent, nor will caffeine sober an individual who has become intoxicated from the use of alcoholic beverages. The use of said preparation does not have any beneficial effect on those persons who indulge in the use of alcoholic beverages.

The testimony of the several medical witnesses was not contradicted by the testimony of any other witness.

PAR. 5. Many of the statements and representations set forth in paragraph 2 hereof have the capacity and tendency to deceive and mislead purchasers and prospective purchasers of respondent's product into the belief that the use of said product—

(a) Will "counteract" alcoholic effects and overcome alcoholic depression;

(b) That said product is made under a formula approved by the United States Pure Food and Drug Administration;

(c) That more than a million automobile drivers, or any other number not established by competent evidence, now take said preparation to keep awake on long hours of driving, or approve the same as the safe, sure way to stay awake while driving.

In truth and in fact, "NoDoz Awakeners" do not overcome or counteract the effects of the use of beverages containing alcohol, nor do they have any beneficial effect on persons indulging in the use of alcoholic beverages. Further, the number of users and endorsers of said product is greatly exaggerated; nor is it true that "NoDoz Awakeners" are manufactured upon a formula approved by the Pure Food and Drug Administration. Insofar as representations made by respondent in connection with the sale and distribution of its pharmaceutical preparation have the effect of misleading and deceiving users of "NoDoz Awakeners" into the beliefs set out in this paragraph, such representations are grossly exaggerated, false, misleading and untrue, as said preparation will not accomplish such results as represented.

PAR. 6. The evidence does not establish the fact that the respondent has any specific competitors manufacturing, selling or distributing a similar drug or pharmaceutical preparation. However, the record of testimony taken does establish the fact that respondent is in general competition with sellers of the class of refreshment and invigorator containing caffeine, such as coffee, tea and coca-cola, having the same general therapeutic effects that respondent's product has, who do not advertise and otherwise represent that such products have merit and therapeutic value which they do not have.

PAR. 7. Each and all of the misleading and deceptive statements and representations made by the respondent, as herein set out, in offering for sale and selling its product, had and now have the capacity and tendency to mislead a substantial portion of the purchasing public into the erroneous belief that all of said representations are true. Further, as a direct consequence of the mistaken and erroneous beliefs induced by the acts and representations made by the respondent, as hereinabove detailed, a number of the consuming public have purchased a substantial volume of respondent's product, with the result that trade has been and is unfairly diverted to respondent from competitors likewise engaged in the business of selling and distributing like and similar caffeine-containing preparations, and who truthfully represent the effectiveness of their products and the results to be obtained from their use. As a result, injury has been and is now being done by respondent to competition in commerce, as herein set out.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondent, NoDoz Laboratories, Inc., a corporation, are to the prejudice of the public and of competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce, within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

This proceeding having been heard by the Federal Trade Commission upon the complaint of the Commission, the answer of respondent, testimony and evidence taken before Charles P. Vicini and Miles J. Furnas, examiners of the Commission theretofore duly designated by it, in support of the charges of said complaint and in opposition thereto, and brief on behalf of the Commission filed herein (respondent having filed no brief and having not requested oral argument), and the Commission having made its findings as to the facts and its conclusion that said respondent has violated the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes",

It is ordered, That respondent, NoDoz Laboratories, Inc., a corporation, its officers, directors, agents, representatives, servants, and employees, in connection with the offering for sale, sale or distribution in interstate commerce of a pharmaceutical preparation known as "NoDoz Awakeners," or of said preparation or of any similar preparation containing substantially the same ingredients, sold under the same or under any other name or names, cease and desist, directly or indirectly, from:

Representing in newspapers and magazines, and through circulars, catalogs, or in any other form of printed matter, or by radio broadcasting, or in any other way or manner:

(a) That the use of said product will counteract or overcome the effects of drinking alcoholic beverages, or will have any beneficial effect on persons indulging in the use of alcoholics;

(b) That said product is manufactured under a formula approved by the United States Pure Food and Drug Administration;

(c) That more than a million automobile drivers, or any other number not established by competent evidence, now take said preparation to keep awake on long hours of driving, or approve the same as the safe, sure way to stay awake while driving; and from making any other representations of similar intent or import.

It is further ordered, That respondent, NoDoz Laboratories, Inc., a corporation, within 60 days after the service upon it of this order, shall file with the Commission a report in writing, setting forth in detail the manner and form in which this order has been complied with and conformed to.

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission having reason to believe that Sunnyland Distilling Co., Inc., a corporation hereinafter referred to as respondent, has been and is using unfair methods of competition in commerce as "commerce" is defined in said act, and it appearing to the said Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint, stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent is a corporation organized, existing, and doing business under the laws of the State of Kentucky, with its office and principal place of business in the city of Louisville, in said State. It is now, and for more than one year last past has been, engaged in the business of a wholesaler and rectifier, purchasing, rectifying, blending, and bottling whiskies, gins, and other alcoholic beverages and in the sale thereof in constant course of trade and commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia. In the course and conduct of its said business it causes its said products when sold to be transported from its place of business into and through various States of the United States to the purchasers thereof, consisting of wholesalers and retailers, located in other States of the United States and the District of Columbia. In the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid, respondent is now, and for more than one year last past, has been in substantial competition with other corporations and with individuals, partnerships, and firms engaged in the manufacture by true distillation of whiskies, gins, and other alcoholic beverages from mash, wort, or wash, and in the sale thereof in trade and commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia; and in the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid respondent is, and for more than one year last past has been, in substantial competition with other corporations and with individuals, firms, and partnerships engaged in the business of purchasing, rectifying, blending and bottling whiskies, gins, and other alcoholic beverages and in the sale thereof in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 2. Upon the premises of respondent's place of business aforesaid there is a still for use in the production of gins by a process of rectification whereby alcohol, purchased but not produced by respondent, is redistilled over juniper berries and other aromatics. Such rectification of alcoholic spirits does not make or constitute respondent a distillery or a distiller, as defined by Section 3247 of the Revised Statutes regulating Internal Revenue, nor as commonly understood by the public and the liquor industry. For a long period of time the word "Distilling" when used in connection with the liquor industry and with the products thereof has had and still has a definite significance and meaning to the minds of wholesalers and retailers in such industry and to the ultimate purchasing public, to wit, the manufacturing of spirituous liquors by an original and continuous distillation from mash, wort, or wash, through continuous closed pipes and vessels until the manufacture thereof is complete, and a substantial portion of the purchasing public prefers to buy spirituous liquors bottled and prepared by distillers.

PAR. 3. In the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid by the use of the word "Distilling" in its corporate name, printed on its stationery, catalogs, and on the labels attached to the bottles in which it sells and ships its said products, and in various other ways, respondent represents to its customers and furnishes them with the means of representing to their vendees, both retailers and the ultimate consuming public, that it is a distiller and that the said whiskies, gins, and other alcoholic beverages therein contained were by it manufactured through the process of distillation from mash, wort, or wash, when, as a matter of fact, respondent is not a distiller, does not distill the said whiskies, gins, and other alcoholic beverages by it so bottled, labeled, sold, and transported, and merely by the use of a still operated by it as aforesaid in the production of gin, does not distill the whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages by it so bottled, labeled, sold, and transported in the sense in which the word "distilled" is commonly accepted and understood by those engaged in the liquor trade and the public. Respondent does not own, operate, or control any place or places where spirituous beverages are manufactured by a process of original and continuous distillation from mash, wort, or wash.

PAR. 4. There are among the competitors of respondent engaged in the sale of spirituous beverages as mentioned in paragraph 1 hereof corporations, firms, partnerships, and individuals who manufacture and distill from mash, wort, or wash, whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages sold by them and who truthfully use the words "distillery," "distilleries," "distillers," or "distilling" as a part of their corporate or trade names and on their stationery catalogs and on the labels of the bottles in which they sell and ship such products. There are also among such competitors corporations, firms, partnerships, and individuals engaged in the business of purchasing, rectifying, blending, bottling, and selling whiskies, gins, and other alcoholic beverages who do not use the words "distillery," "distilleries," "distilling," or "distillers" as a part of their corporate or trade names, nor on their stationery, catalogs, advertising, nor on the labels attached to the bottles in which they sell and ship their said products.

PAR. 5. The representations by respondent, as set forth in paragraph 3 hereof, are calculated to and have a capacity and tendency to and do mislead and deceive dealers and the purchasing public into the beliefs that respondent is a distiller and that the whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages sold by respondent are manufactured or distilled by it from mash, wort, or wash, by one continuous process and are calculated to and have the capacity and tendency to and do induce dealers and the purchasing public, acting in such beliefs, to purchase the whiskies, gins, and other alcoholic beverages rectified and bottled by the respondent, thereby diverting trade to respondent from its competitors who do not by their corporate or trade name or in any other manner misrepresent that they are distillers, and thereby respondent does substantial injury to substantial competition in interstate commerce.

PAR. 6. The acts and things above alleged to have been done and the false representations alleged to have been made by respondent are to the prejudice of the public and the competitors of respondent and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914.

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Federal Trade Commission on June 28, 1935, issued, and on July 1, 1935, served its complaint in this proceeding upon respondent Sunnyland Distilling Company, a corporation, charging it with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of the provisions of said act. After the issuance of said complaint, and the filing of respondent's answer thereto, testimony and other evidence in support of the allegations of the said complaint were introduced by DeWitt T. Puckett, attorney for the Commission, before John L. Hornor, an examiner of the Commission theretofore duly designated by it, and said testimony and other evidence were duly recorded and filed in the office of the Commission. No testimony or other evidence in opposition to the allegations of the complaint were introduced by R. E. Gordon, president of the Sunnyland Distilling Company, appearing for respondent. Thereafter the proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on the said complaint, the answer thereto, testimony and other evidence and brief in support of the complaint (no brief in opposition thereto having been filed and no oral argument having been made): and the Commission having duly considered the foregoing and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent is a Kentucky corporation organized February 7, 1934, and has been engaged since May 1934, in the distilled spirits rectifying business. During said period respondent has operated under a basic rectifier's permit from the Government known as "R-331" a rectifying establishment at 2119 West Main Street, Louisville, Ky., rectifying whiskies, using distilled spirits purchased from Brown-Forman and other distillers. Upon its premises, aforesaid, there is a still for use in the production of gins by a process of rectification whereby alcohol purchased but not produced by respondent is redistilled over juniper berries and other aromatics.

Since May 1934, the respondent has been engaged in the business of purchasing, rectifying, and blending whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages in its aforesaid plant under its said permit, and in the sale thereof in constant course of trade and commerce between and among the various States of the United States. In the course and conduct of its said business, it caused its said products when sold to be transported from its place of business in Louisville, Ky., into and through various States of the United States to the purchasers thereof, consisting of wholesalers located in States of the United States other than the State of origin of said shipments.

In the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid, respondent has been and is in substantial competition with other corporations and with individuals, partnerships, and firms engaged in the manufacture by true distillation of whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages from mash, wort, or wash, and in the sale thereof in trade and commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia; and in the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid, respondent has been and is in substantial competition with other corporations and with individuals, firms, and partnerships, engaged in the business of purchasing, rectifying, blending, and bottling whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages in rectifying plants under rectifiers' permits, and in the sale thereof in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 2. "Rectifying" in the distilled spirits rectifying industry means the mixing of whiskies of different ages or types, or the mixing of other ingredients with whiskies, but reducing proof of whiskey by adding water is not rectifying. Rectifiers also blend whiskies with neutral spirits (grain alcohol.)

Many distillers operate a separate establishment 500 feet or more away from their distillery, known as a rectifying plant, wherein they operate in the same manner as described above—for a rectifier—sometimes exclusively with spirits of their own distillation and sometimes with spirits purchased from other distillers, or both. Some distillers have a tax paid bottling room on the distillery bonded premises wherein their distilled spirits are bottled straight as they come from the still, or in a bonded warehouse after aging, or after reduction of proof. Any rectifying by a distiller, however, must be done in his rectifying plant under his rectifier's permit. On all bottled liquors, whether bottled at the distillery or at any rectifying plant, appear the words "Bottled" or "Blended" (as the case may be) "be the ----- Company." If the distilled spirits therein contained are bottled by a distiller in his distillery or are spirits of his own distillation bottled in his rectifying plant, the distiller may and does put "Distilled and Bottled by ----- Company." If, in the distiller's rectifying plant, other spirits have been blended or rectified, he puts on the bottle "Blended and Bottled by ----- Company."

Finally, blown in the bottom of each bottle is a symbol consisting of a letter followed by a number, identifying the bottler, viz, "D" for a distiller and "R" for a rectifier, the number following said letter corresponding with the distiller's or rectifier's permit. Thus, "R-381" designates this respondent. A distiller who also operates a rectifying plant, having both kinds of permits, may use either symbol, depending upon whether the liquor contained in the bottle was produced and bottled under his distiller's or his rectifier's permit. This number is placed on the bottle to identify the bottler.

Knowledge of these details is not widespread among the retail trade and is very limited among the general public. All whiskies, whether coming from a distillery or rectifier, are generally conceded to be "distilled" products. Therefore, it is not possible to determine from the presence of the phrase "Blended and Bottled by" alone, or the phrase "Bottled by" alone on the label whether the package was bottled by a rectifier who is a distiller, or by a rectifier who is not a distiller.

This respondent does not now and never has produced or manufactured distilled spirits of any kind from mash or raw materials, although its charter would authorize it so to do. Its rectifier's permit authorizes it to engage in the business of rectifying and blending, and is conditioned upon compliance by respondent with all applicable regulations made pursuant to law, which are or may hereafter be in force.

PAR. 3. The evidence adduced in this case from approximately eight competitive trade witnesses (both rectifiers and distillers) and nineteen members of the purchasing public shows, and the Commission finds, that for a long period of time the word "distilling," when used in connection with the liquor industry and the products thereof, has had and still has a definite significance and meaning to the minds of the wholesalers and retailers in such industry and to the ultimate purchasing public, to wit, the manufacturing of such liquors by the process of original and continuous distillation from mash, wort, or wash, through continuous closed pipes and vessels until the manufacture thereof is completed; and a substantial portion of the purchasing public prefers to buy spirituous liquors prepared and bottled by distillers.

The rectification of alcoholic spirits by this respondent as aforesaid in the production of its gin, does not make or constitute it a distiller or a distilling company as defined by Sec. 3247 of the Revised Statutes of the United States regulating Internal Revenue.

The testimony of those having long experience in both the distilled spirits rectifying industry, and the distilling industry, established, and the Commission finds that the foregoing rectification of alcoholic spirits by redistillation over juniper berries and other aromatics in the production of gin does not make or constitute this respondent a distilling company in the sense commonly understood by the liquor industry or by the general public.

PAR. 4. This respondent, by the use of the word "distilling" in its corporate name on its stationery, mailing cards, invoices, and on the labels attached to the bottles in which it sold and shipped its products in interstate commerce, represented itself as a producer of distilled spirits from raw materials, and was so regarded, by virtue of said representations, by the trade and purchasing public. It thus represented to its customers and furnished them with the means of representing to their vendees, both wholesalers and the ultimate consuming public, that it was a distiller and that the whiskies and other spirituous beverages in said bottles contained were by it manufactured by the process of distillation from mash, wort, or wash, as aforesaid, when, as a matter of fact, respondent is not now and never was a distiller, does not now and never did distill the said whiskies, or other spirituous beverages, by it so bottled, labeled, sold and transported, and does not now and never did own, operate, or control any place or places where such beverages are or were manufactured by the process of distillation from mash, wort, or wash.

PAR. 5. There were among the competitors of respondent engaged in the sale of spirituous beverages as mentioned in paragraph 1 hereof corporations, firms, partnerships, and individuals who manufactured and distilled from mash, wort, or wash, as aforesaid, whiskies, gins and other spirituous beverages sold by them and who truthfully used the words "distillery," "distilleries," "distilling," or "distiller" as a part of their corporate or trade names and on their stationery and advertising, and on the labels of the bottles in which they sold and shipped such products. There were also among such competitors, corporations, firms, partnerships, and individuals engaged in the business of purchasing, rectifying, blending, bottling, and selling whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages who did not use the words "distillery," "distilleries," "distilling," "distiller" or "distillers" as a part of their corporate or trade names, on their stationery or advertising, or on the labels attached to the bottles in which they sold and shipped their said products.

PAR. 6. Representations by the respondent as hereinabove set forth had the capacity and tendency to and did mislead and deceive dealers and the purchasing public into the belief that respondent was a distiller, and that the whiskies and other spirituous beverages by it sold were manufactured and distilled by it from mash, wort, or wash, and had the capacity and tendency also to induce dealers and the purchasing public, acting in such beliefs, to purchase the whiskies and other spirituous beverages bottled and sold by the respondent, thereby diverting trade to respondent from its competitors who did not by their corporate or trade names, or in any other manner, misrepresent that they were manufacturers by distillation from mash, wort, or wash of whiskies or other spirituous beverages. Thereby respondent did substantial injury to competition in interstate commerce.

PAR. 7. Because of existing regulations promulgated under the Federal Alcohol Administration Act, approved August 29, 1935, (49 Stat. 977) providing that rectifiers who redistill purchased alcohol over juniper berries and other aromatics may label such resulting product "Distilled Gin," and requiring that the labels state who distilled it, the Commission has excepted gins produced by respondent by redistillation of alcohol over juniper berries and other aromatics from the prohibitions of its order.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondent Sunnyland Distilling Company, are to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce, within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

This proceeding having been heard by the Federal Trade Commission upon the complaint of the Commission, the answer of the respondent, testimony and other evidence taken before John L. Hornor, an examiner of the Commission theretofore duly designated by it, in support of the allegations of the said complaint brief filed herein by DeWitt T. Puckett, counsel for the Commission (no testimony or other evidence having been offered on behalf of respondent, and no brief having been filed on behalf of respondent, and no oral argument having been made), and the Commission having made its findings as to the facts and its conclusion that said respondent has violated the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes",

It is ordered, That the respondent, Sunnyland Distilling Company, its officers, representatives, agents, and employees, in connection with the offering for sale, or sale and distribution by it, in interstate commerce or in the District of Columbia of whiskies, gins, or other spirituous beverages (except gins produced by it through a process of rectification whereby alcohol purchased but not produced by respondent is redistilled over juniper berries and other aromatics), do cease and desist from:

Order

Representing through the use of the word "distilling" in its corporate name, on its stationery, advertising, or on the labels attached to the bottles in which it sells and ships said products, or in any other way by word, or words of like import (a) that it is a distiller of whiskies, gins, or other spirituous beverages; or (b) that the said whiskies, gins, or other spirituous beverages were by it manufactured through the process of distillation; or (c) that it owns, operates, or controls a place or places where any such products are by it manufactured by a process of original and continuous distillation from mash, wort, or wash, through continuous closed pipes and vessels until the manufacture thereof is completed, unless and until respondent shall actually own, operate, or control such a place, or places.

It is further ordered, That the said respondent within 60 days from and after the date of the service upon it of this order, shall file with the Commission a report or reports in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which it is complying and has complied with the order to cease and desist hereinabove set forth.

Complaint

IN THE MATTER OF

ADOLPH WEIN, TRADING AS AMERICAN TOY WORKS

COMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 26, 1914

Docket 3117. Complaint, Apr. 26, 1937—Decision, Aug. 2, 1937

Where an individual engaged in sale and distribution, to retailers and direct to consuming public, of toys which were not of domestic origin, but which were made in or imported from Japan and other foreign countries, in substantial competition with those engaged in manufacture and distribution of like and similar products and in sale thereof in commerce among the various States and in the District of Columbia, and including among such competitors those who truthfully advertise and represent their products, and many importers of like and similar products who do not in any manner misrepresent the country of origin thereof—

Placed or caused to be placed upon containers of many of the toys sold and distributed by him, words and letters "Made in U. S. A.," notwithstanding fact many of such toys thus sold and distributed by him were not of domestic origin, but were made in or imported from Japan and other foreign countries, and many of said toys thus containered and labeled had imprinted thereon words "Japan" or "Made in Japan";

With effect of misleading and deceiving a substantial portion of purchasing public in the several States and in said District, and causing them erroneously to believe that toys thus packaged, labeled, sold, and distributed by him were made in the United States, and of causing substantial part of such public, because of such erroneous belief, to buy products offered, sold, and distributed by him, and with result thereby of unfair and substantial diversion of trade to him from his competitors; to their injury and that of the public:

Held, That such acts and practices were to the prejudice of the public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition.

Mr. S. Brogdyne Teu II for the Commission.

Mr. Joseph C. Kadane, of New York City, for respondent.

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that Adolph Wein, trading and doing business as American Toy Works, hereinafter designated as respondent, is now and has been using unfair methods of competition in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in said act, and it appearing to said Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint, stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent, Adolph Wein, is an individual who is now, and has been at all times mentioned herein doing business under the trade name and style of American Toy Works, at 41 East Eleventh Street, city of New York, State of New York.

PAR. 2. Respondent is now and has been engaged in the business of assembling, packing and selling toys to retailers and others for personal use and consumption in commerce as herein set out. Said respondent, being engaged in business as aforesaid, causes said toys when sold to be transported from his principal office and place of business in the State of New York to purchasers thereof located in other States of the United States and in the District of Columbia, and there is now and has been at all times mentioned herein a constant current of trade and commerce in said above described products sold by respondent between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 3. In the course and conduct of his said business, respondent is now and has been in substantial competition with other individuals, firms, partnerships, and corporations likewise engaged in the business of selling toys in commerce among and between the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 4. The toys manufactured, labeled and sold and distributed by respondent are displayed and have been displayed for sale to and by dealers, jobbers, retailers, and department stores and are sold to purchasers and users thereof in containers bearing the words "Made in U. S. A.," and such containers bear no words, labels, or symbols to indicate that a substantial part of the toys contained therein and so sold and distributed by respondent are not made in the United States.

In truth and in fact, a substantial part of the toys so labeled, advertised, sold, and distributed by respondent are made in Japan and other foreign countries and purchased by respondent from resident manufacturers' agents of the foreign producers.

PAR. 5. For many years a substantial part of the consuming public has had and expressed a marked preference for toys which are manufactured in the United States over toys manufactured in any foreign country. As a result of this said preference of the purchasing public, they have purchased a substantial quantity of toys domestically manufactured and have refrained from purchasing toys manufactured in any country because of the feeling prevailing among a substantial part of Americans towards toys manufactured in foreign countries.

PAR. 6. The effect of the foregoing false and misleading representations and acts of the respondent in selling and offering for sale toys as hereinbefore referred to is to mislead a substantial part of the purchasing and consuming public in the several States of the United States by inducing them to mistakenly and erroneously believe that the toys offered for sale, sold, and distributed by respondent are manufactured in the United States.

PAR. 7. There are among the competitors of the respondent in commerce as herein described, manufacturers and distributors of toys who truthfully advertise and represent the place of origin of their products.

PAR. 8. The foregoing false and misleading representations on the part of the respondent have induced a substantial number of consuming purchasers of said toys to buy the products offered for sale, sold, and distributed by the respondent on account of the aforesaid mistaken belief. As a result thereof, trade has been diverted to respondent from competitors engaged in like and similar businesses. As a consequence thereof, a substantial injury has been and is being done by respondent to competition in commerce between the various States of the United States.

PAR. 9. The aforementioned methods, acts, and practices of respondent are all to the prejudice of the public and respondent's competitors as hereinabove alleged. Said acts and practices constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914.

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, on April 26, 1937, issued and served its complaint in this proceeding upon respondent, Adolph Wein, an individual trading as American Toy Works, charging him with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of the provisions of said act. After the issuance of said complaint and filing of respondent's answer thereto, a stipulation as to the facts was entered into between W. T. Kelley, Chief Counsel of the Commission, and Joseph C. Kadane, counsel for respondent. Said stipulation was thereafter approved by the Commission and duly recorded and filed in the office of the Commission. Thereafter the proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on the said complaint and answer thereto, and the stipulation as to the facts

(respondent having waived the filing of a brief); and the Commission having duly considered same and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public, and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent Adolph Wein is an individual trading and doing business under the name and style American Toy Works, with his principal place of business in New York, N. Y.

PAR. 2. The respondent is now and has been for more than one year last past engaged in the business of selling and distributing toys to retailers and direct to the consuming public.

PAR. 3. In the sale of said products respondent has transported or caused the same to be transported from his principal place of business in the State of New York to purchasers thereof located in the States of the United States other than the State from which shipment originated, and in the District of Columbia.

There has been for more than one year last past, and still is, a constant current of trade and commerce in said toys so sold and distributed by respondent between and among the various States of the United States, and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 4. For more than one year last past the respondent has been engaged in substantial competition with other individuals and with partnerships, firms, and corporations, engaged in the manufacture and distribution of like and similar products, and in the sale thereof in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 5. In the course and conduct of his business, as aforesaid, the respondent, in soliciting the sale, and in the selling, of his products, and for the purpose of creating a demand on the part of the consuming public for said products causes, and has for more than one year last past caused, his products to be advertised through the media of labels attached to the containers of said toys or by words and phrases imprinted upon the said toys. In said ways and by said means respondent has made to the general public false and misleading statements with reference to the country of origin of the commodities offered for sale by him.

PAR. 6. Many of the toys sold and distributed by the respondent are sold in containers upon which the respondent places, or causes to be placed, the words and letters "Made in U. S. A.". Many of the toys so sold and distributed by the respondent in the containers bearing the words and letters "Made in U. S. A." are not made in the United States, and are not of domestic origin, but are made in, or imported from, Japan and other foreign countries. Many of the toys so packaged in containers bearing the words and letters "Made in U. S. A." have imprinted thereon the word "Japan" or the words "Made in Japan" which indicates the country from which they were imported. Said containers bear no words or symbols to indicate that any part of the contents thereof are not made in the United States but in a foreign country.

PAR. 7. For many years a substantial part of the consuming public has had, and has expressed, a marked preference for toys which are manufactured in the United States over toys manufactured in any foreign country. As a result of the said preference of the purchasing public, they have purchased and still purchase a substantial quantity of toys domestically manufactured, and have refrained from purchasing toys manufactured in any foreign country because of the feeling prevailing among a substantial part of Americans toward toys manufactured in foreign countries.

PAR. 8. Among the competitors of the respondent engaged in said commerce mentioned in paragraph 4 hereof are manufacturers and distributors of like and similar products who truthfully advertise and represent their respective products, and among such competitors are many importers of like and similar products who do not in any manner misrepresent the country of the origin of their respective products.

PAR. 9. The use by the respondent of the words "Made in U. S. A." on the containers in which such imported toys are packaged, sold, and distributed misleads and deceives a substantial part of the purchasing public in the several States of the United States and in the District of Columbia, and causes them erroneously to believe that the toys so packaged, labelled, sold, and distributed by the respondent were, and are, manufactured in the United States; and causes a substantial part of the purchasing public, because of such erroneous belief, to purchase the products offered for sale, sold, and distributed by the respondent. As a result of such erroneous belief, there has been and is an unfair and substantial diversion of trade to the respondent from its competitors in said commerce to the injury of said competitors and to the injury of the public.

CONCLUSION

The aforementioned acts and practices of the respondent Adolph Wein are to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress,

Order

25 F. T. C.

approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

It is ordered, That the respondent, Adolph Wein, an individual, his representatives, agents, and employes, in connection with the offering for sale, sale, and distribution of toys in commerce among and between the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia, do forthwith cease and desist from representing, directly or indirectly, through price lists, circulars, labels, containers, or any other form of printed matter, or by radio broadcasting, or in any other manner, that any of said toys made in Japan or any other foreign country are made in the United States.

It is further ordered, That the respondent shall, within 60 days after service upon him of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which he has complied with this order.

Syllabus

IN THE MATTER OF THE AMERICAN DIRIGOLD CORPORATION

COMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION
OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 23, 1914

Docket 2314. Complaint, May 21, 1936—Decision, Aug. 3, 1937

Where a corporation engaged in manufacture and sale of an alloy, containing no gold but composed chiefly of aluminum and copper, and of highly polished flat and hollow tableware and other articles fabricated therefrom, and so finished that they had color, appearance and luster of 14-karat or 18-karat gold, depending upon discernment of particular observer, in direct and substantial competition with those engaged in manufacture, sale and distribution, in commerce among the various States and in the District of Columbia, of similar tableware and other articles of the same general kind and for the same purposes, composed, as case might be, of sterling silverware, silver-plated ware, and other materials—

Included word "Dirigold" in its corporate name, and thus named, designated, and described said alloy and ware made therefrom, and stamped said word on each article made from said alloy and sold by it as aforesaid, and featured same in trade-mark used by it and placed upon its letterheads and other printed matter, and thereby falsely represented that said tableware and other articles contained gold, and through tolerance of use by its retail dealers of predecessor's advertising literature containing many statements, phrases and descriptive terms calculated, in connection with said word "Dirigold," to describe said ware, to create belief that same contained gold, such as "Color and Beauty of Gold," "* * * the alluring golden color and finish," etc., "SOLID not plated," "Golden Anniversaries * * * the ideal gift for such momentous occasions," became responsible for such use and representations made therein, and failed, through such qualifications as "contains no gold" on its price lists and letterheads, and through said phrase on some of aforesaid folders, but not on its address slips and envelopes, nor in connection with reproduction of its aforesaid trade-mark, nor with stamping of its said ware, nor with its corporate name, nor in all instances where said word was used in print, to reach all members of the public, nor all those coming in contact with said name, nor all members of the public shopping for flat and hollow ware, nor all those who actually purchase its said ware;

With result that some members of the public were in fact misled through such inherently misleading designations used as aforesaid, which, together with misleading implications thereof, served to attract prospective customers to ware thus designated and to cause them to look with favor thereon by reason thereof, and with tendency and capacity to lead members of the public, informed by many, but not all, retailers and clerks selling said ware of aforesaid fact, to believe that said ware, thus designated, contained at least some gold, and to induce them to buy same because of erroneous belief engendered as above set forth, and to divert trade to it from competitors engaged in sale in interstate commerce of flat, hollow and other ware adapted to and used for same general purposes, and with effect of diverting business to it from competitors who do not misrepresent materials from which their ware is made, but who truthfully and accurately state the facts in such respect, to their substantial injury and prejudice, and with result of placing in the hands of retail dealers an instrument of fraud and deception through which such dealers might mislead purchasing public and promote sale of such ware and cause purchase thereof by members of public because of misleading impressions thereby created:

Held, That such acts and practices were to the prejudice of the public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition.

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that The American Dirigold Corporation, hereinafter referred to as respondent, has been and now is using unfair methods of competition in commerce as "commerce" is defined in said act, and it appearing to the Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPHS 1. That said respondent, The American Dirigold Corporation, is a corporation organized, existing, and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Indiana, with its office, factory, and principal place of business in the city of Kokomo in said State.

PAR. 2. That said respondent is now and has been engaged for more than six months last past in the manufacture of an alloy designated and described as "Dirigold" and of tableware and other articles fabricated therefrom and in the sale of such tableware and other articles made from such alloy in commerce, as herein set out. Said respondent, in the course and conduct of its said business, causes the said tableware and other products manufactured from said alloy to be transported from its said place of business in Indiana to, into and through States of the United States other than Indiana to various and numerous customers in such other States. Respondent's usual course of dealing is to sell said products to department stores, jewelers, or other retail dealers through whom or which they are in turn sold to members of the consuming public.

PAR. 3. That, during the time above mentioned, other individuals, firms, and corporations in various States of the United States are and have been engaged in the manufacture, sale, and distribution in commerce of tableware and other articles of the same general kind and for the same purposes of use as those made and sold by respondent as aforesaid, some of which said ware is of sterling silver, some of silver plated ware and some of other materials, and such other individuals, firms and corporations have caused and do now cause their said tableware and other such articles as aforesaid, when sold by them, to be transported from the respective States of the United States where they are located to, into and through States other than the State of origin of the shipment thereof to the purchasers thereof at their respective places of location. Said respondent has been, during the aforesaid time, in competition in interstate commerce in the sale of its said tableware and other articles made from said alloy with such other individuals, firms, and corporations.

PAR. 4. That the respondent, in connection with the sale of its said tableware and other articles made from said alloy, as aforesaid, represents by the means and methods as herein set out that they contain gold. In truth and in fact, there is no gold in such tableware and other articles manufactured from said alloy. Said alloy and the products made therefrom by respondent are composed chiefly of aluminum and copper. The products made therefrom by respondent are highly polished and so finished that they are of the color, appearance and lustre of 14 karat gold. Respondent causes said alloy and the articles made therefrom to be named, designated and described as "Dirigold." Said name "Dirigold" is stamped by respondent on each article made from said alloy and sold by it, as aforesaid. It is the most prominent part of the trade-mark used by respondent in its advertising literature, letterheads and other printed matter. It is used as a part of respondent's corporate name. It has also been adopted by respondent as a descriptive term and is so used by it in its printed matter. It is also used by its representatives and its retail dealers as the term to describe such products in conversation and otherwise.

Said name "Dirigold," so applied to articles containing no gold, is inherently misleading in that it implies and serves as a representation that such products contain at least some gold. The use of said term as a name for such articles and in the connections, as aforesaid, further has the tendency and capacity to lead members of the public to believe that the products so designated contain gold and it has had and does have such effect. Respondent places on some of its printed matter the statement "Dirigold contains no gold" and the phrase "Contains No Gold" is sometimes used in conjunction with the trade-mark heretofore referred to. Such statements and modifications do not reach all members of the public nor all those who come in contact with the name "Dirigold." Neither do they reach all members of the public who shop for or buy respondent's ware. Not all ultimate buyers or prospective buyers of said products see or have the opportunity to see respondent's printed matter containing such statements and modifications. No such modifications are made by respondent on the stampings on its said ware nor in connection with its corporate name. Nor are they made in every instance where the word "Dirigold" is used in its printed matter. Neither do such printed modifications affect the misleading effect of the word "Dirigold" as applied to respondent's ware when used by word of mouth. Nor do retail dealers make use of such modifications in their advertisements.

PAR. 5. That respondent in its circular advertising matter uses many statements, phrases and descriptive terms that serve to increase the said misleading effect of the word "Dirigold." Among such statements, phrases and descriptive terms are the following:

Color and Beauty of Gold.

* * * the alluring golden color and finish, the marvelous sheen and lustre * * *.

 the perfect harmony and effect when used with gold-trimmed Haviland! Here, in effect, is the luxury and splendor of solid gold!

Dirigold will always retain its lustrous golden color because it's solid clear through.

SOLID not plated.

 its rich, warm, lustrous golden color * * *.

Dirigold—The fashionable and exquisite ware that possesses the color and lustrous beauty of gold!

Like the precious metals—Dirigold is solid clear through.

No home need be denied the rare luxury and beauty of gold on the table and in the home.

Dirigold is truly—the ultimate gift of a Golden Age.

Golden Anniversaries—How appropriate that Dirigold be always considered as the ideal gift for such momentous occasions.

PAR. 6. That the representations and practices of respondent, as aforesaid, have had and do have the tendency and capacity to confuse, mislead and deceive members of the public into the belief that respondent's said ware contains gold when such is not the fact, and to induce them to buy the same because of such erroneous belief engendered as above set forth. Said representations and practices further result in placing in the hands of retail dealers, who handle and sell the same, an instrument of fraud and deception by means of which they may mislead the purchasing public and promote the sale of such ware and cause the purchase thereof by members of the public who are thereby caused to entertain such mistaken belief. Said practices of respondent also have the tendency and capacity to divert trade to respondent from competitors engaged in the sale in interstate commerce of tableware of various kinds and articles of the same general kind as made and sold by respondent. There are among the competitors of respondent those who do not in any wise misrepresent the material or materials of which their products are made or the composition of the same, but who truthfully and accurately state the facts in such regard without the use of misleading terminology or other misleading representations. As a result of respondent's said practices, as herein set forth, substantial injury has been and is now being done by respondent to competition in commerce between and among the various States of the United States.

PAR. 7. The above acts and things done by respondent are all to the injury and prejudice of the public and the competitors of respondent in interstate commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914.

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission on May 21, 1936, issued and served its complaint in this proceeding upon respondent The American Dirigold Corporation, charging it with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of the provisions of said act. After the issuance of said complaint, and the filing of respondent's answer thereto, testimony and other evidence in support of the allegations of said complaint were introduced by Harry D. Michael, attorney for the Commission, before John W. Addison, an examiner of the Commission theretofore duly designated by it, and in opposition to the allegations of the complaint by Harold B. Hood, representing Hood and Hahn, attorneys for the respondent; and said testimony and other evidence were duly recorded and filed in the office of the Commission. On August 24, 1936, during the course of hearings, the Commission received and ordered filed respondent's amended answer. Thereafter, the proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on the said complaint, the amended answer thereto, testimony and other evidence, briefs in support of the complaint and in opposition thereto, and the oral arguments of counsel aforesaid; and the Commission having duly considered the same, and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public, and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. The respondent, The American Dirigold Corporation, is a corporation organized, existing and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Indiana, with its office, factory, and principal place of business at 1142 S. Main Street, in the city of Kokomo in said State. Said corporation was organized August 13, 1935.

PAR. 2. The respondent is now and has been engaged since on or about the time said corporation was organized, as aforesaid, in the manufacture of an alloy designated and described as "Dirigold" and of tableware, consisting of flatware and hollow ware, and other articles fabricated therefrom, and in the sale of such ware in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia. The respondent in the course and conduct of its said business as aforesaid, causes and has caused the said tableware and other articles manufactured from said alloy to be transported from its said place of business in Indiana to, into and through States of the United States other than Indiana to various and numerous customers in such other States to whom such ware is or has been sold. Respondent's usual course of dealing is and has been to sell its said products to department stores, jewelry stores, or other retail stores through which they are in turn sold to members of the consuming public.

PAR. 3. During the time above mentioned other individuals, firms, and corporations in various States of the United States are and have been engaged in the manufacture, sale, and distribution in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia of tableware, consisting of flatware and hollow ware, and other articles, of the same general kind as made and sold by respondent, as aforesaid, and for the same purposes of use, some of which is sterling silverware, some of which is silver-plated ware, and some of which is ware of other materials. Such other individuals, firms, and corporations have caused and do now cause their said tableware and other articles, as aforesaid, when sold by them, to be transported from the respective States of the United States where they are located to, into and through States other than the State of origin of the shipment thereof to the purchasers of the same at their respective places of location. Among such competitors are R. Wallace and Sons Manufacturing Co., Wallingford, Conn.; International Silver Company, Meriden, Conn.; Oneida, Ltd.,

New York, N. Y., and Oneida, N. Y., and National Silver Company, New York, N. Y. Respondent has been, during the aforesaid time, in competition in interstate commerce in the sale of its said tableware and other articles made from said alloy with such other individuals, firms, and corporations. Such competition has been direct and substantial.

PAR. 4. The respondent, in connection with the sale of its said tableware and other articles made from said alloy, as aforesaid, has represented by the means and methods as herein set out that such tableware and other articles contain gold when in truth and in fact such is not the fact. Said alloy and the products made therefrom by respondent are composed chiefly of aluminum and copper. Other metals enter into the composition of said alloy but the process is claimed to be a secret one and respondent did not reveal their identities on that account. However, there is no gold in said alloy or the products made therefrom. It was so admitted. The ware made from said alloy by respondent is highly polished and so finished that it is of the color, appearance and luster of gold, such appearance being that of 14-karat gold or 18-karat gold depending upon the discernment of the particular observer. Respondent has caused said alloy and the ware made therefrom to be named, designated, and described as "Dirigold." Said name "Dirigold" is stamped by respondent on each article made from said alloy and sold by it as aforesaid. It is the most prominent part of the trade-mark used by respondent and placed upon its letterheads and other printed matter. Said term is used as a part of respondent's corporate name and appears wherever the corporate name occurs on respondent's printed matter. Said word is also used by respondent as a descriptive term to describe its said ware. It is also used by respondent's representatives in the sale thereof and by the retail dealers who sell it to the public as the term to describe it in conversation and otherwise.

PAR. 5. The predecessor of respondent corporation in the conduct of said business was The Dirigold Corporation, which prior corporation had been in the hands of a receiver for several years before the business was acquired by respondent corporation. The Dirigold Corporation and said receiver had caused to be published and placed in the hands of retail dealers handling said ware considerable quantities of booklets and folders descriptive thereof. Said booklets and folders were generally in use by such dealers from the time respondent corporation took over the business as aforesaid, to, and including the time during which testimony was taken in this case. During such period of time such dealers continued to use said booklets and folders in the sale of the ware manufactured and sold by respondent and in advertising the same to the purchasing public. Respondent and its officers knew of this practice and took no adequate measures to secure discontinuance thereof. Respondent did not print or publish any additional advertising literature during said period, except price lists, letterheads and the like. Respondent by its tolerance of the use of said advertising literature, by its retail dealers, became responsible for such use and for the representations made therein. In a few instances respondent furnished copies of said booklet to its retail dealers for use in the sale of "Dirigold" ware. Said booklets and folders contained many statements, phrases and descriptive terms that served, when used in connection with the word "Dirigold" to describe said ware, to create the belief that said ware contained gold. Among such statements, phrases and descriptive terms are the following:

Color and Beauty of Gold.

* * * the alluring golden color and finish, the marvelous sheen and lustre * * *

* * * the perfect harmony and effect when used with gold-trimmed Haviland!

Here, in effect, is the luxury and splendor of solid gold!

Dirigold will always retain its lustrous golden color because it's solid clear through.

SOLID not plated.

* * * its rich, warm, lustrous golden color * * *.

Dirigold—The fashionable and exquisite ware that possesses the color and lustrous beauty of gold!

Like the precious metals—Dirigold is solid clear through.

No home need be denied the rare luxury and beauty of gold on the table and in the home.

Dirigold is truly—the ultimate gift of a Golden Age.

Golden Anniversaries. How appropriate that Dirigold be always considered as the ideal gift for such momentous occasions.

PAR. 6. Respondent has been accustomed to place on its price lists and its letterheads, but not on its address slips and envelopes, the phrase "contains no gold" in connection with reproductions of the trade-mark containing the word "Dirigold." Some of the folders previously referred to as having been distributed by the receiver, have printed thereon at the top of each page the phrase "Dirigold contains no gold." Such statements and modifications do not reach all members of the public nor all those who come in contact with the name "Dirigold." Neither do such expressions reach all members of the public who shop for flatware and hollow ware including respondent's said ware, nor do they reach all those who actually buy respondent's said ware. Not all ultimate buyers or prospective buyers of respondent's products see or have the opportunity to see printed matter containing said statements and modifications above referred to. No such modifications are made by respondent on the stamping on its said ware, nor in connection with its corporate name, nor are they used in all instances where the word "Dirigold" is used in print. Neither are such expressions used by those who sell respondent's ware in every instance where said term "Dirigold" is used when spoken by word of mouth. Many retail dealers and clerks who sell "Dirigold" ware have made it a practice to inform customers and prospective customers that there is no gold in said ware but said information is not given in all such cases.

PAR. 7. Retail stores which handle "Dirigold" ware do their own newspaper advertising of the same. Some stores have used descriptive terms in so advertising "Dirigold" which, by use of the word "gold" or similar terms therein to describe said ware, in connection with the word "Dirigold" have the tendency and capacity to create the belief that the ware so described contains gold.

PAR. 8. The name "Dirigold" applied to ware containing no gold, especially when such ware has the appearance of gold, is inherently misleading in that it implies and serves as a representation that such articles contain at least some gold. The use of said term as a name for flatware, hollow ware, and other ware as made and sold by respondent, has the tendency and capacity to lead members of the public to believe that the ware so designated contains gold. There have been instances where persons have entertained such belief by reason of said term. Said tendency and capacity is increased by the fact that the ware so designated has the appearance of gold. Furthermore, the use of descriptive terms such as those previously referred to emphasizing the word "gold," or like expressions, serves to increase the misleading effect of said term "Dirigold" when used as aforesaid. Said term together with the misleading implication contained therein, as aforesaid, serves to attract prospective customers to the ware so designated and to cause them to look upon it with favor because thereof.

PAR. 9. The representations of respondent as aforesaid have had the tendency and capacity to confuse, mislead and deceive members of the public into the belief that respondent's said ware contains at least some gold when such is not the fact, and to induce them to buy the same because of the erroneous belief engendered as above set forth and to divert trade to respondent from competitors engaged in the sale in interstate commerce of flatware, hollow ware and other ware adapted to and used for the same general purposes for which respondent's ware is used. There were and are among the competitors of respondent those who do not misrepresent the materials from which their ware is made but who truthfully and accurately state the facts in such respect. Respondent's said acts and practices have tended to and do in fact divert business to respondent from its said competitors to the substantial injury and prejudice of such competitors. Moreover, the use of said term "Dirigold" to describe and designate respondent's said ware and respondent's representations and practices in regard thereto, as herein set out, result in placing in the hands of retail dealers an instrument of fraud and deception by means of which such dealers may mislead the purchasing public and promote the sale of such ware and cause the purchase thereof by members of the public because of misleading impressions thereby created.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondent, The American Dirigold Corporation, are to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce, within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

It is ordered, That the respondent, The American Dirigold Corporation, its officers, representatives, agents, and employees, in connection with the offering for sale, sale, and distribution of tableware, consisting of flatware and hollow ware, and other articles made from an alloy of metals containing no gold, in interstate commerce or in the District of Columbia, do forthwith cease and desist from:

653

Order

Representing through the use of the word "dirigold" or "gold" or any coined word containing the word "gold," alone or in connection or conjunction with any other word or words, in its corporate name or as descriptive of or as a trade-mark for its products, or in any other manner whatever, or through any other means or device, that such tableware, flatware, hollow ware and other articles contain gold.

It is further ordered, That the respondent shall, within 60 days after service upon it of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which it has complied with this order.

IN THE MATTER OF DIRIGOLD METALS CORPORATION

COMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION
OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 26, 1914

Docket 2815. Complaint, May 21, 1936—Decision, Aug. 3, 1937

Where a corporation engaged in the manufacture and sale of an alloy containing no gold, but composed chiefly of aluminum and copper, and of highly polished flat and hollow tableware and other articles fabricated therefrom, and so finished that they had color, appearance and luster of 14-karat or 18-karat gold, depending upon discernment of particular observer, in direct and substantial competition with those engaged in manufacture, sale, and distribution in commerce among the various States and in the District of Columbia of similar tableware and other articles of same general kind and for the same purposes, composed as case might be, of sterling silverware, silver-plated ware, and other materials—
Included word "Dirigold" in its corporate name, and thus named, designated, and described said alloy and ware made therefrom, and stamped said word on each article made from said alloy, and sold by it as aforesaid, and featured and displayed same in trade-mark used by it and placed upon its printed matter and wherever in such matter its aforesaid corporate name occurred, and thereby falsely represented that said tableware and other articles contained gold, and through use in advertising matter distributed to customers, in connection with word "Dirigold," of many statements, phrases, and descriptive terms, such as "Dirigold * * * possesses the color and lustrous beauty of gold!" "No home need be denied the rare luxury and beauty of gold on the table and in the home," "Golden Anniversaries * * * the ideal gift for such momentous occasions," "SOLID not plated," served to create belief that said ware contained gold;

With result that some members of the public were in fact misled through such inherently misleading designation used as aforesaid, which, together with misleading implications thereof, served to attract prospective customers to ware thus designated and to cause them to look with favor thereon by reason thereof, and with tendency and capacity to confuse, mislead and deceive members of the public into the erroneous belief that its said ware contained at least some gold, and to induce them to buy same because of the erroneous belief thus engendered, and to divert trade to it from competitors engaged in sale in interstate commerce of flat, hollow and other ware adapted to and used for same general purposes, and with effect of diverting business to it from competitors who do not misrepresent materials from which their ware is made, but who truthfully and accurately state the facts in such respects, to their substantial injury and prejudice, and with result of placing in the hands of retail dealers an instrument of fraud and deception through which such dealers might mislead and deceive purchasing public and promote sale of such ware, and cause purchases thereof by members of public because of misleading impression thereby created:

664

Complaint

Held, That such acts and practices were to the prejudice of the public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition.

Before Mr. John W. Addison, trial examiner.

Mr. Harry D. Michael for the Commission.

McLeod, Fixel & Fixel, of Detroit, Mich., for respondent.

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that Dirigold Metals Corporation, hereinafter referred to as respondent, has been and now is using unfair methods of competition in commerce as "commerce" is defined in said act, and it appearing to the Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. That said respondent, Dirigold Metals Corporation, is a corporation organized, existing, and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Delaware, with its office, factory, and principal place of business in the city of Barrington, in the State of Illinois.

PAR. 2. That said respondent is now and has been engaged for more than six months last past in the manufacture of an alloy designated and described as "Dirigold" and of tableware and other articles fabricated therefrom, and in the sale of such tableware and other articles made from such alloy in commerce, as herein set out. Said respondent, in the course and conduct of its said business, causes the said tableware and other products manufactured from said alloy to be transported from its said place of business in Illinois to, into and through States of the United States other than Illinois to various and numerous customers in such other States. Respondent's usual course of dealing is to sell said products to department stores, jewelers, or other retail dealers through whom or which they are in turn sold to members of the consuming public.

PAR. 3. That, during the time above mentioned, other individuals, firms, and corporations in various states of the United States are and have been engaged in the manufacture, sale, and distribution in commerce of tableware and other articles of the same general kind and for the same purposes of use as those made and sold by respondent, as aforesaid, some of which said ware is of sterling silver, some of silver plated ware and some of other materials, and such other individuals, firms, and corporations have caused and do now cause their said tableware and other such articles, as aforesaid, when sold by them, to be transported from the respective States of the United States where they are located to, into and through States other than the State of origin of the shipment thereof to the purchasers thereof at their respective places of location. Said respondent has been, during the aforesaid time, in competition in interstate commerce in the sale of its said tableware and other articles made from said alloy with such other individuals, firms, and corporations.

PAR. 4. That the respondent, in connection with the sale of its said tableware and other articles made from said alloy, as aforesaid, represents by the means and methods as herein set out that they contain gold. In truth and in fact, there is no gold in such tableware and other articles manufactured from said alloy. Said alloy and the products made therefrom by respondent are composed chiefly of aluminum and copper. The products made from said alloy by respondent are highly polished and so finished that they are of the color, appearance and lustre of 14-karat gold. Respondent causes said alloy and the articles made therefrom to be named, designated and described as "Dirigold." Said name "Dirigold" is stamped by respondent on each article made from said alloy and sold by it, as aforesaid. It is the most prominent part of the trade-mark used by respondent in its advertising literature, letterheads, and other printed matter. It is used as a part of respondent's corporate name. It has also been adopted by respondent as a descriptive term and is so used by it in its printed matter. It is also used by its representatives and its retail dealers as the term to describe such products in conversation and otherwise.

Said name "Dirigold," so applied to articles containing no gold, is inherently misleading in that it implies and serves as a representation that such products contain at least some gold. The use of said term as a name for such articles and in the connections, as aforesaid, further has the tendency and capacity to lead members of the public to believe that the products so designated contain gold and it has had and does have such effect.

PAR. 5. That respondent in its circular advertising matter uses many statements, phrases and descriptive terms that serve to increase the said misleading effect of the word "Dirigold." Among such statements, phrases and descriptive terms are the following:

Dirigold—The fashionable and exquisite ware that possesses the color and lustrous beauty of gold!

Like the precious metals—Dirigold is solid clear through.

No home need be denied the rare luxury and beauty of gold on the table and in the home.

Dirigold is truly—the ultimate gift of a Golden Age.

Golden Anniversaries. How appropriate that Dirigold be always considered as the ideal gift for such momentous occasions.

SOLID not plated.

 its rich, warm, lustrous golden color ***.

PAR. 6. That the representations and practices of respondent, as aforesaid, have had and do have the tendency and capacity to confuse, mislead, and deceive members of the public into the belief that respondent's said ware contains gold, when such is not the fact, and to induce them to buy the same because of such erroneous belief engendered as above set forth. Said representations and practices further result in placing in the hands of retail dealers, who handle and sell the same, an instrument of fraud and deception by means of which they may mislead the purchasing public and promote the sale of such ware and cause the purchase thereof by members of the public who are thereby caused to entertain such mistaken belief. Said practices of respondent also have the tendency and capacity to divert trade to respondent from competitors engaged in the sale in interstate commerce of tableware of various kinds and articles of the same general kind as those made and sold by respondent. There are among the competitors of respondent those who do not in any wise misrepresent the material or materials of which their products are made or the composition of the same, but who truthfully and accurately state the facts in such regard without the use of misleading terminology or other misleading representations. As a result of respondent's said practices, as herein set forth, substantial injury has been and is now being done by respondent to competition in commerce between and among the various States of the United States.

PAR. 7. The above acts and things done by respondent are all to the injury and prejudice of the public and the competitors of respondent in interstate commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914.

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission on May 21, 1936, issued and served its complaint in this proceeding upon respondent Dirigold Metals

Corporation, charging it with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of the provisions of said act. After the issuance of said complaint, and the filing of respondent's answer thereto, testimony and other evidence in support of the allegations of said complaint were introduced by Harry D. Michael, attorney for the Commission, before John W. Addison, an examiner of the Commission theretofore duly designated by it, and in opposition to the allegations of the complaint by Rowland W. Fixel, representing McLeod, Fixel and Fixel, attorneys for the respondent: and said testimony and other evidence were duly recorded and filed in the office of the Commission. Thereafter, the proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on the said complaint, the answer thereto, testimony and other evidence, briefs in support of the complaint and in opposition thereto, and the oral arguments of counsel aforesaid; and the Commission having duly considered the same, and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public, and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. The respondent, Dirigold Metals Corporation, is a corporation organized, existing and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Delaware, with its office, factory, and principal place of business in the city of Barrington, in the State of Illinois. Said corporation was organized in January 1934.

PAR. 2. The respondent is now and has been engaged since on or about July 3, 1935, in the manufacture of an alloy designated and described as "Dirigold" and of tableware, consisting of flatware and hollow ware, and other articles fabricated therefrom, and in the sale of such ware in commerce between and among the various States of the United States. The respondent, in the course and conduct of said business as aforesaid, causes and has caused the said tableware and other articles manufactured from said alloy to be transported from its said place of business in Illinois to, into, and through States of the United States other than Illinois, to various and numerous customers in such other States to whom such ware is or has been sold. Respondent's usual course of dealing is and has been to sell its said products to distributors or wholesalers and to retail dealers through whom they are in turn sold to members of the consuming public.

PAR. 3. During the time above mentioned other individuals, firms, and corporations in various States of the United States are and have been engaged in the manufacture, sale, and distribution in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia of tableware, consisting of flatware and hollow ware, and other articles of the same general kind as made and sold by respondent, as aforesaid, and for the same purposes of use, some of which is sterling silverware, some of which is silverplated ware and some of which is ware of other materials. Such other individuals, firms, and corporations have caused and do now cause their said tableware and other articles as aforesaid, when sold by them, to be transported from the respective States of the United States where they are located to, into, and through States other than the State of origin of the shipment thereof to the purchasers of the same at their respective places of location. Among such competitors are R. Wallace and Sons Manufacturing Company, Wallingford, Conn.; International Silver Company, Meriden, Conn.; Oneida, Ltd., New York, N. Y., and Oneida, N. Y.; and National Silver Company, New York, N. Y. Respondent was, during the aforesaid time, in competition in interstate commerce in the sale of its said tableware and other articles made from said alloy with such other individuals, firms, and corporations. Such competition has been direct and substantial.

PAR. 4. The respondent, in connection with the sale of its said tableware and other articles made from said alloy, as aforesaid, has represented by the means and methods as herein set out that such tableware and other articles contain gold, when in truth and in fact such is not the fact. Said alloy and the products made therefrom by respondent are composed chiefly of aluminum and copper. Other metals enter into the composition of said alloy but the process is claimed to be a secret one and the respondent did not reveal their identities on that account. However, there is no gold in said alloy or the products made therefrom. It was so admitted. The ware made from said alloy by respondent is highly polished and so finished that it is of the color, appearance and luster of gold, such appearance being that of fourteen-karat gold or eighteen-karat gold depending upon the discernment of the particular observer. Respondent has caused said alloy and the articles made therefrom to be named, designated and described as "Dirigold." Said name "Dirigold" is stamped by respondent on each article made from said alloy and sold by it as aforesaid. It is the most prominent part of the trade-mark used by respondent and placed upon its printed matter. Said term is used as a part of respondent's corporate name and appears wherever the corporate name occurs on respondent's printed matter. Said word is also used by respondent as a descriptive term to describe its said ware. It is also used by respondent's representatives in the sale of said ware as well as by distributors and wholesalers thereof and also by the retail dealers who sell it to the public as the term to describe it in conversation and otherwise.

PAR. 5. Respondent, in its advertising matter distributed to its customers, used many statements, phrases and descriptive terms which, when used to describe said ware in connection with the word "Dirigold," served to create the belief that said ware contained gold. Among such statements, phrases and descriptive terms are the following:

Dirigold—The fashionable and exquisite ware that possesses the color and lustrous beauty of gold.

Like the precious metals—Dirigold is solid clear through.

No home need be denied the rare luxury and beauty of gold on the table and in the home.

Dirigold is truly—the ultimate gift of a Golden Age.

Golden Anniversaries. How appropriate that Dirigold be always considered as the ideal gift for such momentous occasions.

SOLID not plated.

* * * its rich, warm, lustrous golden color * * *

PAR. 6. Retail stores which handle respondent's said ware do their own newspaper advertising of the same. Some stores have used descriptive terms in so advertising "Dirigold" which, by use of the word "gold" or similar terms therein to describe said ware in connection with the word "Dirigold" have the tendency and capacity to create the belief that the ware so described contains gold.

PAR. 7. The name "Dirigold" applied to ware containing no gold, especially when such ware has the appearance of gold, is inherently misleading in that it implies and serves as a representation that such ware contains at least some gold. The use of said term as a name for flatware, hollow ware, and other ware as made and sold by respondent has the tendency and capacity to lead members of the public to believe that the ware so designated contains gold. Some members of the public have in fact been so misled and have entertained the belief that "Dirigold" ware contains gold, which said belief was engendered by the use of said word "Dirigold" or by a combination of the impression created by said word "Dirigold" and the appearance of the ware to which it was applied. The tendency and capacity to mislead by use of the word "Dirigold" to describe said ware is increased by the fact that the ware so designated has the appearance of gold. Furthermore, the use of descriptive terms such as those previously referred to emphasizing the word "gold" or like expressions, serves to increase the misleading effect of said term

"Dirigold" when used as aforesaid. Said term, together with the misleading implication contained therein, as aforesaid, serves to attract prospective customers to the ware so designated and to cause them to look upon it with favor because thereof.

PAR. 8. The representations of respondent as aforesaid have had the tendency and capacity to confuse, mislead and deceive members of the public into the belief that respondent's said ware contains at least some gold, when such is not the fact, and to induce them to buy the same because of the erroneous belief engendered as above set forth, and to divert trade to respondent from competitors engaged in the sale in interstate commerce of flatware, hollow ware, and other ware adapted to and used for the same general purposes for which respondent's ware is used. There were and are among the competitors of respondent those who do not misrepresent the materials from which their ware is made but who truthfully and accurately state the facts in such respect. Respondent's said acts and practices have tended to and do in fact divert business to respondent from its said competitors to the substantial injury and prejudice of such competitors. Moreover, the use of the term "Dirigold" to describe and designate respondent's said ware, and respondent's representations and practices in regard thereto, as herein set out, result in placing in the hands of retail dealers an instrument of fraud and deception by means of which such dealers may mislead the purchasing public and promote the sale of such ware and cause the purchase thereof by members of the public because of misleading impressions thereby created.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondent, Dirigold Metals Corporations are to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce, within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

It is ordered, That the respondent, Dirigold Metals Corporation, its officers, representatives, agents, and employees, in connection with the offering for sale, sale and distribution of tableware, consisting of flatware and hollow ware, and other articles made from an alloy of metals containing no gold, in interstate commerce or in the District of Columbia, do forthwith cease and desist from:

Representing, through the use of the word "dirigold" or "gold" or any coined word containing the word "gold," alone or in connection or conjunction with any other word or words, in its corporate name or as descriptive of or as a trade-mark for its products, or in any other manner whatever, or through any other means or device, that such tableware, flatware, hollow ware and other articles contain gold.

It is further ordered, That the respondent shall, within 60 days after service upon it of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which it has complied with this order.

IN THE MATTER OF DIRIGOLD DISTRIBUTORS, INC.

COMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION
OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 20, 1914

Docket 2816. Complaint, May 21, 1936—Decision, Aug. 3, 1937

Where a corporation engaged in sale at retail, chiefly, of highly polished, flat and hollow tableware and other articles made of alloy containing no gold, but composed chiefly of aluminum and copper, and so finished that they had the color, appearance and luster of 14-karat or 18-karat gold, depending upon the discernment of the particular observer, in direct and substantial competition with those engaged in sale and distribution, in commerce among the various States and in the District of Columbia, of similar tableware and other articles of the same general kind and for the same purposes, composed, as case might be, of sterling silver, silver-plated ware, and other materials—

Included word "Dirigold" in its corporate name and thus made use thereof in its printed matter and otherwise, and sold said ware under said name and as a descriptive term thereof, and with each piece thereof thus stamped, and made use of printed matter in its business in promoting sale of said ware, in which said word was most prominent part of trade mark thereon depicted, and thereby falsely represented that said ware contained gold, and through use in circular advertising matter, in connection with word "Dirigold," of many statements, phrases and descriptive terms, such as " * * * a wonderful merchandise with the color of fine gold * * *," " * * * the homogeneity of structure, the fine texture, and the lustrous brilliance of gold, * * *," " * * * may be quite truthfully described as BETTER THAN GOLD," "Beautiful as Gold," "Here, in effect, is the luxury and splendor of solid gold," "SOLID not plated," " * * * the ultimate gift of a Golden Age," and "Golden Anniversaries * * * ideal for such momentous occasions," served to create impression that said ware contained gold, and failed, through such qualifications as "Contains no gold" on some of its printed matter and in connection with aforesaid trade mark on some of such matter, but not in connection with stampings thereof nor with its said corporate name in all instances where word was used in print, nor in every instance by those making oral use of word in selling such ware, to reach all members of the public, or all those coming in contact with said name, or all members of the public shopping for flat and hollow ware including that sold by it, or all those actually buying such ware;

With result that some members of the public were in fact misled through such inherently misleading designation, used as aforesaid, which, together with misleading implications thereof, served to attract prospective customers to ware thus designated and cause them to look with favor thereon by reason thereof, and with tendency and capacity to confuse, mislead, and deceive members of the public, notwithstanding practice of its representatives of informing customers there was no gold in such ware, into erroneous belief that its said products contained at least some gold, and to induce them to buy same because of erroneous belief thus engen-

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that Dirigold Distributors, Inc., hereinafter referred to as respondent, has been and now is using unfair methods of competition in commerce as "commerce" is defined in said act, and it appearing to the Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. That respondent, Dirigold Distributors, Inc., is a corporation organized, existing, and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Illinois, with its office and principal place of business in the city of Chicago in said State.

PAR. 2. That said respondent is now and has been engaged for more than two years last past in the sale in commerce of tableware and other articles designated and described as "Dirigold," as herein set out. Said respondent sells said products at retail to members of the consuming public and acts as a retail outlet for the manufacturer thereof. Said respondent, in the course and conduct of its said business, causes said products, when sold by it, to be transported from its said place of business in Illinois to, into and through States of the United States other than Illinois to customers in such other States to whom such products are or have been sold.

PAR. 3. That, during the time above mentioned, other individuals, firms, and corporations in various States of the United States are and have been engaged in the sale and distribution in commerce of tableware and other articles of the same general kind and for the same purposes of use as those sold by respondent, as aforesaid, some of which said ware is of sterling silver, some of silver plated ware, and some of other materials, and such other individuals, firms, and corporations have caused and do now cause their said tableware and other such articles, as aforesaid, when sold by them, to be transported from the respective States of the United States where they are located to, into and through States other than the State of origin of the shipment thereof to the purchasers thereof at their respective places of location. Said respondent has been, during the aforesaid time, in competition in interstate commerce in the sale of its said tableware and other articles designated and described as aforesaid with such other individuals, firms, and corporations. Some of such competitors sell their products directly to the purchasing public while others sell to dealers through whom or which they are in turn sold to members of the public.

PAR. 4. That the respondent, in connection with the sale of its said tableware and other articles, as aforesaid, represents by the means and methods as herein set out that such products contain gold. In truth and in fact, said products do not contain any gold but are made from an alloy consisting of other metals, the chief of which are aluminum and copper. Said products made from such alloy are highly polished and so finished that they are of the color, appearance and lustre of 14-carat gold.

Said name "Dirigold" is stamped on each article made from said alloy so sold by respondent. It is the most prominent part of the trade-mark used by respondent in its advertising literature, letter-heads and other printed matter. It is used as a part of respondent's corporate name. It has been adopted by respondent as a descriptive term and is so used by it in its printed matter. It is also used by respondent's representatives as the term to describe such products in conversation and otherwise.

Said name "Dirigold," so applied to articles containing no gold, is inherently misleading in that it implies and serves as a representation that such products contain at least some gold. The use of said term as a name for such articles further has the tendency and capacity to lead members of the public to believe that the products so designated contain gold and it has had and does have such effect. Respondent places on some of its printed matter the statement "Dirigold contains no gold" and the phrase "Contains No Gold" is sometimes used in conjunction with the trade-mark heretofore referred to. Such statements and modifications do not reach all members of the public nor all those who come in contact with the name "Dirigold." Neither do they reach all members of the public who shop for or buy said ware. Not all ultimate buyers or prospective buyers of said products see or have the opportunity to see respondent's printed matter containing such statements and modifications. No such modifications occur in connection with the stampings on said ware nor in connection with respondent's corporate name. Nor are they made in every instance when the word "Dirigold" is used in its printed matter. Neither do such printed modifications affect the misleading effect of the word "Dirigold" as applied to respondent's ware when used by word of mouth. Formerly, respondent made no such modifications or explanatory statements in its printed matter as above described.

PAR. 5. That respondent in its circular advertising matter uses many statements, phrases and descriptive terms that serve to increase the said misleading effect of the word "Dirigold." Among such statements, phrases and descriptive terms are the following:

Dirigold is a wonderful merchandise with the color of fine gold * * *.

It has the homogeneity of structure, the fine texture, and the lustrous brilliances of gold, * * *.

Dirigold may be quite truthfully described as BETTER THAN GOLD.

The Beauty and Color of Gold with Dirigold.

* * * Dirigold—with its irresistible golden beauty.

Beautiful as Gold.

Color and Beauty of Gold.

* * * the alluring golden color and finish, the marvelous sheen and lustre * * *.

Here, in effect, is the luxury and splendor of solid gold!

* * * the perfect harmony and effect when used with gold-trimmed Haviland!

Dirigold will always retain its lustrous golden color because it's solid clear through.

SOLID not plated.

* * * its rich, warm, lustrous golden color * * *.

Dirigold—The fashionable and exquisite ware that possesses the color and lustrous beauty of gold!

Like the precious metals—Dirigold is solid clear through.

No home need be denied the rare luxury and beauty of gold on the table and in the home.

Dirigold is truly—the ultimate gift of a Golden Age.

Golden Anniversaries. How appropriate that Dirigold be always considered as the ideal gift for such momentous occasions.

PAR. 6. That the representations and practices of respondent, as aforesaid, have had and do have the tendency and capacity to confuse, mislead, and deceive members of the public into the belief that said ware so sold by respondent contains gold when such is not the fact, and to induce them to buy the same because of such erroneous belief engendered as above set forth. Said practices of respondent also have the tendency and capacity to divert trade to respondent from competitors engaged in the sale in interstate commerce of tableware of various kinds and articles of the same general kind as those sold by respondent. There are among the competitors of respondent those who do not in any wise misrepresent the material or materials of which their products are made or the composition of the same, but who truthfully and accurately state the facts in such regard without the use of misleading terminology or other misleading representations. As a result of respondent's said practices, as herein set forth, substantial injury has been and is now being done by respondent to competition in commerce between and among the various States of the United States.

PAR. 7. The above acts and things done by respondent are all to the injury and prejudice of the public and the competitors of respondent in interstate commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914.

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, on May 21, 1936, issued and served its complaint in this proceeding upon respondent Dirigold Distributors, Inc., charging it with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of the provisions of said act. After the issuance of said complaint and the filing of respondent's answer thereto, testimony and other evidence in support of the allegations of said complaint were introduced by Harry D. Michael, attorney for the Commission, before John W. Addison, an examiner of the Commission theretofore duly designated by it, and in opposition to the allegations of the complaint by Harold B. Hood, representing Hood and Hahn, attorneys for the respondent; and said testimony and other evidence were duly recorded and filed in the office of the Commission. On August 24, 1936, during the course of hearings, the Commission received and ordered filed respondent's amended answer. Thereafter, the proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on the said complaint, the amended answer thereto, testimony and other evidence, briefs in support of the complaint and in opposition thereto, and the oral arguments of counsel aforesaid; and the Commission having duly considered the same, and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public, and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom;

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. The respondent, Dirigold Distributors, Inc., is a corporation organized, existing, and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Illinois, with its office and principal place of business at 70 East Jackson Boulevard, in the city of Chicago, in said State. Said corporation was organized on October 29, 1930.

PAR. 2. The respondent is now and has been engaged since said date of organization in the sale in commerce between and among the various States of the United States of tableware, consisting of flatware and hollow ware, and other articles designated and described as "Dirigold." Respondent sells said ware generally at retail direct to members of the consuming public. Said business is confined largely to the city of Chicago and vicinity. Sales are made and have been made, however, to members of the public located in States other than Illinois. In a few instances, during the year 1934, respondent sold said ware at wholesale to retail dealers located in States other than Illinois. The respondent, in the course and conduct of its said business as aforesaid, causes and has caused said ware to be transported from its said place of business in Illinois to, into and through States of the United States other than Illinois to various and numerous customers in such other States, to whom said ware is or has been sold.

PAR. 3. During the time above mentioned other individuals, firms, and corporations in various States of the United States are and have been engaged in the sale and distribution in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia, of tableware, consisting of flatware and hollow ware, and other articles, of the same general kind and for the same purposes of use as the ware sold by respondent as aforesaid, some of which said ware is of sterling silver, some of silver-plate, and some of other materials. Such other individuals, firms, and corporations have caused and do now cause their said tableware and other articles, as aforesaid, when sold by them, to be transported from the respective States of the United States where they are located to, into and through States other than the State of origin of the shipment thereof to the purchasers of the same at their respective places of location. Respondent has been, during the aforesaid time, in competition in interstate commerce in the sale of its said tableware and other articles made from said alloy, with such other individuals, firms, and corporations. Such competition has been direct and substantial.

PAR. 4. The respondent in connection with the sale of said ware, as aforesaid, has represented by the means and methods herein set out, that such ware contains gold when in truth and in fact such is not the fact. The ware so sold by respondent and described and designated as "Dirigold" is composed of an alloy consisting chiefly of aluminum and copper. Other metals enter into the composition of said alloy, but the process is claimed to be a secret one, and their identities were not revealed. It was admitted, however, that there is no gold in said alloy or the products made therefrom. Said ware is highly polished and so finished that it is of the color, appearance and luster of gold, such appearance being that of 14-karat gold or 18-karat gold depending upon the discernment of the particular observer. The name "Dirigold" is stamped upon each piece of said ware sold by respondent. It is the most prominent part of the trade-mark depicted on the printed matter used by respondent in its business and in promoting the sale of said ware. Said term is also used as a part of respondent's corporate name and appears wherever the corporate name occurs on respondent's printed matter. Said word is also used by respondent as a descriptive term to describe said ware. It is also used by respondent's representatives in the sale thereof as the term to describe it in conversation and otherwise.

PAR. 5. Respondent, in its circular advertising matter, has used many statements, phrases and descriptive terms in describing said ware that served to create the impression, when used in connection with said word "Dirigold," that said ware contains gold. Among such statements, phrases, and descriptive terms so used are the following:

Dirigold is a wonderful merchandise with the color of fine gold * * *.

It has the homogeneity of structure, the fine texture, and the lustrous brilliance of gold, * * *.

Dirigold may be quite truthfully described as BETTER THAN GOLD.

The Beauty and Color of Gold with Dirigold.

* * * Dirigold—with its irresistible golden beauty.

Beautiful as Gold.

Color and Beauty of Gold.

* * * the alluring golden color and finish, the marvelous sheen and lustre * * *.

Here, in effect, is the luxury and splendor of solid gold!

* * * the perfect harmony and effect when used with gold-trimmed Haviland!

Dirigold will always retain its lustrous golden color because it's solid clear through.

SOLID not plated.

* * * its rich, warm, lustrous golden color * * *.

Dirigold—The fashionable and exquisite ware that possesses the color and lustrous beauty of gold!

Like the precious metals—Dirigold is solid clear through.

No home need be denied the rare luxury and beauty of gold on the table and in the home.

Dirigold is truly—the ultimate gift of a Golden Age.

Golden Anniversaries. How appropriate that Dirigold be always considered as the ideal gift for such momentous occasions.

PAR. 6. On some of the printed matter used by respondent the statement "Dirigold contains no gold" has been used. Also the phrase "contains no gold" has been used on some of such printed matter in connection with the trade-mark containing the word "Dirigold." Such statements and modifications do not reach all members of the public nor all those who come in contact with the name "Dirigold." Neither do such expressions reach all members of the public who shop for flatware and hollow ware including the said ware sold by respondent. Nor do they reach all those who actually buy said ware. Not all buyers or prospective buyers of said ware see or have the opportunity to see printed matter containing said statements and modifications above referred to. No such modifications are made on the stampings on said ware, nor in connection with respondent's corporate name, nor are they used in all instances where the word "Dirigold" is used in print. Neither are such expressions used by those who sell said ware in every instance where said term "Dirigold" is used when spoken by word of mouth. Representatives of respondent have made it a practice to inform customers that there is no gold in "Dirigold" ware but there is no certainty that such information is given or will be given in all cases.

PAR. 7. The name "Dirigold" applied to ware containing no gold, especially when such ware has the appearance of gold, is inherently misleading in that it implies and serves as a representation that such ware contains at least some gold. The use of said term as a name for flatware, hollow ware, and other ware such as that sold by respondent, has the tendency and capacity to lead members of the public to believe that the ware so designated contains gold. Some members of the public have in fact been so misled and have entertained the belief that "Dirigold" ware contains gold, which said belief was engendered by the use of said word "Dirigold" or by a combination of the impression created by said word "Dirigold" and the appearance of the ware to which it was applied. The tendency and capacity to mislead by use of the word "Dirigold" to describe said ware is increased by the fact that the ware so designated has the appearance of gold. Furthermore, the use of descriptive terms such as those previously referred to emphasizing the word "gold," or like expressions, serves to increase the misleading effect of said term "Dirigold" when used as aforesaid. Said term serves as a means to attract members of the public to the ware so designated and causes them to look upon it with favor because of the misleading implication contained therein, as aforesaid.

PAR. 8. The representations of respondent as aforesaid have had the tendency and capacity to confuse, mislead, and deceive members of the public into the belief that the ware sold by respondent as aforesaid contains at least some gold, when such is not the fact, and to induce them to buy the same because of the erroneous belief engendered as above set forth, and to divert trade to respondent from competitors engaged in the sale in interstate commerce of flatware, hollow ware and other ware adapted to and used for the same general purposes for which the ware so sold by respondent is used. There were and are among the competitors of respondent those who do not misrepresent the materials from which their ware is made but who truthfully and accurately state the facts in such respect. Respondent's said acts and practices have tended to and do in fact divert business to respondent from its competitors to the substantial injury and prejudice of such competitors.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondent, Dirigold Distributors, Inc., are to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce, within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

This proceeding having been heard by the Federal Trade Commission upon the complaint of the Commission, the amended answer of respondent, testimony and other evidence taken before John W. Addison, an examiner of the Commission theretofore duly designated by it, in support of the allegations of said complaint and in opposition thereto, briefs filed herein, and oral arguments by Harry D. COMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION
OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 26, 1914

Docket 2955. Complaint, Oct. 22, 1936—Decision, Aug. 4, 1937

Where a corporation and its subsidiary engaged in distribution and sale, from the warehouse of the former, of aspirin to group of drug and cigar stores in certain other States, as requisitioned from time to time by such stores under arrangement set up and established between them—

(a) Represented that they were the first or original manufacturers or dealers in aspirin, through stamping word "ORIGINAL" in large red letters on all cartons, bottles, and tin containers of their said product, and through such statements, in advertising matter and pamphlets and containers of their tablets, as "Insist upon the Original 'Dale's Aspirin'," "Look for the 'D' on each tablet which is the Original 'Dale's Aspirin'," and "Original 'Dale's Aspirin' is packaged in convenient tins," etc., facts being they were not the first or original manufacturers of or dealers in said product, manufacture of which was begun under patent and continued for many years thereafter by the predecessor of a corporation other than that from which they purchased their said product, thus described and referred to; and

(b) Represented that their said product had a retail value in excess of the actual selling price and in excess of the actual value thereof, through stamping on 100-tablet containers of said "Dale's Aspirin," "Price $1.00," and on 50-tablet containers, "Price $.50," notwithstanding fact retail price at which they sold their said product fluctuated between 39¢ and 49¢ for the 100-tablet quantities and was about 23¢ during said period for the 50-tablet units, and said tablets in such quantities at no time sold for $1.00 or 50¢, as case might be, and prices in question, thus appearing as selling prices thereof, were not those at which tablets were actually sold or intended to be sold, but were greatly in excess of such prices in usual course of trade;

With tendency and capacity to mislead and deceive substantial portion of purchasing public into erroneous belief that all said representations were true, and with result that a substantial number of consuming public, as a consequence of erroneous beliefs induced by such false and misleading statements, purchased substantial volume of its said tablets and trade was unfairly diverted to them from those likewise engaged in distribution and sale of such tablets and who truthfully advertise the same; to the substantial injury of competition in commerce:

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission having reason to believe that the Silver Rod Stores Supply Co., Inc., a corporation, and Dale Drug Company, Inc., a corporation, hereinafter referred to as respondents, have been and are using unfair methods of competition in commerce as "commerce" is defined in said act of Congress, and it appearing to the Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint, stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent, Silver Rod Stores Supply Co., Inc., is a corporation existing and doing business under the laws of the State of New York, with its principal office and place of business located at 60 Broadway, Brooklyn, N. Y.

Respondent Dale Drug Company, Inc., is a subsidiary of respondent Silver Rod Stores Supply Co., Inc., and is a corporation existing and doing business under the laws of the State of New York, with its principal office and place of business located at 60 Broadway, Brooklyn, N. Y.

Respondent Silver Rod Stores Supply Co., Inc., and respondent Dale Drug Company, Inc., are now and have been for some time engaged in the business of distributing and selling in commerce, as herein set out, a certain pharmaceutical preparation commonly called "aspirin."

PAR. 2. Said respondents, Silver Rod Stores Supply Co., Inc., and Dale Drug Company, Inc., being engaged in business as aforesaid, cause and have caused said aspirin, when sold, to be transported from their respective offices and places of business in the State of New York to purchasers thereof located at various points in States of the United States other than the State from which said shipments were made. Both respondents have maintained and now maintain a constant current of trade and commerce in said aspirin distributed and sold by them between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 3. In the course and conduct of their respective businesses, both respondents are now, and have been, in substantial competition with other corporations and with individuals and firms likewise engaged in the business of selling and distributing aspirin in commerce among and between the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia. In the course and conduct of their respective businesses, said respondents sell aspirin under the name "Dale Drug Company, Inc.," and represents said aspirin as "Dale's Aspirin."

By statements and representations in advertising matter, pamphlets and on containers of aspirin tablets, said respondents represent that they are, or either of them was, the first, or original manufacturers of, or dealers in, aspirin. Such advertisements and statements are as follows:

Insist upon the original "Dale's Aspirin."

Look for the "D" on each tablet, which is the "Original Dale's Aspirin."

Original Dale Aspirin is packed in convenient tins of 12s for the pocket or purse.

On each bottle containing said aspirin tablets is stamped the word "original" in red letters.

In truth and in fact, said representations of both respondents that they are, or either of them was the first or original manufacturer of or dealer in aspirin, are false, misleading, and untrue. In truth and in fact, Dale's Aspirin is not the original aspirin, and the respondents are not the original manufacturers of or dealers in aspirin.

PAR. 4. By markings and statements on cartons containing aspirin respondents represent to customers and prospective customers that Dale's Aspirin has a retail value in excess of the actual selling price and in excess of the actual value thereof.

The retail prices stamped on said cartons, as aforesaid, are in excess of the actual selling prices of Dale's Aspirin by the respondents to the consuming public, and are in excess of the true and actual value of said aspirin.

The retail prices so stamped or printed as aforesaid are false and fictitious and in no sense represent either the true value or true selling price of the aspirin so price marked.

Such statements and representations made by the respondents regarding the selling prices and value of Dale's Aspirin are as follows:

100 Dale's Aspirin Tablets, price $1

50 Dale's Aspirin Tablets, price 50¢

The prices appearing on said cartons as to the value of said aspirin were not and are not the prices at which the same were or are expected or intended to be sold, but were and are greatly in excess of the prices at which the same were sold or intended to be sold in the usual course of trade.

PAR. 5. Each and all false and misleading representations made by both respondents, as hereinabove set forth, in their advertising matter, in offering for sale and selling "Dale's Aspirin," had and now has the tendency and capacity to mislead and deceive a large portion of the purchasing public into the erroneous belief that all said representations are true. Further, as a direct consequence of these false, misleading and erroneous beliefs induced by advertisements and statements of both respondents, as hereinabove enumerated, a number of the purchasing public purchased a substantial volume of respondents' aspirin with a result that trade has been unfairly diverted to respondents from individuals, firms, and corporations likewise engaged in the business of selling aspirin, who truthfully advertise their products. As a result thereof, substantial injury has been done and is being done by both respondents to competition in commerce among and between the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 6. The aforementioned methods, acts, and practices of respondents are all to the prejudice of the public and respondents' competitors as hereinabove alleged. Said methods, acts, and practices constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914.

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, on October 22, 1936, issued and served its complaint in this proceeding upon respondents, Silver Rod Stores Supply Company, Inc., a corporation, and Dale Drug Company, Inc., a corporation, charging them with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of the provisions of said act. After the issuance of said complaint and the filing of respondents' answer thereto, testimony and other evidence in support of the allegations of said complaint were introduced by George Foulkes, attorney for the Commission, before Edward M. Averill, an examiner of the Commission, theretofore duly designated by it, and in opposition to the allegations of the complaint, by J. E. Weiner, attorney for the respondents, and said testimony and other evidence were duly recorded and filed in the office of the Commission. Thereafter, the proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on the said complaint, the answer thereto, testimony and other evidence, and brief in support of the complaint; and the Commission having duly considered the same, and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public, and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. The respondent Silver Rod Stores Supply Co., Inc., is a corporation organized in the year 1919 under the laws of the State of New York and existing and doing business under said laws with its principal office and place of business located at 60 Broadway, Brooklyn, N. Y.

Respondent Dale Drug Company, Inc. is likewise a New York corporation and the subsidiary of respondent Silver Rod Stores Supply Co., Inc., with its office and principal place of business located at 60 Broadway, Brooklyn, N. Y.

Both respondents Silver Rod Stores Supply Co., Inc., and Dale Drug Company, Inc., are now, and have been for more than one year last past, engaged in the business of distributing and selling in interstate commerce a certain pharmaceutical preparation, commonly called "aspirin."

PAR. 2. Both respondents have maintained, and now maintain, a constant current of trade in commerce in said aspirin between and among the various States of the United States.

Respondent Silver Rod Stores Supply Co., Inc., maintains a warehouse in the State of New York from which it distributes products and supplies to a group of drug and cigar stores located in the State of New York and in the State of New Jersey.

Among said stores is a group operated by the Silver Rod Stores, Inc. of New Jersey, which is a corporation organized under the laws of New Jersey, and is a wholly owned subsidiary of the respondent Silver Rod Stores Supply Co., Inc. of New York.

All of the stores including the New Jersey stores requisition whatever merchandise they require from the warehouse maintained by Silver Rod Stores Supply Co., Inc., in the State of New York which thereupon ships the merchandise to Silver Rod Stores, Inc. of New Jersey and charges each store for the merchandise it receives.

Each store of the Silver Rod Stores, Inc. of New Jersey and the Silver Rod Stores of New York makes daily deposits in separate banks, and sends duplicate slips to the respondent Silver Rod Stores Supply Co., Inc.

Respondent Silver Rod Stores Supply Co., Inc. thereupon makes withdrawals from said bank by checks drawn against accounts of Silver Rod Stores, Inc. in payment of the merchandise requisitioned by said stores and shipped to them as aforesaid by respondent Silver Rod Stores Supply Co., Inc.

Said respondents Silver Rod Stores Supply Co., Inc., and Dale Drug Company, Inc., by engaging in business as aforesaid, cause and have caused aspirin, when sold, to be transported from their respective offices and places of business in the State of New York to purchasers thereof located at various points in States of the United States other than the State from which said shipments were made.

PAR. 3. In the course of the operation of their respective businesses, both respondents are now, and have been, in substantial competition with other corporations and with individuals and firms likewise engaged in selling and distributing aspirin in commerce among and between the various States of the United States.

Respondents market their aspirin product under the name of "Dale's Aspirin."

Respondents' "Dale's Aspirin Tablets" are sold in small bottles which are packaged in cardboard containers. Respondents also sell aspirin in small tin cartons.

In each cardboard carton containing a bottle of "Dale's Aspirin Tablets" is enclosed a small leaflet upon which certain statements are made relative to the quality of respondents' aspirin.

In all of the containers of respondents' "Dale's Aspirin," and in all of respondents' literature about said aspirin tablets is featured the word "ORIGINAL."

On all cartons, bottles, and tin boxes containing respondents' aspirin, the word "ORIGINAL" is stamped in large red letters. By statements and representations in advertising matter, pamphlets and on containers of aspirin tablets as aforesaid said respondents represent that they are the first or original manufacturers or dealers in aspirin. Such advertisements and statements are as follows:

Insist upon the Original "Dale's Aspirin";

Look for the "D" on each tablet which is the Original "Dale's Aspirin";

Original "Dale's Aspirin" is packaged in convenient tins of 12s for the pocket purse.

Respondents do not manufacture the aspirin which they sell, but purchase the same from the Norwich Drug Company of Norwich, N. Y.

The respondents are not the first or original manufacturers of or dealers in aspirin.

The drug which is today commonly known as aspirin and chemically known as acetylsalicylic acid was first introduced in the United States in 1899 by a company named Farben Fabriken.

The Farben Fabriken Company obtained a patent for the manufacture of the drug in 1900, which patent expired in 1917.

The Farben Fabriken Company was the predecessor of the present Bayer Company, a New York corporation engaged in the manufacture and interstate sale of aspirin, and throughout the period of the patent, the Bayer Company and its predecessors were the exclusive manufacturers of the substance today commonly known as aspirin.

PAR. 4. On the cartons containing respondents' "Dale's Aspirin" are markings and statements by which respondents represent to customers and prospective customers that "Dale's Aspirin" has a retail value in excess of the actual selling price and in excess of the actual value thereof.

On the carton containing 100 tablets of "Dale's Aspirin," respondents represent the retail price to be $1.00, and on the cardboard carton containing 50 tablets of "Dale's Aspirin," respondents represent the retail price to be 50¢.

Said representations are made in the following manner:

Price $1.00

Price $.50

Respondents have at no time sold 100 aspirin tablets for $1.00, or 50 aspirin tablets for 50¢.

The retail price at which respondents sold said aspirin during the last two or three years has fluctuated between 39¢ and 49¢ for 100 tablets and around 23¢ for 50 tablets of aspirin.

The prices appearing on said cartons as the selling price of said aspirin tablets were not and are not the prices at which the same were and are actually sold or intended to be sold but were, and are, greatly in excess of the prices at which the same are sold or are intended to be sold in the usual course of trade.

PAR. 5. Each and all of the false and misleading statements made by respondents as hereinabove set forth, in offering for sale and selling their aspirin tablets, had, and now have, a tendency and capacity to mislead and deceive a substantial portion of the purchasing public into the erroneous belief that all of said representations are true.

As a consequence of the erroneous beliefs induced by the false and misleading statements of respondents as hereinabove set out, a substantial number of the consuming public has purchased a substantial volume of respondents' aspirin tablets, with the result that trade has been unfairly diverted to respondents from corporations, firms, and individuals likewise engaged in the business of distributing and selling aspirin tablets, and who truthfully advertise their aspirin tablets.

As a result thereof, substantial injury has been done, and is now being done, by respondents to competition in commerce among and between the various States of the United States.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of respondents Silver Rod Stores Supply Co., Inc., a corporation, and Dale Drug Company, Inc., a corporation, are to the prejudice of the public and of respondents' competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

It is ordered, That the respondents, Silver Rod Stores Supply Co., Inc., a corporation, and Dale Drug Company, Inc., a corporation, their respective officers, agents, and employees in connection with the offering for sale, sale and distribution of a pharmaceutical preparation, commonly known as aspirin, and chemically designated acetylsalicylic acid, do forthwith cease and desist from representing:

1. That they are, or either of them was, the first or original manufacturers of or dealers in aspirin.
2. That the prices marked or stamped on or affixed to said product, or on the containers thereof, are the regular or customary retail prices for such products, when said price marks are fictitious and greatly in excess of the regular and customary prices at which said products are sold or offered for sale at retail.

It is further ordered, That respondents shall, within 30 days from the date of the service upon them of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth the manner and form in which they have complied with the order herein set forth.

IN THE MATTER OF

H. E. WAGLEY, INDIVIDUALLY AND TRADING AS NATIONAL SALES AND PARAMOUNT SALES

COMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION
OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 20, 1914

Docket 3147. Complaint, June 5, 1937—Decision, Aug. 4, 1937

Where an individual engaged in the sale and distribution of clocks and other articles of merchandise to purchasers in the various States, in competition with those engaged in manufacture of clocks and other merchandise and sale and distribution thereof in commerce between and among the various States—

- (a) Furnished devices and plans of merchandising, together with descriptive literature and instructions, which involved operation of games of chance, gift enterprises, or lotteries in distribution to ultimate consumers, wholly by lot or chance, or his said products, and consisted of push cards, through use of which, and under scheme or plan followed, substantially, purchasers paid for right to select one of names of girls set forth on card, in accordance with number pushed by chance, and received article of merchandise involved, of a value exceeding amount paid for chance, or nothing other than right to make a selection, in accordance with their success in selecting name corresponding to that concealed under card's master seal; in violation of public policy long recognized in the common law and criminal statutes, and contrary to an established public policy of the United States Government, and in competition with many who make and sell merchandise and are unwilling to adopt and use said or any method involving game of chance or sale of a chance to win by chance, or any other method contrary to public policy, and refrain therefrom;

With result that many dealers in and ultimate purchasers of his said merchandise were attracted by said method and element of chance involved in sale thereof as above set forth, and were thereby induced to buy and sell or distribute his said products in preference to those offered and sold by said competitors who do not use same or equivalent method, and trade was thereby diverted to him from them, and with capacity and tendency so to divert trade and custom, because of said game of chance, to him from his said competitors who do not use such or an equivalent method;

- (b) Caused representation to be made to his customers and prospective customers, through use of words "factory representative," that he was a direct purchaser from, or a direct distributor of, the manufacturer of the merchandise sold and distributed, notwithstanding fact he was not such representative, but purchased merchandise sold in open market from middlemen, jobbers, or wholesalers;

With effect of misleading and deceiving many of his said customers into the erroneous belief that he was such a direct representative, and that persons dealing with him were buying such merchandise from such direct representative and thereby eliminating profits of middleman and obtaining various advantages not to be had by those buying goods from middlemen, such as, as considered by substantial portion of purchasing public, who prefer direct dealing with manufacturer or his representative, lower prices, superior quality, and other advantages not had, in their opinion, through purchase from jobbers or middlemen, and with effect of unfairly diverting trade to him from many competitors who do not falsely represent themselves as representatives of the manufacturer of their merchandise; and

- (c) Represented, and caused representation to be made, to customers and prospective customers, that certain rotary clocks sold had retail value of $5.00, notwithstanding fact said clocks did not have such a retail value, but amount was grossly exaggerated and purely fictitious;

With result that substantial portion of purchasing public, relying on and believing said representation, was induced to buy said clocks by reason thereof, and many of his customers were misled and deceived into believing that said clocks had retail value of $5.00, and trade was unfairly diverted to him from many competitors who do not falsely represent value of merchandise sold by them:

Held, That such acts and practices were to the prejudice of the public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition.

Mr. Henry C. Lank and Mr. P. C. Kolinski for the Commission.

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that H. E. Wagley, individually and trading as National Sales and Paramount Sales, hereinafter referred to as respondent, has been and is using unfair methods of competition in commerce as "commerce" is defined in said act, and it appearing to said Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent is an individual with his principal office and place of business located at 508 South Dearborn Street, in the city of Chicago, State of Illinois. Respondent, in carrying on his business, has used the trade names and titles of National Sales and Paramount Sales. Respondent is now, and for some time last past has been, engaged in the sale and distribution of clocks and other articles of merchandise to purchasers thereof located at points in the various States of the United States. He causes and has caused said merchandise when sold to be transported from his principal place of business in Chicago, Ill., to purchasers thereof in the State of Illinois and in other States of the United States at their respective points of location. There is now, and has been for some time last past, a course of trade and commerce by said respondent in such merchandise between and among the various States of the United States. In the course and conduct of said business, respondent is in competition with other individuals and with partnerships and corporations engaged in the manufacture of clocks and other merchandise and in the sale and distribution thereof in commerce between and among the various States of the United States.

PAR. 2. In the sale and distribution of his said merchandise, respondent has furnished devices and plans of merchandising which involve the operation of games of chance, gift enterprises, or lottery schemes, by which said merchandise is distributed to the ultimate consumers wholly by lot or chance. Said devices and plans of merchandising consist of push cards, the use of which by retail dealers or individuals, in connection with the sale and delivery to the purchasing public of respondent's said merchandise, was and is substantially as follows: The pushcards have a number of partially perforated disks, and when a push is made and the disk is separated from the card a number is disclosed. There are as many separate numbers as there are disks on the card, but the numbers are varied or assorted and are not arranged in numerical sequence. The numbers on said disks are effectively concealed from purchasers and prospective purchasers until a selection has been made and the disk separated from the card. The price of sales varies, depending upon the number obtained. Numbers from 1 to 29 pay the amount of the number in cents. Numbers over 29 pay 29¢. Directly below each disk there is printed a girl's name, and the card has a space prepared for recording the name of each purchaser of a disk opposite the corresponding girl's name. The card also has a master seal which, when removed, exposes a girl's name corresponding to one of those appearing under said disks. The purchaser who pushed the disk corresponding to the name under the master seal is entitled to a specified article of merchandise. The name under the master seal is effectively concealed from purchasers and prospective purchasers until all sales have been made and the master seal removed. Purchasers who select names other than the name appearing under the master seal do not receive anything for their money other than the privilege of pushing a disk from said card. The said articles of merchandise are of a greater value than the cost of a single push from this said card. The fact as to whether a purchaser receives a specified article of merchandise or nothing for his money is thus determined wholly by lot or chance.

PAR. 3. Respondent forwards his pushcards, together with various descriptive literature and with instructions as to how to operate said pushcards or explaining what to do in order to obtain said articles of merchandise, to various members of the public, and a substantial amount of such merchandise is sold or distributed by such persons by means of said pushcards and in accordance with the instructions furnished by respondent. Respondent thus supplies to and places in the hands of others the means of conducting lotteries in the sale of his merchandise in accordance with the sales plan hereinabove set forth.

PAR. 4. The sale of merchandise to the purchasing public in the manner above alleged involves a game of chance or the sale of a chance to procure articles of merchandise at a price much less than the normal retail price thereof. The use by respondent of said method in the sale of his merchandise, and the sale of his merchandise by and through the use thereof and by the aid of said method, is a practice of the sort which the common law and criminal statutes have long deemed contrary to public policy, and is contrary to an established public policy of the Government of the United States. Many persons, firms, and corporations who make or sell merchandise in competition with the respondent, as above alleged, are unwilling to adopt and use said method or any method involving a game of chance or the sale of a chance to win something by chance, or any other method that is contrary to public policy, and such competitors refrain therefrom. The use of said method by respondent has the tendency and capacity, because of said game of chance, to divert trade and custom to respondent from his said competitors who do not use the same or an equivalent method.

PAR. 5. Many dealers in and ultimate purchasers of respondent's merchandise are attracted by respondent's said method and by the element of chance involved in the sale of said merchandise in the manner above described, and are thereby induced to buy and sell or distribute respondent's merchandise in preference to merchandise offered for sale and sold by said competitors of respondent who do not use the same or an equivalent method, and trade is thereby diverted to respondent from his said competitors.

PAR. 6. In the course and conduct of his said business, respondent has caused and causes the representation to be made to his customers and prospective customers, by the use of the words "factory representative," that he is a direct purchaser from or a direct distributor of the manufacturer of the merchandise which he sells and distributes. A substantial portion of the purchasing public have expressed and have a preference for dealing direct with the manufacturer or his representative of products being purchased, such purchasers believing that they secure lower prices, superior quality, and other advantages that are not obtained when they purchase from jobbers or middlemen. The use by respondent of said representation that he is a factory representative has the capacity and tendency to and does mislead and deceive many of respondent's said customers into the erroneous belief that respondent is a direct representative of the manufacturer of the merchandise sold by respondent, and that persons dealing with respondent are buying said merchandise from the direct representative of the manufacturer thereof, thereby eliminating the profits of middlemen and obtaining various advantages that are not obtained by persons purchasing goods from middlemen. The truth and fact is that respondent is not the direct representative of the manufacturer but purchases the merchandise which he sells in the open market from middlemen, jobbers, or wholesale dealers. There are many competitors of respondent who do not falsely represent that they are the representatives of the manufacturer of the merchandise sold by them. The use of said representation by respondent has the tendency and capacity to and does unfairly divert trade to respondent from his said competitors.

PAR. 7. In the course and conduct of his said business, respondent, in the sale of certain rotary clocks, has caused and causes the representation to be made to his customers and prospective customers that said clocks have a retail value of $5.00. A substantial portion of the purchasing public, relying on and believing the said representation, are induced and have been induced to purchase said clocks because of said representation. The use by respondent of said representation has the capacity and tendency to and does mislead and deceive many of respondent's customers into the erroneous belief that said clocks have a retail value of $5.00. The truth and fact is that said clocks do not have a reasonable retail value of $5.00 but said amount is grossly exaggerated and purely fictitious. There are many competitors of respondent who do not falsely represent the value of the merchandise sold by them. The use of said representation by respondent has the tendency and capacity to and does unfairly divert trade to respondent from his said competitors.

PAR. 8. The aforesaid method, acts and practices of respondent are all to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors, as hereinabove alleged. Said method, acts, and practices constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Federal Trade Commission, on June 5, 1937, issued and on June 7, 1937, served its complaint in this proceeding upon respondent, H. E. Wagley, individually and trading as National Sales and Paramount Sales, charging him with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of the provisions of said act. After the issuance of said complaint and the filing of respondent's answer thereto, the Commission, by order entered herein, granted respondent's request for permission to withdraw said answer and to substitute therefor an answer admitting all the material allegations of the complaint to be true and waiving the taking of further evidence and all other intervening procedure, which substitute answer was duly filed in the office of the Commission. Thereafter, this proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on the said complaint and the substitute answer, briefs and oral argument of counsel having been waived; and the Commission, having duly considered the same and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent is an individual with his principal office and place of business located at 508 South Dearborn Street, in the city of Chicago, State of Illinois. Respondent, in carrying on his business, has used the trade names and titles of National Sales and Paramount Sales. Respondent is now, and for some time last past has been, engaged in the sale and distribution of clocks and other articles of merchandise to purchasers thereof located at points in the various States of the United States. He causes and has caused said merchandise when sold to be transported from his principal place of business in Chicago, Ill., to purchasers thereof in the State of Illinois and in other States of the United States at their respective points of location. There is now, and has been for some time last past, a course of trade and commerce by said respondent in such merchandise between and among the various States of the United States. In the course and conduct of said business, respondent is in competition with other individuals and with partnerships and corporations engaged in the manufacture of clocks and other merchandise and in the sale and distribution thereof in commerce between and among the various States of the United States.

PAR. 2. In the sale and distribution of his said merchandise, respondent has furnished devices and plans of merchandising which involve the operation of games of chance, gift enterprises, or lottery schemes, by which said merchandise is distributed to the ultimate consumers wholly by lot or chance. Said devices and plans of merchandising consist of pushcards, the use of which by retail dealers or individuals, in connection with the sale and delivery to the purchasing public of respondent's said merchandise, was and is substantially as follows: The pushcards have a number of partially perforated disks, and when a push is made and the disk is separated from the card a number is disclosed. There are as many separate numbers as there are disks on the card, but the numbers are varied or assorted and are not arranged in numerical sequence. The numbers on said disks are effectively concealed from purchasers and prospective purchasers until a selection has been made and the disk separated from the card. The price of the sales varies, depending upon the number obtained. Numbers from 1 to 29 pay the amount of the number in cents. Numbers over 29 pay 29¢. Directly below each disk there is printed a girl's name, and the card has a space prepared for recording the name of each purchaser of a disk opposite the corresponding girl's name. The card also has a master seal which, when removed, exposes a girl's name corresponding to one of those appearing under said disks. The purchaser who pushed the disk corresponding to the name under the master seal is entitled to a specified article of merchandise. The name under the master seal is effectively concealed from purchasers and prospective purchasers until all sales have been made and the master seal removed. Purchasers who select names other than the name appearing under the master seal do not receive anything for their money other than the privilege of pushing a disk from said card. The said articles of merchandise are of a greater value than the cost of a single push from said card. The fact as to whether a purchaser receives a specified article of merchandise or nothing for his money is thus determined wholly by lot or chance.

PAR. 3. Respondent forwards his pushcards, together with various descriptive literature and with instructions as to how to operate said pushcards or explaining what to do in order to obtain said articles of merchandise, to various members of the public, and a substantial amount of such merchandise is sold or distributed by such persons by means of said pushcards and in accordance with the instructions furnished by respondent. Respondent thus supplies to and places in the hands of others the means of conducting lotteries in the sale of his merchandise in accordance with the sales plan hereinabove set forth.

PAR. 4. The sale of merchandise to the purchasing public in the manner above found involves a game of chance or the sale of a chance to procure articles of merchandise at a price much less than the normal retail price thereof. The use by respondent of said method in the sale of his merchandise, and the sale of his merchandise by and through the use thereof and by the aid of said method, is a practice of the sort which the common law and criminal statutes have long deemed contrary to public policy, and is contrary to an established public policy of the Government of the United States. Many persons, firms, and corporations who make or sell merchandise in competition with the respondent, as above described, are unwilling to adopt and use said method or any method involving a game of chance or the sale of a chance to win something by chance, or any other method that is contrary to public policy, and such competitors refrain therefrom. The use of said method by respondent has the tendency and capacity, because of said game of chance, to divert trade and custom to respondent from his said competitors who do not use the same or an equivalent method.

PAR. 5. Many dealers in and ultimate purchasers of respondent's merchandise are attracted by respondent's said method and by the element of chance involved in the sale of said merchandise in the manner above described, and are thereby induced to buy and sell or distribute respondent's merchandise in preference to merchandise offered for sale and sold by said competitors of respondent who do not use the same or an equivalent method, and trade is thereby diverted to respondent from said competitors.

PAR. 6. In the course and conduct of his said business, respondent has caused and causes the representation to be made to his customers and prospective customers, by the use of the words "factory representative," that he is a direct purchaser from or a direct distributor of the manufacturer of the merchandise which he sells and distributes. A substantial portion of the purchasing public have expressed and have a preference for dealing direct with the manufacturer or his representative of products being purchased, such purchasers believing that they secure lower prices, superior quality, and other advantages that are not obtained when they purchase from jobbers or middlemen. The use by respondent of said representation that he is a factory representative has the capacity and tendency to, and does, mislead and deceive many of respondent's said customers into the erroneous belief that respondent is a direct representative of the manufacturer of the merchandise sold by respondent, and that persons dealing with respondent are buying said merchandise from the direct representative of the manufacturer thereof, thereby eliminating the profits of middlemen and obtaining various advantages that are not obtained by persons purchasing goods from middlemen. The truth and fact is that respondent is not the direct representative of the manufacturer but purchases the merchandise which he sells in the open market from middlemen, jobbers, or wholesale dealers. There are many competitors of respondent who do not falsely represent that they are the representatives of the manufacturer of the merchandise sold by them. The use of said representation by respondent has the tendency and capacity to, and does, unfairly divert trade to respondent from his said competitors.

PAR. 7. In the course and conduct of his said business, respondent, in the sale of certain rotary clocks, has caused and causes the representation to be made to his customers and prospective customers that said clocks have a retail value of $5.00. A substantial portion of the purchasing public, relying on and believing the said representation, are induced and have been induced to purchase said clocks because of said representation. The use by respondent of said representation has the capacity and tendency to, and does, mislead and deceive many of respondent's customers into the erroneous belief that said clocks have a retail value of $5.00. The truth and fact is that said clocks do not have a reasonable retail value of $5.00, but said amount is grossly exaggerated and purely fictitious. There are many competitors of respondent who do not falsely represent the value of the merchandise sold by them. The use of said representation by respondent has the tendency and capacity to, and does, unfairly divert trade to respondent from his said competitors.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondent, H. E. Wagley, individually and trading as National Sales and Paramount Sales, are to the prejudice of the public and respondent's competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

This proceeding having been heard by the Federal Trade Commission upon the complaint of the Commission and the answer of respondent dated July 12, 1937, admitting all of the material allegations of the complaint to be true and waiving the taking of further evidence and all other intervening procedure, and the Commission having made its findings as to the facts and its conclusion that said respondent has violated the provisions of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

Order

It is ordered, That the respondent, H. E. Wagley, individually and trading as National Sales and Paramount Sales and trading under any other name, his agents, representatives and employees, in connection with the offering for sale, sale and distribution of clocks and other merchandise in interstate commerce, do forthwith cease and desist from:

1. Supplying to or placing in the hands of others pushcards or similar devices for the purpose of enabling such persons to dispose of or sell, by the use thereof, clocks or other articles of merchandise.

2. Mailing, shipping or transporting to members of the public pushcards or similar devices so prepared or printed as to enable said persons, by the use thereof, to sell or distribute clocks or other merchandise.

3. Selling or otherwise disposing of clocks or other merchandise by the use of pushcards or similar devices.

4. Representing directly or indirectly that the respondent is a "factory representative" or a direct purchaser from or a direct distributor of the manufacturer of the merchandise which he sells and distributes.

5. Representing or advertising, directly or indirectly, that the rotary clocks which respondent sells and distributes have a retail value or price of $5.00 or any value or price in excess of the actual or usual selling price at which said rotary clocks are sold by retailers to the consuming public, or have a retail value or price in excess of the normal or usual retail value or price of similar articles selling at wholesale for prices comparable to the wholesale price of said rotary clocks.

It is further ordered, That the respondent, H. E. Wagley, individually and trading as National Sales and Paramount Sales, shall, within 30 days after service upon him of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which he has complied with the order to cease and desist hereinabove set forth.

IN THE MATTER OF
W. H. BONIFIELD, TRADING AS CHICOPEE MEDICINE COMPANY

COMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION
OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 26, 1914

Docket 2740. Complaint, Mar. 10, 1936—Decision, Aug. 5, 1937

Where an individual engaged in sale of so-called "Chicopee Native Indian Herbs" medicinal preparation, either direct to members of the purchasing public or through druggists for resale thereto, in substantial competition in interstate commerce with those engaged in sale and distribution, in commerce among the States and in the District of Columbia, of similar medicines or those intended for and adapted to treatment of various bodily ailments for which his said preparation was adapted or recommended—

- (a) Made use of printed coupons or circulars in offer and sale of his said product, and caused said medicine to be placed in cartons, upon which coupons and cartons there were depicted representation of generally accepted idea of an "Indian Medicine Man" preparing concoction over a fire with a wigwam as a background, along with various statements in regard thereto which, together with aforesaid name "Chicopee Native Indian Herbs," used to designate said medicine, represented that such product was composed of native Indian herbs;
- (b) Represented, through many statements on said coupons or circulars, that said medicine was a cure, remedy or competent and adequate treatment for diseases of the kidneys, liver, bowels, or stomach, and for constipation, biliousness, colds, pain in the neck, sick headache, rheumatism, similar complaints, and other ailments and conditions, and that it would give relief therein and would relieve any ailment or abnormal bodily condition, and that it would relieve "pain in the neck, shoulders, side, back, or hips in one day," and la grippe and colds, and certain other specified ailments in the same period of time;
- (c) Represented that it was a wonderful remedy of nature and was effective from the very first dose and did its work surely, safely, and quickly, and brought health and happiness, and was the oldest and most reliable medicine known which would improve health 100%, and that it was a medicine that nature grows and a general tonic, and that it relieved bilious or sick headache, in two hours, and heartburn and palpitation of the heart and other conditions at once; and
- (d) Caused to be printed on aforesaid coupons or circulars "YOUR FUTURE HOROSCOPE FREE! TEN PAGES! BUY A PACKAGE OF CHICOPEE TODAY. AND GET THIS VALUABLE HELP";

Facts being said horoscope was not the individual horoscope of the purchaser, but a mimeographed form printed and distributed in large quantities, medicine in question was not composed of native Indian herbs, nor a cure, remedy, or competent and adequate treatment for diseases of the kidneys, liver, etc., as above set forth, statements that such medicine would relieve such diseases and conditions as above were not warranted, and were inaccurate and misleading, it was not a wonderful remedy of nature, and aforesaid statements and representations in other respects were misleading in that they were inaccurate, exaggerated or entirely erroneous;

With tendency and capacity to confuse, mislead and deceive members of the public into erroneous belief that its said medicine was composed of native Indian herbs, and was a cure, remedy, or competent and adequate treatment for aforesaid various diseases and conditions, and that it would relieve the same as above set forth, and that it was a wonderful remedy of nature, effective from the very first dose, and that the aforesaid various other statements and representations as to nature, working, history, and effects thereof were true, and that such horoscope was the individual one of the person to whom furnished, and to induce members of the public to purchase his said medicine because of erroneous beliefs thus engendered, and to divert trade to him from competitors engaged as above set forth in sale of medicines of same general kind, etc., and with effect of diverting business to him from competitors who do not misrepresent therapeutic value of medicines sold by them or other facts in addition to and in connection therewith, but truthfully and accurately state therapeutic effects thereof, as well as other facts and matters connected therewith; to their substantial injury and prejudice:

Held, That such acts and practices were to the prejudice of the public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition.

Mr. Harry D. Michael for the Commission.

Mr. Justin C. Burns, of Columbus, Ohio, for respondent.

COMPLAINT

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent W. H. Bonifield is an individual doing business under the trade name and style of Chicopee Medicine Company with his principal office and place of business in Warren, Ind. Respondent is now and for several years last past has been engaged in the sale and distribution of a product called "Chicopee Native Indian Herbs" to members of the public, either directly to the purchasing public or indirectly through druggists. Said respondent in the course and conduct of his business ships or causes to be shipped or transported, his products, when sold by him from the State of

25 F. T. C.

Indiana or the State of origin of the shipment to the purchasers thereof located at points in various States of the United States other than in the State of Indiana or in the State of origin of the shipment. There is now and has been during all the times hereinbefore mentioned a constant current of trade in commerce in the product sold by the respondent between and among various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of his business respondent is now, and has been during all the times hereinabove mentioned, engaged in substantial competition with various other individuals, firms, and corporations selling or offering for sale medicines to members of the general public in the manner set out in paragraph 1 hereof in commerce among and between the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 3. In the course and conduct of his business, in soliciting the sale of and in selling the said "Chicopee Native Indian Herbs" respondent makes use of and has made use of certain printed coupons or circulars which respondent causes to be transported from his place of business in Indiana to points in various other States of the United States where said medicine is offered for sale and where said coupons or circulars are distributed to and among the purchasing public. Respondent causes said medicine to be placed in cartons in which it is displayed for sale and sold to the public. Said coupons or circulars and the said cartons have printed thereon for the sole purpose of conveying the idea that said product is composed of Native Indian Herbs a pictorial representation of the generally accepted idea of an "Indian Medicine Man" preparing a concoction over a fire with the background of a wigwam; in addition to various statements and representations as to the contents of said medicine and its therapeutic value or effect. Many of said representations and statements are misleading and deceptive in that they do not truthfully and accurately state all the contents of said medicine, nor do they truthfully and accurately state the therapeutic value thereof or greatly exaggerate the same. Among such statements and representations on said coupons or circulars are the following:

Chicopee Indian Herbs for kidneys, liver, bowels, stomach and run down condition—a real Indian tonic.

Relieves constipation, piles, billousness, La Grippe and colds in one day.

Relieves weakness and tired out feeling, bladder and kidney trouble.

Relieves pain in the neck, shoulders, side, back or hips in one day.

Relieves billous or sick headache in two hours; heartburn and palpitation of heart at once; sick stomach, belching, gas on stomach at once.

Relieves lumbago and rheumatism, giving relief from pain; all female complaint.

Do you get up in the morning feeling worse than when you went to bed? Blue? Look on the dark side of everything? Worry about trifles? Tired? Lazy? Mouth taste bad? Take "Chicopee Indian Herbs" and see how quickly you will lose all those unpleasant symptoms.

This wonderful remedy of nature starts with the very first dose and does its work surely, safely and quickly.

THE MEDICINE THAT NATURE GROWS. Chicopee Native Indian Herbs is a medicine gathered from nature's fields, and is a combination of roots, herbs, barks, berries and flowers. They have brought health and happiness to thousands.

THE OLDEST AND MOST RELIABLE MEDICINE KNOWN. Will improve your health 100% in a few weeks time.

Among such statements and representations on said cartons containing the medicine are the following:

Acts as a * * * tonic. *

For Acid stomach, Biliousness * * *

* * * Rheumatic Pains and Aches.

In truth and in fact said medicine is not a remedy for the ailments set forth in the above quotations from respondent's coupons or circulars and cartons nor does its therapeutic value warrant statements or representations "that it will give relief in such ailments." "Chicopee Native Indian Herbs" is not a wonderful remedy of nature, "that starts with the very first dose and does its work surely, safely and quickly;" "Chicopee Native Indian Herbs" is more than a combination of roots, herbs, barks, berries, and flowers in that it also contains drugs; "Chicopee Native Indian Herbs" is not the oldest and most reliable medicine known; will not improve your health 100 percent in a few weeks' time. It is not "the medicine that nature grows"; and it has no value as a tonic. The herbs, barks, berries, and flowers in Chicopee Native Indian Herbs are not "Native Indian Herbs."

PAR. 4. In the course and conduct of his business and in the manner described in paragraph 3 hereof, respondent caused to be printed on said coupons and circulars referred to in paragraph 3 hereof, the following false and misleading representation:

YOUR FUTURE HOROSCOPE FREE! TEN PAGES! BUY A PACKAGE OF CHICOPEE TODAY. AND GET THIS VALUABLE HELP

In truth and in fact the "horoscope" offered by respondent is not the individual horoscope of the purchaser, but a mimeographed form that is printed and distributed in large quantities.

PAR. 5. The above and foregoing representations as to therapeutic value and effects of his medicine and as to the contents thereof, as set forth in paragraph 3 hereof, and the representations as to the "horoscope" offered to purchasers of said medicine, as set forth in paragraph 4 hereof, in the course of his advertising, offering for sale and selling his medicine in commerce as aforesaid, have the capacity and tendency to mislead and deceive, and have misled and deceived, a substantial portion of the purchasing public into the erroneous belief that said medicine has general curative properties in restoring health without regard to the particular ailment; that it is a remedy for the diseases and ailments set out in said statements and representations quoted in paragraph 3 or that its use will give relief in such cases; that said medicine is composed only of herbs, barks, flowers, and roots, and that said roots are "Native Indian"; that said "horoscope" offered by the respondent to purchasers of his medicine is the individual "horoscope" of the purchaser; and thereby induce the said purchasing public to purchase a substantial quantity of the product of the respondent in reliance upon such erroneous beliefs. Thereby trade is diverted to the respondent from other competitors who do not make such representations and thereby substantial injury is done by the respondent to substantial competition in commerce as aforesaid.

Findings

There are dealers and distributors of products similar in kind who sell and offer for sale their products and who do not in any way misrepresent the therapeutic value or curative properties of their product. There are dealers and distributors of products that are proper and have curative properties for the ailments set forth in paragraph 3 hereof, who do not in any way misrepresent their products.

PAR. 6. The above acts and things done or caused to be done by the respondent were and are each and all to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors and constitute unfair methods of competition in interstate commerce within the meaning and intent of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914.

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission on March 10, 1936, issued and served its complaint in this proceeding upon respondent, W. H. Bonifield, trading as Chicopee Medicine Company, charging him with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of the provisions of said act. After the issuance of said complaint, and the filing of respondent's answer, the Commission, by order entered herein, granted respondent's motion for permission to withdraw said answer and to substitute therefor an answer admitting all the material allegations of the complaint to be true and waiving hearing on the charges set forth in said complaint, which substitute answer was duly filed in the office of the Commission. Prior to the filing of said substitute answer, said respondent had appeared at a hearing set for the taking of testimony and other evidence in said case, and had entered upon the record of such hearing his consent that the Commission, without further intervening procedure, might find the facts and issue its order to cease and desist based on the material allegations of the complaint. Thereafter, this proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on the said complaint, the substitute answer and respondent's agreement entered of record, briefs and oral argument of counsel having been waived, and the Commission having duly considered the same and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent, W. H. Bonifield, is an individual doing business under the trade name and style of Chicopee Medicine Company, with his principal office and place of business in the town of Warren in the State of Indiana. Respondent was for several years prior to the issuance of the complaint herein engaged in the sale and distribution in commerce between and among the various States of the United States of a certain medicinal preparation known and described as "Chicopee Native Indian Herbs." Respondent's method of business was to sell said preparation either directly to members of the purchasing public or through druggists through whom it was sold to members of the public. Respondent, in the course and conduct of his said business, caused his said medicine, when sold by him, to be transported in commerce from his said place of business in Indiana, or the State of origin of the shipment thereof, to, into and through States of the United States other than Indiana, or other State of origin of shipment, to the purchasers thereof in such other States to whom it had been sold.

PAR. 2. During the time respondent conducted his said business, as aforesaid, other individuals, firms, and corporations in various States of the United States were engaged in the sale and distribution, in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia, of medicines of the same kind or similar to that sold by respondent, or intended for and adapted to the treatment of various bodily ailments for which respondent's said medicine is adapted, or for which it is recommended by respondent, as herein set out. Such other individuals, firms, and corporations have caused and do now cause their said medicines, when sold by them, to be transported from the various States of the United States where they are located, to, into and through States other than the State of origin of the shipment thereof to the purchasers of the same in such other States. Said respondent was, during the time of the conduct of his business, as aforesaid, in substantial competition in interstate commerce in the sale of his said medicine with such other individuals, firms, and corporations.

PAR. 3. In the course and conduct of his business, respondent, in soliciting the sale of and in selling the said "Chicopee Native Indian Herbs," made use of certain printed coupons or circulars which he caused to be transported from his place of business in Indiana to points in various other States of the United States where said medicine was offered for sale and where said coupons or circulars were distributed to and among the purchasing public. Respondent caused said medicine to be placed in cartons in which it was displayed for sale and sold to the public. Said coupons or circulars and the said cartons had printed thereon a pictorial representation of the generally accepted idea of an "Indian Medicine Man" preparing a concoction over a fire with a wigwam as a background, together with various statements and representations in regard thereto, all of which, together with the name used to designate said medicine, represented that said medicine was composed of native Indian herbs. Respondent also made many statements on said coupons or circulars which were misleading in that they did not accurately state the therapeutic effects of said medicine, but greatly exaggerated the same, or represented it as having therapeutic effects which it did not in fact have, or otherwise misrepresented the same. Among such statements on said coupons or circulars were the following:

Chicopee Indian Herbs for kidneys, liver, bowels, stomach and run down condition—a real Indian tonic.

Relieves constipation, piles, billousness, La Grippe and colds in one day.

Relieves weakness and tired out feeling, bladder and kidney trouble.

Relieves pain in the neck, shoulders, side, back or hips in one day.

Relieves bilious or sick headache in two hours; heartburn and palpitation of heart at once; sick stomach, belching, gas on stomach at once.

Relieves lumbago and rheumatism, giving relief from pain; all female complaint.

Do you get up in the morning feeling worse than when you went to bed? Blue? Look on the dark side of everything? Worry about trifles? Tired? Lazy? Mouth taste bad? * * * Take Chicopee Indian Herbs * * * and see how quickly you will lose all those unpleasant symptoms.

This wonderful remedy of nature starts with the very first dose and does its work surely, safely and quickly * * *

THE MEDICINE THAT NATURE GROWS. Chicopee Native Indian Herbs is a medicine gathered from nature's forests and fields, a combination of roots, herbs, barks, berries and flowers, * * *

They have brought health and happiness to thousands.

THE OLDEST AND MOST RELIABLE MEDICINE KNOWN. Will improve your health 100% in a few weeks' time.

Among such statements and representations on said cartons containing the medicine, were the following:

Acts as a * * * tonic

For Acid stomach, Biliousness * * * Rheumatic Pains and Aches.

In truth and in fact said medicine is not composed of native Indian herbs. It is not a cure, remedy or competent and adequate treatment for diseases of the kidneys, liver, bowels, and stomach or for run-down condition, constipation, piles, biliousness, la grippe, colds, weakness, tired-out feeling, bladder trouble, kidney trouble, pain in the neck, pain in the shoulders, pain in the side, pain in the back, pain in the hips, bilious headache, sick headache, palpitation of the heart, lumbago, rheumatism, or female complaints. General statements that said medicine will relieve such diseases and conditions, as above stated, are not warranted, and are inaccurate and misleading. Neither is it true or correct to say that said medicine is a wonderful remedy of nature; that it is effective from the very first dose, that it does its work surely, safely and quickly; that it is composed wholly of roots, herbs, barks, berries, and flowers; that it brings health and happiness; that it is the oldest and most reliable medicine known; that it will improve health 100%; that it is the medicine that nature grows; that it is a tonic in a general sense; or that it will cure, remedy or relieve any ailment at once or in any stated time. Such representations are misleading in that they are inaccurate, exaggerated or entirely erroneous.

PAR. 4. In the course and conduct of his business, as aforesaid, respondent caused to be printed on said coupons or circulars previously referred to, the following misleading representation:

YOUR FUTURE HOROSCOPE FREE! TEN PAGES! BUY A PACKAGE OF CHICOPEE TODAY. AND GET THIS VALUABLE HELP

In truth and in fact the "horoscope" offered by respondent was not the individual horoscope of the purchaser, but a mimeographed form that was printed and distributed in large quantities.

PAR. 5. The representations of respondent, as aforesaid, have had the tendency and capacity to confuse, mislead and deceive members of the public into the belief that respondent's said medicine is composed of native Indian herbs; that it is a cure, remedy or competent and adequate treatment for diseases of the kidneys, liver, bowels, and stomach, and also for run-down condition, constipation, piles, biliousness, la grippe, colds, weakness, tired-out feeling, bladder trouble, kidney trouble, pain in the neck, pain in shoulders, pain in the side, pain in the back, pain in the hips, bilious headache, sick headache, palpitation of the heart, lumbago, rheumatism, and female complaints; and that it will relieve such diseases and conditions as above stated; when, in truth and in fact, such are not the facts. Such representations further had the tendency and capacity to confuse, mislead and deceive members of the public into the belief that said medicine is a wonderful remedy of nature; that it is effective from the very first dose; that it does its work surely, safely and quickly; that it is composed wholly of roots, herbs, barks, berries and flowers; that it brings health and happiness; that it is the oldest and most reliable medicine known; that it will improve health 100%; that it is the medicine that nature grows; that it is a general tonic; that it will cure, remedy or relieve bodily ailments at once or in a specified time; and that the horoscope offered, as aforesaid, was the individual horoscope of the person to whom it was furnished; when, in truth and in fact, such were not and are not the facts. Said representations of respondent had the tendency and capacity to induce members of the public to purchase respondent's said medicine because of the erroneous beliefs engendered, as above set forth, and to divert trade to respondent from competitors engaged in the sale, in interstate commerce, of medicines of the same general kind as that sold by respondent, as well as those so engaged in such sale of medicines adapted to and used for the treatment of the various ailments and conditions for which respondent's said medicine is adapted or for which he recommends his said medicine as aforesaid. There were and are, among the competitors of respondent, those who do not misrepresent the therapeutic properties and effects of the medicines sold by them or other facts and conditions in connection therewith, but who truthfully and accurately state the therapeutic effects of the same as well as other facts and matters connected therewith. Respondent's said acts and practices tended to and did in fact divert business to respondent from his said competitors, to the substantial injury and prejudice of such competitors.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondent, W. H. Bonifield, trading as Chicopee Medicine Company, are to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce, within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

This proceeding having been heard by the Federal Trade Commission upon the complaint of the Commission and the answer filed herein by the respondent, dated May 12, 1937, admitting all the material allegations of the complaint to be true and waiving hearing on the charges set forth in said complaint, and also on said respondent's consent, entered of record, that the Commission, without further intervening procedure, might find the facts and issue its order to cease and desist based on the material allegations of the complaint; and the Commission having made its findings as to the facts and its conclusion that said respondent has violated the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

It is ordered, That the respondent, W. H. Bonifield, trading as Chicopee Medicine Company, or trading under any other trade name or under his own name, his representatives, agents, and employees, in connection with the offering for sale, sale and distribution of "Chicopee Native Indian Herbs," or of a medicine of the same or substantially the same formula under any other name, in interstate commerce or in the District of Columbia, do forthwith cease and desist from representing:

1. That said medicine is composed of native Indian herbs, or that it is composed entirely of herbs or other vegetable products.
2. That it is a cure, remedy, or competent and adequate treatment for diseases of the kidneys, liver, bowels, or stomach; or for constipation, piles, biliousness, la grippe, colds, weakness, run-down condition, tired-out feeling, bladder trouble, kidney trouble, pain in the neck, pain in the shoulders, pain in the side, pain in the back, pain in the hips, bilious headache, sick headache, palpitation of the heart, lumbago, rheumatism; or for female complaints or diseases; or that it will give relief in said diseases and conditions above named; or that it will relieve any ailment or abnormal bodily condition in one day or in any definite time.

3. That it is a wonderful remedy of nature; or that it is effective from the very first dose; or that it does its work surely, safely, and quickly; or that it brings health and happiness; or that it is the oldest and most reliable medicine known; or that it will improve health 100 percent; or that it is a medicine that nature grows; or that it is a general tonic; or that it will relieve any ailment at once.

4. That printed horoscopes, made out in advance in large numbers, are the individual horoscopes of persons to whom they are sent.

It is further ordered, That the respondent shall, within 60 days after service upon him of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing, setting forth in detail the manner and form in which he has complied with this order.

 COMPANY

COMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION
 OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 26, 1914

Docket 3110. Complaint, Apr. 23, 1937—Decision, Aug. 6, 1937

Where a corporation engaged in sale and distribution, to retailers and direct to consuming public, of its "VE-PO-AD," so-called vest-pocket type of adding machine, in substantial competition with others engaged in manufacture, sale, and distribution of like and similar products in commerce and in the District of Columbia; in advertising its said product through newspaper and magazine advertising and other trade literature—

- (a) Made such statements as "If there is a Ve-Po-Ad on every desk, no one ever need worry about using the big machine and Ve-Po-Ad is every bit as fast and as capable as any adding machine you ever saw," and "Store-keepers cannot always afford a large adding machine. Ve-Po-Ad will take its place," and "Does exactly the same work as that done by big, expensive machine," etc., facts being such representations were deceptive and misleading in that said machine would not do the work of making permanent records or giving sub-totals as would certain types of much more costly or substantially more costly machines, and its said product did not possess many of the features of the more expensive adding machines, such as permanent records, sub-totals, or release features for correction of errors, and would not, therefore, accomplish certain of the work done by the more costly products, and also was not, in respect to certain features such as permanent records, sub-totals and release features, the equal of such more costly machines in performance or any other characteristic;
- (b) Misrepresented its business status through use of words "Manufactured by Reliable Typewriter and Adding Machine Company" upon its finished product, facts being it did not manufacture same, but said machine actually was made by others for it; and
- (c) Misrepresented, in advertisements and sales literature, wholesale price of its said machine, which it, in fact, had sold in wholesale quantities for sum substantially less than usual purported wholesale price thereof;
- With effect of misleading customers and prospective customers into erroneous and mistaken belief that said product would take place of, or do same work as, large and expensive adding machine, and that it was the equal of products having such features as permanent records, sub-totals, and release features, and that it was the manufacturer thereof, and that its purported wholesale price was the actual and true price, and of inducing substantial numbers of retailers, as well as consumer-purchasers of said product, to buy the same on account of aforesaid erroneous and mistaken beliefs, and of unfairly diverting trade to it from competitors engaged in similar businesses, who do not misrepresent the character and nature of their respective products or their business status; to the substantial injury of competitors in commerce:

Held, That such acts and practices were to the prejudice of the public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition.

Mr. S. Brogdyne Teu II, for the Commission.

Wetten, Pegler & Dale, of Chicago, Ill., for respondent.

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission having reason to believe that Reliable Typewriter and Adding Machine Company, a corporation, hereafter referred to as respondent, has been and is now using unfair methods of competition in commerce as "commerce" is defined in said act, and it appearing to said Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent, Reliable Typewriter and Adding Machine Company, is a corporation organized and doing business under the laws of the State of Illinois, having its principal place of business at 303 W. Monroe Street, in the city of Chicago, State of Illinois. It is now, and for more than one year last past has been, engaged in the sale and distribution of adding machines, typewriters, and other business machines in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 2. When said products are sold, respondent transports or causes the same to be transported from its principal place of business in the State of Illinois to purchasers thereof located in States of the United States other than the State of Illinois and in the District of Columbia. There is now, and has been for more than one year last past, a constant current of trade and commerce in said products so sold and distributed by respondent between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 3. Respondent is now, and has been for more than one year last past, engaged in substantial competition with other individuals, partnerships, firms and corporations engaged in the manufacture and in the sale and distribution of adding machines, typewriters, and other business machines in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 4. In the course and conduct of its business, the respondent has caused and still causes to be inserted in newspapers and magazines having a general interstate circulation and in its other advertising literature statements purporting to be descriptive of its products. The following is representative of such statements appearing in advertisements inserted by respondent in newspapers and magazines and in the advertising literature published and distributed by respondents:

Just look at the number of people right in your own locality and neighboring communities who need just this kind of a handy machine. Store-keepers, housewives, doctors, dentists, every office, every place where business is transacted
* * *

Think of a small adding machine that adds with the accuracy of a machine costing $100.00 to $300.00 * * * .

If there is a Ve-Po-Ad on every desk, no one ever need worry about using the big machine and Ve-Po-Ad is every bit as fast and as capable as any adding machine you ever saw.

Store-keepers cannot always afford a large adding machine. Ve-Po-Ad will take its place.

Does exactly the same work as that done by big, expensive machine. And you can depend upon its accuracy—every time!

It's so simple to operate—anybody can master it in a jiffy. Pick out your figures as you would on any adding machine, glide into position and zip!—there's the sum total as sure and accurate as a bank statement.

PAR. 5. Through use of the foregoing statements and others similar thereto, the respondent represents that said adding machine is comparable to and equivalent to adding machines costing greatly in excess of or substantially more than respondent's and will always accomplish the same work as done by such other machines with equal speed and accuracy; that there is a substantial demand among storekeepers, housewives, doctors, dentists, and offices generally for respondent's machine; and that everyone can easily learn how to accurately operate said machine.

PAR. 6. In truth and in fact, the respondent's machine will not do the work of adding machines costing greatly in excess or substantially more than respondent's. It will not accomplish the same work as done by machines costing greatly in excess of or substantially more than respondent's with equal speed and accuracy. There is not a substantial demand among storekeepers, housewives, doctors, dentists, and offices generally for the respondent's machine. Not all persons can easily learn how to operate said machine. Respondent's machine does not possess many of the features of more expensive adding machines; such as, permanent records, totals, subtotals, or release features for the correction of errors, and is therefore not to be considered the equal of such machines in performance or any other characteristic.

PAR. 7. In the course and conduct of its business as described in paragraph 1 hereof, respondent represents by use of the words "Manufactured by Reliable Typewriter and Adding Machine Company" and in its advertisements, sales literature and upon its finished product, that it is a manufacturer of the products which it sells.

In truth and in fact, the respondent does not own, operate, or directly control a manufacturing establishment wherein it manufactures the products sold and distributed by it in any manner or form whatsoever. In fact, the respondent has the Ve-Po-Ad manufactured by an independent manufacturing establishment.

PAR. 8. In the course and conduct of its business, respondent through its advertisements and sales literature, represents that the wholesale price of the Ve-Po-Ad is $1.95 per unit.

In truth and in fact, $1.95 is not the wholesale price of the Ve-Po-Ad. Said machine is generally sold in wholesale quantities for sums substantially lower than $1.95 per unit. The respondent has on numerous and divers occasions quoted a wholesale price lower than the amount of $1.95.

PAR. 9. For many years a substantial part of the consuming public has expressed and has had a marked preference for products sold and distributed to the public by the manufacturer of the same. A substantial part of the consuming public is aware of the prevailing economies that are reflected in the price to the ultimate consumer when as many middle men's profits as is possible are eliminated. The public generally understands how these economies are brought about. It places confidence in the manufacturers of such products and as a result of such knowledge, purchases a substantial volume of merchandise in reliance upon this aforesaid practice.

PAR. 10. The above statements made by the respondent in its advertising literature and advertisements and upon its finished products have the capacity and tendency to and do mislead customers and prospective customers into the erroneous and mistaken beliefs that the product of the respondents will take the place of the large and expensive adding machine; that it is accurate; that the operation of same is easy to master; that it is simple to operate; and that anybody can operate it; that the sum total of the machine's work is accurate; that the respondent is a manufacturer of said product; that there is a great demand for said product among storekeepers, housewives, doctors, dentists, and office workers; and that the wholesale price of the respondent's product is $1.95; and into the purchase of respondent's product on account of such beliefs.

PAR. 11. As a result of the use of the aforesaid advertising and the claims made therein, trade has been unfairly diverted to the respondent from its competitors who sell and distribute adding machines, typewriters, and other business machines to the buying public and who truthfully represent, advertise and sell their products, who correctly represent the wholesale price of their products and who further truthfully represent to the purchasing public their business status.

PAR. 12. The above acts and practices of the respondent are all to the prejudice of the public and the respondent's competitors and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce with the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, on April 26, 1937 issued and served its complaint in this proceeding upon respondent, Reliable Typewriter and Adding Machine Company, a corporation, charging it with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of the provisions of said act. After the issuance of said complaint and the filing of respondent's answer thereto, a stipulation as to the facts was entered into between Richard P. Whiteley, Acting Chief Counsel of the Commission, and Wetten, Pegler & Dale, counsel for respondent. Said stipulation was thereafter approved by the Commission and duly recorded and filed in the office of the Commission.

Thereafter the proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on the said complaint and answer thereto and the stipulation as to the facts (the filing of briefs having been waived); and the Commission having duly considered the same and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent, Reliable Typewriter and Adding Machine Company, is a corporation with its principal place of business at 303 West Monroe Street, in the city of Chicago, State of Illinois.

PAR. 2. The respondent is now, and has been for more than one year last past, engaged in the business of selling and distributing a small so-called vest pocket type of adding machine, under the trade name of VE-PO-AD, to retailers and direct to the consuming public.

PAR. 3. In the sale of said product respondent has transported or caused the same to be transported from its principal place of business in the State of Illinois to purchasers thereof located in the States of the United States other than the State from which shipment originated and in the District of Columbia.

There has been for more than one year last past, and still is, a constant current of trade and commerce in said product so sold and distributed by respondent between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 4. For more than one year last past the respondent has been engaged in substantial competition with other individuals, and with partnerships, firms, and corporations engaged in the manufacture, sale, and distribution of like and similar products and in the sale thereof in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 5. In the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid respondent, in soliciting the sale, and in the selling, of its product, and for the purpose of creating a demand on the part of the consuming public for said product, causes, and for more than one year last past has caused, its product to be advertised through the media of newspaper and magazine advertisements and other advertising literature. In said ways and by said means respondent has made to the general public false and misleading statements with reference to the commodity offered for sale by it.

PAR. 6. The following statements are representative of the statements and claims made by respondent in its advertisements and advertising literature:

Just look at the number of people right in your own locality and neighboring communities who need just this kind of a handy machine. Store-keepers, housewives, doctors, dentists, every office, every place where business is transacted * * *.

Think of a small adding machine that adds with the accuracy of a machine costing $100.00 to $300.00 * * *.

If there is a Ve-Po-Ad on every desk, no one ever need worry about using the big machine and Ve-Po-Ad is every bit as fast and as capable as any adding machine you ever saw.

Store-keepers cannot always afford a large adding machine. Ve-Po-Ad will take its place.

Does exactly the same work as that done by big, expensive machine. And you can depend upon its accuracy—every time!

It's so simple to operate—anybody can master it in a jiffy. Pick out your figures as you would on any adding machine, glide into position and zip!—there's the sum total as sure and accurate as a bank statement.

PAR. 7. The statements and representations made by respondent with respect to the commodity described in the above quoted excerpts from advertisements and sold by it were, and are, deceptive and misleading in the following respects:

The respondent's machine will not do the work of making permanent records or giving subtotals as will certain types of adding machines costing greatly in excess of or substantially more than respondent's.

The respondent's machine does not possess many of the features of more expensive adding machines such as permanent records, subtotals, or release features for the correction of errors, and therefore will not accomplish certain of the work done by adding machines costing greatly in excess of or more than respondent's, and is not in respect to certain features such as permanent records, subtotals, and release features to be considered the equal of such machines in performance or any other characteristic.

PAR. 8. In the course and conduct of its business the respondent has misrepresented its business status by the use of the words "Manufactured by Reliable Typewriter and Adding Machine Company" upon its finished product. The respondent does not manufacture the machine sold by it, said machine actually being manufactured by others for the respondent.

PAR. 9. The respondent in the course and conduct of its business has, through its advertisements and sales literature, misrepresented the wholesale price of the VE-PO-AD machine. In fact, the respondent has sold the VE-PO-AD machine in wholesale quantities for a sum substantially lower than the usual purported wholesale price of the machine.

PAR. 10. For many years a substantial part of the consuming public has had, and has so expressed, a marked preference for the products sold and distributed to the public by the manufacturer of the same. A substantial part of the consuming public is aware of the prevailing economies that are reflected in the price to the ultimate consumer when as many middlemen's profits as possible are eliminated. The public generally understands how these economies are brought about and places its confidence in the manufacturer of said products, and as a result of such knowledge purchases a substantial volume of merchandise in reliance upon this aforesaid practice.

PAR. 11. The statements made by respondent in its advertising literature and advertisements, and upon its finished product known as the VE-PO-AD, have the capacity and tendency to and do mislead customers and prospective customers into the erroneous and mistaken belief that the product of the respondent will take the place of, or do the same work as, a large and expensive adding machine; that the product of respondent is the equal of machines having such features as permanent records, subtotals, and release features; that the respondent is the manufacturer of said product; that the purported wholesale price of respondent's product is the actual and true wholesale price.

PAR. 12. The foregoing false and misleading statements and representations have induced and still induce a substantial number of retailers as well as consumer purchasers of said product to buy the product offered for sale, sold, and distributed by the respondent on account of the aforesaid erroneous and mistaken beliefs.

PAR. 13. As a result thereof trade has been unfairly diverted to respondent from those competitors of respondent engaged in similar businesses who do not misrepresent the character and nature of their respective products or their business status. As a consequence thereof substantial injury has been and is being done by respondent to competition in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

CONCLUSION

The aforementioned acts and practices of the respondent, Reliable Typewriter and Adding Machine Company, are to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

This proceeding having been heard by the Federal Trade Commission upon the complaint of the Commission, the answer of respondent, and the stipulation as to the facts entered into between Richard P. Whiteley, Acting Chief Counsel of the Commission, and Wetten, Pegler & Dale, counsel for respondent, and the Commission having made its findings as to the facts and its conclusion that said respondent has violated the provisions of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes",

It is ordered, That the respondent, Reliable Typewriter and Adding Machine Company, a corporation, its representatives, agents, and employes, in connection with the offering for sale, sale, and distribution of a small size vest pocket adding machine now known as the Ve-Po-Ad Adding Machine in commerce among and between the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia, do forthwith cease and desist from representing, directly or indirectly, through advertisements, price lists, circulars, labels, containers, or any other form of printed matter, or by radio broadcasting, or in any other manner:

713

(1) That its said adding machines will do the same work as adding machines possessing features which its machines do not possess; (2) that said adding machines possess many features of more expensive adding machines, such as permanent records, subtotals, or release features for correction of errors, or are to be considered the equal of machines having such features; (3) that it is a manufacturer of adding machines; (4) that the wholesale price of its adding machines is other than the true wholesale price at which said machines are sold in the regular course of trade.

It is further ordered, That the respondent shall, within 60 days after service upon it of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which it has complied with this order.

IN THE MATTER OF

J. K. LEVY, ALIAS J. K. LEE, AND DAVID LEVY, CO-PARTNERS, TRADING AS LEVORE COMPANY, AND J. K. LEVY, ALIAS J. K. LEE, INDIVIDUALLY

COMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 28, 1914

Docket 2607. Complaint, Oct. 31, 1935—Decision, Aug. 9, 1937

Where certain individuals engaged in sale and distribution of radio receiving sets, fountain pen and pencil sets, cocktail sets, cameras, and similar commodities, directly to purchasers and through sales distributors or agents for resale direct to consumers on time payments, and also for resale under their so-called "give away" plan, in competition with those engaged in sale and distribution of such products in commerce among the various States—

- (a) Sold, under latter plan, to their distributor-agents, their aforesaid so-called premium goods, together with push cards or punch boards termed "sales booklets," for disposition to sub-agents and distribution to consuming public under a plan by which final purchasers or customers selected from card one of a number of feminine names displayed thereon and paid for chance, subject to certain limitations, in accordance with number and name selected and punched, and received article being disposed of, or nothing other than privilege of making selection, for money paid, in accordance with his success or failure in selecting name corresponding to that concealed on card, as revealed after sale of all chances thereon, and under which plan, and after which time, distributor agent or sub-agent was likewise entitled to a radio or some other article of so-called "free" merchandise, and thereby supplied to and placed in the hands of others the means of conducting lotteries in the sale of their said products as a means of inducing purchase thereof in preference to similar articles offered and sold by competitors, and in competition with many who are unwilling to adopt and use such methods of sale, or any method involving scheme of chance, as contrary to public policy and good morals, not in accordance with business ethics, a detriment to legitimate business, and as gambling;
- (b) Represented to prospective distributor-agents that they could make big money "giving away these wonderful radios," and described their said plan as the "give away" plan, and referred, as above set forth, to the premiums or articles secured by the holder of the winning name and the distributor-agent or sub-agent as "free" merchandise, facts being those receiving same through such selection paid therefor amount determined, as indicated, wholly by lot or chance, and they did not give away any merchandise, but sold same and received value therefor; and
- (c) Represented themselves as manufacturers, through use of words "Successors to Beco Mfg. Company," placed upon their advertisements and advertising matter distributed in interstate commerce, facts being, notwithstanding their ownership of stock of licensed radio manufacturing concern and their building of coils and assembling of radios, they did not and had not themselves made any such products;

With result that many purchasers of such products, attracted by element of chance involved in their aforesaid sales methods, were thereby induced to buy same in preference to those of competitors who do not use same or equivalent methods, and with tendency and capacity unfairly, and because of element of chance, to divert to them trade and custom from their said competitors who do not use such or equivalent method, and exclude all competitors who are unwilling to and do not do so, and with further tendency and capacity, through aforesaid manufacturing misrepresentations, to divert trade from and otherwise injure their competitors substantially in commerce:

Held, That such acts and practices were to the prejudice of the public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition.

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that J. K. Levy, alias J. K. Lee, and David Levy, copartners, trading as Levore Company, and J. K. Levy, alias J. K. Lee, individually, hereinafter referred to as respondents, have been and now are using unfair methods of competition in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in said act, and it appearing to the Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, states its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. The respondent, Levore Company, is a partnership composed of J. K. Levy, alias J. K. Lee, and David Levy, and the principal place of business of said partnership is located at 130 North Wells Street in the city of Chicago, State of Illinois. Said respondent J. K. Levy, alias J. K. Lee, is an individual, with his principal place of business at 130 North Wells Street in the city of Chicago, State of Illinois. Said respondents are now and for several years last past have been engaged in the sale and distribution of radio receiving sets, fountain pen and pencil sets, cocktail sets, cameras, and similar commodities directly to purchasers, and also through sales distributors or agents located at points in the various States of the United States other than the State of Illinois, and cause said products, when so sold, to be transported from their principal place of business in the city of Chicago, State of Illinois, into and through other States of the United States to purchasers at their respective points of location. In the course and conduct of their business as aforesaid, respondents are now and have been in competition with other individuals, partnerships, and corporations engaged in the sale and distribution of radio receiving sets, fountain pen and pencil sets, cocktail sets, cameras, and other similar commodities, in commerce between and among the various States of the United States.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of their business as aforesaid, respondents pursued the following methods and practices:

(a) Advertised in periodicals having a wide interstate circulation, and by means of circulars and form letters, the following and other similar matters:

GIVE RADIOS AWAY and earn up to $100.00 a week. New money making plan for agents, salesmen, district managers. No experience, Profits Start Immediately.

BEST RADIO—Amazing little 7 lb. portable AC & DC radio for home, office, auto, farm, etc. Wonderful tone. Gets police calls. $30 value. Licensed by R. C. A. and associated companies. Write at once. We will show you how to make BIG MONEY giving away these wonderful radios * * *

PLAN NO. 1

This "give away" plan is one which involves the distribution of high quality merchandise, many articles known through national advertising. It is a plan that has proved to be very popular with Levore dealers. You will see a picture of a Levore Sales Card on the back of this letter. On this card are printed 120 names of girls. As a distributor, you will employ agents to dispose of these cards. For their efforts in disposing of this card, you will give each agent one of the gifts of his or her choice. The person selecting the same name which appears under the seal also receives a gift * * *

To be more specific, the Best Radios, both Standard and Dual-Wave Models, the Log Cabin Radio and the Dohrmeyer Electric Mixer and Wahl Eversharp Pencils are used in connection with the R-120 Sales Card. Your agent receives their choice of one of these four gifts. The person selecting the lucky name also receives the gift of their choice, and in addition five people receive Wahl Everysharp Pencils. You buy the required merchandise from us at the confidential price shown in the distributor's price list. The difference between the cash you receive from your agent for the sale of the complete card and the cost of the merchandise represents your profit which as stated before runs from $11.75 to $15.25 per card, depending upon the gift items selected.

You will note that we have other books, which are disposed of in the same manner as the one described above, each card being used in connection with certain gift items.

HOW TO PUT THIS PLAN IN OPERATION

The more agents you get to work for you the bigger your profits will be. Among your relatives and friends are any number who would gladly work for one of these free gifts. Everybody wants another radio, especially the portable kind, like Best Radios. Then there is a big demand right now for World-Wide Radios and Automobile Radios. So many people want them but cannot afford to buy them outright. These people will be tickled to death with an opportunity to get a radio of their choice absolutely free * * *

$100 to $150 Weekly Easy to Earn

This clock has a retail value of $15.00 and give them away in connection with our M-100 Sales Books.

REMEMBER GIFTS ARE GIVEN AWAY

That's the important thing to always keep in mind and to impress upon those whom you employ to work for you. They buy nothing. All they have to do is to get their friends to pull the names on the card. Everyone has an equal chance to earn the gift of his or her choice. The agent selling the card gets one of the gifts and the winner gets another. You donate these gifts and earn a big profit in the process of doing it.

* * * this marvelous little radio set that is keeping our factory humming to supply the demand * * * Remember, we are in the business of manufacturing BEST radios, and we will sell them to you at any time at the wholesale price * * * You can purchase any number of radios from us at any time at the factory wholesale price of $9.00 each.

These two high class guaranteed radios are given away in connection with the R-170 sales booklet.

The BEST radio is not a "fly-by-night" affair—here today and gone tomorrow. We make this radio on a large scale production basis in our own modern plant. Expert radio engineers supervise every phase of its manufacture * * *

PLAN NO. 2

Direct to consumers on time payments.

Respondents sell to their distributors-agents their so-called premium goods, with which are included what are described as sales booklets, but which are in reality push cards or punchboards. The agents in turn dispose of these commodities, including the push cards or punchboards, to subagents. The cards or boards are made up with a certain number of names, usually the names of girls or women, under each of which is concealed a number; such numbers run from 1 to 100 or more, corresponding with the number of names on the card. The customer selects a name which he punches out, thereby disclosing a concealed number, and pays a premium equal to the number disclosed, but in no case more than thirty-five cents. The winning name is concealed on the card and the seal is not removed from it until the last chance has been sold, and thereupon the holder of the winning name and the distributor-agent are each entitled to a radio or some other article of the "free" merchandise. Persons who received the so-called "free" merchandise paid for the same in an amount determined as indicated, wholly by lot or chance.

Complaint

25 F. T. C.

PAR. 3. The respondent Levore Company, in the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid, in its advertising to induce prospective distributors-agents to dispose of its merchandise, represented to them that they could make big money "giving away these wonderful radios," and their plan as the "give away plan."

PAR. 4. The respondent Levore Company, in the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid, in its advertising caused and still causes the words "Successors to Beco Mfg. Company" to appear upon its advertisements and advertising matter distributed in interstate commerce.

PAR. 5. The aforesaid distributors-agents and sub-agents dispose of the aforesaid "free" merchandise to the purchasing public in accordance with the aforesaid sales plans. Respondents thus supply to and place in the hands of others the means of conducting lotteries in the sale of their products, in accordance with the respondents' sales plans hereinabove set forth, as a means of inducing purchasers thereof to purchase respondents' said products in preference to similar articles offered for sale and sold by their competitors.

PAR. 6. The respondent Levore Company, in the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid, in their advertising represented that their agents earn $100 and $150 per week under their sales plan No. 1.

In truth and in fact, neither the Beco Manufacturing Company nor the respondent Levore Company, the latter either in its own right or as successor of said Beco Manufacturing Company, are manufacturers, nor does the respondent Levore Company own, operate, or control any factory wherein its products are made, manufactured or fabricated. Said representation made by the respondent Levore Company in its advertising matter that it is a manufacturer, or successor to the Beco Manufacturing Company, is false and misleading, and has the tendency and capacity to mislead and deceive purchasers of respondents' products into the belief that when purchasing from the respondent they are dealing with a manufacturer, thereby gaining an advantage and saving the middleman's profit.

In truth and in fact, the respondent Levore Company did and does not give away radios, nor does respondent give away any merchandise free or as a gratuity.

In truth and in fact, the usual and ordinary earnings of respondents' agents is not either $100 or $150 per week.

PAR. 7. The use of said methods by respondent, as described in paragraph 2, has the tendency and capacity unfairly, and because of said game of chance and of said free goods, to divert to respondents trade and custom from their said competitors who do not use the same or equivalent methods, and to exclude all competitors who are unwilling to and who do not use the same or equivalent methods. Many of respondents' competitors are unwilling to adopt and use said methods or any method involving a game of chance or the sale of a chance, to win something by chance, because such methods are contrary to public policy or to the criminal statutes of certain of the States of the United States, or because they are of the opinion that such methods are detrimental to the morals of the public, or because of any or all of such reasons.

PAR. 8. There are, among the competitors of the respondents, many persons, firms, corporations, and associations who sell and distribute radio receiving sets, fountain pen and pencil sets, cocktail sets, cameras and other similar commodities, in interstate commerce. There are also among the competitors of the respondents, many persons, firms, corporations, and associations who manufacture similar commodities and sell the same in interstate commerce, and the sales plan No. 1 employed by respondent, and the use of the phrase "Successors to Beco Mfg. Company," when the Levore Company is not a manufacturer, has the capacity and tendency to unfairly divert trade from and otherwise injure and prejudice respondents' competitors in interstate commerce.

PAR. 9. The above alleged acts and things done by the respondents are all to the injury and prejudice of the public and of the competitors of respondents in interstate commerce, and constitute unfair methods of competition in interstate commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress entitled, "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914.

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission on the 31st day of October 1935, issued, and on the 4th day of November 1935, served its complaint upon respondents J. K. Levy, alias J. K. Lee, and David Levy, charging said respondents with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of the provisions of said act. After the issuance of said complaint and the filing of respondents' answer thereto, testimony and other evidence in support of the allegations of said complaint were introduced by Morton Nesmith, attorney for the Commission, before W. W. Sheppard, an examiner of the Commission, theretofore duly designated by it, and in opposition to the allegations of the complaint by John A. Nash, attorney for the respondents; and said testimony and other evidence were duly recorded and filed in the office of the Commission. Thereafter the proceedings regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on the said complaint, the answer thereto, testimony and other evidence, and briefs in support of the complaint and in opposition thereto; and the Commission having duly considered the same, and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public, and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusions drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondents J. K. Levy, alias J. K. Lee, and David Levy, are co-partners trading as Levore Company, and the principal place of business of this partnership is located at 130 North Wells Street, in the city of Chicago, State of Illinois. The respondent J. K. Levy, alias J. K. Lee, is an individual, with his principal place of business at the same address.

The respondents are now, and for several years last past have been, engaged in the sale and distribution of radio receiving sets, fountain pen and pencil sets, cocktail sets, cameras, and similar commodities directly to purchasers and also through sales-distributors or agents located at points in the various States of the United States other than the State of Illinois, and respondents have caused their products, when so sold, to be transported from their principal place of business in the city of Chicago, State of Illinois, into and through other States of the United States to purchasers at their respective points of location.

In the course and conduct of their business, the respondents are now, and have been, in competition with individuals, partnerships, and corporations engaged in the sale and distribution of radio receiving sets, fountain pen and pencil sets, cocktail sets, cameras, and other similar commodities in commerce between and among the various States of the United States.

PAR. 2. In the course and operation of their business and for the purpose of inducing the purchase of their products, the respondents advertised in periodicals having wide interstate circulation and by means of circulars and form letters, the following and other similar statements:

Persons who receive the so-called "free" merchandise paid for the same an amount determined as indicated wholly by lot or chance; the respondents, therefore, do not give away any merchandise but sell the same and receive value therefor.

PAR. 3. The respondents, J. K. Levy, alias J. K. Lee, and David Levy, in the course and conduct of their business and in their advertising, to induce prospective distributors-agents to dispose of their merchandise, represented to them that they could make big money "giving away these wonderful radios" and their plan as the "give away plan." The distributors-agents and sub-agents dispose of this "free" merchandise described in respondents' advertising to the purchasing public in accordance with the respondents' sales plans as herein outlined, namely, 1 and 2. The respondents supply to and place in the hands of others the means of conducting lotteries in the sale of their products, and in accordance with respondents' sales plans hereinbefore described as a means of inducing purchasers thereof to purchase respondents' products in preference to similar articles offered for sale and sold by competitors of respondent. A substantial part of respondents' business in the sale of their merchandise is effectuated by the use of the push, pull, or punch card system.

PAR. 4. In the course and conduct of their business the respondents, J. K. Levy and David Levy, advertise and represent that the Levore Company is a manufacturer through the use of the words "Successors to Beco Mfg. Company," which is placed upon Levore Company advertisements and advertising matter distributed in interstate commerce. The Beco Mfg. Company is a trade name for The Best Company and was the predecessor of the Levore Company. Respondents J. K. Levy and David Levy, trading as the Levore Company, own the stock of the LeWahl Mfg. Company, which was a licensed radio manufacturing concern, and licensed by the R.C.A. Company. They build coils and also assemble radios, but do not, and have not, manufactured any radios themselves.

PAR. 5. The respondents, J. K. Levy and David Levy, in disposing of their radio receiving sets, fountain pen and pencil sets, cocktail sets, cameras, and other products in accordance with the sales plan No. 1, hereinabove described, which involves the use of the aforesaid push or punch cards, conduct lotteries or games of chance in the disposition of their merchandise. Many purchasers of these products are attracted by the element of chance involved in the respondents' sales method before described and are thereby induced to purchase respondents' products in preference to the same or similar products or merchandise of respondents' competitors who do not use the same or equivalent methods.

PAR. 6. The use of the sales plan No. 1 by the respondents, namely, by the push and pull card method, has the tendency and capacity unfairly and because of the element of chance to divert to respondents trade and custom from their said competitors who do not use the same or equivalent methods, and exclude all competitors who are unwilling to and who do not use the same or equivalent methods. Many of respondents' competitors are unwilling to adopt and use these methods of sale or any method involving a scheme of chance because such methods are contrary to public policy and good morals, do not comply with business ethics, are a detriment to legitimate business, and constitute gambling. In truth and in fact, the respondents, J. K. Levy and David Levy, trading as the Levore Company, are not manufacturers and do not own or control or operate a factory wherein their radios, fountain pen and pencil sets, cocktail sets, cameras, and similar merchandise are manufactured or fabricated, all of which has the further capacity and tendency to divert trade from and otherwise injure respondents' competitors substantially in interstate commerce.

Order

25 F. T. C.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondents, J. K. Levy, alias J. K. Lee, and David Levy, are to the prejudice of the public and the respondents' competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce, within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

It is ordered, That the respondents, J. K. Levy, alias J. K. Lee, and David Levy, individually or trading as Levore Company or under any other trade name, their servants, representatives, and employees in connection with the offering for sale, sale, and distribution in interstate commerce or in the District of Columbia of radio receiving sets, fountain pen and pencil sets, cocktail sets, cameras, and similar commodities, do forthwith cease and desist:

1. From supplying to or placing in the hands of others punch cards, pull cards or push cards for the purpose of enabling such persons to dispose of or sell by the use thereof, said or similar products.

2. From mailing, shipping or transporting to their agents or distributors or to members of the public, punch, push or pull cards so prepared or printed as to enable said persons by the use thereof to sell or distribute said or similar products.

3. From selling or otherwise disposing of radio receiving sets, fountain pen and pencil sets, cocktail sets, cameras, and similar commodities by the use of punch, push or pull cards.

4. From in any manner selling or otherwise disposing of radio receiving sets, fountain pen and pencil sets, cocktail sets, cameras, and similar commodities by the use of devices depending upon lot or chance.

5. From directly or indirectly representing that they are manufacturers unless and until they own, operate or control a factory wherein their products are made or manufactured; or

6. From representing in any manner that their radio receiving sets, fountain pen and pencil sets, cocktail sets, cameras, and similar commodities are free or given away, when such is not the fact.

It is further ordered, That the respondents shall within 60 days after the service upon them of a copy of this order file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which they have complied with the order to cease and desist hereinabove set forth.

IN THE MATTER OF MELSTER CANDY COMPANY

COMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION
OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 26, 1914

Docket 3045. Complaint, Jan. 30, 1937—Decision, Aug. 9, 1937

Where a corporation engaged in manufacture and sale of candy, including certain assortments which were so packed and assembled as to involve use of a lottery scheme when sold and distributed to consumers thereof, and which consisted of a number of candy bars, a number of loaf candies and a box of candy, together with push card, for sale and distribution to purchasing public under a plan, and in accordance with said card's explanatory legend, by which purchaser received, for five cents paid, and in accordance with number pushed by chance, one or two bars of candy, or package of loaf candy, and purchaser of last push on card was entitled to receive, free of charge, in addition to one of said bars, aforesaid box of candy—

Sold, to wholesalers and jobbers, for display and resale to purchasing public in accordance with aforesaid sales plan, said assortments, and thereby supplied to and placed in the hands of others means of conducting lotteries in the sale of its said products, in accordance with such plan, contrary to public policy long recognized by the common law and criminal statutes, and to an established public policy of the United States Government, and in competition with many who, unwilling to offer or sell candy so packed and assembled or otherwise arranged and packed for sale to purchasing public as to involve a game of chance, or to adopt and use said method or any method involving game of chance or sale of a chance to win something by chance, or any other method contrary to public policy, refrain therefrom;

With result that many dealers in and ultimate purchasers of candy were attracted by said method and manner of packing said product and by element of chance involved in sale thereof as above set forth, and thereby induced to purchase such candy, thus packed and sold by it, in preference to that offered and sold by said competitors who do not use such or an equivalent method, and with tendency and capacity, because of said game of chance, to divert to it trade from its aforesaid competitors who do not use such or equivalent method, exclude from such trade all competitors who are unwilling to and do not use any such method as unlawful, lessen competition in said trade and tend to create a monopoly thereof in it and such other distributors as do use same or equivalent practice or method, and deprive purchasing public of benefit of free competition in trade involved, and eliminate from said trade all actual, and exclude therefrom all potential, competitors who do not adopt and use such or equivalent method;

Held, That such acts and practices were to the prejudice of the public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition.

Mr. Henry C. Lank and Mr. P. C. Kolinski for the Commission.

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that Melster Candy Company, a corporation, hereinafter referred to as respondent, has been and is using unfair methods of competition in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in said act of Congress, and it appearing to said Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent, Melster Candy Company, is a corporation organized and operating under the laws of the State of Wisconsin, with its principal office and place of business located at Cambridge, Wis. Respondent is now, and for more than one year last past has been, engaged in the manufacture of candies and in the sale and distribution thereof to wholesale dealers and jobbers located at points in the various States of the United States, and causes and has caused its said products, when so sold, to be transported from its principal place of business in Cambridge, Wis., to purchasers thereof in other States of the United States at their respective places of business; and there is now, and has been for one year last past, a course of trade and commerce by said respondent in such candy between and among the States of the United States. In the course and conduct of said business, respondent is in competition with other corporations and with partnerships and individuals engaged in the manufacture of candy and in the sale and distribution thereof in commerce between and among the various States of the United States.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of its business, as described in paragraph 1 hereof, respondent sells and has sold to wholesale dealers and jobbers an assortment of candy so packed and assembled as to involve the use of a lottery scheme when sold and distributed to the consumers thereof.

Said assortment manufactured and distributed by respondent is composed of a number of candy bars, a number of loaf candies, and a box of candy, together with a device commonly called a push card. Candy contained in said assortment is distributed to purchasers in the following manner:

The push card has a number of partially perforated discs, and when a push is made and the disc separated from the card, a number is disclosed. Sales are 5¢ each and the card bears statements informing customers and prospective customers that certain specified numbers entitle the customer to one bar of candy, that certain other specified numbers entitle the customer to two bars of candy, and that certain other specified numbers entitle the customer to a package of loaf candy. The purchaser of the last disc on said push card is entitled to receive, and is to be given free of charge, in addition to one of said bars of candy, the box of candy heretofore referred to. The numbers on the discs or pushes are effectively concealed from the purchaser and prospective purchaser until a selection has been made and the disc separated from the card. The number of bars of candy which a customer receives for the price of 5¢ is thus determined wholly by lot or chance.

PAR. 3. The wholesale dealers and jobbers to whom respondent sells its assortment resell said assortment to retail dealers, and said retail dealers expose said assortment for sale and sell said candy to the purchasing public in accordance with the aforesaid sales plan. Respondent thus supplies to and places in the hands of others the means of conducting lotteries in the sale of its product in accordance with the sales plan hereinabove set forth, and said sales plan has the capacity and tendency of inducing purchasers thereof to purchase respondent's said product in preference to candy offered for sale and sold by its competitors.

PAR. 4. The sale of said candy to the purchasing public in the manner above alleged involves a game of chance or the sale of a chance to procure a box of candy.

The use by respondent of said method in the sale of candy, and the sale of candy by and through the use thereof and by the aid of said method, is a practice of the sort which the common law and criminal statutes have long deemed contrary to public policy; and is contrary to an established public policy of the Government of the United States. The use by respondent of said method has the tendency unduly to hinder competition or create monopoly in this, to wit: that the use thereof has the tendency and capacity to exclude from the branch of the candy trade involved in this proceeding competitors who do not adopt and use the same method or an equivalent or similar method involving the same or an equivalent or similar element of chance or lottery scheme.

Many persons, firms, and corporations who make and sell candy in competition with the respondent, as above alleged, are unwilling to offer for sale or sell candy so packed and assembled as above alleged, or otherwise arranged and packed for sale to the purchasing public so as to involve a game of chance, and such competitors refrain therefrom.

Findings

PAR. 5. Many dealers in and ultimate purchasers of candy are attracted by respondent's said method and manner of packing said candy, and by the element of chance involved in the sale thereof in the manner above described, and are thereby induced to purchase said candy so packed and sold by respondent, in preference to candy offered for sale and sold by said competitors of respondent who do not use the same or equivalent methods. The use of said method by respondent has the tendency and capacity, because of said game of chance, to divert to respondent trade and custom from its said competitors who do not use the same or an equivalent method; to exclude from said candy trade all competitors who are unwilling to and who do not use the same or an equivalent method because the same is unlawful; to lessen competition in said candy trade, and to tend to create a monopoly of said candy trade in respondent and such other distributors of candy as use the same or an equivalent method; and to deprive the purchasing public of the benefit of free competition in said candy trade. The use of said method by the respondent has the tendency and capacity to eliminate from said candy trade all actual competitors, and to exclude therefrom all potential competitors, who do not adopt and use said method or an equivalent method.

PAR. 6. Many of said competitors of respondent are unwilling to adopt and use said method or any method involving a game of chance or the sale of a chance to win something by chance or any other method that is contrary to public policy.

PAR. 7. The aforementioned method, acts, and practices of the respondent are all to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors, as hereinabove alleged. Said method, acts, and practices constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914.

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

complaint, respondent filed answer thereto admitting all the material allegations of the complaint to be true and waiving the taking of further evidence and all other intervening procedure. Thereafter, this proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on the said complaint and answer thereto, briefs and oral argument of counsel having been waived; and the Commission, having duly considered the same and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent, Melster Candy Company, is a corporation organized and operating under the laws of the State of Wisconsin, with its principal office and place of business located at Cambridge, Wis. Respondent is now, and for more than one year last past has been, engaged in the manufacture of candies and in the sale and distribution thereof to wholesale dealers and jobbers located at points in the various States of the United States. It causes and has caused its said products when sold to be transported from its principal place of business in Cambridge, Wis., to purchasers thereof in other States of the United States at their respective places of business. There is now, and has been for one year last past, a course of trade and commerce by said respondent in such candy between and among the States of the United States. In the course and conduct of said business, respondent is in competition with other corporations and with partnerships and individuals engaged in the manufacture of candy and in the sale and distribution thereof in commerce between and among the various States of the United States.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of its business, as described in paragraph 1 hereof, respondent sells and has sold to wholesale dealers and jobbers an assortment of candy so packed and assembled as to involve the use of a lottery scheme when sold and distributed to the consumers thereof. Said assortment manufactured and distributed by respondent is composed of a number of candy bars, a number of loaf candies, and a box of candy, together with a device commonly called a push card. The candy contained in said assortment is distributed to purchasers in the following manner: The push card has a number of partially perforated discs, and when a push is made and the disc separated from the card a number is disclosed. Sales are 5¢ each, and the card bears statements informing customers and prospective customers that certain specified numbers entitle the customer to one bar of candy, that certain other specified numbers entitle the customers to two bars of candy, and that certain other specified numbers entitle the customer to a package of loaf candy. The purchaser of the last disc on said push card is entitled to receive, and is to be given free of charge, in addition to one of said bars of candy, the box of candy heretofore referred to. The numbers on the discs or pushes are effectively concealed from the purchaser and prospective purchaser until a selection has been made and the disc separated from the card. The number of bars of candy which a customer receives for the price of 5¢ is thus determined wholly by lot or chance.

PAR. 3. The wholesale dealers and jobbers to whom respondent sells its assortment resell said assortment to retail dealers, and said retail dealers expose said assortment for sale and sell said candy to the purchasing public in accordance with the aforesaid sales plan. Respondent thus supplies to and places in the hands of others the means of conducting lotteries in the sale of its products in accordance with the sales plan hereinabove set forth, and said sales plan has the capacity and tendency of inducing purchasers thereof to purchase respondent's said products in preference to candy offered for sale and sold by its competitors.

PAR. 4. The sale of said candy to the purchasing public in the manner above found involves a game of chance or the sale of a chance to procure a box of candy. The use by respondent of said method in the sale of candy, and the sale of candy by and through the use thereof and by the aid of said method, is a practice of the sort which the common law and criminal statutes have long deemed contrary to public policy, and is contrary to an established public policy of the Government of the United States. The use by respondent of said method has the tendency unduly to hinder competition or create monopoly in this, to wit: that the use thereof has the tendency and capacity to exclude from the branch of the candy trade involved in this proceeding competitors who do not adopt and use the same method or an equivalent or similar method involving the same or an equivalent or similar element of chance or lottery scheme. Many persons, firms, and corporations who make and sell candy in competition with respondent are unwilling to offer for sale or sell candy so packed and assembled as above described, or otherwise arranged and packed for sale to the purchasing public so as to involve a game of chance, and such competitors refrain therefrom.

PAR. 5. Many dealers in and ultimate purchasers of candy are attracted by respondent's said method and manner of packing said candy and by the element of chance involved in the sale thereof in the manner above described, and are thereby induced to purchase said candy so packed and sold by respondent in preference to candy offered for sale and sold by said competitors of respondent who do not use the same or an equivalent method. The use of said method by respondent has the tendency and capacity, because of said game of chance, to divert to respondent trade and custom from its said competitors who do not use the same or an equivalent method; to exclude from said candy trade all competitors who are unwilling to and who do not use the same or an equivalent method because the same is unlawful; to lessen competition in said candy trade, and to tend to create a monopoly of said candy trade in respondent and in such other distributors of candy as use the same or an equivalent method; and to deprive the purchasing public of the benefit of free competition in said candy trade. The use of said method by respondent has the tendency and capacity to eliminate from said candy trade all actual competitors and to exclude therefrom all potential competitors who do not adopt and use said method or an equivalent method.

PAR. 6. Many of said competitors of respondent are unwilling to adopt and use said method or any method involving a game of chance or the sale of a chance to win something by chance or any other method that is contrary to public policy.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid method, acts, and practices of respondent, Melster Candy Company, a corporation, are to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

This proceeding having been heard by the Federal Trade Commission upon the complaint of the Commission and the answer of respondent dated June 4, 1937, admitting all the material allegations of the complaint to be true and waiving the taking of further evidence and all other intervening procedure, and the Commission having made its findings as to the facts and its conclusion that said respondent has violated the provisions of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

It is ordered, That the respondent, Melster Candy Company, a corporation, its officers, representatives, agents, and employees, in connection with the offering for sale, sale and distribution of candy in interstate commerce, do forthwith cease and desist from:

1. Selling and distributing to jobbers and wholesale dealers, for resale to retail dealers, candy so packed and assembled that sales of such candy to the general public are to be made, or are designed to be made, by means of a lottery, gaming device, or gift enterprise.

2. Supplying to or placing in the hands of wholesale dealers and jobbers assortments of candy which are used, or which are designed to be used, without alteration or rearrangement of the contents of such assortments, to conduct a lottery, gaming device, or gift enterprise in the sale or distribution of the candy contained in said assortments to the public.

3. Packing or assembling in the same package or assortment of candy, for sale to the public at retail, bars of candy, together with a device commonly called a "push card," which push card is for use, or which is designed to be used, in distributing or selling said candy to the public at retail.

4. Furnishing to wholesale dealers and jobbers, for distribution to retail dealers, a device commonly called a "push card," either with packages or assortments of candy or separately, bearing a legend or legends or statements informing the purchasing public that the candy is being sold to the public by lot or chance or in accordance with a sales plan which constitutes a lottery, gaming device, or gift enterprise.

It is further ordered, That the respondent, Melster Candy Company, a corporation, shall, within 30 days after service upon it or this order, file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which it has complied with the order to cease and desist hereinabove set forth.

IN THE MATTER OF
ISRAEL ZAVELOFF AND HARRY BERNSTEIN, TRADING AS EVERLAST SUIT CASE & BAG COMPANY

COMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION
 OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 26, 1914

Docket 2887. Complaint, Aug. 4, 1936—Decision, Aug. 11, 1937

Where two partners engaged in manufacture of leather luggage, and in use in such manufacture of all four general types of leather employed in making leather luggage, namely, solid, top grain, and split leathers and buffin, and in sale and distribution of such leather luggage in commerce among the various States and in the District of Columbia, in substantial competition with those engaged in manufacture, sale, and distribution of leather goods in commerce, as above set forth, and including many competitors who sell leather luggage made from top grain, and also that made from split leather and properly describe former, as variously known by manufacturers, dealers, and purchasing public, as "cowhide," "genuine cowhide," "leather," "genuine leather," "warranted leather," and "top grain," and properly describe latter, as similarly generally known, as "split leather" luggage—

Labeled and branded their goods of split leather "WARRANTED GENUINE LEATHIER" or "WARRANTED LEATHIER," notwithstanding fact luggage in question, thus branded, was not made from outside or top side hide, or from top grain, as understood in trade and by purchasing public, but was made from split leather, i. e., lower portion of the hide from which top grain portion has been cut away;

With capacity and tendency to mislead and deceive purchasing public and substantial portion of trade into erroneous belief that their said luggage, thus branded and labeled, was made from top grain leather, for goods of which purchasing public has generally pronounced and distinct preference, and with result of placing in hands of wholesalers and retailers means whereby said luggage, made of split leather as above set forth, goods of which can be made to resemble those of the other in appearance, is passed off to purchasing public as top grain leather luggage, and consuming public purchased substantial volume of their aforesaid product, and trade was unfairly diverted to them from their competitors, likewise engaged in manufacture, sale and distribution of leather luggage, and who truthfully brand and represent kind of leather used in manufacture of their products; to the substantial injury of competition in commerce:

Held, That such acts and practices were to the prejudice of the public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition.

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that Israel Zaveloff and Harry Bernstein, copartners, trading and doing business under the firm name and style of Everlast Suit Case & Bag Company, hereinafter referred to as the respondents, have been and are using unfair methods of competition in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in said act, and it appearing to the said Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint, stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Said respondents, Israel Zaveloff and Harry Bernstein, are copartners, trading and doing business under the firm name and style of Everlast Suit Case & Bag Company, and have their office and principal place of business at 130 Bleecker Street, in the city of New York and State of New York. Respondents are now, and for more than one year last past, have been engaged in the manufacture of leather luggage and in the sale and distribution of the same, in commerce, between and among the various States of the United States and the District of Columbia; causing said products, when sold, to be shipped from their place of business in the State of New York to purchasers thereof located in a State or States of the United States other than the State of New York.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of their business aforesaid, respondents are now and for more than one year last past have been in substantial competition with other corporations, individuals, partnerships, and firms engaged in the business of manufacturing and selling leather luggage in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and the District of Columbia.

PAR. 3. In the course and conduct of their business as aforesaid, respondents manufactured certain of their luggage from split cowhide leather, also described as the under or flesh side of the hide. Respondents place upon such luggage, and have done so during the period aforesaid, a conspicuous stamp or label reading "Warranted Genuine Leather." Said stamp or label represents and implies to the purchasing public that the material with which such luggage is covered is top grain leather, or as otherwise described, the outside or surface layer of the hide. Further, retailers are enabled by reason of said stamp or label, to mislead, deceive, and defraud the purchasing public as to the quality of the material with which such luggage is covered. Top grain leather is superior in quality, durability, and price to the split leather. The public generally believes the word leather to mean the top or hairy side of the hide.

There are among the competitors of respondents, as mentioned in paragraph 1 hereof, manufacturers of leather luggage who do not in any way misrepresent or falsely label their said merchandise.

PAR. 4. The above and foregoing representations, as shown by the label used by respondents, as described in paragraph 3, have the capacity and tendency to, and do mislead and deceive the purchasing public into the belief that the said luggage so labeled is manufactured from, or covered with, genuine top grain cowhide, and have the capacity and tendency to, and do induce the said purchasing public, acting in such erroneous belief, to purchase respondents' product, thereby diverting trade to the respondents from those of their competitors who do not misrepresent and falsely label their product, and in this manner respondents do substantial injury to competition in interstate commerce.

PAR. 5. The above acts and things done or caused to be done by the respondents were and are each and all to the prejudice of the public and of respondents' competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in interstate commerce within the meaning and intent of Section 5 of "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914.

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, on August 4, 1936, issued and served its complaint in this proceeding upon respondents Israel Zaveloff and Harry Bernstein, copartners, doing business under the firm name of Everlast Suit Case & Bag Company, charging them with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of the provisions of said Act. After the issuance of said complaint, and the filing of respondents' answer thereto, testimony and other evidence in support of the allegations of said complaint were introduced by DeWitt T. Puckett, attorney for the Commission, before John L. Hornor, an examiner of the Commission, theretofore duly designated by it, and in opposition to the allegations of the complaint by Joseph D. Tarlowe, attorney for the respondent; and said testimony and other evidence were duly recorded and filed in the office of the Commission. Thereafter, the proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on the said complaint, the answer thereto, testimony and other evidence, briefs in support of the complaint and in opposition thereto (no oral argument having been made); and the Commission having duly considered the same, and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public, and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. The respondents, Israel Zaveloff and Harry Bernstein, are copartners, trading as Everlast Suit Case & Bag Company at 130 West Bleeker Street, New York, N. Y.

For several years last past they have been engaged in the manufacture, sale and distribution of leather luggage in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia. Respondents' customers are located at points in the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia, and respondents cause their said merchandise, when sold, to be transported from their place of business in New York, N. Y. to purchasers thereof in other States of the United States and in the District of Columbia, at their respective places of business.

At all times since respondents have been in said business, they have been in substantial competition with other individuals and partnerships, and with corporations likewise engaged in the manufacture, sale, and distribution, or in the sale and distribution of leather goods, in commerce, among and between the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 2. Four general types of leather employed in the manufacture of leather luggage are: solid leather, top grain leather, split leather, and buffin. Solid leather is the entire hide after it has been properly processed and made ready for use. Top grain leather is the top portion of the hide from which the hair has been removed and the under portion or that lying next to the flesh of the animal has been cut away. Buffin is a very thin lightweight leather which is removed from the very top or outside portion of the hide. Split leather is the lower portion of the hide which lies next to the flesh of the animal and from which the top grain portion has been cut away. The respondents use all four types of said leather in the manufacture of their luggage.

Respondents' split leather goods offered for sale and sold in interstate commerce are labeled and branded "WARRANTED GENU-INE LEATHER" or "WARRANTED LEATHER." Respondents label and brand their top grain leather goods "TOP GRAIN."

The purchasing public generally and the trade understands the words "warranted leather," "genuine leather," or the word "leather," when used to describe luggage, to mean luggage manufactured from top grain leather.

PAR. 3. Many of respondents' competitors sell leather luggage manufactured from top grain leather and also from split leather. Said top grain leather is properly described by said competitors, and is variously known by manufacturers, dealers, and the purchasing public as "cowhide," "genuine cowhide," "leather," "genuine leather," "warranted leather," and "top grain." Said split leather luggage is properly described by said competitors, and is generally known by manufacturers, dealers, and the purchasing public, as "split leather" luggage.

The purchasing public generally has a pronounced and distinct preference for leather goods that are manufactured from top grain leather. Split leather goods can be made to resemble top grain leather in appearance and the purchasing public generally and a substantial portion of the trade cannot distinguish between split leather goods and top grain leather goods. As a result thereof, split leather goods are thus passed off as top grain leather goods.

PAR. 4. The descriptions, representations, stamps, and brands used by respondents in describing their split leather luggage are false and misleading in that said luggage branded as "WARRANTED GENUINE LEATHER" and "WARRANTED LEATHIER" is not made from the outside or top side of the hide, or what is understood in the trade and by the purchasing public as top grain, but are manufactured from split leather.

PAR. 5. The use by respondents of the descriptions, marks, and brands, set out in paragraph 2 hereof, to describe their split leather luggage, offered for sale and sold in interstate commerce, has had and does have the capacity and tendency to mislead and deceive the purchasing public and a substantial portion of the trade into the erroneous belief that the luggage so branded and labeled was made from top grain leather. By said practices, respondents also place in the hands of wholesalers and retailers the means whereby said luggage is passed off to the purchasing public as top grain leather luggage. As a direct consequence of the mistaken and erroneous beliefs induced by the false and misleading representations above referred to, the consuming public has purchased a substantial volume of respondents' luggage with the result that trade has been unfairly diverted to the respondents from their competitors likewise engaged in the manufacture, sale, and distribution of leather luggage, who truthfully brand and represent the kind of leather used in the manufacture of their products. As a result thereof, substantial injury has been and is now being done by respondents to competition, in commerce, among and between the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondents, Israel Zaveloff and Harry Bernstein, trading as Everlast Suit Case & Bag Company, are to the prejudice of the public and respondents' competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce, within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

It is ordered, That the respondents, Israel Zaveloff and Harry Bernstein, individually or trading as Everlast Suit Case & Bag Company, or under any other trade name, their representatives, agents, servants, and employees, in connection with the offering for sale, sale, and distribution of luggage in interstate commerce or in the District of Columbia, do forthwith cease and desist from:

Representing, through the use of the words "genuine leather" or "leather" or any other word or words of similar import and effect, alone or in conjunction with other words, stamped or imprinted on labels or on the luggage itself, or in any other manner, that luggage manufactured in whole or in part from the underlayers or flesh side of hides, known as split leather, is made from the outside layer of the hide.

Order

25 F. T. C.

It is further ordered, That the respondent shall, within 60 days after service upon it of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which it has complied with this order.

IN THE MATTER OF

E. I. DONAHUE, INDIVIDUALLY AND TRADING AS DONAHUE ADVERTISING COMPANY

COMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION
OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 26, 1914

Docket 3180. Complaint, July 21, 1937—Decision, Aug. 11, 1937

Where an individual engaged in sale and distribution of various articles of merchandise, including, among others, electric clocks, kitchen cutlery sets, tableware sets, hostess tray sets and grill, vacuum coffee sets, and other articles, in commerce among the various States—

Furnished various devices and plans of merchandising which involved operation of gift enterprises or lottery schemes and distribution of his said merchandise to ultimate consumers wholly by lot or chance, and consisted of variety of push cards for sale and distribution, substantially, under a plan or method, and in accordance with said cards' explanatory legends, by which prospective purchasers selecting one of a variety of girls' names displayed on card paid up to certain maximum amount in accordance with number disclosed under name selected, and received article of merchandise being thus disposed of, or nothing other than privilege of undertaking such chance selection, in accordance with their success or failure in selecting name corresponding to that concealed under card's master seal, and under which person, salesman, agent or representative soliciting purchases of chances was similarly compensated, after completing sales thereof, by receipt of article of merchandise without further charge or additional service, and thereby supplied to and placed in the hands of others the means of conducting lotteries in the sale of his merchandise, in accordance with such sales plan as hereinabove set forth, in violation of public policy long recognized in the common law and criminal statutes and contrary to an established public policy of the United States Government, and in competition with many who make or sell merchandise as above described but are unwilling to adopt and use said or any method involving game of chance or sale of a chance to win something by chance or any other method contrary to public policy, and refrain therefrom;

With result that many persons were attracted by his said methods and element of chance involved in sale in manner above described, and were thereby induced to buy and sell his said merchandise in preference to that offered and sold by said competitors who do not use same or equivalent methods, and with effect, by reason of said game of chance, of diverting trade and custom to him from his said competitors who do not use same or equivalent methods:

Held, That such acts and practices were to the prejudice of the public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition.

Mr. Henry C. Lank and Mr. P. C. Kolinski for the Commission.
