PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent is an individual doing business under the trade name and style of Donahue Advertising Company, with his principal office and place of business located at 407 South Dearborn Street, Chicago, Ill. He is now, and for some time last past has been, engaged in the sale and distribution of various articles of merchandise, including, among others, electric clocks, kitchen cutlery sets, tableware sets, hostess tray sets and grill, vacuum coffee sets, roaster sets, smoking stands, ashtray combinations, and pen and pencil sets, in commerce between and among the various States of the United States. He causes and has caused said products when sold to be transported from his principal place of business in the State of Illinois to purchasers thereof in Illinois and in other States of the United States at their respective points of location. There is now, and has been for some time last past, a course of trade and commerce by said respondent in such merchandise as he is selling or distributing between and among the States of the United States. In the course and conduct of said business, respondent is in competition with other individuals and with partnerships and corporations engaged in the sale and distribution of similar or like articles of merchandise in commerce between and among the various States of the United States.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of his business, as described in paragraph 1 hereof, the respondent, in soliciting the sale of and in selling and distributing the said merchandise, has furnished various devices and plans of merchandising which involve the operation of gift enterprises or lottery schemes and a distribution of such merchandise to the ultimate consumers thereof wholly by lot or chance. Said devices or plans of merchandising consist of a variety of push cards, the use of which, in connection with the sale and delivery to the purchasing public by the method or plan suggested by respondent, was and is substantially as follows:

The said push cards bear a number of girls' names. Concealed under each name is a number. Also, under a master seal there is a name corresponding to one of the names on the card. Prospective purchasers select one of the names and remove the same disclosing the number thereunder. Persons selecting numbers from 1 to 29 pay in cents the amount of such number, and persons selecting numbers over 29 pay 29¢ for the privilege of selecting one of the names. The push cards bear various legends informing purchasers and prospective purchasers of the plan or method by which said push card is operated and by which the merchandise described thereon is to be distributed. When all the names have been purchased the master seal is removed, and the person who has selected the name corresponding to the name under the master seal receives the article of merchandise described without further charge, and the person, salesman, agent, or representative soliciting purchases of chances, as above described, also receives an article of merchandise without further charge or additional service. The numbers under the names are concealed from purchasers and prospective purchasers, and they do not know how much they will have to pay for the privilege of selecting one of the names until the selection has been made and the name removed. The name under the master seal is concealed from purchasers and prospective purchasers until all the names have been selected. Those customers selecting names which do not correspond to the name under the master seal receive nothing but the privilege of making a selection for the money which they pay. The said articles of merchandise vary in value, but each of said articles of merchandise is of a greater value than the cost of a single push from said push card. The various articles of merchandise are thus distributed to the purchasing public wholly by lot or chance, and the amount which the customers pay for a chance is determined wholly by lot or chance.

PAR. 3. The persons to whom respondent furnishes said devices use the same in purchasing, selling, and distributing respondent's merchandise in accordance with the aforesaid sales plan. Respondent thus supplies to and places in the hands of others the means of conducting lotteries in the sale of his merchandise in accordance with the sales plan hereinabove set forth. The use by respondent of said method in the sale of his merchandise, and the sale of such merchandise by and through the use thereof and by the aid of said method, is a practice of the sort which the common law and criminal statutes have long deemed contrary to public policy, and is contrary to an established public policy of the Government of the United States.

PAR. 4. The sale of merchandise to the purchasing public in the manner above alleged involves a game of chance or the sale of a chance to procure articles of merchandise at a price much less than the normal retail price thereof. Many persons, firms, and corporations who make or sell merchandise in competition with the respondent, as above alleged, are unwilling to adopt and use said method or any method involving a game of chance or the sale of a chance to win something by chance, or any other method that is contrary to public policy, and such competitors refrain therefrom. Many persons are attracted by respondent's said methods and by the element of chance involved in the sale thereof in the manner above described, and are thereby induced to buy and sell respondent's merchandise in preference to merchandise offered for sale and sold by said competitors of respondent who do not use the same or equivalent methods. The use of said method by respondent, because of said game of chance, has the tendency and capacity to, and does, divert trade and custom to respondent from his said competitors who do not use the same or equivalent methods.

PAR. 5. The aforesaid acts and practices of respondent are all to the injury and prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, on July 21, 1937, issued and on July 22, 1937, served its complaint in this proceeding upon respondent, E. I. Donahue, individually and trading as Donahue Advertising Company, charging him with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of the provisions of said act. After the issuance of said complaint, respondent filed answer thereto, dated July 28, 1937, admitting the facts as alleged in the said complaint to be true. Thereafter, this proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on the said complaint and answer thereto, and the Commission having duly considered the same and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent is an individual doing business under the trade name and style of Donahue Advertising Company, with his principal office and place of business located at 407 South Dearborn Street, Chicago, Ill. He is now, and for some time last past has been engaged in the sale and distribution of various articles of merchandise including, among others, electric clocks, kitchen cutlery sets, tableware sets, hostess tray sets and grill, vacuum coffee sets, roaster sets, smoking stands, ashtray combinations, and pen and pencil sets, in commerce between and among the various States of the United States. He causes and has caused said products when sold to be transported from his principal place of business in the State of Illinois to purchasers thereof in Illinois and in other States of the United States at their respective points of location. There is now, and has been for some time last past a course of trade and commerce by said respondent in such merchandise as he is selling or distributing between and among the States of the United States. In the course and conduct of said business, respondent is in competition with other individuals and with partnerships and corporations engaged in the sale and distribution of similar or like articles of merchandise in commerce between and among the various States of the United States.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of his business, as described in paragraph 1 hereof, the respondent in soliciting the sale of and in selling and distributing the said merchandise, has furnished various devices and plans of merchandising which involve the operation of gift enterprises or lottery schemes and a distribution of such merchandise to the ultimate consumers thereof wholly by lot or chance. Said devices or plans of merchandising consist of a variety of push-cards, the use of which, in connection with the sale and delivery to the purchasing public by the method or plan suggested by respondent, was and is substantially as follows:

The said push cards bear a number of girls' names. Concealed under each name is a number. Also, under a master seal there is a name corresponding to one of the names on the card. Prospective purchasers select one of the names and remove the same disclosing the number thereunder. Persons selecting numbers from 1 to 29 pay in cents the amount of such number, and persons selecting numbers over 29 pay 29¢ for the privilege of selecting one of the names. The push cards bear various legends informing purchasers and prospective purchasers of the plan or method by which said push card is operated and by which the merchandise described thereon is to be distributed. When all the names have been purchased the master seal is removed, and the person who has selected the name corresponding to the name under the master seal receives the article of merchandise described without further charge, and the person, salesman, agent, or representative soliciting purchases of chances, as above described, also receives an article of merchandise without further charge or additional service. The numbers under the names are concealed from purchasers and prospective purchasers, and they do not know how much they will have to pay for the privilege of selecting one of the names until the selection has been made and the name removed. The name under the master seal is concealed from purchasers and prospective purchasers until all the names have been selected. Those customers selecting names which do not correspond to the name under the master seal receive nothing but the privilege of making a selection for the money which they pay. The said articles of merchandise vary in value, but each of said articles of merchandise is of a greater value than the cost of a single push from said push card. The various articles of merchandise are thus distributed to the purchasing public wholly by lot or chance, and the amount which the customers pay for a chance is determined wholly by lot or chance.

PAR. 3. The persons to whom respondent furnishes said devices use the same in purchasing, selling, and distributing respondent's merchandise in accordance with the aforesaid sales plan. Respondent thus supplies to and places in the hands of others the means of conducting lotteries in the sale of his merchandise in accordance with the sales plan hereinabove set forth. The use by respondent of said method in the sale of his merchandise and the sale of such merchandise by and through the use thereof and by the aid of said method, is a practice of the sort which the common law and criminal statutes have long deemed contrary to public policy, and is contrary to an established public policy of the Government of the United States.

PAR. 4. The sale of merchandise to the purchasing public in the manner above found involves a game of chance or the sale of a chance to procure articles of merchandise at a price much less than the normal retail price thereof. Many persons, firms, and corporations who make or sell merchandise in competition with the respondent, as above described, are unwilling to adopt and use said method or any method involving a game of chance or the sale of a chance to win something by chance, or any other method that is contrary to public policy, and such competitors refrain therefrom. Many persons are attracted by respondent's said methods and by the element of chance involved in the sale thereof in the manner above described, and are thereby induced to buy and sell respondent's merchandise in preference to merchandise offered for sale and sold by said competitors of respondent who do not use the same or equivalent methods. The use of said method by respondent, because of said game of chance, has the tendency and capacity to, and does, divert trade and custom to respondent from his said competitors who do not use the same or equivalent methods.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondent, E. I. Donahue, individually and trading as Donahue Advertising Company, are to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

This proceeding having been heard by the Federal Trade Commission on the complaint of the Commission and the answer of the respondent dated July 28, 1937, admitting the facts as set forth in the complaint to be true, and the Commission having made its findings as to the facts and its conclusion that said respondent has violated the provisions of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes",

It is ordered, That the respondent E. I. Donahue, individually and trading as Donahue Advertising Company, his agents, representatives, and employees, in connection with the offering for sale, sale and distribution of merchandise in interstate commerce, do forthwith cease and desist from:

1. Supplying to or placing in the hands of others push cards or similar devices for the purpose of enabling such persons to dispose of or sell such merchandise by the use thereof.

2. Mailing, shipping or transporting to members of the public push cards or similar devices so prepared or printed as to enable said persons to sell or distribute such merchandise by the use thereof.

3. Selling or otherwise disposing of merchandise by the use of push cards or similar devices.

4. In any manner, selling or otherwise disposing of merchandise, free of charge, or at varying prices, depending upon lot or chance.

25 F. T. C.

It is further ordered, That the respondent E. I. Donahue, individually and trading as Donahue Advertising Company, shall, within 30 days after service upon him of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which he has complied with the order to cease and desist hereinabove set forth.

IN THE MATTER OF

CARLTON, INC., IN ITS OWN NAME AND RIGHT AND TRADING AS CARLTON SALES COMPANY

COMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION
OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 26, 1914

Docket 3181. Complaint, July 21, 1937—Decision, Aug. 11, 1937

Where a corporation engaged in offer and sale of various articles of men's and ladies' wear, including men's shirts, pajamas, neckties, and hosiery, and ladies' dresses, lingerie, and hosiery, to purchasers in the various States; in soliciting sale of and in selling and distributing its merchandise in interstate commerce—

Furnished various devices and plans of merchandising involving operation of games of chance, gift enterprises, or lottery schemes under which said merchandise was distributed to ultimate consumers thereof wholly by lot or chance, and distribution to public by it, through the mails and in interstate commerce, of certain literature, instructions, and sales outfits, including paper push cards, order blanks and advertisements depicting its said merchandise, and circulars explaining its plan of selling same and of allotting it as premiums or prizes to operators of push cards in question, and under which plans or methods, and in accordance with explanatory legends contained on said cards, customer making selection of one of a number of feminine names thereon contained paid up to certain specified maximum amount for a chance or received chance free, in accordance with particular number pushed from disc opposite name selected, and card's aforesaid legend, and under which customer received, for his free or paid-for chance as above explained, one of articles being thus disposed of, in accordance with his success or failure in selecting name corresponding to that concealed under master disc, and last punch also received one of articles being thus disposed of, value of which, in any case, was in excess of cost of chance or push, and thereby conducted lotteries, or placed in hands of others means of conducting lotteries, in sale of its merchandise in accordance with such sales plan involving game of chance or sale of a chance to procure its merchandise free or at a price much less than normal retail price thereof, in violation of public policy long recognized in the common law and criminal statutes and contrary to an established public policy of the United States Government, and in competition with many who sell and distribute merchandise but are unwilling to adopt and use said or any method involving game of chance or sale of a chance to win something by chance or any other method contrary to public policy, and refrain therefrom;

With result that many persons were attracted by said method and by element of chance involved in sale as above set forth, and were thereby induced to buy and sell its merchandise in preference to that offered and sold by said competitors who do not use same or equivalent method, and with effect, by reason of said game of chance, of diverting trade and custom to it from its said competitors who do not use such or equivalent method:

Complaint

COMPLAINT

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent is a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Illinois, with its principal office and place of business located at 17 North Wabash Avenue, Chicago, Ill. Respondent advertises, offers for sale, and sells its merchandise, hereinafter referred to, under its own corporate name, and also advertises, offers for sale, and sells its merchandise under the trade name of Carlton Sales Company. Respondent is now, and for some time last past has been, engaged in offering for sale and selling various articles of men's and ladies' wear, including men's shirts, pajamas, neckties, and hosiery, and ladies' dresses, lingerie, and hosiery, to purchasers thereof located in various States of the United States. It causes said merchandise when sold to be shipped or transported from its principal place of business in the State of Illinois into and through other States of the United States to the purchasers thereof at their respective points of location. There is now, and has been for some time last past, a course of trade and commerce by said respondent in such merchandise between and among the States of the United States. In the course and conduct of its business, respondent is in competition with other corporations and with partnerships and individuals engaged in the sale and distribution of similar articles of merchandise in commerce between and among the various States of the United States.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of its business, as described in paragraph 1 hereof, respondent, in soliciting the sale of and in selling and distributing its merchandise in interstate commerce, has furnished various devices and plans of merchandising which involve the operation of games of chance, gift enterprises, or lottery schemes by which said merchandise is distributed to the ultimate consumers thereof wholly by lot or chance. The methods and practices adopted and used by respondent are substantially as follows:

Respondent distributes and has distributed to the public through the United States mails in interstate commerce certain literature, instructions, and sales outfits, including paper push cards, order blanks, and advertisements containing illustrations of its merchandise, and circulars explaining respondent's plan of selling said merchandise and of allotting it as premiums or prizes to the operators of the push cards. Said push cards bear a number of feminine names with a blank space opposite each for writing in the name of the customer. Said push cards have a corresponding number of partially perforated discs marked "PUSH," below each of which is printed one of the feminine names printed alphabetically elsewhere on the cards. Concealed within each disc is a number which is disclosed when the disc is pushed or separated from the cards. The push cards have a master disc, concealed within which is one of the feminine names appearing elsewhere on the said cards. The push cards bear printed legends or instructions, one of which is as follows:

The other push cards bear similar legends, but vary in detail. Such variations cover the merchandise to be distributed, the quantity thereof, the price to be paid therefor, and the number of pushes which are free. Said articles of merchandise sold and distributed by respondent vary in value, but each of said articles of merchandise is of a greater value than the cost of a single push from said push cards. Sales of merchandise by means of said push cards are made in accordance with the specified legends or instructions. The fact as to whether a customer receives a specified article of merchandise or nothing for the amount paid is thus determined wholly by lot or chance, and the fact as to whether a customer receives his "PUSH" free, or pays an amount from 1¢ to 15¢ therefor, is also determined wholly by lot or chance.

PAR. 3. Respondent, in selling its said merchandise in connection with the aforesaid push cards, conducts lotteries or places in the hands of others the means of conducting lotteries in the sale of its merchandise in accordance with the sales plan hereinabove set forth. The sale of respondent's merchandise to the purchasing public, as hereinabove alleged, involves a game of chance or the sale of a chance to procure respondent's merchandise free or at a price much less than the normal retail price thereof. The use by respondent of said method in the sale of its merchandise, and the sale of its merchandise by and through the use thereof and by the aid of said method, is a practice of the sort which the common law and criminal statutes have long deemed contrary to public policy, and is contrary to an established public policy of the Government of the United States.

PAR. 4. Many persons, firms, and corporations who sell or distribute merchandise in competition with the respondent, as above alleged, are unwilling to adopt and use said method or any method involving a game of chance or the sale of a chance to win something by chance or any other method that is contrary to public policy, and such competitors refrain therefrom. Many persons are attracted by respondent's said method and by the element of chance involved in the sale thereof in the manner above described, and are thereby induced to buy and sell respondent's merchandise in preference to merchandise offered for sale and sold by said competitors of respondent who do not use the same or an equivalent method. The use of said method by respondent, because of said game of chance, has the tendency and capacity to and does divert trade and custom to respondent from its said competitors who do not use the same or an equivalent method.

PAR. 5. The aforesaid acts and practices of respondent are all to the injury and prejudice of the public and respondent's competitors, as hereinabove alleged. Said acts and practices constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, on July 21, 1937, issued and on July 22, 1937, served its complaint in this proceeding upon the respondent, Carlton, Inc., a corporation, in its own name and right and trading as Carlton Sales Company, charging it with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of the provisions of said act. After the issuance of said complaint, respondent filed answer thereto dated July 23, 1937, admitting the statements and allegations of the complaint to be true. Thereafter, this proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on the said complaint and answer thereto, and the Commission, having duly considered the matter and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent is a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Illinois, with its principal office and place of business located at 17 North Wabash Avenue, Chicago, Ill. Respondent advertises, offers for sale, and sells its merchandise, hereinafter referred to, under its own corporate name, and also advertises, offers for sale, and sells its merchandise under the trade name of Carlton Sales Company. In the course and conduct of its business, respondent is in competition with other corporations and with partnerships and individuals engaged in the sale and distribution of similar articles of merchandise in commerce between and among the various States of the United States.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of its business, as described in paragraph 1 hereof, respondent, in soliciting the sale of and in selling and distributing its merchandise in interstate commerce, has furnished various devices and plans of merchandising which involve the operation of games of chance, gift enterprises, or lottery schemes by which said merchandise is distributed to the ultimate consumers thereof wholly by lot or chance. The methods and practices adopted and used by respondent are substantially as follows:

Respondent distributes and has distributed to the public through the United States mails in interstate commerce certain literature, instructions, and sales outfits, including paper push cards, order blanks, and advertisements containing illustrations of its merchandise, and circulars explaining respondent's plan of selling said merchandise and of allotting it as premiums or prizes to the operators of the push cards. The use of said method by respondent, because of said game of chance, has the tendency and capacity to, and does, divert trade and custom to respondent from its said competitors who do not use the same or an equivalent method.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondent, Carlton, Inc., a corporation, in its own name and right and trading as Carlton Sales Company, are to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

This proceeding having been heard by the Federal Trade Commission on the complaint of the Commission and the answer of respondent dated July 28, 1937, admitting the statements and allegations of the complaint to be true, and the Commission having made its findings as to the facts and its conclusion that said respondent has violated the provisions of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

It is ordered, That the respondent, Carlton, Inc., a corporation, in its own name and right and trading as Carlton Sales Company, its officers, agents, representatives, and employees, in connection with the offering for sale, sale and distribution of merchandise in interstate commerce, do forthwith cease and desist from:

Docket 2417. Complaint, May 27, 1935—Decision, Aug. 12, 1937

Where a corporation engaged, as rectifier and wholesaler of liquors, in purchasing and bottling whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages, and in making (1) gin, with a still which it used therefor, by redistillation of purchased alcohol, not produced by it, over juniper berries and other aromatics, and (2) cordials of various kinds by processes of distillation, percolation, and maceration, and compounding, and in using small still in connection with some of aforesaid, and in selling its aforesaid various products to wholesaler and retailer purchasers in various States and in the District of Columbia, in substantial competition with those engaged in manufacture by distillation of whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages and in sale of same in trade and commerce among the various States and in said District, and with those engaged in purchasing, rectifying, blending, and bottling such various beverages and similarly selling same, and including among said competitors those who, as manufacturers and distillers from mash, wort, or wash of whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages sold by them, truthfully use words "distillery," "distilleries," "distilling," or "distillers" as a part of their corporate or trade names and on their stationery and advertising and on the labels of the bottles in which they sell and ship their said products, and those who, engaged in purchasing, rectifying, blending, and bottling such various products, do not use aforesaid words as above set forth—

- (a) Represented, through use of words "Distilled Products" in its corporate name, printed on its stationery and on the labels attached to the bottles in which it sold and shipped its said products, and in various other ways, and through such statements on its stationery as "Ask for Lionel Products" and through labels reading "Bottled by Lionel Distilled Products, Inc.," or "Made by" or "Prepared by" Lionel Distilled Products, to its customers, and furnished them with a means of representing to their vendees, both retailers and ultimate consuming public, that the whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages contained in such bottles were by it made through process of distillation from mash, wort, or wash, notwithstanding fact it did not distill said various beverages, thus bottled, labeled, sold, and transported by it, through process of original and continuous distillation from mash, wort, or wash and through continuous closed pipes and vessels until manufacture is complete, as long definitely understood from words "Distilled Products" used in connection with liquor industry and products thereof, in the trade and by the ultimate purchasing public, and did not own, operate, or control any place or places where such beverages are made by aforesaid process, and was not a distiller, for the purchase of the bottled liquors of which there is a preference on the part of a substantial portion of the purchasing public; and

- (b) Advertised "The world's largest independent producers of distilled spirits. Daily capacity 10,000 cases * * * Now join hands with Lionel Distilled Products. Middleman's profit smashed. Direct distillery * * * Retailer contract now insures sensationally low prices," and thereby represented to ultimate consumer, and as an inducement to buy its said products, that a saving had been effected by reason of its being a distiller of such products thus offered, and that middleman's profit or mark-up had thus been eliminated, facts being it was at all times itself a middleman, and no such saving had been effected or was passed on to ultimate purchaser, but profit to distiller on sale of latter's distilled products to it, its own profit and those of wholesaler and retailer were included in those States and territories in which its products were distributed;

With effect of misleading and deceiving dealers and purchasing public into the beliefs that it was a distiller or distilling company in the ordinarily accepted sense of the terms, and that the whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages sold by it were by it made or distilled from mash, wort, or wash by one continuous process, and that, by purchasing its said products they were effecting the saving of a middleman's profit, and of inducing dealers and purchasing public, acting in such beliefs, to buy its said whiskies, and other beverages, rectified and bottled by it, and with distinct tendency to give it an unfair competitive advantage over those of its competitors who did not, through use of such terms in their trade or corporate names, represent that the package of alcoholic liquor offered to the retailer, and in turn to the consumer, was a distillery-bottled package, and with tendency thereby to divert trade to it from such competitors; to the substantial injury of competition in commerce:

Held, That such acts and practices were to the prejudice of the public and competitors and constituted an unfair method of competition.

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that Lionel Distilled Products, Inc., a corporation, hereinafter referred to as respondent, has been and is using unfair methods of competition in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in said act, and in violation of the Act of Congress approved June 16, 1933, known as the "National Industrial Recovery Act," and it appearing to the said Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint, stating its charges in that respect as follows:

Complaint

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent is a corporation organized, existing, and doing business under the laws of the State of Illinois, with its office and principal place of business in the city of Chicago, in said State. It is now, and for more than one year last past has been, engaged in the business of a rectifier and wholesaler of liquors, purchasing and bottling whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages and selling the same at wholesale in constant course of trade and commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia. In the course and conduct of its said business, it causes its said products when sold to be transported from its place of business aforesaid into and through various States of the United States to the purchasers thereof, consisting of wholesalers and retailers, some located within the State of Illinois and some located in other States of the United States and the District of Columbia. In the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid respondent is now, and for more than one year last past has been, in substantial competition with other corporations and with individuals, partnerships, and firms engaged in the manufacture by distillation of whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages and in the sale thereof in trade and commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia; and in the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid respondent is, and for more than one year last past has been, in substantial competition with other corporations and with individuals, firms, and partnerships engaged in the business of purchasing, rectifying, blending, and bottling whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages and in the sale thereof in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 2. For a long period of time the words "Distilled Products" when used in connection with the liquor industry have had and still have a definite significance and meaning in the minds of the wholesalers and retailers in such industry and to the ultimate purchasing public, to wit, spirituous beverages prepared and bottled at a distillery by the distillers thereof, who have manufactured such beverages by a process of original and continuous distillation from mash, wort, or wash, through continuous closed pipes and vessels until the manufacture thereof is completed; and a substantial portion of the purchasing public prefers to buy spirituous liquors prepared and bottled by the actual distillers and manufacturers thereof.

Complaint

PAR. 3. In the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid, by the use of the words "Distilled Products" in its corporate name, printed on its stationery and on the labels attached to the bottles in which it sells and ships its said products, and in various other ways, respondent represents to its customers and furnishes them with the means of representing to their vendees, both retailers and the ultimate consuming public, that the whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages therein contained were by it manufactured through the process of distillation from mash, wort, or wash, as aforesaid, when, as a matter of fact, respondent is not a distiller, does not distill the said whiskies, gins, or other spirituous beverages by it so bottled, labeled, sold and transported, and does not own, operate, or control any place or places where such beverages are manufactured by the process of distillation from mash, wort, or wash.

PAR. 4. In the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid respondent has advertised to assist its customers in disposing to the ultimate consumer of the whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages by it so sold as aforesaid, as follows:

The world's largest independent producers of distilled spirits. Daily capacity ten thousand cases * * * Now join hands with Lionel Distilled Products. Middleman's profit smashed. Direct distillery * * * Retailer contract now insures sensationally low prices.

thereby representing to the ultimate consumer as an inducement to buy respondent's product that a saving has been effected by reason of respondent's being a distiller of products so offered for sale, and that a middleman's profit or mark up has thus been eliminated, when as a matter of fact respondent is itself a middleman and no such saving has been effected or is passed on to the ultimate purchaser, and the ultimate purchaser believing and relying upon the truth of the aforesaid representations is induced to purchase the whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages bottled and sold by the respondent.

PAR. 5. There are among the competitors of respondent engaged in the sale of spirituous beverages as mentioned in paragraph 1 hereof corporations, firms, partnerships, and individuals who manufacture and distill from mash, wort, or wash, as aforesaid, whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages sold by them and who truthfully use the words "distillery," "distilleries," "distillers," "distilling," or "distilled products" as a part of their corporate or trade names and on their stationery, and on the labels of the bottles in which they sell and ship such products. There are also among such competitors corporations, firms, partnerships, and individuals engaged in the business of purchasing, rectifying, blending, and bottling whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages who do not use the words "distillery," "distilleries," "distilling," "distillers," or "distilled products" as a part of their corporate or trade names, nor on their stationery, nor on the labels attached to the bottles in which they sell and ship their said products, and who do not misrepresent that a saving of a middleman's profit is being passed on to the consumer.

PAR 6. Representations by respondent, as set forth in paragraphs 3 and 4 hereof, are calculated to and have the capacity and tendency to and do mislead and deceive dealers and the purchasing public in the erroneous beliefs that the whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages sold by the respondent are manufactured and distilled by it from mash, wort, or wash, as aforesaid; and that in purchasing respondent's products the purchasers are effecting a saving of a middleman's profit; and are calculated to and have the capacity and tendency to and do induce dealers and the purchasing public, acting in such beliefs, to purchase the whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages bottled and sold by the respondent, thereby diverting trade to respondent from its competitors who do not by their corporate or trade names or in any other manner misrepresent that they are manufacturers by distillation from mash, wort, or wash, of whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages, and thereby respondent does substantial injury to substantial competition in interstate commerce.

PAR. 7. The acts and things above alleged to have been done and the false representations alleged to have been made by respondent are to the prejudice of the public and the competitors of respondent and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914.

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent is a corporation organized, existing and doing business under the laws of the State of Illinois, with its office and principal place of business in the city of Chicago, in said State. It is now, and for more than one year last past has been, engaged in the business of a rectifier and wholesaler of liquors, purchasing and bottling whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages and selling the same at wholesale in constant course of trade and commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia. In the course and conduct of its said business, it causes its said products when sold to be transported from its place of business aforesaid into and through various States of the United States to the purchasers thereof, consisting of wholesalers and retailers, some located within the State of Illinois and some located in other States of the United States and the District of Columbia. In the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid respondent is now, and for more than one year last past has been, in substantial competition with other corporations and with individuals, partnerships, and firms engaged in the manufacture by distillation of whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages and in the sale thereof in trade and commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia; and in the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid respondent is, and for more than one year last past has been, in substantial competition with other corporations and with individuals, firms, and partnerships engaged in the business of purchasing, rectifying, blending, and bottling whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages and in the sale thereof in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PARS. 2, 3, 4, 5, and 6. As grounds for these paragraphs of this complaint, the Federal Trade Commission relies upon the matters and things set out in paragraphs 2, 3, 4, 5, and 6 of count 1 of this complaint to the same extent as though the several allegations thereof were set out at length and in separate paragraphs herein, and the said paragraphs 2, 3, 4, 5, and 6 of count 1 of this complaint are incorporated herein by reference and adopted as the allegations of paragraphs 2, 3, 4, 5, and 6, respectively, of this count, and are hereby charged as fully and as completely as though the several averments of the said paragraphs of count 1 were separately set out and repeated verbatim.

PAR. 7. Under and pursuant to Title I of the National Industrial Recovery Act, approved June 16, 1933 (48 Stat. 195 C. 90), the President of the United States, by Executive Order No. 6182, of June 26, 1933, as supplemented by Executive Order No. 6207, of July 21, 1933, and Executive Order No. 6345, of October 20, 1933, delegated to H. A. Wallace as Secretary of Agriculture certain of the powers vested in the President of the United States by the aforesaid act.

Under and pursuant to the delegation of such powers, the said Secretary of Agriculture pursuant to Section 3 (d) of the act and Executive orders under the act, upon his own motion presented a Code of Fair Competition for the Distilled Spirits Rectifying Industry after due notice and opportunity for hearing in connection therewith had been afforded interested parties, including respondent in accordance with Title I of the National Industrial Recovery Act and applicable regulations issued thereunder, to the President of the United States who approved the same on the 9th day of December 1933, thereby constituting the said code a Code of Fair Competition within the meaning of the said National Industrial Recovery Act, for the regulation of the aforesaid industry.

That said Code will tend to effectuate the declared policy of Title 1 of the National Industrial Recovery Act as set forth in Section 1 of said Act in that the terms and provisions of such Code tend: (a) to remove obstructions to the free flow of foreign commerce, which tend to diminish the amount thereof; (b) to provide for the general welfare by promoting the organization of industry for the purposes of cooperative action among trade groups; (c) to eliminate unfair competitive practices; (d) to promote the fullest possible utilization of the present productive capacity of industries; (e) to avoid undue restriction of production (except as may be temporarily required); (f) to increase the consumption of industrial and agricultural products by increasing purchasing power; and (g) otherwise to rehabilitate industry."

By his approval of the said Code on December 9, 1933, the President of the United States, pursuant to the authority vested in him by Title I of the National Industrial Recovery Act aforesaid, made and issued his certain written Executive order, wherein he adopted and approved the report, recommendations, and findings of the said Secretary of Agriculture, and ordered that the said Code of Fair Competition be, and the same thereby was approved, and by virtue of the National Industrial Recovery Act aforesaid, the following provisions of Article V of said code became and still is one of the standards of fair competition for the Distilled Spirits Rectifying Industry and is binding upon every member of said Industry and this respondent:

The following practices constitute unfair methods of competition and shall not be engaged in by any member of the industry:

SECTION 1. False Advertising.—To publish or disseminate in any manner any false advertising of any rectified product. Any advertisement shall be deemed to be false if it is untrue in any particular, or if directly or by ambiguity, omission or inference it tends to create a misleading impression.

PAR. 8. The use by respondent of the words "Distilled Products" in its corporate name, printed upon its stationery and on the labels attached to the bottles in which it sells and ships such products and various other misrepresentations hereinbefore set out, constitute false advertising within the meaning of the aforesaid provision of Article V and tend to and do create the misleading impressions that respondent is engaged in the business of distilling spirits from mash, wort, or wash, that the spirituous beverages by it so sold and transported have been prepared and bottled by the original distillers thereof, and that the whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages sold by respondent have been manufactured and distilled by it from mash, wort, or wash as aforesaid, all contrary to the provisions of Section 1, Article V, of the Code aforesaid.

PAR. 9. The above alleged methods, acts, and practices of the respondent are and have been in violation of the standard of fair competition for the Distilled Spirits Rectifying Industry of the United States. Such violation of such standard in the aforesaid transactions in interstate commerce and other transactions which affect interstate commerce in the manner set forth in paragraph 6 of count 1 hereof, are in violation of Section 3 of Title I of the National Industrial Recovery Act and they are unfair methods of competition in commerce within the meaning of the Federal Trade Commission Act as amended.

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public, and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. The respondent, Lionel Distilled Products, Inc., is a corporation incorporated in January 1934, existing and doing business under the laws of the State of Illinois, with its office and principal place of business at 1919-1927 West Pershing Road, Chicago, Ill. Shortly after its incorporation and organization it engaged in the business of a rectifier and wholesaler of liquors, purchasing and bottling whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages and selling the same at wholesale in constant course of trade and commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia. In the course and conduct of its said business, from the date of its organization aforesaid up until about December 1936, it caused its said products, when sold, to be transported from its place of business aforesaid into and through various States of the United States, principally Minnesota, Wisconsin, Texas, Louisiana, Missouri, Nebraska, Colorado, Illinois, Kentucky, and Indiana to the purchasers thereof, consisting of wholesalers and retailers, some located within the State of Illinois and some located in other States of the United States and the District of Columbia.

In the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid, respondent was in substantial competition with other corporations and with individuals, partnerships, and firms engaged in the manufacture by distillation of whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages and in the sale thereof in trade and commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia; and in the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid respondent was in substantial competition with other corporations and with individuals, firms, and partnerships engaged in the business of purchasing, rectifying, blending, and bottling whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages and in the sale thereof in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 2. Upon the premises of respondent's place of business aforesaid, there was a 200-gallon gin still for use in the production of gins by a process of rectification whereby tax-paid alcohol, purchased but not produced by respondent, was redistilled over juniper berries and other aromatics. Such rectification of alcoholic spirits by respondent did not make or constitute it a distillery or a distiller, as defined by Section 3247 of the Revised Statutes regulating Internal Revenue.

Respondent distilled an average of 300 gallons of such gin a week and this did not constitute over 5 percent of respondent's total business.

Respondent also produced cordials of various kinds by processes of distillation, percolation, and maceration, plus compounding, in connection with some of which a small still was used. Prior to August 15, 1936, at which time the existing regulations of the Federal Alcohol Administration Division of the Treasury Department became effective, it was permissible thereunder for respondent to term and designate such cordials as "distilled." Subsequently thereto such cordials were not allowed to be labeled or advertised as a distilled product although they might be made by the same method. These cordials constituted approximately 30 percent of respondent's business volume and the remaining 65 percent was divided as follows: Straight whiskies purchased in bulk by respondent from other distillers and bottled and sold by it—60 percent; and whiskies purchased in bulk from other distillers and rectified and bottled by respondent—5 percent.

PAR. 3. Rectifying, in the distilled spirits rectifying industry, means the mixing of whiskies of different ages or types or the mixing of other ingredients with whiskies, but reducing proof of whiskey by adding water is not rectifying. Rectifiers also blend whiskies with neutral spirits, (grain alcohol).

All distillers may and many of them do operate an establishment separate from their distillery, usually 600 feet or more away, known as a distillery rectifying plant, in which they carry on the same processes as are carried on by rectifiers who are not distillers and who do not own, control or operate any distillery. However, in such event, the distillers must apply for and obtain a separate and additional permit known as a rectifier's permit, which is the same kind of permit as obtained by any rectifier.

Some distilleries have a tax-paid bottling room on the distillery bonded premises wherein the distilled spirits are bottled straight as they come from the still, or in a bonded warehouse after aging, or after reduction of proof. Any rectifying done by a distiller, however, must be done in his rectifying plant under his rectifier's permit.

If the spirits bottled by the distiller, either at his distillery, in bond after aging, or in his tax-paid bottling room, or in his rectifying plant, are spirits of his own distillation, he may and usually does use his "D" symbol, which is the letter "D" followed by a number, and usually blown into the bottom of the bottle in which said spirits are bottled.

A distiller often does purchase distilled spirits of others and bottle them in his rectifying plant, or blend them with spirits of his own distillation, or with neutral spirits, in which event he uses his "R" symbol which is an "R" followed by the number of his rectifier's permit. The rectifier uses his "R" number on his bottles exclusively, this respondent's symbol number being "R-49."

If the distilled spirits bottled by a distiller are spirits other than of his own distillation, he is required to and does put "Bottled by ----- Company" or "Blended and Bottled by ----- Company" as the case may be, and, if they are spirits of his own distillation, he must put "Distilled and Bottled by ----- Company."

The rectifier, on the other hand, when he bottles his product, is required to and does put "Bottled by ----- Company" or "Bottled and Blended by ----- Company," as the case may be.

Generally speaking the purchasing public is not familiar with all of these details, and many people in the trade are not familiar with them, although the wholesalers and retailers, after the first two years following the repeal of the prohibition amendment became a great deal more familiar with them than they were at the outset, until at the present time the liquor trade generally has come to know who are the rectifiers and who are the distillers and in a general way is more familiar with the nature of these respective businesses.

Respondent, during its conduct of its business as aforesaid, conformed to the provisions and requirements of the Federal Alcohol Administration Act and the regulations from time to time promulgated thereunder as to its labeling and advertising which, like the distiller-bottler's labeling and advertising, must conform to the standards of identity prescribed by the Federal Alcohol Administration. This means that in the case of two bottles of blended whiskey, labeled exactly alike and carrying on their respective labels the identical specifications as to contents, age and kind of spirits—but one bottle emanated from and was bottled by a distiller and the other emanated from and was bottled by a rectifier—the contents of the two bottles would be identical to all practical intents and purposes. Likewise, if a rectifier buys a certain type and age of straight whiskey from a distiller and bottles it without rectification and the same distiller has bottled some of that same whiskey straight, there would be no difference in fact between the two bottles of whiskey by reason of the fact that a rectifier had bottled one and a distiller had bottled the other. It is not possible, however, to determine from the presence of the aforementioned phrases, "Blended and Bottled by" alone, or the phrase "Bottled by" alone, on the label, whether the package was bottled by a rectifier who is a distiller or by a rectifier who is not a distiller.

With reference to the gin produced by respondent by the redistillation of purchased alcohol over juniper berries and other aromatics, existing regulations promulgated pursuant to the Federal Alcohol Administration Act, approved August 29, 1935 (49 Stat. 977), provide that rectifiers who redistill purchased alcohol over juniper berries and other aromatics must call such resulting product "distilled gin," and require that the labels state who distilled it. This serves to distinguish between gin produced by such method and "cold" or compound gin prepared by mixing neutral spirits with essential flavoring oils.

PAR. 4. In the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid, by use of the words "Distilled Products" in its corporate name, printed on its stationery and on the labels attached to the bottles in which it sold and shipped its said products, and in various other ways, respondent represented to its customers and furnished them with a means of representing to their vendees, both retailers and the ultimate consuming public, that the whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages therein contained were by it manufactured through the process of distillation from mash, wort, or wash as aforesaid, when, as a matter of fact, respondent was not a distiller and did not distill the said whiskies, gins, or other spirituous beverages by it so bottled, labeled, sold, and transported, and does not now and never did own, operate, or control any place or places where such beverages are manufactured by the process of distillation from mash, wort, or wash.

The words "Distilled Products" of and in themselves might not constitute a misrepresentation inasmuch as this respondent was engaged in the business of handling distilled products, namely alcoholic beverages which originated in a distillery and in some cases were not rectified or blended. However, this respondent used its full name "Lionel Distilled Products, Inc." on said labels. On its stationery it advertised "Ask for Lionel Products," plainly indicating and expressing that the distilled products were "Lionel distilled." Some of the labels read "Bottled by Lionel Distilled Products, Inc." Some of the other labels contained the legend "Made by Lionel Distilled Products" and formerly one label on a brand of straight whiskey read "Prepared by Lionel Distilled Products." From these facts the Commission infers a distinct tendency, if not an intention, to mislead and deceive the public, a substantial portion of which prefers to buy spirituous liquors prepared and bottled by distillers.

Further, in the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid, respondent advertised to assist its customers in disposing to the ultimate consumer of the whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages by it so sold as aforesaid:

The world's largest independent producers of distilled spirits. Daily capacity 10,000 cases * * * Now join hands with Lionel Distilled Products. Middleman's profit smashed. Direct distillery * * * Retailer contract now insures sensationally low prices.

thereby representing to the ultimate consumer as an inducement to buy respondent's products that a saving had been effected by reason of respondent's being a distiller of the products so offered for sale, and that a middleman's profit or mark-up had thus been eliminated, when as a matter of fact respondent was at all times itself a middleman and no such saving had been effected or was passed on to the ultimate purchaser.

At one time during the above-described period of its operations respondent distributed its products in Washington, D. C., through a wholesale subsidiary and had warehousing arrangements in the State of New York and in the State of Texas which were in substance its own subsidiaries, but in each of those three instances the local distributor placed a mark-up on respondent's goods over and above its cost price before selling to the retailer. So that at all times, in all the States and territories where respondent's products were distributed, there was first, a profit to the distiller on the sale of the distilled spirits to respondent; second, respondent's profit; third, the wholesaler's profit; and fourth, the retailer's profit; and no middleman's profit was eliminated as represented by respondent.

PAR. 5. Respondent admitted, the testimony of those having long experience in both the distilled spirits rectifying industry and the distilling industry established, and the Commission finds, that the foregoing rectification of alcoholic spirits by redistillation over juniper berries and other aromatics in the production of gin did not make or constitute this respondent a distilling company in the sense commonly understood by the liquor industry. There were also called a number of witnesses, some being members of the trade and some being members of the purchasing public, who, with few exceptions testified that the word "distilled" or similar words such as "distillers," "distilleries," and "distilling," etc., indicated the initial distilling process of producing spirituous and alcoholic liquors from grain, mash, etc., or the manufacturer thereof. The greater number of these witnesses testified that the use of such words would induce them to purchase the products of the concern using such words in its corporate name or on the label of the bottle containing the products in the belief that a distiller's product would be more uniform and that a manufacturer's name should mean something. They testified that they preferred buying in as direct a manner as practical and considered distillers as being more responsible than a rectifier or bottler of spirituous liquors. It was testified by many of these witnesses that the use of the word "distilled" in the corporate name of the respondent would indicate to them that the respondent was the actual distiller of the product, and they would give preference in purchasing a product which bore a label containing such corporate name in competition with a product bearing a label which did not contain the word "distilled," or any other word indicating a distilling process in the corporate name.

The Commission finds that for a long period of time the words "distilled products," when used as respondent has used them, in connection with the liquor industry and with the products thereof, have had and still have a definite significance and meaning, to the minds of wholesalers and retailers in such industry and to the ultimate purchasing public, to wit, the manufacturing of spirituous liquors by an original and continuous distillation from mash, wort, or wash, through continuous closed pipes and vessels until the manufacture thereof is complete, and a substantial portion of the purchasing public prefers to buy spirituous liquors bottled and prepared by distillers.

PAR. 6. There were among the competitors of respondent engaged in the sale of spirituous beverages, as mentioned in paragraph 1 hereof, corporations, firms, partnerships, and individuals who manufactured and distilled from mash, wort, or wash, whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages sold by them, and who truthfully used the words "distillery," "distilleries," "distillers," or "distilling" as a part of their corporate or trade names and on their stationery, advertising, and on the labels of the bottles in which they sold and shipped such products.

There were also among such competitors, corporations, firms, partnerships, and individuals engaged in the business of purchasing, rectifying, blending, and bottling whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages in rectifying plants under rectifiers' permits who did not use the words "distillery," "distilleries," "distilling," "distillers," or "distilled products," as a part of their corporate or trade names, nor on their stationery, advertising, nor on the labels attached to the bottles in which they sold and shipped their said products.

PAR. 7. The representations by respondent as set forth in paragraph 4 hereof had the capacity and tendency to and did mislead and deceive dealers and the purchasing public into the beliefs that respondent Lionel Distilled Products, Inc., was a distiller or distilling company in the ordinarily accepted sense of those terms, and that the whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages sold by respondents were manufactured or distilled by Lionel Distilled Products, Inc., from mash, wort, or wash by one continuous process, and that by purchasing respondent's said products they were effecting the saving of a middleman's profit, and had the capacity and tendency to and did induce dealers and the purchasing public, acting in such beliefs, to purchase the whiskies, gins, and other alcoholic beverages rectified and bottled by the respondent. The Commission finds that the whole situation in this industry is such that the foregoing representations had a distinct tendency to give respondent what amounted to unfair competitive advantage over those of its competitors who did not, by the use of such terms in their trade or corporate names, represent that the package of alcoholic liquor offered to the retailer and in turn to the consumers, was a distillery-bottled package and this in turn tended to divert trade to respondent from such competitors and thereby respondent did substantial injury to competition in interstate commerce.

PAR. 8. Because of existing regulations promulgated under the Federal Alcohol Administration Act approved August 29, 1935 (49 Stat. 977), providing that rectifiers who redistill purchased alcohol over juniper berries and other aromatics may label such resulting product "Distilled Gin," and requiring that the labels state who distilled it, the Commission has excepted gins produced by respondent by redistillation of alcohol over juniper berries and other aromatics from the prohibitions of its order.

PAR. 9. The Commission's complaint in this case was issued on the same day as the decision of the United States Supreme Court in the case of A. L. A. Schechter Poultry Corporation, et al, vs. United States (295 U. S. 495), and contained two counts. Count 1 specifically charged a violation of the Federal Trade Commission Act, and count 2 charged that the practices of respondent, as herein before set out, were unfair methods within the meaning of the Federal Trade Commission Act because they were in violation of Section 3 of Title I of the National Industrial Recovery Act, which was invalidated by the aforesaid decision. For that reason the Commission is dismissing the complaint as to count 2 thereof.

PAR. 10. It has been represented to the Commission in this proceeding that during the month of December 1936, the respondent's stockholders commenced to wind up the affairs of the company and that all of its assets were completely disposed of by December 31, 1936. However, as of the present time, the company still maintains its corporate existence and the Commission can have no assurance that its plans may not change and that it may not resume the unfair acts and practices hereinbefore set forth.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of respondent, Lionel Distilled Products, Inc., were to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors, and constituted unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

It is ordered, That the respondent, Lionel Distilled Products, Inc., its officers, representatives, agents, and employees, in connection with the offering for sale or sale and distribution by it in interstate commerce or in the District of Columbia, of whiskies, gins, or other spirituous beverages (except gins produced by it through a process of rectification whereby alcohol purchased but not produced by respondent is redistilled over juniper berries and other aromatics), cease and desist from:

1. Representing through the use of the words "Distilled Products" in its corporate name, on all stationery, advertising, or labels attached to the bottles in which its said products are sold and shipped, or in any other way by word or words of like import, (a) that respondent is a distiller of the said whiskies, gins, or other spirituous beverages; or, (b) that the said whiskies, gins, or other spirituous beverages;

ages were by it manufactured through a process of distillation; or (c) that respondent owns, operates, or controls a place or places where any such products are by it manufactured by a process of original and continuous distillation from mash, wort or wash, through continuous closed pipes and vessels until the manufacture thereof is completed, unless and until respondent shall actually own, operate, or control such a place or places;

2. Representing that in purchasing its said products the purchaser is saving a middleman's profit.

It is further ordered, That the said complaint be and the same is hereby dismissed as to count 2 thereof.

It is further ordered, That the said respondent, within 60 days from and after the date of service upon it of this order, shall file with the Commission a report or reports in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which it is complying and has complied with the order to cease and desist hereinabove set forth.

IN THE MATTER OF PARAMOUNT DISTILLING CORPORATIONCOMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 26, 1914*Docket 2446. Complaint, June 19, 1935—Decision, Aug. 12, 1937*

Where a corporation engaged in rectifying and bottling both rectified and straight distilled spirits, and in making gin, with a still which it used therefor, by redistillation of purchased alcohol, not produced by it, over juniper berries and other aromatics, and in selling its aforesaid products to wholesalers and distributors thereof in various States and in the District of Columbia, in substantial competition with those engaged in the manufacture by true distillation of whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages from mash, wort, or wash, and in selling such products in trade and commerce among the various States and in said District, and with those engaged in purchasing, rectifying, blending, and bottling such various beverages and similarly selling same, and including among said competitors those who, as manufacturers and distillers from mash, wort, or wash of whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages sold by them, truthfully use words "distillery," "distilleries," "distillers," or "distilling" as a part of their corporate and trade names and on their stationery and advertising and on the labels of the bottles in which they sell and ship their said products, and those who, engaged in purchasing, rectifying, blending, bottling, and selling such various products, do not use aforesaid words as above set forth—

Represented, through use of word "Distilling" in its corporate name, printed on its stationery and advertising, and on the labels attached to the bottles in which it sold and shipped its said products, and in various other ways, to its customers, and furnished same with a means of representing to their vendees, both retailers and ultimate consuming public, that it was a distiller and that the whiskies, gins, and other alcoholic beverages contained in such bottles were by it made through process of distillation, notwithstanding fact it did not distill said various beverages, thus bottled, labeled, sold, and transported by it, through original and continuous distillation from mash, wort, or wash, through continuous closed pipes and vessels until manufacture is complete, as long definitely understood from word "distilling," used in connection with liquor industry and products thereof, in the trade and by the ultimate consuming public, and did not own, operate, or control any place or places where such beverages are made by process of distillation from mash, wort, or wash, and was not a distiller, for the purchase of the bottled liquors of which there is a preference on the part of a substantial portion of the purchasing public, and plant, equipment, and requirements of which are more elaborate, extensive and burdensome than those of rectifier;

With effect of misleading and deceiving dealers and purchasing public into the beliefs that it was a distiller or distilling company in the ordinarily accepted sense of those terms, and that the whiskies, gins and other

COMPLAINT

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent is a corporation organized, existing, and doing business under the laws of the State of Illinois, with its office and principal place of business in the city of Chicago, in said State. It is now, and for more than one year last past has been, engaged in the business of wholesaler and rectifier, purchasing, rectifying, blending, and bottling whiskies, gins, and other alcoholic beverages and in the sale thereof in constant course of trade and commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia. In the course and conduct of its said business, it causes its said products when sold to be transported from its place of business aforesaid into and through various States of the United States to the purchasers thereof, consisting of wholesalers and retailers, located in other States of the United States and the District of Columbia. In the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid, respondent is now, and for more than one year last past has been, in substantial competition with other corporations and with individuals, partnerships, and firms engaged in the manufacture by distillation of whiskies, gins, and other alcoholic beverages and in the sale thereof in trade and commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia; and in the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid, respondent is now, and for more than one year last past has been, in substantial competition with other corporations, and with individuals, firms, and partnerships engaged in the business of purchasing, rectifying, blending, and bottling whiskies, gins, and other alcoholic beverages and in the sale thereof in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 2. For a long period of time the word "Distilling" when used in connection with the liquor industry and the products thereof has had and still has a definite significance and meaning to the minds of the wholesalers and retailers in such industry and to the ultimate purchasing public, to wit, the manufacturing of such liquors by the process of original and continuous distillation from mash, wort, or wash, through continuous closed pipes and vessels until the manufacture thereof is completed; and a substantial portion of the purchasing public prefers to buy alcoholic liquors prepared and bottled by distillers.

PAR. 3. In the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid, by the use of the word "Distilling" in its corporate name, printed on its stationery and advertising, and on the labels attached to the bottles in which it sells and ships its said products, and in various other ways, respondent represents to its customers and furnishes them with the means of representing to their vendees, both retailers and the ultimate consuming public, that it is a distiller and that the whiskies, gins, and other alcoholic beverages therein contained were by it manufactured through the process of distillation from mash, wort, or wash, as aforesaid, when, as a matter of fact, respondent is not a distiller, does not distill the said whiskies, gins, or other alcoholic beverages by it so bottled, labeled, sold, and transported, and does not own, operate or control any place or places where such beverages are manufactured by the process of distillation from mash, wort, or wash.

PAR. 4. There are among the competitors of respondent engaged in the sale of alcoholic beverages as mentioned in paragraph 1 hereof corporations, firms, partnerships, and individuals who manufacture and distill from mash, wort, or wash, as aforesaid, whiskies, gins, and other alcoholic beverages sold by them and who truthfully use the words "distillery," "distilleries," "distillers," or "distilling" as a part of their corporate or trade names and on their stationery and advertising, and on the labels of the bottles in which they sell and ship such products. There are also among such competitors corporations, firms, partnerships, and individuals engaged in the business of purchasing, rectifying, blending, bottling, and selling whiskies, gins, and other alcoholic beverages who do not use the words "distillery," "distilleries," "distilling," or "distillers" as a part of their corporate or trade names, nor on their stationery or advertising, nor on the labels attached to the bottles in which they sell and ship their said products.

PAR. 5. Representation by respondent, as set forth in paragraph 3 hereof, is calculated to and has the capacity and tendency to and does mislead and deceive dealers and the purchasing public into the beliefs that respondent is a distiller and that the whiskies, gins, and other alcoholic beverages sold by the respondent are manufactured and distilled by it from mash, wort, or wash, as aforesaid, and is calculated to and has the capacity and tendency to and does induce dealers and the purchasing public, acting in such beliefs, to purchase the whiskies, gins, and other alcoholic beverages bottled and sold by the respondent, thereby diverting trade to respondent from its competitors who do not by their corporate or trade names or in any other manner misrepresent that they are manufacturers by distillation from mash, wort, or wash, of whiskies, gins, and other alcoholic beverages, and thereby respondent does substantial injury to substantial competition in interstate commerce.

PAR. 6. The acts and things above alleged to have been done and the false representations alleged to have been made by respondent are to the prejudice of the public and the competitors of respondent and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914.

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Findings

Morehouse, attorney for the Commission, before John L. Hornor, an examiner of the Commission, theretofore duly designated by it. No testimony was introduced or offered in opposition to the allegations of the complaint by R. E. Joyce, attorney for respondent. The testimony and other evidence in support of the allegations of the complaint were duly recorded and filed in the office of the Commission. Thereafter, the proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on the said complaint, the answer thereto, testimony and other evidence, and briefs in support of and in opposition to the complaint, no oral arguments having been made; and the Commission having duly considered the same and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public, and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent is a corporation originally incorporated October 16, 1934, existing and doing business under the laws of the State of Illinois, with its principal office and place of business at 512 South Peoria Street, Chicago, Ill.

It is now and has been since February 2, 1935, engaged in the business of rectifying and bottling both rectified and straight distilled spirits, and in the sale thereof, in constant course of trade and commerce, between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

In the course and conduct of its said business, it causes said products, when sold, to be transported from its place of business aforesaid into and through various States of the United States to the purchasers thereof, consisting of wholesalers and distributors, some located within the State of New York, and some located in other States of the United States and the District of Columbia.

In the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid, respondent is now, and since February 1935, has been, in substantial competition with other corporations and with individuals, partnerships, and firms engaged in the manufacture by true distillation of whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages from mash, wort, or wash, and in the sale thereof in trade and commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia; and in the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid respondent is, and since February 1935, has been, in substantial competition with other corporations and with individuals, firms, and partnerships engaged in the business of purchasing, rectifying, blending, and bottling whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages in rectifying plants under rectifiers' permits, and in the sale thereof in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 2. Upon the premises of respondent's place of business aforesaid, there is a still for use in the production of gins by a process of rectification whereby alcohol, purchased but not produced by respondent, is redistilled over juniper berries and other aromatics. Such rectification of alcoholic spirits does not make or constitute respondent a distillery or a distiller, as defined by Section 3247 of the Revised Statutes regulating Internal Revenue.

A brief description of the equipment used by said respondent at its rectifying plant in Chicago is as follows: "66 processing receptacles with a total capacity of 2,393 gallons; 40 bottling tanks, total capacity 10,330 gallons; 1 only 40-gallon still for distilling gin; receiving tank, 115 gallons; 1 vacuum filling machine for bottling; 4 regular filling machines for bottling; 5 conveyor tables for bottling; also filter machine.

PAR. 3. Rectifying in the distilled spirits rectifying industry means the mixing of whiskies of different ages or types or the mixing of other ingredients with whiskies, but reducing proof of whiskey by adding water is not rectifying. Rectifiers also blend whiskies with neutral spirits (grain alcohol).

Many distillers operate a separate establishment 600 feet or more away from their distillery, known as a rectifying plant, wherein they operate in the same manner as described above, for a rectifier—sometimes exclusively with spirits of their own distillation and sometimes with spirits purchased from other distillers, or both.

Some distilleries have a tax-paid bottling room on the distillery bonded premises, wherein their distilled spirits are bottled straight as they come from the still, or in a bonded warehouse after aging, or after reduction of proof.

Any rectifying by a distiller, however, must be done in his rectifying plant under his rectifier's permit.

On some bottled liquors, whether bottled at the distiller's rectifying plant or at any rectifying plant, appear the words "Bottled" or "Blended" (as the case may be) "by the----- Company."

If the distilled spirits therein contained are bottled by a distiller either in his distillery or are spirits of his own distillation bottled in his rectifying plant, the distiller may and does put "Distilled and Bottled by----- Company." If, in the distiller's rectifying plant, other spirits have been blended or rectified, he puts "Blended and Bottled by _____ Company."

With reference to the gin produced by respondent by the redistillation of purchased alcohol over juniper berries and other aromatics, existing regulations promulgated pursuant to Federal Alcohol Administration Act, approved August 29, 1935, (49 Stat. 977), provide that rectifiers who redistill purchased alcohol over juniper berries and other aromatics must call such resulting product "distilled gin," and require that the labels state who distilled it. This serves to distinguish between gin produced by such method and "cold" or compounded gin prepared by mixing neutral spirits with essential flavoring oils.

There is usually blown in the bottom of each bottle a symbol consisting of a letter followed by a number, identifying the bottler, viz, a "D" for a distillery and "R" for a rectifier, the number following said letter corresponding with the distiller's or rectifier's permit; thus, "R 233" designates this respondent.

A distiller, who also operates a rectifying plant, having both kinds of permits, may use either symbol depending upon whether the liquor contained in the bottle was produced and bottled under his distiller's or his rectifier's permit.

A distiller has a maximum bond of $100,000.00, and is permitted to have untaxed liquor; the average bond of the rectifier is about $5,000.00; the distiller must own the fee title of the premises upon which the business is conducted, or have consent from the owner waiving the owner's interest so that the Government can have a first lien upon the property for taxes; a distillery is under constant general supervision by storekeeper gaugers, who are always there; absolute supervision is maintained over the bonded warehouse of a distillery and rectifying plant; they do not lock the premises and maintain general supervision over the bottling and rectification; the primary distinction is that one storekeeper gauger may take care of several rectifying plants, but at the distillery he is in constant supervision, primarily to supervise the tax payments; a rectifier is not permitted to store spirits in bond; a distiller produces spirits from grains, alcohol, molasses, and fruits; a rectifier produces no distilled spirits whatever, but must obtain them from the producer or from someone holding warehouse certificates; the requirements are considerably more detailed in the case of a distiller than in the case of a rectifier.

A distiller must have a distillery, which must be a complete building and a warehouse, a separate building; he has to have necessary weighing equipment, a grain hopper, cooker, cooking equipment, mash tubs, fermenters, sufficient distilling equipment to take care of his continuous distillation until the spirits are run through the pipe lines into the receiving tanks; at the warehouse he has to have the weighing and testing instruments for checking and many other things; a rectifier is not required to have a separate building. A rectifying plant may consist of a room within a building. He needs no bonded warehouse. If one room, it would have to be divided into three separate rooms by wire mesh partitions. The regulations for the equipment of a rectifier are not so specific as those for a distiller.

Knowledge of these details is not widespread among the retail trade and is very limited to the general public. All whiskies, whether emanating from distilleries or rectifiers, are generally in the trade conceded to be "distilled products."

It is not possible to determine from the presence of the phrase "Blended and Bottled by" alone, or the phrase "Bottled by" alone, on the label whether the package was bottled by a rectifier who is a distiller or by a rectifier who is not a distiller.

PAR. 4. In the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid, by the use of the word "Distilling" in its corporate name, printed on its stationery and advertising, and on the labels attached to the bottles in which it sells and ships its said products, and in various other ways, respondent represents to its customers and furnishes them with the means of representing to their vendees, both retailers and the ultimate consuming public, that it is a distiller and that the whiskies, gins, and other alcoholic beverages therein contained were by it manufactured through the process of distillation from mash, wort, or wash, as aforesaid, when, as a matter of fact, respondent is not a distiller, does not distill the said whiskies, gins, or other alcoholic beverages by it so bottled, labeled, sold, and transported, and does not own, operate, or control any place or places where such beverages are manufactured by the process of distillation from mash, wort, or wash.

The testimony of those having long experience in both the distilled spirits rectifying industry and the distilling industry, established, and the Commission finds, that the foregoing rectification of alcoholic spirits by redistillation over juniper berries and other aromatics in the production of gin does not make or constitute this respondent a distilling company in the sense commonly understood by the liquor industry. There were also called a large number of witnesses who were lay-members of the purchasing public, and with few exceptions, their testimony was to the effect, and the Commission also finds it to be a fact, that by such terms as "distilling" or "distillery" or "distiller" when used in the trade or corporate name of a concern handling alcoholic beverages, the public understands that that concern is engaged in the initial distilling process of producing spirituous or alcoholic beverages from fermented grain or mash, and that they have a preference for a distillery bottled package over one bottled by a rectifier.

The Commission finds that for a long period of time the word "distilling" when used in connection with the liquor industry and with the products thereof has had and still has a definite significance and meaning to the minds of wholesalers and retailers in such industry and to the ultimate purchasing public, to wit, the manufacturing of spirituous liquors by an original and continuous distillation from mash, wort, or wash, through continuous closed pipes and vessels until the manufacture thereof is complete, and a substantial portion of the purchasing public prefers to buy spirituous liquors bottled and prepared by distillers.

PAR. 5. There are among the competitors of respondent engaged in the sale of spirituous beverages, as mentioned in paragraph 1 hereof, corporations, firms, partnerships, and individuals who manufacture and distill from mash, wort, or wash, whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages sold by them, and who truthfully use the words "distillery," "distilleries," "distillers," or "distilling" as a part of their corporate or trade names and on their stationery, advertising, and on the labels of the bottles in which they sell and ship such products.

There are also among such competitors, corporations, firms, partnerships, and individuals engaged in the business of purchasing, rectifying, blending, and bottling whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages in rectifying plants under rectifiers permits who do not use the words "distillery," "distilleries," "distilling," or "distillers" as a part of their corporate or trade names, nor on their stationery, advertising, nor on the labels attached to the bottles in which they sell and ship their said products.

PAR. 6. Subsequently to the issuance of complaint herein, and on the 3rd day of June 1936, pursuant to proper application approved by the requisite governmental authorities, there was issued to respondent by the Federal Alcohol Administration a basic distiller's permit, No. D-740, authorizing it to distill spirituous beverages from mash, wort, or wash, but up to the present time respondent has not commenced operations under said basic permit.

That permit authorized respondent to engage in the production and sale of distilled spirits at a registered distillery not yet in existence, at St. Charles, Ill. The construction of such distillery was begun at St. Charles, Ill., by the Mervyn Building Corporation, a company owned outright by Mr. N. C. Meyer, Mr. M. C. Meyer, and Mr. Joseph N. Meyer, under an agreement by which the land and buildings may be purchased by the Paramount Distilling Corporation, upon completion, for the sum of $200,000.00.

All of the moneys advanced by the Mervyn Building Corporation for the construction of this distillery have been furnished by N. C. Meyer, M. C. Meyer, and Joseph N. Meyer.

The distillery, when completed, will have a capacity of approximately 4,000 gallons of distilled spirits per eight-hour working day, and at the time of the hearings it was anticipated that actual operation of the distillery by the Paramount Distilling Corporation would commence the latter part of January 1937.

Respondent expressed the intention, that as soon as the construction was completed and the necessary arrangements could be made, to proceed to engage in the manufacture of distilled spirits by a process of original and continuous distillation from mash, wort, or wash at the aforesaid distillery.

Respondent has not yet engaged in actual distillery operations.

PAR. 7. The representations by respondent, as set forth in paragraph 4 hereof, have the capacity and tendency to and do mislead and deceive dealers and the purchasing public into the beliefs that respondent Paramount Distilling Corporation is a distiller or distilling company in the ordinarily accepted sense of those terms, and that the whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages sold by respondents are manufactured or distilled by Paramount Distilling Corporation from mash, wort, or wash by one continuous process, and have the capacity and tendency to and do induce dealers and the purchasing public, acting in such beliefs, to purchase the whiskies, gins, and other alcoholic beverages rectified and bottled by the respondent. The Commission finds that the whole situation in this industry is such that the foregoing representations have a distinct tendency to give respondent what amounts to unfair competitive advantage over those of its competitors who do not, by the use of such terms in their trade or corporate names, represent that the package of alcoholic liquor offered to the retailer and in turn to the consumers, is a distillery-bottled package and this in turn tends to divert trade to respondent from such competitors and thereby respondent does substantial injury to competition in interstate commerce.

PAR. 8. Because of existing regulations promulgated under the Federal Alcohol Administration Act approved August 29, 1935 (49 Stat. 977), providing that rectifiers who redistill purchased alcohol over juniper berries and other aromatics may label such resulting product "Distilled Gin," and requiring that the label state who distilled it, the Commission has excepted gins produced by respondent by redistillation of alcohol over juniper berries and other aromatics from the prohibitions of its order.

Order

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of respondent, Paramount Distilling Corporation, are to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

It is ordered, That the respondent, Paramount Distilling Corporation, its officers, representatives, agents, and employees, in connection with the offering for sale or sale and distribution by it in interstate commerce or in the District of Columbia, of whiskies, gins, or other spirituous beverages (except gins produced by it through a process of rectification whereby alcohol purchased but not produced by respondent is redistilled over juniper berries and other aromatics), do cease and desist from:

Representing, through the use of the word "distilling" in its corporate name, on all stationery, advertising, or labels attached to the bottles in which its said products are sold and shipped, or in any other way by word or words of like import, (a) that respondent is a distiller of the said whiskies, gins, or other spirituous beverages; or, (b) that the said whiskies, gins, or other spirituous beverages were by it manufactured through a process of distillation; or (c) that respondent owns, operates or controls a place or places where any such products are by it manufactured by a process of original and continuous distillation from mash, wort, or wash, through continuous closed pipes and vessels until the manufacture thereof is completed, unless and until respondent shall actually own, operate, or control such a place or places.

It is further ordered, That the said respondent, within 60 days from and after the date of service upon it of this order, shall file with the Commission a report or reports in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which it is complying and has complied with the order to cease and desist hereinabove set forth.

ARPAUL COMPANY, INC.

Docket 2748. Complaint, Mar. 20, 1936—Decision, Aug. 12, 1937

Where a corporation engaged in sale and distribution of its "ORTOSAN" preparation for facial treatment, in substantial competition with others engaged in sale in interstate commerce of creams and other preparations used and useful for beautification of face and skin—

(a) Falsely represented, in radio broadcasts, advertisements of interstate circulation, letters, pamphlets, and other forms of advertising media, that said preparation nourished and rejuvenated skin or face, and that use thereof would restore youthful contours to face, chin, and neck, eliminate sagging lines, erase wrinkles and blemishes, and banish large pores and fine lines, and immediately produce a fresh, healthy skin, and that it would keep the face looking younger, and that it was five creams in one and combined everything needed to give one a beautiful skin; and

(b) Falsely represented, as aforesaid, that said product was the highest praised skin preparation in the world and had been endorsed by leading medical authorities and leading beauty specialists;

With effect of misleading and deceiving many prospective purchasers of preparations for use in beautification of face and skin, and of causing them to believe that representations made by it were true, and that said preparation possessed properties and efficacy claimed, and of causing substantial portion of such persons, by reason of such erroneous beliefs, to buy said "ORTOSAN," and with result thereby of unfairly and unlawfully diverting trade in commerce to it from its competitors who do not misrepresent in any manner the properties or efficacy of their products; to their substantial injury and to the injury of the public:

Held, That such acts and practices were to the prejudice of the public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition.

Mr. Astor Hogg for the Commission.

Mr. William Huck, Jr., of New York City, for respondent.

COMPLAINT

the public interest, hereby issues its complaint stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent, Arpaul Company, Inc., is a corporation organized, existing, and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of New York, with its principal office and place of business located at 333 West 52nd Street, New York, in said State. It is now, and for more than one year last past has been, engaged in advertising, selling, and distributing a preparation recommended for facial treatment designated "Ortosan," and other toilet preparations, and now causes, and for more than one year last past has caused, its said preparations, when sold by it, to be shipped from its place of business in New York, N. Y., to the purchasers thereof, some located in the State of New York and others located in various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia, and there is now, and has been for more than one year last past, a constant current of trade in commerce in said preparations sold by the respondent between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

Respondent is now, and for more than one year last past has been, in substantial competition with other corporations and with persons, firms, and partnerships engaged in the sale of facial creams and other preparations similar to those sold by respondent between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of its business, as described in paragraph 1 hereof, in soliciting the sale of and selling its preparation designated "Ortosan," respondent now represents, and for more than one year last past has represented, in and by radio broadcasts, advertisements having an interstate circulation, letters, pamphlets, and other forms of advertising media as follows:

Ortosan 5-in-1 is the highest praised skin preparation in the world;

Ortosan is different from any cream or ointment in existence * * * Perfected during a period of over twenty-five years;

kind. Ortosan is a cleansing cream, a bleaching cream, a vanishing cream, a nourishing cream, and a rejuvenation cream, all in one, taking the place of 5 separate creams. That is why Ortosan is the most economical of all beauty preparations;

Ortosan combines in One Cream everything that is needed to give a woman a beautiful skin. It restores youthful contours of face, chin and neck, eliminates sagging lines, erases wrinkles and skin blemishes, and imparts Immediately a fresh, healthy skin;

You notice, the first time you use Ortosan, that it makes the face look younger and keeps it younger;

Ortosan, spelled O-R-T-O-S-A-N, is the amazing discovery of a famous skin specialist;

Ortosan combines in One cream everything that is needed to give a woman a beautiful skin. It produces a skin of velvety softness with the freshness and bloom of a young girl. It banishes large pores, erases wrinkles and fine lines, but most wonderful of all, it restores the youthful contours of cheek, chin and neck by completely eliminating the sagging of the skin around the chin and neck.

PAR. 3. In truth and in fact, the preparation "Ortosan" is not five creams in one and is not the highest praised skin preparation in the world; it is not unlike many similar creams on the market and was not perfected during a period of over 25 years; it has not been endorsed by leading medical authorities and beauty specialists; it is not a nourishing cream nor a rejuvenation cream; it does not take the place of five separate creams, it does not restore youthful contours or any contours of the face, chin or neck, and it does not eliminate sagging lines, erase wrinkles and skin blemishes, and its application does not immediately impart a fresh, healthy skin; the first application to the face does not make the face look younger and neither will the preparation keep it looking younger; the preparation "Ortosan" does not combine in one cream everything that is needed to give a woman a beautiful skin, it does not and will not banish large pores or erase wrinkles or fine lines, and it does not restore the youthful contour of the cheek or chin or neck in any manner whatsoever.

PAR. 4. The representations of respondent, as aforesaid, have had and do have the capacity and tendency to confuse, mislead, and deceive members of the public into the belief that respondent's product designated "Ortosan" contains five creams in one and is the highest praised skin preparation in the world; that it is different from any other cream or ointment in existence and was perfected during a period of over 25 years; that the preparation has been endorsed by leading medical authorities and beauty specialists; that said preparation has the property and capacity to nourish and rejuvenate the skin and to restore youthful contours of the face, chin and neck, and eliminate sagging lines, erase wrinkles and skin blemishes; that the preparation is five face creams in one; that its use will make the face look younger and keep it younger; that it banishes large pores of the skin, erases wrinkles and fine lines and restores youthful contours of the face and neck. The said representations of respondent have had and do have the tendency and capacity to induce members of the public to buy and use said preparation because of the erroneous beliefs engendered as above set forth and to unfairly divert trade to respondent from competitors engaged in the sale in interstate commerce of face creams and cosmetics similar to the preparation sold by respondent.

There are among the competitors of respondent, as mentioned in paragraph 1 hereof, many who sell and distribute in commerce similar face creams and preparations who do not misrepresent the properties or qualities or therapeutic virtues, functions, uses or effects of their said competing products.

PAR. 5. The above alleged acts and practices of respondent are all to the prejudice of the public and the respondent's competitors and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

ing regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on said complaint, the answer thereto, and said stipulation as to the facts; and the Commission having duly considered the same, and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public, and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent, Arpaul Company, Inc., is a corporation organized, existing, and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of New York, with its principal office and place of business located at 333 West 52nd Street, New York, in said State. It is now, and for more than one year last past has been, engaged in selling and distributing a preparation recommended for facial treatment designated "Ortosan", and now causes, and for more than one year last past has caused, its said preparation, when sold by it, to be shipped from its place of business in New York, N. Y., to the purchasers thereof, some located in the State of New York, and others located in various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia, and there is now, and has been for more than one year last past, a constant current of trade in commerce in said preparation sold by the respondent between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

Respondent is now, and for more than one year last past has been, in substantial competition with other corporations and with persons, firms, and partnerships engaged in the sale, in interstate commerce, of creams and other preparations used, and useful, for the beautification of the face and skin.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of its business, as described in paragraph 1 hereof, in soliciting the sale of, and selling, its preparation designated "Ortosan," respondent now represents, and for more than one year last past has represented, in and by radio broadcasts, advertisements having an interstate circulation, letters, pamphlets, and other forms of advertising media, as follows:

Ortosan 5-in-1 is the highest praise skin preparation in the world;

Ortosan is different from any cream or ointment in existence * * *

Perfecting during a period of over twenty-five years;

Ortosan Skin food, 5-in-1 especially, is a master stroke in its combination for rejuvenating and beautifying the skin. Created in Germany and perfected during a period of over 25 years;

Mme. Louise Hermand is well known today throughout the world and her name will in all probability, live through the ages.

Findings

25 F. T. C.

For she alone, by vigilant experimentation during twenty-five years, has discovered what alchemists and scientists have sought for centuries in vain—The Secret of Preserving Youth and Beauty;

Ortosan has been endorsed by leading medical authorities and beauty specialists;

A single application demonstrates the superiority of Ortosan over all other creams or lotions. When you use Ortosan you need no other cream of any kind. Ortosan is a cleansing cream, a bleaching cream, a vanishing cream, a nourishing cream, and a rejuvenation cream, all in one, taking the place of 5 separate creams. That is why Ortosan is the most economical of all beauty preparations;

Ortosan combines in One Cream everything that is needed to give a woman a beautiful skin. It restores youthful contours of face, chin and neck, eliminates sagging lines, erases wrinkles and skin blemishes, and imparts Immediately a fresh, healthy skin;

You notice, the first time you use Ortosan, that it makes the face look younger and keeps it younger;

Ortosan, spelled O-R-T-O-S-A-N, is the amazing discovery of a famous skin specialist;

Ortosan combines in One cream everything that is needed to give a woman a beautiful skin. It produces a skin of velvety softness with the freshness and bloom of a young girl. It banishes large pores, erases wrinkles and fine lines, but most wonderful of all, it restores the youthful contours of cheek, chin and neck by completely eliminating the sagging of the skin around the chin and neck.

PAR. 3. In the manner and through the means above stated the respondent represents that the preparation "Ortosan" is five creams in one, that it is the highest praised skin preparation in the world and that it has been endorsed by leading medical authorities and leading beauty specialists. The respondent represents that the preparation "Ortosan" is a nourishing and rejuvenating cream and that it will restore youthful contours to the face, chin and neck, and that it will eliminate sagging lines and erase wrinkles and skin blemishes, and that its application will immediately produce a fresh healthy skin. The respondent represents that the first application of the preparation will make the face look younger and that its use will keep the face looking younger, and that there is combined in the preparation everything that is needed to give a woman a beautiful skin. The respondent also represents that the use of the preparation will banish large pores and fine lines.

PAR. 4. The preparation "Ortosan" is not five creams in one, nor is it the highest praised skin preparation in the world. The preparation "Ortosan" has not been endorsed by leading medical authorities and leading beauty specialists. The preparation "Ortosan" is not a nourishing cream, nor is it a rejuvenation cream. The use of the preparation "Ortosan" will not restore youthful contours, or any contours at all, to the face, chin, neck or other part of the body, nor will its use eliminate sagging lines, erase wrinkles and skin blemishes, or banish large pores and fine lines, and its application will not immediately produce a fresh healthy skin. The first application of the preparation will not make the face look younger, nor will the use of the preparation keep the face looking younger. The preparation "Ortosan" does not combine in one cream everything that is needed to give a woman a beautiful skin.

PAR. 5. The representations used by the respondent in connection with the sale and distribution of its preparation "Ortosan" in said commerce, as hereinabove set out, are false and misleading and deceptive and have the tendency and capacity to and do mislead and deceive many prospective purchasers of preparations for use in the beautification of the face and skin and cause them to believe that the representations made by the respondent are true and that said preparation possesses the properties and efficacy claimed; and cause a substantial portion of such persons, because of such erroneous belief, to purchase the preparation "Ortosan," thereby unfairly and unlawfully diverting trade in said commerce to the respondent from its competitors who do not misrepresent in any manner the properties or efficacy of their products, to the substantial injury of said competitors and to the injury of the public.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondent, Arpaul Company, Inc., are to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce, within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

This proceeding having been heard by the Federal Trade Commission upon the complaint of the Commission, the answer of the respondent and a stipulation as to the facts executed by W. T. Kelley, Chief Counsel of the Federal Trade Commission, and William Huck, Jr., counsel for the respondent, the filing of briefs having been waived, and the Commission having made its findings as to the facts and its conclusion that the said respondent has violated the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

It is ordered, That the respondent, Arpaul Company, Inc., a corporation, its officers, representatives, agents, and employees, in connection with the offering for sale, sale and distribution of the preparation known as, and sold under the name, "Ortosan" or any other preparation, under whatever name sold, composed of similar ingredients and possessing properties similar to the preparation "Ortosan," in interstate commerce or in the District of Columbia, do forthwith cease and desist from representing:

1. That said preparation is five creams in one;
2. That said preparation is the highest praised skin preparation in the world and has been endorsed by leading medical authorities and leading beauty specialists;
3. That said preparation nourishes the skin;
4. That said preparation rejuvenates the skin or face;
5. That the use of said preparation will restore youthful contours to the face, chin and neck, and will eliminate sagging lines, erase wrinkles and skin blemishes, and banish large pores and fine lines and immediately produce a fresh healthy skin;
6. That the use of the preparation will keep the face looking younger;
7. That there is combined in said preparation everything that is needed to give one a beautiful skin.

It is further ordered, That the respondent shall, within 60 days after service upon it of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which it has complied with this order.

MUTUAL BRIEF CASE COMPANYCOMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 26, 1914*Docket 2889. Complaint, Aug. 7, 1936—Decision, Aug. 12, 1937*

Where a corporation engaged in manufacture of leather luggage, and in use in such manufacture of two types of leather employed in making such luggage, namely, top grain leather and split leather, and in sale and distribution of such leather luggage in commerce among the various States and in the District of Columbia, in substantial competition with those engaged in manufacture, sale and distribution of leather goods in commerce, as above set forth, and including many competitors who sell leather luggage made from top grain leather and also that made from split leather, and properly describe former, as variously known by manufacturers, dealers, and purchasing public, as "cowhide" only, "genuine cowhide," "leather," "genuine leather," "warranted leather," and "top grain," and properly describe latter, as similarly generally known, as "split leather" luggage—

Offered and sold, in interstate commerce, its split leather goods, labeled and branded "cowhide" only, or "warranted genuine cowhide," in distinction from its top grain leather goods labeled and branded by it as "genuine top grain cowhide," notwithstanding fact such split leather luggage, thus branded, was not made from outside or top side of hide, or from top grain, as understood in trade and by purchasing public, but was made from split leather, i. e., lower portion of hide, and from which top grain portion has been cut away;

With capacity and tendency to mislead and deceive purchasing public and substantial portion of trade into erroneous belief that its said luggage, thus branded and labeled, was made from top grain leather, for goods of which purchasing public has generally pronounced and distinct preference, and with result of placing in hands of wholesalers and retailers means whereby said luggage, made of split leather as above set forth, and goods of which can be made to resemble those of other in appearance, is passed off to purchasing public as top grain leather luggage, and consuming public purchased substantial volume of its aforesaid product, and trade was unfairly diverted to it from its competitors likewise engaged in manufacture, sale, and distribution of leather luggage, and who truthfully brand and represent kind of leather used in manufacture of their products; to the substantial injury of competition in commerce:

Held, That such acts and practices were to the prejudice of the public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition.

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that Mutual Brief Case Company, a corporation, hereinafter referred to as the respondent, has been and is using unfair methods of competition in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in said act, and it appearing to the said Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint, stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Said respondent, Mutual Brief Case Company, is a corporation, organized and existing under the laws of the State of New York with its principal factory, warehouse and sales office at 133-135 Kossuth Street, in the city of Newark, in the State of New Jersey. Respondent is now and for more than one year last past, has been engaged in the manufacture of leather, leather luggage, leather brief cases, and leather golf bags and in the sale and distribution of the same, in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and the District of Columbia; causing said products, when sold, to be shipped from its place of business in the State of New York to purchasers thereof located in a State or States of the United States other than the State of New York.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of its business aforesaid, respondent is now and for more than one year last past has been in substantial competition with other corporations, individuals, partnerships, and firms engaged in the business of manufacturing and selling leather luggage in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and the District of Columbia.

PAR. 3. In the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid, respondent manufactures certain of its luggage from split cowhide leather, also described as the under or flesh side of the hide. Respondent places upon such luggage, and has done so during the period aforesaid, a conspicuous stamp or label reading "Cowhide Only" or "Warranted Genuine Cowhide" as the case may be. Said stamp or label represents and implies to the purchasing public that the material with which such luggage is covered is top grain leather, or as otherwise described, the outside or surface layer of the hide. Further, retailers are enabled by reason of said stamp or label, to mislead, deceive, and defraud the purchasing public as to the quality of the material with which such luggage is covered. Top grain leather is superior in quality, durability and price to the split leather.

Findings

The public generally believes the word leather to mean the top or hairy side of the hide.

There are among the competitors of respondent, as mentioned in paragraph 1 hereof, manufacturers of leather luggage who do not in any way misrepresent or falsely label their said merchandise.

PAR. 4. The above and foregoing representations, as shown by the label used by respondent, as described in paragraph 3, have the capacity and tendency to, and do mislead and deceive the purchasing public into the belief that the said luggage so labeled is manufactured from, or covered with, genuine top grain cow hide, and have the capacity and tendency to, and do induce the said purchasing public, acting in such erroneous belief, to purchase respondent's product, thereby diverting trade to the respondent from those of its competitors who do not misrepresent and falsely label their product, and in this manner respondent does substantial injury to competition in interstate commerce.

PAR. 5. The above acts and things done or caused to be done by the respondent, were and are each and all to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in interstate commerce within the meaning and intent of Section 5 of "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914.

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, on August 7, 1936, issued and served its complaint in this proceeding upon respondent Mutual Brief Case Company, a corporation, charging it with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of the provisions of said act. No answer to said complaint was filed. After the issuance of said complaint, testimony and other evidence in support of the allegations of said complaint were introduced by DeWitt T. Puckett, attorney for the Commission before John L. Hornor, an examiner of the Commission, theretofore duly designated by it, and said testimony and other evidence were duly recorded and filed in the office of the Commission. No testimony or other evidence in opposition to the allegations of the complaint was offered. Thereafter, the proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on the said complaint, testimony and other evidence, and brief in support of the complaint (no brief having been filed by respondent and no oral argument having been made) and the Commission having duly considered the same and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public, and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. The respondent, Mutual Brief Case Company, is a corporation doing business under the laws of the State of New York. The respondent's principal office and place of business is at 133-135 Kossuth Street, Newark, N. J.

For several years last past it has been engaged in the sale and distribution of leather luggage in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia. When respondent's goods are sold, it causes them to be shipped from its place of business in Newark, N. J., to the purchasers thereof at their places of business in the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

At all times since respondent has been in said business, it has been in substantial competition with other individuals, and partnerships, and with corporations likewise engaged in the manufacture, sale, and distribution, or in the sale and distribution of leather goods, in commerce, among and between the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 2. Two general types of leather employed in the manufacture of leather luggage are top grain leather and split leather. Top grain leather is the top portion of the hide from which the hair has been removed and the under portion or that lying next to the flesh of the animal has been cut away. Split leather is the lower portion of the hide which lies next to the flesh of the animal and from which the top grain portion has been cut away. The respondent uses both types of said leather in the manufacture of its luggage.

Respondent's split leather goods offered for sale and sold in interstate commerce are labeled and branded "cowhide only" or "warranted genuine cowhide." Respondent labels and brands its top grain leather goods "genuine top grain cowhide."

The purchasing public generally and the trade understand the words "cowhide only" or "warranted genuine cowhide," or the word "leather," when used to describe luggage, to mean luggage manufactured from top grain leather.

PAR. 3. Many of respondent's competitors sell leather luggage manufactured from top grain leather and also from split leather.

Conclusion

Said top grain leather is properly described by said competitors, and is variously known by manufacturers, dealers, and the purchasing public as "cowhide only," "genuine cowhide," "leather," "genuine leather," "warranted leather," and "top grain." Said split leather luggage is properly described by said competitors, and is generally known by manufacturers, dealers, and the purchasing public, as "split leather" luggage.

The purchasing public generally has a pronounced and distinct preference for leather goods that are manufactured from top grain leather. Split leather goods can be made to resemble top grain leather in appearance and the purchasing public generally and a substantial portion of the trade cannot distinguish between split leather goods and top grain leather goods. As a result thereof, split leather goods are thus passed off as top grain leather goods.

PAR. 4. The descriptions, representations, stamps, and brands used by respondent in describing its split leather luggage are false and misleading in that said luggage branded as "cowhide only" and "warranted genuine cowhide" is not made from the outside or top side of the hide, or what is understood in the trade and by the purchasing public as top grain, but are manufactured from split leather.

PAR. 5. The use by respondent of the descriptions, marks, and brands set out in paragraph 2 hereof, to describe its split leather luggage, offered for sale and sold in interstate commerce, has had and does have the capacity and tendency to mislead and deceive the purchasing public and a substantial portion of the trade into the erroneous belief that the luggage so branded and labeled was made from top grain leather. By said practices, respondent also places in the hands of wholesalers and retailers the means whereby said luggage is passed off to the purchasing public as top grain leather luggage. As a direct consequence of the mistaken and erroneous beliefs induced by the false and misleading representations above referred to, the consuming public has purchased a substantial volume of respondent's luggage with the result that trade has been unfairly diverted to the respondent from its competitors likewise engaged in the manufacture, sale, and distribution of leather luggage, who truthfully brand and represent the kind of leather used in the manufacture of their products. As a result thereof, substantial injury has been and is now being done by respondent to competition in commerce among and between the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondent, Mutual Brief Case Company, are to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's

25 F. T. C.

competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

It is ordered, That the respondent, Mutual Brief Case Company, a corporation, its officers, representatives, agents, and employes in connection with the offering for sale, sale, and distribution of luggage in interstate commerce or in the District of Columbia, do forthwith cease and desist from:

1. Representing, through the use of the word "Cowhide," "Warranted genuine cowhide," or "leather" or any other word or words of similar import and effect, alone or in conjunction with other words, stamped or imprinted on labels or on the luggage itself, or in any other manner, that luggage manufactured in whole or in part from the underlayers or flesh sides of hides, known as split leather, is made from the outside layer of the hide.

- (2) Using the words "cowhide," "warranted genuine cowhide," or "leather" to describe or designate luggage manufactured in whole or in part from underlayers or flesh sides of hides.

It is further ordered, That the respondent shall, within 60 days after service upon it of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which it has complied with this order.

COMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION
OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 26, 1914

Docket 2293. Complaint, Dec. 30, 1935¹—Decision, Aug. 17, 1937

Where an individual engaged in manufacture, sale, and distribution of cigars through various States, in substantial competition with those likewise engaged in sale and distribution of such products in commerce among the various States and within the District of Columbia—

- (a) Caused cigars thus manufactured by him to be packed for display and sale to public in wooden boxes or containers, on the border of which were imprinted the words "Fabrica De Tabacos Vuelta Abajo," and thereby represented that said cigars were made from tobacco grown in the particular section of the Island of Cuba known as Vuelta Abajo, source of tobacco considered by many of cigar and tobacco trade and consuming public as of a higher and more desirable quality for use in manufacture of cigars than any other tobacco grown on said Island or elsewhere, and, to many of said trade and public, world's most famous cigar tobacco, notwithstanding fact said cigars were not made in Cuba from tobacco grown therein, either in aforesaid district in whole or in part, and, as such, considered by many of tobacco and cigar trade and cigar purchasing public superior in quality to cigars made wholly of tobacco not grown in aforesaid district, but were made entirely from the domestically grown product;
- (b) Caused to be imprinted on box phrase "Cured in Rum," notwithstanding fact he used no rum in curing, treating, flavoring, or sweetening tobacco used by him in manufacture of such cigars; and
- (c) Offered and sold to public cigars bearing trade or brand name "Turkey," with words "Matchless Turkish Blend" imprinted on cellophane wrappers thereof, notwithstanding fact cigars made, sold, and distributed by him to public under such trade names or brands or designations contained no Turkish tobacco whatever, but were made, as aforesaid, of domestic product;

With effect of confusing, deceiving and misleading many of said wholesale and retail dealers and many of said purchasing public into erroneous and mistaken belief that aforesaid cigars were made from tobacco grown wholly or in part in said district, and were cured in rum, or were made wholly from, or blended with, tobacco grown in Turkey, and with capacity and tendency to unfairly divert trade to him from competitors engaged in selling, in interstate commerce, truthfully advertised products of same kind and nature:

Held, That such acts and practices were to the prejudice of the public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition.

AMENDED COMPLAINT

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent, John F. Bolon, is an individual doing business at all times since 1924 under the trade name of John F. Bolon Cigar Company, and having, at all times, a place of business in the State of Ohio.

PAR. 2. During all the times above mentioned the respondent has been and still is engaged in the business of manufacturing and selling cigars. Respondent causes, and during the time above referred to has caused, the cigars sold by him to be packed for display and resale to the public in and from wooden boxes or other containers and to be transported to wholesale and retail dealers, the purchasers thereof, from his place of business in the State of Ohio or the State of origin of the shipment.

PAR. 3. During all the times above mentioned and referred to, other individuals, firms, and corporations, hereinafter referred to as sellers, have been engaged in the manufacture and sale of cigars and have caused said cigars to be packed for display and resale to the public in and from wooden boxes or other containers, and have caused said cigars to be transported to wholesale and retail dealers located in various States of the United States other than the State of the seller or the State of origin of the shipment.

PAR. 4. The respondent, in the manufacture and sale of cigars, is and has been in substantial competition in interstate commerce with other individuals, firms and corporations, referred to as sellers in paragraph 3 hereof, during all times mentioned and referred to in paragraph 1 hereof.

PAR. 5. During all the times above mentioned the respondent has manufactured and offered for sale and still sells cigars under the trade name

Complaint

GARCIA SWEETS

The boxes and containers in which the cigars are packed, transported, and offered for sale, carry on the edges thereof a border on which is imprinted the words

FABRICA DE TOBACOS VUELTA ABAJO

There is also imprinted on the box the following phrase:

Cured in Rum

PAR. 6. During all the time above mentioned, and for many years prior thereto, cigars made wholly of Cuban grown tobacco were made in Cuba and in the United States for sale and consumption in the United States by manufacturers whose surname was "Garcia" and who, respectively, used and displayed and still use and display their said surname either alone or in combination with the rest of their name, on the bands of the cigars, on the boxes or containers and on the labels and in advertisements of their said cigars in newspapers and other publications.

During all of the times above mentioned, and for many years prior thereto, many in the cigar trade and many of the public became accustomed to believe and still believe that cigars printed with the name "Garcia," either on the box or container or on the band of the cigar, were made by manufacturers of Cuban nationality and of Cuban grown tobacco exclusively, and were and are of a quality superior to cigars made by other manufacturers and of tobacco wholly or in part grown elsewhere, and in purchasing cigars became accustomed to and still call for them either by the name "Garcia" alone or in combination with the rest of the name of the manufacturer of that surname.

PAR. 7. Vuelta Abajo is the name of a district in the province of Pinar del Rio in the Island of Cuba in which tobacco is grown which is and has been considered, during all the time above mentioned, by many of the said tobacco and cigar trade and the public, to be of a higher and more desirable quality for the use in the manufacture of cigars for sale and consumption in the United States than any tobacco grown not only in the countries other than Cuba, but even of a higher and more desirable quality for such purpose than tobacco grown elsewhere on the Island of Cuba.

Likewise many of the said tobacco and cigar trade and many of the said cigar purchasing public have also considered, during all the times above mentioned, and still believe, that cigars made in Cuba for sale and consumption in the United States of tobacco grown in Cuba, either wholly or in part in said Vuelta Abajo district, are and have been superior in quality to cigars made wholly of tobacco grown outside of said district. To many of said trade and public Vuelta Abajo tobacco is the most famous tobacco in the world that is used in the manufacture of cigars.

PAR. 8. During all of the times above mentioned and for many years prior thereto many of the tobacco and cigar trade and the public have believed and still believe that cigars cured in rum are of a superior quality and flavor to cigars not so cured.

PAR. 9. During all of the times above mentioned the cigars manufactured and sold by the respondent were not made in the Island of Cuba or made wholly of Cuban-grown tobacco and were not made by manufacturers whose surname was "Garcia"; nor were the cigars manufactured and sold by the respondent made of tobacco grown in whole or in part in the Vuelta Abajo district of the Island of Cuba. In truth and in fact the tobacco from which the cigars sold by the respondent under the name "Garcia Sweets" were and are manufactured, was grown in the States of Ohio and Connecticut, and further in truth and in fact there is no rum used in curing the tobacco from which said cigars were and are manufactured.

PAR. 10. The respondent during all the times above mentioned has offered for sale and sold and still sells to the public cigars under the trade name of

TURKEY

On the cellophane wrapper in which said cigars are packed there is imprinted the words

TURKISH MATCHLESS BLEND

During all of the time above mentioned, and for many years prior thereto, the name "Turkey" in connection with the tobacco trade and the public is associated with tobacco which has been produced primarily in the country of Turkey and adjacent area and generally throughout the Near East. The said tobacco is used for its flavor and aroma in the blending and manufacture of cigars and cigarettes. In truth and in fact, the cigars manufactured by the respondent and sold and distributed to the public under the trade name and designation "Turkey Matchless Blend" do not contain any Turkish tobacco whatsoever; but the tobacco used in the manufacture of said cigars designated as "Turkish Matchless Blend" comes from or is grown in the States of Ohio and Connecticut.

PAR. 11. The use by the respondent of the aforesaid words "Garcia," "Vuelta Abajo," and "Turkey," and the phrase "Cured in Rum" on the cellophane wrapper of said cigars and on the boxes or containers and labels thereon, in which said cigars are packed and sold by him for display and resale to the public, and in said advertisements and letterheads, has the capacity and tendency to mislead and deceive and to confuse many of the said wholesale and retail dealers and many of the said purchasing public, and has confused, deceived and misled and still confuses, misleads, and deceives them, respectively, in the belief that the said cigars were and are made wholly from tobacco grown in Cuba and either wholly or in part of tobacco grown in said district of Vuelta Abajo of the Island of Cuba and by manufacturers of the surname "Garcia," and further, that said cigars were cured in rum. The cigar and tobacco trade and the public are likewise misled and deceived in the matter hereinbefore stated into believing that the cigars manufactured and sold by the respondent under the trade name "Turkey" contain some Turkish tobacco.

Thereby trade is diverted to the respondent from his competitors, who do not make such misrepresentations by using false and misleading trade names or designations. Thereby substantial injury is done by the respondent to substantial competition in interstate commerce.

PAR. 12. The acts and practices of the respondent are all to the prejudice of the public and of competitors of the respondent, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

vening procedure, which substitute answer was duly filed in the office of the Commission.

Thereafter, this proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on the said amended complaint, as modified, and the substitute answer (briefs of counsel having been waived), and the Commission having duly considered the same and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom.

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. The respondent, John F. Bolon, is an individual, trading as John F. Bolon Cigar Company and having his factory and place of business at 89½ South Summit Street, Bethesda, Ohio. For more than two years last past he has been engaged in the manufacture of cigars and in the sale and distribution of the same into and through various States of the United States.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of his said business, as described in paragraph 1 hereof, respondent has offered his said cigars for sale and has sold and transported, or caused the same to be transported, in commerce among and between the several States of the United States, direct from the aforesaid place of business to consumers located at points in the States of the United States other than the State of Ohio. In the course and conduct of such business, respondent has been and now is engaged in substantial competition with corporations, firms, partnerships, and individuals likewise engaged in the sale and distribution of cigars in commerce between and among the various States of the United States, and within the District of Columbia.

PAR. 3. The cigar originated in the Spanish West Indies. The finest quality of tobacco for cigar purposes is grown in Cuba, not far from the city of Havana. Vuelta Abajo is the name of a district in the Province of Pinar Del Rio, in the Island of Cuba, in which is grown tobacco that is and has been considered by many of the tobacco and cigar trade and consuming public to be of a higher and more desirable quality for use in the manufacture of cigars than any other tobacco grown on the Island of Cuba, or elsewhere. Many of the tobacco and cigar trade and many of the cigar purchasing public have considered and still believe the cigars made in Cuba from tobacco grown in Cuba, either wholly or in part in said Vuelta Abajo district, or cigars made in the United States from tobacco grown wholly or in part in the said Vuelta Abajo district of Cuba, are and have been superior in quality to cigars made wholly of tobacco grown outside of said district. To many of said trade and public Vuelta Abajo tobacco is the most famous tobacco in the world used in the manufacture of cigars.

PAR. 4. Respondent, in the course and conduct of his said business of manufacturing and offering cigars for sale has caused cigars so manufactured by him to be packed for display and sale to the public in wooden boxes or containers carrying on the edges thereof a border on which there has been imprinted the words:

Fabrica De Tabacos Vuelta Abajo

Through such statement, respondent represents that said cigars are made from tobacco grown on the Island of Cuba and are made from tobacco grown in that particular section of said Island known as Vuelta Abajo.

Respondent has also caused to be imprinted on the box the following phrase:

Cured in Rum

In truth and in fact, the cigars manufactured and sold by the respondent were not made in the Island of Cuba, nor from tobacco grown in whole or in part in the Vuelta Abajo, or other district, region, or section of the Island of Cuba. Respondent's said cigars, on the contrary, were and are manufactured entirely from tobacco grown in the States of Ohio and Connecticut. Respondent does not use and has not used any rum in curing, treating, flavoring, or sweetening tobacco used by him in the manufacture of cigars.

PAR. 5. For many years to the tobacco trade and the consuming public, the name "Turkey" has been associated with and indicates tobacco which has been produced in the country of Turkey. On account of its flavor and aroma, said tobacco is used in the blending and manufacture of cigars and cigarettes.

The respondent, in the further course and conduct of his business, in manufacturing and selling cigars, had offered for sale and sold to the public, cigars bearing the trade or brand name:

Turkey

On the cellophane wrapper in which said cigars are and have been wrapped, there is also imprinted the words:

Matchless Turkish Blend

In truth and in fact, the cigars manufactured by the respondent and sold and distributed by him to the public under the trade names or brands or designations "Turkey" and "Matchless Turkish Blend"

do not contain and have not contained any Turkish Tobacco whatsoever. The tobacco used by respondent in the manufacture of said cigars so branded, labeled and designated was and is grown in the States of Ohio and Connecticut.

PAR. 6. The use by the respondent of the aforesaid words, "Vuelta Abajo" and the phrase "Cured in Rum" has the capacity and tendency to mislead and deceive and confuse many of the said wholesale and said retail dealers and many of the said purchasing public, and has confused, deceived, and misled, and still confuses, misleads and deceives them respectively, into the erroneous and mistaken belief that the said cigars were and are made from tobacco grown wholly or in part in said district of Vuelta Abajo of the Island of Cuba and further, that said cigars were cured in rum. The said cigar and tobacco trade and the public are likewise misled and deceived into erroneously and mistakenly believing that the cigars manufactured and sold by the respondent under the trade names "Turkey" and "Turkish" are manufactured wholly from or blended with tobacco grown in Turkey. The aforesaid practices have and have had the capacity and tendency to unfairly divert trade to respondent from competitors engaged in selling in interstate commerce products of the same kind and nature as those of respondent, which products are truthfully advertised.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondent, John F. Bolon, trading as John F. Bolon Cigar Company, are to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST ¹

This proceeding having been heard by the Federal Trade Commission upon the original and amended complaints of the Commis-

¹ Case was closed, with respect to use of term "Garcia", by following order on Dec. 24, 1936:

This matter coming on to be heard by the Commission upon the record, and the Commission having duly considered the same and being now fully advised in the premises;

It is ordered, That the case growing out of the amended complaint heretofore issued on the 30th day of December 1935, insofar as said case relates to the alleged unfair or misleading use of the word "Garcia" be, and the same hereby is, closed.

It is further ordered, That as to all other allegations growing out of the aforesaid amended complaint, the case proceed to trial in accordance with the regular procedure of the Commission.

sion and the answer filed herein by the respondent, admitting the material allegations of said amended complaint as modified by the order of the Commission duly entered on December 24, 1936, and waiving the taking of further evidence and all other intervening procedure, and the Commission having made its findings as to the facts and its conclusion that said respondent has violated the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

It is ordered, That the said respondent, John F. Bolon, individually and trading as John F. Bolon Cigar Company or under any other trade name, his servants, employees, or agents, individual or corporate, in connection with the offering for sale, sale and distribution of cigars, in interstate commerce or in the District of Columbia, do forthwith cease and desist from:

1. Representing, through the use of the words "Vuelta Abajo" or any other word or words of similar import and meaning, as descriptive of, or as brand names for, or on labels of, cigars, or in any other manner, that said cigars are made from tobacco grown in and imported from the Island of Cuba and the Province of Pinar Del Rio, unless said cigars are actually made entirely from tobacco grown in the said Island of Cuba and Province of Pinar Del Rio;

2. Representing, through the use of the words, "Cured in Rum," or other words of similar import or meaning, that cigars have been cured, treated, flavored or sweetened through the use of rum, unless such is the fact;

3. Using the words "Turkey" or "Turkish" as descriptive of cigars unless such cigars are made wholly from tobacco grown in the country of Turkey, or using the words "Turkey" or "Turkish" in conjunction with the words "Matchless Blend" or other word or words of similar import or meaning, as descriptive of cigars, unless such cigars are made in substantial part from tobacco grown in the country of Turkey.

It is further ordered, That the respondent shall, within 60 days after service upon him of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing, setting forth in detail the manner and form in which he has complied with this order.

IN THE MATTER OF DISTILLERS BRANDS, INC.

COMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 26, 1914, AND OF SEC. 3 OF TITLE I OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED JUNE 16, 1933¹

Docket 2390. Complaint, May 16, 1935—Decision, Aug. 17, 1937

Where a corporation engaged in purchasing, rectifying, blending, and bottling whiskies, brandies, gins, and other spirituous beverages, and in making gin with a still which it used therefor, by redistillation of purchased alcohol, not produced by it, over juniper berries and other aromatics, and in selling, in various States and in the District of Columbia, its aforesaid various products to wholesalers and jobbers in various States, in substantial competition with those engaged in the manufacture by distillation of whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages, and in selling same in trade and commerce among the various States and in said District, and with those engaged in purchasing, rectifying, blending, and bottling such various beverages and similarly selling same, and including among said competitors those who, as manufacturers and distillers from mash, wort, or wash of whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages, truthfully use words "distillery," "distilleries," "distillers," or "distilling" as a part of their corporate names and on their stationery and advertising and on the labels of the bottles in which they sell and ship such products, and those who, engaged in rectifying, blending, and bottling such various products, do not use aforesaid words as above set forth—

Furnished, through use of word "Distillers" in its corporate name, printed on its stationery and in its advertising, and on the labels attached to the bottles in which it sold and shipped its said products, and in various other ways, its customers, both wholesalers and retailers, with the means of representing to the ultimate consuming public that the said whiskies, gins, brandies, and other spirituous beverages contained in such bottles were by it made through process of distillation from mash, wort, or wash, notwithstanding fact it did not distill said beverages, so bottled, labeled, sold, and transported by it, and did not own, operate, or control any place or places where such beverages are made by process of distillation from mash, wort, or wash, and was not a distiller;

With effect of misleading and deceiving purchasing public into the belief that the whiskies, brandies, gins, and other spirituous beverages sold by it were by it made and distilled from mash, wort, or wash, and of inducing said public, acting in such belief, to buy its said whiskies and other spirituous beverages, rectified, blended, and bottled by it, and of thereby diverting trade to it from its competitors who do not, by their corporate name or in any other manner, misrepresent that they are manufacturers, by distillation from mash, wort, or wash, of such various beverages; to the substantial injury of substantial competition in commerce;

Held, That such acts and practices were to the prejudice of the public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition.

Complaint

Before Mr. John J. Keenan, trial examiner.

Mr. PGad B. Morehouse, for the Commission.

Mr. R. E. Joyce, of Washington, D. C., for respondent.

COMPLAINT

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent is a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Delaware, with its principal office in the city of Wilmington, in the said State, and doing business in and under the laws of the State of Ohio, with its principal place of business in the city of Cincinnati, Ohio. It is now and since its organization in 1933 has been engaged in the business of purchasing, rectifying, blending, and bottling whiskies, brandies, gins, and other spirituous beverages, and in the sale thereof in constant course of trade and commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia. In the course and conduct of its said business, it causes its said products when sold to be transported from its place of business in Cincinnati aforesaid into and through various other States of the United States to the purchasers thereof, consisting of wholesalers and jobbers, some located within the State of Ohio and some located in other States of the United States and the District of Columbia. In the course and conduct of its business aforesaid respondent is now, and at all times since its organization has been, in substantial competition with other corporations and with individuals, partnerships, and firms engaged in the manufacture by distillation of whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages, and in the sale thereof in trade and commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia; and in the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid respondent is, and has been since its organization, in substantial competition with other corporations and with individuals, partnerships, and firms engaged in the business of purchasing, rectifying, blending, and bottling whiskies, brandies, gins, and other spirituous beverages, and in the sale thereof in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid respondent has, upon its said premises, a still which it uses in the production of gin by a process of rectification whereby alcohol, purchased but not produced by respondent, is redistilled over juniper berries and other aromatics. Such rectification of alcoholic spirits does not make or constitute respondent a distiller, as defined by section 3247 of the Revised Statutes regulating Internal Revenue, nor as commonly understood by the public and the liquor industry. For a long period of time the word "distillers" when used in connection with the liquor industry and with the products thereof has had and still has a definite significance and meaning to the minds of wholesalers and retailers in such industry and to the ultimate purchasing public, to wit, the manufacture of such liquors by the process of distillation from mash, wort, or wash, and a substantial portion of the purchasing public prefers to buy spirituous liquors bottled by the actual distillers and manufacturers thereof.

PAR. 3. In the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid, by the use of the word "distillers" in its corporate name, printed on its stationery, in its advertising and on the labels attached to the bottles in which it sells and ships its said products, and in various other ways, respondent represents to its customers and furnishes them with the means of representing to their vendees, both retailers and the ultimate consuming public, that the said whiskies, gins, brandies, and other spirituous beverages therein contained were by it manufactured through the process of distillation from mash, wort, or wash, when, as a matter of fact, respondent is not a distiller, does not distill the said whiskies, brandies, or other spirituous beverages by it so bottled, labeled, sold, and transported, and merely by the use of a still as aforesaid in the rectification of alcoholic spirits by re-distillation over juniper berries and other aromatics, does not distill the gins by it so bottled, labeled, sold, and transported in the sense in which the word "distilled" is commonly accepted and understood by those engaged in the liquor trade and the public. Respondent does not own, operate, or control any place or places where such beverages are manufactured by the process of distillation from mash, wort, or wash.

Complaint

PAR. 4. There are among the competitors of respondent engaged in the sale of spirituous beverages as mentioned in paragraph 1 hereof corporations, firms, partnerships, and individuals who manufacture and distill from mash, wort, or wash whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages sold by them and who truthfully use the words "distillery," "distilleries," "distillers," or "distilling" as a part of their corporate names and on their stationery and advertising, and on the labels of the bottles in which they sell and ship such products. There are also among such competitors corporations, firms, partnerships, and individuals engaged in the business of rectifying, blending and bottling whiskies, brandies, gins, and other spirituous beverages who do not use the words "distillery," "distilleries," "distilling," or "distillers" as a part of their corporate names, nor on their stationery and advertising, nor on the labels attached to the bottles in which they sell and ship their said products.

PAR. 5. The representation by respondent, as set forth in paragraph 3 hereof, is calculated to and has a capacity and tendency to and does mislead and deceive dealers and the purchasing public into the belief that the whiskies, brandies, gins, and other spirituous beverages sold by the respondent are manufactured and distilled by it from mash, wort, or wash and is calculated to and has the capacity and tendency to and does induce dealers and the purchasing public, acting in such belief, to purchase the whiskies, brandies, gins, and other spirituous beverages rectified, blended, and bottled by the respondent, thereby diverting trade to respondent from its competitors who do not by their corporate name or in any other manner misrepresent that they are manufacturers by distillation from mash, wort, or wash of whiskies, brandies, gins, and other spirituous beverages, and thereby respondent does substantial injury to substantial competition in interstate commerce.

PAR. 6. The acts and things above alleged to have been done and the false representations alleged to have been made by respondent are to the prejudice of the public and the competitors of respondent and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914.

and under the laws of the State of Ohio, with its principal place of business in the city of Cincinnati, Ohio. It is now, and since its organization in 1933 has been, engaged in the business of purchasing, rectifying, blending, and bottling whiskies, brandies, gins, and other spirituous beverages, and in the sale thereof in constant course of trade and commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia. In the course and conduct of its said business, it causes its said products when sold to be transported from its place of business in Cincinnati aforesaid into and through various other States of the United States to the purchasers thereof, consisting of wholesalers and jobbers, some located within the State of Ohio and some located in other States of the United States and the District of Columbia. In the course and conduct of its business aforesaid respondent is now, and at all times since its organization has been, in substantial competition with other corporations and with individuals, partnerships, and firms engaged in the manufacture by distillation of whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages, and in the sale thereof in trade and commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia; and in the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid, respondent is, and has been since its organization, in substantial competition with other corporations and with individuals, partnerships, and firms engaged in the business of purchasing, rectifying, blending and bottling whiskies, brandies, gins, and other spirituous beverages, and in the sale thereof in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 2. As grounds for this paragraph of this complaint, the Federal Trade Commission relies upon the matters and things set out in paragraph 2 of count 1 of this complaint to the same extent as though the allegations thereof were set out at length herein and said paragraph 2 of count 1 of this complaint is incorporated herein by reference and adopted as the allegations of this paragraph of this count and is hereby charged as fully and as completely as though the several averments of said paragraph 2 of said count 1 were repeated verbatim.

PAR. 5. As grounds for this paragraph of this complaint, the Federal Trade Commission relies upon the matters and things set out in paragraph 5 of count 1 of this complaint to the same extent as though the allegations thereof were set out at length herein and said paragraph 5 of count 1 of this complaint is incorporated herein by reference and adopted as the allegations of this paragraph of this count and is hereby charged as fully and as completely as though the several averments of said paragraph 5 of said count 1 were repeated verbatim.

PAR. 6. Under and pursuant to Title I of the National Industrial Recovery Act, approved June 16, 1933 (48 Stat. 195 C. 90), the President of the United States, by Executive Order No. 6182, of June 26, 1933, as supplemented by Executive Order No. 6207, of July 21, 1933, and Executive Order No. 6345 of October 20, 1933, delegated to H. A. Wallace as Secretary of Agriculture, certain of the powers vested in the President of the United States by the aforesaid Act.

Under and pursuant to the delegation of such powers, the said Secretary of Agriculture pursuant to Section 3 (d) of the act and Executive orders under the Act, upon his own motion presented a Code of Fair Competition for the Distilled Spirits Rectifying Industry after due notice and opportunity for hearing in connection therewith had been afforded interested parties, including respondent, in accordance with Title I of the National Industrial Recovery Act and applicable regulations issued thereunder, to the President of the United States who approved the same on the 9th day of December, 1933, thereby constituting the said code a Code of Fair Competition within the meaning of the said National Industrial Recovery Act, for the regulation of the aforesaid industry.

In his written report to the President, the said Secretary of Agriculture made, among others, the following findings with respect to the said code in the following words, to wit:

Complaint

25 F. T. C.

"That said Code will tend to effectuate the declared policy of Title I of the National Industrial Recovery Act as set forth in Section 1 of said Act in that the terms and provisions of such Code tend: (a) to remove obstructions to the free flow of foreign commerce, which tend to diminish the amount thereof; (b) to provide for the general welfare by promoting the organization of industry for the purposes of cooperative action among trade groups; (c) to eliminate unfair competitive practices; (d) to promote the fullest possible utilization of the present productive capacity of industries; (e) to avoid undue restriction of production (except as may be temporarily required); (f) to increase the consumption of industrial and agricultural products by increasing purchasing power; and (g) otherwise to rehabilitate industry."

By his approval of the said code on December 9, 1933, the President of the United States, pursuant to the authority vested in him by Title I of the National Industrial Recovery Act aforesaid, made and issued his certain written Executive order, wherein he adopted and approved the report, recommendations and findings of the said Secretary of Agriculture, and ordered that the said Code of Fair Competition be, and the same thereby was approved, and by virtue of the National Industrial Recovery Act aforesaid, the following provision of Article V of said Code became and still is one of the standards of fair competition for the Distilled Spirits Rectifying Industry and is binding upon every member of said Industry and this respondent:

"The following practices constitute unfair methods of competition and shall not be engaged in by any member of the industry:

"SECTION 1. False Advertising.—To publish or disseminate in any manner any false advertisement of any rectified product. Any advertisement shall be deemed to be false if it is untrue in any particular, or if directly or by ambiguity, omission or inference it tends to create a misleading impression."

PAR. 7. The use by respondent of the word "Distillers" in its corporate name, printed upon its stationery and advertising, and on the labels attached to the bottles in which it sells and ships such products and in various other ways, constitutes false advertising within the meaning of the aforesaid provision of said Article V and tends to and does create the misleading impression that respondent is engaged in the business of distilling spirits from mash, wort, or wash and that the spirituous beverages by it so sold and transported have been bottled at a distillery by the original distillers thereof, all contrary to the provisions of Section 1, Article V, of the Code aforesaid.

PAR. 8. The above alleged methods, acts and practices of the respondent are and have been in violation of the standard of fair competition for the Distilled Spirits Rectifying Industry of the United States. Such violation of such standard in the aforesaid transactions in interstate commerce and other transactions which affect interstate commerce in the manner set forth in Paragraph 5 of count 1 hereof, are in violation of Section 3 of Title I of the National Industrial Recovery Act and they are unfair methods of competition in commerce within the meaning of the Federal Trade Commission Act as amended.

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, on May 16, 1935, issued, and on May 17, 1935 served its complaint in this proceeding upon the respondent, Distillers Brands, Inc., charging it with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of the provisions of said act. After the issuance of said complaint and the filing of respondent's answer thereto, testimony and other evidence in support of the allegations of said complaint were introduced by PGad B. Morehouse, attorney for the Commission, before John J. Keenan, an examiner of the Commission, theretofore duly designated by it. No testimony was introduced or offered in opposition to the allegations of the complaint by R. E. Joyce, attorney for respondent. The testimony and other evidence in support of the allegations of the complaint were duly recorded and filed in the office of the Commission. Thereafter, the proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on the said complaint, the answer thereto, testimony and other evidence, and brief in support of the complaint—no oral arguments having been made and no brief having been filed in opposition to the complaint; and the Commission having duly considered the same and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public, and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. The respondent, Distillers Brands, Inc., was originally incorporated November 2, 1933, and has since existed and done business under the laws of the State of Delaware, with its principal office in the city of Wilmington, in the said State, and its principal place of business, up until about February 1937, located at 457 East Sixth Street, Cincinnati, Ohio. Some time prior to February 1937, it removed its place of business from Cincinnati, Ohio, to Jacksonville, Fla., and submitted an amended certificate of its incorporation to the Secretary of State for the State of Delaware, providing for a change in its name from "Distillers Brands" to "Distributors Brands." No evidence that this change has been finally effected has been presented to the Commission.

Respondent now is, and since its organization shortly after the date of its incorporation has been, engaged in the business of purchasing, rectifying, blending, and bottling whiskies, brandies, gins, and other spirituous beverages, and in the sale thereof in constant course of trade and commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia. In the course and conduct of its said business, prior to February 1937, it caused its said products when sold to be transported from its place of business in Cincinnati, Ohio, and subsequently to February 1937, from its place of business in Jacksonville, Fla., into and through various other States of the United States to the purchasers thereof, consisting of wholesalers and jobbers, some located within the State of Ohio and some located in other States of the United States and the District of Columbia. In the course and conduct of its business aforesaid respondent is now, and at all times since its organization has been, in substantial competition with other corporations and with individuals, partnerships, and firms engaged in the manufacture by distillation of whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages, and in the sale thereof in trade and commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia; and in the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid respondent is, and has been since its organization, in substantial competition with other corporations and with individuals, partnerships, and firms engaged in the business of purchasing, rectifying, blending and bottling whiskies, brandies, gins, and other spirituous beverages, and in the sale thereof in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid respondent has, upon its said premises, a still which it uses in the production of gin by a process of rectification whereby alcohol, purchased but not produced by respondent, is re-distilled over juniper berries and other aromatics. Such rectification of alcoholic spirits does not make or constitute respondent a distiller, as defined by section 3247 of the Revised Statutes regulating Internal Revenue, nor as commonly understood by the public and the liquor industry. For a long period of time the word "distillers" when used in connection with the liquor industry and with the products thereof has had and still has a definite significance and meaning to the minds of wholesalers and retailers in such industry and to the ultimate purchasing public, to wit, the manufacture of such liquors by the process of distillation from mash, wort, or wash.

PAR. 3. Rectifying in the distilled spirits rectifying industry means the mixing of whiskies of different ages or types or the mixing of other ingredients with whiskies, but reducing proof of whiskey by adding water is not rectifying. Rectifiers also blend whiskies with neutral spirits (grain alcohol).

Many distillers operate a separate establishment 600 feet or more away from their distillery, known as a rectifying plant, wherein they operate in the same manner as described above, for a rectifier—sometimes exclusively with spirits of their own distillation and sometimes with spirits purchased from other distillers or both. Some distilleries have a tax-paid bottling room on the distillery bonded premises wherein their distilled spirits are bottled straight as they come from the still, or in a bonded warehouse after aging, or after reduction of proof. Any rectifying by a distiller, however, must be done in his rectifying plant under his rectifier's permit. On some bottled liquors, whether bottled at the distiller's rectifying plant or at any rectifying plant, appear the words "Bottled" or "Blended" (as the case may be) "by the ----- Company". If the distilled spirits therein contained are bottled by a distiller, either in his distillery or are spirits of his own distillation bottled in his rectifying plant, the distiller may and does put "Distilled and Bottled by ----- Company." If, in the distiller's rectifying plant, other spirits have been blended or rectified, he puts "Blended and Bottled by ----- Company."

With reference to the gin produced by respondent by a redistillation of purchased alcohol over juniper berries and other aromatics, existing regulations promulgated pursuant to Federal Alcohol Administration Act approved August 29, 1935, (49 Stat. 977), provide that rectifiers who redistill purchased alcohol over juniper berries and other aromatics must call such resulting product "distilled gin", and require that the labels state who distilled it. This serves to distinguish between gin produced by such method and "cold" or compounded gin prepared by mixing neutral spirits with essential flavoring oils.

Finally, (blown usually in the bottom of each bottle), there is a symbol, consisting of a letter followed by a number, identifying the bottler, viz., a "D" for a distillery and "R" for a rectifier, the number following said letter corresponding with the distiller's or rectifier's permit. Thus "R-164" designates this respondent. A distiller who also operates a rectifying plant, having both kinds of permits, may use either symbol depending upon whether the liquor contained in the bottle was purchased and bottled under his distiller's or his rectifier's permit. This number is placed on the bottle to identify the bottler.

Knowledge of these details is not widespread among the retail trade and the knowledge of the general public in regard thereto is very limited. All whiskies, whether emanating from distilleries or rectifiers, are generally in the trade conceded to be "distilled products."

It is not possible to determine from the presence of the phrase "Blended and Bottled by" alone or the phrase, "Bottled by" alone, on the label whether the package was bottled by a rectifier who is a distiller or by a rectifier who is not a distiller.

PAR. 4. The business carried on by Distillers Brands, Inc., from shortly after its organization until its removal to Florida about February 1937, was that of rectifiers of gin and blenders or bottlers of distilled spirits. It produced no distilled spirits from mash, wort, or wash. The aforesaid gin still located on its premises at Cincinnati, Ohio, was a 735-gallon still. It also operated a 627-gallon condenser. In addition to being a rectifier, bottler and blender, it wholesaled and bottled its products to jobbers. It sold none of its products to the State of Ohio Liquor Control, and purchased its distilled spirits and whiskies from such distillers as Century Distilling Company, Peoria, Ill.; American Distilling Company, Pekin, Ill.; and Watham Distilling Company, Lebanon, Ky.

Respondent operates under a permit from the Federal Alcohol Control Administration known as No. R-164, and also had permit from the Department of Liquor Control of the State of Ohio, which authorized Distillers Brands, Inc., "as a manufacturer to manufacture spirituous liquor and sell such product to the Department only, to import into this State spirituous liquor for blending or other manufacturing process, and to export from this State spirituous liquor in bulk or otherwise, for sale outside this State * * *." Respondent later operated under a similar permit from the Federal Alcohol Administration.

The Distillers Brands, Inc., have five salesmen and employed from fifty to sixty employees and appeared, when an inspection of the gin still was made, to be busily engaged in the bottling of its various products. One of its main items was the "Old Gold Applejack Brandy." It had not done any newspaper advertising and very little trade paper advertising. Its capacity was 150,000 gallons, of which about fifteen percent (15%) was gin. The plant was a large one, occupying four floors of a building 50' x 150', with the greater part given up to the plant, although one-half of a floor was occupied by the offices.

The sales were made principally to wholesalers in Kentucky, Florida, Missouri, Illinois, Wisconsin, West Virginia, although scattered sales were made elsewhere.

In the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid, respondent uses the word "Distillers" in its corporate name, printed on its stationery, invoices and on the labels attached to the bottles in which it sells and ships its said products. Respondent does not now own and never did own, operate or control any place or places where whiskies, gins, brandies, or other spirituous beverages were manufactured by distillation from mash, wort, or wash. The various brands shown on said labels were respondent's brands.

There was no proof that the word "Distillers" as used in respondent's corporate name in connection with the words "Brands" (in other words that the whole name "Distillers Brands") would deceive any retailer or wholesaler into the belief that this respondent was a distiller. However, out of twenty-nine members of the purchasing public called to the stand, nine of them testified that this respondent's name would lead them to believe that respondent was a distiller in the sense generally understood by the trade and the public, and practically all of the twenty-nine witnesses testified that they had a preference for a distillery bottled package over a rectifier bottled package. The said witnesses were selected and subpoenaed from the classified section of the telephone directories in five different large cities and testified as lay members of the purchasing public.

In addition to this likelihood and tendency toward deception of the purchasing public, respondent contended in its answer that it was a distiller and the facts disclosed are that the brands of liquors sold by this respondent were almost exclusively its own brands.

It is not difficult to choose statements, designs, and devices, or names, which will not deceive. Deception may result from the use of statements not technically false, or which may be literally true. The aim of the statute is to prevent resulting deception from indirection and ambiguity, as well as from statements which are false. Those statements which are ambiguous and liable to mislead should be read favorably to the accomplishment of the obvious purpose.

The Commission finds that in the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid, by the use of the word "Distillers" in its corporate name, printed on its stationery, in its advertising and on the labels attached to the bottles in which it sells and ships its said products, and in various other ways, respondent furnishes its customers, both wholesalers and retailers, with the means of representing to the ultimate consuming public that the said whiskies, gins, brandies, and other spirituous beverages therein contained were by it manufactured through the process of distillation from mash, wort, or wash, when, as a matter of fact respondent is not a distiller, does not distill the said whiskies, brandies, or other spirituous beverages by it so bottled, labeled, sold and transported, and merely by the use of a still as aforesaid in the rectification of alcoholic spirits by redistillation over juniper berries and other aromatics, does not distill the gins by it so bottled, labeled, sold and transported in the sense in which the word "distilled" is commonly accepted and understood by those engaged in the liquor trade and the public. Respondent does not own, operate or control any place or places where such beverages are manufactured by the process of distillation from mash, wort, or wash.

PAR. 5. There are among the competitors of respondent engaged in the sale of spirituous beverages as mentioned in Paragraph One hereof, corporations, firms, partnerships, and individuals who manufacture and distill from mash, wort, or wash whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages sold by them and who truthfully use the words "distillery," "distilleries," "distillers," or "distilling" as a part of their corporate names and on their stationery and advertising, and on the labels of the bottles in which they sell and ship such products. There are also among such competitors corporations, firms, partnerships and individuals engaged in the business of rectifying, blending and bottling whiskies, brandies, gins, and other spirituous beverages who do not use the words "distillery," "distilleries," "distilling," or "distillers" as a part of their corporate names, nor on their stationery and advertising, nor on the labels attached to the bottles in which they sell and ship their said products.

PAR. 6. The representation by respondent, as set forth in paragraph 4 hereof, has a capacity and tendency to and does mislead and deceive the purchasing public into the belief that the whiskies, brandies, gins, and other spirituous beverages sold by the respondent are manufactured and distilled by it from mash, wort, or wash, and has the capacity and tendency to and does induce the purchasing public, acting in such belief, to purchase the whiskies, brandies, gins and other spirituous beverages rectified, blended and bottled by the respondent, thereby diverting trade to respondent from its competitors who do not by their corporate name or in any other manner misrepresent that they are manufacturers by distillation from mash, wort, or wash of whiskies, brandies, gins, and other spirituous beverages, and thereby respondent does substantial injury to substantial competition in interstate commerce.

PAR. 7. Notwithstanding the contemplated change by respondent in its name as aforesaid from "Distillers Brands, Inc." to "Distributors Brands" respondent has at all times asserted that it had the legal right to use its former misleading designation and the Commission can under the circumstances have no assurance either that it has discontinued such practice or that, if so, such discontinuance will endure.

PAR. 8. Because of existing regulations promulgated under the Federal Alcohol Administration Act approved August 29, 1935 (49 Stat. 977), providing that rectifiers who redistill purchased alcohol over juniper berries and other aromatics may label such resulting product "Distilled Gin," and requiring that the labels state who distilled it, the Commission has excepted gins produced by respondent by redistillation of alcohol over juniper berries and other aromatics from the prohibitions of its order.

PAR. 9. The Commission's complaint in this case was issued prior to the decision of the United States Supreme Court in the case of A. L. A. Schechter Poultry Corporation et al. vs. United States (295 U. S. 495), and contained two counts. Count 1 specifically charged a violation of the Federal Trade Commission Act, and count 2 charged that the practices of respondent, as hereinbefore set out, were unfair methods within the meaning of the Federal Trade Commission Act because they were in violation of Section 3 of Title I of the National Industrial Recovery Act, which was invalidated by the aforesaid decision. For that reason the Commission is dismissing the complaint as to count 2 thereof.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of respondent, Distillers Brands, Inc., are to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

This proceeding having been heard by the Federal Trade Commission upon the complaint of the Commission, the answer of respondent, testimony and other evidence taken before John J. Keenan, an examiner of the Commission theretofore duly designated by it, in support of the allegations of said complaint and brief filed herein in support thereof, and the Commission having made its findings as to the facts and its conclusion that said respondent has violated the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled, "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes",

It is ordered, That the respondent, Distillers Brands, Inc., its officers, representatives, agents and employees, in connection with the offering for sale or sale and distribution by it in interstate commerce or in the District of Columbia, of whiskies, gins, or other spirituous beverages (except gins produced by it through a process of rectification whereby alcohol purchased but not produced by respondent is redistilled over juniper berries and other aromatics), do cease and desist from:

Representing, through the use of the word "Distillers" in its corporate name, on all stationery, advertising, or labels attached to the bottles in which its said products are sold and shipped, or in any other way by word or words of like import, (a) that respondent is a distiller of the said whiskies, gins, or other spirituous beverages; or, (b) that the said whiskies, gins, or other spirituous beverages were by it manufactured through a process of distillation; or (c) that respondent owns, operates or controls a place or places where any such products are by it manufactured by a process of original and continuous distillation from mash, wort or wash, through continuous closed pipes and vessels until the manufacture thereof is completed, unless and until respondent shall actually own, operate, or control such a place or places.

It is further ordered, That the said complaint be and the same hereby is dismissed as to count 2 thereof.

It is further ordered, That the said respondent, within 60 days from and after the date of service upon it of this order, shall file with the Commission a report or reports in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which it is complying and has complied with the order to cease and desist hereinabove set forth.

IN THE MATTER OF

THE SOLVOTONE COMPANY, AND JESSIE ROGERS, INDIVIDUALLY AND AS PRESIDENT THEREOF

COMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION
OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 20, 1914

Docket 3082. Complaint, Mar. 18, 1937—Decision, Aug. 17, 1937

Where a corporation engaged in sale and distribution of its "Solvotone" medicines or preparations, in commerce among the various States, direct to members of the consuming public and also to wholesale and retail druggists for resale, in substantial competition with others engaged in sale and distribution, among the various States and in the District of Columbia, of medicines of the same general kind and adapted to and used for same general purposes; and its president and principal owner, in active charge of its business and responsible for its policies and conduct in relation to acts and practices as herein set forth; in promoting sale of said medicines—

- (a) Represented, in newspaper advertisements and in publications of general circulation, and in various other advertising matter circulated and distributed direct to members of the purchasing public, both directly and through reproduction of testimonials or purported testimonial statements, that its said preparations constituted a cure, remedy, or competent and adequate treatment for gall-stones and ailments of the gall-bladder and diseases of the stomach or liver, and that said preparations were effective in treatment of stomach ulcers or cancer of the stomach, and that use thereof would remove gall-stones and prevent operations in such various conditions above indicated, including appendicitis; and

- (b) Represented, as aforesaid, that use of such preparations would relieve tightness around the waist or pain in the right side, regardless of cause thereof, including serious pathological conditions, and would end suffering;

Facts being medicines in question were not a cure, remedy or competent and adequate treatment for gall-stones, ailments of the gall-bladder, or stomach and liver diseases, would not remove or relieve such stones or prevent an operation where they had developed, were of no material use in treatment thereof or ailments of gall-bladder, or of value in treatment of stomach ulcers or cancers, and would not relieve tightness around waist, etc., when due to any serious pathological condition, were of no value, and might do great harm, where such pain was symptom of appendicitis, and would not end suffering nor prevent operation in aforesaid various cases, ordinarily evidenced by one or more of such symptoms as set forth by it;

With tendency to confuse, mislead, and deceive members of the public into the erroneous belief that said medicines were a cure, remedy, or competent and adequate treatment for gall-stones and such various ailments and conditions as above stated, and that they would accomplish results above set forth, regardless of cause thereof, and that they were useful and effective in treatment of such various conditions and would end suffering and prevent operations as above noted, and of inducing members of the public to purchase its said medicines because of erroneous belief thus

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that The Solvotone Company, a corporation, and Jessie Rogers, individually and as president of said corporation, have been and are using unfair methods of competition in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in said act, and it appearing to said Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. The said respondent, The Solvotone Company, is a corporation organized, existing, and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Illinois, with its office and principal place of business at 4303 Cottage Grove Avenue in the city of Chicago in said State. The respondent, Jessie Rogers, is president and principal owner of said corporation, and is, and has been, in active charge of, and responsible for the policies, and the conduct of the corporation in the acts and practices hereinafter set forth.

PAR. 2. The said respondent, The Solvotone Company, is now, and has been since October 1, 1935, engaged in the sale and distribution of a medicine known and described as "Solvotone." Said respondent, in the course and conduct of its business, during the time aforesaid, causes and has caused its said medicine to be transported from its said place of business in Illinois to, into, and through States of the United States other than Illinois to the various purchasers thereof in such other States. Said respondent's usual method of sale of said medicine is direct to members of the consuming public, but it is also sold to wholesale and retail druggists through whom it is in turn sold to members of the public.

PAR. 3. Other individuals, firms, and corporations in various States of the United States are and have been engaged in the sale and distribution of medicines of the same general kind as that sold by respondent corporation, or adapted to and used for the same general purposes for which said medicine is adapted. Said respondent corporation has been, during the aforesaid time, in substantial competition in commerce between and among the various States of the United States in the sale of said medicine with such other individuals, firms, and corporations.

PAR. 4. Respondents, in promoting the sale of said medicine, make use of advertisements published in newspapers and other publications of general circulation, as well as circulars and other advertising matter circulated and distributed direct to members of the purchasing public. In all of said advertisements it is represented that said medicine is a cure, remedy, or competent and adequate treatment for gallstones, ailments of the gall bladder, and stomach and liver diseases; and for tightness around the waist, and pain in the right side, regardless of the cause thereof, and that its use in such conditions will end suffering and avoid operations. Examples of such statements and representations are the following:

PAR. 5. That respondents, in advertisements and circular matter, published and distributed as aforesaid, represent directly or by implication or by use of the statements of others, that said medicine is a cure for serious and dangerous conditions of the human body such as gallstones, appendicitis, ulcer of the stomach, cancer of the stomach, etc., and that its use prevents the necessity for surgical operations to relieve such conditions. Examples of such representations are the following:

If you have a deep-seated case of long standing and suffer from frequent attacks of colic, pain in the right side or in the pit of the stomach, a feeling like a heavy load in the stomach or like a band drawn tightly around the waist, Solvotone may give you the relief you have been looking for * * * Solvotone * * * saved me from an operation and entirely relieved me.

Solvotone * * * in hundreds of cases on record has completely ended the need of an operation, even in very aggravated cases.

PAR. 6. In truth and in fact, said medicine is not a cure, remedy or competent and adequate treatment for gallstones, ailments of the gall bladder, or stomach and liver diseases. It will not relieve tightness around the waist, or pain in the right side when such conditions are due to any one of many causes. It will not remove gallstones nor will its use prevent an operation where gallstones have developed. It is of no material use in the treatment of gallstones or ailments of the gall bladder. It is of no value, and may do great harm, when used for a pain in the right side where such symptom is occasioned by appendicitis, as is often the case. It is of no value in the treatment of stomach ulcers or in the treatment of cancer of the stomach. Its use will not end suffering nor will it prevent operations in cases of appendicitis or of stomach ulcers or of cancer of the stomach, one or more of which conditions may, and usually do, show some of the symptoms listed by respondents as set forth in paragraphs 4 and 5 hereof.

PAR. 7. The use by respondents of the foregoing statements and representations, and other similar thereto, in offering for sale and selling said medicine has had, and now has, the tendency and capacity to, and does, in fact, mislead and deceive purchasers and prospective purchasers thereof into the erroneous and mistaken belief that such representations are true and induces them to purchase said medicine on account thereof. The result of respondents' said practices is to unfairly divert trade to respondent corporation from competitors engaged in the sale, between and among the various States of the United States, of medicines of the same kind, or similar to that sold by respondents, as well as those adapted to and used for the treatment of various bodily conditions for which respondents' said medicine is adapted.

There are among the competitors of said respondent corporation those who do not make the same or similar misleading representations as those made by respondents, as herein set out, but who truthfully and accurately state the facts in regard to the therapeutic effects of the medicines sold by them. As a result of respondents' practices, as herein set forth, injury has been and is now being done by respondents to competition in commerce between and among the various States of the United States.

PAR. 8. The above acts and things done by respondents are all to the injury and prejudice of the public and of competitors of respondent corporation and constitute unfair methods of competition in interstate commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914.

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

statement of facts so agreed upon should be taken as the facts in this proceeding and in lieu of testimony in support of the charges stated in the complaint, or in opposition thereto. It was further agreed that said Commission might proceed upon such statement of facts to make its report stating its findings as to the facts (including inferences from said stipulated facts) and its conclusion based thereon, and enter its order disposing of the proceeding without the presentation of argument or the filing of briefs. Said stipulation as to the facts has been duly recorded and filed in the office of the Commission. Thereafter, the proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on the said complaint, the answer thereto, and the statement of facts agreed to, as aforesaid, in lieu of testimony, briefs and oral arguments of counsel having been waived, and the Commission having duly considered the same, and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public, and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. The said respondent, The Solvotone Company, is a corporation organized, existing and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Illinois, and its office and principal place of business at 4303 Cottage Grove Avenue in the city of Chicago in said State. The respondent, Jessie Rogers, is president and principal owner of said corporation, and is and has been in active charge of the business thereof, and is and has been responsible for its policies and its conduct in relation to the acts and practices hereinafter set forth.

PAR. 2. The said respondent, The Solvotone Company, is now and has been since October 1, 1935, engaged in the sale and distribution in commerce between and among the various States of the United States of a medicine known and described as "Solvotone." Said respondent, in the course and conduct of its business, during the time aforesaid, causes and has caused its said medicine to be transported from its said place of business in Illinois to, into and through States of the United States other than Illinois to the various purchasers thereof in such other States. Said respondent's usual method of sale of said medicine is direct to members of the consuming public, but said medicine is also sold to wholesale and retail druggists through whom it is in turn sold to members of the public.

PAR. 3. During the time aforesaid, other individuals, firms and corporations in various States of the United States are and have been engaged in the sale and distribution in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia, of medicines of the same general kind as that sold by respondent corporation or adapted to and used for the same general purposes for which said medicine is adapted. Said respondent corporation has been, during the aforesaid time, in substantial competition in commerce between and among the various States of the United States in the sale of said medicine with such other individuals, firms, and corporations.

PAR. 4. Respondents, in promoting the sale of said medicine, make use of advertisements published in newspapers and other publications of general circulation, as well as circulars and other advertising matter circulated and distributed direct to members of the purchasing public.

Examples of statements and representations contained in said advertising matter are the following:

STOMACH PAINS, COLIC ATTACKS, PAIN IN RIGHT SIDE, arising functional disorders of the Liver, Gallbladder, Indigestion, heavy load in stomach, tightness around waste, or constipation, often quickly relieved with this Safe Home Treatment.

PAR. 6. Respondents' said medicine consists of three preparations which are referred to herein as No. 1, No. 2, and No. 3, respectively. The qualitative formulae, with quantitative formulae per tablet, are as follows:

No. 1.	Ext. Nux Vomica.....	1/10	gr.
	Ext. Rhubarb.....	1/4	gr.
	Powd. Ipecac.....	1/8	gr.
	Powd. Capsicum.....	1/4	gr.
	Ext. Gentian.....	1	gr.
	Pancreatin Ext.....	1	gr.
	Pepsin.....	1	gr.
	Sugar coated olive green
No. 2.	Sodium Phosphate.....	15	grs.
	Oil Peppermint.....	1/8	gr.
No. 3.	Ext. Cascara Sagrada.....	1	gr.
	Ext. Belladonna Leaves.....	1/8	gr.
	Powdered Ipecac.....	1/8	gr.
	Podophyllum.....	1/8	gr.
	Aloin.....	1/10	gr.
	Chocolate coated	1/10	gr.

Respondents' said preparations are directed to be taken together in the treatment of the conditions for which they are recommended. It is directed that said medicine be taken as follows:

No. 1.—One tablet before each meal.

No. 2.—One tablet after each meal—either swallowed whole or dissolved in hot water.

No. 3.—One to four tablets each day if constipated.

PAR. 7. The representations of respondent as aforesaid, import and imply and serve as representations to the effect that respondents' said medicine is a cure, remedy, or competent and adequate treatment for gall-stones, ailments of the gall-bladder, and stomach and liver diseases, and for tightness around the waist, and pain in the right side, regardless of the cause thereof, and that the use thereof in such conditions will end suffering and avoid operations; that it will remove gall-stones; and that its use will make operations unnecessary in serious conditions referred to generally by references to symptoms and organs and parts of the body which, by implication, include appendicitis, ulcers of the stomach and cancer of the stomach.

PAR. 8. In truth and in fact said medicine is not a cure, remedy or competent and adequate treatment for gall-stones, ailments of the gall, bladder, or stomach and liver diseases. It will not relieve tightness around the waist, or pain in the right side, when such conditions are due to any serious pathological condition. It will not remove or relieve gall-stones nor will its use prevent an operation where gall-stones have developed. It is of no material use in the treatment of gall-stones or ailments of the gall-bladder. It is of no value, and may do great harm, when used for pain in the right side where such symptom is occasioned by appendicitis, as is often the case. It is of no value in the treatment of stomach ulcers or in the treatment of cancer of the stomach. Its use will not end suffering nor will it prevent operations in cases of appendicitis or of stomach ulcers or of cancer of the stomach, one or more of which conditions may and usually do show some of the symptoms as set forth in the representations of the respondent as aforesaid.

PAR. 9. The representations of respondents as aforesaid, have had and do have the tendency and capacity to confuse, mislead and deceive members of the public into the belief that said medicine is a cure, remedy or competent and adequate treatment for gall-stones, ailments of the gall-bladder, and stomach and liver diseases; that it will relieve tightness around the waist and pain in the right side, regardless of the cause thereof, and when such conditions are due to serious pathological conditions; that it will remove gall-stones and that its use will prevent an operation where gall-stones have developed; that it is useful and effective in the treatment of gall-stones, appendicitis, stomach ulcers, and cancer of the stomach, and that its use will prevent operations for such conditions as well as other serious pathological conditions; and that its use will end suffering, when such are not the facts. Said representations of respondents have had and do have the tendency and capacity to induce members of the public to purchase said medicine because of the erroneous beliefs engendered as above set forth, and to divert trade to respondent corporation from competitors engaged in the sale, in interstate commerce, of medicines of the same general kind as that sold by respondent corporation as well as those so engaged in such sale of medicines adapted to and used for the treatment of the various ailments and conditions for which said medicine is adapted. There were and are among the competitors of the respondent corporation those who do not misrepresent the therapeutic properties and effects of the medicines sold by them but who truthfully and accurately state the therapeutic effects thereof. Respondents' said acts and practices tend to and do in fact divert business to respondent corporation from its said competitors to the substantial injury and prejudice of such competitors.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondents, The Solvotone Company, a corporation, and Jessie Rogers, individually and as president of said corporation, are to the prejudice of the public and of the competitors of the respondent corporation, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce, within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

It is ordered, That the respondents, The Solvotone Company, a corporation, its officers, and Jessie Rogers, an individual, and their respective representatives, agents, and employees, in connection with the offering for sale, sale and distribution of certain medicinal preparations now known and described as "Solvotone," or of said preparations, or any other preparations of the same or similar formulae or therapeutic effect, sold under that name, or any other name, in interstate commerce or in the District of Columbia, do forthwith cease and desist from representing directly or by implication, or by use of the statements, endorsements or testimonials of others:

1. That said preparations constitute a cure, remedy, or competent and adequate treatment for gall-stones, ailments of the gall-bladder, or for diseases of the stomach or liver.

2. That the use of said preparations will relieve tightness around the waist or pain in the right side regardless of the cause thereof or when such symptoms are due to any serious pathological condition.

3. That the use of said preparations will remove gall-stones or will prevent an operation where gall-stones have developed.

Order

4. That said preparations are useful or effective in the treatment of gall-stones, stomach ulcers, or cancer of the stomach or any other serious pathological condition or will prevent an operation in any such condition.

5. That the use of said preparations will end suffering.

It is further ordered, That the respondents shall, within 60 days after service upon them of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which they have complied with this order.

IN THE MATTER OF

KEELEY'S, INC.

Docket 3112. Complaint, Apr. 24, 1937—Decision, Aug. 17, 1937

Where a corporation engaged in manufacture and sale of candy, including numerous assortments which were so packed and assembled as to involve use of a lottery scheme when sold and distributed to consumers thereof, and some of which, along with punchboard supplied, were composed of a number of boxes or packages of candy of varying size, for sale and distribution to customers under a plan or scheme, and in accordance with said board's explanatory legend, by which purchaser received, for the five cents paid, one of said boxes or nothing other than privilege of making a punch, dependent upon number punched by chance, or the making of the last punch in each of the sections into which board was divided, or the making of the last punch of the entire board—

Sold, to wholesalers and jobbers and to retailers for display and resale to purchasing public in accordance with aforesaid sales plan, said assortments, and thereby supplied to and placed in the hands of others the means of conducting lotteries in the sale of such products in accordance with such plan, and thus sold, itself, in retail establishment of its own, such assortments, contrary to public policy long recognized by the common law and criminal statutes, and to an established public policy of the United States Government, and in competition with many who, unwilling to offer and sell candy so packed and assembled, as above described, or otherwise arranged and packed for sale to purchasing public as to involve a game of chance, refrain therefrom;

With capacity and tendency to induce purchasers of its said products to buy same in preference to candy offered and sold by competitors, and with result that many dealers in, and ultimate purchasers of, candy were attracted by said method and manner of packing same and by element of chance involved in sale thereof as aforesaid, and thereby induced to buy its said candy, thus packed and sold by it, in preference to that offered and sold by said competitors who do not use same or equivalent method, and with tendency and capacity, because of said game of chance, to divert to it trade from its competitors, as aforesaid, who do not use such or equivalent method, exclude from said trade all competitors who do not use such method because unlawful, lessen competition in candy trade, and tend to create a monopoly thereof in it and in such other competitors as do use such method, and deprive purchasing public of benefit of free competition in trade in question, and eliminate therefrom all actual, and exclude therefrom all potential, competitors who do not adopt and use such or equivalent method:

Held, That such methods, acts and practices, under the conditions and circumstances set forth, were all to the prejudice of the public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition.

Complaint

Before Mr. Henry M. White, trial examiner.

Mr. Henry C. Lank and Mr. P. C. Kolinski for the Commission.

Mr. H. Hartland Halliday, of Salt Lake City, Utah, for respondent.

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled, "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that Keeley's, Inc., a corporation, hereinafter referred to as respondent, has been and is using unfair methods of competition in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in said act, and it appearing to said Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent is a corporation organized and doing business under the laws of the State of Utah, with its principal office and place of business located at 258 South State Street in Salt Lake City, Utah. It is now, and for several years last past has been, engaged in the manufacture of candy and in the sale and distribution thereof to wholesale dealers and jobbers and to retail dealers located at points in the various States of the United States, and is also engaged in the sale and distribution of candy and candy products to the consuming public in the State of Utah. It causes and has caused its said candy when sold to be transported from its principal place of business in Salt Lake City, Utah, to wholesale and retail purchasers thereof in the State of Utah and in other States of the United States at their respective places of business. There is now, and has been for several years last past, a course of trade and commerce by said respondent in such candy between and among the States of the United States. In the course and conduct of said business, respondent is in competition with other corporations and with partnerships and individuals engaged in the manufacture of candy and in the sale and distribution thereof in commerce between and among the various States of the United States.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of its business, as described in paragraph 1 hereof, respondent sells and has sold to wholesale dealers and jobbers and to retail dealers assortments of candy so packed and assembled as to involve the use of a lottery scheme when sold and distributed to the consumers thereof, and it has also, in its retail establishment, sold to the consuming public such assortments by means of a lottery scheme.

Such assortments are composed of a number of boxes or packages of candy of varying size, together with a device commonly called a "punchboard." The boxes or packages of candy contained in said assortments are distributed to purchasers in substantially the following manner:

Said punchboard contains a number of holes divided into sections. A slip of paper bearing a printed number is secreted in each hole. The punchboard also bears at the top thereof a number of printed legends or statements informing customers and prospective customers which numbers receive a box of candy and the size thereof. Sales are 5¢ each, and a purchaser who obtains one of the numbers calling for a box of candy is entitled to receive the same as a prize and without additional charge. The purchaser of the last punch in each section and the purchaser of the last punch on the board are entitled to receive a specified box or package of candy as a prize and without additional charge. Purchasers of punches, who do not procure one of the numbers calling for a box of candy, receive nothing for their money other than the privilege of punching a number from said board. The numbers on said printed slips secreted in said punchboard are effectively concealed from purchasers and prospective purchasers until a selection has been made and the printed slip punched from the board. The boxes or packages of candy are thus distributed to the consuming public wholly by lot or chance.

Respondent sells and distributes numerous assortments, all of which involve substantially the same principle or sales plan as described above, but varying in detail.

PAR. 3. The wholesale dealers and jobbers to whom respondent sells its assortments resell the same to retail dealers, and such retail dealers and the retail dealers to whom respondent sells direct, and the respondent in its retail establishments, expose said assortments for sale and sell said packages of candy to the purchasing public in accordance with the aforesaid sales plan. Respondent thus supplies to and places in the hands of others the means of conducting lotteries in the sale of its products in accordance with the sales plan hereinabove set forth; and respondent in its retail establishments conducts lotteries in the sale of its products to the consuming public. Such sales plan has the capacity and tendency of inducing purchasers thereof to purchase respondent's said products in preference to candy offered for sale and sold by its competitors.

PAR. 4. The sale of candy to the purchasing public in the manner above alleged involves a game of chance or the sale of a chance to procure a box or package of candy.

The use by respondent of said method in the sale of candy, and the sale of candy by and through the use thereof and by the aid of said method, is a practice of the sort which the common law and criminal statutes have long deemed contrary to public policy, and is contrary to an established public policy of the Government of the United States. The use by respondent of said method has the tendency unduly to hinder competition or create monopoly in the candy trade in this, to wit: that the use thereof has the tendency and capacity to exclude from said trade competitors of respondent who do not adopt and use the same method or an equivalent or similar method involving the same or an equivalent or similar element of chance or lottery scheme.

Many persons, firms, and corporations who make and sell candy in competition with the respondent, as above alleged, are unwilling to offer for sale or sell candy so packed and assembled as above alleged, or otherwise arranged and packed for sale to the purchasing public so as to involve a game of chance, and such competitors refrain therefrom.

PAR. 5. Many dealers in and ultimate purchasers of candy are attracted by respondent's said method and manner of packing said candy and by the element of chance involved in the sale thereof in the manner above described, and are thereby induced to purchase said candy so packed and sold by respondent in preference to candy offered for sale and sold by said competitors of respondent who do not use the same or equivalent methods. The use of said method by respondent has the tendency and capacity, because of said game of chance, to divert to respondent trade and custom from its said competitors who do not use the same or an equivalent method; to exclude from said candy trade all competitors who are unwilling to and who do not use the same or an equivalent method because the same is unlawful; to lessen competition in said candy trade and to tend to create a monopoly of said candy trade in respondent and in such other competitors of respondent as use the same or an equivalent method; and to deprive the purchasing public of the benefit of free competition in said candy trade. The use of said method by respondent has the tendency and capacity to eliminate from said candy trade all actual competitors and to exclude therefrom all potential competitors who do not adopt and use said method or an equivalent method.

PAR. 6. The aforementioned method, acts and practices of respondent are all to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors, as hereinabove alleged. Said method, acts, and practices constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, on April 24, 1937, issued and on April 27, 1937, served its complaint in this proceeding upon the respondent, Keeley's, Inc., a corporation, charging it with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of the provisions of said act. After the issuance of said complaint and the filing of respondent's answer thereto, the Commission, by order entered herein, granted respondent's motion for permission to withdraw said answer and to file in lieu thereof its substitute answer dated August 4, 1937, admitting all the material allegations of the complaint to be true and waiving the taking of further evidence and all other intervening procedure, which substitute answer was duly filed in the office of the Commission. Thereafter, this proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on the said complaint and the substitute answer, and the Commission having duly considered the matter and being now fully advised in the premises finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom.

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent is a corporation organized and doing business under the laws of the State of Utah, with its principal office and place of business located at 258 South State Street in Salt Lake City, Utah. It is now, and for several years last past has been, engaged in the manufacture of candy and in the sale and distribution thereof to wholesale dealers and jobbers and to retail dealers located at points in the various States of the United States, and is also engaged in the sale and distribution of candy and candy products to the consuming public in the State of Utah. It causes and has caused its said candy when sold to be transported from its principal place of business in Salt Lake City, Utah, to wholesale and retail purchasers thereof in the State of Utah and in other States of the United States at their respective places of business. There is now, and has been for several years last past, a course of trade and commerce by said respondent in such candy between and among the States of the United States. In the course and conduct of said business, respondent is in competition with other corporations and with partnerships and individuals engaged in the manufacture of candy and in the sale and distribution thereof in commerce between and among the various States of the United States.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of its business, as described in paragraph 1 hereof, respondent sells and has sold to wholesale dealers and jobbers and to retail dealers assortments of candy so packed and assembled as to involve the use of a lottery scheme when sold and distributed to the consumers thereof, and it has also, in its retail establishments, sold to the consuming public such assortments by means of a lottery scheme. Such assortments are composed of a number of boxes or packages of candy of varying size, together with a device commonly called a "punchboard." The boxes or packages of candy contained in said assortments are distributed to purchasers in substantially the following manner: Said punchboard contains a number of holes divided into sections. A slip of paper bearing a printed number is secreted in each hole. The punchboard also bears at the top thereof a number of printed legends or statements informing customers and prospective customers which numbers receive a box of candy and the size thereof. Sales are 5¢ each, and a purchaser who obtains one of the numbers calling for a box of candy is entitled to receive the same as a prize and without additional charge. The purchaser of the last punch in each section and the purchaser of the last punch on the board are entitled to receive a specified box or package of candy as a prize and without additional charge. Purchasers of punches, who do not procure one of the numbers calling for a box of candy, receive nothing for their money other than the privilege of punching a number from said board. The numbers on said printed slips secreted in said punchboard are effectively concealed from purchasers and prospective purchasers until a selection has been made and the printed slip punched from the board. The boxes or packages of candy are thus distributed to the consuming public wholly by lot or chance.

Respondent sells and distributes numerous assortments, all of which involve substantially the same principle or sales plan as described above, but varying in detail.

PAR. 3. The wholesale dealers and jobbers to whom respondent sells its assortments resell the same to retail dealers, and such retail dealers and the retail dealers to whom respondent sells direct, and the respondent in its retail establishments, expose said assortments for sale and sell said packages of candy to the purchasing public in accordance with the aforesaid sales plan. Respondent thus supplies to and places in the hands of others the means of conducting lotteries in the sale of its products in accordance with the sales plan hereinabove set forth; and respondent in its retail establishments conducts lotteries in the sale of its products to the consuming public. Such sales plan has the capacity and tendency of inducing purchasers thereof to purchase respondent's said products in preference to candy offered for sale and sold by its competitors.

PAR. 4. The sale of candy to the purchasing public in the manner above found involves a game of chance or the sale of a chance to procure a box or package of candy. The use by respondent of said method in the sale of candy, and the sale of candy by and through the use thereof and by the aid of said method, is a practice of the sort which the common law and criminal statutes have long deemed contrary to public policy, and is contrary to an established public policy of the Government of the United States. The use by respondent of said method has the tendency unduly to hinder competition or create monopoly in the candy trade in this, to wit: that the use thereof has the tendency and capacity to exclude from said trade competitors of respondent who do not adopt and use the same method or an equivalent or similar method involving the same or an equivalent or similar element of chance or lottery scheme. Many persons, firms, and corporations who make and sell candy in competition with respondent are unwilling to offer for sale or sell candy so packed and assembled as above described, or otherwise arranged and packed for sale to the purchasing public so as to involve a game of chance, and such competitors refrain therefrom.

PAR. 5. Many dealers in and ultimate purchasers of candy are attracted by respondent's said method and manner of packing said candy and by the element of chance involved in the sale thereof in the manner above described, and are thereby induced to purchase said candy so packed and sold by respondent in preference to candy offered for sale and sold by said competitors of respondent who do not use the same or an equivalent method. The use of said method by respondent has the tendency and capacity, because of said game of chance, to divert to respondent trade and custom from its said competitors who do not use the same or an equivalent method; to exclude from said candy trade all competitors who are unwilling to and who do not use the same or an equivalent method because the same is unlawful; to lessen competition in said candy trade and to tend to create a monopoly of said candy trade in respondent and in such other competitors of respondent as use the same or an equivalent method; and to deprive the purchasing public of the benefit of free competition in said candy trade. The use of said method by respondent has the tendency and capacity to eliminate from said candy trade all actual competitors and to exclude therefrom all potential competitors who do not adopt and use said method or an equivalent method.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid method, acts and practices of respondent, Keeley's, Inc., a corporation, under the conditions and circumstances set forth in the foregoing findings of fact, are all to the prejudice of the public and respondent's competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

It is ordered, That the respondent, Keeley's, Inc., a corporation, its officers, agents, representatives, and employees, in connection with the offering for sale, sale and distribution in interstate commerce of candy, do forthwith cease and desist from:

1. Selling and distributing to jobbers and wholesale dealers for resale to retail dealers, or to retail dealers direct, candy so packed and assembled that sales of such candy to the general public are to be made, or may be made, by means of a lottery, gaming device, or gift enterprise.

2. Supplying to or placing in the hands of wholesale dealers and jobbers or retail dealers assortments of candy which are used, or which may be used, without alteration or rearrangement of the contents of such assortments, to conduct a lottery, gaming device, or gift enterprise in the sale or distribution of the candy contained in said assortments to the public.

3. Packing or assembling in the same assortment of candy for sale to the public at retail boxes of candy, together with a device commonly called a "punchboard," which punchboard is for use, or which may be or is designed to be used, in distributing or selling said candy to the public at retail.

4. Furnishing to retail and wholesale dealers and jobbers a device commonly called a "punchboard," either with assortments of candy or separately, bearing a legend or legends or statements informing the purchasing public that the candy is being sold to the public by lot or chance or in accordance with a sales plan which constitutes a lottery, gaming device, or gift enterprise.

It is further ordered, That the respondent, Keeley's, Inc., a corporation, shall, within 30 days after service upon it of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which it has complied with the order to cease and desist hereinabove set forth.

IN THE MATTER OF
PUBLIC SERVICE INSTITUTE, INC.COMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 26, 1914*Docket 3043. Complaint, Jan. 29, 1937—Decision, Aug. 18, 1937*

Where a corporation engaged in sale and distribution of correspondence courses of study and instruction designed and intended to prepare students for examinations for certain United States civil service positions, in substantial competition with those similarly engaged and also with those engaged in sale and distribution in commerce of correspondence courses of study and instruction in other lines—

- (a) Represented, directly or by implication, through statements in circulars, folders, and other printed matter distributed to the public by mail or otherwise, and through its salesmen, that the business conducted by it was operated on a large and substantial basis with a staff of twenty or more teachers or qualified instructors, and that its said staff was made up exclusively, or in the majority, of former Government employees who were experts on the subject of civil service examinations by reason of previous Government employment or prior connection with the United States Civil Service Commission, as well as by general education and other experience, facts being it did not have as many as twenty teachers and instructors on its staff and its said staff was not made up, in whole or in large part, of such former Government employees, and its said instructors were not civil service experts by reason of previous Government connection;
- (b) Represented, as aforesaid, that it conducted a large residence school where individual instruction was given to large numbers of students, and that enrollment for its courses of study and instruction constituted enrollment for a civil service examination or position, or both, and that it was an agency of, or connected with, the United States Government, facts being it did not conduct a residence school, enrollment in its courses did not constitute enrollment for such an examination or position, and it was not an agency of, nor connected with, the Government;
- (c) Represented, as aforesaid, that the position of railway mail clerk in such service was a desirable one with relatively short working hours, and that thousands of its students had successfully passed civil service examinations and received appointments in the Government service, and that, at that time, more than two thousand people had enrolled and fully completed its course of study, facts being hours of such clerks were not, as a regular thing, short, and no such number of its students had successfully passed examinations, as aforesaid, and received appointment, nor had any such number as above set forth at that time fully completed its courses;
- (d) Represented, as aforesaid, that those who purchased its said courses direct, without the intervention of salesmen, were enabled to secure at lower prices not only the same material for study, but also the identical services therewith, and same supervision as offered and given by it in the courses

25 F. T. C.

- of study and instruction sold by salesmen, facts being same service and supervision were not given when study material was sold direct as when courses were sold, as aforesaid, by salesmen; and
- (c) Misleadingly represented, through its salesman and through use of a so-called refund agreement which it entered into with its students, that Government positions were guaranteed to those who successfully completed its courses, and that all sums paid therefor would be refunded if no such position was secured thereby, through use of terms and conditions in agreement in question contingent, among other things, upon taking first examination for which student was qualified, and written application, or training, without additional cost for future examination until same should be passed with an eligible grade, facts being conditions imposed were difficult of fulfillment and conditions precedent upon which refund depended were uncertain and might not exist or happen, due to uncertainty of civil service examinations and remote chances for appointment even for passing candidates, and possibility of either Government position or refund was remote in great majority of cases;

With tendency and capacity to confuse, mislead and deceive members of the public into the belief that it conducted a large school with a staff of twenty or more qualified teachers, and that the facts as to its nature, operations, attendance, and advantages and opportunities, etc., were as hereinabove set forth, and to induce such members to purchase its said courses of study and instruction because of the various erroneous beliefs thus engendered, and to divert trade to it from competitors similarly engaged and from those engaged in such sale in other lines of study, and with effect of diverting business to it from competitors, included among those above set forth, who do not make the same or similar misleading representations but truthfully and accurately state the facts in regard to their courses, as well as in regard to other matters connected therewith; to their substantial injury and prejudice:

Held, That such acts and practices were to the prejudice of the public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition.

Mr. Harry D. Michael for the Commission.

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that Public Service Institute, Inc., a corporation, hereinafter referred to as respondent, has been and is using unfair methods of competition in commerce as "commerce" is defined in said act, and it appearing to said Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. That said respondent, Public Service Institute, Inc., is a corporation organized, existing, and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Missouri, with its office and principal place of business at 425 DeBaliviere Avenue, in the city of St. Louis, in said State.

PAR. 2. That said respondent, Public Service Institute, Inc., is now, and has been since September 25, 1935, engaged in the sale and distribution of courses of study and instruction designed and intended for preparing students thereof for examinations for certain civil service positions under the United States Government, which said courses of study and instruction are pursued by correspondence through the medium of the United States mails. That said respondent, in the course and conduct of said business during the time aforesaid, causes and has caused its said courses of study and instruction to be transported from its said place of business in Missouri, to, into, and through, States of the United States other than Missouri to the various purchasers thereof in such other States to whom said courses of study and instruction are, or have been, sold.

PAR. 3. That, during the time above mentioned, other individuals, firms, and corporations in various States of the United States are, and have been, engaged in the sale and distribution of courses of study and instruction designed and intended for the purpose of preparing students thereof for examinations for civil service positions under the United States Government, and also of courses of study and instruction in other lines, all of which are pursued by correspondence. That such other individuals, firms, and corporations have caused and do now cause their said courses of study and instruction, when sold by them, to be transported from various States of the United States to, into and through, States other than the State of origin of the shipment thereof. That said respondent has been, during the aforesaid time, in competition in commerce between and among the various States of the United States in the sale of its said courses of study and instruction with such other individuals, firms, and corporations.

PAR. 4. That respondent, in promoting the sale of its said courses of study and instruction to and among members of the public, makes use of circulars, folders and other printed matter which it distributes to the public by mail or otherwise. That, by such means, respondent makes, or has made, various misleading statements. Among such statements are the following:

1. You will have the help, aid and assistance of our staff of 20 persons,
* * *
2. We have prepared thousands successfully.
3. Railway Mail Clerk * * . On duty a few hours per day— * *.

Complaint

25 F. T. C.

4. Our staff consists of Ex-Government employees * * * they are Civil Service experts.

5. We have assisted more than two thousand to prepare.

6. You could get no more thorough training in our highly tutored individual instruction school, where we have more than sixteen hundred active students, * * *.

7. Deal Direct With Us And Save Salesman's Commission.

8. Civil Service Enrollment Department.

9. * * * It is our intention without further notice to you to turn this entire matter over to the United States Collection and Credit Agency with instructions to handle to a conclusion.

The aforesaid statements, together with other similar statements not set out herein, and also various statements of like nature made by respondent's salesmen in the sale of said courses of study and instruction, purport to be descriptive of the character, nature and size of respondent's said business or of the personnel connected therewith, or both, and serve respectively, directly or by implication, as representations to purchasers and prospective purchasers of respondent's courses of study and instruction that:

1. The business conducted by respondent is operated on a large and substantial basis with a staff of 20 or more teachers or qualified instructors.

2. Thousands of respondent's students have successfully passed civil service examinations and received appointments in the Government service.

3. The position of railway mail clerk in the Government service is a desirable one with relatively short working hours.

4. That respondent's staff of instructors is made up exclusively, or in the majority, of ex-Government employees who are experts on the subject of civil service examinations by reason of previous Government employment or prior connection with the United States Civil Service Commission as well as by general education and other experience.

5. More than two thousand persons had enrolled and fully completed respondent's course of study at the time said statement was made.

6. Respondent conducts a large residence school where personal, individual instruction is given to large numbers of students.

7. In purchasing respondent's courses of study direct, without the intervention of salesmen, such purchasers are enabled to secure, at lower prices, not only the same material for study but also the identical services therewith and the same supervision as offered and given by respondent in the courses of study and instruction sold by salesmen.

8. The enrollment for respondent's courses of study and instruction is an enrollment for a civil service examination or position, or both.

9. Respondent corporation is an agency of or connected with the United States Government.

That said representations and implications do not reflect the true facts and are erroneous and misleading.

PAR. 5. That, in truth and in fact: Respondent does not have as many as 20 teachers and instructors on its staff. Thousands of respondent's students have not successfully passed civil service examinations and received appointments in the Government service. The hours of work of railway mail clerks are not short as a regular thing. Respondent's staff of instructors is not made up in whole or in large part of ex-Government employees nor are they civil service experts by reason of previous Government connection. No such number as two thousand persons had fully completed respondent's courses at the time representations to that effect were made. Respondent does not conduct a residence school. The same service and supervision is not given when study material is sold direct. Enrollment in respondent's course does not constitute enrollment for a civil service examination or position. And respondent is not an agency of, or connected with, the United States Government.

PAR. 6. That respondent, through its salesmen and through use of a so-called "Refund Agreement," which it enters into with its students, represents that government positions are guaranteed to those who successfully complete respondent's courses and that all sums paid for such courses will be refunded if no government position is secured thereby. Said refund agreement, so used by respondent, is as follows:

REFUND AGREEMENT

It is understood that the Public Service Institute, Inc., agrees to refund all money paid by me, if I have met the following conditions:

(a) I am to complete each lesson of the entire training promptly, as received, sending in all work and examination papers for correction.

(b) I am to make all payments direct to the Public Service Institute, Inc. (except down payment attached hereto), to be received on or before date due.

(c) I am to try the first examination or examinations which I am qualified to take as specified by the Government at the time such examinations are announced by the Civil Service Commission.

(d) If I fail to pass such governmental examination, I am upon written application to receive a refund of the entire amount paid by me for this training, or I will be trained without additional cost for future governmental examinations, which the Government qualifications will permit me to take, until I pass an examination with a grade high enough to make me eligible for an appointment in governmental service.

Such refund agreement is misleading in that the conditions upon which it depends are difficult of fulfillment and, further, because the facts and circumstances upon which a refund depends are uncertain and may not exist or happen. Such facts and circumstances are not set out in said agreement and are not explained by salesmen. In consequence, the possibility of either a government position or of a refund is remote in the great majority of cases and the refund agreement is inoperative and meaningless in such cases.

PAR. 7. That, the use by respondent of the foregoing statements and representations, and others similar thereto, in offering for sale and selling its courses of study and instruction, as herein set out, has had, and now has, the tendency and capacity to, and does in fact, mislead and deceive purchasers and prospective purchasers thereof into the erroneous and mistaken belief that such representations as set out in paragraphs 4 and 6 hereof are true and induces them to purchase such courses of study and instruction on account thereof. The result of respondent's said practices is to divert trade to respondent from competitors engaged in the sale of correspondence courses in interstate commerce in similar lines to those offered by respondent, as well as those so engaged in such sale in other lines of study.

There are among the competitors of respondent those who do not make the same or similar misleading representations as those made by respondent, as herein set out, but who truthfully and accurately state the facts in the particulars as aforesaid. As a result of respondent's practices, as herein set forth, injury has been and is now being done by respondent to competition in commerce between and among the various States of the United States.

PAR. 8. The above acts and things done by respondent are all to the injury and prejudice of the public and the competitors of respondent in interstate commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914.

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

its complaint in this proceeding upon respondent, Public Service Institute, Inc., a corporation, charging it with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of the provisions of said act. After the issuance of said complaint and the filing of respondent's answer thereto, a stipulation as to the facts was agreed upon by and between W. T. Kelley, Chief Counsel for the Commission, and the respondent, by which it was agreed that the statement of facts so agreed upon should be taken as the facts in the proceeding and in lieu of testimony in support of the charges stated in the complaint, or in opposition thereto. It was further agreed that said Commission might proceed upon such statement of facts to make its report stating its findings as to the facts (including inferences from said stipulated facts) and its conclusion based thereon, and enter its order disposing of the proceeding without the presentation of argument or the filing of briefs. Said stipulation as to the facts has been duly recorded and filed in the office of the Commission. Thereafter, this proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on the said complaint, the answer thereto, and the statement of facts agreed to, as aforesaid, in lieu of testimony, briefs and oral arguments of counsel having been waived, and the Commission having duly considered the same and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom.

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. The respondent, Public Service Institute, Inc., is a corporation organized, existing, and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Missouri, with its office and principal place of business at 425 DeBaliviere Avenue, in the city of St. Louis, in said State.

PAR. 2. The respondent, Public Service Institute, Inc., is now, and has been since September 25, 1935, engaged in the sale and distribution in commerce between and among various States of the United States of courses of study and instruction designed and intended for preparing students thereof for examinations for certain civil service positions under the United States Government, which said courses of study and instruction are pursued by correspondence through the medium of the United States mails. Said respondent, in the course and conduct of said business during the time aforesaid, causes and has caused its said courses of study and instruction to be transported from its said place of business in Missouri, to, into, and through States of the United States other than Missouri to the various purchasers thereof in such other States to whom said courses of study and instruction are, or have been, sold.

PAR. 3. During the time above mentioned, other individuals, firms, and corporations in various States of the United States are, and have been, engaged in the sale and distribution in commerce between and among the various States of the United States, and in the District of Columbia, of courses of study and instruction designed and intended for the purpose of preparing students thereof for examinations for civil service positions under the United States Government, and also of courses of study and instruction in other lines, all of which are pursued by correspondence. Said respondent has been, during the aforesaid time, in substantial competition in commerce between and among the various States of the United States in the sale of its said courses of study and instruction with such other individuals, firms, and corporations.

PAR. 4. Respondent, in promoting the sale of its said courses of study and instruction to and among members of the public, has made use of circulars, folders and other printed matter which it has distributed to the public by mail or otherwise. By such means, respondent has made various misleading statements. Among such statements are the following:

1. You will have the help, aid and assistance of our staff of 20 persons, * * *.
2. We have prepared thousands successfully.
3. Railway Mail Clerk * * * On duty a few hours per day— * * *.
4. Our staff consists of Ex-Government employees * * * they are Civil Service experts.
5. We have assisted more than two thousand to prepare.
6. You could get no more thorough training in our highly tutored individual instruction school, where we have more than sixteen hundred active students, * * *.
7. Deal Direct With Us and Save Salesman's Commission.
8. Civil Service Enrollment Department.
9. * * * It is our intention without further notice to you to turn this entire matter over to the United States Collection and Credit Agency with instructions to handle to a conclusion.

The aforesaid statements, together with other similar statements, and also various statements of like nature made by respondent's salesmen in the sale of said courses of study and instruction, purported to be descriptive of the character, nature and size of respondent's said business or of the personnel connected therewith, or both, and served, respectively, directly or by implication, as representations to purchasers and prospective purchasers of respondent's courses of study and instruction that:

1. The business conducted by respondent is operated on a large and substantial basis with a staff of 20 or more teachers or qualified instructors.

2. Thousands of respondent's students have successfully passed civil service examinations and received appointments in the Government service.

3. The position of railway mail clerk in the Government service is a desirable one with relatively short working hours.

4. Respondent's staff of instructors is made up exclusively, or in the majority, of ex-government employees who are experts on the subject of civil service examinations by reason of previous government employment or prior connection with the United States Civil Service Commission as well as by general education and other experience.

5. More than two thousand persons had enrolled and fully completed respondent's course of study at the time the statement to that effect was made.

6. Respondent conducts a large residence school where personal, individual instruction is given to large numbers of students.

7. In purchasing respondent's courses of study direct, without the intervention of salesmen, such purchasers are enabled to secure, at lower prices, not only the same material for study but also the identical services therewith and the same supervision as offered and given by respondent in the courses of study and instruction sold by salesmen.

8. The enrollment for respondent's courses of study and instruction is an enrollment for a civil service examination or position, or both.

9. Respondent corporation is an agency of or connected with the United States Government.

Said representations and implications do not reflect the true facts and are erroneous and misleading.

PAR. 5. In truth and in fact:

Respondent does not have as many as 20 teachers and instructors on its staff.

Thousands of respondent's students have not successfully passed civil service examinations and received appointments in the government service.

The hours of work of railway mail clerks are not short as a regular thing.

Respondent's staff of instructors is not made up in whole or in large part of ex-government employees nor are they civil service experts by reason of previous government connection.

No such number as two thousand persons had fully completed respondent's courses at the time representations to that effect were made.

Respondent does not conduct a residence school.

The same service and supervision is not given when study material is sold direct as when courses are sold by salesmen.

Enrollment in respondent's course does not constitute enrollment for a civil service examination or position.

Respondent is not an agency of, or connected with, the United States Government.

PAR. 6. Respondent through its salesmen and through use of a so-called "Refund Agreement," which it enters into with its students, represents that government positions are guaranteed to those who successfully complete respondent's courses and that all sums paid for such courses will be refunded if no government position is secured thereby. Said refund agreement, so used by respondent, is as follows:

REFUND AGREEMENT

It is understood that the Public Service Institute, Inc., agrees to refund all money paid by me, if I have met the following conditions:

(a) I am to complete each lesson of the entire training promptly, as received, sending in all work and examination papers for correction.

(b) I am to make all payments direct to the Public Service Institute, Inc. (except down payment attached hereto), to be received on or before date due.

(c) I am to try the first examination or examinations which I am qualified to take as specified by the Government at the time such examinations are announced by the Civil Service Commission.

(d) If I fail to pass such governmental examination, I am upon written application to receive a refund of the entire amount paid by me for this training, or I will be trained without additional cost for future governmental examinations, which the Government qualifications will permit me to take, until I pass an examination with a grade high enough to make me eligible for an appointment in governmental service.

Such refund agreement is misleading in that the conditions upon which it depends are difficult of fulfilment and, further, because the facts and circumstances upon which a refund depends are uncertain and may not exist or happen. The holding of civil service examinations is uncertain as well as the time thereof. In some classifications many candidates do not pass with a grade high enough to be placed on the eligible list. The chance for appointment to government service is remote even though a candidate passes an examination. Such facts and circumstances are not set out in said agreement and are not explained by salesmen. The possibility of either a government position or of a refund is remote in the great ma-majority of cases and the refund agreement is, in consequence, inoperative and meaningless in such cases.

PAR. 7. The representations of respondent, as aforesaid, had the tendency and capacity to confuse, mislead and deceive members of the public into the belief that respondent conducts a large school with a staff of twenty or more qualified teachers; that thousands of respondent's students have successfully passed civil service examinations and received appointments in government service; that railway mail clerks have easy jobs and short hours; that respondent's staff is made up of ex-government employees who are experts in civil service matters because thereof; that more than two thousand students had enrolled and completed respondent's course at the time representation to that effect was made; that respondent conducts a residence school with large enrollment; that the same supervised instruction is offered at lower price when respondent's course is purchased direct as that given when sold by salesmen; that enrollment for respondent's course is an enrollment for a civil service examination or position, or both; that respondent is an agency of or connected with the United States Government; and that government positions are guaranteed to those who successfully complete respondent's course and that all money paid therefor will be refunded if no Government position is secured, when such are not and were not the facts. Said representations of respondent had the tendency and capacity to induce members of the public to purchase said courses of study and instruction because of the erroneous beliefs engendered as above set forth, and to divert trade to respondent from competitors engaged in the sale, in interstate commerce, of correspondence courses in similar lines to those offered by respondent, as well as those so engaged in such sale in other lines of study. There were and are among the competitors of respondent those who do not make the same or similar misleading representations as those made by respondent, as herein set out, but who truthfully and accurately state the facts in regard to the courses offered by them as well as in regard to other matters connected therewith. Respondent's said acts and practices tended to and did in fact divert business to respondent from its said competitors to the substantial injury and prejudice of such competitors.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondent, Public Service Institute, Inc., are to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce, within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

This proceeding having been heard by the Federal Trade Commission upon the complaint of the Commission, the answer of respondent, and an agreed statement of facts in lieu of testimony, briefs and oral argument having been waived, and the Commission having made its findings as to the facts and its conclusion that said respondent has violated the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes;"

It is ordered, That the respondent, Public Service Institute, Inc., a corporation, its officers, representatives, agents, and employees, in connection with the offering for sale, sale, and distribution of courses of study and instruction, designed and intended for preparing students thereof for examinations for civil service positions under the United States Government, in interstate commerce, or in the District of Columbia, do forthwith cease and desist from representing, directly or indirectly, through salesmen or in any other manner:

1. That the number of instructors on its staff is greater than the actual number of bona fide, qualified instructors.

2. That the number of respondent's students who have successfully passed civil service examinations or received positions in the Government service is greater than the actual number who have passed such examinations or received such positions.

3. That railway mail clerks or other Government workers have unusually short hours or that such work is easy as a result thereof.

4. That the staff of said school consists of ex-government employees who are civil service experts, unless such is the fact.

5. That the number of students who have enrolled in said school or completed the courses involved or successfully prepared for civil service examinations, is greater than the actual number so enrolled or prepared or who have completed said courses.

6. That respondent conducts a residence school.

7. That the service rendered on sale of instruction material direct to students is the same as that given when courses are sold by salesmen at a higher price and in which supervised instruction is given.

8. That enrollment for respondent's course constitutes an enrollment for a civil service examination or position, or both.

Order

9. That respondent is connected with, or represents the United States Government, or the United States Civil Service Commission.

It is further ordered, That said respondent, its officers, representatives, agents, and employees, in the connection as aforesaid, do forthwith cease and desist from the use of any so-called refund agreement which is misleading because of failure to disclose all the facts upon which it depends or because it is inoperative, or for any other reason.

It is further ordered, That the respondent shall, within 60 days after service upon it of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which it has complied with this order.

IN THE MATTER OF MARYLAND BAKING COMPANY

COMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION
OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 26, 1914

Docket 3058. Complaint, Feb. 15, 1937—Decision, Aug. 18, 1937

Where a corporation engaged in manufacture, sale, and distribution of ice cream cones, including cones packed and assembled with small printed slips bearing various legends so as to involve use of a lottery scheme when sold and distributed by retail dealers to consumers thereof, and including legend "LUCKY! U-WIN-A Cone FREE With this COUPON," chance recipient of which thereby, and in accordance with explanatory display circulars furnished by it, depicting a child with ice cream cone and winning ticket, became entitled to receive, free of charge, another such cone—

Sold, thus packed, to wholesalers, jobbers, and ice cream manufacturers, for use, sale, and distribution by their retail dealer purchasers to purchasing public, in accordance with aforesaid sales plan, said cones and slips, and thereby supplied to and placed in the hands of others the means of conducting lotteries in the sale of its product in accordance with such sales plan, contrary to public policy long recognized by the common law and criminal statutes and to an established public policy of the United States Government, and in competition with many who, unwilling to offer or sell ice cream cones with printed slips as above described, or otherwise arranged and packed for sale to purchasing public so as to involve game of chance, refrain therefrom;

With capacity and tendency to induce purchasers to buy its said product in preference to cones offered and sold by its competitors, and with result that many dealers in and ultimate purchasers of ice cream cones were attracted by its said method and manner of inserting in a number thereof printed slips entitling purchasers to free ice cream cones, and by element of chance involved in sale thereof as above described, and were thereby induced to buy its said products, containing such printed slips and sold by it, in preference to those offered and sold by said competitors who do not use same or equivalent method, and with tendency and capacity, by reason of said game of chance, to divert to it trade and custom from its said competitors who do not use such or equivalent method, exclude from said trade all competitors who are unwilling to and do not use such method because unlawful, lessen competition therein, and tend to create a monopoly thereof in it and such other distributors of ice cream cones as do use same or equivalent method, deprive purchasing public of benefit of free competition in trade involved, and eliminate therefrom all actual, and exclude therefrom all potential, competitors who do not adopt and use said or equivalent method:

Held, That such method, acts and practices, under the conditions and circumstances set forth, were all to the prejudice of the public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition.

Complaint

Before Mr. Miles J. Furnas, trial examiner.

Mr. Henry C. Lank and Mr. P. C. Kolinski for the Commission.

Mr. Leslie E. Salter, of Chicago, Ill., for respondent.

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission having reason to believe that Maryland Baking Company, a corporation, hereinafter referred to as respondent, has been and is using unfair methods of competition in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in said act, and it appearing to said Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent, Maryland Baking Company, is a corporation organized and operating under the laws of the State of Maryland, with its principal office and place of business located at 1200 South Eutaw Street, Baltimore, Md. Respondent is now, and for several years last past has been, engaged in the manufacture of ice cream cones and in the sale and distribution thereof to wholesale dealers, jobbers, and ice cream manufacturers. It causes, and has caused, its said products when sold to be transported from its principal place of business in Baltimore, Md., to purchasers thereof in the State of Maryland and in other States of the United States at their respective places of business. There is now, and has been for several years last past, a constant course of trade and commerce by said respondent in said ice cream cones between and among the States of the United States. In the course and conduct of said business, respondent is in competition with other corporations and with partnerships and individuals engaged in the manufacture of ice cream cones and in the sale and distribution thereof in commerce between and among the various States of the United States.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of its business, as described in paragraph 1 hereof, respondent, on or about May¹ 1, 1936, began the sale and distribution, and since said date has continued the sale and distribution to wholesale dealers and jobbers and ice cream manufacturers of ice cream cones packed and assembled with small printed slips therein so as to involve the use of a lottery scheme when sold and distributed by retail dealers to the consumers thereof. Respondent has had printed small slips of paper bearing various legends, and a few of said printed slips bear the following legend, to wit:

LUCKY!
U-WIN-A Cone
FREE
COUPON

The ultimate consumer procuring a cone containing one of the above printed slips is entitled to receive, and is to be given free of charge, another ice cream cone. The printed slips are so placed in the cones that the ultimate consumer cannot ascertain whether or not he is entitled to a free ice cream cone until after his purchase has been made and the cone partially consumed. The fact as to whether the ultimate purchaser receives an additional ice cream cone free of charge is thus determined wholly by lot or chance. Respondent furnishes with cartons of ice cream cones containing the above described printed slips a display circular bearing the following legends, to wit:

(Representation of a child holding an ice cream cone and a winning ticket)
GEE—AM I LUCKY!
U-WIN-A FREE
cone if you find a winning slip in the tip

PAR. 3. The wholesale dealers and jobbers and ice cream manufacturers to whom respondent sells the above described ice cream cones containing said printed slips resell said cones, as packed by respondent, to retail dealers and said retail dealers sell and distribute said cones, after placing ice cream therein, to the purchasing public in accordance with the aforesaid sales plan. Respondent thus supplies to and places in the hands of others the means of conducting lotteries in the sale of its product in accordance with the sales plan hereinabove set forth, and said sales plan has the capacity and tendency to induce purchasers thereof to purchase respondent's said product in preference to ice cream cones offered for sale and sold by its competitors.

PAR. 4. The sale of said ice cream cones to the purchasing public in the manner above alleged involves a game of chance or the sale of a chance to procure an additional ice cream cone. The use by respondent of said method in the sale of ice cream cones, and the sale of ice cream cones by and through the use thereof and by the aid of said method, is a practice of the sort which the common law and criminal statutes have long deemed contrary to public policy and is contrary to an established public policy of the Government of the United States. Many persons, firms, and corporations who make and sell ice cream cones in competition with respondent are unwilling to offer for sale or sell said ice cream cones with printed slips as above alleged, or otherwise arranged and packed for sale to the purchasing public so as to involve a game of chance, and such competitors refrain therefrom.

PAR. 5. Many dealers and ultimate purchasers of ice cream cones are attracted by respondent's said method and manner of inserting in some of the cones printed slips entitling ultimate purchasers to free ice cream cones and by the element of chance involved in the sale thereof in the manner above described, and are thereby induced to purchase said ice cream cones containing said printed slips and sold by respondent in preference to ice cream cones offered for sale and sold by said competitors of respondent who do not use the same or equivalent methods. The use of said method by respondent has the tendency and capacity, because of said game of chance, to divert to respondent trade and custom from its said competitors who do not use the same or an equivalent method; to exclude from said trade all competitors who are unwilling to and who do not use the same or an equivalent method because the same is unlawful; to lessen competition in said trade and to tend to create a monopoly of said trade in respondent and such other distributors of ice cream cones as use the same or an equivalent method; and to deprive the purchasing public of the benefit of free competition in said trade. The use of said method by respondent has the tendency and capacity to eliminate from said trade all actual competitors and to exclude therefrom all potential competitors who do not adopt and use said method or an equivalent method.

PAR. 6. The aforementioned method, acts, and practices of the respondent are all to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors, as hereinabove alleged. Said method, acts, and practices constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914.

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission on February 15, 1937, issued and on

25 F. T. C.

February 17, 1937, served its complaint in this proceeding upon the respondent, Maryland Baking Company, a corporation charging it with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of the provisions of said act. After the issuance of said complaint and the filing of respondent's answer thereto, the Commission by order entered herein on August 9, 1937, granted respondent's request for permission to withdraw said answer and to file in lieu thereof its substitute answer (undated) admitting all the material allegations of the complaint to be true and waiving the taking of further evidence and all other intervening procedure, which substitute answer was duly filed in the office of the Commission. Thereafter, this proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on the said complaint and the substitute answer; and the Commission having duly considered the matter and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent, Maryland Baking Company, is a corporation organized and operating under the laws of the State of Maryland, with its principal office and place of business located at 1200 South Eutaw Street, Baltimore, Md. Respondent is now, and for several years last past has been engaged in the manufacture of ice cream cones and in the sale and distribution thereof to wholesale dealers, jobbers, and ice cream manufacturers. It causes and has caused, its said products when sold to be transported from its principal place of business in Baltimore, Md., to purchasers thereof in the State of Maryland and in other States of the United States at their respective places of business. There is now, and has been for several years last past, a constant course of trade and commerce by said respondent in said ice cream cones between and among the States of the United States. In the course and conduct of said business, respondent is in competition with other corporations and with partnerships and individuals engaged in the manufacture of ice cream cones and in the sale and distribution thereof in commerce between and among the various States of the United States.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of its business, as described in paragraph 1 hereof, respondent on or about May 1, 1936, began the sale and distribution, and since said date has continued the sale and distribution to wholesale dealers and jobbers and ice cream manufacturers of ice cream cones packed and assembled with small printed slips therein so as to involve the use of a lottery scheme when sold and distributed by retail dealers to the consumers thereof. Respondent has had printed small slips of paper bearing various legends, and a few of said printed slips bear the following legend, to wit:

LUCKY!
U-WIN-A Cone
FREE
COUPON

The ultimate consumer procuring a cone containing one of the above printed slips is entitled to receive, and is to be given free of charge, another ice cream cone. The printed slips are so placed in the cones that the ultimate consumer cannot ascertain whether or not he is entitled to a free ice cream cone until after his purchase has been made and the cone partially consumed. The fact as to whether the ultimate purchaser receives an additional ice cream cone free of charge is thus determined wholly by lot or chance. Respondent furnishes with cartons of ice cream cones containing the above described printed slips a display circular bearing the following legends, to wit:

(Representations of a child holding an

GEE—AM I LUCKY!
U-WIN-A FREE

cone if you find a winning slip in the tip

PAR. 3. The wholesale dealers and jobbers and ice cream manufacturers to whom respondent sells the above described ice cream cones containing said printed slips resell said cones as packed by respondent, to retail dealers and said retail dealers sell and distribute said cones, after placing ice cream therein to the purchasing public in accordance with the aforesaid sales plan. Respondent thus supplies to and places in the hands of others the means of conducting lotteries in the sale of its products in accordance with the sales plan hereinabove set forth and said sales plan has the capacity and tendency to induce purchasers thereof to purchase respondent's said product in preference to ice cream cones offered for sale and sold by its competitors.

PAR. 4. The sale of said ice cream cones to the purchasing public in the manner above found involves a game of chance or the sale of a chance to procure an additional ice cream cone. The use by respondent of said method in the sale of ice cream cones, and the sale of ice cream cones by and through the use thereof and by the aid of said method, is a practice of the sort which the common law and criminal statutes have long deemed contrary to public policy and is contrary to an established public policy of the Government of the United States. Many persons, firms, and corporations who make and sell ice cream cones in competition with respondent are unwilling to offer the sale or sell said ice cream cones with printed slips as above described, or otherwise arranged and packed for sale to the purchasing public so as to involve a game of chance, and such competitors refrain therefrom.

PAR. 5. Many dealers and ultimate purchasers of ice cream cones are attracted by respondent's said method and manner of inserting in some of the cones printed slips entitling ultimate purchasers to free ice cream cones and by the element of chance involved in the sale thereof in the manner above described, and are thereby induced to purchase said ice cream cones containing said printed slips and sold by respondent in preference to ice cream cones offered for sale and sold by said competitors of respondent who do not use the same or an equivalent method. The use of said method by respondent has the tendency and capacity, because of said game of chance, to divert to respondent trade and custom from its said competitors who do not use the same or an equivalent method; to exclude from said trade all competitors who are unwilling to and who do not use the same or an equivalent method because the same is unlawful; to lessen competition in said trade and to tend to create a monopoly of said trade in respondent and such other distributors of ice cream cones as use the same or an equivalent method; and to deprive the purchasing public of the benefit of free competition in said trade. The use of said method by respondent has the tendency and capacity to eliminate from said trade all actual competitors and to exclude therefrom all potential competitors who do not adopt and use said method or an equivalent method.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid method, acts, and practices of respondent, Maryland Baking Company, a corporation, under the conditions and circumstances set forth in the foregoing findings of fact, are all to the prejudice of the public and respondent's competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

It is ordered, That the respondent, Maryland Baking Company, a corporation, its subsidiaries, officers, agents, representatives, and employees, in connection with the offering for sale, sale, and distribution in interstate commerce of ice cream cones, do forthwith cease and desist from:

1. Selling and distributing to jobbers and wholesale dealers for resale to retail dealers, or to retail dealers direct, ice cream cones so packed and assembled that sales of such ice cream cones to the general public are to be made, or may be made, by means of a lottery, gaming device, or gift enterprise.
2. Supplying to or placing in the hands of wholesale dealers and jobbers or retail dealers, packages or assortments of ice cream cones which are used, or which may be used, without alteration or rearrangement of the contents of such packages or assortments, to conduct a lottery, gaming device, or gift enterprise in the sale or distribution of the ice cream cones in said packages or assortments to the public.
3. Packing or assembling in packages or assortments of ice cream cones, for sale to the public at retail, printed slips which are for use, or which may be used, in distributing or selling said ice cream cones to the public at retail.
4. Furnishing to retail and wholesale dealers and jobbers printed slips, either with packages or assortments of ice cream cones or separately, a small number of which printed slips bear a legend or legends or statements informing the purchasing public that another ice cream cone will be delivered free of charge or as a prize.
5. Furnishing or supplying to wholesale dealers and jobbers, for distribution to retail dealers or to retail dealers direct, display circulars or other advertising material bearing a legend or legends or statements informing the purchasing public that the ice cream cones are being sold to the public in accordance with a sales plan which constitutes a lottery, gaming device or gift enterprise.

It is further ordered, That the respondent, Maryland Baking Company, a corporation, shall, within 60 days after service upon it of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which it has complied with the order to cease and desist hereinabove set forth.

IN THE MATTER OF WESLEYAN DIESEL SERVICE, INC.

COMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION
OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 26, 1914

Docket 3097. Complaint, Apr. 6, 1937—Decision, Aug. 18, 1937

Where a corporation engaged in sale and distribution of correspondence courses of study in the installation, care, and maintenance of Diesel engines to members of the public in the various States and in the District of Columbia, in substantial competition with others engaged in sale and distribution of such courses of study and instruction in the same and allied fields in commerce among the various States and in aforesaid District, and including among those engaged in sale of such courses pertaining to Diesel engines as aforesaid, competitors who do not misrepresent the nature of their courses nor make untrue claims therefor; in soliciting sale of its said courses through statements and representations circulated among the various States in newspapers, periodicals, booklets, circulars, and general business correspondence, and through agents and radio broadcasts, to pupils and prospective pupils—

- (a) Represented that there was a great demand for men trained to work with Diesel engines, and that it had not been able to fill the demand therefor, and that it wanted "to consider a few young men mechanically inclined" and was selecting and training for service and installation work on such engines a limited number of young men, and that a job was "practically certain," facts being there was no great demand for such men, it was not selecting or restricting number of its pupils for such courses to those possessing certain qualifications, but accepting all members of the public paying the required price, and positions were not available to all students completing its courses;
- (b) Represented that its instruction service included careful handling and grading of the written work of students by instructors who were competent and qualified to do such work, and that students finishing its said course were qualified to install, maintain, and service such engines, facts being its said instruction service did not include careful handling and grading of written work, such work was not handled or graded by any competent person or persons qualified so to do or to make constructive suggestions in regard thereto, and students finishing its course were not qualified and did not acquire sufficient knowledge therefrom to enable them properly to install, operate, or service such engines;
- (c) Represented that after the completion of its said course, the students had the privilege of entering another institution for practical shop training at a named total tuition fee, and that such tuition was "special" to such students and lower than the usual amount charged therefor, facts being practical training in shop work referred to as "special" in price of tuition to those students was not such, in that tuition fee to said students was not lower than usual amount charged therefor; and
- (d) Represented that it maintained branches of its school in certain named cities other than the city of its location, and maintained a free employment service for a period of two years for the benefit of those students completing its course, and that tuition fee would be refunded if student was not satisfied with results obtained after such completion, facts being it had no branches in any city other than that in which its said school was located, maintained no free employment service for any period of time whatever, or at all, for the benefit of its students, and made no such refunds;

With effect of misleading and deceiving substantial portion of the public into the erroneous belief that such representations were true, and of causing such members of the public to enroll and pay for its said course as students, on account of such erroneous beliefs, and of thereby diverting trade from its aforesaid competitors who do not misrepresent the nature of their courses or make untrue claims therefor; to the substantial injury of competition in commerce:

Held, That such acts and practices were to the prejudice of the public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition.

COMPLAINT

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent, Wesleyan Diesel Service, Inc., is a corporation organized, existing, and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Delaware, with its principal office and place of business located at 2906 Leavenworth Street, Omaha, Nebr.

Respondent is now, and has been for several years last past, engaged in the sale and distribution of correspondence courses of study in the installation, care and maintenance of Diesel engines, to members of the public located in the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia. It now causes, and during the time herein mentioned has caused, its correspondence courses, when sold, to be shipped from its place of business in Omaha, Nebr., to the purchasers thereof located in various States of the United States other than the State of Nebraska, and in the District of Columbia. There is now, and has been at all times mentioned herein, a constant current of trade and commerce by the respondent in said correspondence courses between and among the various States of the United States, and in the District of Columbia.

Respondent is now, and at all times mentioned herein has been in substantial competition with other corporations, and with persons, firms, and individuals engaged in the sale and distribution of correspondence courses of study and instruction in the same and allied fields in commerce among and between the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 2. Respondent, in soliciting the sale of and in selling its correspondence courses, now circulates in and among the various States of the United States, and during all the time herein mentioned has so circulated, certain statements and representations in newspapers, periodicals, booklets, circulars, and general business correspondence, and through agents, and radio broadcasts to pupils and prospective pupils. Typical of such representations are the following, to wit:

WE WANT—to select reliable young men to train immediately for service and installation work of Diesel engines, 90 days training, free employment service.

Diesel Engineering—we want to consider a few young men mechanically inclined—.

The school had calls for 150 positions in 1935 that could not be filled because of an insufficient amount of men taking the course; a job is practically certain.

Instruction service includes carefully handling and grading of all written work.

Points not made clear in the lessons will be explained in personal letters by the Chief Engineer.

Money Back Agreement—I believe I have not benefitted by it, I may make application within ten days from graduation before a notary public, and the full amount paid by me will be refunded.

Two years free CONSULTATION and EMPLOYMENT SERVICE after completion.

Demand for Diesel-trained men increasing. Our 3-month training at small cost qualifies you with 1936 Diesel Knowledge.

Branches are maintained at Tulsa, Oklahoma, Dallas, Texas, Los Angeles, California.

To be acceptable, a man must be mechanically inclined or have machinery experience, steady or good habits, as well as reliable.

Special Offer.—may have the privilege of entering The American Technical Institute—for practical shop training—at a total tuition fee of $35.00.

Such statements and representations serve as representations on the part of the respondent to prospective pupils that several young men possessing required qualifications are to be selected and trained for service and installation work on Diesel engines; that there is a great demand for men trained to work with Diesel engines, and that good positions can be secured by students after completing the course of instruction sold by respondent; that instruction service includes careful handling and grading of all written work by instructors who are competent and qualified to do such work; that the tuition fee will be refunded if the student is not satisfied with the results obtained after the course has been completed; that a free employment service is maintained by respondent for a period of two years for the benefit of those students completing the course; that students finishing the course will be qualified to install, maintain, and service Diesel engines; that the respondent maintains branches of its school in various cities other than Omaha, Nebr.; that after the completion of the course, the students have the privilege of entering another institution for practical shop training at a total tuition of $35.00, and that such tuition is "special" to such students and is less than the usual amount charged therefor.

PAR. 3. The above and foregoing representations, and other representation made by respondent of similar import and effect, are false and misleading. Respondent does not select or restrict the number of its pupils for such courses to those possessing certain qualifications. In truth and in fact any and all members of the public who pay the required price for the course are accepted as students. There is no great demand for men trained in the installation, maintenance and repair of Diesel engines, and such positions are not available to all of the students completing the course. The instruction service does not include careful handling and grading of the written work, nor is such written work handled or graded by any competent person or persons qualified to do such work or to make constructive suggestions about such work. The respondent will not, and does not, refund the tuition fee if the student is not satisfied with the results obtained after the completion of the course. No free employment service is maintained by the respondent for the benefit of the students completing the course for a period of two years or for any period of time, and in fact respondent does not maintain any employment service for the benefit of its students. Students finishing the course are not qualified to, and they do not acquire sufficient knowledge from the course to enable them to properly install, operate, service, or maintain Diesel engines. Respondent does not maintain branches of its school in any city other than Omaha, Nebr. The practical training in shop work referred to by the respondent as special in price of tuition to such students is not special in that the tuition fee to such students is not less than the usual amount charged therefor.

PAR. 4. The use by respondent, of the statements and representations set forth herein in paragraph 2 and others similar thereto, has had, and now has, the capacity and tendency to mislead and deceive, and has misled and does now mislead a substantial portion of the public into the erroneous belief that such representations are true, and has caused and now causes said members of the public to enroll as students of respondent on account of such erroneous belief. There are among the competitors of respondent mentioned in paragraph 1 hereof, corporations, individuals, partnerships, and firms engaged in the sale of correspondence courses pertaining to the study of installation, care, and maintenance of Diesel engines who do not misrepresent the nature of the business of the course offered, nor otherwise publish claims for the course which are untrue. By the representations aforesaid, trade is unfairly diverted to respondent from such competitors and thereby substantial injury has been done, and is being done, by respondent to competition in commerce among and between the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 5. The above alleged acts and practices of respondent are all to the injury and prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, entitled, "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914.

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission on April 6, 1937, issued, and on April 8, 1937, served, its complaint in this proceeding upon respondent, Wesleyan Diesel Service, Inc., a corporation charging it with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of the provisions of said act. After the issuance of said complaint and the filing of respondent's answer, the Commission, by order entered herein, granted respondent's motion for permission to withdraw said answer and to substitute therefor an answer admitting all the material allegations of the complaint to be true and waiving the taking of further evidence and all other intervening procedure, which substitute answer was duly filed in the office of the Commission. Thereafter, the proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on the said complaint and the answer thereto, and the Commission having duly considered the same, and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public, and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent, Wesleyan Diesel Service, Inc., is a corporation organized, existing, and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Delaware, with its office and principal place of business located at 2906 Leavenworth Street, Omaha, Nebr. It is now, and has been for several years last past, engaged in the sale and distribution of correspondence courses of study in the installation, care, and maintenance of Diesel engines to members of the public located in the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia. It causes, and during the time mentioned herein, has caused its correspondence courses when sold to be shipped from its place of business in Omaha, Nebr., to the purchasers thereof located in the various States of the United States other than the State of Nebraska and in the District of Columbia. There is now, and has been at all times mentioned herein, a constant current of trade and commerce by the respondent in said correspondence courses between and among the various States of the United States, and in the District of Columbia. Respondent is now, and, at all times mentioned herein, has been in substantial competition with other corporations, and with persons, firms, and individuals engaged in the sale and distribution of correspondence courses of study and instruction in the same and allied fields in commerce among and between the various States of the United States, and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 2. In soliciting the sale of and selling its correspondence courses, respondent circulated and circulates in and among the various States of the United States, certain statements and representations in newspapers, periodicals, booklets, circulars, and general business correspondence, and through agents and radio broadcasts to pupils and prospective pupils. Typical of such representations are the following, to wit:

WE WANT—to select reliable young men to train immediately for service and installation work of Diesel engines, 90 days training, free employment service.

Diesel Engineering—we want to consider a few young men mechanically inclined—

The school had calls for 150 positions in 1935 that could not be filled because of an insufficient amount of men taking the course; a job is practically certain. Instruction service includes carefully handling and grading of all work.

Points not made clear in the lessons will be explained in personal letters by the Chief Engineer.

Money Back Agreement—I believe I have not benefited by it, I may make application within ten days from graduation before a notary public, and the full amount paid by me will be refunded.

Two years free CONSULTATION and EMPLOYMENT SERVICE after completion.

Demand for Diesel-trained men increasing. Our 3-month training at small cost qualifies you with 1936 Diesel Knowledge.

Branches are maintained at Tulsa, Oklahoma, Dallas, Texas, Los Angeles, California.

To be acceptable, a man must be mechanically inclined or have machinery experience, steady or good habits, as well as reliable.

Special Offer—may have the privilege of entering The American Technical Institute—for practical shop training—at a total tuition fee of $35.00.

In the manner and through the means above stated, the respondent represents and represented that several young men possessing required qualifications are and were to be selected and trained for service and installation work on Diesel engines; that there is a great demand for men trained to work with Diesel engines, and that good positions can be secured by students after completing the course of instruction sold by respondent; that instruction service includes careful handling and grading of all written work by instructors who are competent and qualified to do such work; that the tuition fee will be refunded if the student is not satisfied with the results obtained after completion of the course; that a free employment service is maintained by respondent for a period of two years for the benefit of those students completing the course; that students finishing the course will be qualified to install, maintain, and service Diesel engines; that the respondent maintains branches of its school in various cities other than Omaha, Nebr.; that after the completion of the course, the students have the privilege of entering another institution for practical shop training at a total tuition of $35.00, and that such tuition is "special" to such students and is less than the usual amount charged therefor.

PAR. 3. The above and foregoing representations are and were false and misleading in that respondent did not and does not select or restrict the number of its pupils for such courses to those possessing certain qualifications, but on the contrary, all members of the public who pay the required price for the course are accepted as students. There is no great demand for men trained in the installation, maintenance and repair of Diesel engines, and positions are not available to all students completing the course. The instruction service does not include careful handling and grading of the written work, nor is such written work handled or graded by any competent person or persons qualified to do such work or to make constructive suggestions about such work. Respondent does not refund the tuition fee paid by the student if the student is not satisfied with the results obtained after the completion of the course. No free employment service is maintained by the respondent for the benefit of the students completing the course for a period of two years, or for any period of time, and in fact respondent does not maintain any employment service for the benefit of its students. Students finishing the course are not qualified to and they do not acquire sufficient knowledge from the course to enable them properly to install, operate, service, or maintain Diesel engines. It does not maintain branches of its school in any city other than Omaha, Nebr. The practical training in shop work referred to by respondent as special in price of tuition to such students, is not special in that the tuition fee to such students is not less than the usual amount charged therefor.

PAR. 4. There are among the competitors of respondent, corporations, individuals, partnerships, and firms engaged in the sale of correspondence courses pertaining to the study of the installation, care, and maintenance of Diesel engines who do not misrepresent the nature of the course offered, or make claims for the course which are not true.

PAR. 5. The use by respondent of the foregoing false and misleading representations has had and now has the capacity and tendency to mislead and deceive, and has misled and does now mislead, a substantial portion of the public into the erroneous belief that such representations are true, and has caused and now causes such members of the public to enroll and pay for such course as students of respondent on account of such erroneous beliefs. By the representations aforesaid, trade in said commerce is unfairly diverted to respondent from such competitors and thereby substantial injury has been done and is being done by respondent to competition in commerce among and between the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondent, Wesleyan Diesel Service, Inc., are to the prejudice of the public and of respondents competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce, within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

This proceeding having been heard by the Federal Trade Commission upon the complaint of the Commission and the answer filed herein on July 28, 1937, by respondent admitting all the material allegations of the complaint to be true and waiving the taking of further evidence and all other intervening procedure, and the Commission having made its findings as to the facts and conclusion that said respondent has violated the provisions of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

It is ordered, That the respondent, Wesleyan Diesel Service, Inc., its officers, representatives, agents, and employees, in connection with the offering for sale, sale, and distribution of correspondence courses of study and instruction in installing, maintaining and servicing Diesel engines in interstate commerce or in the District of Columbia, do forthwith cease and desist from:

1. Representing in any manner, directly or indirectly, that a limited number of young men are to be selected and trained for service and installation work on Diesel engines;

2. That the demand for men trained to work with Diesel engines is in excess of the demand that actually exists or that positions are available to all of the students completing said course of instruction;

3. That the instruction service includes careful handling and grading of the written work of students by persons qualified to do such work;

4. That the tuition fee paid by a student will be refunded if the student is not satisfied with the results obtained after the completion of said course of instruction;

5. That free employment service, or any kind of employment service, is maintained for the benefit of the students completing the course of instruction;

6. That students finishing said course of instruction are qualified to install, maintain and service Diesel engines;

7. That branches of its school are maintained in cities other than Omaha, Nebr.;

8. That after the completion of said course of instruction students are privileged to enter another institution for practical shop training for a "special" tuition price or for a less price than the usual amount charged therefor.

It is furthered ordered, That the respondent shall, within 60 days after service upon it of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which it has complied with this order.

IN THE MATTER OF BIRCONJEL CORPORATION, INC.

COMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION
OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 26, 1914

Docket 2998. Complaint, Nov. 27, 1936—Decision, Aug. 20, 1937

Where a corporation engaged in the manufacture of certain so-called hygienic and other products for use by women, including its so-called "Birconjel" and a patented applicator for use in connection therewith, and in the sale of said "Birconjel" and applicator, through radio and other advertising, to wholesale druggists and others, and, on order, to any individual unit of the purchasing or consuming public, in substantial competition with others similarly engaged in the offer and sale, in commerce among the various States, of hygienic and other products intended and designed for use exclusively by women, and including among its competitors those offering medicines or preparations of various kinds for use in connection with feminine hygiene and for aforesaid preventive effects, without stating expressly, or implying or importing, in their representations that their products or any of them are invariably or uniformly effective and safe and harmless, and those offering and selling, as aforesaid, medicines, with or without applicators, and other preparations, truthfully represented as for use in feminine hygiene and to prevent diseases arising from lack thereof, and as preventing contraction of diseases by women when used in accordance with directions—

- (a) Represented, through advertising literature enclosed in the carton or container of said product and distributed also among purchasers and prospective purchasers, and through window display advertising and other advertising matter distributed by its agents in introducing and promoting sale of said product, and also through booklets and other advertising, that said "Birconjel" and appliance constituted a competent and effective contraceptive and could be relied upon absolutely for such preventive purpose, and that its said preparation constituted a reliable remedy, treatment and cure for ills and diseases peculiar to women, facts being preparation in question could not be relied upon as such a preventive and had no beneficial therapeutic value in the treatment of any ailments, ills, or diseases peculiar to the feminine anatomy; and
- (b) Represented that said preparation constituted a protection against diseases and acted both mechanically and as a germicide in the prevention of trouble, and that it was prescribed by thousands of physicians and had the approval of the American Medical Association, American Birth Control League, and physicians generally, and that it was not a patent or proprietary medicine, but an open formula which might be used with safety and without deleterious effects by all women, facts being it was not a scientific prophylactic for feminine hygiene or otherwise, had not been used or approved as above claimed, formula thereof was not open, but secret, and use thereof, either with or without said applicator, was not absolutely harmless, but in many cases was capable of causing injuries and had deleterious effect upon the user thereof;

With effect of confusing, misleading, and deceiving members of the public as to the properties and efficacy of said preparation and appliance in the particulars above set forth, and of causing them, because of erroneous beliefs engendered by its representations and implication, to buy and use the same, and thereby unfairly divert trade in commerce to it from its aforesaid competitors who truthfully represent their products; to their substantial injury:

Held, That such acts and practices were to the prejudice of the public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition.

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that Birconjel Corporation, Inc., hereinafter referred to as respondent, has been and is using unfair methods of competition in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in said act of Congress, and it appearing to said Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent, Birconjel Corporation, Inc., is now, and has been for several years last past, a corporation organized, existing, and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of New York, with its office and principal place of business at 420 Lexington Avenue, city of New York, State of New York, and 37 East 28th Street said city and State.

Respondent has been and is engaged in the manufacture of certain so-called hygienic and other products for use by women, and in their sale and distribution in commerce between the State of New York and the various other States of the United States and in the District of Columbia. It causes these products, when sold, to be transported from its aforesaid place of business to purchasers thereof in the various States of the United States other than the State of New York and in the District of Columbia.

In the course and conduct of said business, respondent has been and is in substantial competition with other corporations, and with individuals and partnerships similarly engaged in offering for sale and selling, in commerce among and between the various States of the United States, hygienic and other products intended and designed for use by women exclusively.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of its business, it has been and is the practice of respondent to offer for sale and sell a product known and described as Birconjel. In connection with the sale of its product "Birconjel" respondent also sells a patented applicator intended and designed for use in applying said "Birconjel" said applicator supposedly measuring and applying the correct amount of Birconjel to satisfactorily accomplish the results claimed by respondent. Sales are made through radio and other advertising to wholesale druggists and others, although when an order is received by respondent from any individual unit of the purchasing or consuming public, it is filled by respondent.

In the carton or container in which the said product is marketed, there is enclosed certain advertising literature in which the product is represented and described. Such advertising matter is also distributed by respondent among purchasers and prospective purchasers who inquire about the said product. It also employs and uses agents for the introduction of said product and promotion of its sale. They call upon druggists and install advertising window display and distribute other advertising matter, including circulars, a booklet called "A Straightforward Talk About Feminine Hygiene Sometimes Called Marriage Hygiene," and covered matches, the latter of which contain on their cover certain legends. Such legends as "Why Do Modern Women Practice Feminine Hygiene?," "The Birconjel Patented Applicator," "Some Scientific and Legal Aspects of Birconjel," "Measured Never Too Little and Never Too Much," "Approved Birconjel in Measured Applications Never Too Little, Never Too Much, Gloriously Simple, Feminine Hygiene, Truly Positive," appear on matches, blotters, and other advertising which is distributed in interstate commerce and otherwise. In its newspaper advertising it represents that "Birconjel enjoys medical and clinical approval"; that "Most chemicals powerful enough in solution to kill germs can be dangerous to delicate membranes (burns)"; that "The practice of feminine hygiene can have an aesthetic as well as practical side," and makes other similar representations through similar statements.

As inducements to the purchase of Birconjel and its applicator contrivance, respondent represents and infers that the use of such product will prevent conception; and that it is a protection against diseases; through such statements as "Keeps feminine secrets, complete safety and peace of mind is yours when you use Birconjel"; "Acts two ways in preventing trouble mechanically and is a germicide," and through other similar fraudulent statements. As a further inducement for the purchase of its product, Birconjel, and its applicator contrivance, respondent has represented its cooperation with the American Birth Control League, using such language as signifies and implies a close connection between respondent and such league. It also represents that it has received approval of said product by physicians generally and that it is generally likewise dispensed and prescribed by thousands of such physicians. It further represents that it is well known to the medical profession for its high class pharmaceutical product. Respondent further represents that the product, Birconjel, is not a patent or proprietary medicine, but, rather an open formula which is given to physicians whenever they request it.

In truth and in fact, the use of respondent's said product will not accomplish such benefits as are claimed for said product in its advertising as set forth above, and it is not a scientific prophylactic for feminine hygiene, or otherwise. Its use is not absolutely harmless and its use with its patented applicator is not absolutely harmless, as is claimed in said representations made through its advertising. The product, Birconjel, has not received the approval of the American medical profession, nor physicians generally. It has not been dispensed and prescribed by thousands of physicians, and it is not recommended by the American Birth Control League. The product of respondent is a patented or proprietary medicine. Its formula is not open, as the word is understood, since the ingredients of the product are not declared or disclosed but held in secret by its manufacturers.

PAR. 3. There are now, and for several years last past have been, individuals, partnerships, and corporations who have been offering for sale and selling, in commerce among and between the various States of the United States, medicines or preparations of various kinds for use by women in feminine hygiene and for the prevention of conception, without stating expressly or implying or importing in their representations that their products or any of them are invariably or uniformly effectual and safe and harmless. They are now, and for several years last past have been, individuals, partnerships, and corporations offering for sale and selling, in commerce as herein set out, medicines with and without applicators and other preparations which they truthfully represent are for use in feminine hygiene and likely to prevent diseases arising from lack of feminine hygiene and will prevent the contraction of diseases by women when used in accordance with directions.

PAR. 4. The aforesaid practices of respondent have had and have the capacity and tendency to mislead and deceive wholesale dealers, retail dealers and their customers, the consuming or purchasing public, into the erroneous and mistaken beliefs that Birconjel is invariably and uniformly effective in preventing conception and is likewise a preventive of diseases caused by lack of feminine hygiene, and that all other representations of the respondent hereinbefore stated in paragraph 2 are true, and into the purchase of such product in reliance upon such erroneous beliefs or one or more of them.

The aforesaid practices have also had and have the capacity and tendency to unfairly divert trade to respondent from the competitors mentioned in paragraph 3 hereof. As a result thereof substantial injury has been, and is now being, done to such competitors by respondent in the course of such competition.

PAR. 5. The aforementioned methods, acts, and practices of respondent are all to the prejudice of the public and respondent's competitors as hereinabove alleged. Said methods, acts, and practices constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914.

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission on November 27, 1936, issued, and on December 30, 1936, served its complaint in this proceeding upon the respondent, Birconjel Corporation, Inc., charging it with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of the provisions of said act. After the issuance of said complaint and the filing of respondent's answer, the Commission, by order entered herein, granted respondent's motion for permission to withdraw said answer and to substitute therefor an answer admitting all the material allegations of the complaint to be true, and waiving the taking of further evidence and all other intervening procedure, which substitute answer was duly filed in the office of the Commission. Thereafter, this proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on the said complaint and the substitute answer, no briefs having been filed or oral argument made, and the Commission having duly considered the same, and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public, and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent, Birconjel Corporation, Inc., is now, and has been for several years last past, a corporation organized, existing, and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of New York, with its office and principal place of business at 420 Lexington Avenue, city of New York, State of New York, and 37 East 28th Street said city and State.

Respondent has been and is engaged in the manufacture of certain so-called hygienic and other products for use by women, and in their sale and distribution in commerce between the State of New York and the various other States of the United States and in the District of Columbia. It causes these products, when sold, to be transported from its aforesaid place of business to purchasers thereof in the various States of the United States other than the State of New York and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 2 In the course and conduct of said business, respondent has been and is in substantial competition with other corporations, and with individuals and partnerships similarly engaged in offering for sale and selling, in commerce among and between the various States of the United States, hygienic and other products intended and designed for use by women exclusively.

PAR. 3. In the course and conduct of its business, it has been and is the practice of respondent to offer for sale and sell a product known and described as Birconjel. In connection with the sale of its product "Birconjel" respondent also sells a patented applicator intended and designed for use in applying said "Birconjel," said applicator supposedly measuring and applying the correct amount of Birconjel to satisfactorily accomplish the results claimed by respondent. Sales are made through radio and other advertising to wholesale druggists and others, although when an order is received by respondent from any individual unit of the purchasing or consuming public, it is filled by respondent. By means and in the manner set out in paragraphs 4 and 5, the respondent represents and implies that the preparation Birconjel and its applicator appliance is a competent and effective preventive of conception, and that it is an absolute protection against pregnancy and can be depended upon for such purpose without limitation; and that the preparation is a reliable remedy, treatment, and cure for ills and diseases peculiar to women.

PAR. 4. In the carton or container in which the said product is marketed, there is enclosed certain advertising literature in which the product is represented and described. Such advertising matter is also distributed by respondent among purchasers and prospective purchasers who inquire about the said product. It also employs and uses agents for the introduction of said product and promotion of its sale. They call upon druggists and install advertising window display and distribute other advertising matter, including circulars, a booklet called "A Straightforward Talk About Feminine Hygiene Sometimes Called Marriage Hygiene," and covered matches, the latter of which contain on their cover certain legends. Such legends as "Why Do Modern Women Practice Feminine Hygiene?" "The Birconjel Patented Applicator," "Some Scientific and Legal Aspects of Birconjel," "Measured Never Too Little and Never Too Much," "Approved Birconjel in Measured Applications Never Too Little, Never Too Much, Gloriously Simple, Feminine Hygiene, Truly Positive," appear on matches, blotters, and other advertising which is distributed in interstate commerce and otherwise. In its newspaper advertising it represents that "Birconjel enjoys medical and clinical approval"; that "Most chemicals powerful enough in solution to kill germs can be dangerous to delicate membranes (burns)"; that "The practice of feminine hygiene can have an aesthetic as well as practical side," and makes other similar representations through similar statements.

PAR. 5. As inducements to the purchase of Birconjel and its applicator contrivance, respondent represents and implies that the use of such product will prevent conception; and that it is a protection against diseases; through such statements as "Keeps feminine secrets, complete safety and peace of mind is yours when you use Birconjel"; "Acts two ways in preventing trouble mechanically and is a germicide," and through other similar statements. As a further inducement for the purchase of its product, Birconjel, and its applicator contrivance, respondent has represented its cooperation with the American Birth Control League, using such language as signifies and implies a close connection between respondent and such league. It also represents that it has received approval of said product by physicians generally and that it is generally likewise dispensed and prescribed by thousands of such physicians. It further represents that it is well known to the medical profession for its high class pharmaceutical product. Respondent further represents that the product, Birconjel, is not a patent or proprietary medicine, but rather an open formula which is given to physicians whenever they request it.

PAR. 6. In truth and in fact, the use of respondent's said product will not accomplish such benefits as are claimed for said product in its advertising as set forth above, and it is not a scientific prophylactic for feminine hygiene, or otherwise. Its use is not absolutely harmless and its use with its patented applicator is not absolutely harmless, as is claimed in said representations made through its advertising. The product, Birconjel, has not received the approval of the American medical profession, nor physicians generally. In many cases the use of the said preparation and appliance is capable of causing injuries and has a deleterious effect upon those using them. Said preparation has no beneficial therapeutic value in the treatment of any ailments, ills, and diseases peculiar to the female anatomy, and its use cannot be relied upon to prevent conception. It has not been dispensed and prescribed by thousands of physicians, and it is not recommended by the American Birth Control League. The product of respondent is a patented or proprietary medicine. Its formula is not open, as the word is understood, since the ingredients of the product are not declared or disclosed, but held in secret by its manufacturers.

PAR. 7. There are now, and for several years last past have been, individuals, partnerships, and corporations who have been offering for sale and selling, in commerce among and between the various States of the United States, medicines or preparations of various kinds for use by women in connection with feminine hygiene and for the prevention of conception, without stating expressly or implying or importing in their representations that their products or any of them are invariably or uniformly effectual and safe and harmless. There are now, and for several years last past have been, individuals, partnerships, and corporations offering for sale and selling, in commerce as herein set out, medicines with and without applicators and other preparations which they truthfully represent are for use in feminine hygiene and are designed to prevent diseases arising from lack of feminine hygiene and will prevent the contraction of diseases by women when used in accordance with directions.

PAR. 8. The representations and implications of the respondent in connection with the sale and distribution of said preparation and appliance, in said commerce, as stated, have the tendency and capacity to, and do, confuse, mislead, and deceive members of the public as to the properties and efficacy of said preparation and appliance in the particulars herein set forth, and cause them, because of the erroneous beliefs engendered by said representations and implications, to buy and use said preparation and appliance, thereby unfairly diverting trade in said commerce to the respondent from its aforesaid competitors who truthfully represent their products. As a result thereof substantial injury has been done, and is now being done, by respondent to such competitors in commerce between and among the various States of the United States.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondent, Birconjel Corporation, Inc., are to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce, within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

It is ordered, That the respondent, Birconjel Corporation, Inc., its officers, representatives, agents and employees in connection with the offering for sale, sale and distribution of its medicinal or pharmaceutical preparation and appliance which are designed, intended and used in the treatment of various female ailments and conditions, and for female hygiene purposes, now designated as Birconjel and patented applicator, or any other preparations of substantially the same ingredients and therapeutic effect, or appliances of substantially the same design, whether designated by the aforementioned names or by any other names, in interstate commerce or in the District of Columbia, do forthwith cease and desist from representing:

1. That the use of said preparation alone or in conjunction with the aforesaid appliance will prevent conception.

1. That the use of said preparation alone or in conjunction with hygiene or otherwise, and is a protection against disease.

3. That said preparation acts two ways in preventing trouble, mechanically and as a germicide.

4. That the preparation is prescribed by thousands of physicians and that it has the approval of the American Medical Association, American Birth Control League, and physicians generally.

Order

5. That the preparation is not a patent or proprietary medicine, but an open formula.

6. That the said preparation and appliance may be used with safety and without deleterious effects by all women, and

7. From making other representations of similar import and of like character to those made as above set forth.

It is further ordered, That the respondent shall, within 60 days after service upon it of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which it has complied with this order.

IN THE MATTER OF
CLEMENT A. DeGRACE, TRADING AS SOCIAL SECURITY COUNSELORS

COMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION
OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 26, 1914

Docket 3168. Complaint, July 3, 1937—Decision, Aug. 20, 1937

Where an individual engaged in sale and distribution of a correspondence course of study and instruction designed and intended for the education of students for positions in the United States Government, in competition with those engaged in sale and distribution of courses of study and instruction designed and intended to prepare students for examinations for various Government positions—

- (a) Made use of trade name "Social Security Counselors," and represented, implied, and created belief, through newspaper advertisements in classified section and usually in "Help Wanted" section, that such advertisements were those of Government agencies or representative thereof, and that three thousand Government positions were open and available, with men and women wanted to fill same, and with examinations being held therefor, and that he could and would obtain such positions for those who completed his said courses of study and instruction, facts being he had had no connection whatever with the Social Security Board or with the United States Government, and representations aforesaid were false and misleading;
- (b) Falsely and misleadingly represented, through salesmen whom he had appointed and designated, and who traveled throughout the United States soliciting students for said courses, and through other means, to prospective purchasers and students, that he and said salesmen were connected with or otherwise represented the Government, and that there were thousands of positions available in the newly formed Social Security Board, and that examinations would be held therefor in the near future, or at different times stated, and that prospective students could and would be placed in Government positions if they pursued said courses of study; and
- (c) Represented, as aforesaid, that a Government position was guaranteed or assured, and that money paid for said courses would be refunded if no position was obtained by student solicited, and that only a limited number would be selected for training in a particular locality, facts being said representations were false and misleading, and money-back agreement made use of by said individual was conditioned, among other things, upon written application within thirty days after completing the regular work and studies, and the taking of two Government examinations, and, due to holding of few, if any, examinations and fact that few, if any, students had or would have opportunity to take two such examinations so as to determine whether or not student would or could be placed upon eligible list, and, in event of failure, become entitled to refunds under such agreement, was inoperative and misleading;

Complaint

With tendency and capacity to confuse, mislead, and deceive members of the public into believing that he was a representative of, or connected with, the Government, and had positions to offer to applicants or those qualifying, and that examinations were being held at frequent intervals with positions available and assured, etc., and that the facts were as hereinabove indicated, and to induce members of the public to answer his advertisements, sign his contracts, pay money down and promise additional sums, and purchase his said courses because of erroneous belief engendered as above set forth, and unfairly divert trade to him from competitors engaged in sale of correspondence courses in similar lines to those offered by him, as well as those in other lines of study; to their substantial injury and to the injury of the public:

Held, That such acts and practices were to the prejudice of the public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition.

Mr. Allen C. Phelps for the Commission.

COMPLAINT

PARAGRAPH 1. That said respondent, Clement A. DeGrace, is an individual doing business under the name and style of Social Security Counselors with his office and principal place of business in the Davis Building, Portland, Oreg. Said respondent is now and has been, for more than one year last past, engaged in the sale and distribution of a course of study and instruction designed and intended for preparing students thereof for positions in the United States Government, which said courses of study and instruction are pursued by correspondence through the medium of the United States mails; that said respondent, in the course and conduct of his said business, during the time aforesaid, causes and has caused his said courses of study and instruction, consisting of pamphlets, forms, study, and question sheets and other printed or mimeographed matter to be transported from his said place of business in the State of Oregon to, into, and through the several States of the United States, other than the State of Oregon, to various and numerous persons to whom said courses of study and instruction are or have been sold.

PAR. 2. That during the time above mentioned, other individuals, firms, and corporations located in the several States of the United States are and have been engaged in the sale and distribution of courses of study and instruction designed and intended for the purpose of preparing students thereof for examination for various positions under the United States Government, which said courses of study and instruction are pursued by correspondence. Such other individuals, firms, and corporations have caused and now cause their said course of study and instruction when sold by them to be transported from various States in the United States to, into, and through States other than the State of origin thereof. Said respondent has been, during the aforesaid time, in competition in interstate commerce in the sale of his said course of study and instruction with such other individuals, firms, and corporations.

PAR. 3. That the Social Security Board is an agency of the United States Government, engaged in the enforcement of the "Social Security Act" which became a law in August 1935; that since January 1936, said Social Security Board has issued public announcements of its activities including the setting up of training centers in cooperation with the several States in training personnel; that the use by said respondent of the trade name "Social Security Counselors" has the capacity and tendency to create the belief among persons solicited to pursue respondent's said course of study and instruction that it is a part of or is connected with said Social Security Board; that, in fact, the said respondent has never had any connection whatsoever with the said Social Security Board or with the United States Government.

PAR. 4. That respondent, in advertising its said course of study and instruction, makes use of and has made use of advertisements which he has caused to be inserted in the classified sections, usually in the "Help Wanted" part thereof, of newspapers circulated in and among various States of the United States. That said advertisements by the wording thereof, as well as by the place of their insertion represent, imply, and create the belief among readers thereof, that such advertisements are those of a Governmental agency or a representative thereof; that 300,000 Government positions are open and available and men and women are wanted to fill them; that examinations are being held for such positions and that respondent can and will obtain Government positions for those persons who complete his said course of study and instruction. That such representations were and are not true, but were and are false or misleading.

PAR. 5. That respondent, in the course and conduct of his said business, sells and has sold his said course of study and instruction to the public by salesmen designated and appointed by respondent to travel throughout several States of the United States, soliciting students for said course of study and instruction. That respondent, through such salesmen and through and by other means, represents and has represented to prospective students and purchasers that respondent and such salesmen are connected with or otherwise represent the United States Government; that there are thousands of positions available in the newly formed Social Security Board; that examinations for such positions will be held in the near future or at definite times stated; that such prospective students can and will be placed in Government positions, if they pursue respondent's course of study; that a Government job is guaranteed or assured; that money paid for said course of study and instruction will be refunded if no job is obtained by the student solicited; that only a limited number of students will be selected for training in a particular locality. That such representations are not true but are false or misleading. That respondent has profited by such misrepresentations and continues to profit thereby and has accepted and continues to accept money on contracts induced by said misrepresentations.

PAR. 6. That respondent, in the sale of its said course of study and instruction, has made use of a contract form containing a so-called "money-back agreement" which reads as follows:

Upon fulfillment of the terms and conditions of this registration and upon sending written application to the SOCIAL SECURITY COUNSELORS within thirty days after completing the regular work and studies of the course, which includes taking two Government examinations, if I am not satisfied with the high grade and practical character of the service and the instructions as given under the terms and provisions of this registration, and am not thoroughly convinced I have more than received full value, the SOCIAL SECURITY COUNSELORS will refund me the full amount paid.

That the said "money-back agreement" is inoperative on account of the fact that few, if any, examinations for which said respondent has given training and service have been or will be held and few, if any, students taking said course of study and instruction have had or will have an opportunity to take "two Government examinations" whereby it could be determined whether they could or would be placed upon an eligible list and thereby, in the event of failure, become entitled to refunds under such agreement.

PAR. 7. That the representations of the respondent as aforesaid have had and have the tendency and capacity to confuse, mislead, and deceive members of the public into the belief that respondent is a representative of or connected with the Government of the United States and has positions to offer to applicants or those who qualify; that examinations are being held at frequent intervals and that positions are available and assured to those who qualify through taking the said course of study and instruction offered by respondent; that vacancies now exist in the Government service that are to be filled in the types of positions for which respondent offers training; that large numbers of appointments are being made in Government service; and that students who enroll for respondent's said course of study and instruction will receive their money back on conditions reasonably possible of fulfillment; when in truth and in fact such are not the facts and said representations of respondent have the capacity and tendency to induce members of the public to answer respondent's advertisements, to sign its said contracts, to pay money down and to promise to pay additional sums, and to purchase said course of study and instruction as hereinbefore described because of the erroneous beliefs engendered, as above set forth, and to divert trade to respondent from competitors engaged in the sale of correspondence courses in interstate commerce in similar lines to those offered by respondent, as well as those in other lines of study.

PAR. 8. The above acts and things done by respondent are all to the injury and prejudice of the public and the competitors of respondent in interstate commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914.

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission on July 3, 1937, issued, and on July 7, 1937, served, its complaint in this proceeding upon respondent, Clement A. DeGrace, doing business under the name and style of Social Security Counselors, charging him with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of the provisions of said act. On August 11, 1937, the respondent submitted an answer, in which answer he admitted all the material allegations of the complaint to be true and waived the taking of further evidence and all other intervening procedure, and said answer was duly filed in the office of the Commission. Thereafter, the proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on the said complaint and the answer thereto, and the Commission having duly considered the same, and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public, and makes this its findings^s as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. The respondent Clement A. DeGrace is an individual doing business under the trade name of Social Security Counselors, with his office and principal place of business located in the Davis Building, in Portland, Oreg. For several years last past the respondent has been engaged in the sale and distribution of a course of study and instruction designed and intended for the education of students for positions in the United States Government. The said courses of study and instruction are pursued by correspondence through the medium of the United States mails. In the course and conduct of the aforesaid business, the respondent causes his said courses of study and instruction, consisting of pamphlets, forms, study and question sheets, and other printed and mimeographed matter to be transported from his place of business in the State of Oregon, to, into and through the several States of the United States, to various and numerous persons to whom said courses of study and instruction are sold.

PAR. 2. There are other individuals, firms and corporations located in the several States of the United States, engaged in the sale and distribution of courses of study and instruction designed and intended for the purpose of preparing students thereof for examination for various positions under the United States Government, which said courses of study and instruction are pursued by correspondence. Such other individuals, firms and corporations cause their courses of study and instruction when sold by them to be transported to purchasers thereof located in the various States of the United States other than the State of origin thereof. During the aforesaid time the respondent has been in competition in interstate commerce in the sale of his said courses of study and instruction with such other individuals, firms, and corporations.

PAR. 3. The Social Security Board is an agency of the United States Government engaged in the enforcement of the "Social Security Act," which became a law in August 1935. Since January 1936, the said Social Security Board has issued public announcements of its activities, including the setting up of training centers in cooperation with the several States in training personnel. The use by the respondent of the trade name "Social Security Counselors" has the capacity and tendency to create the belief among persons solicited to pursue respondent's courses of study and instruction that it is a part of, or is connected with said Social Security Board. The respondent has never had any connection whatsoever with the said Social Security Board, nor with the United States Government.

PAR. 4. The respondent in advertising its courses of study and instruction makes use of advertisements which he causes to be inserted in the Classified Section, usually in the "Help Wanted" section thereof, of newspapers circulated in and among the various States of the United States. The said advertisements by the wording thereof as well as by the place of their insertion, represent, imply, and create the belief among readers thereof, that such advertisements are those of governmental agencies or a representative thereof; that 3,000 Government positions are open and available, and men and women are wanted to fill them; that examinations are being held for such positions and that respondent can and will obtain Government positions for those persons who complete the said courses of study and instruction. The aforesaid representations are not true but are false and misleading.

PAR. 5. In the course and conduct of the aforesaid business the respondent has appointed and designated salesmen who travel throughout the several States of the United States soliciting students for said courses of study and instruction. Through such salesmen, and through and by other means, the respondent represents to prospective students and purchasers that respondent and such salesmen are connected with or otherwise represent, the United States Government; that there are thousands of positions available in the newly formed Social Security Board; that examinations for such positions will be held in the near future or at different times stated; that such prospective students can and will be placed in Government positions if they pursue respondent's courses of study; that a Government position is guaranteed or assured; that money paid for said courses of study or instruction will be refunded if no position is obtained by the student solicited; that only a limited number of students will be selected for training in a particular locality. The aforesaid representations are not true but are false and misleading. Respondent has profited by such misrepresentations and continues to profit thereby, and has accepted and continues to accept money on contracts induced by said misrepresentations.

PAR. 6. In connection with the sale of the said courses of study and instruction the respondent has made use of a contract form containing a so-called "Money Back Agreement" which reads as follows:

Upon fulfillment of the terms and conditions of this registration and upon sending written application to the SOCIAL SECURITY COUNSELORS within thirty days after completing the regular work and studies of the course, which includes taking two Government examinations, if I am not satisfied with the high grade and practical character of the service and the instructions as given under the terms and provisions of this registration, and am not thoroughly convinced I have more than received full value, the SOCIAL SECURITY COUNSELORS will refund me the full amount paid.

The aforesaid "Money Back Agreement" is misleading in that it is inoperative because few, if any, examinations for which said respondent has given training and service have been or will be held, and few, if any, students taking said courses of study and instruction have had or will have an opportunity to take "two Government examinations" whereby it could be determined whether they would or could be placed upon an eligible list and thereby in the event of failure entitled to refunds under such agreement.

PAR. 7. The trade name, "Social Security Counselors," and all of the aforesaid representations have the tendency and capacity to confuse, mislead and deceive members of the public into the belief that respondent is a representative of or connected with the Government of the United States, and has positions to offer to applicants, or those who qualify; that examinations are being held at frequent intervals and that positions are available and assured to those who qualify through taking the said courses of study and instruction offered by respondent; that vacancies now exist in the Government Service that are to be filled in the types of positions for which respondent offers training; that large numbers of appointments are being made in the Government Service; and that students who enroll for respondent's courses of study and instruction will receive their money back on conditions reasonably possible of fulfillment; and said representations of respondent have the capacity and tendency to induce members of the public to answer respondent's advertisements, to sign its said contracts, to pay money down and to promise to pay additional sums and to purchase said courses of study and instruction as hereinbefore described because of the erroneous belief engendered as above set forth; and unfairly divert trade in said commerce to respondent from competitors engaged in the sale of correspondence courses in similar lines to those offered by respondent, as well as those in other lines of study, to the substantial injury of said competitors and to the injury of the public.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondent, Clement A. DeGrace, doing business under the name and style of Social Security Counselors, are to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce, within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of

25 F. T. C.

Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

It is ordered, That the respondent, Clement A. DeGrace, doing business under the trade name Social Security Counselors, his agents and employees, in connection with the offering for sale, sale, and distribution of courses of study and instruction by correspondence, in interstate commerce or in the District of Columbia, do forthwith cease and desist from representing, directly or by implication:

1. Through the use of the words Social Security Counselors or otherwise, that he is connected with the United States Social Security Board or the United States Government;
2. That positions with the United States Government or some agency thereof are open and available, or that examinations are being held to fill such positions, unless such positions are open and available and examinations being held;
3. That a knowledge of said courses of study and instruction will qualify one to obtain positions with the United States Government or some agency thereof;
4. That he will obtain positions with the United States Government or some agency thereof for students completing said courses of study and instruction, or that the money paid as tuition will be refunded if a position is not secured from the United States Government or some agency thereof.

It is further ordered, That the respondent shall, within 60 days after service upon it of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which it has complied with this order.

OPPENHEIM, COLLINS AND COMPANY, INC.

Docket 3160. Complaint, June 23, 1937—Decision, Aug. 21, 1937

Where a corporation engaged in the operation of large department stores and in the sale therefrom, among other things, of women's wearing apparel, and in shipping its articles of merchandise, when sold, from its places of business to purchasers in the various other States; in advertising in newspapers of interstate circulation soliciting sale of its said apparel—
 Represented evening wraps for women as "silk crepe," and other items of women's wearing apparel as "Made of quality silks," "taffeta," "crepe," "luxurious silks," "silk lingerie," and "dark satins sprinkled with white dots," and thereby represented as silk products such items of wearing apparel to members of purchasing public, notwithstanding fact products in question were not composed of silk, product of the cocoon of the silk worm, as long definitely understood in mind of consuming public, and were not silk products, long held in great public esteem and confidence for their preeminent qualities, and associated in the public mind with such terms as "silk crepe," "Made of quality silks," "taffeta," "crepe," "luxurious silks," "silk lingerie," "satins," and "dark satins," as used to designate, describe and refer to dress goods and other items of women's wearing apparel;
 With capacity and tendency to mislead and deceive substantial portion of purchasing public into the erroneous beliefs that such representations were true, and to cause them to buy such items of apparel as a result of such erroneous beliefs, engendered as above set forth, and with result that trade was unfairly diverted thereby to it from competitors engaged in sale of women's wearing apparel who do not misrepresent the kind of apparel offered for sale by them; to the substantial injury of competition in commerce:

Held, That such acts and practices were to the prejudice of the public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition.

Mr. Astor Hogg for the Commission.

Chadbourne, Wallace, Parke & Whiteside, of New York City, for respondent.

COMPLAINT

to the Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent, Oppenheim, Collins and Company, Inc., is a corporation organized, existing, and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Delaware, with its office and principal place of business located at 33 West 34th Street in the city of New York in said State. It is now, and for many years last past has been, engaged in the business of operating large department stores from which it sells, among other things, women's wearing apparel. It sells, and has sold and distributed, such articles of merchandise to members of the purchasing public located in the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia. Respondent causes, and during the time herein mentioned has caused, its articles of merchandise, when sold, to be shipped from its places of business in New York, N. Y., to the purchasers thereof located in the various States of the United States other than the State of New York. There is now, and has been at all times mentioned herein, a constant current of trade and commerce by said respondent in said merchandise so sold by it between and among the various States of the United States. Respondent is now, and at all times herein mentioned has been, in substantial competition with other corporations and with persons, firms, and partnerships engaged in the sale and distribution of women's wearing apparel and other allied products in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of its business as described in paragraph 1 hereof, respondent, in soliciting the sale of and selling said wearing apparel, caused, and now causes, advertising matter to be inserted in newspapers having interstate circulation. In said advertising matter evening wraps for women were, and are, represented, designated, and referred to as "silk crepe." In such advertising matter other items of women's wearing apparel were represented designated, and referred to as "Made in quality silks," "Taffeta," "crepe," "luxurious silks," "Sale! silk lingerie," "dark satins sprinkled with white dots."

Such statements and representations on the part of respondent serve as representations to members of the public that such items of wearing apparel so advertised and offered for sale were silk products. The representations hereinabove set forth are and were grossly false and misleading in that said items of wearing apparel so represented, designated and referred to are not, and were not, composed of silk, the product of the cocoon of the silk worm, but were composed of materials other than silk.

PAR. 3. The word "silk" for many years past has had, and still has, in the mind of the consuming public, a definite and specific meaning, to wit: The product of the cocoon of the silk worm. Silk products for many years have held and still hold great public esteem and confidence for their preeminent qualities. Silk fibre has long been woven into a variety of fabrics. A variety of distinctive terms have been applied to the fabrics resulting from different types of weaving of silk fibre. Dress goods and other items of women's wearing apparel designated, described and referred to as "silk crepe," "Made of quality silks," "taffeta," "crepe," "luxurious silks," "silk lingerie," "satins," "dark satins" have been for a long time and at the present time still are associated in the public mind with a fabric made from the cocoon of the silk worm, commonly known and understood by the public as silk.

PAR. 4. The use by respondent of the representations set forth herein have had and now have the capacity and tendency to mislead and deceive a substantial portion of the purchasing public into the erroneous beliefs that such representations are and were true and to cause them to purchase such items of wearing apparel on account of such erroneous beliefs engendered as above set forth. There are among the competitors of respondent as mentioned in paragraph 1 hereof, corporations, individuals, partnerships, and firms engaged in the sale of women's wearing apparel who do not misrepresent the kind of wearing apparel offered for sale. By use of the representations aforesaid, trade has been, and is unfairly diverted to respondent from said competitors and thereby substantial injury is being, and has been done by respondent to competition in commerce as herein set out.

PAR. 5. The above alleged acts and practices of respondent are all to the injury and prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of the Act of Congress entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914.

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Federal Trade Commission, on June 23, 1937, issued, and on June 24, 1937, served, its complaint in this proceeding upon respondent, Oppenheim, Collins and Company, Inc., charging it with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of the provisions of said act. After the issuance of said complaint and the filing of respondent's answer, the Commission, by order entered herein, granted respondent's motion for permission to withdraw said answer and to substitute therefor an answer admitting all the material allegations of the complaint to be true and waiving the taking of further evidence and all other intervening procedure, which substitute answer was duly filed in the office of the Commission. Thereafter, the proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on the said complaint and the answer thereto, and the Commission having duly considered the same and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent, Oppenheim, Collins and Company, Inc., is a corporation organized, existing, and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Delaware, with its office and principal place of business located at 33 West 34th Street in the city of New York in said State. It is now, and for many years last past has been, engaged in the business of operating large department stores from which it sells, among other things, women's wearing apparel. It sells, and has sold and distributed, such articles of merchandise to members of the purchasing public located in the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia. Respondent causes, and during the time herein mentioned has caused, its articles of merchandise, when sold, to be shipped from its places of business in New York, N. Y., to the purchasers thereof located in the various States of the United States other than the State of New York. There is now, and has been at all times mentioned herein, a constant current of trade and commerce by said respondent in said merchandise so sold by it between and among the various States of the United States. Respondent is now, and at all times herein mentioned has been, in substantial competition with other corporations and with persons, firms and partnerships engaged in the sale and distribution of women's wearing apparel and other allied products in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 2. In soliciting the sale of and selling its wearing apparel, as described in paragraph 1 hereof, respondent caused, and now causes, advertising matter to be inserted in newspapers having an interstate circulation, in and by which advertising matter evening wraps for women were, and are, represented, designated, and referred to as "silk crepe." In such advertising matter other items of women's wearing apparel were, and are, represented, designated, and referred to as "Made of quality silks," "taffeta," "crepe," "luxurious silks," "silk lingerie," "dark satins sprinkled with white dots."

By the means and in the manner aforesaid, respondent represented, and represents, to members of the purchasing public that such items of wearing apparel were, and are, silk products. The representations thus made by respondent are and were grossly false and misleading in that said items of wearing apparel so represented, designated, and referred to are not, and were not, composed of silk, the product of the cocoon of the silk worm, but were composed of materials other than silk.

PAR. 3. The word "silk" for many years past has had, and still has, in the mind of the consuming public a definite and specific meaning, to wit: the product of the cocoon of the silk worm. Silk products for many years have held and still hold great public esteem and confidence for their preeminent qualities. Silk fibre has long been woven into a variety of fabrics. A variety of distinctive terms have been applied to the fabrics resulting from different types of weaving of silk fibre. Dress goods and other items of women's wearing apparel designated, described and referred to as "silk crepe," "Made of quality silks," "taffeta," "crepe," "luxurious silks," "silk lingerie," "satins," "dark satins" have been for a long time and at the present time still are associated in the public mind with a fabric made from the cocoon of the silk worm, commonly known and understood by the public as silk.

PAR. 4. There are among the competitors of respondent, as mentioned in paragraph 1 hereof, corporations, individuals, partnerships, and firms engaged in the sale of women's wearing apparel who do not misrepresent the kind of wearing apparel offered for sale.

PAR. 5. The use by respondent of the representations set forth herein has had, and now has, the capacity and tendency to mislead and deceive a substantial portion of the purchasing public into the erroneous beliefs that such representations are and were true and to cause them to purchase such items of wearing apparel as a result of such erroneous beliefs engendered as above set forth. By use of the representations aforesaid, trade has been and is unfairly diverted to respondent from said competitors and thereby substantial injury is being and has been done by respondent to competition in said commerce, as herein set out.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondent, Oppenheim, Collins and Company, Inc., are to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce, within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

It is ordered, That the respondent, Oppenheim, Collins and Company, Inc., its officers, representatives, agents, and employees, in connection with the offering for sale, sale, and distribution of wearing apparel in interstate commerce or in the District of Columbia, do forthwith cease and desist from using the words "silk," "crepe," "taffeta," or "satin," as descriptive of products which are not composed of silk, the product of the cocoon of the silk worm, but which are composed of a material or materials other than silk.

It is further ordered, That the respondent shall, within 30 days after service upon it of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which it has complied with this order.

F. W. WASHBURN CANDY CORPORATION

Docket 3163. Complaint, June 29, 1937—Decision, Aug. 21, 1937

Where a corporation engaged in manufacture and sale of candy, including certain assortments of candies which were so packed and assembled as to involve, or were designed to involve, use of a lottery scheme when sold and distributed to ultimate consumer thereof, and which were composed of a number of individually wrapped penny pieces, together with number of articles of merchandise to be given as prizes to chance purchasers of a relatively few of aforesaid uniform individually wrapped pieces, concealed colored centers of which differed from those of the majority, and entitled, as aforesaid, said chance purchasers and purchaser of last piece in assortment to one of said articles of merchandise as a prize—

Sold, to wholesalers and jobbers, and to retail dealers for display and resale to purchasing public in accordance with said sales plan, such assortments, and thereby supplied to and placed in the hands of others the means of conducting lotteries in the sale of its said products, in accordance with such plan, contrary to public policy long recognized by the common law and criminal statutes and contrary to an established public policy of the United States Government, and in competition with many who, unwilling to offer or sell candy so packed and assembled as above described, or otherwise arranged and packed for sale to purchasing public, so as to involve a game of chance, refrain therefrom;

With capacity and tendency to induce purchasers to buy its said products in preference to candy offered and sold by its competitors, and with result that many dealers in and ultimate purchasers of candy were attracted by said product and by element of chance involved in sale thereof as above set forth, and were thereby induced to buy its said candy, so packed and sold by it, in preference to that offered and sold by its said competitors who do not use same or equivalent method, and with tendency and capacity, by reason of said game of chance, to divert to it trade and custom from its said competitors who do not use such or equivalent method, exclude from said candy trade all competitors who are unwilling to and do not use any such method as unlawful, lessen competition in said trade and tend to create a monopoly thereof in it and in such other competitors as do use such or an equivalent method, deprive purchasing public of benefit of free competition in said trade, and eliminate therefrom all actual, and exclude therefrom all potential, competitors who do not adopt and use such or equivalent method:

Held, That such methods, acts and practices were to the prejudice of the public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition.

COMPLAINT

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent is a corporation organized and doing business under the laws of the State of Massachusetts, with its principal office and place of business located in the city of Brockton, State of Massachusetts. It is now, and for several years last past has been engaged in the manufacture of candies and in the sale and distribution thereof to wholesale dealers and jobbers, and retail dealers, located at points in the various States of the United States. It causes and has caused its said candy when sold to be transported from its principal place of business in Brockton, Mass., to purchasers thereof in the State of Massachusetts and in other States of the United States at their respective places of business. There is now, and has been for several years last past, a course of trade and commerce by said respondent in such candy between and among the various States of the United States. In the course and conduct of said business, respondent is in competition with other corporations and with partnerships and individuals engaged in the manufacture of candy and in the sale and distribution thereof in commerce between and among the various States of the United States.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of its business as described in paragraph 1 hereof, respondent sells and has sold to wholesale dealers and jobbers, and to retail dealers, assortments of candies so packed and assembled as to involve, or which are designed to involve the use of a lottery scheme when sold and distributed to the ultimate consumer thereof. Such assortments are composed of a number of pieces of candy of uniform size and shape, together with a number of other articles of merchandise, which other articles of merchandise are to be given as prizes to purchaser of the pieces of candy of uniform size and shape in the following manner: The pieces of candy of uniform size and shape are each contained within wrappers and retail at the price of 1¢ each. The majority of the said pieces of candy of uniform size and shape are of the same color throughout, but a small number of said pieces of candy have centers of a color different from the majority. The color of the centers of said pieces of candy of uniform size and shape is effectively concealed from purchasers and prospective purchasers until a selection has been made and the wrapper removed. Purchasers procuring one of the pieces of candy having a center colored differently from the majority are entitled to receive free of charge and are to be given as a prize one of the other articles of merchandise included in said assortment, and the purchaser of the last piece of candy of uniform size and shape in said assortment is entitled to receive free of charge and is to be given as a prize one of the said other articles of merchandise. The other articles of merchandise contained in said assortment are thus distributed to purchasers of candy from said assortment wholly by lot or chance.

PAR. 3. The wholesale dealers and jobbers to whom respondent sells its assortments resell said assortments to retail dealers, and said retail dealers, and the retail dealers to whom respondent sells direct, expose said assortments for sale and sell said assortments to the purchasing public in accordance with the aforesaid sales plan. Respondent thus supplies to and places in the hands of others the means of conducting lotteries in the sale of its products in accordance with the sales plan hereinabove set forth. Such sales plan has the capacity and tendency of inducing purchasers to purchase respondent's said products in preference to candy offered for sale and sold by its competitors.

PAR. 4. The sale of candy to the purchasing public in the manner above alleged involves a game of chance or the sale of a chance to procure another article of merchandise.

The use by respondent of said method in the sale of candy, and the sale of candy by and through the use thereof and by the aid of said method, is a practice of the sort which the common law and criminal statutes have long deemed contrary to public policy, and is contrary to an established public policy of the Government of the United States. The use by respondent of said method has the tendency unduly to hinder competition or create monopoly in the candy trade in this, to wit: that the use thereof has the tendency and capacity to exclude from said trade competitors of respondent who do not adopt and use the same method or an equivalent or similar method involving the same or an equivalent or similar element of chance or lottery scheme.

Many persons, firms, and corporations who make and sell candy in competition with the respondent, as above alleged, are unwilling to offer for sale or sell candy so packed and assembled as above alleged, or otherwise arranged and packed for sale to the purchasing public so as to involve a game of chance, and such competitors refrain therefrom.

PAR. 5. Many dealers in and ultimate purchasers of candy are attracted by respondent's said method and manner of packing said candy and by the element of chance involved in the sale thereof in the manner above described, and are thereby induced to purchase said candy so packed and sold by respondent in preference to candy offered for sale and sold by said competitors of respondent who do not use the same or equivalent methods. The use of said method by respondent has the tendency and capacity, because of said game of chance, to divert to respondent trade and custom from its said competitors who do not use the same or an equivalent method; to exclude from said candy trade all competitors who are unwilling to and who do not use the same or an equivalent method because the same is unlawful; to lessen competition in said candy trade and to tend to create a monopoly of said candy trade in respondent and in such other competitors of respondent as use the same or an equivalent method; and to deprive the purchasing public of the benefit of free competition in said candy trade. The use of said method by respondent has the tendency and capacity to eliminate from said candy trade all actual competitors and to exclude therefrom all potential competitors who do not adopt and use said method or an equivalent method.

PAR. 6. The aforementioned methods, acts, and practices of respondent are all to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors, as hereinabove alleged. Said methods, acts, and practices constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

methods of competition in commerce in violation of the provisions of said act. Thereafter, respondent filed in the office of the Commission its answer admitting all the material allegations of the complaint to be true and waiving the taking of further evidence and all other intervening procedure. In said answer respondent waived any rights it might have had by reason of the misnomer above described and consented that any action taken by the Commission would be against the F. B. Washburn Candy Corporation. After the filing of said answer, this proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on the said complaint and answer thereto; and the Commission, having duly considered the matter and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent, F. B. Washburn Candy Corporation, erroneously named in the complaint as F. W. Washburn Candy Corporation, is a corporation organized and doing business under the laws of the State of Massachusetts, with its principal office and place of business located in the city of Brockton, State of Massachusetts. It is now, and for several years last past has been, engaged in the manufacture of candies and in the sale and distribution thereof to the wholesale dealers and jobbers and retail dealers located at points in the various States of the United States. It causes and has caused its said candy when sold to be transported from its principal place of business in Brockton, Mass., to purchasers thereof in the State of Massachusetts and in other States of the United States at their respective places of business. There is now, and has been for several years last past, a course of trade and commerce by said respondent in such candy between and among the various States of the United States. In the course and conduct of said business, respondent is in competition with other corporations and with partnerships and individuals engaged in the manufacture of candy and in the sale and distribution thereof in commerce between and among the various States of the United States.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of its business as described in paragraph 1 hereof, the respondent sells and has sold to wholesale dealers and jobbers, and to retail dealers, assortments of candies so packed and assembled as to involve, or which are designed to involve, the use of a lottery scheme when sold and distributed to the ultimate consumer thereof. Such assortments are composed of a number of pieces of candy of uniform size and shape, together with a number of other articles of merchandise, which other articles of merchandise are to be given as prizes to purchasers of the pieces of candy of uniform size and shape in the following manner: The pieces of candy of uniform size and shape are each contained within wrappers and retail at the price of 1¢ each. The majority of the said pieces of candy of uniform size and shape are of the same color throughout, but a small number of said pieces of candy have centers of a color different from the majority. The color of the centers of said pieces of candy of uniform size and shape is effectively concealed from purchasers and prospective purchasers until a selection has been made and the wrapper removed. Purchasers procuring one of the pieces of candy having a center colored differently from the majority are entitled to receive free of charge and are to be given as a prize one of the other articles of merchandise included in said assortment, and the purchaser of the last piece of candy of uniform size and shape in said assortment is entitled to receive free of charge and is to be given as a prize one of the said other articles of merchandise. The other articles of merchandise contained in said assortment are thus distributed to purchasers of candy from said assortment wholly by lot or chance.

PAR. 3. The wholesale dealers and jobbers to whom respondent sells its assortments resell said assortments to retail dealers, and said retail dealers and the retail dealers to whom respondent sells direct expose said assortments for sale and sell said assortments to the purchasing public in accordance with the aforesaid sales plan. Respondent thus supplies to and places in the hands of others the means of conducting lotteries in the sale of its products in accordance with the sales plan hereinabove set forth. Such sales plan has the capacity and tendency of inducing purchasers to purchase respondent's said products in preference to candy offered for sale and sold by its competitors.

trade competitors of respondent who do not adopt and use the same method or an equivalent or similar method involving the same or an equivalent or similar element of chance or lottery scheme. Many persons, firms, and corporations who make and sell candy in competition with respondent are unwilling to offer for sale or sell candy so packed and assembled as above described, or otherwise arranged and packed for sale to the purchasing public so as to involve a game of chance, and such competitors refrain therefrom.

PAR. 5. Many dealers in and ultimate purchasers of candy are attracted by respondent's said method and manner of packing said candy and by the element of chance involved in the sale thereof in the manner above described, and are thereby induced to purchase said candy so packed and sold by respondent in preference to candy offered for sale and sold by said competitors of respondent who do not use the same or an equivalent method. The use of said method by respondent has the tendency and capacity, because of said game of chance, to divert to respondent trade and custom from its said competitors who do not use the same or an equivalent method; to exclude from said candy trade all competitors who are unwilling to and who do not use the same or an equivalent method because the same is unlawful; to lessen competition in said candy trade and to tend to create a monopoly of said candy trade in respondent and in such other competitors of respondent as use the same or an equivalent method; and to deprive the purchasing public of the benefit of free competition in said candy trade. The use of said method by respondent has the tendency and capacity to eliminate from said candy trade all actual competitors and to exclude therefrom all potential competitors who do not adopt and use said method or an equivalent method.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid method, acts and practices of the respondent, F. B. Washburn Candy Corporation, a corporation, are to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

This proceeding having been heard by the Federal Trade Commission upon the complaint of the Commission and the answer of respondent, F. B. Washburn Candy Corporation, erroneously named in the complaint as F. W. Washburn Candy Corporation, filed herein on August 10, 1937, admitting all the material allegations of the complaint to be true and waiving the taking of further evidence and all other intervening procedure, and further waiving any rights it might have by reason of the misnomer above described and consenting that any action taken by the Commission will be against the F. B. Washburn Candy Corporation, and the Commission having made its findings as to the facts and its conclusion that said respondent has violated the provisions of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

It is ordered, That the respondent, F. B. Washburn Candy Corporation, a corporation, its officers, representatives, agents, and employees, in connection with the offering for sale, sale and distribution in interstate commerce of candy, do forthwith cease and desist from:

1. Selling and distributing to jobbers and wholesale dealers, for resale to retail dealers or to retail dealers direct, candy so packed and assembled that sales of such candy to the general public are to be made, or may be made, by means of a lottery, gaming device, or gift enterprise.

2. Supplying to or placing in the hands of wholesale dealers and jobbers or retail dealers assortments of candy which are used, or which may be used, without alteration or rearrangement of the contents of such assortments, to conduct a lottery, gaming device, or gift enterprise in the sale or distribution of the candy contained in said assortments to the public.

3. Packing or assembling in the same package or assortment of candy, for sale to the public at retail, pieces of candy of uniform size and shape of different colors, or having centers of a different color, together with other articles of merchandise, which said other articles of merchandise are to be given as prizes to the purchaser procuring a piece of candy of a particular color, or having a center of a particular color.

It is further ordered, That the respondent, F. B. Washburn Candy Corporation, a corporation, shall, within 30 days after service upon it of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which it has complied with the order to cease and desist hereinabove set forth.

Where an individual engaged in sale and distribution of certain medical preparations for use in meeting so-called problems of feminine hygiene, and for use in prevention and treatment of diseases, ailments, and conditions to which women are particularly susceptible, in substantial competition with those engaged in sale and distribution, in commerce among the States and in the District of Columbia, of products intended, designed, and used and useful for the purposes for which said individual represented and implied that his said products were effective, and including, among his competitors in said commerce, many who truthfully represent their products and the nature of their organization—

(a) Falsely represented, in advertising his "Cones," "Suppositories," and "Antiseptic Powder," as variously known and described, in certain advertising literature, such as books, pamphlets, and circulars, distributed to purchasing public through boxes in which products were marketed, and through druggists and the United States mails, direct to prospective purchasers, and in newspaper and magazine advertising, that the particular product, as the case might be, was efficacious for use in prevention, treatment, and cure of diseases, ailments, and conditions peculiar to women, arising out of so-called problems of feminine hygiene, and was safe for general use and solved problems of aforesaid hygiene, and constituted an efficient prophylactic where possibility of venereal infection was present, and was more effective than carbolic acid or chlorine in prevention and treatment and cure of aforesaid diseases, etc., and constituted an efficient treatment for certain specified ailments and conditions, and promoted cleanliness and good health, and misrepresented, in various specific particulars, the functioning and qualities or properties of said products; and

(b) Made use, in his advertisements, of name "Bureau of Education" in connection with other statements in said advertising matter, in such a manner as to represent and imply, and thereby lead purchasing public to believe, that such "Bureau of Education" was a separate organization or institution, in no wise connected with his business, organized to carry on scientific research in methods of preventing, treating, or curing maladies peculiar to women, and that his products had been tested or approved by said organization or institution, facts being there was no such organization created to carry on scientific research in such methods, his products had not been tested by such an organization, and so-called "Bureau of Education" was simply a name adopted in furtherance of the sale thereof;

With effect of misleading and deceiving many members of the purchasing public and causing them erroneously to believe that said representations were true, and, because of such erroneous belief, to buy substantial quantities of his said products, and of thereby unfairly diverting trade in commerce to him from his competitors who truthfully represent their products; to their substantial injury and that of the public:

Held, That such acts and practices were to the prejudice of the public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition.

Mr. William L. Taggart for the Commission.

COMPLAINT

PARAGRAPH 1. The respondent, Oliver L. Von Bachele, of 2335 Commonwealth Avenue, Chicago, Ill., is engaged in business individually and under the trade names H. Shade's Laboratories and as Bureau of Education, H. Shade's Laboratories, 2148 North Halsted Street, Chicago, Ill. He directs and controls the sales policies and business operations of said businesses.

PAR. 2. The respondent has been and is now engaged in the business of manufacturing, advertising, distributing and selling certain medical preparations for use in so-called feminine hygiene and for use in the female anatomy to purchasers in commerce among and between the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia. He maintains a constant course of trade and commerce in said products so distributed and sold by him.

In the course and conduct of said business respondent has been, and is, in substantial competition with other corporations and with firms, individuals, and partnerships engaged in the distribution and the sale of similar products and other products intended and designed for similar use by women in commerce among and between the various States of the United States.

PAR. 3. The products marketed by respondent are variously known and described as "Shade's Cones," "Shade's Suppositories," "Shade's Antiseptic Powder."

In the operation of his business and for the purpose of inducing the purchase of said products on the part of members of the purchasing public, the respondent has made use of certain advertising literature, such as books, pamphlets, circulars, as well as newspaper and magazine advertising which purports to be descriptive of the various products herein named. The advertising literature herein referred to is distributed to the members of the purchasing public through the medium of the boxes in which the products are marketed, in advertising literature distributed through the medium of drug stores, through the United States mails direct to prospective purchasers and in newspapers and magazines.

With reference to the product designated as "Shade's Suppositories," such statements as the following are made:

NEW BLESSING for MODERN WOMANHOOD.

Solve Problem of Feminine Hygiene.

The intelligent practice of feminine hygiene is of vital importance to good health. Shade's Suppositories, a recognized reliable formula, permits modern wives to enjoy the benefits of feminine hygiene without its attendant problems. Safe, reliable and convenient. No water or accessories needed. Melting at body heat, they provide a protective film which is powerfully germicidal, yet soothing to delicate membranes. Don't wait! Send 10¢ for samples and personal information. Box of 24 cones—$1.00.

In said statements, together with other similar statements not herein set out with respect to the product named, respondent directly and through implication represents and the public is thereby led to believe that said product forms a safe, competent, reliable remedy, cure and preventive of ill health in that it solves the problem of feminine hygiene; that said product is a safe product, reliable and convenient to use and forms a protective film in the vaginal canal which is powerfully germicidal and that said product is soothing to delicate membranes.

PAR. 4. In truth and in fact the product designated above does not form a safe, competent treatment, remedy, cure and preventive of ill health. It does not solve the problem of feminine hygiene and, further, the said product is not a safe product for general use. It will not form a protective film which is powerfully germicidal.

PAR. 5. With reference to the product designated as "Shade's Cones," such statements as the following are made:

* * * Known to the medical profession as Vagi-Seals for intimate Feminine Hygiene * * *

Shade's Cones are also in demand as a prophylactic, where the possibility of Venereal Disease communication is present.

Dainty women appreciate the value of cleanliness, but cleanliness is far more important in the delicate mucous membranes of the hidden parts, as it is on the face. In fact, any matter foreign to the parts, may soon cause inflammation and annoyance. The use of Shade's Vagi-Seal Cones tends to relieve inflammation and soothes the irritated membranes.

Shade's Cones contain no poisonous chemicals, yet they are more effective than any Solution of odorous Carbollic acid or Chlorine, that can be applied to the human body. Physicians testify to the utter harmlessness and effectiveness to the purpose of these ingredients * * *

Shade's Cones deposit a protective film or coating over the mucous membranes of the area, which is effective for a long period * * *

They also act as a deodorant and the women that use them, can always be sure of being protected from embarrassing odors, which sometimes arise from vaginal disorders.

We know that Shade's Cones are safe, healthful and clean, and that they should be left at least 8 to 10 hours in the cavity, before being washed out with a Shade Antiseptic Powder douche.

In said statements, together with other similar statements not herein set out with respect to the product named, respondent directly and through implication represents and the public is thereby led to believe that said product forms a safe, competent, reliable remedy, cure and preventive of ill health and that it is known to the medical profession for intimate feminine hygiene; that said product is a competent and satisfactory prophylactic for use where the possibility of venereal disease and contamination are present; that said product will relieve inflammation and soothe the irritated membranes of the vagina; that said product is more effective than carbollic acid or chlorine and physicians testify to the utter harmlessness and effectiveness of these products for the troubles set forth; that the product when used deposits a protective film or coating over the mucous membranes of the vagina which is effective for a long period; that the product acts as a deodorant and the women that use it can always be sure of being protected from embarrassing odors which arise from vaginal disorders.

In truth and in fact said product will not form a safe, competent, reliable remedy, cure and preventive for ill health. It is not known to the medical profession as a remedy for intimate feminine hygiene. It is not in demand as a prophylactic and it is not in demand as a prophylactic for use where there is a possibility of venereal disease and contamination present. It will not relieve inflammation or soothe irritated membranes of the vagina. It is not more effective than carbollic acid or chlorine. Physicians do not testify as to its harmlessness and effectiveness for the troubles herein set out and it is not harmless or fully effective for such use. The product when used does not deposit a protective film or coating over the mucous membranes of the vagina and is not effective for long periods. Further, the product does not act as a deodorant and the woman who uses it cannot be sure of always being protected from embarrassing odors which usually arise from vaginal disorders.

PAR. 6. With reference to the product designated and known as "Shade's Antiseptic Powder" such statements as the following are made:

Vaginal douching is so important to health, that dainty women, cannot afford to neglect it. Douching should be practiced regularly by every woman, and especially the married woman. Secretions in the marital state are more frequent and opportunities for infection are increased.

Shade's Antiseptic Powder not only promotes cleanliness and health, but also destroys bacteria, and it soothes and heals the delicate tissues.

Two teaspoonfuls of the powder to 2 quarts of warm water, used daily, in Leucorrhœa (Whites), Vaginitis and Cervicitis.

It destroys unpleasant odors, and produces that wonderful feeling of inner cleanliness, so much desired by every dainty woman.

In said statements, together with other similar statements not herein set out with respect to the product named, respondent directly and through implication represents and the public is thereby led to believe that said product promotes cleanliness and health, destroys bacteria and soothes and heals the delicate tissues of the vaginal tract; that it is a competent and satisfactory treatment for leucorrhœa, whites, vaginitis, and cervicitis and destroys unpleasant odors and promotes a feeling of cleanliness.

In truth and in fact the product does not promote cleanliness and health. It does not destroy bacteria nor soothe nor heal the delicate tissues of the vaginal tract. It is not a competent and satisfactory treatment for leucorrhœa, whites, vaginitis, and cervicitis and, further, it will not destroy unpleasant odors and promote a feeling of cleanliness.

PAR. 7. In the operation of his business, as aforesaid, respondent makes use of in his advertisements the name of "Bureau of Education." Said statement together with other statements in said advertising represents to the public directly or through implication that the Bureau of Education is a bureau devoted to scientific research on questions involving so-called marriage hygiene.

In truth and in fact the said Bureau of Education is not a separate organization or institution organized for the purpose of carrying on scientific research in the methods of preventing, treating or curing maladies peculiar to women or any other questions, and said bureau does not actually exist but the name is used for the purpose of encouraging the sale of respondent's products.

PAR. 8. There are among respondent's competitors in commerce, as herein set out, those who do not in any way misrepresent the character and nature of their products and who do not make use of any of the misleading representations herein set out and similar ones with respect to the therapeutic value of the product and others.

PAR. 9. The aforesaid false and misleading statements and representations used by the respondent in offering for sale and selling the various products as herein described in commerce as herein set out, have had, and now have the tendency and capacity to, and do, mislead and deceive members of the purchasing public into the erroneous and mistaken belief that said representations are true and into the purchase of substantial quantities of respondent's various products on account of said erroneous and mistaken belief.

As a result thereof trade is unfairly diverted from competitors of respondent who do not in the sale and distribution of their respective products make use of the same or similar misrepresentations. In consequence thereof injury has been and is now being done by respondent to competition in commerce among and between the various States of the United States.

PAR. 10. The methods, acts, and practices of respondent herein set forth are to the prejudice of the public and of competitors of the respondent as hereinabove alleged. Said methods, acts, and practices constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

sion on the said complaint and the answer thereto, and the Commission having duly considered the same, and being now fully advised in the premises, finds this proceeding is in the interest of the public and makes this its findings as to the facts, and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. The respondent, Oliver L. Von Bachelles, is engaged in business under the trade name H. Shade's Laboratories and under the trade name Bureau of Education, H. Shade's Laboratories, and has his office and principal place of business at 2148 North Halsted Street, in the city of Chicago, State of Illinois.

PAR. 2. The respondent is now, and has been for more than one year last past, engaged in the sale and distribution of certain medical preparations, for use in meeting the so-called problems of feminine hygiene, and for use in the prevention, and treatment of diseases, ailments and conditions to which women are particularly susceptible. Respondent causes said products, when sold, to be transported from his place of business in the city of Chicago, State of Illinois, to the purchasers thereof located in various States of the United States other than the State of Illinois and in the District of Columbia. Respondent maintains a constant current of trade in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia in the sale and distribution of said products.

In the course and conduct of his business in said commerce respondent has been, and is, in substantial competition with other individuals and with firms, corporations, and partnerships engaged in the sale and distribution in said commerce of products intended, designed, and used and useful for the purposes for which the respondent represent and implies that his said products are efficacious.

PAR. 3. The products marketed by respondent are variously known and described as "Shade's Cones," "Shade's Suppositories," "Shade's Antiseptic Powder."

In the operation of his business and for the purpose of inducing the purchase of said products on the part of members of the purchasing public, the respondent has made use of certain advertising literature, such as books, pamphlets, circulars, as well as newspaper and magazine advertising which purports to be descriptive of the various products herein named. The advertising literature herein referred to is distributed to the members of the purchasing public through the medium of the boxes in which the products are marketed, through advertising literature distributed by drug stores, and through the United States mails direct to prospective purchasers.

Respondent also uses advertisements of similar nature and effect which are placed in newspapers and magazines of interstate circulation.

With reference to the product designated as "Shade's Suppositories," such statements as the following are made:

NEW BLESSING FOR MODERN WOMENHOOD.

Solve Problem of Feminine Hygiene.

The intelligent practice of feminine hygiene is of vital importance to good health. Shade's Suppositories, a recognized reliable formula, permits modern wives to enjoy the benefits of feminine hygiene without its attendant problems. Safe, reliable and convenient. No water or accessories needed. Melting at body heat, they provide a protective film which is powerfully germicidal, yet soothing to delicate membranes. Don't wait! Send 10¢ for samples and personal information. Box of 24 cones—$1.00.

Through said statements, and in other statements not herein set out, with respect to the product Shade's Suppositories the respondent represents and implies, and the purchasing public is thereby led to believe, that said product is efficacious for use in the prevention, treatment and cure of diseases, ailments and conditions peculiar to women arising out of the so-called problems of feminine hygiene; that it solves the problem of feminine hygiene; that the product may be used with safety; that its use forms a protective film which is powerfully germicidal, and that its use is soothing to delicate membranes. Respondent's product, Shade's Suppositories, is not efficacious for use in the prevention, treatment and cure of diseases, ailments and conditions peculiar to women arising out of the so-called problems of feminine hygiene; said product does not solve the problems of feminine hygiene, and is not safe for general use; said product does not form a protective film which is powerfully germicidal and its use is not soothing to delicate membranes.

PAR. 4. With reference to the product designated as "Shade's Cones," such statements as the following are made:

* * * Known to the medical profession as Vagi-Seals for Intimate Feminine Hygiene.

Shade's Cones are also in demand as a prophylactic, where the possibility of Venereal Disease communication is present.

Shade's Cones contain no poisonous chemicals, yet they are more effective than any Solution of odorous Carbolic acid or Chlorine, that can be applied to the human body. Physicians testify to the utter harmlessness and effectiveness to the purpose of these ingredients * * *

Shade's Cones deposit a protective film or coating over the mucous membranes of the area, which is effective for a long period * * *

They also act as a deodorant and the women that use them can always be sure of being protected from embarrassing odors, which sometimes arise from vaginal disorders.

Findings

We know that Shade's Cones are safe, healthful and clean, and that they should be left at least 8 to 10 hours in the cavity, before being washed out with a Shade Antiseptic Powder douche.

Through said statements, and in other statements of similar import, with respect to the product "Shade's Cones," the respondent represents and implies, and the purchasing public is thereby led to believe, that said product is efficacious for use in the prevention, treatment and cure of diseases, ailments and conditions peculiar to women arising out of the so-called problems of feminine hygiene; that said product is safe for general use; that said product is an efficient prophylactic where the possibility of venereal disease infection is present; that said product relieves inflammation and is soothing to irritated membranes; that the product is more effective than carbolic acid or chlorine in the prevention, treatment and cure of diseases and ailments peculiar to women arising out of the so-called problems of feminine hygiene; that its use deposits a protective film or coating over the mucous membranes which remains effective for a long period of time, and that the product is a deodorant and assures the user of protection from embarrassing odors arising from the so-called problems of feminine hygiene. Respondent's product "Shade's Cones" is not efficacious for use in the prevention, treatment and cure of diseases, ailments and conditions peculiar to women arising out of the so-called problems of feminine hygiene; said product is not safe for general use and is not an efficient prophylactic where the possibility of venereal disease infection is present; said product does not relieve inflammation and is not soothing to irritated membranes; said product is not more effective than carbolic acid or chlorine in the prevention, treatment and cure of diseases and ailments peculiar to women arising out of the so-called problems of feminine hygiene; its use does not deposit a protective film or coating over the mucous membrane which remains effective for a long period of time; said product is not a deodorant and its use will not assure the user of protection from embarrassing odors arising from the so-called problems of feminine hygiene.

PAR. 5. With reference to the product designated and known as "Shade's Antiseptic Powder" such statements as the following are made:

Vaginal douching is so important to health that dainty women cannot afford to neglect it. Douching should be practiced regularly by every woman, and especially the married woman. Secretions in the marital state are more frequent and opportunities for infection are increased.

Shade's Antiseptic Powder not only promotes cleanliness and health, but also destroys bacteria, and it soothes and heals the delicate tissues.

Two teaspoonfuls of the powder to 2 quarts of warm water, used daily, in Leucorrhœa (Whites), Vaginitis and Cervicitis.

It destroys unpleasant odors, and produces that wonderful feeling of inner cleanliness, so much desired by every dainty woman.

Through said statements, and in other statements of similar import, with respect to the product "Shade's Antiseptic Powder," the respondent represents and implies, and the purchasing public is thereby led to believe, that said product promotes cleanliness and good health; that it destroys bacteria and soothes and heals delicate tissues, and that it is an efficient treatment for leucorrhœa (whites), vaginitis and cervicitis and destroys unpleasant odors. The product "Shade's Antiseptic Powder" does not promote cleanliness and good health, destroy bacteria nor does it soothe and heal delicate tissues; said product is not an efficient treatment for leucorrhœa (whites), vaginitis and cervicitis and its use has no beneficial effects in the treatment of such conditions, nor will it destroy unpleasant odors.

PAR. 6. In the conduct of his business as aforesaid the respondent uses in his advertisements the name "Bureau of Education" in connection with other statements in the advertising matter in such a manner as to represent and imply, and thereby lead the purchasing public to believe, that the "Bureau of Education" is a separate organization or institution in no wise connected with the business of the respondent, organized for the purpose of carrying on scientific research in the methods of preventing, treating or curing maladies peculiar to women, and that respondent's products have been tested or approved by such organization or institution. There is no such organization as the "Bureau of Education" organized for the purpose of carrying on scientific research in the methods of preventing, treating or curing maladies peculiar to women, and respondent's products have not been tested by such an organization. The so-called "Bureau of Education" is simply a name adopted by the respondent to use in furtherance of the sale of his said products.

There are among respondent's competitors in said commerce many who truthfully represent their products and the nature of their organization.

PAR. 7. The representations and implications used by the respondent as above set out in connection with the offering for sale and sale of the products herein described in said commerce are false, misleading and deceptive and have had, and now have, the tendency and capacity to, and do, mislead and deceive many members of the purchasing public and cause them erroneously to believe that said representations are true and cause them, because of said erroneous belief, to purchase substantial quantities of respondent's said products, thereby unfairly diverting trade in said commerce to the respondent from his competitors who truthfully represent their products to the substantial injury of said competitors in said commerce and to the injury of the public.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondent, Oliver L. Von Bachelles, are to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

It is ordered, That the respondent, Oliver L. Von Bachelles, an individual, doing business as H. Shade's Laboratories, and as Bureau of Education, H. Shade's Laboratories, or under any other name, his representatives, agents and employees in connection with the offering for sale, sale and distribution of the medicinal or pharmaceutical preparations now designated Shade's Cones, Shade's Suppositories and Shade's Antiseptic Powder, or any other preparations of substantially the same ingredients and therapeutic efficacy, whether designated by the aforesaid names or by any other names, in interstate commerce or in the District of Columbia, do forthwith cease and desist from representing or implying in connection with the offering for sale, sale and distribution of any of said products.

1. That said product is efficacious for use in the prevention, treatment and cure of diseases, ailments and conditions peculiar to women arising out of the so-called problems of feminine hygiene;

2. That said product is safe for general use;

3. That said product solves the problems of feminine hygiene;

Order

25 F. T. C.

4. That said product is an efficient prophylactic where the possibility of venereal disease infection is present;

5. That said product relieves inflammation and is soothing to irritated or delicate membranes;

6. That said product is more effective than carbolic acid or chlorine in the prevention, treatment and cure of diseases, ailments and conditions peculiar to women arising out of the so-called problems of feminine hygiene;

7. That the use of said product deposits a protective film or coating over the membrane which remains effective for a long period of time;

8. That said product is a deodorant and that its use will assure the user of protection from embarrassing odors arising from the so-called problems of feminine hygiene;

9. That said product forms a protective film which is powerfully germicidal;

10. That said product promotes cleanliness and good health, destroys bacterial and soothes and heals delicate tissues or membranes;

11. That said product is an efficient treatment for leucorrhoea (whites), vaginitis and cervicitis, or has a beneficial effect in the treatment of such ailments or conditions, or that it will destroy unpleasant odors;

12. That, through the use of the words "Bureau of Education" or other words, said products have been submitted to or approved by an institution organized for the purpose of carrying on scientific research in the methods of treating and curing maladies peculiar to women, and that respondent's products have been tested by such an organization.

HARRY NEIVERT, TRADING AS PIGRO CHAMOIS COMPANY

COMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION
OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 26, 1914

Docket 2513. Complaint, Aug. 13, 1935—Decision, Aug. 28, 1937

Where an individual engaged in the distribution of leather products, including certain products which were neither (1) chamois leather, as originally made from the skin of an Alpine antelope, highly prized for its soft and pliable quality for use in polishing such articles as jewelry, metals, glass, and wood, and possessed of additional feature of absorbing water readily and returning, when dry, to its original softness and pliability, nor (2) composed of the inner side of a sheepskin or "flesher," from which the outer or grain side has been split, tanned exclusively with marine-oil, and with a natural yellowish color well known to purchasing public, and possessed generally of same qualities as those of the original chamois skin, and commercially now known, and to public as "chamois," and in the sale of said products in competition with others engaged in manufacture and sale of washable leather goods to wholesale and retail dealers and other purchasers in the various States and in the District of Columbia—

Made use of trade name including word "chamois" on its invoices, letterheads, circulars, and other printed matter, and in other ways, in soliciting sale of and selling his aforesaid products, and included said word in invoices, circulars, and advertising matter in describing and referring to said certain products hereinabove referred to, through such names as "Carpincho chamois cuts," "Carpincho square cuts, chamois color," "Sheepskin chamois, chrome tan," notwithstanding fact said certain products were not the genuine or commercial chamois leather, as hereinbefore described, but constituted the inner side of the carpincho leather, grain or outside split of which is used in glove manufacture, and which, in color and appearance, as result of tanning process employed, resembles that of chamois, though not possessed of moisture-absorbent quality of the oil-tanned sheepskin fleshers and without latter's quality of returning to their original softness and pliability after being saturated with water;

With capacity and tendency to mislead and deceive number of the purchasing public into buying his said leather products in the erroneous and mistaken belief that they were purchasing such products possessing qualities of chamois as hereinabove set forth, and to deceive ultimate purchasers into buying leather products which they did not intend to buy and which do not possess said certain desirable qualities possessed by the chamois, as above set forth, and with result of placing in the hands of retailers means of deceiving ultimate purchaser as to the leather from which said products are actually made, and with tendency and capacity to divert trade from competitors engaged in selling articles of leather in commerce among the various states, truthfully represented as chamois, and from other competitors likewise engaged in selling in such commerce products truthfully advertised and of the same kind and general appearance as those of said individual:

Held, That such acts and practices, under the conditions and circumstances set forth, were to the prejudice of the public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition.

Mr. James M. Hammond for the Commission.

Maidier & Maidier, of Gloversville, N. Y., for respondent.

COMPLAINT

PARAGRAPH 1. The respondent herein, Harry Neivert, is an individual doing business under the firm name and style of Pigo Chamois Company, with his principal place of business being in the city of Gloversville, N. Y. He is now and has been for more than one year last past, engaged in the business of manufacturing leather products designated by him as Carpincho chamois cuts, pocket shaped carpincho chamois cuts, carpincho square cuts "chamois color," sheepskin chamois chrome tan, carpincho middle split chamois, sheepskin chamois, chrome tanned, Java flesher chamois and other leather products carrying as part of their name or designation the word "chamois" and in the sale thereof between and among the various States of the United States and the District of Columbia, shipping such products, when sold, to the purchasers thereof, some located in the State of New York and others located in various States of the United States and the District of Columbia, and there is now, and has been for more than one year last past, a constant current of trade and commerce by respondent in the aforesaid leather products. In the course and conduct of his business, the respondent is now, and for more than one year last past, has been in substantial competition with other individuals and with corporations, firms, and partnerships engaged in the sale of leather products between and among the various States of the United States, and the District of Columbia.

PAR. 2. Respondent in selling and offering for sale his aforesaid leather products between and among the various States of the United States and the District of Columbia now represents and for more than one year last past has represented in and by the use of his aforesaid trade name by the designation of his leather products hereinbefore mentioned, by advertisements, price lists and in other ways that the aforesaid leather products are chamois. "Chamois" has its origin in the name of an European antelope, the skin of which is made into soft, pliable leather which is used in the manufacture of gloves and for the polishing of silver and metals. The chamois antelope is now practically extinct and its skin is no longer an article of general commerce. At the present and for a long time last past, the word "chamois" as commercially known is used to designate the inner part of a sheepskin, which when oil dressed is a very soft and pliable product, sold commercially under the name of "chamois." It is likewise valuable for polishing and cleaning purposes, possessing particularly the power of quickly absorbing moisture and returning thereafter when dried to its original softness and pliable quality. The only trade name and designation given to the skin of a chamois antelope and to the oil dressed sheepskin is the word "chamois" and that the word "chamois" means to the retail trade and to the public either the skin of a chamois antelope or the oil tanned skin of a sheep.

PAR. 3. In truth and in fact the leather products dealt in by the respondent as described in paragraph 1 herein and represented by him as set out in paragraphs 1 and 2 to be "chamois" are not in fact "chamois," but are articles manufactured from sheepskin which have not been oil tanned or from pigskin and have the same general appearance but not the peculiar qualities or properties of articles known to the public and trade as "chamois."

PAR. 4. Use by the respondent of its aforesaid trade name, of the aforesaid designations of its leather products, and of other designations, and of the advertisements and price lists described in paragraph 2 hereof has the capacity and tendency to mislead and deceive, and has misled and deceived purchasers of the aforesaid products of respondent into the belief that such products are "chamois" and to purchase such products of respondent in such erroneous belief and places into the hands of dealers the means of misleading and deceiving the purchasing public. Among the competitors of respondent mentioned in paragraph 1 hereof are manufacturers of leather products similar to those made and sold by respondent but who do not in anywise designate such products as "chamois." There are also among such competitors manufacturers who manufacture and sell "chamois" and who truthfully represent their products as "chamois." By the aforesaid acts and practices of respondent, trade is diverted by respondent from his competitors who do not misrepresent their products whereby substantial injury is being done and has been done by respondent to substantial competition in interstate commerce.

PAR. 5. That the above methods, actions, and practices of the respondent are all to the prejudice of the public and to respondent's competitors and constitute unfair methods of competition in interstate commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of the Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of 'an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled, "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission issued and served its complaint in this proceeding upon respondent herein, Harry Neivert, an individual, doing business under the firm name and style of Pigno Chamois Company, charging him with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce, in violation of the provisions of said act. After the issuance of said complaint, the respondent filed his answer in this proceeding, admitting in part, and denying in part, the allegations of the complaint. Thereafter a stipulation was entered into, whereby it was stipulated and agreed that a statement of facts signed and executed by the respondent's counsel, Messrs. Maider & Maider, of Gloversville, N. Y., and W. T. Kelley, Chief Counsel for the Federal Trade Commission, subject to the approval of the Commission, may be taken as the facts in this proceeding, in lieu of testimony in support of the charges stated in the complaint, or in opposition thereto, and that the said Commission may proceed upon said statement of facts to make its report stating its findings as to the facts and its conclusion based thereon, and enter its order disposing of the proceeding without the presentation of argument or the filing of briefs. Thereafter, this proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on said complaint, answer, and stipulation, said stipulation having been approved and accepted, and the Commission having duly considered the same, and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public, and makes its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom :

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. For more than one year prior to the filing of the complaint in this proceeding, Harry Neivert, respondent herein, was, and had been, doing business under the firm name and style of Pigro Chamois Company, in the distribution and sale of leather products. His office and principal place of business was then, and still is, located in the city of Gloversville, State of New York.

Respondent has caused, and still causes, his said leather products, when sold by him, to be transported in commerce from his place of business at Gloversville, N. Y., to the purchasers thereof by shipping the said products to, into, and through States other than the State of New York.

PAR. 2. During the times above referred to, other individuals, firms, and corporations located in the various States of the United States have been engaged in the manufacture of washable leather products which they have sold, and still sell, to wholesale and retail dealers and other purchasers located in the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia. The respondent, during the aforesaid times, was, and still is, in competition in the sale of leather products with said other individuals, firms, and corporations, in commerce as herein set out.

PAR. 3. Respondent, for more than one year prior to the filing of the complaint in this proceeding, described and referred in his invoices, circulars, and advertising matter, to certain of the leather products sold by him as follows: Carpincho chamois cuts; pocket shaped carpincho chamois cuts; carpincho square cuts, chamois color; sheepskin chamois, chrome tan; carpincho middle split chamois; sheepskin chamois, chrome tanned; and Java flesher chamois; and carried as part of the respective names or designations of other leather products the word "chamois."

PAR. 4. The respondent, at the time of the filing of the complaint herein, and for a long time prior thereto, used as, and for, the trade name for his said business the words "Pigro Chamois Company." This trade name was used by the respondent on his invoices, letter-heads, circulars, and other printed matter, and in other ways, in soliciting the sale of, and in selling, his products in commerce as described in paragraph 1.

PAR. 5. Chamois leather was originally made from the skin of an Alpine antelope known as the "chamois." This animal is now, and has been for many years, practically extinct, so that its skin is a rarity and has not been sold in commercial quantities for many years. Its skin was highly prized for its soft and pliable quality for use in polishing such articles as jewelry, metals, glass, and wood. It possessed the additional feature of absorbing water readily and returning, when dry, to its original softness and pliability.

In searching for a substitute for the original "chamois" leather after the source of supply became exhausted, tanners tried many different varieties of leather and processes of tannage. After many experiments, it was found that the inner side of a sheepskin, known technically as a "flesher," from which the outer, or grain, side has been split, when tanned exclusively with marine-oil, usually cod oil, would produce an article very similar to, and possessing, generally, the same qualities as that of the skin of the original "chamois" antelope. Sheepskin fleshers, thus tanned, because of their use for many years as a substitute for the skin of the "chamois" antelope, constitute what is now known commercially and to the public as "chamois." This leather is not dyed, as the oil tannage gives it a natural yellowish color which is well known to the purchasing public. Its original softness and its pliability, when dried, after having been saturated with water, are very desirable qualities, and influence the purchase of large quantities of said products in preference to other products designed for similar usage.

PAR. 6. Gloversville, N. Y., where respondent's place of business is located, is the center of the glovemaking industry in the United States. Gloves, except work gloves of the heaviest kind, are made from the grain, or outside split, of many different kinds of skins, including the carpincho, which is a semi-aquatic South American animal resembling in appearance a large pig. This leather resembles "chamois" in color and appearance, as the whole skin during the tanning process, and before splitting, is dyed yellow for use in making yellow gloves. Hides which are intended for ultimate use in the manufacture of gloves, however, are usually not oil-tanned, which is a slow and expensive process, but are either tanned by the use of formaldehyde or chrome, which are much cheaper and quicker processes of tanning. The inner side of these skins, the grain split of which has been used in the manufacture of gloves, is, therefore, a byproduct, and is sold cheaply for any use to which the same may be put. These inner splits, many of which are carpincho or peccary, constitute the articles purchased and marketed as "chamois" by the respondent. He deals primarily with the "Five and Ten Cent" retail chains, and his products usually sell for ten or twenty cents. Skins tanned by chrome or formaldehyde from which the respondent's products are made are entirely satisfactory for use as gloves, but will not absorb moisture with the ease and facility of oil-tanned sheepskin fleshers, and will not return to their original softness and pliability after being saturated with water. The leather products made from these inner skins so tanned by the formaldehyde or chrome processes, therefore, do not have many of the desirable qualities of those products made from the skins referred to in paragraph 5. The yellow color and general similarity in appearance, coupled with the use of the descriptive terminology set out in paragraphs 3 and 4 has a capacity and tendency to mislead and deceive a number of the purchasing public into purchasing respondent's leather products in the erroneous and mistaken belief that they are purchasing leather products possessing the qualities detailed in paragraph 5.

PAR. 7. The use by respondent of the word "chamois" in his trade name, and in connection with the sale of articles of leather referred to in paragraph 3 hereof is misleading, and has the capacity and tendency to deceive, and may deceive, the ultimate purchasers into buying leather products which they do not intend to buy and which do not possess certain desirable qualities possessed by the leather products referred to in paragraph 5. Through and by virtue of the practices aforesaid, the respondent places, and has placed, in the hands of retailers a means of deceiving the ultimate purchaser as to the leather from which said products are actually made.

The use by the respondent of the aforesaid practices has the tendency and capacity to divert trade from competitors engaged in selling articles of leather in commerce between and among the various States of the United States which are truthfully represented as "chamois" and from other competitors of respondent likewise engaged in selling in like commerce products which are truthfully advertised and are of the same kind and general appearance as those of respondent.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondent, under the conditions and circumstances set forth in the foregoing findings, are to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce, within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

business under the firm name and style of Pigo Chamois Company, by his attorneys of record, and W. T. Kelley, Chief Counsel for the Commission, which provides, among other things, that without further evidence or other intervening procedure, the Commission may issue and serve upon the respondent herein findings as to the facts and conclusion based thereon and an order disposing of the proceedings; and the Commission having made its findings as to the facts and its conclusion that said respondent has violated the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled, "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

It is ordered, That the respondent, Harry Neivert, an individual, doing business under the firm name and style of Pigo Chamois Company, his representatives, agents, and employees, in connection with the offering for sale, sale, and distribution of his leather products in interstate commerce, or in the District of Columbia, do forthwith cease and desist from representing, directly or by inference through his trade name, circulars, contracts, advertisements, invoices, or bulletins, or through any other means whatever, that the leather products sold by him are "chamois," or are made from "chamois" when said leather products are not manufactured:

(a) From the skin of the Alpine antelope commonly known and referred to as chamois; or

(b) From fleshers or under-splits of sheepskin straight oil-dressed or tanned without the use of alum, chrome, or formaldehyde.

It is further ordered, That the respondent shall, within 30 days from the date of service upon him of this order file with this Commission his report in writing, stating the manner and form in which he shall have complied with this order.

COMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION
OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 26, 1914

Docket 3064. Complaint, Feb. 19, 1937—Decision, Aug. 28, 1937

Where five corporations and three individuals, officers thereof and directors and in control of their sales policies and general business activities, engaged in distribution and sale of shoe polish, shaving, dental, and sun tan creams, and similar commercial preparations, and toilet articles made by two of aforesaid corporations—

- (a) Packed their aforesaid products in containers upon which were printed, together with description of product, certain price marks, facts being retail prices thus indicated, and appearing on items of merchandise or containers thereof, were not intended by them or by those buying for resale, to be true retail prices or values of merchandise thus price marked, but were intended to be far in excess of prices contemplated and actually charged for sale of merchandise to ultimate consumer buying in usual course of trade, and were not fairly indicative of quality, character, and amount of said products or their ingredients; in accordance with general public's understanding of manufacturers' long-standing practice of indicating retail price on containers of their product as indicative of quality, character, and amount of ingredients used, and in accordance with confidence placed by public in such price marks and representations thereby made and substantial volume of merchandise purchased in such lines;
- (b) Placed the tubes or containers of the products variously made and sold by them in cartons of a capacity and size greatly in excess of that required to house said various tubes, and capable of containing much larger and longer tubes of product than those actually contained, to the deception of the purchasing public, recipient, usually and in accordance with its expectation in purchasing product of type made and packed as aforesaid, of a tube or amount commensurate with size of pasteboard carton or container enclosing same; and
- (c) Caused certain of their said products to be conspicuously labeled and advertised as made and sold by "Dr. Dally's Laboratories, New York, N. Y.," notwithstanding fact products in question, made by two of their number as above set forth, were not made by Dr. Dally's Laboratories, nor under formula or supervision of any doctor so named, nor in laboratory having doctor in its employ; and Where the non-manufacturing three of aforesaid five corporations—

- (d) Included word "laboratories" in their corporate names, and represented thereby that they owned, controlled, or operated chemical workroom or place devoted to experimental study in some branch of natural science or to the application of scientific principles in the testing, analysis, and preparation of their said products, facts being they were not directly engaged, as separate corporate entities, in manufacture of any product, but merely owned and controlled their own respective corporate names, used by said manufacturing corporations, in distribution of products sold by them, as designations or representations that aforesaid respective corporations were the actual manufacturers of the various products labelled with their said respective corporate names, and they neither owned, controlled, nor operated any type of laboratory or chemical workroom or places devoted to experimental study in any branch of natural science, as above set forth, and did not manufacture said products;

With effect of misleading and deceiving members of the purchasing public into the mistaken and erroneous belief that said representations were true, and into purchase of their said products by reason thereof, and of unfairly diverting trade to them from their competitors who do not use similar false and misleading practices in the sale of their respective products, but truthfully represent true quality thereof and their true business status; to the substantial injury of competition, and with further result of placing in the hands of purchasers buying for resale means enabling them to commit a fraud upon a substantial portion of consuming public:

Held, That such acts and practices were to the prejudice of the public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition.

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914 (38 Stat. 717-15 U.S.C.A. Sec. 41), entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that Trade Laboratories, Inc., also trading as Redd Chemical Company, Modern Brands, Inc., Perlox Laboratories, Inc., Pearl-White Laboratories, Inc., Dr. Daily's Laboratories, Inc., corporations, and J. C. Brush, C. R. Dickinson, and C. V. Brush, individuals, all hereinafter referred to as respondents have been and are using unfair methods of competition in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in said act, and it appearing to said Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Trade Laboratories, Inc., also trading as Redd Chemical Company, Modern Brands, Inc., Perlox Laboratories, Inc., Pearl-White Laboratories, Inc., and Dr. Daily's Laboratories, Inc., are all corporations organized and existing under the laws of the State of New Jersey, with their principal place of business at 412 Halsey Street, Newark, N. J. All of the above named corporations are officered and directed by the individual respondents namely:

J. C. Brush, president,
C. R. Dickinson, vice president,
C. V. Brush, secretary and treasurer, who direct and control the sales policies and general business activities of said corporations.

PAR. 2. All of the said corporate respondents and individuals herein named are now, and for several years last past have been, distributors and sellers of shaving cream, dental cream, shoe polish, sun tan cream, and similar commercial preparations and toilet articles. The products which they distribute are manufactured by respondents Modern Brands, and Trade Laboratories, Inc.

Said respondents, being engaged in business as aforesaid, cause said products, when sold, to be transported from their principal place of business in the State of New Jersey to purchasers thereof located in other States of the United States and in the District of Columbia. There is now, and has been at all times mentioned herein, a constant current of trade and commerce in said above described products sold by respondents between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 3. The respondents are now, and have been, in substantial competition with other individuals, firms, and corporations likewise engaged in the business of selling shaving cream, dental cream, sun tan cream, and similar toilet articles in commerce among and between the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 4. Over a period of many years many manufacturers have formed the custom of marking or stamping on articles or items of manufacture, or on the containers thereof, the retail price at which said manufacturers suggest the retailer should sell said items or articles to the ultimate consumer purchaser. This suggested retail price, so stamped or marked, is intended to represent the cost of the manufacture of the article plus a reasonable profit for the manufacturer, middleman, and retailer and, consequently, to represent the approximate retail sale value of the article. The range of the suggested retail price is intended by the manufacturer to be indicative of the quality, character and amount of the ingredients used. The public generally understands the custom herein detailed and has been led to, and does, place its confidence in the price markings so stamped and the representations thereby made as to the quality and amount of the product to the extent that it purchases a substantial volume of merchandise in reliance on this aforesaid custom.

PAR. 5. Respondents pack their products in containers on the outside of which is printed a price mark and a description of the product. Among the items advertised and sold aforesaid in connection with which retail prices have been affixed either to the article itself or to the container thereof and which are placed in a carton or container to house said product are the following:

25 F. T. C.

1. Windsor Shaving Cream.....	50¢
2. Trim Shaving Cream.....	Giant Size 60¢
3. Hudson Bay Shaving Cream.....	Large 35¢ Size
4. Royal Palm Shaving Cream.....	Giant 60¢ Size
5. Imperial Shaving Cream.....	Giant 50¢ Size
6. Barritt's Shaving Cream.....	Giant 50¢ Size
7. Society Brand Dental Cream.....	Large 35¢ Size

PAR. 6. In truth and in fact the retail prices, as indicated above, appearing on the items of merchandise or on the containers thereof, were not intended by either the respondents or the purchasers, purchasing for resale, to be the true retail price or the true retail value of the merchandise so price marked. The retail prices, as indicated, appearing on the items of merchandise, or on the containers thereof, were intended by the respondents, and by the purchasers purchasing for resale, to be far in excess of the price intended to be charged and actually charged on a sale of the merchandise to the ultimate consumer purchasing in the usual course of trade and far in excess of the true value of the various items of merchandise so price marked.

PAR. 7. When the purchasing public make a purchase of a product of the type manufactured and packed by the respondent (not being able to see the inside of the carton or container or able to examine it before purchase) they expect and do usually receive a tube or an amount of the product commensurate with the size of the paste board carton or container in which the product is packed for sale.

In truth and in fact the cartons in which the tubes or containers of the above products and others manufactured and sold by respondents are placed and shipped in commerce as herein described are of a capacity and size greatly in excess of that required to house said tubes of the product. Said cartons are of a size and capacity capable of containing much larger and longer tubes of the product than those which said cartons actually contain, and the public has been and is being deceived when purchasing any of the products packed and sold as aforesaid.

PAR. 8. In the manufacture, sale and distribution of their products in commerce respondents cause certain of their products to be labelled and advertised as being manufactured and sold by Dr. Daily's Laboratories, Inc., New York, N. Y. The labelling of this product contains in large type on the carton after a description of the product the words "Dr. Daily's Laboratories, New York, N. Y." This statement serves as a representation on the part of the respondents that the products so labelled and advertised were actually manufactured under a formula of, or under the supervision of, a Dr. Daily in the plant of the Dr. Daily's Laboratories.

In truth and in fact the product labelled as above mentioned is manufactured by the respondents Modern Brands, Inc. and Trade Laboratories, Inc., and is not manufactured by Dr. Daily's Laboratories. The product is not manufactured and made under the formula of, or the supervision of, any doctor by the name of Daily. No doctor is employed in the laboratory in which the product is manufactured.

The respondents, Perlox Laboratories, Inc., Pearl-White Laboratories, Inc. and Dr. Daily's Laboratories, Inc. are not directly engaged in the production of any products as separate corporate entities but they merely own and control their own respective corporate names, which are used by Modern Brands, Inc. and Trade Laboratories, Inc. in the distribution of the products which they sell as designations or representations that said respective corporations are the actual manufacturers of the various products labelled with their respective corporate names. The said respondents Perlox Laboratories, Inc., Pearl-White Laboratories, Inc. and Dr. Daily's Laboratories, Inc. do not own, control, or operate any type of laboratory for the manufacture of any commercial preparations or toilet products, and do not manufacture said products.

PAR. 9. The aforesaid false and misleading representations have had, and now have, the tendency and capacity to, and do, mislead and deceive members of the purchasing public into the mistaken and erroneous belief that said representations are true and into the purchase of respondents' products on account thereof. As a result thereof trade is unfairly diverted to respondents from their competitors who do not use similar false and misleading practices in the sale of their respective products but who truthfully represent the true quality of their products and their true business status. In consequence thereof substantial injury has been done to competition in commerce among and between the various States of the United States.

Likewise, the false and misleading acts and representations, hereinabove set out on the part of respondents, places in the hands of the purchasers buying for resale, an instrument and a means whereby said purchasers may commit a fraud upon a substantial portion of the consuming public.

PAR. 10. The above and foregoing acts, practices, and representations of respondents have been, and are, all to the prejudice of the public and of respondents' competitors, and have been, and are, unfair methods of competition within the meaning and intent of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its power and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission on February 19, 1937, issued, and on February 23, served, its complaint in this proceeding upon respondents Trade Laboratories, Inc., also trading as Redd Chemical Company, Modern Brands, Inc., Perlox Laboratories, Inc., Pearl-White Laboratories, Inc., and Dr. Daily's Laboratories, Inc., corporations, and upon the individual respondents, J. C. Brush, C. R. Dickinson, and C. V. Brush, charging them with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of the provisions of said act. After the issuance of said complaint and the filing of respondents' answer, the Commission, by order entered herein, granted respondents' motion for permission to withdraw said answer and to substitute therefor an answer admitting all the material allegations of the complaint to be true and waiving the taking of further evidence and all other intervening procedure, which substitute answer was duly filed in the office of the Commission. Thereafter, this proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on the said complaint and the substitute answer, briefs and oral arguments of counsel having been waived, and the Commission having duly considered the same and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom.

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. Trade Laboratories, Inc., also trading as Redd Chemical Company, Modern Brands, Inc., Perlox Laboratories, Inc., Pearl-White Laboratories, Inc., and Dr. Daily's Laboratories, Inc., are all corporations organized and existing under the laws of the State of New Jersey, with their principal place of business at 412 Halsey Street, Newark, N. J. All of the above named corporations are officered and directed by the individual respondents, namely:

J. C. Brush, president,

C. R. Dickinson, vice president,

C. V. Brush, secretary and treasurer, who direct and control the sales policies and general business activities of said corporations.

PAR. 2. All of the said corporate respondents and individuals herein named are now, and for several years last past have been, distributors and sellers of shaving cream, dental cream, shoe polish, sun tan cream, and similar commercial preparations and toilet articles. The products which they distribute are manufactured by respondents Modern Brands, and Trade Laboratories, Inc.

Said respondents, being engaged in business as aforesaid, cause said products, when sold, to be transported from their principal place of business in the State of New Jersey to purchasers thereof located in other States of the United States and in the District of Columbia. There is now, and has been at all times mentioned herein, a constant current of trade and commerce in said above described products sold by respondents between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 3. The respondents are now, and have been in substantial competition with other individuals, firms, and corporations likewise engaged in the business of selling shaving cream, dental cream, sun tan cream, and similar toilet articles in commerce among and between the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 4. Over a period of many years many manufacturers have formed the custom of marking or stamping on articles or items of manufacture, or on the containers thereof, the retail price at which said manufacturers suggest the retailer should sell said items or articles to the ultimate consumer purchaser. This suggested retail price, so stamped or marked, is intended to, and does represent the cost of the manufacture of the article plus a reasonable profit for the manufacturer, middleman, and retailer and, consequently, represents the approximate retail sale value of the article. The range of the suggested retail price is intended by the manufacturer to be, and is, indicative of the quality, character, and amount of the ingredients used. The public generally understands the custom herein detailed and has been led to, and does place its confidence in the price markings so stamped and the representations thereby made as to the quality and amount of the product to the extent that it purchases a substantial volume of merchandise in reliance on this aforesaid custom.

PAR. 5. Respondents pack their products in containers on the outside of which is printed a price mark and a description of the product. Among the items advertised and sold aforesaid in connection with which retail prices have been affixed either to the article itself or to the container thereof and which are placed in a carton or container to house said product are the following:

Findings

1. Windsor Shaving Cream-----	50¢
2. Trim Shaving Cream-----	Giant Size 60¢
3. Hudson Bay Shaving Cream-----	Large 35¢ Size
4. Imperial Shaving Cream-----	Giant 50¢ Size
5. Royal Palm Shaving Cream-----	Giant 60¢ Size
6. Barritt's Shaving Cream-----	Giant 50¢ Size
7. Society Brand Dental Cream-----	Large 35¢ Size

PAR. 6. In truth and in fact the retail prices, as indicated above, appearing on the items of merchandise or on the containers thereof, were not intended by either the respondents or the purchasers, purchasing for resale, to be the true retail price or the true retail value of the merchandise so price marked. The retail prices as indicated, appearing on the items of merchandise or on the containers thereof, were intended by the respondents, and by the purchasers purchasing for resale, to be far in excess of the prices intended to be charged and actually charged on a sale of the merchandise to the ultimate consumer purchasing in the usual course of trade and are not fairly indicative of the quality, character, and amount of the said products or their ingredients.

PAR. 7. When the purchasing public makes a purchase of a product of the type manufactured and packed by the respondent (not being able to see the inside of the carton or container or able to examine it before purchase), it expects and usually does receive a tube or an amount of the product commensurate with the size of the pasteboard carton or container in which the product is packed for sale.

But the cartons in which the tubes or containers of the above products and others manufactured and sold by respondents are placed and shipped in commerce as herein described are of a capacity and size greatly in excess of that required to house said tubes of the product. Said cartons are of a size and capacity capable of containing much larger and longer tubes of the product than those which said cartons actually contain, and the public has been and is being deceived when purchasing any of the products packed and sold as aforesaid.

PAR. 8. In the manufacture, sale and distribution of their products in commerce, respondents cause certain of their products to be labelled and advertised as being manufactured and sold by Dr. Daily's Laboratories, Inc., New York, N. Y. The labelling of this product contains in large type on the carton after a description of the product the words "Dr. Daily's Laboratories, New York, N. Y." This statement serves as a representation on the part of the respondents that the products so labelled and advertised were actually manufactured under a formula of, or under the supervision of, a Dr. Daily in the plant of the Dr. Daily's Laboratories.

In truth and in fact the product labelled as above mentioned is manufactured by the respondents Modern Brands, Inc., and Trade Laboratories, Inc., and is not manufactured by Dr. Daily's Laboratories. The product is not manufactured and made under the formula of, or the supervision of, any doctor by the name of Daily. No doctor is employed in the laboratory in which the product is manufactured.

In the sale and distribution of these products in commerce, respondents Perlox Laboratories, Inc., Pearl-White Laboratories, Inc., and Dr. Daily's Laboratories, Inc., represent through the use of the word "laboratories" in their corporate names that they own, control or operate a chemical workroom or a place devoted to experimental study in some branch of natural science or to the application of scientific principles in the testing, analysis, and preparation of their said products.

The respondents, Perlox Laboratories, Inc., Pearl-White Laboratories, Inc., and Dr. Daily's Laboratories, Inc., are not directly engaged in the production of any products as separate corporate entities but they merely own and control their own respective corporate names, which are used by Modern Brands, Inc., and Trade Laboratories, Inc., in the distribution of the products which they sell as designations or representations that said respective corporations are the actual manufacturers of the various products labelled with their respective corporate names. The said respondents Perlox Laboratories, Inc., Pearl-White Laboratories, Inc., and Dr. Daily's Laboratories, Inc., do not own, control or operate any type of laboratory or chemical workroom, or a place devoted to experimental study in any branch of natural science, where the application of scientific principles in testing, analysis and preparation of said products takes place, and do not manufacture said products.

PAR. 9. The aforesaid false and misleading representations have had, and now have the tendency and capacity to, and do, mislead and deceive members of the purchasing public into the mistaken and erroneous belief that said representations are true and into the purchase of respondents' products on account thereof. As a result thereof trade is unfairly diverted to respondents from their competitors who do not use similar false and misleading practices in the sale of their respective products but who truthfully represent the true quality of their products and their true business status. In consequence thereof substantial injury has been done to competition in commerce among and between the various States of the United States.

Likewise, the false and misleading acts and representations hereinabove set out on the part of respondents, places in the hands of the purchasers buying for resale, an instrument and a means whereby said purchasers may commit a fraud upon a substantial portion of the consuming public.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondents, Trade Laboratories, Inc., also trading as Redd Chemical Company, Modern Brands, Inc., Perlox Laboratories, Inc., Pearl-White Laboratories, Inc., and Dr. Daily's Laboratories, Inc., corporations, and of the individual respondents, J. C. Brush, C. R. Dickinson, and C. V. Brush are to the prejudice of the public and of respondents' competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce, within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

It is ordered, That the respondents, Trade Laboratories, Inc., also trading as Redd Chemical Company, Modern Brands, Inc., Perlox Laboratories, Inc., Pearl-White Laboratories, Inc., and Dr. Daily's Laboratories, Inc., their officers, representatives, agents and employees, and the individual respondents, J. C. Brush, C. R. Dickinson and C. V. Brush, the representatives, agents and employees of each of said individuals, in connection with the offering for sale, sale and distribution of shaving cream, dental cream, shoe polish, sun tan cream, similar commercial preparations and toilet articles, in interstate commerce or in the District of Columbia, do forthwith cease and desist from:

1. Representing, by marking or affixing an exaggerated or fictitious price upon the cartons or containers in which said articles are packed for sale or in any other manner that the prices so marked or affixed are the regular or customary retail prices at which such products are usually sold or offered for sale.

2. Representing, by the placing of any of said products in greatly over-sized cartons or containers, or in any other manner that a substantially larger quantity or amount of such product is therein contained than is actually the case.

3. Representing that any of said products are manufactured according to the formula or under the supervision of a "Dr. Daily" or any other physician when such is not the fact.

4. Representing, through use of the word "Laboratories" in the corporate name of respondents, Perlox Laboratories, Inc., Pearl-White Laboratories, Inc., or Dr. Daily's Laboratories, Inc., that the respondents so named own, control or operate a chemical workroom or a place devoted to experimental study in any branch of natural science or to the application of scientific principles in the testing and analysis and preparation of said products unless and until the said respondents shall own, operate, or control such a place or places.

5. Representing, through the use of any labelling or other advertising, that the respondents Perlox Laboratories, Inc., Pearl-White Laboratories, Inc., and Dr. Daily's Laboratories, Inc., are engaged in the manufacture and production of said products, when such is not the fact.

It is further ordered, That each of the above named respondents shall within 60 days after service upon it of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which it has complied with this order.

IN THE MATTER OF ILLINOIS BAKING CORPORATION

COMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION
OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 20, 1914

Docket 3023. Complaint, Dec. 24, 1936—Decision, Sept. 3, 1937

Where a corporation engaged in manufacture, sale, and distribution of ice cream cones, including cones packed and assembled with small printed slips bearing various legends, so as to involve use of a lottery scheme when sold and distributed by retail dealers to consumers thereof, and including legend "You're lucky YOU WIN A FREE ice cream cone," chance recipient of which printed slip, so placed in cones that ultimate consumer could not ascertain whether or not he was entitled to free ice cream cone until after his purchase had been made and cone partially consumed, became entitled thereby, and in accordance with explanatory display circulars furnished by it, free of charge, to another ice cream cone—

Sold, thus packed, said cones, to wholesalers, jobbers, and ice cream manufacturers, for use, sale, and distribution by their retail dealer purchasers in accordance with aforesaid sales plan, and thereby supplied to and placed in the hands of others the means of conducting lotteries in the sale of its product in accordance with such sales plan, contrary to public policy long recognized by the common law and criminal statutes and to an established public policy of the United States Government, and in competition with many who, unwilling to offer or sell ice cream cones with printed slips as above described, or otherwise arranged and packed for sale to purchasing public so as to involve game of chance, refrain therefrom, and in competition with many unwilling to adopt and use said or any method involving game of chance to win by chance or any other method contrary to public policy;

With capacity and tendency to induce purchasers to buy its said product in preference to cones offered and sold by its competitors, and with result that many dealers in and ultimate purchasers of ice cream cones were attracted by its said method and manner of inserting in a number thereof printed slips entitling purchasers to free ice cream cones, and by element of chance involved in sale thereof as above described, and were thereby induced to buy its said products, containing such printed slips and sold by it, in preference to those offered and sold by said competitors who do not use same or equivalent method, and with tendency and capacity, by reason of said game of chance, to divert to it trade and custom from its said competitors who do not use such or equivalent method, exclude from said trade all competitors who are unwilling to and do not use such method because unlawful, lessen competition therein, and tend to create a monopoly thereof in it and such other distributors of ice cream cones as do use same or equivalent method, deprive purchasing public of benefit of free competition in trade involved, and eliminate therefrom all actual, and exclude therefrom all potential, competitors who do not adopt and use said or equivalent method:

Held, That such method, acts and practices, under the conditions and circumstances set forth, were all to the prejudice of the public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition.

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that Illinois Baking Corporation, a corporation, hereinafter referred to as respondent, has been and is using unfair methods of competition in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in said act of Congress, and it appearing to said Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent, Illinois Baking Corporation, is a corporation organized and operating under the laws of the State of Delaware, with its principal office and place of business located at 2230 South Union Avenue, Chicago, Ill. Respondent is now, and for several years last past has been, engaged in the manufacture of ice cream cones and in the sale and distribution thereof to wholesale dealers, jobbers, and ice cream manufacturers located at points in the State of Illinois and in other States of the United States, and causes and has caused its said products, when so sold, to be transported from its principal place of business in Chicago, Ill., to purchasers thereof in the State of Illinois and in other States of the United States at their respective places of business; and there is now, and has been for several years last past, a course of trade and commerce by said respondent in said ice cream cones between and among the States of the United States. In the course and conduct of said business, respondent is in competition with other corporations and with partnerships and individuals engaged in the manufacture of ice cream cones and in the sales and distribution thereof in commerce between and among the various States of the United States.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of its business as described in paragraph 1 hereof, respondent, on or about May 1, 1936, began the sale and distribution, and since said date has continued the sale and distribution to wholesale dealers and jobbers and ice cream manufacturers, of ice cream cones packed and assembled with small printed slips therein so as to involve the use of a lottery scheme when sold and distributed by retail dealers to the consumers thereof. Respondent has had printed small slips of paper bearing various legends, and a few of said printed slips bear the following legend, to wit:

You're lucky
YOU WIN A FREE ice cream cone

The ultimate consumer procuring a cone containing one of the above printed slips is entitled to receive, and is to be given free of charge, another ice cream cone. The printed slips are so placed in the cones that the ultimate consumer cannot ascertain whether or not he is entitled to a free ice cream cone until after his purchase has been made and the cone partially consumed. The fact as to whether the ultimate purchaser receives an additional ice cream cone free of charge is thus determined wholly by lot or chance. Respondent furnishes with cartons of ice cream cones containing the above described printed slips a display circular bearing the following legends, to wit:

FREE ICE CREAM CONES!

lucky Ticket means you

YOU GET MORE ICE CREAM IN A CONE

PAR. 3. The wholesale dealers and jobbers and ice cream manufacturers, to whom respondent sells the above described ice cream cones containing printed slips, resell said cones as packed by respondent to retail dealers, and said retail dealers sell and distribute said cones, after placing ice cream therein, to the purchasing public in accordance with the aforesaid sales plan. Respondent thus supplies to and places in the hands of others the means of conducting lotteries in the sale of its product in accordance with the sales plan hereinabove set forth, and said sales plan has the capacity and tendency of inducing purchasers thereof to purchase respondent's said product in preference to ice cream cones offered for sale and sold by its competitors.

PAR. 4. The sale of said ice cream cones to the purchasing public in the manner above alleged involves a game of chance or the sale of a chance to procure an additional ice cream cone. The use by respondent of said method in the sale of ice cream cones, and the sale of ice cream cones by and through the use thereof and by the aid of said method, is a practice of the sort which the common law and criminal statutes have long deemed contrary to public policy and is contrary to an established public policy of the Government of the United States. The use by respondent of said method has the dangerous tendency unduly to hinder competition or to create a monopoly in this, to wit: that the use thereof has the tendency and capacity to exclude from the ice cream cone manufacturing business competitors who do not adopt and use the said method or an equivalent or similar method involving the same or an equivalent or similar element of chance or lottery scheme. Many persons, firms and corporations who make and sell ice cream cones in competition with respondent, as above alleged, are unwilling to offer for sale or sell said ice cream cones with printed slips, as above alleged, or otherwise arranged and packed for sale, to the purchasing public so as to involve a game of chance, and such competitors refrain therefrom.

PAR. 5. Many dealers and ultimate purchasers of ice cream cones are attracted by respondent's said method and manner of inserting printed slips entitling ultimate purchasers to free ice cream cones and by the element of chance involved in the sale thereof in the manner above described, and are thereby induced to purchase said ice cream cones containing said printed slips and sold by respondent in preference to ice cream cones offered for sale and sold by said competitors of respondent who do not use the same or equivalent methods. The use of said method by respondent has the tendency and capacity, because of said game of chance, to divert to respondent trade and custom from its said competitors who do not use the same or an equivalent method; to exclude from said trade all competitors who are unwilling to and who do not use the same or an equivalent method because the same is unlawful; to lessen competition in said trade and to tend to create a monopoly of said trade in respondent and such other distributors of ice cream cones as use the same or an equivalent method; and to deprive the purchasing public of the benefit of free competition in said trade. The use of said method by respondent has the tendency and capacity to eliminate from said trade all actual competitors and to exclude therefrom all potential competitors who do not adopt and use said method or an equivalent method.

PAR. 6. Many of said competitors of respondent are unwilling to adopt and use said method or any method involving a game of chance or the sale of a chance to win something by chance or any other method that is contrary to public policy.

PAR. 7. The aforementioned method, acts and practices of the respondent are all to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors, as hereinabove alleged. Said method, acts, and practices constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914.

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission on December 24, 1936, issued and on December 26, 1936, served its complaint in this proceeding upon the respondent, Illinois Baking Corporation, a corporation, charging it with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of the provisions of said act. After the issuance of said complaint and the filing of respondent's answer thereto, the Commission, by order entered herein on August 9, 1937, granted respondent's request for permission to withdraw said answer and to file in lieu thereof its substitute answer (undated) admitting all the material allegations of the complaint to be true and waiving the taking of further evidence and all other intervening procedure, which substitute answer was duly filed in the office of the Commission. Thereafter, this proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on the said complaint and the substitute answer; and the Commission having duly considered the matter and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent, Illinois Baking Corporation, is a corporation organized and operating under the laws of the State of Delaware, with its principal office and place of business located at 2230 South Union Avenue, Chicago, Ill. Respondent is now, and for several years last past has been engaged in the manufacture of ice cream cones and in the sale and distribution thereof to wholesale dealers, jobbers, and ice cream manufacturers located at points in the State of Illinois and in other States of the United States, and causes and has caused its said products, when so sold, to be transported from its principal place of business in Chicago, Ill., to purchasers thereof in the State of Illinois and in other States of the United States at their respective places of business. There is now, and has been for several years last past, a course of trade and commerce by said respondent in said ice cream cones between and among the States of the United States. In the course and conduct of said business, respondent is in competition with other corporations and with partnerships and individuals engaged in the manufacture of ice cream cones and in the sale and distribution thereof in commerce between and among the various States of the United States.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of its business as described in paragraph 1 hereof, respondent on or about May 1, 1936, began the sale and distribution, and since said date has continued the sale and distribution to wholesale dealers and jobbers and ice cream manufacturers of ice cream cones packed and assembled with small printed slips therein so as to involve the use of a lottery scheme when sold and distributed by retail dealers to the consumers thereof. Respondent has had printed small slips of paper bearing various legends, and a few of said printed slips bear the following legend to wit:

YOU WIN A FREE ice cream cone

The ultimate consumer procuring a cone containing one of the above printed slips is entitled to receive, and is to be given free of charge, another ice cream cone. The printed slips are so placed in the cones that the ultimate consumer cannot ascertain whether or not he is entitled to a free ice cream cone until after his purchase has been made and the cone partially consumed. The fact as to whether the ultimate purchaser receives an additional ice cream cone free of charge is thus determined wholly by lot or chance. Respondent furnished with cartons of ice cream cones containing the above-described printed slips a display circular bearing the following legend, to wit:

FREE ICE CREAM CONES!

You're lucky You win a FREE Ice Cream Cone

—Look for This Coupon in bottom of cone—The Lucky Ticket means you get another Cone FREE

YOU GET MORE ICE CREAM IN A CONE

PAR. 3. The wholesale dealers and jobbers and ice cream manufacturers, to whom respondent sells the above described ice cream cones containing printed slips, resell said cones as packed by respondent to retail dealers, and said retail dealers sell and distribute said cones, after placing ice cream therein, to the purchasing public in accordance with the aforesaid sales plan. Respondent thus supplies to and places in the hands of others the means of conducting lotteries in the sale of its product in accordance with the sales plan hereinabove set forth, and said sales plan has the capacity and tendency of inducing purchasers thereof to purchase respondent's said product in preference to ice cream cones offered for sale and sold by its competitors.

PAR. 4. The sale of said ice cream cones to the purchasing public in the manner above found involves a game of chance or the sale of a chance to procure an additional ice cream cone. The use by respondent of said method in the sale of ice cream cones, and the sale of ice cream cones by and through the use thereof and by the aid of said method, is a practice of the sort which the common law and criminal statutes have long deemed contrary to public policy and is contrary to an established public policy of the Government of the United States. The use by respondent of said method has the tendency unduly to hinder competition or to create a monopoly in this, to wit: that the use thereof has the tendency and capacity to exclude from the ice cream cone manufacturing business competitors who do not adopt and use the said method or an equivalent or similar method involving the same or an equivalent or similar element of chance or lottery scheme. Many persons, firms, and corporations who make and sell ice cream cones in competition with respondent are unwilling to offer for sale or sell said ice cream cones with printed slips, as above described, or otherwise arranged and packed for sale to the purchasing public so as to involve a game of chance, and such competitors refrain therefrom.

PAR. 5. Many dealers and ultimate purchasers of ice cream cones are attracted by respondent's said method and manners of inserting printed slips entitling ultimate purchasers to free ice cream cones and by the element of chance involved in the sale thereof in the manner above described, and are thereby induced to purchase said ice cream cones containing said printed slips and sold by respondent in preference to ice cream cones offered for sale and sold by said competitors of respondent who do not use the same or an equivalent method. The use of said method by respondent has the tendency and capacity, because of said game of chance, to divert to respondent trade and custom from its said competitors who do not use the same or an equivalent method; to exclude from said trade all competitors who are unwilling to and who do not use the same or an equivalent method because the same is unlawful; to lessen competition in said trade and to tend to create a monopoly of said trade in respondent and such other distributors of ice cream cones as use the same or an equivalent method; and to deprive the purchasing public of the benefit of free competition in said trade. The use of said method by respondent has the tendency and capacity to eliminate from said trade all actual competitors and to exclude therefrom all potential competitors who do not adopt and use said method or an equivalent method.

PAR. 6. Many of said competitors of respondent are unwilling to adopt and use said method or any method involving a game of chance or the sale of a chance to win something by chance or any other method that is contrary to public policy.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid method, acts and practices of respondent, Illinois Baking Corporation, a corporation under the conditions and circumstances set forth in the foregoing findings of fact, are all to the prejudice of the public and respondent's competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

It is ordered, That the respondent, Illinois Baking Corporation, a corporation, its officers, agents, representatives, and employees, in connection with the offering for sale, sale and distribution in interstate commerce of ice cream cones, do forthwith cease and desist from:

1. Selling and distributing to jobbers and wholesale dealers for resale to retail dealers, or to retail dealers direct, ice cream cones so packed and assembled that sales of such ice cream cones to the general public are to be made, or may be made, by means of a lottery, gaming device, or gift enterprise.

2. Supplying to or placing in the hands of wholesale dealers and jobbers or retail dealers packages or assortments of ice cream cones which are used, or which may be used, without alteration or rearrangement of the contents of such packages or assortments, to conduct a lottery, gaming device, or gift enterprise in the sale or distribution of the ice cream cones in said packages or assortments to the public.

3. Packing or assembling in packages or assortments of ice cream cones, for sale to the public at retail, printed slips which are for use or which may be used, in distributing or selling said ice cream cones to the public at retail.

4. Furnishing to retail and wholesale dealers and jobbers printed slips, either with packages or assortments of ice cream cones or separately a small number of which printed slips bear a legend or legends or statements informing the purchasing public that another ice cream cone will be delivered free of charge or as a prize.

5. Furnishing or supplying to wholesale dealers and jobbers for distribution to retail dealers or to retail dealers direct, display circulars or other advertising material bearing a legend or legends or statements informing the purchasing public that ice cream cones are being sold to the public in accordance with a sales plan which constitutes a lottery, gaming device, or gift enterprise.

It is further ordered, That the respondent, Illinois Baking Corporation, a corporation shall, within 60 days after service upon it of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which it has complied with the order to cease and desist hereinabove set forth.

IN THE MATTER OF
MILKO CONE & BAKING CO., INC.

Docket 3046. Complaint, Feb. 1, 1937—Decision, Sept. 3, 1937

Where a corporation engaged in manufacture, sale, and distribution of ice cream cones, including cones packed and assembled with small printed slips bearing various legends, so as to involve use of a lottery scheme when sold and distributed by retail dealers to consumers thereof, and including legend "Your lucky day. Return this slip where you bought your Milko cone, and get a FREE package of gum," chance recipient of which printed slip, so placed in cones that ultimate consumer could not ascertain whether or not he was entitled to free package of chewing gum until after his purchase had been made and cone partially consumed, became entitled thereby, and in accordance with verses on explanatory display circulars furnished by it free of charge, to such "5¢ package of chewing gum"—

Sold, thus packed, said cones to wholesalers, jobbers, and ice cream manufacturers for use, sale, and distribution by their retail dealer purchasers in accordance with aforesaid sales plan, and thereby supplied to and placed in the hands of others the means of conducting lotteries in the sale of its product in accordance with such sales plan, contrary to public policy long recognized by the common law and criminal statutes and to an established public policy of the United States Government, and in competition with many who, unwilling to offer or sell ice cream cones with printed slips as above described, or otherwise arranged and packed for sale to purchasing public so as to involve game of chance, refrain therefrom, and in competition with many unwilling to adopt and use said or any method involving game of chance to win by chance or any other method contrary to public policy;

With capacity and tendency to induce purchasers to buy its said product in preference to cones offered and sold by its competitors, and with result that many dealers in and ultimate purchasers of ice cream cones were attracted by its said method and manner of inserting in a number thereof printed slips entitling purchasers to free packages of chewing gum, and by element of chance involved in sale thereof as above described, and were thereby induced to buy its said products, containing such printed slips and sold by it, in preference to those offered and sold by said competitors who do not use same or equivalent method, and with tendency and capacity, by reason of said game of chance, to divert to it trade and custom from its said competitors who do not use such or equivalent method, exclude from said trade all competitors who are unwilling to and do not use such method because unlawful, lessen competition therein, and tend to create a monopoly thereof in it and such other distributors of ice cream cones as do use same or equivalent method, deprive purchasing public of benefit of free competition in trade involved, and eliminate therefrom all actual, and exclude therefrom all potential, competitors who do not adopt and use said or equivalent method:

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission having reason to believe that Milko Cone & Baking Co., Inc., a corporation, hereinafter referred to as respondent, has been and is using unfair methods of competition in commerce as "commerce" is defined in said act of Congress, and it appearing to said Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent, Milko Cone & Baking Co., Inc., is a corporation organized and operating under the laws of the State of Illinois, with its principal office and place of business located at 431 North Lincoln Street, Chicago, Ill. Respondent is now, and for several years last past has been engaged in the manufacture of ice cream cones and in the sale and distribution thereof to wholesale dealers, jobbers, and ice cream manufacturers located at points in the State of Illinois and in other States of the United States, and causes and has caused its said products when so sold to be transported from its principal place of business in Chicago, Ill., to purchasers thereof in the State of Illinois and in other States of the United States at their respective places of business; and there is now and has been for several years last past a course of trade and commerce by said respondent in said ice cream cones between and among the States of the United States. In the course and conduct of said business, respondent is in competition with other corporations and with partnerships and individuals engaged in the manufacture of ice cream cones and in the sale and distribution thereof in commerce between and among the various States of the United States.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of its business as described in paragraph 1 hereof, respondent on or about May 1, 1935, began the sale and distribution, and since said date has continued the sale and distribution to wholesale dealers and jobbers and ice cream manufacturers, of ice cream cones packed and assembled with small printed slips therein so as to involve the use of a lottery scheme when sold and distributed by retail dealers to the consumers thereof. Respondent has had printed small slips of papers bearing various legends, and a few of said printed slips bear the following legend, to wit:

Your lucky day

Return this slip where you bought your Milko
cone, and get a FREE package of gum

The ultimate consumer procuring a cone containing one of the above printed slips is entitled to receive, and is to be given free of charge, a package of chewing gum. The printed slips are so placed in the cones that the ultimate consumer cannot ascertain whether or not he is entitled to a free package of chewing gum until after his purchase has been made and the cone partially consumed. The fact as to whether the ultimate purchaser receives a package of chewing gum free of charge is thus determined wholly by lot or chance. Respondent furnishes with cartons of ice cream cones containing the above described printed slips a display circular bearing the following legends, to wit:

PAR. 3. The wholesale dealers and jobbers and ice cream manufacturers to whom respondent sells the above described ice cream cones containing printed slips, resell said cones as packed by respondent to retail dealers, and said retail dealers sell and distribute said cones after placing ice cream therein to the purchasing public in accordance with the aforesaid sales plan. Respondent thus supplies to and places in the hands of others the means of conducting lotteries in the sale of its product in accordance with the sales plan hereinabove set forth, and said sales plan has the capacity and tendency of inducing purchasers thereof to purchase respondent's said product in preference to ice cream cones offered for sale and sold by its competitors.

PAR. 4. The sale of said ice cream cones to the purchasing public in the manner above alleged involves a game of chance or the sale of a chance to procure a package of chewing gum. The use by respondent of said method in the sale of ice cream cones, and the sale of ice cream cones by and through the use thereof and by the aid of said method, is a practice of the sort which the common law and criminal statutes have long deemed contrary to public policy and is contrary to an established public policy of the Government of the United States. The use by respondent of said method has the tendency unduly to hinder competition or to create a monopoly in this, to wit: that the use thereof has the tendency and capacity to exclude from the ice cream cone manufacturing business competitors who do not adopt and use the said method or an equivalent or similar method involving the same or an equivalent or similar element of chance or lottery scheme. Many persons, firms, and corporations who make and sell ice cream cones in competition with respondent, as above alleged are unwilling to offer for sale or sell said ice cream cones with printed slips as above alleged, or otherwise arranged and packed for sale to the purchasing public so as to involve a game of chance, and such competitors refrain therefrom.

PAR. 5. Many dealers and ultimate purchasers of ice cream cones are attracted by respondent's said method and manner of inserting printed slips entitling ultimate purchasers to free packages of chewing gum and by the element of chance involved in the sale thereof in the manner above described, and are thereby induced to purchase said ice cream cones containing said printed slips and sold by respondent in preference to ice cream cones offered for sale and sold by said competitors of respondent who do not use the same or equivalent methods. The use of said method by respondent has the tendency and capacity because of said game of chance, to divert to respondent trade and custom from its said competitors who do not use the same or an equivalent method; to exclude from said trade all competitors who are unwilling to and who do not use the same or an equivalent method because the same is unlawful; to lessen competition in said trade and to tend to create a monopoly of said trade in respondent and such other distributors of ice cream cones as use the same or an equivalent method; and to deprive the purchasing public of the benefit of free competition in said trade. The use of said method by respondent has the tendency and capacity to eliminate from said trade all actual competitors and to exclude therefrom all potential competitors who do not adopt and use said method or an equivalent method.

PAR. 6. Many of said competitors of respondent are unwilling to adopt and use said method or any method involving a game of chance or the sale of a chance to win something by chance or any other method that is contrary to public policy.

PAR. 7. The aforementioned method, acts and practices of the respondent are all to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors as hereinabove alleged. Said method, acts, and practices constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914.

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, on February 1, 1937, issued and on February 4, 1937, served its complaint in this proceeding upon the respondent, Milko Cone & Baking Co., Inc., a corporation, charging it with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of the provisions of said act. After the issuance of said complaint and the filing of respondent's answer thereto, the Commission, by order entered herein on August 9, 1937, granted respondent's request for permission to withdraw said answer and to file in lieu thereof its substitute answer dated July 9, 1937, admitting all the material allegations of the complaint to be true and waiving the taking of further evidence and all other intervening procedure, which substitute answer was duly filed in the office of the Commission. Thereafter, this proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on the said complaint and the substitute answer; and the Commission, having duly considered the matter and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent, Milko Cone & Baking Co., Inc., is a corporation organized and operating under the laws of the State of Illinois, with its principal office and place of business located at 431 North Lincoln Street, Chicago, Ill. Respondent is now, and for several years last past has been, engaged in the manufacture of ice cream cones and in the sale and distribution thereof to wholesale dealers, jobbers, and ice cream manufacturers located at points in the State of Illinois and in other States of the United States, and causes and has caused its said products, when so sold, to be transported from its principal place of business in Chicago, Ill., to purchasers thereof in the State of Illinois and in other States of the United States at their respective places of business; and there is now, and has been for several years last past, a course of trade and commerce by said respondent in said ice cream cones between and among the States of the United States. In the course and conduct of said business, respondent is in competition with other corporations and with partnerships and individuals engaged in the manufacture of ice cream cones and in the sale and distribution thereof in commerce between and among the various States of the United States.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of its business, as described in paragraph 1 hereof, respondent, on or about May 1, 1935, began the sale and distribution, and since said date has continued the sale and distribution to wholesale dealers and jobbers and ice cream manufacturers, of ice cream cones packed and assembled with small printed slips therein so as to involve the use of a lottery scheme when sold and distributed by retail dealers to the consumers thereof. Respondent has had printed small slips of paper bearing various legends, and a few of said printed slips bear the following legend, to wit:

Your lucky day
Return this slip where you bought your Milko
cone, and get a FREE package of gum

The ultimate consumer procuring a cone containing one of the above printed slips is entitled to receive, and is to be given free of charge, a package of chewing gum. The printed slips are so placed in the cones that the ultimate consumer cannot ascertain whether or not he is entitled to a free package of chewing gum until after his purchase has been made and the cone partially consumed. The fact as to whether the ultimate purchaser receives a package of chewing gum free of charge is thus determined wholly by lot or chance. Respondent furnishes with cartons of ice cream cones containing the above described printed slips a display circular bearing the following legends, to wit: .

Your FORTUNE told with ice cream cold
5¢
Look for a lucky ticket
Get your prize if you pick it!
A FREE 5¢ package of chewing gum for the lucky ticket
Milko SUR-PRIZE ice cream cone

to and places in the hands of others the means of conducting lotteries in the sale of its products in accordance with the sales plan hereinabove set forth, and said sales plan has the capacity and tendency of inducing purchasers thereof to purchase respondent's said product in preference to ice cream cones offered for sale and sold by its competitors.

PAR. 4. The sale of said ice cream cones to the purchasing public in the manner above found involves a game of chance or the sale of a chance to procure a package of chewing gum. The use by respondent of said method in the sale of ice cream cones, and the sale of ice cream cones by and through the use thereof and by the aid of said method, is a practice of the sort which the common law and criminal statutes have long deemed contrary to public policy and is contrary to an established public policy of the Government of the United States. The use by respondent of said method has the tendency unduly to hinder competition or to create a monopoly in this, to wit: that the use thereof has the tendency and capacity to exclude from the ice cream cone manufacturing business competitors who do not adopt and use the said method or an equivalent or similar method involving the same or an equivalent or similar element of chance or lottery scheme. Many persons, firms, and corporations who make and sell ice cream cones in competition with respondent are unwilling to offer for sale or sell said ice cream cones with printed slips as above described, or otherwise arranged and packed for sale to the purchasing public so as to involve a game of chance, and such competitors refrain therefrom.

PAR. 5. Many dealers and ultimate purchasers of ice cream cones are attracted by respondent's said method and manner of inserting printed slips entitling ultimate purchasers to free package of chewing gum and by the element of chance involved in the sale thereof in the manner above described, and are thereby induced to purchase said ice cream cones containing said printed slips and sold by respondent in preference to ice cream cones offered for sale and sold by said competitors of respondent who do not use the same or an equivalent method. The use of said method by respondent has the tendency and capacity, because of said game of chance, to divert to respondent trade and custom from its said competitors who do not use the same or an equivalent method; to exclude from said trade all competitors who are unwilling to and who do not use the same or an equivalent method because the same is unlawful; to lessen competition in said trade and to tend to create a monopoly of said trade in respondent and such other distributors of ice cream cones as use the same or an equivalent method; and to deprive the purchasing public of the benefit of free competition in said trade. The use of said method by respondent has the tendency and capacity to eliminate from said trade all actual competitors and to exclude therefrom all potential competitors who do not adopt and use said method or an equivalent method.

PAR. 6. Many of said competitors of respondent are unwilling to adopt and use said method or any method involving a game of chance or the sale of a chance to win something by chance or any other method that is contrary to public policy.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid method, acts and practices of respondent, Milko Cone & Baking Co., Inc., a corporation, under the conditions and circumstances set forth in the foregoing findings of fact, are all to the prejudice of the public and respondent's competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

This proceeding having been heard by the Federal Trade Commission upon the complaint of the Commission and the substitute answer dated July 9, 1937, filed herein by the respondent admitting all the material allegations of the complaint to be true and waiving the taking of further evidence and all other intervening procedure, and the Commission having made its findings as to the facts and its conclusion that said respondent has violated the provisions of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes",

It is ordered, that the respondent, Milko Cone & Baking Co., Inc., a corporation, its officers, agents, representatives, and employees, in connection with the offering for sale, sale, and distribution in interstate commerce of ice cream cones, do forthwith cease and desist from:

1. Selling and distributing to jobbers and wholesale dealers for resale to retail dealers, or to retail dealers direct, ice cream cones so packed and assembled that sales of such ice cream cones to the general public are to be made, or may be made, by mean of a lottery, gaming device, or gift enterprise.

2. Supplying to or placing in the hands of wholesale dealers and jobbers or retail dealers packages or assortments of ice cream cones which are used, or which may be used, without alteration or re-arrangement of the contents of such packages or assortments, to conduct a lottery, gaming device, or gift enterprise in the sale or distribution of the ice cream cones in said packages or assortments to the public.

3. Packing or assembling in packages or assortments of ice cream cones, for sale to the public at retail, printed slips which are for use, or which may be used, in distributing or selling said ice cream cones to the public at retail.

4. Furnishing to retail and wholesale dealers and jobbers printed slips, either with packages or assortments of ice cream cones or separately, a small number of which printed slips bear a legend or legends or statements informing the purchasing public that a 5¢ package of chewing gum will be delivered free of charge or as a prize.

5. Furnishing or supplying to wholesale dealers and jobbers, for distribution to retail dealers or to retail dealers direct, display circulars or other advertising material bearing a legend or legends or statements informing the purchasing public that the ice cream cones are being sold to the public in accordance with a sales plan which constitutes a lottery, gaming device, or gift enterprise.

It is further ordered, That the respondent, Milko Cone & Baking Co., Inc., a corporation, shall, within 60 days after service upon it of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which it has complied with the order to cease and desist hereinabove set forth.

IN THE MATTER OF
WOLF DRUG COMPANY ET AL.

COMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION
OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT, 26, 1914

Docket 3124. Complaint, May 6, 1937—Decision, Sept. 3, 1937

Where four corporations engaged in sale, distribution, and transportation of products of a purported medicinal character, into and through the various States and the District of Columbia, under direction and control of certain individuals, owners of all, or virtually all, of their capital stock, and said individuals, in substantial competition with others engaged in sale, distribution, and transportation, as aforesaid, of medicinal products sold and intended for sale and use for same purposes for which said products of said corporations and individuals were sold and intended for sale and use, and including among their competitors those engaged in manufacture, sale, and distribution in commerce, as above set forth, of commodities represented as effective remedies or cures for similar diseases, but who do not falsely represent the curative value thereof or falsely represent that they maintain an "institute," laboratories or other establishments at Battle Creek, Mich., or at any other place, or that the commodities to be purchased from them have been prepared and manufactured according to a prescription of an accredited physician or physicians, or tested by accredited chemists—

- (a) Caused trade name "Health Institute, Battle Creek, Michigan," to be prominently and conspicuously displayed and featured, together with various statements describing their aforesaid products, in newspaper advertisements, advertising folders, pamphlets, circulars, letters, and other literature, circulated through the several States and aforesaid District to customers and prospective customers, and through radio broadcasts into other States, notwithstanding fact they maintained no laboratories or clinics at aforesaid city or at any other place, had in their employ no chemists or others trained in the conduct of analyses, and neither undertook nor carried on any researches, experiments, or analyses, and, other than maintenance or a mailing address for reception and forwarding of mail to their various places of business, had no connection with aforesaid city, but adopted aforesaid term to capitalize upon the particular significance associated by medical profession and general public with name "Battle Creek" as standing for locality associated with efficient, reliable, and successful conduct of institutions, asylums, sanitoriums, and hospitals;
- (b) Represented, as aforesaid, through use of such words as "W. J. Jones, M. D.," or "Dr. Kenyon," in connection with commodities offered and sold by them, that commodities in question were made according to formula, or under the supervision, of a doctor of medicine, notwithstanding facts none of such commodities, as sold or offered by them, were or had been prepared according to any formula discovered or prescribed by any such doctor, there was no accredited physician bearing such name or names connected with them in any capacity, and commodities thus sold were not prepared according to prescription or formula of any physician or physicians; and

- (c) Represented that one of their said preparations, offered under designation "Bio-Tabs," was a cure or remedy for obesity, through such statements as "Take Bio-Tabs after meals for one month. W. J. Jones, M. D.," "For years doctors have been prescribing it (Bio-Tabs) for over-weight patients with astonishing results," "Many cases have been reported in which patients have lost from 10 to 20 lbs. a month," "* * * now on the market only after a long process of painstaking research, checking and rechecking," etc., notwithstanding fact preparation in question was not an effective cure and remedy for aforesaid condition;

With tendency and capacity to mislead and deceive substantial portion of purchasing public into false belief that statements made as aforesaid were true, and with result that a number of such members purchased substantial quantities of the commodities thus advertised and sold by them, believing in truth of such representations, and trade was unfairly diverted to them from competitors engaged, as aforesaid, in sale and distribution of products designed, intended, and sold for cure, relief, and treatment of the said various diseases, afflictions, and ailments, and who do not falsely represent the effectiveness of the commodities vended by them; to the substantial injury of competitors in commerce:

Held, That such acts and practices were to the prejudice of the public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition.

Mr. Alden S. Bradley for the Commission.

Jacobi & Jacobi, of Washington, D. C., for respondents, along with Sevrin & Goldstein, of Newark, N. J., for respondent William Goldstein.

COMPLAINT

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondents herein named are Wolf Drug Company, Henry Wolf Wholesale Druggist, Inc., each of which is a corporation existing and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of New Jersey and having their principal office and place of business at 683 Broad Street, Newark, N. J.; Charmley

25 F. T. C.

Drug Shop, a corporation existing and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of New Jersey and having its principal office and place of business at 164 Halsey Street, Newark, N. J.; William Wolf Sales Company, Inc., a corporation existing and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of New York and having its principal office and place of business at 27 Park Place, New York, N. Y.; Henry Wolf, an individual, having his principal office and place of business at 683 Broad Street, Newark, N. J.; William Wolf, William Goldstein, and David Cohen, individuals, having their principal office and place of business at 164 Halsey Street, Newark, N. J.

The individuals Henry Wolf, William Wolf, William Goldstein, and David Cohen own all, or virtually all, of the capital stock of the several corporations named herein and during the entire existence of such corporations have directed and dictated the sales policies and business activities of the same.

The corporate respondents are now and for more than two years last past have been engaged under their own names and under various trade names in the sale, distribution and transportation into and through the various States of the United States and the District of Columbia of certain medicinal products.

There is now, and has been for such period, a constant current of trade and commerce in said products so sold, distributed, and transported by the respondents and each of them between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of their business respondents are now and have been in substantial competition with other individuals, firms, copartnerships, and corporations likewise engaged in the business of selling and distributing medicinal products intended and sold for the same purposes for which respondents' products are sold in commerce among and between the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 3. As a part of the general advertising and sales promotion plans of respondents they have caused to be registered with the United States Patent Office a trade name, to wit, "Health Institute, Battle Creek, Michigan" and have thus represented that they conduct a place of business in the city of Battle Creek, Mich.

In the course and conduct of their business respondents for the purpose of inducing the purchase of the commodities offered for sale by them have printed and circulated throughout the several States to customers and prospective customers through the United States mails and otherwise by newspaper advertisements, advertising folders, pamphlets, circulars, letters, and other literature and have made use of radio broadcasts over stations with sufficient power to convey programs emanating therefrom into the various States of the United States to advertise the products sold by them; in all of which advertisements respondents have caused the trade name "Health Institute, Battle Creek, Michigan" to be prominently and conspicuously displayed, together with the following statements or statements similar thereto:

Take Bio-Tabs after meals for one month. W. J. Jones, M. D.

For years doctors have been prescribing it (Bio-Tabs) for overweight patients with astonishing results.

Many cases have been reported in which patients have lost from 10 to 20 lbs. a month.

Bio-Tabs now on the market only after a long process of painstaking research, checking and rechecking.

Chemists' analysis shows Bio-Tabs are absolutely free from drugs ordinarily used in reducing preparations.

Bio-Tabs were tested and analyzed in long careful laboratory research by the Health Institute at Battle Creek, Michigan.

Dr. Kenyon's Malt Extract with Cod Liver Oil—This preparation is very beneficial in the treatment of certain types of malnutrition, valuable as an aid to increase the appetite and the digestion of starches in certain types of dyspepsia.

Dr. Kenyon's Ephedrine Cough Syrup—A valuable remedy for the relief of coughs due to colds and minor throat irritations.

Dr. Kenyon's Magnesia and Oil—as an antacid: as a laxative: as an intestinal lubricant.

PAR. 4. Among the commodities so advertised and sold are those known as "Bio-Tabs" which are represented by respondents to be an effective cure and remedy for obesity.

In truth and in fact the said commodity is not an effective remedy or cure for obesity.

PAR. 5. Respondents likewise in their advertising, as aforesaid, represent one "W. J. Jones, M. D." to be the originator or author of the formula with which "Bio-Tabs" are made. Among the commodities likewise so advertised, as aforesaid, are various commodities vended under the brand name "Dr. Kenyon's" represented by the respondents as being effective in the cure and treatment of variously named diseases or disorders, among which are run-down bodily conditions, malnutrition, constipation, low vitality, and others.

In truth and in fact none of such commodities so sold or offered for sale by the respondents are prepared or have been prepared according to any formula discovered or prescribed by any "Dr. Kenyon" or any "W. J. Jones, M. D." nor is there any accredited physician bearing such name or names connected with respondents in any capacity. The commodities so sold are not prepared according to the prescription or formula of any physician or physicians.

PAR. 6. By the use of the trade name "Health Institute, Battle Creek, Michigan" respondents represent themselves to be "an institute." No clinic, research work, experiments or analyses are maintained or carried on by the respondents or any of them. They do not have any laboratories wherein research work, experiments, or analyses are conducted. There are no chemists or other persons trained in the conduct of analyses employed by respondents or any of them. No analyses, experiments, or researches are undertaken or carried out by the respondents.

PAR. 7. The name "Battle Creek" has a particular significance to the medical profession and to the general public as well, referring as it does to a locality where are conducted institutes, asylums, sanatoriums, and hospitals believed by the general public to be thoroughly efficient, reliable and successful and the respondents adopted the term "Health Institute, Battle Creek, Michigan" for the purpose of capitalizing upon such reputation.

No establishment is maintained by the respondents in or about the city of Battle Creek, Mich., where clinics, research work, experiments, or analyses are conducted by chemists or other trained and skilled persons. In fact respondents merely have a mailing address in such city and all mail received at such address is forwarded to respondents at their afore-named place of business.

PAR. 8. There are among the competitors of the respondents various other individuals, copartnerships, and corporations likewise engaged in the manufacture, sale and distribution in commerce as herein described of commodities represented to be effective remedies or cures for similar diseases for which such commodities are sold, but who do not falsely represent the curative value of the same, and who do not falsely represent that they maintain an "Institute," laboratories or other establishments at Battle Creek, Mich., or at any other place and who do not falsely represent that the commodities to be purchased from them have been prepared and manufactured according to a prescription of an accredited physician or physicians or tested by accredited chemists.

PAR. 9. Each and all of the false and misleading statements and representations made by the respondents designating or describing the effectiveness of said products for curing, treating, or relieving the diseases, ailments, afflictions, and conditions of the human body herein named, in offering for sale and selling their said commodities were, and are, calculated to, had and now have, a tendency and capacity to mislead and deceive a substantial portion of the purchasing public into the erroneous belief that all of said representations are true and that said products will in truth accomplish the results claimed. Further, as a direct consequence of the mistaken and erroneous belief induced by the acts and representations of the respondents, as hereinabove detailed, a number of the consuming public have purchased a substantial volume of respondents' commodities with the result that trade has been unfairly diverted to the respondents from competitors likewise engaged in the business of distributing and selling similar products or other products designed, intended, and sold for use in the cure, relief or treatment of the various diseases, ailments, afflictions, and conditions named herein and who truthfully represent the effectiveness of their respective commodities. As a result thereof injury has been done and is now being done by respondents to competition in commerce among and between the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 10. The above methods, acts, practices, and representations of the respondents have been and are all to the prejudice of the public and respondents' competitors, as aforesaid, and have been and are unfair methods of competition within the meaning and intent of Section 5 of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, on the 6th day of May 1937, issued and served its complaint in this proceeding upon respondents Wolf Drug Company, Henry Wolf Wholesale Druggist, Inc., Charmley Drug Shop, William Wolf Sales Company, Inc., corporations, and Henry Wolf, William Wolf, and William Goldstein, individuals, charging them with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of the provisions of said act. One David Cohen was likewise named respondent in the complaint but service thereof was not effected upon him. On June 2, 1937, the respondent William Goldstein filed in his own behalf an answer admitting in part and denying in part the material allegations of the complaint. Thereafter, the respondent, William Goldstein, filed with the Commission a motion for leave to withdraw such separate answer. Annexed to such motion was a joint answer tendered on behalf of each of the respondents except David Cohen. This motion was granted. The answer so tendered was filed. It admitted all of the material allegations of the complaint to be true, waived hearing on the charges set forth therein and stated that, without further evidence or intervening procedure, the Commission might issue and serve upon them findings as to the facts and conclusion drawn therefrom and an order to cease and desist from the violations of law charged in the complaint. Thereafter, the proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on the said complaint and the answer thereto, and the Commission having duly considered the same, and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public, and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. Wolf Drug Company and Henry Wolf Wholesale Druggist, Inc., are corporations existing and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of New Jersey, having their principal offices and places of business at 683 Broad Street, Newark, N. J. Charmley Drug Shop is a corporation existing under the laws of the State of New Jersey, having its principal office and place of business at 164 Halsey Street, Newark, N. J. William Wolf Sales Company, Inc., is a corporation existing under the laws of the State of New York and having its principal office and place of business at 27 Park Place, New York, N. Y. Henry Wolf is an individual having his principal office and place of business at 683 Broad Street, Newark, N. J. William Wolf and William Goldstein are each individuals having their principal offices and places of business at 164 Halsey Street, Newark, N. J. The individual respondents last above named own all, or virtually all of the capital stock of the several respondent corporations herein named and have during the entire existence of such corporations directed and controlled their sales policies and business activities.

The corporate respondents in their own names and under various trade names now are, and for more than two years last past have been, engaged in the, sale, distribution, and transportation under the direction and control of the individual respondents aforesaid of products of a purported medicinal character into and through the various States of the United States and the District of Columbia and have maintained throughout such period a constant current of trade and commerce in such products among and between the various States of the United States and the District of Columbia.

PAR. 2. The respondents now are, and have been during the entire period mentioned herein, in substantial competition with other individuals, firms, and corporations engaged in the business of selling, distributing, and transporting into and through the various States of the United States and the District of Columbia medicinal products sold and intended to be sold and used for the said purposes for which respondents' products are sold and intended to be sold and used.

PAR. 3. Respondents have, for the purpose of effecting the sale of the commodities above described, printed and circulated or caused to be printed and circulated throughout the several States of the United States and in the District of Columbia to customers and prospective customers through the United States mails, and otherwise, newspaper advertisements, advertising folders, pamphlets, circulars, letters, and other literature, and have caused to be conducted radio broadcasts over stations with sufficient power to convey the programs emanating therefrom into the various States of the United States. In all of said advertisements and broadcasts respondents have caused the trade name "Health Institute, Battle Creek, Michigan," to be prominently and conspicuously displayed and featured, together with the following statement or statements similar thereto:

Take Bio-Tabs after meals for one month. W. J. Jones, M. D.

For years doctors have been prescribing it (Bio-Tabs) for overweight patients with astonishing results.

Many cases have been reported in which patients have lost from 10 to 20 lbs. a month.

Bio-Tabs now on the market only after a long process of painstaking research, checking and rechecking.

Chemists' analysis shows Bio-Tabs are absolutely free from drugs ordinarily used in reducing preparations.

Bio-Tabs were tested and analyzed in long careful laboratory research by the Health Institute at Battle Creek, Michigan.

Dr. Kenyon's Malt Extract with Cod Liver Oil—This preparation is very beneficial in the treatment of certain types of malnutrition, valuable as an aid to increase the appetite and the digestion of starches in certain types of dyspepsia.

Dr. Kenyon's Ephedrine Cough Syrup—A valuable remedy for the relief of coughs due to colds and minor throat irritations.

Dr. Kenyon's Magnesia and Oil—as an antacid: as a laxative: as an intestinal lubricant:

PAR. 4. In using the trade name, "Health Institute, Battle Creek, Michigan," respondents represent and imply that they maintain an institute where clinical research work, experiments and analyses are maintained and carried on at Battle Creek, Mich. Respondents do not maintain any laboratories or clinics at Battle Creek, Mich., or at any other place. There are no chemists or other persons who are trained in the conduct of analyses employed by the respondents nor are any researches, experiments, or analyses undertaken or carried on by them.

PAR. 5. Both the medical profession and the general public have attributed to the name "Battle Creek" a particular significance, referring as it does to a locality where are conducted institutions, asylums, sanatoriums, and hospitals generally believed to be efficient, reliable, and successful, and the respondents adopted the term "Health Institute, Battle Creek, Michigan," for the purpose of capitalizing upon such representation. The sole connection which respondents have with the city of Battle Creek, Mich., is the maintenance of a mailing address where mail is received and forwarded to their various places of business.

PAR. 6. The product known as "Bio-Tabs" is represented by respondent to be an effective cure and remedy for obesity when in truth and in fact it is not.

PAR. 7. Respondents likewise in their advertising, as aforesaid, represent one "W. J. Jones, M. D." to be the originator or author of the formula with which "Bio-Tabs" are made. Among the commodities likewise so advertised, as aforesaid, are various commodities vended under the brand name "Dr. Kenyon's" represented by the respondents as being effective in the cure and treatment of variously named diseases or disorders.

None of such commodities so sold or offered for sale by the respondents are prepared or have been prepared according to any formula discovered or prescribed by any "Dr. Kenyon" or any "W. J. Jones, M. D." There is no accredited physician bearing such name or names connected with respondents in any capacity. The commodities so sold are not prepared according to the prescription or formula of any physician or physicians.

PAR. 8. There are among the competitors of the respondents various other individuals, copartnerships, and corporations likewise engaged in the manufacture, sale, and distribution in commerce as herein described of commodities represented to be effective remedies or cures for similar diseases for which such commodities are sold, but who do not falsely represent the curative value of the same, and who do not falsely represent that they maintain an "Institute," laboratories or other establishments at Battle Creek, Mich., or at any other place and who do not falsely represent that the commodities to be purchased from them have been prepared and manufactured according to a prescription of an accredited physician or physicians or tested by accredited chemists.

Order

PAR. 9. The circulation of the false and misleading statements and representations made by the respondents as herein set forth, in connection with the sale and offering for sale of their aforementioned products, were and are calculated to have and have had a tendency and capacity to mislead and deceive a substantial portion of the purchasing public into the false belief that the statements so made are true. A number of the members of the purchasing public have, believing such representations to be true, purchased substantial quantities of the commodities so advertised and sold by the respondents with the result that trade has been unfairly diverted to respondents from competitors as above described engaged in the sale and distribution of products designed, intended, and sold for the cure, relief, and treatment of the various diseases, afflictions, and ailments, and who do not falsely represent the effectiveness of the commodities vended by them. As a result thereof, substantial injury has been done, and is now being done, by respondents to competitors in commerce among and between the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondents, Wolf Drug Company, Henry Wolf Wholesale Druggist, Inc., Charmley Drug Shop, William Wolf Sales Company, Inc., corporations and Henry Wolf, William Wolf and William Goldstein, individuals, have been and are all to the prejudice of the public and of respondents' competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

This proceeding having been heard by the Federal Trade Commission upon the complaint of the Commission and the answer filed herein by respondents Wolf Drug Company, Henry Wolf Wholesale Druggist, Inc., Charmley Drug Shop, William Wolf Sales Company, Inc., corporations, and Henry Wolf, William Wolf and William Goldstein, individuals, admitting all the material allegations of the complaint to be true and waiving the taking of further evidence and all other intervening procedure, and the Commission having made its findings as to the facts and conclusion that said respondents have violated the provisions of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled, "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

Now therefore it is ordered, That the respondents Wolf Drug Company, Henry Wolf Wholesale Druggist, Inc., Charmley Drug Shop, William Wolf Sales Company, Inc., corporations, their officers, representatives, agents, and employees, and Henry Wolf, William Wolf, and William Goldstein, their agents, servants and employees in connection with the sale and offering for sale of products of a purported medicinal character in interstate commerce and in the District of Columbia forthwith cease and desist from representing, directly or by implication:

1. Through the use of the words "Health Institute, Battle Creek, Michigan," or "Health Institute" or "Battle Creek, Michigan," that they own or operate a health institute at Battle Creek, Mich., or at any other place until and unless they do so actually own and operate the same;

2. Through the use of the words "W. J. Jones, M. D.," "Dr. Kenyon," or any other name preceded by the title "Dr." or suffixed by the initials "M. D." that said commodities manufactured and sold by them were manufactured according to a formula of, or under the supervision of, a doctor of medicine or any other person skilled in the practice of medicine until and unless such products are so manufactured;

3. That a preparation now known as "Bio-Tabs" or any other preparation having substantially the same ingredients or the same effect sold under that name or any other name is a cure or remedy for obesity or that it will reduce excess fat.

It is further ordered, That the said respondents shall within 60 days after service upon them of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which they have complied with the order.

It is further ordered, That the complaint be, and the same hereby is, dismissed as to the respondent David Cohen individually because of the lack of service of complaint upon said individual respondent, but is not dismissed as to him as an officer, representative or agent of the corporate respondents.

Docket 3153. Complaint, June 15, 1937—Decision, Sept. 4, 1937

Where a corporation engaged in manufacture of garments, including ladies' dresses, and in sale and distribution thereof in commerce among the various States and in the District of Columbia, in substantial competition with others similarly engaged—

Made use of terms "Silk Jersey," "Satin Jersey," and "Silk Jersanese," in describing certain dresses offered and sold by it in advertising and circular matter furnished and distributed to its various customers and prospective customers, notwithstanding fact dresses thus advertised and represented by it were not, in fact, made from material composed of silk, product of the cocoon of the silk worm, as understood from terms aforesaid by trade and purchasing public;

With effect of misleading and deceiving purchasers, and of causing them erroneously to believe that its said dresses were made from materials composed of silk, product of cocoon of silk worm, and, because of said erroneous belief, to purchase same, thereby unfairly diverting substantial trade in said commerce to it from its competitors who truthfully represent their products; to their injury and that of public:

Held, That such acts and practices were to the prejudice of the public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition.

Mr. William L. Pencke for the Commission.

Watterson & Whynman, of New York City, for respondent.

COMPLAINT

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent, Mutual Rosenbloom Corporation, is a corporation organized, existing, and doing business under the laws of the State of New York, with its principal office and place of business at 498 Seventh Avenue, in the city of New York, State of New York. Said respondent is now, and for a number of years last past has been, engaged in manufacturing garments including ladies' dresses, and in the sale and distribution thereof in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and the District of Columbia. It causes said products, when sold, to be shipped from its place of business in the State of New York to purchasers thereof located in a State or States of the United States other than the State of New York.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid, respondent is now, and for a number of years last past has been, in substantial competition with other corporations, individuals, partnerships, and firms engaged in the sale and shipment of similar products in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and the District of Columbia.

PAR. 3. In the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid, the respondent, in connection with the sale and distribution of its said products, furnishes and distributes to its various customers and prospective customers located in the various States of the United States and the District of Columbia, advertising and circular matter wherein certain dresses offered for sale and sold by the said respondent were and are described variously as "Silk Jersey" or "Satin Jersey." Many of its said customers located in States other than the State of New York have mailed in to its office orders for "Satin Jersey," "Silk Jersey," and "Silk Jersanese" dresses. Such orders were, and are, being filled by said respondent with dresses advertised and sold by it. An example of the circulars being distributed by the respondent as aforesaid contains among other advertising matter the following:

Mutual-Rosenbloom's Sculptured Jersanese Frock

Smart New Yorkers Have Gone Wild About It. Harper's Bazaar and Vogue both stress this new sculptural quality. The Grecian moulded lines that show every curve of the figure beneath. And it is unquestionably one of the most important fashion trends in seasons. Noteworthy, too, because it's in supple black silk Jersey—favored fabric of the great Alix. You can't do better than to adopt this dress at once. In sizes 10 to 18.

PAR. 4. In truth and in fact, said statements and representations made by said respondent, as described in paragraph 3, are false and misleading in that the said material from which said dresses are manufactured is not composed of silk, the product of the cocoon of the silkworm, but is composed of material other than silk. The said customers of said respondent were and are being led to believe by the respondent that they had been and are receiving merchandise manufactured of silk in accordance with the specifications of their said orders, when in fact the merchandise they received was manufactured from material other than silk.

PAR. 5. The said representations and practices as described hereinabove have the capacity and tendency to, and do, mislead and deceive the purchasing public into the erroneous beliefs that the dresses manufactured by respondent and described by it as herein set forth are manufactured of silk, and that when they order dresses from the respondent specifying that said dresses be manufactured of silk jersey they receive dresses so manufactured, and are led into the purchase of respondent's dresses on account of such erroneous beliefs induced as aforesaid. As a result of the aforesaid false and misleading statements, representations and practices by the respondent with respect to its product, trade has been unfairly diverted to it from its said competitors who do not falsely represent the quality of their respective products and whose ability to compete successfully with respondent has been, and is, lessened. Injury has been done by respondent to substantial competition in commerce among and between the several States of the United States.

PAR. 6. The above acts and things done, or caused to be done, by the respondent, were and are each and all to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in interstate commerce within the meaning and intent of Section 5 of "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914.

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

plaint. Thereafter, the proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on the said complaint and the answer thereto, and the Commission having duly considered the same, and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public, and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent, Mutual Rosenbloom Corporation, is a corporation organized, existing, and doing business under the laws of the State of New York, with its principal office and place of business at 498 Seventh Avenue, in the city of New York, State of New York. Said respondent is now, and for a number of years last past has been, engaged in manufacturing garments, including ladies' dresses, and in the sale and distribution thereof in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and the District of Columbia. It causes said products, when sold, to be shipped from its place of business in the State of New York to purchasers thereof located in a State or States of the United States other than the State of New York.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid, respondent is now, and for a number of years last past has been, in substantial competition with other corporations, individuals, partnerships, and firms engaged in the sale and shipment of similar products in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and the District of Columbia.

PAR. 3. In the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid, the respondent, in connection with the sale and distribution of its said products, furnishes and distributes to its various customers and prospective customers located in the various States of the United States and the District of Columbia, advertising and circular matter wherein certain dresses offered for sale and sold by the said respondent were and are described variously as "Silk Jersey" or "Satin Jersey." Many of its said customers located in States other than the State of New York have mailed in to its office orders for "Satin Jersey," "Silk Jersey," and "Silk Jersanese" dresses. One of the circulars distributed by the respondent contains, among others, the following statement:

Mutual-Rosenbloom's Sculptured Jersanese Frock.

Smart New Yorkers Have Gone Wild About It. Harper's Bazaar and Vogue both stress this new sculptural quality. The Grecian moulded lines that show every curve of the figure beneath. And it is unquestionably one of the most important fashion trends in seasons. Noteworthy, too, because it's in supple black silk jersey—favored fabric of the great Alix. You can't do better than to adopt this dress at once. In sizes 10 to 18.

PAR. 4. The terms "Satin Jersey," "Silk Jersey," and "Silk Jersanese" are understood by the trade and purchasing public to mean and describe a material made from silk, the product of the cocoon of the silk worm, and respondent's use of these terms as above set out caused its customers to believe that the dresses advertised were made from materials composed of silk, the product of the cocoon of the silk worm.

The dresses so advertised and represented by the respondent were in fact not made from a material composed of silk, the product of the cocoon of the silk worm, but are made from a material other than silk. Orders received by the respondent for "Satin Jersey," "Silk Jersey," and "Silk Jersanese" were and are being filled with dresses which are not made from materials composed of silk, the product of the cocoon of the silk worm.

Respondent discontinued the practice of describing dresses not made from materials composed of silk, the product of the cocoon of the silk worm, as "Satin Jersey," "Silk Jersey," and "Silk Jersanese," prior to the issuance of complaint herein.

PAR. 5. The acts and practices of the respondent as hereinabove set out had the capacity and tendency to, and did, mislead and deceive purchasers, and to cause them erroneously to believe that respondent's said dresses are made from materials composed of silk, the product of the cocoon of the silk worm, and, because of said erroneous belief, to purchase respondent's said dresses, thereby unfairly diverting substantial trade in said commerce to the respondent from its competitors, who truthfully represent their products, to the injury of its competitors and the public.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondent, Mutual Rosenbloom Corporation, are to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce, within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

This proceeding having been heard by the Federal Trade Commission upon the complaint of the Commission and the answer filed herein on July 12, 1937, by respondent admitting all the material allegations of the complaint to be true and waiving the taking of further evidence and all other intervening procedure, and the Commission having made its findings as to the facts and its conclusion that said respondent has violated the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

It is ordered, That the respondent, Mutual Rosenbloom Corporation, its officers, representatives, agents, and employees, in connection with the offering for sale, sale, and distribution of dresses and garments in interstate commerce or in the District of Columbia, do forthwith cease and desist:

Using the terms "Silk Jersey," "Satin Jersey," or "Silk Jersanese," or the word "Silk" alone or in connection with any other word or words, to designate and describe dresses and garments made from a material not composed entirely of silk, the product of the cocoon of the silk worm.

It is further ordered, That the respondent shall within 60 days after service upon it of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which it has complied with this order.

Docket 3186. Complaint, July 24, 1937—Decision, Sept. 4, 1937

Where a membership non-profit corporation, members of which were engaged in manufacture of covered buttons, buckles, and novelties for use in manufacture of wearing apparel, and in sale thereof to dress manufacturers and those engaged in kindred industries, making and selling approximately ninety percent of all such products made in the United States, and, prior to acts and things hereinbelow set forth, in competition as to price with one another in sale of said products between and among the various States and territories and the District of Columbia; and the officers, directors, and members of aforesaid corporation, for the purpose of eliminating price competition among themselves—

Entered into and carried out an agreement, combination, understanding and conspiracy among themselves to fix and maintain, and did fix and maintain thereby, uniform minimum prices for the sale of covered buttons, buckles, and novelties and maximum discounts to be allowed by said members to their purchasers of said products, and prices thereof entering into interstate commerce; and pursuant to and for the purpose of carrying out aforesaid agreement, combination, understandings, and conspiracy—

- (a) Fixed and maintained, by agreement among themselves, (1) uniform minimum prices for sale of said products sold by them and each of them, and (2) uniform maximum discounts for said products thus sold;
- (b) Inserted in a trade paper of wide circulation among those engaged in dress manufacturing and kindred industries a "notice" to such manufacturers and industries to the effect that, on and after date therein named, "a uniform policy of dealing with customers" would be adhered to "by manufacturers pursuant to the fair trade practice rules recently approved by the Federal Trade Commission for the covered button and buckle manufacturing industry," and that "rules" in said notice set forth would be "strictly enforced";
- (c) Sent to manufacturers and industries in question copy of said notice and advertisement; and
- (d) Falsely stated, represented, and implied, thereby and otherwise, that Commission had approved rules for industry in question (1) regulating prices for products in question or authorizing the fixing thereof, (2) prohibiting, without qualification, sale of said products below cost and approving or authorizing so-called basic cost formula, (3) prohibiting the granting or allowing of price differentials, rebates, etc., to evade so-called established basic cost prices, (4) approving the fixing or authorizing as set forth in said notice, of maximum uniform discount, and (5) forbidding the giving of free samples or free duplicates, and that uniform policy set forth in said notice was initiated and carried out through said rules approved by the Commission and with its knowledge, sanction or authorization; and

- (e) Advised nonmember manufacturers, through said notice setting forth rules, as above indicated, would be "strictly enforced," that they would be held strictly accountable for any violation of said rules, as assertedly promulgated by Commission, and subject to legal action therefor, and dress manufacturers and others dealing with members that action against those receiving discrimination was contemplated under the Robinson-Patman Act, and that any member found selling merchandise at actual cost would be presumed to be engaged in unfair competition;

Facts being trade practice rules in question, as approved by Commission, did not permit or authorize acts and practices stated, represented, expressed and implied as hereinabove indicated and noted, said combination, understanding, agreement and conspiracy were not entered into with sanction, authorization, permission, or knowledge of the Commission, and aforesaid letter to dress manufacturers and others enclosing said notice was false and misleading for reasons above set forth, in that purported rights as claimed in notice in question were not protected by trade practice rules approved by Commission;

With result that said acts and practices had a dangerous tendency to, and actually did, hinder and prevent price competition in sale by them, and among various States and Territories and District of Columbia, of covered buttons, buckles, and novelties, increased prices of such products paid by dress manufacturers and those engaged in kindred industries, prices of dresses and similar commodities and prices paid by purchasing public therefor increased, created in aforesaid members a monopoly in the sale in interstate commerce of said various products, and unreasonably restrained interstate commerce in such various products, dresses and other articles of wear:

Held, That such acts and practices were all to the prejudice of the public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition.

COMPLAINT

vidually and as representative members of the Covered Button and Buckle Creators, Inc.; Regal Trimming & Button Co., Inc., Rapid Button Co., Inc., Unity Button Works, Inc., N. B. Button Works, Inc., International Button Co., Inc., Max Goldfeder, doing business under the trade name, Grand Button Works; Ben Block, Louis Rosenfeld, and Sam Wiener, doing business as Mitrose Button Works; Jacob Neiderbach, trading as Novelty Button Works; Samuel Brown, doing business under the trade name, Brown Button Works; Isidore Spier, and Harry Gardner, copartners trading as Ideal Button Works; Abraham Avin, trading as Practical Button & Trimming Co., and Irving Schwartz, David M. Schwartz, and Ida Schwartz, copartners trading as Cosmopolitan Button Co., all hereinafter referred to as respondents, have been and are using unfair methods of competition in commerce as "commerce" is defined in said act; and it appearing to the Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint, stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent Covered Button and Buckle Creators, Inc., is a New York membership, non-profit corporation, organized in 1934. Its officers are now and since its organization have been the following respondents:

Max Pearlstein, president,
 Abraham Avin, vice president,
 Isidore Feldman, treasurer,
 Irving Schwartz, secretary.

Its directors are now and since its organization have been the following respondents: Jack Kinsler, Murray Horner, Isidore Nechim, Max Goldfeder, Ben Block, Jacob Neiderbach, Samuel Brown, and Isidore Spier. Among its members are now and since its organization have been the following respondents: Regal Trimming & Button Co., Inc., a New York corporation; Rapid Button Co., Inc., a New York corporation; Unity Button Works, Inc., a New York corporation; N. B. Button Works, Inc., a New York corporation; International Button Co., Inc., a New York corporation; Max Goldfeder, doing business under the trade name Grand Button Works; Ben Block, Louis Rosenfeld, and Sam Wiener, doing business as Mitrose Button Works; Jacob Neiderbach, trading as Novelty Button Works; Samuel Brown, doing business under the trade name, Brown Button Works; Isidore Spier and Harry Gardner, copartners trading as Ideal Button Works; Abraham Avin, trading as Practical Button & Trimming Co., and Irving Schwartz, David M. respondent members of respondent Covered Button and Buckle Creators, Inc., do not constitute the entire membership of respondent Covered Button and Buckle Creators, Inc., but are representative members thereof. There are approximately 150 members of respondent Covered Button and Buckle Creators, Inc., and they constitute a class so numerous as to make it impractical to name them all as parties respondent herein. All members of respondent Covered Button and Buckle Creators, Inc., are made parties respondent herein as a class, of which those specifically named are representative of the whole.

PAR. 2. The respondent members of respondent Covered Button and Buckle Creators, Inc., are engaged at their respective places of business chiefly in the city of New York, State of New York, in the manufacture of covered buttons, buckles, and novelties for use in the manufacture of wearing apparel, and in the sale thereof to dress manufacturers and to those engaged in kindred industries. In the course and conduct of their businesses, respondent members of respondent Covered Button and Buckle Creators, Inc., cause such articles when sold by them to be transported from their respective places of business to the purchasers thereof, some located in the city of New York, State of New York, and others located in various other States of the United States, the territories thereof, and the District of Columbia, and there is now and has been for more than two years last past, a constant current of trade and commerce by respondent members of respondent association in such covered buttons, buckles, and novelties, between and among the various States of the United States, the Territories thereof, and the District of Columbia.

The amount of covered buttons, buckles, and novelties for use by dress manufacturers and manufacturers of kindred lines, manufactured and sold by the respondent members of respondent Covered Button and Buckle Creators, Inc., constitutes, and for more than two years last past has constituted, approximately 90% of all of the covered buttons, buckles, and novelties manufactured in the United States.

The said respondent members of respondent Covered Button and Buckle Creators, Inc., were prior to April 1937, or thereabouts, in competition, as to price, with one another in the sale of covered buttons, buckles, and novelties, between and among the various States of the United States, the Territories thereof, and the District of Columbia, and but for the combination, agreement, understanding, and conspiracy hereinafter described, said respondents would have been at all times since April 1937, or thereabouts, and would now be in such competition with one another.

PAR. 3. In April 1937 or thereabouts, respondent Covered Button and Buckle Creators, Inc., its respondent officers, directors, and its respondent members, for the purpose of eliminating price competition among the members of respondent Covered Button and Buckle Creators, Inc., entered into and have since carried out and are still carrying out an agreement, combination, understanding, and conspiracy among themselves to fix and maintain, and by which they have fixed and maintained uniform minimum prices in the sale of covered buttons, buckles, and novelties, and to fix and maintain and by which they have fixed and maintained uniform maximum discounts to be allowed by the respondent members of respondent Covered Button and Buckle Creators, Inc., to their purchasers of covered buttons, buckles, and novelties, and thus to fix the prices of covered buttons, buckles, and novelties entering into interstate commerce. Pursuant to and for the purpose of carrying out the said agreement, combination, understanding, and conspiracy, the said respondents have done, among other things, the following:

(a) By agreement among themselves have fixed and maintained and still fix and maintain uniform minimum prices for the sale of covered buttons, buckles and novelties sold by the respondent members of respondent Covered Button and Buckle Creators, Inc., and by each of them;

(b) By agreement among themselves have fixed and maintained and still fix and maintain uniform maximum discounts for covered buttons, buckles and novelties sold by the respondent members of respondent Covered Button and Buckle Creators, Inc., and by each of them;

(c) Caused to be inserted in the May 26, 1937, issue of Women's Wear, a trade paper of wide circulation among those engaged in dress manufacturing and kindred industries, notice of which the following is a copy:

THE FOLLOWING RULES WILL BE STRICTLY ENFORCED:

1—THE SALE OF GOODS BELOW COST IS PROHIBITED. A basic cost formula for the industry has been established by taking into consideration all elements recognized by good accounting practice as proper elements of such cost.

2—Granting or allowing secretly, directly or indirectly, any price differentials, rebates, refunds, discounts, credits, or other allowances for the purpose of evading the established basic cost prices is absolutely prohibited.

3—A UNIFORM DISCOUNT OF 2% will be allowed to customers, and no more.

4—NO FREE SAMPLES AND NO FREE DUPLICATES will be given; samples and duplicates will be furnished at cost.

5—No commission, brokerage, or other compensation, or any allowance or discount in lieu thereof, will be allowed to a customer or to anyone in the employ or under the control of the customer.

Attention is called to the fact that the Fair Trade Practice Rules above mentioned have been incorporated into the By-Laws of the Covered Button & Buckle Creators, Inc., as rules which will hereafter govern the business conduct of its members. An ADMINISTRATIVE BOARD has been set up to hear complaints, to enforce compliance and to impose penalties for violations. Members of this Association have pledged their united support and their full cooperation in this movement, the purpose of which is to stabilize the industry, to prevent destructive competition and therefore to insure its members a fair return from their business.

Manufacturers of covered buttons and buckles who are not members of the undersigned Association are hereby notified that they will be held strictly accountable for any violation of the rules as promulgated by the Federal Trade Commission and will be subject to legal action for any such violations.

Dress Manufacturers and others dealing with members of the industry are reminded of the provisions of the Robinson-Patman Act which make it unlawful to receive a price discrimination or other rebate as well as to grant it. It is therefore the purpose of the Association to invoke the laws against those who receive unlawful favors as well as those who grant them.

While the fair trade practice rules prohibit the sale of merchandise below cost, members of the industry are advised that it is unethical to sell merchandise at mere cost and that they are legally entitled to fair profits upon their sales. Therefore, any member who is found to be selling merchandise at actual cost will be presumed to be engaged in unfair competition.

The above rules are now actually in force but in order to enable manufacturers to adjust themselves to the new price regulation, which will result from the adoption of the code, a short period of grace has been established, but THE NEW PRICES WILL ABSOLUTELY GO INTO EFFECT ON AND AFTER JUNE 1, 1937.

Members of the Covered Button and Buckle Industry are urged to report violations promptly to the undersigned Association or to its attorneys.

Button Works, Inc., International Button Co., Inc., Max Goldfeder, doing business under the trade name Grand Button Works; Ben Block, Louis Rosenfeld, and Sam Wiener, doing business as Mitrose Button Works; Jacob Neiderbach, trading as Novelty Button Works; Samuel Brown, doing business under the trade name Brown Button Works; Isidore Spier and Harry Gardner, copartners, trading as Ideal Button Works; Abraham Avin, trading as Practical Button & Trimming Co., and Irving Schwartz, David M. Schwartz, and Ida Schwartz, copartners, trading as Cosmopolitan Button Co., charging them and each of them with the use of unfair methods of competition, in violation of the provisions of said act.

On August 25, 1937, the said respondents filed their substituted answer, in which said substituted answer they stated that they desired to and thereby waived hearing on the charges set forth in the complaint insofar as the same referred to alleged unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," commonly called the Federal Trade Commission Act; that they, and each of them, for the sole purpose of avoiding the trouble and expense incident to further continuation of this proceeding, refrained from contesting the proceeding; that they and each of them consented that all of the material facts alleged in said complaint might be deemed to be admitted but not within the intent and meaning of any law of the United States other than the Federal Trade Commission Act, such answer not constituting an admission of any conclusions of law and not constituting an admission of fact for any other purpose nor to be used against them in any other proceeding, suit or action; and that they and each of them consented that the Commission might, without trial, without further evidence, and without any intervening procedure, make and enter its findings as to the facts, and issue and serve upon them and each of them an order to cease and desist from any methods of competition alleged in the said complaint which constitute violations of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

Thereafter, the proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on the said complaint and the said substituted answer thereto, and the Commission having duly considered the same and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public, and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom.

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent Covered Button and Buckle Creators, Inc., is a New York membership, non-profit corporation, organized in 1934. Its officers are now and since its organization have been the following respondents:

Max Pearlstein, president,
Abraham Avin, vice president,

Findings

Isidore Feldman, treasurer,

Irving Schwartz, secretary.

Its directors are now and since its organization have been the following respondents: Jack Kinsler, Murray Horner, Isidore Nechim, Max Goldfeder, Ben Block, Jacob Neiderbach, Samuel Brown, and Isidore Spier. Among its members are now, and since its organization have been, the following respondents: Regal Trimming & Button Co., Inc., a New York corporation; Rapid Button Co., Inc., a New York corporation; Unity Button Works, Inc., a New York corporation; N. B. Button Works, Inc., a New York corporation; International Button Co., Inc., a New York corporation; Max Goldfeder, doing business under the trade name Brand Button Works; Ben Block, Louis Rosenfeld, and Sam Wiener, doing business as Mitrose Button Works; Jacob Neiderbach, trading as Novelty Button Works; Samuel Brown, doing business under the trade name Brown Button Works; Isidore Spier and Harry Gardner, copartners, trading as Ideal Button Works; Abraham Avin, trading as Practical Button & Trimming Co., and Irving Schwartz, David M. Schwartz, and Ida Schwartz, copartners, trading as Cosmopolitan Button Co. The above named respondent members of respondent Covered Button and Buckle Creators, Inc., do not constitute the entire membership of respondent Covered Button and Buckle Creators, Inc., but are representative members thereof. There are approximately 150 members of respondent Covered Button and Buckle Creators, Inc. All members of respondent Covered Button and Buckle Creators, Inc., are parties respondent herein as a class, of which those specifically hereinabove named are representative of the whole.

PAR. 2. The respondent members of respondent Covered Button and Buckle Creators, Inc., are engaged at their respective places of business chiefly in the city of New York, State of New York, in the manufacture of covered buttons, buckles and novelties for use in the manufacture of wearing apparel, and in the sale thereof to dress manufacturers and to those engaged in kindred industries. In the course and conduct of their businesses, respondent members of respondent Covered Button and Buckle Creators, Inc., cause such articles when sold by them to be transported from their respective places of business to the purchasers thereof, some located in the city of New York, State of New York, and others located in various other States of the United States, the Territories thereof, and the District of Columbia, and there is now, and has been for more than two years last past, a constant current of trade and commerce by respondent members of respondent association in such covered buttons, buckles and novelties, between and among the various States of the United States, the Territories thereof, and the District of Columbia.

The amount of covered buttons, buckles, and novelties for use by dress manufacturers and manufacturers of kindred lines, manufactured and sold by the respondent members of respondent Covered Button and Buckle Creators, Inc., constitutes, and for more than two years last past has constituted, approximately 90% of all of the covered buttons, buckles, and novelties manufactured in the United States.

The said respondent members of respondent Covered Button and Buckle Creators, Inc., were, prior to April 1937, or thereabouts, in competition, as to price, with one another in the sale of covered buttons, buckles, and novelties, between and among the various States of the United States, the Territories thereof, and the District of Columbia, and but for the combination, agreement, understanding, and conspiracy hereinafter described, said respondents would have been at all times since April 1937, or thereabouts, and would now be in such competition with one another.

PAR. 3. In April 1937, or thereabouts, respondent Covered Button and Buckle Creators, Inc., its respondent officers, directors and its respondent members, for the purpose of eliminating price competition among the members of respondent Covered Button and Buckle Creators, Inc., entered into and have since carried out and are still carrying out an agreement, combination, understanding, and conspiracy among themselves to fix and maintain, and by which they have fixed and maintained uniform minimum prices in the sale of covered buttons, buckles, and novelties, and to fix and maintain and by which they have fixed and maintained uniform maximum discounts to be allowed by the respondent members of respondent Covered Button and Buckle Creators, Inc., to their purchasers of covered buttons, buckles, and novelties, and thus to fix the prices of covered buttons, buckles, and novelties entering into interstate commerce. Pursuant to and for the purpose of carrying out the said agreement, combination, understanding, and conspiracy, the said respondents have done, among other things, the following:

(a) By agreement among themselves have fixed and maintained, and still fix and maintain, uniform minimum prices for the sale of covered buttons, buckles and novelties sold by the respondent members of respondent Covered Button and Buckle Creators, Inc., and by each of them;

(b) By agreement among themselves have fixed and maintained, and still fix and maintain, uniform maximum discounts for covered buttons, buckles and novelties sold by the respondent members of

NOTICE

TO DRESS MANUFACTURERS

and Kindred Industries

ON AND AFTER JUNE 1, 1937, PRICES FOR COVERED BUTTONS AND BUCKLES WILL BE REGULATED AND A UNIFORM POLICY OF DEALING WITH CUSTOMERS WILL BE ADHERED TO BY MANUFACTURERS PURSUANT TO THE FAIR TRADE PRACTICE RULES RECENTLY APPROVED BY THE FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION FOR THE COVERED BUTTON AND BUCKLE MANUFACTURING INDUSTRY.

THE FOLLOWING RULES WILL BE STRICTLY ENFORCED:

1. THE SALE OF GOODS BELOW COST IS PROHIBITED. A basic cost formula for the industry has been established by taking into consideration all elements recognized by good accounting practice as proper elements of such cost.
2. Granting or allowing secretly, directly or indirectly, any price differentials, rebates, refunds, discounts, credits, or other allowances for the purpose or evading the established basic cost prices is absolutely prohibited.
3. A UNIFORM DISCOUNT OF 2% will be allowed to customers, and no more.
4. NO FREE SAMPLES AND NO FREE DUPLICATES will be given; samples and duplicates will be furnished at cost.
5. No commissions, brokerage, or other compensation, or any allowance or discount in lieu thereof, will be allowed to a customer or to any one in the employ or under the control of the customer.

Attention is called to the fact that the Fair Trade Practice Rules above mentioned have been incorporated into the By-laws of the Covered Button & Buckle Creators, Inc., as rules which will hereafter govern the business conduct of its members. An ADMINISTRATIVE BOARD has been set up to hear complaints, to enforce compliance and to impose penalties for violations. Members of this Association have pledged their united support and their full co-operation in this movement, the purpose of which is to stabilize the industry, to prevent destructive competition and therefore to insure its members a fair return from their business.

Manufacturers of covered buttons and buckles who are not members of the undersigned Association are hereby notified that they will be held strictly accountable for any violation of the rules as promulgated by the Federal Trade Commission and will be subject to legal action for any such violations.

Dress Manufacturers and others dealing with members of the industry are reminded of the provisions of the Robinson-Patman Act which makes it unlawful to receive a price discrimination or other rebate as well as to grant it. It is therefore the purpose of the Association to invoke the laws against those who receive unlawful favors as well as those who grant them.

While the fair trade practice rules prohibit the sale of merchandise below cost, members of the industry are advised that it is unethical to sell merchandise at mere cost and that they are legally entitled to fair profits upon their sales. Therefore, any member who is found to be selling merchandise at actual cost will be presumed to be engaged in unfair competition.

The above rules are now actually in force but in order to enable manufacturers to adjust themselves to the new price regulation, which will result from the adoption of the code, a short period of grace has been established, but THE NEW PRICES WILL ABSOLUTELY GO INTO EFFECT ON AND AFTER JUNE 1, 1937.

Members of the Covered Button and Buckle Industry are urged to report violations promptly to the undersigned Association or to its attorneys.

To Dress Manufacturers and Kindred Industries:

We are enclosing herewith copy of page advertisement which appeared in the Women's Wear May 26, 1937, announcing new prices for covered buttons and buckles and new regulations for the industry.

Please notify your department which deals with the manufacturers of this industry to co-operate fully as the producers in this industry are protected in their rights both by the Fair Trade Practice Rules approved by the Federal Trade Commission and the Robinson-Patman Act.

It is the purpose of this organization to prosecute all infractions to the limit. We trust that we may have your constructive co-operation.

Very truly yours,

(e) Falsely stated, represented and implied, in and by the notice described in subparagraph (c) of this paragraph and by other means, that the Federal Trade Commission has approved Fair Trade Practice Rules for the Covered Button and Buckle Manufacturing Industry regulating prices for covered buttons, buckles and novelties, or authorizing the fixing of such prices.

(f) Falsely stated, represented and implied, in and by the notice described in subparagraph (c) of this paragraph and by other means that Trade Practice Rules for the Covered Button and Buckle Manufacturing Industry, approved by the Federal Trade Commission, prohibit, without qualification or limitation, the sale of covered buttons, buckles and novelties below cost, and that in and by Trade Practice Rules for the said industry, approved by the Federal Trade Commission, a basic cost formula is provided therein or authorized thereby.

(g) Falsely stated, represented and implied, in and by the notice described in subparagraph (c) of this paragraph, and by other means that the Federal Trade Commission has approved Fair Trade Practice Rules for the said industry, prohibiting the granting or allowing, secretly, directly, or indirectly, any price differentials, rebates, refunds, discounts, credits or other allowances for the purpose of evading what the said respondents, in and by the said notice, term "established basic cost prices."

(h) Falsely stated, represented and implied, in and by the notice described in subparagraph (c) of this paragraph and by other means that the Federal Trade Commission has approved Fair Trade Practice Rules for this industry, fixing a maximum uniform discount of 2%, or authorizing the fixing of a maximum uniform discount.

(i) Falsely stated, represented and implied, in and by the notice described in subparagraph (c) of this paragraph and by other means, that the Federal Trade Commission has approved Fair Trade Practice Rules for the said industry, forbidding the giving of free samples of free duplicates.

(j) Falsely stated, represented and implied, in and by the notice described in subparagraph (c) of this paragraph and by other means, that the uniform policy described in said notice was initiated and carried out by and through the means of Trade Practice Rules for the said industry, approved by the Federal Trade Commission.

(k) Falsely stated, represented and implied, in and by the notice described in subparagraph (c) of this paragraph, and by other means, that the aforesaid uniform policy described in said notice was initiated and carried out with the knowledge, sanction, approval or authorization of the Federal Trade Commission.

PAR. 4. In truth and in fact, the Trade Practice Rules for the said industry, approved by this Commission, a copy of which said rules is annexed hereto and made a part hereof as Appendix One,¹ do not permit or authorize the acts and practices stated, represented, expressed and implied by the respondents as stated in subparagraphs (e), (f), (g), (h), (i), (j), and (k) of paragraph 3 hereof; and in truth and in fact, the combination, understanding, agreement and conspiracy described in paragraph 3 hereof, was not entered into with the sanction, authorization, permission or knowledge of the Federal Trade Commission.

PAR. 5. The letter described in subparagraph (d) of paragraph 3 hereof is false and misleading, in that—

1. The enclosure with the said letter, being the notice described in subparagraph (c) of paragraph 3 hereof, is false and misleading for the reasons set out in paragraph 4 hereof.

2. The purported rights of Covered Button and Buckle Creators, Inc., as claimed by the respondents in the notice described in subparagraph (c) of paragraph 3 hereof, are not protected by Fair Trade Trade Practice Rules approved by the Federal Trade Commission.

PAR. 6. The acts and practices of the respondents as herein and hereby found have a dangerous tendency to and have actually hindered and prevented price competition in the sale between and among the various States and Territories of the United States, and in the District of Columbia, of covered buttons, buckles, and novelties; have increased the prices of covered buttons, buckles, and novelties paid by dress manufacturers and those engaged in kindred industries; have increased the prices of dresses and similar commodities; have increased the prices paid by the purchasing public for dresses and other articles of wear; have created in the respondent members of respondent Covered Button and Buckle Creators, Inc., a monopoly in the sale in interstate commerce of covered buttons, buckles, and novelties; have unreasonably restrained interstate commerce in covered buttons, buckles, and novelties, dresses and other articles of wear.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of respondents are all to the prejudice of the public, and to the prejudice of the competitors of the respondent members of respondent Covered Button and Buckle Creators, Inc., and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

This proceeding having been heard by the Federal Trade Commission upon the complaint of the Commission and the substituted answer thereto filed herein by all of the respondents on August 25, 1937, in which said substituted answer they stated that they desired to and thereby waived hearing on the charges set forth in the said complaint insofar as the same referred to alleged unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of the Act of Congress entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914, commonly called the Federal Trade Commission Act, that they and each of them for the sole purpose of avoiding the trouble and expense incident to further continuation of this proceeding refrained from protesting the proceeding, and that they and each of them consented that all of the material facts alleged in said complaint might be deemed to be admitted, but not within the intent and meaning of any law of the United States other than the Federal Trade Commission Act, such answers not constituting an admission of any conclusions of law and not constituting an admission of fact for any other purpose nor to be used against them in any other proceeding, suit or action, and that they and each of them consented that the Commission might without trial and without further evidence and without any intervening proceeding, make and enter its findings as to the facts and issue and serve upon them and each of them an order to cease and desist from any methods of competition alleged in said complaint which constitute violations of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act; and the Commission having made its findings as to the facts and its conclusion that all of the said respondents have violated the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

It is ordered, That respondents, Covered Button and Buckle Creators, Inc., its agents, servants, and employees, its officers, to wit:

Max Pearlstein, president, Abraham Avin, vice president, Isidore Feldman, treasurer, Irving Schwartz, secretary, and Jack Kinsler, Murray Horner, Isidore Nechim, Max Goldfeder, Ben Block, Jacob Neiderbach, Samuel Brown, and Isidore Spier, directors, and their agents, servants, and employees, and its following members, to wit:

APPENDIX ONE

TRADE PRACTICE RULES

COVERED BUTTON AND BUCKLE MANUFACTURING INDUSTRY

These rules promulgated by the Commission are designed to foster and promote fair competitive conditions in the interest of industry and the public. They are not to be used, directly or indirectly, as part of or in connection with any combination or agreement to fix prices, or for the suppression of competition, or otherwise to unreasonably restrain trade.

Group I

The unfair trade practices which are embraced in Group I rules are considered to be unfair methods of competition or other illegal practices within the statutes and the decisions of the Federal Trade Commission and the courts; and appropriate proceedings in the public interest will be taken by the Commission to prevent the use of such unlawful practices in or directly affecting interstate commerce.

Rule 1.—The practice of selling goods below the seller's cost, with the intent and with the effect of injuring a competitor and where the effect may be to substantially lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly or to unreasonably restrain trade, is an unfair trade practice; all elements recognized by good accounting practice as proper elements of such cost shall be included in determining cost under this rule.

Rule 2.—Wilfully enticing away the employees of competitors, with the purpose and effect of unduly hampering, injuring or embarrassing competitors in their businesses, is an unfair trade practice.

Trade Practice Rules

25 F. T. C.

Rule 3.—the defamation of competitors by falsely imputing to them dishonorable conduct, inability to perform contracts, questionable credit standing, or by other false representations, or the false disparagement of the grade, quality or manufacture of the products of competitors, or of their business methods, selling prices, values, credit terms, policies or services with the tendency, capacity or effect of misleading or deceiving purchasers, prospective purchasers or the consuming public, is an unfair trade practice.

Rule 4.—The imitation of the trade-marks, trade names, brands, labels or other marks of identification of competitors, having the tendency, capacity or effect of misleading or deceiving purchasers, prospective purchasers or the consuming public, is an unfair trade practice.

Rule 5.—(a) Prohibited discriminatory Differentials, Rebates, Refunds, Discounts, Credits and other Allowances.—It is an unfair trade practice for any member of the industry engaged in commerce,¹ in the course of such commerce, to grant or allow, secretly or openly, directly or indirectly, any price differentials, rebates, refunds, discounts, credits or other allowances which effectuate a discrimination in price between different purchasers of goods of like grade and quality where either or any of the purchases involved therein are in commerce¹ and where the effect thereof may be substantially to lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in any line of commerce¹ or to injure, destroy or prevent competition with any person who either grants¹ or knowingly receives the benefit of such discrimination or with customers of either of them: Provided, however,

(1) That the goods involved in any such transaction are sold for use, consumption or resale within any place under the jurisdiction of the United States;

(2) That nothing herein contained shall prevent differentials which make only due allowance for differences in the cost of manufacture, sale or delivery resulting from the differing methods or quantities in which such commodities are to such purchasers sold or delivered;

(3) That nothing herein contained shall prevent persons engaged in selling goods, wares or merchandise in commerce¹ from selecting their own customers in bona fide transactions and not in restraint of trade;

(4) That nothing herein contained shall prevent price changes from time to time where made in response to changing conditions affecting either (a) the market for the goods concerned, or (b) the marketability of the goods, such as, but not limited to, actual or imminent deterioration of perishable goods, obsolescence of seasonal goods, distress sales under court process, or sales in good faith in discontinuance of business in the goods concerned.

(b) Prohibited Brokerages and Commissions.—It is an unfair trade practice for any member of the industry engaged in commerce,¹ in the course of such commerce, to pay or grant, or to receive or accept, anything of value as a commission, brokerage, or other compensation, or any allowance or discount in lieu thereof, except for services rendered in connection with the sale or purchase of goods, wares, or merchandise, either to the other party to such transaction or to an agent, representative, or other intermediary therein where such intermediary is acting in fact for or in behalf, or is subject to the direct or indirect control, of any party to such transaction other than the person by whom such compensation is so granted or paid.

(c) Prohibited Advertising or Promotional Allowances, Etc.—It is an unfair trade practice for any member of the industry engaged in commerce¹ to pay or contract for the payment of advertising or promotion allowances or any other thing of value to or for the benefit of a customer of such member in the course of such commerce as compensation or in consideration for any services or facilities furnished by or through such customer in connection with the processing, handling, sale or offering for sale of any products or commodities manufactured, sold or offered for sale by such member, unless such payment or consideration is available on proportionally equal terms to all other customers competing in the distribution of such products or commodities.

(d) Prohibited Discriminatory Services or Facilities.—It is an unfair trade practice for any member of the industry engaged in commerce¹ to discriminate in favor of one purchaser against another purchaser or purchasers of a commodity bought for resale, with or without processing, by contracting to furnish or by furnishing, or by contributing to the furnishing of, any services or facilities connected with the processing, handling, sale or offering for sale of such commodity so purchased upon terms not accorded to all purchasers on proportionally equal terms.

(e) Illegal Price Discrimination.—It is an unfair trade practice for any member of the industry or other person engaged in commerce,¹ in the course of such commerce, to discriminate in price in any other respect contrary to Section 2 of the Clayton Act as amended by the Act of Congress, approved June 19, 1936, (Public No. 692, 74th Congress), or knowingly to induce or receive a discrimination in price which is prohibited by such section as amended.

Rule 6.—Wilfully inducing or attempting to induce, by any false or deceptive means whatsoever, the breach of any lawful contract or contracts existing between competitors, and their customers or their suppliers, or wilfully interfering with or obstructing the performance of any such contractual duties or services, with the purpose and effect of unduly hampering, injuring or embarrassing competitors in their business, is an unfair trade practice.

Rule 7.—The making, or causing or permitting to be made or published, any false, untrue or deceptive statement or representation, by way of advertisement or otherwise, concerning the grade, quality, quantity, substance, character, nature, origin, size or preparation of any product of the industry, or in any other material respect, with the tendency, capacity or effect of misleading or deceiving purchasers, prospective purchasers or the consuming public, is an unfair trade practice.

Rule 8.—The practice of coercing the purchase of one or more products as a prerequisite to the purchase of one or more other products, where the effect may be to substantially lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly or to unreasonably restrain trade, is an unfair trade practice.

Rule 9.—Offering merchandise for sale at prices purported to be reduced from what are in fact fictitious prices, or offering merchandise for sale at a purported reduction in price when such purported reduction is in fact fictitious, with the tendency and capacity or effect of misleading or deceiving purchasers, prospective purchasers or the consuming public, is an unfair trade practice.

¹As herein used, the word "commerce" means trade or commerce among the several States and with foreign nations, or between the District of Columbia or any Territory of the United States and any State, Territory, or foreign nation, or between any insular possessions or other places under the jurisdiction of the United States, or between any such possession or place and any State or Territory of the United States or the District of Columbia or any foreign nation, or within the District of Columbia or any Territory or any insular possession or other place under the jurisdiction of the United States; Provided, That this shall not apply to the Philippine Islands.

Rule 10.—The use of the word “free” where not properly or fairly qualified when the article is in fact not free, with the tendency or capacity to mislead or deceive purchasers, prospective purchasers or the consuming public, is an unfair trade practice.

Rule 11.—The practice of shipping or delivering products which do not conform to the samples submitted or representations made prior to securing the orders, without the consent of the purchasers to such substitutions, and having the tendency, capacity or effect of deceiving or misleading purchasers, prospective purchasers or the consuming public, is an unfair trade practice.

Rule 12.—Directly or indirectly to give or permit to be given or offer to give money or anything of value to agents, employees or representatives of customers or prospective customers, or to agents, employees or representatives of competitors' customers or prospective customers, without the knowledge of their employers or principals, as an inducement to influence their employers or principals to purchase or contract to purchase industry products from the maker of such gift or offer, or to influence such employers or principals to refrain from dealing or contracting to deal with competitors is an unfair trade practice.

Rule 13.—Securing information from competitors concerning their businesses by false or misleading statements or representations or by false impersonation of one in authority, and the wrongful use thereof to unduly hinder or stifle the competition of such competitors, is an unfair trade practice.

Rule 14.—In connection with the sale or offering for sale of products of the industry, representing through advertising or otherwise that such products conform to any standards recognized in or applicable to the industry when such is not the fact, with the tendency, capacity or effect of misleading or deceiving purchasers, prospective purchasers or the consuming public, is an unfair trade practice.

Rule 15.—For any person, firm or corporation to hold himself or itself out to the public as a manufacturer or wholesaler when such is not the fact, or in any other manner to misrepresent the character, extent or type of his or its business, with the tendency or capacity to mislead or deceive purchasers, prospective purchasers or the consuming public, is an unfair trade practice.

Rule 16.—The false or deceptive marking or branding of products of the industry for the purpose or with the tendency, capacity or effect of misleading or deceiving purchasers, prospective purchasers or the consuming public with respect to the grade, quality, quantity, use, size, material, content, origin, preparation, manufacture or distribution of such products, or in any other material respect, is an unfair trade practice.

Rule 17.—Withholding from or inserting in invoices or sales tickets any statements or information by reason of which omission or insertion a false record is made, wholly or in part, of the transactions represented on the face of such invoices or sales tickets, with the purpose or effect of thereby misleading or deceiving purchasers, prospective purchasers or the consuming public, is an unfair trade practice.

IN THE MATTER OF PASCAL COMPANY, INC.

COMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION
OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 26, 1914

Docket 2945. Complaint, Oct. 15, 1936—Decision, Sept. 8, 1937

Where a corporation engaged in manufacture of "Breatheasy," preparation, and atomizer or "nebulizer" for treatment of asthma, hay fever, and kindred diseases, and in the sale and distribution thereof through distributors and drug stores in the various States, in substantial competition with those engaged in interstate sale and distribution of other preparations recommended for, and useful in, treatment of such diseases, and of atomizers for use in connection therewith; in extensively advertising its said product through various newspapers of interstate circulation and through radio broadcasts having interstate transmission, and through booklets and circulars issued and distributed by it—

Represented that said preparation was a cure or remedy for asthma, hay fever, and kindred diseases, which could be used successfully without following any particular form of diet, and constituted a harmless remedy which would return the user to vigorous, buoyant health, had therapeutic value also in chronic bronchitis and numerous other specified ailments and conditions, including heart diseases and cardiac distress, various skin diseases, and inflammations of the nose and throat, etc., and in neuralgia and neuritis, and was the one sure relief available for treatment of asthma, and a new medicament for such treatment, through such statements, among others, as "For Asthma * * * the greatest discovery. Created by a physician to successfully cure his own asthma * * ," "only one Remedy for Asthma And that Remedy is Breatheasy," " * * beneficial, according to authorities, in asthma and chronic bronchitis, in heart disease and cardiac distress, in gastric ulcer, * * *," " * * * the one, sure asthmatic relief available today * * * gives a sense of well-being, a return to vigorous, buoyant health * * *," " * * * no diet is necessary. You may eat anything you may desire." "Introduces a new medicament of scientific formula which applies synthetic adrenal gland extract vaporized * * *," etc.;

Facts being asthma, as classified by medical profession, may result from many varying causes, no specific cure for asthma is recognized by said profession, and such preparation is not cure therefor nor for hay fever, and, while preparation in question, as well as many other remedies containing adrenalin, may in some cases temporarily relieve asthma, it does not constitute treatment therefor, and use thereof will not bring about or restore vigorous, buoyant health or give absolute and instant relief to sufferers therefrom, should not be taken at all in many cases in which diet is essential, and is no less dangerous to user because taken through "nebulizer" than if taken through hypodermic injection, and is not beneficial in treatment of chronic bronchitis, heart disease, and various other ailments and conditions specified, and, as equivalent, through epinephrin content, of synthetic adrenalin, is not new medicament;

25 F. T. C.

With capacity and tendency to mislead and deceive public into erroneous belief that said "Breatheasy" was in truth and in fact a remedy and cure for asthma, hay fever and kindred diseases, and that in use thereof it was not necessary to follow any particular diet, and to induce such purchasing public to buy said "Breatheasy" in preference to other preparations designed for treatment of aforesaid diseases and offered for sale by manufacturers, retailers and distributors, and with result of unfairly diverting trade to it from such manufacturers, retailers, and distributors of such other preparations who do not misrepresent the character and quality of their respective products or the results to be obtained in the use thereof:

Held, That such acts and practices were to the prejudice of the public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition.

Mr. Clarence L. Gere, of Seattle, Wash., for respondent.

COMPLAINT

PARAGRAPH 1. The respondent, Pascal Company, Inc., is a corporation organized and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Washington, with its principal office and place of business located at 1014 American Bank Building, Second Street at Madison, in the city of Seattle, within the State of Washington. Said respondent is now and for more than one year last past has been engaged in the manufacture and sale of a product known as "Breatheasy" for the treatment of asthma, hay fever and kindred diseases, and of an atomizer or so-called "nebulizer" for administering the preparation "Breatheasy," and in the distribution thereof in commerce between and among the various States of the United States. It causes said "Breatheasy" and the nebulizer, when sold by it, to be transported to purchasers thereof located in the State of Washington and in various States of the United States other than the State of Washington. There is now and has been for a long time, to wit, for more than one year last past, a constant current of trade and commerce by respondent in said "Breatheasy" and said nebulizer, between and among the various States of the United States.

Complaint

In the course and conduct of its said business, said respondent is now and for a long time, to wit, for more than one year last past, has been in substantial competition in commerce between and among the various States of the United States with sundry other corporations, partnerships, firms, and individuals engaged in the interstate sale and distribution of other preparations recommended for the treatment of asthma, hay fever, and kindred diseases, and of atomizers or nebulizers for use in connection therewith.

PAR. 2. The preparation "Breatheasy" and the atomizer or nebulizer used in connection therewith are manufactured by said respondent and are sold and distributed by said respondent through distributors and drug stores located in the various States of the United States.

PAR. 3. Said respondent, in the course and conduct of its said business as hereinbefore set out in paragraphs 1 and 2, has been and now is engaged in extensive advertising of its said products as a means of furthering and aiding in the interstate sale and distribution of "Breatheasy" and the atomizer or nebulizer for use in connection therewith, and as media of such advertising it has been and now is using various newspapers of interstate circulation, and broadcasts over radio stations having interstate reception. Said respondent also issues booklets and circulars describing the said product "Breatheasy."

Said respondent in its said advertisements of the preparation "Breatheasy" and the atomizer or nebulizer used in connection therewith, manufactured and distributed by it, has made and is now making various false, deceptive, and misleading statements concerning said products. Among the statements which said respondent has used and is now using in its advertisements in newspapers and over the radio and in its booklets and circulars distributed with its said products, are the following:

Complaint

Breatheasy is a creation of a physician, who himself suffered from asthma, and was developed until now it gives absolute, instant and complete relief. For asthmatics who seek relief, they will find this remedy their "doctor," ever ready to relieve them.

BREATHEASY means exactly what the name implies. It is the one, sure asthmatic relief available today. In working its wonders, BREATHEASY gives a sense of well-being, a return to vigorous, bouyant health. BREATHEASY was developed by a physician who suffered from asthma, and, in striving for relief, he evolved this marvelous remedy. If YOU suffer from asthma or if any of your friends are afflicted with the symptoms, stop in at the West End Drug Store, First and Monroe, and ask to have this thoroughly marvelous treatment demonstrated. Remember, there is no charge.

Asthmatics everywhere hail the BREATHEASY method as the one remedy that can be relied upon.

During the use of "Breatheasy", no diet is necessary. You may eat anything you may desire.

In truth and in fact, "Breatheasy" is not a remedy for and it does not cure asthma. In any treatment for asthma the proper diet is essential, as mucus-forming foods are injurious in cases of asthma.

Respondent in its said advertising has created and is now creating upon the public the false impression and erroneous belief that "Breatheasy" is a reliable and dependable remedy and cure for asthma, hay fever, and kindred diseases, and that in the use of the same it is not necessary to follow any particular diet. In fact, "Breatheasy" is not a reliable and dependable cure for asthma, hay fever, or kindred diseases.

PAR. 4. The use by the said respondent, Pascal Company, Inc., of the foregoing false, deceptive and misleading representations has had and does now have the capacity and tendency to and does mislead and deceive the public into the erroneous and untrue belief that "Breatheasy" is in truth and in fact a remedy for and will cure asthma, hay fever and kindred diseases, and that in using the same it is not necessary to follow any particular diet. Acting in such erroneous belief, the consuming public, and especially that portion of the public suffering from asthma, hay fever, or kindred diseases, have been induced and are now induced to purchase "Breatheasy" in preference to other preparations designed for the treatment of asthma, hay fever and kindred diseases, and offered for sale by manufacturers, retail dealers, and distributors. As a result of such false, deceptive and misleading representations on the part of said respondent, trade is unfairly diverted to respondent from such manufacturers, retail dealers, or distributors of other preparations for treating asthma, hay fever, and kindred diseases, who do not misrepresent the character and quality of their respective products or the results obtained from the use thereof.

Findings

PAR. 5. Said false, deceptive, and misleading representations of said respondent, contained in its advertisements, have resulted in injury to respondent's competitors and to retail dealers, and in prejudice to the buying public, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled, "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission on the 15th day of October 1936, issued and on October 20, 1936, served its complaint in this proceeding upon the respondent, Pascal Company, Inc., charging said respondent with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of the provisions of said act. After the issuance of said complaint and the filing of the respondent's answer thereto, testimony and other evidence in support of the allegations of said complaint were introduced by Reuben J. Martin, attorney for the Commission, before Henry M. White, an examiner of the Commission theretofore duly designated by it, and in opposition to the allegations of the complaint by Clarence L. Gere, attorney for the respondent; and said testimony and other evidence were duly recorded and filed in the office of the Commission. Thereafter, the proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on the said complaint, the answer thereto, testimony and other evidence, and briefs in support of the complaint and in opposition thereto, no oral argument having been heard, and the Commission having duly considered the same and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public, and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom: .

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. The respondent, Pascal Company, Inc., is a corporation, organized and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Washington, with its principal office and place of business located at 1014 American Bank Building, Second Street at Madison, in the city of Seattle, within the State of Washington. Said respondent is now, and has been since July 19, 1936, engaged in the manufacture and sale of a preparation known as "Breatheasy" for the treatment of asthma, hay fever, and kindred diseases, and of an atomizer or so-called "nebulizer" for administering the preparation "Breatheasy," and in the distribution thereof in commerce between and among the various States of the United States. It causes said "Breatheasy" and the "nebulizer" when sold by it to be transported to purchasers thereof located in the State of Washington and in various States of the United States other than the State of Washington. There is now, and has been for more than one year last past, a constant current of trade and commerce by respondent in said "Breatheasy" and said "nebulizer" between and among the various States of the United States. In the course and conduct of its said business, respondent is now, and since July 19, 1936, has been in substantial competition in commerce between and among the various States of the United States with sundry other corporations, and with partnerships, firms, and individuals engaged in the interstate sale and distribution of other preparations recommended for the treatment of asthma, hay fever, and kindred diseases, and of atomizers or "nebulizers" for use in connection therewith, which said preparations are useful in the treatment of said diseases.

PAR. 2. The preparation "Breatheasy" and the atomizer or "nebulizer," used in connection therewith, are manufactured by said respondent and are sold and distributed by said respondent through distributors and drug stores located in the various States of the United States.

PAR. 3. The respondent, in the course and conduct of its said business has been, and now is engaged in extensive advertising of its said products as a means of furthering and aiding in the interstate sale and distribution of "Breatheasy" and the atomizer or "nebulizer" for use in connection therewith, and as media of such advertising it has been, and now is using various newspapers of interstate circulation and broadcasts over radio stations having interstate transmission. Said respondent also issues and distributes booklets and circulars describing the said preparation "Breatheasy."

PAR. 4. The respondent, in its said advertisements of the preparation "Breatheasy" and the atomizer or "nebulizer" used in connection therewith manufactured and distributed by it, has made, and is now making, various statements regarding efficacy of said preparation known as "Breatheasy" in the treatment of asthma, hay fever, and kindred diseases. Among the statements which said respondent has used, and is now using, in its advertisements in newspapers and over the radio, and in its booklets and circulars distributed with its said products are the following:

Breatheasy is a creation of a physician who himself suffered from asthma, and was developed until now it gives absolute, instant and complete relief. For asthmatics who seek relief, they will find this remedy their "doctor," ever ready to relieve them.

BREATHEASY is beneficial, according to authorities, in asthma and chronic bronchitis, in heart disease and cardiac distress, in gastric ulcer, in serum rashes, urticaris (hives) and other skin diseases of the erythematous and eczematous types, in hay fever, in inflammation of the nose, throat, tonsils, larynx and lungs; and in neuralgia and neuritis. This by no means completes the list, but it suffices to show the enormous value of this substance elaborated by the adrenal glands and what may happen if they are deficient.

BREATHEASY means exactly what the name implies. It is the one, sure asthmatic relief available today. In working its wonders, BREATHEASY gives a sense of well-being, a return to vigorous, bouyant health. PAR. 5. The respondent corporation is owned by Dr. Benjamin S. Paschall and other members of his family. Dr. Paschall is a physician and Chief Chemist of the respondent corporation. The respondent is engaged in the business of making pharmaceuticals and its principal product is epinephrin. The product epinephrin, together with the "nebulizer", an apparatus for administering the epinephrin, constitutes the commodity sold to the public in interstate commerce by the respondent under the trade name of "Breatheasy." The respondent maintains a laboratory in which the product ephinephrin is manufactured. The product epinephrin is a solution of epinephrin hydrochlorides, at least 2½ percent, put up in physiological salt solution containing traces of carminatives and preservatives of chemically pure grade. Its structure is racemic.

PAR. 6. Epinephrin may be obtained in two ways, namely, by synthetically building it up in the laboratory, and also by extracting it from the glands of animals. The epinephrin sold by the respondent is obtained synthetically. The epinephrin is put into the "nebulizer" and by means of the "nebulizer" is breathed into the lungs of the user. The epinephrin is not injected into the user by means of a hypodermic needle.

The "nebulizer" sold and distributed by the respondent is an instrument which turns liquid into vapor and is the means by which the user takes the medicine into the body. The "nebulizer" is manufactured by the respondent for use in connection with its product epinephrin and the epinephrin, together with the "nebulizer," constitutes the commodity sold as "Breatheasy." The chemical ingredients used by respondent in manufacturing its epinephrin are purchased by the respondent in the open market for use in respondent's laboratory. Epinephrin contains the same properties as adrenaline and is synthetic adrenaline. The preparation "Breatheasy" is sold by the respondent for the purpose of treatment of asthma, hay fever, and kindred diseases. Adrenaline has been constantly used by the medical profession in the treatment of asthma for thirty years and has been customarily administered to the patient hypodermically.

PAR. 7. True asthma is defined as a "A condition of shortness of breath caused by the constriction of the bronchial muscles and by the exudation of mucous into the narrow bronchial passages, the reason for which is a reflex due to the ingestion or inhalation of substances to which the patient is hypersensitive." There are many various forms of asthma or physical conditions which are generally classified by the medical profession as asthma. The basic causes of the ailments classified by the medical profession as asthma are not yet known to the medical profession, and asthma may result from many varying causes:

PAR. 8. There is no specific cure for asthma generally recognized by the medical profession. "Breatheasy" is not a cure for asthma nor is it a cure for hay fever. Asthma may be, and often is, cured when the cause of the asthma is known and eliminated. The elimination of the cause of asthma may sometimes be produced by surgery and by other methods, but it cannot be eliminated by "Breatheasy." "Breatheasy" as well as many other remedies containing adrenaline, may in some cases temporarily relieve asthma.

"Breatheasy" does not constitute a treatment for asthma, and its use will not bring about or restore vigorous buoyant health.

PAR. 9. "Breatheasy" will not give "absolute, instant and complete relief" to sufferers from asthma and is not a sure relief for persons suffering with asthma. The use of "Breatheasy" is not harmless in all cases, and there are cases where its use would be distinctly dangerous. The use of "Breatheasy" is not beneficial in the treatment of chronic bronchitis, heart disease, cardiac distress, gastric ulcer, hives, inflammation of the nose, throat, tonsils, larynx, lungs, neuralgia, or neuritis.

PAR. 10. In many cases of asthma, proper diet is very important and may become the means of effecting a cure. Many persons suffer from asthma due to being allergic to certain foods. In such cases diet is essential as only by refraining from using the particular food to which the sufferer is allergic may a cure be effected. In such cases diet is essential and "Breatheasy" will not give relief in these cases independent of the proper diet. In many of such cases "Breatheasy" should not be used at all. Epinephrin is no less dangerous to the user because it is taken by means of a "nebulizer" than it would be if taken by means of a hypodermic injection.

PAR. 11. The advertisements and representations made to the purchasing public by the respondent, as hereinbefore set out in paragraph 4, are false and misleading. They have had, and do now have, the capacity and tendency to mislead and deceive the public into the erroneous and untrue belief that "Breatheasy" is in truth and in fact a remedy for, and will cure, asthma, hay fever, and kindred diseases, and that in the use of the same it is not necessary to follow any particular diet, and to induce such purchasing public to purchase "Breatheasy" in preference to other preparations designed for the treatment of asthma, hay fever, and kindred diseases and offered for sale by manufacturers, retail dealers and distributors. The result of such false, deceptive, and misleading representations on the part of said respondent is to unfairly divert trade to said respondent from such manufacturers, retailers, or distributors of other preparations for treating asthma, hay fever, and kindred diseases, who do not misrepresent the character and quality of their respective products or the results to be obtained from the use thereof.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondent, Pascal Company, Inc., are to the prejudice of the public and competitors of the respondent and constitute unfair methods of competition in com-

(h) and from making any other similar representations of like import or effect as to the therapeutic or medicinal value of said preparation unless and until said representations are true in fact.

It is further ordered, That the respondent, Pascal Company, Inc., shall within 60 days after service upon it of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which it has complied with the order to cease and desist hereinabove set forth.

Complaint

IN THE MATTER OF MAY HOSIERY MILLS, INC.

COMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION
OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 26, 1914

Docket 3172. Complaint, July 15, 1937—Decision, Sept. 9, 1937

Where a corporation engaged in manufacture, sale, and distribution of textile products, including hosiery for men and women, in substantial competition with others engaged in manufacture, sale, and distribution of like and similar products in commerce among the various States and in the District of Columbia—

Made use of such statements and representations as "Pure Thread Silk and Rayon," "Creptone with Silk Wrap," and "Genuine Wrap Pure Thread Silk and Rayon," with words "and Rayon" on a separate line and in small capital letters, as contrasted with preceding words in large conspicuous capital letters, in the advertisements of its said commodities in trade papers, price lists, etc., and on transfers appearing on the merchandise in question, and led purchasers and prospective purchasers into mistaken and erroneous belief that commodities involved were made largely from materials entirely different from those contained therein, and contained finer materials of manufacture than actually was the case, and that silk was major material used in merchandise made and sold by it, facts being hosiery designated as aforesaid was not made entirely of silk of the silk-worm, and silk was not major component of hosiery upon which transfers bearing such legends, as above set forth, appeared, but silk used in such instances varied from infinitesimal proportions in such "Creptone" brand product to far less than major proportion in the other two;

With tendency and capacity to lead distributors and purchasing public into belief that said statements and representations were true, and with result of inducing members of public to purchase its said products on account of such erroneous beliefs, to resultant damage and injury of manufacturers and distributors, and to injury of general public, and of unfairly diverting trade to it from competitors; to the substantial injury of competition in commerce:

Held, That such acts and practices were to the prejudice of the public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition.

Mr. S. Brogdyn Teu II for the Commission.

COMPLAINT

would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent, May Hosiery Mills, Inc., is a North Carolina corporation, having its principal office and place of business in the city of Burlington, State of North Carolina. It has been for more than one year last past, and still is, engaged in the manufacture, sale, and distribution of hosiery to jobbers and retail dealers. In the course and conduct of its business it offers said products for sale and sells the same in commerce between the State of North Carolina and the several States of the United States and the District of Columbia.

PAR. 2. When said products are sold, respondent transports or causes the same to be transported from its place of business in the State of North Carolina to purchasers thereof located in the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

There has been for more than one year last past, and there still is, a constant current of trade and commerce in said products so sold by respondent between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

Respondent is now and for more than one year last past has been engaged in substantial competition with other individuals, firms, partnerships, and corporations engaged in the manufacture, sale, and distribution of like and similar products in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 3. Respondent, in soliciting the sale, and in the selling of its commodities and for the purpose of creating a demand upon the part of the consuming public for said commodities, has advertised its commodities through the media of advertisements inserted in trade papers, price lists, and other printed matter published and circulated through the United States mails to its customers and prospective customers in the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 4. Representative of such statements and representations above referred to and made by respondent on the articles of merchandise manufactured and sold by it are the following:

1. PURE THREAD SILK AND RAYON

The first three words of the quoted statement are in large conspicuous capital letters making up a single line. The last two words of this phrase, "and Rayon," are in a line below the above three words and appear in small inconspicuous capital letters.

2. Creptone with Silk Wrap

3. GENUINE WRAP PURE THREAD SILK AND RAYON

The words "Genuine Wrap Pure Thread Silk" appear in large conspicuous capital letters, while the words "and Rayon" appear on another line underneath in small capital letters.

PAR. 5. In the aforesaid ways and by the aforesaid means respondent makes and has made to the general public false and misleading statements with reference to the commodities offered for sale by it. Many articles and items of merchandise described in the said advertisements, price lists, and other printed matter above referred to, and on transfers appearing on the merchandise, are so described and made up as to mislead purchasers and prospective purchasers into the mistaken and erroneous belief that the said commodities are made largely from materials entirely different from that contained in the merchandise, and to mislead and deceive said purchasers and prospective purchasers into the mistaken and erroneous belief that the said merchandise contains finer materials of manufacture than the articles of merchandise actually contain.

PAR. 6. The use by the respondent of the words "Pure Thread Silk" and others of like import used in conjunction with the words "and Rayon" appearing anteriorly to the words "and Rayon," and being composed of large capital letters, while the words "and Rayon" appear in small capital letters about one-half the size of the letters in the preceding line in a separate line below, serves to lead purchasers and prospective purchasers into the erroneous and mistaken belief that silk is the major material used in the manufacture of the merchandise made and sold by the respondent.

PAR. 7. Likewise, by the use of the phrase "Silk Wrap" in conjunction with the words "Creptone with," said purchasing and consuming public is led into the mistaken and erroneous belief that the major component of the hosiery whereon this descriptive phrase is used is silk.

PAR. 8. In truth and in fact, in each and every instance cited above, and in other instances, the silk used in the manufacture of respondent's merchandise varies from an infinitesimal proportion in the hosiery branded and sold as "Creptone with Silk Wrap" to far less than a major proportion used in the hosiery manufactured and sold under the brand name of "Pure Thread Silk and Rayon."

PAR. 9. The aforesaid false and misleading advertising, branding, and representations on the part of the respondent place in the hands of retailers buying for resale an instrument and means whereby said retailers may commit and do commit a fraud upon a substantial portion of the consuming public by enabling such retailers to represent and offer for sale and sell respondent's hosiery as being a genuinely superior product made from all silk or a majority of silk material.

PAR. 10. There are among the competitors of the respondent in commerce as described in paragraph 1 above manufacturers and distributors of like and similar products who truthfully advertise and represent the nature, merit, and value of their respective products.

There are also among the competitors of respondent manufacturers and distributors of like and similar products who refrain from advertising or representing, through their advertisements, price lists, or other advertising media, and brand marks on their products, that the merchandise offered for sale by them has a merit and value that it does not have, or that it was manufactured from material other than actually contained in said merchandise.

PAR. 11. The effect of the foregoing false and misleading representations and acts of respondent in selling and offering for sale such items of merchandise as hereinbefore referred to is to mislead a substantial portion of the purchasing and consuming public in the several States of the United States by inducing them to believe:

1. That the various items of hosiery described in respondent's advertisements, price lists, and other advertising media, and brand marks on said merchandise, were and are manufactured for the most part from silk;

2. That the said products, because of the representations made thereon, are composed of superior materials, and that therefore the purchasers thereof are buying a superior product.

PAR. 12. The foregoing false and misleading statements and representations on the part of the respondent have induced and still induce a substantial number of consumer purchasers of said commodities to buy the products offered for sale, sold, and distributed by respondent on account of the aforesaid mistaken and erroneous beliefs.

As a result thereof trade has been diverted from those competitors of respondent engaged in similar businesses referred to in paragraph 10 above. As a consequence thereof substantial injury has been and is being done by respondent to competition in commerce between and among the various States of the United States.

PAR. 13. The aforementioned methods, acts, and practices of respondent are all to the prejudice of the public and respondent's competitors as hereinabove alleged. Said methods, acts, and practices constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914.

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, on July 15, 1937 issued, and on July 16, 1937 served, its complaint in this proceeding upon respondent May Hosiery Mills, Inc., a corporation, charging it with use of unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation to the provisions of said act. On August 16, 1937 the respondent filed its answer, in which answer it admits all the material allegations of the complaint to be true, and states that it waives hearing on the charges set forth in said complaint in that, without further evidence or intervening procedure, the Commission may issue and serve upon it findings as to the facts and conclusion and an order to cease and desist from the violation of law charged in the complaint. Thereafter, the proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on the said complaint and answer thereto; and the Commission having duly considered the same, and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public, and makes its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. The respondent, May Hosiery Mills, Inc., is a corporation organized and doing business under the laws of the State of North Carolina.

PAR. 2. The respondent has been for more than one year last past engaged in the manufacture, sale, and distribution of a variety of textile products, among them hosiery for both men and women.

PAR. 3. In the sale of said products respondent has transported or caused the same to be transported from its principal place of business in the State of North Carolina to purchasers thereof located in States of the United States other than the State from which the shipment originated, and in the District of Columbia.

The respondent is engaged in substantial competition with individuals, partnerships, firms, and corporations engaged in the manufacture, sale, and distribution of like and similar products, and in the sale thereof in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 4. Respondent, in soliciting the sale, and in the selling, of its commodities, and for the purpose of creating a demand upon the part of the consuming public for said commodities, has advertised its commodities through the media of advertisements, inserted in trade papers, price lists, and other printed matter, published and circulated through the United States mails to its customers and prospective customers in the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 5. Representative of such statements and representations referred to in paragraph 4 and made by respondent on the articles of merchandise manufactured and sold by it are the following:

1. PURE THREAD SILK AND RAYON

The first three words of the quoted statement are in large conspicuous capital letters making up a single line. The last two words of the phrase, "and Rayon," are in a line below the above three words and appear in small inconspicuous capital letters.

2. Creptone with silk Wrap

3. GENUINE WRAP PURE THREAD SILK AND RAYON

The words "Genuine Wrap Pure Thread Silk" appear in large conspicuous capital letters, while the words "and Rayon" appear on another line underneath in small capital letters.

PAR. 6. In the aforesaid ways and by the aforesaid means respondent makes, and has made, to the general public false and misleading statements with reference to the commodities offered for sale by it. Many articles and items of merchandise described in its advertisements, price lists, and other printed matter, and herein referred to, and on transfers appearing on the merchandise are so described and made up as to lead purchasers and prospective purchasers into the mistaken and erroneous belief that the said commodities are made largely from materials entirely different from that contained in the merchandise, and to lead purchasers and prospective purchasers into the mistaken and erroneous belief that the said merchandise contains finer materials of manufacture than the articles of merchandise actually contain.

PAR. 7. The use by the respondent of the words "Pure Thread Silk" and others of like import in conjunction with the words "and Rayon," and appearing anteriorly to the words "and Rayon," and being composed of large capital letters, and the words "and Rayon" appearing in small capital letters about one-half the size of the letters in the preceding line in a separate line below, serve to lead purchasers and prospective purchasers into the erroneous and mistaken belief that silk is the major material used in the manufacture of the merchandise made and sold by the respondent.

PAR. 8. The hosiery of the respondent on which appear the phrases heretofore set out in paragraph 5 above is not made entirely of the silk of the silkworm.

By the use of the phrases "Pure Thread Silk and Rayon," "Creptone with Silk Wrap," "Genuine Wrap Pure Thread Silk and Rayon," in the manner herein set out in paragraph 5 the purchasing and consuming public is led into the erroneous and mistaken belief that the major component of the hosiery whereupon these transfers appear is silk.

PAR. 9. In fact, in each and every instance cited in paragraphs 5, 6, and 7 above, and in other instances, the silk used in the manufacture of respondent's merchandise varies from an infinitesimal proportion in the hosiery branded and sold as "Creptone with Silk Wrap" to far less than a major proportion used in the hosiery manufactured and sold under the brand names of "Pure Thread Silk and Rayon" and "Genuine Wrap Pure Thread Silk and Rayon."

PAR. 10. The use of each and all of the foregoing false and misleading statements and representations by the respondent as herein set out has had, and now has, a tendency and capacity to lead distributors and the purchasing public into the belief that said statements and representations are true, and has induced and now induces members of the public to purchase the products of said respondent on account of such erroneous beliefs, to the resultant damage and injury of manufacturers and distributors, and to the injury of the general public. Said representations have thereby unfairly diverted trade to said respondent from competitors, and substantial injury has been done by respondent to competition in commerce among and between the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondent May Hosiery Mills, Inc. are to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce, within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

allegations of the complaint to be true, and states that it waives hearing on the charges set forth in the said complaint, and that, without further evidence or other intervening procedure, the Commission may issue and serve upon it its findings as to the facts and conclusion and an order to cease and desist from the violation of law charged in the complaint, and the Commission having made its findings as to the facts and its conclusion that said respondent has violated the provisions of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes,"

It is ordered, That the respondent, May Hosiery Mills, Inc., its officers, agents, representatives, and employes, in connection with the offering for sale, sale, and distribution of hosiery in interstate commerce or in the District of Columbia, do forthwith cease and desist from:

Using the word "silk" to designate and describe the material from which said hosiery is made, until and unless such material is composed entirely of silk, the product of the cocoon of the silk worm, or unless such material contains a substantial percentage of silk, the product of the cocoon of the silk worm, and the word "silk" is accompanied by a word or words, in equally conspicuous type and in close conjunction therewith, aptly and truthfully naming and describing such other yarn or yarns.

It is further ordered, That the respondent shall, within 60 days after service upon it of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which it has complied with this order.

HEIDELBERGER CONFECTIONERY COMPANY

Docket 1772. Complaint, Aug. 25, 1937¹—Decision, Sept. 10, 1937

Where a corporation engaged in manufacture and sale of candy, including certain assortments which were so packed and assembled as to involve, or which were designed to, or might, involve, use of a lottery scheme when sold and distributed to ultimate consumers thereof, and which included assortments composed of (1) number of one-pound boxes of candy, together with push card, for sale under a plan, and in accordance with said card's explanatory legend, pursuant to which purchaser pushing by chance number concealed under card's perforated disk paid for box of candy in accordance with such number pushed by chance; (2) number of penny chocolate covered candies of uniform size and shape, together with number of larger pieces and other articles of merchandise, to be given as prizes to purchasers of said pieces of uniform size, etc., selecting by chance one of a small number of said pieces, colored centers of which differed from those of the majority; and of (3) similar assortment, but without larger pieces or other merchandise, of uniform pieces, majority, but not all, of which had centers of same color, through which dealers were enabled to select from their stock other pieces for sale and distribution along with aforesaid assortment as a lottery or game of chance—

Sold, to wholesalers and retailers for display and resale to purchasing public in accordance with aforesaid sales plans, said assortments, and thereby supplied to and placed in the hands of others the means of conducting lotteries in the sale of its products, in accordance with aforesaid plans, enabling purchasing public, through game of chance, to procure said boxes at varying prices, or to procure larger pieces or other articles of merchandise, contrary to public policy long recognized by the common law and criminal statutes, and to an established public policy of the United States Government, and in competition with many who, unwilling to offer or sell candy so packed and assembled, or otherwise arranged and packed for sale to purchasing public as to involve a game of chance, refrain therefrom;

With capacity and tendency to induce purchasers to buy its said products in preference to candy offered and sold by its competitors and with result that many dealers in and ultimate purchasers of candy were attracted by said methods and manner of packing said product and by element of chance involved in sale thereof as above set forth, and thereby induced to purchase said candy, thus packed and sold by it, in preference to that offered and sold by said competitors who do not use same or equivalent methods, and with tendency and capacity, because of said game of chance, to divert to it trade and custom from its said competitors as aforesaid, exclude from said trade all competitors who are unwilling to and do not use such or equivalent methods as unlawful, lessen competition therein, and tend to create a monopoly thereof in it and such other distributors as use same or equivalent methods, deprive purchasing public of benefit of free competition in trade in question, and eliminate from said trade all actual, and exclude therefrom all potential, competitors who do not adopt and use such or equivalent methods:

Held, That such acts and practices were to the prejudice of the public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition.

Mr. Henry C. Lank for the Commission.

Gartner & Lemisch, of Philadelphia, Pa., for respondent.

AMENDED AND SUPPLEMENTAL COMPLAINT

Whereas, The Federal Trade Commission did heretofore, to wit, on March 11, 1930, issue its complaint herein charging and alleging that respondent was and had been guilty of unfair methods of competition in interstate commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes"; and

Whereas, This Commission having reason to believe that respondent herein has been and is using unfair methods of competition in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in said act, other than and in addition to those in relation to which the Commission issued its complaint as aforesaid, and it appearing to said Commission that a further proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest;

Now, therefore, Acting in the public interest, pursuant to the provisions of the Act of September 26, 1914, aforesaid, the Federal Trade Commission charges that Heidelberger Confectionery Company, a corporation, has been and now is using unfair methods of competition in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in said act, and states its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent is a corporation organized and doing business under the laws of the State of Pennsylvania, with its principal office and place of business located at 1720 North Second Street, Philadelphia, Pa. Respondent is now, and for several years last past has been, engaged in the manufacture of candy and in the sale and distribution thereof to wholesale and retail dealers located at points in the various States of the United States. Respondent causes and has caused its said products when sold to be transported from its principal place of business in the city of Philadelphia, State of Pennsylvania, to purchasers thereof in Pennsylvania and in other States of the United States at their respective points of location.

There is now, and has been for several years last past, a course of trade and commerce by said respondent in such candy between and among the States of the United States. In the course and conduct of said business, respondent is in competition with other corporations and with partnerships and individuals engaged in the manufacture of candy and in the sale and distribution thereof in commerce between and among the various States of the United States.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of its business, as described in paragraph 1 hereof, respondent sells and has sold to wholesale and retail dealers assortments of candy so packed and assembled as to involve, or which are designed to or may involve, the use of a lottery scheme when sold and distributed to the ultimate consumers thereof.

(a) One of said assortments is composed of 24 one-pound boxes of candy, together with a device commonly called a "push card." The boxes of candy contained in said assortment are sold and distributed to the consuming public by means of said push card in the following manner: The push card is a paper card having 24 partially perforated discs. Concealed within each disc is a number. The numbers concealed within each disc are 39 or lower. Customers push or separate one of the discs from the card, and when such disc is separated the number is disclosed, and such customers pay in cents the amount of such number. Each purchaser receives one of the said boxes of candy. The numbers under the discs are concealed from purchasers and prospective purchasers, and they do not know how much they will have to pay for one of the boxes of candy until a selection has been made and the disc removed from the card. The amount which customers pay for said boxes of candy is thus determined wholly by lot or chance. The push card bears legends informing purchasers and prospective purchasers of the plan or method by which said candy is being sold or distributed.

(b) Another of said assortments of candy is composed of a number of boxes of chocolate covered candy of uniform size and shape, together with a number of larger pieces of candy and other articles of merchandise, which larger pieces of candy and other articles of merchandise are to be given as prizes to purchasers of said chocolate covered candies in the following manner: The majority of the said chocolate covered candies in said assortment have centers of the same color, but a small number of said chocolate covered candies have centers of a different color. The said pieces of candy of uniform size and shape in said assortment retail at the price of 1¢ each, but the purchaser who procures one of the said candies having a center of a color different from the majority of the said pieces of candy is entitled to receive and is to be given free of charge one of the said larger pieces of candy or one of the other articles of merchandise. The aforesaid purchasers of said candy who procure a piece of candy having a center colored differently from the majority of said pieces of candy thus procure one of the said larger pieces of candy or one of the other articles of merchandise wholly by lot or chance.

PAR. 3. The wholesale dealers to whom respondent sells and has sold its assortments resell the same to retail dealers, and said retail dealers and the retail dealers to whom respondent sells direct expose and have exposed said assortments for sale and sell and have sold said candy to the purchasing public in accordance with the aforesaid sales plans. Respondent thus supplies to and places in the hands of others the means of conducting lotteries in the sale of its products in accordance with the sales plans hereinabove set forth. Said sales plans have the capacity and tendency of inducing purchasers thereof to purchase respondent's said products in preference to candy offered for sale and sold by its competitors.

PAR. 4. The sale of said candy to the purchasing public in the manner above alleged involves a game of chance or the sale of a chance to procure (a) boxes of candy at varying prices, or (b) and (c) larger pieces of candy or other articles of merchandise. The use by respondent of said methods in the sale of candy, and the sale of candy by and through the use thereof and by the aid of said methods, is a practice of the sort which the common law and criminal statutes have long deemed contrary to public policy, and is contrary to an established public policy of the Government of the United States. The use by respondent of said methods has the tendency unduly to hinder competition or create monopoly in this, to wit: that the use thereof has the tendency and capacity to exclude from the candy trade competitors who do not adopt and use the same methods or equivalent or similar methods involving the same or equivalent or similar elements of chance or lottery schemes. Many persons, firms, and corporations who make and sell candy in competition with respondent, as above alleged, are unwilling to offer for sale or sell candy so packed and assembled as above alleged, or otherwise arranged and packed for sale to the purchasing public so as to involve a game of chance, and such competitors refrain therefrom.

PAR. 5. Many dealers in and ultimate purchasers of candy are attracted by respondent's said methods and manner of packing said candy and by the element of chance involved in the sale thereof in the manner above described, and are thereby induced to purchase said candy so packed and sold by respondent in preference to candy offered for sale and sold by said competitors of respondent who do not use the same or equivalent methods. The use of said methods by respondent has the tendency and capacity, because of said game of chance, to divert to respondent trade and custom from its said competitors who do not use the same or equivalent methods; to exclude from said candy trade all competitors who are unwilling to and who do not use the same or equivalent methods because the same are unlawful; to lessen competition in said candy trade and to tend to create a monopoly of said candy trade in respondent and in such other distributors of candy as use the same or equivalent methods; and to deprive the purchasing public of the benefit of free competition in said candy trade. The use of said methods by respondent has the tendency and capacity to eliminate from said candy trade all actual competitors, and to exclude therefrom all potential competitors who do not adopt and use said methods or equivalent methods.

PAR. 6. The aforementioned methods, acts, and practices of respondent are all to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors, as hereinabove alleged. Said methods, acts, and practices constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Company, a corporation, charging it with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of the provisions of said act. After the issuance of said amended and supplemental complaint, the respondent filed answer thereto admitting the averments of said amended and supplemental complaint and waived hearing on the said charges contained therein. Thereafter this proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on the said amended and supplemental complaint and the answer thereto and the Commission having duly considered the same and being now fully advised in the premises finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public and makes its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent is a corporation organized and doing business under the laws of the State of Pennsylvania, with its principal office and place of business located at 1720 North Second Street, Philadelphia, Pa. Respondent is now, and for several years last past has been, engaged in the manufacture of candy and in the sale and distribution thereof to wholesale and retail dealers located at points in the various States of the United States. Respondent causes and has caused its said products when sold to be transported from its principal place of business in the city of Philadelphia, State of Pennsylvania, to purchasers thereof in Pennsylvania and in other States of the United States at their respective points of location.

There is now, and has been for several years last past, a course of trade and commerce by said respondent in such candy between and among the States of the United States. In the course and conduct of said business, respondent is in competition with other corporations and with partnerships and individuals engaged in the manufacture of candy and in the sale and distribution thereof in commerce between and among the various States of the United States.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of its business, as described in paragraph 1 hereof, respondent sells and has sold to wholesale and retail dealers assortments of candy so packed and assembled as to involve, or which are designed to or may involve, the use of a lottery scheme when sold and distributed to the ultimate consumers thereof.

tributed to the consuming public by means of said push card in the following manner: The push card is a paper card having 24 partially perforated discs. Concealed within each disc is a number. The numbers concealed within each disc are 39 or lower. Customers push or separate one of the discs from the card, and when such disc is separated the number is disclosed, and such customers pay in cents the amount of such number. Each purchaser receives one of the said boxes of candy. The numbers under the discs are concealed from purchasers and prospective purchasers, and they do not know how much they will have to pay for one of the boxes of candy until a selection has been made and the disc removed from the card. The amount which customers pay for said boxes of candy is thus determined wholly by lot or chance. The push card bears legends informing purchasers and prospective purchasers of the plan or method by which said candy is being sold or distributed.

(b) Another of said assortments of candy is composed of a number of pieces of chocolate covered candy of uniform size and shape, together with a number of larger pieces of candy and other articles of merchandise, which larger pieces of candy and other articles of merchandise are to be given as prizes to purchasers of said chocolate covered candies in the following manner: The majority of the said chocolate covered candies and said assortment have centers of the same color, but a small number of said chocolate covered candies have centers of a different color. The said pieces of candy of uniform size and shape in said assortment retail at the price of 1¢ each, but the purchaser who procures one of the said candies having a center of a color different from the majority of the said pieces of candy is entitled to receive and is to be given free of charge one of the said larger pieces of candy or one of the other articles of merchandise. The aforesaid purchasers of said candy who procure a piece of candy having a center colored differently from the majority of said pieces of candy thus procure one of the said larger pieces of candy or one of the other articles of merchandise wholly by lot or chance.

from their stock, to be sold along with said assortment containing pieces of candy of uniform size and shape, and to distribute the candy purchased from respondent and the candy taken from their stock as a lottery or game of chance.

PAR. 3. The wholesale dealers to whom respondent sells and has sold its assortments resell the same to retail dealers, and said retail dealers and the retail dealers to whom respondent sells direct expose and have exposed said assortments for sale and sell and have sold said candy to the purchasing public in accordance with the aforesaid sales plans. Respondent thus supplies to and places in the hands of others the means of conducting lotteries in the sale of its products in accordance with the sales plans hereinabove set forth. Said sales plans have the capacity and tendency of inducing purchasers thereof to purchase respondent's said products in preference to candy offered for sale and sold by its competitors.

PAR. 4. The sale of said candy to the purchasing public in the manner above described involves a game of chance or the sale of a chance to procure (a) boxes of candy at varying prices, or (b) and (c) larger pieces of candy or other articles of merchandise. The use by respondent of said methods in the sale of candy, and the sale of candy by and through the use thereof and by the aid of said methods, is a practice of the sort which the common law and criminal statutes have long deemed contrary to public policy, and is contrary to an established public policy of the Government of the United States. The use by respondent of said methods has the tendency unduly to hinder competition or create monopoly in this, to wit: that the use thereof has the tendency and capacity to exclude from the candy trade competitors who do not adopt and use the same methods or equivalent or similar methods involving the same or equivalent or similar elements of chance or lottery schemes. Many persons, firms and corporations who make and sell candy in competition with respondent are unwilling to offer for sale or sell candy so packed and assembled or otherwise arranged and packed for sale to the purchasing public so as to involve a game of chance, and such competitors refrain therefrom.

PAR. 5. Many dealers in and ultimate purchasers of candy are attracted by respondent's said methods and manner of packing said candy and by the element of chance involved in the sale thereof in the manner above described, and are thereby induced to purchase said candy so packed and sold by respondent in preference to candy offered for sale and sold by said competitors of respondent who do not use the same or equivalent methods. The use of said methods by respondent has the tendency and capacity, because of said game of chance to divert to respondent trade and custom from its said competitors who do not use the same or equivalent methods; to exclude from said candy trade all competitors who are unwilling to and who do not use the same or equivalent methods because the same are unlawful; to lessen competition in said candy trade and to tend to create a monopoly of said candy trade in respondent and in such other distributors of candy as use the same or equivalent methods; and to deprive the purchasing public of the benefit of free competition in said candy trade. The use of said methods by respondent has the tendency and capacity to eliminate from said candy trade all actual competitors, and to exclude therefrom all potential competitors who do not adopt and use said methods or equivalent methods.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondent Heidelberg Confectionery Company, a corporation, are to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce, within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

This proceeding having been heard by the Federal Trade Commission upon the amended and supplemental complaint of the Commission and the answer filed herein on September 2, 1937, by the respondent admitting all the averments contained in said amended and supplemental complaint and the respondent having waived hearing on the charges contained in said amended and supplemental complaint and the Commission having made its findings as to the facts and its conclusion that the said respondent has violated the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

It is ordered, That the respondent Heidelberg Confectionery Company, a corporation, its officers, representatives, agents, and employees, in connection with the offering for sale, sale, and distribution of candy in interstate commerce, do forthwith cease and desist from:

COMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION
OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 23, 1914

Docket 2910. Complaint, Aug. 26, 1936—Decision, Sept. 14, 1937

Where an individual engaged in distribution and sale, in interstate commerce, of "Kodicon" medicinal preparation for relief, or asserted relief, of arthritic and rheumatic pains, etc., in substantial competition with those likewise similarly engaged in distribution and sale of medicinal preparations and treatments similar to it for same ailments for which said individual represented it as an effective remedy, in advertising his said "Kodicon" in newspapers and pamphlets of general circulation through the United States, and through various circulars, advertising folders, and literature distributed to customers and prospective customers, and through testimonial reproduction of purported purchaser thereof, and through leaflets, as case might be—

Represented that said "Kodicon" constituted an effective and reliable remedy or treatment for arthritis, neuritis, neuralgia, and gout, and for rheumatism, rheumatic fever, and other rheumatic ailments, and was a competent treatment for prevention of head colds and would stop pain, facts being product in question, principle ingredient of which was aspirin, recognized analgesic for temporary relief of minor forms of pain, was not a remedy or competent or effective treatment for said various ailments, and would not prevent head colds nor stop pain, and representations made by said individual with respect thereto were grossly exaggerated, false, misleading and untrue;

With tendency and capacity to mislead and deceive a substantial portion of purchasing public into the erroneous belief that all of said representations were true, and with result that a number of the consuming public, by reason of such mistaken and erroneous belief thus engendered, purchased substantial volume of his said product, and trade was unfairly diverted to him from those likewise engaged in sale of similar preparations and treatments for same ailments for which said individual represented said "Kodicon" as an effective remedy, and who truthfully advertise their products; to the substantial injury of competition in commerce;

Held, That such acts and practices were to the prejudice of the public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition.

COMPLAINT

PAR. 2. Said respondent being engaged in business as aforesaid caused said preparation, when sold, to be transported from his office and place of business in the State of Massachusetts to purchasers thereof located at various points in States of the United States other than the State from which such shipments were made. Respondent now maintains a constant current of trade in commerce in said preparation, distributed and sold by him between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 3. In the course and conduct of his said business, respondent is now and has been in substantial competition with other individuals, firms, and corporations likewise engaged in the business of distributing, and selling medicinal preparations and treatments similar to that of "Kodicon," and preparations and treatments for the same ailments for which respondent represents "Kodicon" to be an effective remedy, in commerce among and between the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

In the course and operation of his business and for the purpose of inducing individuals to purchase "Kodicon" respondent has caused advertisements to be inserted in newspapers and magazines of general circulation throughout the United States, and has caused to be prepared and printed circulars, advertising folders, and literature which are circulated and distributed to customers and prospective customers located in the various States of the United States.

Certain advertising matter used by respondent is herein set out as illustrative of the claims respondent makes concerning the curative and remedial qualities of "Kodicon," but is not all inclusive. Such advertisements are as follows:

KODICON—For relief of pains incident to Arthritis, Rheumatism, Neuritis, Neuralgia, Gout, Nervousness, loss of sleep. The relief of pain and discomfort in simple headaches; relief for muscular aches and pains.

RHEUMATISM—KODICON for safe internal remedy. For relief of pain in arthritis, rheumatism, neuralgia, neuritis, loss of sleep, and nervousness. Stops the pains, radiates relief—makes life worth living. * * * Kodicon your pains away. * * *

Rheumatic Fever * * * Subacute Rheumatism * * * Chronic Rheumatism * * * Muscular Rheumatism * * * Rheumatoid Arthritis * * * Arthritis * * * Gout * * * Kodicon has brought great relief to sufferers from these ills.

* * * the prevention and relief of head colds.

In all of its advertising literature, respondent represents, through statements and representations as herein set out, and through statements of similar import and effect, that,

1. Kodicon is a competent treatment for the prevention of head colds.

2. Kodicon is an effective treatment for rheumatism, arthritis, neuritis, neuralgia, loss of sleep, rheumatic fever, nervousness, and gout.

3. Kodicon will "stop" pain.

PAR. 4. The representations made by respondent with respect to the effect of his product when used are grossly exaggerated, false, misleading, and untrue. In truth and in fact "Kodicon" is not a competent treatment for the prevention of head colds, nor will said treatment prevent head colds. Kodicon is not an effective treatment for rheumatism arthritis, neuralgia, neuritis, loss of sleep, rheumatic fever, nervousness, and gout, and in such cases will do no more than afford temporary relief from pain. Kodicon will not "stop" pain.

PAR. 5. Each and all of the false and misleading statements and representations made by respondent, as hereinabove set forth, in his advertising in newspapers, magazines, pamphlets, and other advertising literature in offering for sale, and selling his product, had, and now have, a tendency and capacity to mislead and deceive a substantial portion of the purchasing public into the erroneous belief that all of said representations are true. Further, as a direct consequence of this mistaken and erroneous belief, induced by advertisements and misrepresentations of respondent, as hereinabove enumerated, a number of the consuming public purchased a substantial volume of respondent's product with the result that trade has been unfairly diverted to respondent from individuals, firms, and corporations likewise engaged in the business of selling medicinal preparations similar to "Kodicon," and preparations and treatments for the same ailments for which respondent represents "Kodicon" to be an effective remedy, and who truthfully advertise their products. As a result thereof, substantial injury has been done, and is now being done by respondent to competition in commerce among and between the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 6. The above and foregoing acts, practices, and representations of the respondent have been, and are, all to the prejudice of the public and respondent's competitors as aforesaid and have been, and are, unfair methods of competition within the meaning and intent of Section 5 of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

is in the interest of the public and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent, Bernard M. Wolf, is an individual trading as Kodicon Products Company, with his principal office and place of business located at 5 Bromfield Street, Boston, Mass.

The respondent, Bernard M. Wolf, doing business as aforesaid, is now, and has been since the month of September 1934, engaged in the business of distributing and selling in interstate commerce a medicinal preparation which respondent designates as "Kodicon."

PAR. 2. The respondent being engaged in business as aforesaid, caused the medicinal preparation "Kodicon," when sold to be transported from his office and place of business in the State of Massachusetts to purchasers thereof located at various points in States of the United States other than the State from which such shipments were made.

Respondent has since the month of September 1934, maintained, and now maintains, a constant current of trade and commerce in said product "Kodicon" distributed and sold by him between and among the various States of the United States.

PAR. 3. During the conduct of his business, respondent has been, and is now, in substantial competition with other individuals, firms, and corporations likewise engaged in the business of distributing and selling medicinal preparations and treatments similar to that of "Kodicon," and preparations and treatments for the same ailments for which respondent represents "Kodicon" to be an effective remedy, in commerce among and between the various States of the United States.

Respondent, in an effort to create a market for his product and to cause the purchasing public to buy "Kodicon," caused advertisements to be inserted in newspapers and pamphlets of general circulation throughout the United States.

Respondent also caused to be prepared and printed various circulars, advertising folders and literature concerning his product "Kodicon" and circulated and distributed, and now circulates and distributes to customers and prospective customers said circulars and folders.

In said advertisements referred to above, respondent made the following representations concerning the product "Kodicon,"

Kodicon for relief of pains incident to arthritis, rheumatism, neuritis, neuralgia, gout, nervousness and loss of sleep * * *

The following testimonial of a reputed purchaser of "Kodicon" appeared in the Boston Daily Record, a newspaper with general interstate circulation, April 9, 1936:

"Had suffered for over 12 years. Had X-rays of my limbs. Have taken other medicines with no avail. Took KODICON. That was the answer to my prayers. I took it faithfully and my pains are gone." Take KODICON—The amazing remedy for arthritis, rheumatism, neuritis, neuralgia, gout. Price $1.00.

On a leaflet or small advertising circular, which respondent uses in advertising "Kodicon," the following heading appears:

WHY KODICON IS SO EFFECTIVE.

Immediately under the foregoing heading, respondent enumerates the following ailments and gives a definition of each ailment:

Rheumatism; rheumatic fever; sub-acute rheumatism; chronic rheumatism; muscular rheumatism; rheumatoid arthritis; arthritis; gout; neuralgia; and neuritis.

Following the foregoing list of ailments and their definitions, the respondent sets forth the following statement:

Kodicon has brought great relief to sufferers from these ills.

In all of his advertising literature, respondent represents through statements and representations as herein set out, and through statements of similar import and effect, that

1. "Kodicon" is a competent treatment for the prevention of head colds;
2. "Kodicon" is an effective treatment for rheumatism, arthritis, neuritis, neuralgia, loss of sleep, rheumatic fever, nervousness and gout;
3. "Kodicon" will Stop pain.

PAR. 4. Respondent's product "Kodicon" consists of acetyl salicylate, 5 grains, and colchicin 1/250ths of a grain.

Acetyl salicylate is commonly known as aspirin and is recognized by the medical profession as an analgesic for the temporary relief of minor forms of pain.

Colchicin is also an analgesic, and is prescribed by many of the medical profession for the relief of pains associated with some ailments. The amount of colchicin in "Kodicon", however, is so negligible as to render it impotent as an analgesic for the various ailments set forth in respondent's advertising statements. Medical testimony was given to the effect that in some instances "Kodicon" might act as an analgesic in relieving mild or superficial pains.

1037

The representations made by respondent with respect to the effect of his product, when used, are grossly exaggerated, false, misleading, and untrue.

In truth and in fact, "Kodicon" is not a remedy, or a competent or effective treatment for arthritis, rheumatism, neuritis, neuralgia, gout, rheumatic fever, sub-acute rheumatism, chronic rheumatism, muscular rheumatism, or rheumatoid arthritis. In truth and in fact "Kodicon" will not prevent head colds, nor will it "stop" pain.

PAR. 5. Each and all of the false and misleading statements and representations made by respondent, as hereinabove set forth in his advertising in newspapers, pamphlets, and other advertising literature in offering for sale, and selling his product, had, and now have, the tendency and capacity to mislead and deceive a substantial portion of the purchasing public into the erroneous belief that all of said representations are true.

As a direct result of this mistaken and erroneous belief induced by advertisements and misrepresentations of respondent, as hereinabove enumerated a number of the consuming public purchased a substantial volume of respondent's product with a result that trade has been unfairly diverted to respondent from individuals, firms, and corporations likewise engaged in the business of selling medicinal preparations similar to "Kodicon," and preparations and treatments for the same ailments for which respondent represents "Kodicon" to be an effective remedy, and who truthfully advertise their products.

As a result thereof, substantial injury has been done, and is now being done by respondent to competition in commerce among and between the various States of the United States, and in the District of Columbia.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of respondent, Bernard M. Wolf, trading as Kodicon Products Company, are to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ent, testimony and other evidence taken before Edward M. Averill and Robert S. Hall, examiners of the Commission theretofore duly designated by it in support of the allegations of the complaint and in opposition thereto, and brief in support of the complaint, respondent having filed no brief and having not requested oral argument, and the Commission having made its findings as to the facts and its conclusion that said respondent has violated the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

It is ordered, That the respondent, Bernard M. Wolf, individually, and trading as Kodicon Products Company or under any other trade name, his representatives, agents, and employees in connection with the offering for sale, sale and distribution of a medicinal product now known as "Kodicon," or any product containing the same, or substantially the same, ingredients sold under that name or under any name, in interstate commerce, or in the District of Columbia, do forthwith cease and desist from representing that said product:

1. Is an effective and reliable remedy or treatment for arthritis, neuritis, neuralgia, or gout;
2. Is a competent treatment for the prevention of head colds;
3. Will "stop" pain;
4. Is an effective and reliable remedy or treatment for rheumatism, rheumatic fever, sub-acute rheumatism, chronic rheumatism, or muscular rheumatism, or any other rheumatic ailment.

It is further ordered, That the respondent shall within 30 days after service upon him of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which he has complied with this order.

COMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 26, 1914

Docket 2744. Complaint, Mar. 14, 1936—Decision, Sept. 17, 1937

Where an individual engaged in sale of "Nu-Nail," toilet preparation composed of American red vegetable dye, pure castor oil, and oil of sweet orange scent, and bottled and labeled by her for sale through department stores, drug jobbers, and beauty supply jobbers in half-ounce and four-ounce bottles, after purchase from manufacturer thereof in fifty gallon drums, and, as thus engaged, in substantial competition with others engaged in interstate sale of toilet preparations for use on the nails, in extensively advertising said preparation on a national scale through newspapers in various cities throughout the United States, through various periodicals of national circulation, through pamphlets, circulars, and folders, and through counter displays and newspaper advertising copy, etc., furnished to distributors and retail dealers in said preparation—

- (a) Represented that said preparation was a nail food and effective conditioner and nail rejuvenator, use of which would bring new life and vitality to the nails and keep the cuticle strong and healthy, and would eliminate brittleness, breaking, etc., ridging, white spots, and ingrown toe nails, and prevent nail biting; and
- (b) Represented, through use of word "laboratory" as a part of her trade name, that she conducted, operated, or maintained a laboratory for the purpose of manufacturing, testing, or experimenting with her said preparation;

Facts being defective nails and ordinary nails containing imperfections are due to systemic factor, application of said preparation to exterior of nail will not cause any radical change in physiology thereof, and will not eliminate breakage, etc., nor have other effects attributed to it as above set forth, but can only soften the epidermis and oil and polish the nail, and preparation in question is not a nail food nor an effective conditioner, and individual in question maintained no laboratories for manufacture of said product or for testing or experimenting therewith;

With capacity and tendency to mislead purchasing public into erroneous and untrue belief that said preparation will affect the nails as represented in such advertisements, and into purchase thereof on account of such erroneous belief, and to divert trade unfairly to her from competitors selling similar products in commerce who do not misrepresent the same:

COMPLAINT

PARAGRAPH 1. Said respondent, Berenice Cohn, is an individual trading and doing business under the name and style of Bergo Laboratories, with her office and principal place of business located at 270 South Windsor Boulevard in the city of Los Angeles, within the State of California. Said respondent is now and for more than two years last past, has been engaged in the sale of a toilet preparation for the nails, under the trade name of "Nu-Nail" and in the distribution thereof between and among the various States of the United States. Respondent causes said toilet preparation for the nails when sold by her to be transported to the purchasers thereof located in the State of California and in various other States of the United States. There is now and for more than two years last past has been, a constant current of trade and commerce by respondent in such nail preparation between and among the various States of the United States. In the course and conduct of her business the said respondent is now, and for more than two years last past has been, in substantial competition in commerce between and among the various States of the United States with various other individuals, firms, partnerships, and corporations engaged in the interstate sale of toilet preparation for the nails.

PAR. 2. Said toilet preparation for the nails, "Nu-Nail," is a liquid composed of American red vegetable dye, pure castor oil, and oil of sweet orange scent and is manufactured for said respondent by the E. S. Miller Laboratories, Inc., of Los Angeles, Calif., and is purchased by said respondent in fifty-gallon drums. Said respondent causes the preparation to be removed from the fifty-gallon drum and placed in one-half ounce and four-ounce bottles which are then labelled and sold by respondent through department stores, drug jobbers, and beauty supply jobbers. In making sales of the said toilet preparation for the nails, "Nu-Nail," respondent uses direct solicitation and also traveling salesmen who handle the said product on a commission basis.

PAR. 3. In the regular course and conduct of her business, as hereinbefore set out in paragraph 1, said respondent has been and now is engaged in extensive advertising on a national scale as a means of furthering and aiding in the interstate sale and distribution of her said toilet preparation for the nails, "Nu-Nail." As mediums of advertising said respondent has used and is now using newspapers located in various cities throughout the United States, various magazines with national circulation such as Vogue and Harper's Bazaar, pamphlets, circulars, and folders.

In addition to the advertising which has been and now is being done by said respondent in newspapers, magazines, pamphlets, circulars, and folders, as hereinabove set forth, said respondent has been and now is furnishing to the distributors of and retail dealers in her said toilet preparation for the nails, "Nu-Nail" located in cities throughout the various States of the United States, pamphlets, circulars, folders, counter display, and copy for newspaper advertising, and space has been and is left at the bottom of all advertising copy for the insertion of the name and address of the particular dealer using the advertising and various distributors and retail dealers have used and are using said advertisements furnished to them by said respondent. All of said advertisements were and are intended by said respondent, Berenice Cohn, trading as Bergo Laboratories, to be read by the general public and in particular by the purchasers of toilet preparations for the nails and to cause and induce said purchasers to buy nail preparations sold and distributed by said respondent.

PAR. 4. Said respondent in her said advertisement of the toilet preparation for the nails known as "Nu-Nail" and sold by her, has made and is now making various false, deceptive, and misleading statements concerning said preparation. Among the said statements which said respondent has used and is now using in her advertisements in newspapers, magazines, pamphlets, circulars, folders, counter displays, and copy for newspaper advertising furnished to distributors and retail dealers with space at the bottom for insertion of the name and address of the particular dealer using the advertisement, are statements that "Nu-Nail" is a nail food, an effective conditioner, a nail rejuvenator and that it eliminates brittleness, breaking of the nails, splitting, peeling, ridging, white spots, and ingrown toenails; that it prevents nail-biting; and that it brings new life and vitality to the nails and keeps the cuticle strong and healthy.

The above statements made by said respondent in her said advertisements and in the advertising copy and pamphlets, circulars, folders, and counter display furnished by said respondent to distributors and retail dealers, is false, deceptive and misleading because, in truth and in fact, said "Nu-Nail" is not a nail food, is not an effective conditioner, is not a nail rejuvenator; it does not eliminate brittleness, breaking of the nails, splitting, peeling, ridging, white spots, and ingrown toenails; it does not prevent nail-biting; it does not bring new life and vitality to the nails and it does not keep the cuticle strong and healthy.

Said respondent, Berenice Cohn, in the regular course and conduct of her business, trades under the name of Bergo Laboratories and advertises as Bergo Laboratories, whereas in truth and in fact said respondent does not maintain any laboratory, does not manufacture her own product, and does not test the same, but simply bottles and labels the preparation which is bought by her in bulk.

PAR. 5. The use by the said respondent, Berenice Cohn, trading as Bergo Laboratories, of the foregoing false, deceptive, and misleading misrepresentations alleged to be used by the said respondent in paragraph 4 hereof, have had and do now have the capacity and tendency to mislead and deceive the public into the erroneous and untrue belief that "Nu-Nail" is in truth and in fact a nail food, an effective conditioner, a nail rejuvenator; that it eliminates brittleness, breaking of the nails, splitting, peeling, ridging, white spots, and ingrown toenails; that it prevents nail-biting; that it brings new life and vitality to the nails and keeps the cuticle strong and healthy; and that said respondent maintains and operates a laboratory where "Nu-Nail" is manufactured and tested by her, and has thereby induced and does now induce the consuming public and especially the users of toilet preparations for the nails, acting in said erroneous belief, to purchase "Nu-Nail" in preference to toilet preparations for the nails offered for sale by other manufacturers and distributors of toilet preparations for the nails who do not falsely, deceptively, and misleadingly advertise their said products. As a result of such false, deceptive, and misleading representations on the part of said respondent, trade has been diverted to respondent from such manufacturers and distributors of toilet preparations for the nails who do not falsely, deceptively, and misleadingly advertise their products, and thereby injury has been done and is being done by the said respondent.

PAR. 6. Said false, deceptive, and misleading representations of said respondent contained in its advertising have resulted in injury to respondent's competitors and to retail dealers and distributors and in prejudice to the buying public and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, and entitled "An

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission on the 14th day of March 1936, issued and served its complaint in this proceeding upon the respondent, Berenice Cohn, an individual, trading as Bergo Laboratories, charging said respondent with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of the provisions of said act. After the issuance of said complaint and the filing of the respondent's answer thereto, testimony and other evidence in support of the allegations of said complaint were introduced by Reuben J. Martin, attorney for the Commission, before Charles P. Vicini, an examiner of the Commission, theretofore duly designated by it, and in opposition to the allegations of the complaint by Henry Haves, attorney for the respondent, and said testimony and other evidence were duly recorded and filed in the office of the Commission. Thereafter, the proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on the said complaint, the answer thereto, testimony and other evidence, and the brief in support of the complaint (the said respondent having failed to file brief, and not having requested oral argument), and the Commission having duly considered the same, and being fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom.

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. The respondent, Berenice Cohn, is an individual trading and doing business under the name and style of Bergo Laboratories, with her office and principal place of business located at 270 South Windsor Boulevard in the city of Los Angeles, within the State of California. Said respondent is now, and for more than two years last past has been, engaged in the sale of a toilet preparation for use on the nails under the trade name of "Nu-Nail," and in the distribution thereof between and among the various States of the United States. The respondent causes said toilet preparation, when sold by her, to be transported from her aforesaid place of business in the State of California, to the purchasers thereof located in the State of California and in various other States of the United States. There is now, and for more than two years last past has been, a constant current of trade and commerce by said respondent in said nail preparation between and among the various States of the United States. In the course and conduct of her said business, the said respondent is now, and for more than two years last past has been, in substantial competition in commerce between and among the various States of the United States, with various other individuals, firms, partnerships, and corporations engaged in the interstate sale of toilet preparations for use on the nails.

PAR. 2. The toilet preparation for use on the nails, "Nu-Nail," sold by the respondent, is a liquid composed of American red vegetable dye, pure castor oil, and oil of sweet orange scent. Until February 1936, "Nu-Nail" was manufactured for the respondent by the E. S. Miller Laboratory, Inc., of Los Angeles, Calif. Since February 1936, it has been manufactured for the respondent by Brunswick Wholesale Drug Company of Los Angeles, California. Respondent purchases the preparation "Nu-Uail" from the manufacturer in 50 gallon drums. Said respondent then causes the preparation "Nu-Nail" to be removed from the 50 gallon drum and bottles it in one-half ounce and four ounce bottles which are then labeled and sold by the respondent through department stores, drug jobbers, and beauty supply jobbers. In making sales of the said toilet preparation for use on the nails, "Nu-Nail," respondent uses direct solicitation and also employs traveling salesmen who solicit the sale of the said product on a commission basis.

PAR. 3. In the regular course and conduct of her said business, the respondent has been, and now is, engaged in extensive advertising on a national scale as a means of furthering and aiding in the interstate sale and distribution of her said toilet preparation for use on nails, "Nu-Nail." Respondent has used and is now using as media of advertising, newspapers located in various cities throughout the United States, various magazines having national circulation, such as "Vogue" and "Harper's Bazaar" and also pamphlets, circulars, and folders. In addition to the advertising which has been and now is being done by said respondent in newspapers, magazines, pamphlets, circulars, and folders, the respondent has also been and now is furnishing to the distributors of and retail dealers in her said toilet preparation for use on the nails, "Nu-Nail," located in cities throughout the various States of the United States, pamphlets, circulars, folders, counter display, and copy for newspaper advertising. Space has been, and is now left at the bottom of all of said advertising copy for the insertion of the name and address of the particular dealer using the advertising, and various distributors and retail dealers have used and are using said advertisements, copy for which was and is so furnished to them by said respondent. All of such said advertisements were and are intended by the respondent to be read by the general public and in particular by that portion of the general public which purchases toilet preparations for use on the nails and to cause and induce said purchasers to buy the preparation for use on the nails, "Nu-Nail," sold and distributed by said respondent.

PAR. 4. Respondent in her said advertisements of the preparation for use on the nails known as "Nu-Nail" which is sold by her, has made, and is now making various statements concerning the qualities of said preparation "Nu-Nail" and the benefits which will accrue to the users thereof. The representations which said respondent has used and is now using in her advertisements in newspapers, magazines, pamphlets, circulars, folders, counter displays and copy for newspaper advertising furnished by her to distributors and retail dealers contain the following statements:

"Nu-Nail," the scientific nail conditioner that eliminates breakage and brittleness, giving nails new life, new luster, new vitality.

"Nu-Nail" stops breakage of the nails.

"Nu-Nail" makes the nails hard, strong, pliable, thus eliminating that brittleness which too often results in split ends and breaking * * * positively stops nail biting.

"Nu-Nail" is not a polish, it is a food, an effective conditioner that enables every woman to have lustrously beautiful and shapeful nails.

Applying it (Nu-Nail) night and morning to the nails and cuticle will tend to prevent hang nails, nail splitting and breaking.

"Nu-Nail" made of pure essential oil * * * a scientifically compounded preparation to correct a tendency to hang nails and splitting.

"Nu-Nail" overcomes the habit of biting nails.

Use this fragrant orange tinted preparation night and morning and soon even the brittlest nails will become flexible.

Nails that break require "Nu-Nail." Nails become brittle and break when not properly nourished. To thoroughly discourage nails from such an annoying practice this very pleasant preparation is suggested.

This new preparation rejuvenates tired lifeless nails.

Take a vacation from broken nails. "Nu-Nail—the original nail rejuvenator—ends brittleness, peeling, splitting—ragged cuticle and nail biting."

Summertime is broken nail time unless you use "Nu-Nail."

"Nu-Nail" stops nail breakage.

PAR. 5. Defective nails and the ordinary nail containing imperfections are due to a systemic factor behind such condition. The application of respondent's preparation, "Nu-Nail," to the exterior of the nail will not cause any radical change in the physiology of the nail. The only effect produced and which can be produced by the use of respondent's preparation, "Nu-Nail," is to soften the epidermis. "Nu-Nail" will not eliminate breakage, brittleness, splitting, or peeling of the nails. "Nu-Nail" is not a nail tonic. "Nu-Nail" affects only the surface or exterior portion of the nail and such external application does not and cannot affect the growing cells of the nail. "Nu-Nail" does not and cannot give new life to nails. Nails are deeply rooted and grow rapidly. The only portion of the nail which can be affected by the application of "Nu-Nail" is the portion which has grown into visibility.

PAR. 6. Nail brittleness is caused by many different disturbances. The application of respondent's preparation "Nu-Nail" to the exterior of the nail has no effect upon the causes of the brittleness, and "Nu-Nail," in cases where brittleness is due to disease, is powerless to rectify the causes and can do no more than to oil and polish the nail. "Nu-Nail" is not a nail food and the external application of "Nu-Nail" in nowise affects the growing cells or the formation or development of the nail. "Nu-Nail" is not an effective conditioner because it only affects the external portion of the nail. It does not affect the fundamental cause of defects in the nails. The biting of nails is due to nervousness in the individual, and respondent's preparation "Nu-Nail" does not affect the nervous condition of the user and cannot and will not prevent or stop the biting of the nails. "Nu-Nail" will not remove or eliminate white spots on the nails and the use of "Nu-Nail" will not affect nor promote the growth of the nails nor will it bring life and vitality to the nails.

PAR. 7. Respondent does not maintain any laboratories for the purpose of manufacturing the said product "Nu-Nail" nor of testing or experimenting with the same.

PAR. 8. The advertisements and recommendations of respondent as set out herein in paragraph 4 are false, misleading, and deceptive and have had and do now have the capacity and tendency to mislead the purchasing public into the erroneous and untrue belief that "Nu-Nail" will affect the nails as represented in such advertisements, and into the purchase of respondent's said product on account of such erroneous belief. The misstatements and misrepresentations in such advertisements have had and do now have the capacity and tendency to unfairly divert trade to respondent from competitors selling similar products in commerce among and between the various States of the United States, who do not misrepresent their products.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondent, Berenice Cohn, trading as Bergo Laboratories, are to the prejudice of the public and competitors of the respondent and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes.”

Order

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

It is ordered, That the respondent Berenice Cohn, an individual trading as Bergo Laboratories, or trading under any other name, her representatives, agents, and employees in connection with the offering for sale, sale and distribution of the toilet preparation now known as and sold under the name “Nu-Nail” or any preparation under whatever name sold, composed of the same or similar ingredients and possessing similar properties, in interstate commerce or in the District of Columbia, do forthwith cease and desist from:

- (a) Representing that said preparation is a nail food;
- (b) Representing that said preparation is an effective conditioner;
- (c) Representing that said preparation is a nail rejuvenator;
- (d) Representing that the use of said preparation will eliminate brittleness, breaking of the nails, splitting, peeling, ridging, white spots on the nails, and ingrown toe nails;
- (e) Representing that the use of said preparation will prevent nail biting;
- (f) Representing that the use of said preparation will bring new life and vitality to the nails and will keep the cuticle strong and healthy;
- (g) Representing, by the use of word “laboratory,” or any other term of similar meaning or like import, as a part of her trade name or in any other manner, that she conducts, operates, or maintains a laboratory for the purpose of manufacturing, testing, or experimenting with her said toilet preparation, until and unless she actually owns, operates, or directly and absolutely controls a laboratory maintained for said purposes.

Order

25 F. T. C.

(h) And from making any other similar representations of like import or effect as to the therapeutic or medicinal value of said preparation or the benefits accruing from the use thereof, unless and until said representations are true in fact.

It is further ordered, That the respondent, Berenice Cohen, trading as Bergo Laboratories, shall within 60 days after service upon her of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which she has complied with the order hereinabove set forth.

IN THE MATTER OF

RICHARD I. STEWART, TRADING AS AVOCADO SOAP PRODUCTS COMPANY

COMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION
OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 26, 1914

Docket 3183. Complaint, July 22, 1937—Decision, Sept. 17, 1937

Where an individual engaged in manufacture, sale, and distribution of soap to purchasers thereof in the States of the United States and in the District of Columbia, in substantial competition with those similarly engaged—

- (a) Represented, through use of the word "Avocado," together with depictions of said fruit, and through such statements as "Contains the Oil of Sun Ripe Avocados," etc., and "AVOCADO TISSUE SOAP Nature's Aid to Beauty," in advertisements, price lists and labels and otherwise, that his said soap contained a substantial amount of oil of avocado; and
- (b) Made such statements as "* * * Highly recommended by beauty specialists. * * * Not just a soap but a distinct beauty aid";

Facts being amount of said oil contained in soap in question, thus described, was infinitesimal compared to total of other ingredients used in manufacture thereof, and was not sufficient to warrant claim that such soap was made from avocado oil, and soap in question was not a natural aid to beauty nor recommended by beauty specialists, and had no beneficial effect different from any other soap;

With tendency and capacity to lead distributors and purchasing public into belief that said statements and representations were true, and with effect of inducing members of the public to purchase his said product on account of such erroneous beliefs, and with result of thereby unfairly diverting trade to him from competitors who do not make similar misleading representations concerning the ingredients or value of their respective products; to the substantial injury of competition in commerce:

Held, That such acts and practices were to the prejudice of the public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition.

Mr. S. Brogdyne Teu II for the Commission.

COMPLAINT

thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent, Richard I. Stewart, is an individual doing business under the trade name of Avocado Soap Products Company, and has his principal office and place of business in the city of Anaheim, State of California. He is now, and for more than one year last past has been, engaged in the manufacture, sale, and distribution of soap. He causes said soap, when sold, to be transported from his principal place of business in the State of California to purchasers thereof in other States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

There is now, and has been for more than one year last past, a constant current of trade and commerce in said soap so prepared, distributed, and sold by the respondent between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of his business respondent is now and has been in substantial competition with other individuals, partnerships, firms, and corporations likewise engaged in the business of manufacturing, distributing, and selling soap or other products designed, intended, and sold for the same purposes for which respondent's products are sold in commerce among and between the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 3. In the course of the conduct of said business, and for the purpose of inducing the purchase of said soap, respondent has printed and circulated through the United States mails, and otherwise, to customers and prospective customers in the several States of the United States, descriptions of his said product. The following statements are representative of those made by respondent in describing the said products:

PAR. 4. In the aforesaid ways and by the aforesaid means respondent makes, and has made, to the general public false and misleading statements with reference to the commodities offered for sale by him. The articles and items of merchandise described in the said advertisements, price lists, and on labels appearing on the merchandise, and otherwise, above referred to are so described as to lead purchasers and prospective purchasers into the mistaken and erroneous belief that the said soap contains a large amount of oils of the Sun Ripe Avocados, and further that respondent's soap is a natural aid to beauty and highly recommended by beauty specialists.

PAR. 5. The use by the respondent of the phrase "Contains the Oil of Sun Ripe Avocados" serves to lead purchasers and prospective purchasers into the erroneous and mistaken belief that the above referred to oil is a major ingredient used in the manufacture of the soap so made and sold by respondent.

PAR. 6. In truth and in fact, in each and every instance wherein the above set out words and phrases are used, the amount of Avocado oil appearing in respondent's said soap is infinitesimal when compared to the amount of other ingredients used in the manufacture of said soap, and is not sufficient to warrant the claim that said soap is made from Avocado oil.

Further, in truth and in fact, respondent's product is not a natural aid to beauty, nor is respondent's product recommended by beauty specialists.

PAR. 7. There are among the competitors of the respondent in commerce as described in paragraph 1 above, manufacturers and distributors of like and similar products who truthfully advertise and represent the nature, merit, and value of their respective products, and who refrain from advertising or representing, through their advertisements, price lists, or other advertising media, and brand marks on their products, that the merchandise offered for sale by them has a merit and value that it does not have, or that it contains ingredients in substantial portions other than actually contained in said merchandise.

PAR. 8. The effect of the foregoing false and misleading representations and acts of respondent in selling and offering for sale such items of merchandise as hereinbefore referred to is to mislead a substantial portion of the purchasing and consuming public by inducing them to believe:

1. That the soap manufactured, sold, and distributed by respondent contains a substantial amount of Avocado oil;
2. That the soap manufactured, sold, and distributed by respondent is "Nature's Aid to Beauty";
3. That respondent's product is highly recommended by beauty specialists.

PAR. 9. The foregoing false and misleading statements and representations on the part of respondent have induced and still induce a substantial number of consumer purchasers of said commodities to buy the products offered for sale, sold, and distributed by respondent on account of the aforesaid mistaken and erroneous beliefs.

As a result thereof trade has been diverted from those competitors of respondent engaged in similar businesses referred to in paragraph 7 above. As a consequence thereof substantial injury has been and is being done by respondent to competition in commerce between and among the various States of the United States.

PAR. 10. The aforementioned methods, acts, and practices of respondents are all to the prejudice of the public and respondent's competitors as hereinabove alleged. Said methods, acts, and practices constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914.

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

the facts and conclusion and an order to cease and desist from the violation of law charged in the complaint. Thereafter, this proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on the said complaint and answer thereto; and the Commission having duly considered the same and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. The respondent, Richard I. Stewart, trading as Avocado Soap Products Company, is an individual doing business under the laws of the State of California.

PAR. 2. The respondent has been for more than one year last past engaged in the manufacture, sale, and distribution of soap.

PAR. 3. In the sale of said product, respondent has transported or caused same to be transported from his principal place of business in the State of California to purchasers thereof located in States of the United States other than the State from which the shipment originated, and in the District of Columbia.

There is now, and has been for more than one year last past, a constant current of trade and commerce in said soap so prepared, distributed, and sold by the respondent between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

The respondent is engaged in substantial competition with individuals, partnerships, firms, and corporations engaged in the manufacture, sale, and distribution of like and similar products, and in the sale thereof in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 4. Respondent, in soliciting the sale, and in the selling, of his commodity, and for the purpose of creating a demand upon the part of the consuming public for said commodity, has printed and circulated through the United States mails and otherwise, to customers and prospective customers in the several States of the United States, descriptions of his said commodity. The following statements are representative of those made by respondent in describing the said commodity:

A PRODUCT OF

AVOCADO SOAP PRODUCTS-ANAHEIM, CALIF.

PAR. 5. The respondent, by the aforesaid ways and means, has made and still makes to the general public false and misleading statements with reference to the commodity offered for sale by him. The articles of merchandise described in the said advertisements, price lists, and labels appearing on the merchandise, and otherwise, are so described as to lead purchasers and prospective purchasers into the belief that the said soap contains a large amount of oils of the Sun-Ripe Avocado, and further that respondent's soap is a natural aid to beauty and highly recommended by beauty specialists.

In fact, in each and every instance wherein the above set out words and phrases are used the amount of Avocado Oil appearing in respondent's soap is infinitesimal when compared to the total amount of other ingredients used in the manufacture of the said soap, and is not sufficient to warrant the claim that said soap is made from Avocado oil.

In fact, the respondent's product is not a natural aid to beauty, nor is respondent's product recommended by beauty specialists. Said soap does not have any beneficial effect different from any other soap.

PAR. 6. The use of each and all of the foregoing false and misleading statements and representations by the respondent as herein set out has had, and now has, a tendency and capacity to lead distributors and the purchasing public into the belief that said statements and representations are true, and has induced and now induces members of the public to purchase the product of said respondent on account of such erroneous beliefs.

Said representations have thereby unfairly diverted trade to said respondent from competitors who do not make similar misleading representations respecting the ingredients or value of their respective products, and substantial injury has been done by respondent to competition in commerce among and between the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

Order

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondent, Richard I. Stewart, trading as Avocado Soap Products Company, are to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce, within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

It is ordered, That the respondent, Richard I. Stewart, an individual, trading as Avocado Soap Products Company, or trading under any other name, his agents, representatives, and employees, in connection with the offering for sale, sale, and distribution of soap in interstate commerce or in the District of Columbia, do forthwith cease and desist from:

Representing, through the use of the word "Avocado," or any other word of similar import and meaning, as descriptive of said products, that his soap contains a substantial amount of oil of avocados;

Representing that Avocado Tissue Soap is nature's aid to beauty or has any beneficial effect different from any other soap;

Representing that his soap is highly recommended by beauty specialists; and Representing that his soap is a distinct aid to beauty.

It is further ordered, That the respondent shall, within 60 days after service upon him of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing, setting forth in detail the manner and form in which he has complied with this order.

COMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION
OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 26, 1914

Docket 2558. Complaint, Sept. 23, 1935—Decision, Sept. 21, 1937

Where a corporation engaged in sale and distribution of a lithopone casein paint, under brand or trade names "Artwall" and "Partwall," principally to and through dealers for resale, but also to members of the public in various other States, in substantial competition with others engaged in the manufacture, sale, and distribution of casein and oil paints to dealers and to the public in other States, as above set forth, and including among aforesaid competitor manufacturers of casein paint, those whose product was sold and resold at substantially lower prices and was freely available to dealers and consumers in any quantity; and an individual, manager thereof and sales executive in charge and control of its agents and salesmen and of methods employed in sale and distribution of paints sold by it; in pursuance of a fraudulent plan, fraudulently conceived by said individual and fraudulently carried out by him and officers of said corporation, through it as instrumentality of such fraud and deception, and directed to the sale, in as large quantities as could be contrived, of said inferior and commercially unsalable paint to dealers, preferably and if possible, inexperienced in sale of paints, under scheme involving enlistment, in first instance, of their interest, and the disarming of their natural skepticism through holding out to them, by means of salesmen and representatives employed for such purpose, chance of being selected at corporation's home office as exclusive distributor in their territory of asserted new and valuable product, but in fact similar to that against sale of which, through methods employed, order of Commission had theretofore issued, as known to said individual and officers, and inducing prospects, as incident to so-called distributor's franchise, at home office, to commit themselves to as large an amount of said paint as aforesaid individual could bring about through misrepresentation of one sort or another, and to obligate themselves to payment therefor preceding opportunity to become fully apprized of the facts respecting the same—

- (a) Represented, in soliciting interest and securing commitments of prospects, as hereinabove indicated, that their aforesaid paint was a one coat paint which was a new discovery and was washable after use, left no disagreeable odor, and was not followed by hot spots on surfaces painted therewith, and could be used by amateurs or inexperienced persons as successfully as by experienced painters, and would give a finish to painted surfaces that could be obtained with other paints by experienced painters only, facts being it was not a one coat paint, left a very disagreeable odor, could not be successfully applied by inexperienced persons, and other representations above set forth were each and all false;
- (b) Represented, as aforesaid, that its vice-president had been associated in paint industry before his connection with aforesaid corporation, and that said corporation was backed by well-known financiers and was a subsidiary of a large oil paint concern, facts being said individual was not at any time thus associated with aforesaid industry, nor was such corporation thus backed by any well-known financiers, nor a subsidiary of any large or small oil paint corporation, and there was no financial interest connected or associated with it outside of its own officers and stockholders;

(c) Represented as aforesaid, to dealers, that territory assigned or to be assigned to distributor was virgin territory, and that the dealer, as distributor, would have exclusive sale of paint therein, and that it would organize and instruct a competent sales force for the dealers who entered into contracts with it as distributors of its paint, facts being, in many instances, dealer later learned that others before him had entered into similar contracts, had been unable to dispose of the paint acquired by them, and had left on their hands, as unsalable and unreturnable to said corporation, most of the paint acquired by such other prior dealers, corporation's representatives usually spent only one or two days in selecting, organizing and instructing a sales force consisting of only one or two, or at most six or eight, salesmen, who left their employment due to lack of demand for paint in question and its lack, in other respects, of sale, thereafter made no further efforts to assist distributors in selling paint in question, which could not be sold under prices exacted from dealer who bought for resale, promise to organize and instruct competent sales force was not in good faith, and aforesaid representations were false; and

(d) Represented, as aforesaid, to dealers thus solicited, that its paint was in large demand for purchase and use by large industrial or institutional organizations or others, and exhibited to dealers, prospective distributors or others, purchase orders of large users or others for small quantities of paint sold to them by it, but so prepared as to omit amounts of paint purchased and amounts of purchase price thereof, facts being none of the large concerns, among many others who were induced by them to buy comparatively small or trial quantities of said paint, were ever in any position, by reason of their purchase and use thereof, to recommend its purchase and use to others, at least two of such concerns requested them not to refer prospective purchasers, and photographs of such orders as recommendations or testimonials of the proven success of said paint and consequent large existing demand therefor, bound up and exhibited by agents and salesmen, were reproduced in part only, with figures and amounts, as aforesaid, omitted, and paint in question was confronted with competitive sale, as aforesaid, of lower priced and generally available casein paint and was unsalable on basis of price charged dealers and price fixed to them as resale price thereof to consumers, under penalty of having further supplies cut off, and there was no large demand for purchase and resale and use of its said paint at such higher prices;

With result, by reason of such false representations, that dealers, more or less inexperienced in the paint business, were induced erroneously to believe that their said paint was a new discovery, successful use of which was demonstrated by large industrial users and discriminating purchasers, and that there was a large existing and potential demand for purchase and sale thereof, and, in reliance upon such erroneous belief, to enter into so-called distributor's franchise or agreement and, incident thereto and in connection therewith, to commit themselves to the purchase of large quantities of paint in question, and with result further that dealers thus purchased for resale and distribution large quantities of aforesaid paint in preference to that of competitors and were unable to resell same at prices which would be profitable, and many dealers who thus bought their said paint were caused to, and did, sell same as distress merchandise at prices greatly under those at which similar paint of competitors was offered and sold, and in some cases gave same away without charge; to the prejudice and injury of competitors:

Held, That such acts and practices were to the prejudice of the public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition.

COMPLAINT

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent Parco Products, Inc., is a corporation, incorporated on or about March 4, 1930, under the laws of the State of New York, having its principal place of business in the city of New York and a place of business in Jersey City, N. J.

PAR. 2. Respondent Solomon L. Goldberg is an individual residing in the city of New York and at all times since in or about the year 1932 he has been and still is the manager of the business of respondent Parco Products, Inc., and during all said times he held and still holds the office or position of sales executive of the corporate respondent. As such sales executive he was and still is in charge and control of the sale and distribution of the corporate respondent's paints, hereinafter mentioned, and of the methods employed by it and its agents in their sale and distribution.

PAR. 3. Respondent Parco Products, Inc., is and has been, since in or about the year 1932, engaged in the sale and distribution of a lithopone casein paint under the brand or trade names "Artwall" and "Partwall" which it has sold principally to dealers for resale as well as to members of the public for use, purchasers thereof, located in various States of the United States other than New York or New Jersey, or the State of origin of the shipment. Respondent Parco Products, Inc., has caused its "Artwall" and "Partwall" paints when so sold by it to be transported from New York or New Jersey, or the State of origin of the shipment, to the purchasers of said products located in States other than the State of origin of said shipments.

PAR. 4. Prior to and during all the times above mentioned or referred to, other individuals, firms, and corporations, located in the various States of the United States, hereinafter referred to as sellers, are and have been engaged in the manufacture, sale, and distribution of oil paints and casein paints and the sellers have sold and distributed their paints to dealers for resale and to the public for use, purchasers thereof, located in States other than the State of the seller, or the State of origin of the shipment. The sellers, respectively, have caused the paints when so sold by them to be transported from the State of the seller, or from the State of origin of the shipment, to the purchasers of said products located in States other than the State of origin of said shipments.

PAR. 5. Respondent Parco Products, Inc., during all the times mentioned or referred to in paragraph 3 hereof, is and has been in substantial competition in interstate commerce with the other individuals, firms, and corporations referred to as sellers in paragraph 4 hereof in the sale of its "Artwall" and "Partwall" paints.

PAR. 6. Respondent Parco Products Incorporated was caused to be organized by one Phillip Jeffay, who at the time of its organization was in the employ of Duralith Corporation, a corporation organized in 1928 and existing under the laws of the State of New York, and at all times subsequent to its organization, including the time of its employment of said Jeffay, engaged in the sale of a casein paint under the brand name Duralith and under substantially the same plan or scheme for its sale as the plan or scheme employed by the respondents herein. The attorney whose services were employed by said Jeffay in the organization of Parco Products, Incorporated, was the same attorney who similarly acted in the organization of Duralith Corporation. He was also counsel and legal advisor to the latter corporation. By reason of his relation as attorney and counsel to the Duralith Corporation he had knowledge of the plan or scheme employed by it in the sale of its casein paint and of the objects and results of the sale of its paint.

For a certain period of time beginning at the time the respondent corporation became engaged in the sale of its casein paints and subsequently while it was so engaged under the plan or scheme mentioned and described hereinafter, the said Jeffay was and continued to be one of the officers of respondent corporation until he was succeeded as such in or about March 1933 by one Norman W. Englehart, who then purchased from said Jeffay 35% of the capital stock of the respondent corporation and became and since continues to be its president.

One Lester P. Van Duzer purchased 65% of the capital stock of the respondent corporation from said Jeffay in or about February 1932 and he then became and has since continued to be vice president of respondent corporation. The entire capital stock of respondent corporation, including that in the name of or held by Norman W. Englehart, is under the control of said Lester P. Van Duzer. Prior to his connection with respondent corporation the said Lester P. Van Duzer was not at any time associated or connected with the paint industry or the sale of paint.

One Benjamin H. Cappe is the secretary and treasurer of respondent Parco Products Incorporated. He has had experience in the sale of roofing materials and paint to dealers throughout the United States who have been engaged in the resale of such products. He has been connected or associated during all the times since long prior to his connection with respondent corporation, with the sale of roofing materials and paints to dealers throughout the United States who have been engaged in the resale of such products.

On January 23, 1934, the Federal Trade Commission issued its complaint against Duralith Corporation, above referred to, and others, Docket No. 2157, stating its charges to the effect that Duralith Corporation was employing unfair methods of competition in commerce in the sale of casein paint substantially the same as the methods now charged in the complaint herein were employed by respondents.

On March 29, 1935, the Federal Trade Commission made and issued its findings as to the facts concerning the methods of the sale of its casein paints by the Duralith Corporation and its conclusion that they were unfair methods of competition in interstate commerce in violation of the provisions of Section 5 of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," and the Commission on the 29th day of March 1935 upon its said findings of fact and conclusion issued its order to cease and desist restraining the Duralith Corporation and its co-respondents, William and Harry Weiner, from the use of methods employed by them in the sale of the Duralith Corporation's said paints, which the Commission had found were unfair methods of competition in interstate commerce.

Complaint

The respondents herein at all times mentioned in paragraph 3 hereof knew, or with the exercise of reasonable care should have known, that the methods employed by the respondents mentioned and described in the complaint herein were unfair methods of competition employed by them in the sale of the corporate respondent's casein paint.

PAR. 7. Paints having a casein base, or casein paints, sometimes referred to as cold water paints, have a limited use and are in small demand when sold at fair prices in comparison with oil paints or other paints which are in large demand and in general use at the prices at which they have been sold by competitors of the respondents prior to and during the times above mentioned.

During all the times mentioned and referred to in paragraph 3 hereof, the respondents, for the purpose of fraudulently obtaining large sums of money respectively from dealers in various lines of merchandise throughout the United States, employed a plan or scheme, more particularly hereinafter mentioned and referred to, by means of which they fraudulently induced the dealers to enter into alleged contracts to be the sole distributors, respectively, of the respondents' paints in their respective communities, or within certain defined territory and as a principal purpose and result of such alleged contractual arrangement, such dealers in merchandise were fraudulently induced to buy large stocks of "Artwall" and "Partwall" paints for which there was no dealer or consumer demand and at excessive dealer prices fixed by respondents far above the regular market prices to dealers for such or other kinds of paints, prices not only excessive as prices to dealers for resale but prices which were excessive as retail prices for the purchase of the paints by consumers or others for use, and at which the paints could not be resold to consumers or others for use, except in occasional inconsiderable quantities.

PAR. 8. Pursuant to respondents' plan or scheme and as a part thereof, the corporate respondent's officers and respondent Goldberg, taking casein paints sold by them under the names "Artwall" and "Partwall" as the subject matter, means or device, fraudulently to obtain large sums of money from the dealers referred to, from the sale to them of large stocks of the paints under the pretense that the dealers were made sole distributors thereof in their respective localities, as above stated, adopted and made use of the corporate form, Parco Products Incorporated, as an instrumentality to represent them as well as to conceal them as individuals as the sellers of the said paints, and to aid more effectively to accomplish the object and purpose of the said plan or scheme.

25 F. T. C.

In further pursuance of the plan or scheme and as a part thereof, the respondents employed agents or salesmen to make surveys of the dealers in various lines of merchandise in communities or localities in the various States to discover and to contact such dealer or dealers in such places who were established, successful, and of sound financial rating or standing sufficient to perform any agreements or obligations into which they might be induced by respondents to enter and preferably those dealers who were not then carrying paint for sale, and to offer to make such dealer or dealers, as they contacted of said financial rating or standing, the sole distributor or distributors in their respective communities or in certain territory for the sale and distribution of respondents' paints, on the understanding, however, that the contract, making the dealer the sole distributor of respondent corporation, was subject to the approval of the respondents and to be made at the office of the respondent corporation in New York City which the dealer prospect so contacted was invited and urged to visit, at respondents' expense, to discuss the final arrangements and closing of the contract.

In further pursuance of the plan or scheme of respondents referred to and as a part thereof and with the knowledge of the respondents, the respondents' agents and salesmen, in the usual course of their employment and in contacting the dealers, were to make many representations purporting and represented to be matters of fact concerning the corporate respondent, its officers and management and its and their financial ability to perform their obligations, and concerning its and their financial and business connections with other persons, firms, and corporations; and were to make demonstrations of the use of respondents' paints and representations concerning the nature, quality, and uses thereof, the dealer and consumer demand therefor and the marketability of the paints and the terms and conditions under which they would be sold to the dealers as respondents' sole distributors thereof, all in such manner, form and substance that as a natural consequence thereof the dealer or dealers who were so contacted and to whom the demonstrations of the paints and representations above referred to were made, would credit and rely upon them as facts reliably supported to such extent that the dealers would not respond to the natural thought or impulse, usually occurring to them when dealing with persons previously unknown, to make ordinary and prudent inquiry or further investigation of the facts and things so demonstrated and represented which involved future financial and other responsibilities on their part.

In further pursuance of the plan or scheme of respondents referred to and as a part thereof, the corporate respondent's officers and more particularly its sales executive, respondent Goldberg, were to receive the dealer so contacted by respondent's agents, as above set forth, upon his visit to the New York office of the corporate respondent and then and there to make similar demonstrations and statements purporting to be facts and representations concerning the proposed undertaking of the dealer to become the sole distributor of the respondents' paints and the making of a distributor's contract therefor with the respondent corporation. Such representations made to the dealer by the corporate respondent's officers and respondent Goldberg were in the general nature of a summary and confirmation, variously when the occasion arose, of the demonstrations, statements, and representations previously made to the dealer by the respondents' agents or salesmen and were in general devoted to statements and representations concerning the financing of the dealer distributor under the contract and details stated in general terms of what the contract would include as obligations of the corporate respondent as a party thereto.

The respondents relying upon the trust and confidence of the proposed dealer distributor, inspired and developed by the demonstration, statements and representations of their agents and salesmen, above mentioned and referred to, prior to his visit to respondents' New York office, were prepared to make adroit statements and arguments to the dealer of the advisability of closing or executing the contract, all tending to prove that the dealer as a distributor would make large sales of respondents' paints which the respondents would assist in financing and represented were in enormous demand, so that there would be no risk to the dealer in assuming the relation of distributor and that as such distributor he would enjoy large profits in the sale of the respondents' paints which he otherwise would not have.

PAR. 9. The fraudulent plan or scheme employed by the respondents above described and referred to was one briefly described as high pressure salesmanship, an euphony employed with respect to questionable methods or practices generally beyond the accepted boundaries of fair and honorable salesmanship, and consisting, for example, on the part of respondents in the instant case, among other things, principally of misrepresentation of facts to prospective distributors and false implications arising therefrom and depending upon the psychological reaction of dealers to such salesmanship in such manner that his confidence was obtained and he was lulled into such condition that he was prevented as intended thereby, from applying the rule of caveat emptor and was in consequence subject to being meretriciously and fraudulently hurried into executing a one-sided alleged contract, unfair and burdensome in its obligations only to him and profitable to the respondents only, and an instrument useful in compelling or extorting payment of money from him, alleged to be due under its terms, because of the trouble and expense of interposing legal defense thereto.

PAR. 10. In pursuance of the plan or scheme of the respondents above set forth, the respondents employed agents or salesmen and caused them to make and they made surveys of the wholesale and retail dealers in various localities throughout various states, such as dealers in hardware, lumber, plumbing, and building supplies, builders and contractors, machine and supply companies, dealers in refrigerating and heating equipment, distributors of groceries and beer, and of coal, coke, and oil, dealers engaged in the sale of hay and seed and in other lines of merchandise, including individuals and firms engaged in the occupation of plasterers, and principally such dealers, in preference to dealers in paints who might have knowledge thereof and be acquainted with market conditions for the same. The respondents' agents or salesmen thereupon contacted among such dealers those who were considered of the sound financial rating and standing above mentioned and proposed to them that they become sole distributors in their respective localities for the respondents' paints, and by demonstrations of respondents' paints and various representations, more particularly referred to in paragraph eleven hereof, induced many of the dealers to visit at respondents' expense the respondents' offices in New York City for the purpose of considering and negotiating a contract as sole distributor for respondent corporation.

PAR. 11. The salesmen of the respondents employed to survey and contact the dealers as above set forth, in the course of their employment, and the officers and agents of the corporate respondent including respondent Goldberg at the offices of the corporate respondent in New York City, among other things, demonstrated the application of respondents' paints on various surfaces, to some slight extent, to dealers who were induced to visit respondents' offices at New York City and in connection with such demonstrations stated and represented, among other things, that the paint was an unusual and successfully used casein or cold water paint for practically all interior painting, implying that it was a new discovery in paints that had been successfully introduced and was in substantial demand by consumers and by dealers for resale; that the formula for the paint was the creation of a famous chemist; that it was washable after being applied to surfaces painted by it; that a gallon of the paint when mixed with $\frac{1}{2}$ of a gallon of water and applied or painted was washable; that it can be cleaned with water after thoroughly drying for approximately 30 days; that it requires only one coat and leaves no disagreeable odor; that it stands up under exposure to light; that the paint is indestructible under normal usage; that finishes can be obtained by amateurs that require experts with other materials; that it is a revolutionary product in the paint industry; that there is no concern that can make a material as good as "Artwall," sell it for less money, do what respondents do, and make a fair profit; that "Artwall" or "Partwall" paste mixed with two quarts of water to the gallon gives satisfactory results in painting and gives coverage with one coat; and respondents, and their salesmen and agents exhibited photostatic copies of parts of small trial orders of the paints by some of the largest business organizations in the United States and stated that such purchasers were large and regular users of the paints.

Respondents' salesmen, officers of the corporate respondent, and its agents represented to the dealers, among many other things, that Lester P. Van Duzer, respondent's vice president, had been associated in the paint business for many years; that the corporate respondent was backed by extremely well known financiers who did not wish to have their names disclosed; that it was the subsidiary of a large paint concern and therefore financially able to carry on its business and perform all its obligations.

The respondents, their salesmen, officers and agents represented to the dealers, respectively, among many other things, that under the contract made between them and the corporate respondent they would be the sole distributors in their respective territories which it was represented to them would be virgin territory, including the implication that respondents' paints had never been previously sold in such territory; that respondents would organize a competent sales force for such distributors and instruct them in soliciting orders for the paints in the territories of the dealers and would turn over to them all inquiries and orders received for the paints by the respondents, implying that such inquiries and orders had been and were being frequently received by the respondents with respect to orders for substantial quantities of the paints; and respondents made representations as to various advertising matter which they were to furnish to the dealers and regarding the financing of the business done by the dealers in the sale of the paints to the effect that dealers, acting as sole distributors, were merely to warehouse the material and distribute it as orders came in to them from purchasers; that there were distributors of respondents' paints who would not sell their distributorships for $50,000; that there were only two other water-mixed paints in paste form on the market and that these two products were inferior to respondents' paints and were selling at approximately the same price as respondents' paints, namely $3.15 per gallon, and the respondents made it a practice in enforcing payments of monies due for the sale of the paints to dealers in consequence of the above demonstrations, statements and representations, to assign to others their rights to the amounts claimed by them to be due from the dealers in order that the dealers might be compelled through legal process to make payment, without the opportunity of raising defenses to legal action brought by the assignee of the claim that they would have been enabled to interpose had the claims been sued upon by the respondents.

PAR. 12. The statements and representations made by respondents, their agents and salesmen mentioned and referred to in paragraph eleven hereof, were each and all false and fraudulent statements and representations of various facts and conditions to which they applied; the respondents' "Artwall" and "Partwall" paints were not newly discovered or unusual paint products; they were not products made after the formula of a famous chemist but were made after a formula of the respondents which was submitted to a certain chemist to revise, for the reason that paints produced and which had been sold by the respondents under such formula had proved to be unfit for use and unmarketable by reason of the composition of the paints in certain respects; said paints were not washable after being applied to surfaces and could not be cleaned with water or otherwise after thoroughly drying for thirty days and required more than one coat to cover surfaces painted.

The statements and representations that the paints when used left no disagreeable odor, that they stood up under exposure to light and were indestructible under normal usage and that finishes could be obtained by amateurs that required experts with other materials, were each and all false statements and representations in that over some surfaces to be painted more than one coat of respondents' paint was required and in that respondents' paints had a disagreeable odor and did not stand up to exposure to light, were not indestructible under normal usage and finishes could not be obtained by amateurs that experts with other materials could obtain.

The statements and representations that the respondents' paints were revolutionary products in the paint industry and that there was no other concern that could make a material as good as "Artwall" or "Partwall" paints and sell it for less money and make a fair profit were each and all false in that respondents' product was not a new or revolutionary product in the paint industry and in that there were concerns in existence long prior to the organization of the corporate respondent that were making cold water paints, known as casein paints, and who were selling them for less money than the respondents offer for sale and have sold their said paints and who made a profit in the sale of such paints.

The statements and representations of the respondents, their salesmen and agents in connection with the exhibition of photostatic parts of orders of the paints received by respondents by large business organizations were false statements and representations in that the photostatic copies of the orders referred to were carefully made by the respondents so as not to show the quantities of the paints ordered and in that said orders of the business organizations referred to were only trial orders and involved only small quantities of respondents' paints and most of the business organizations referred to were not and are not large and regular users of the paints.

The statements and representations that the corporate respondent was backed by well known financiers were false as well as the statement that it was the subsidiary of a large paint concern.

The statements of the respondents, their salesmen and agents, that the exclusive territory offered to the dealers as sole distributors in their respective territories was virgin territory and territory in which the respondents' paints had never been previously sold were false in that the territory referred to was not virgin territory as to the sale of respondent's paints but was territory in which such paints had previously been sold by others, either the respondents themselves or those who had previously been made distributors of the paints by the respondents.

The statements and representations that the respondents would organize a competent sales force and instruct it in soliciting orders for the paints in the territory of the dealers who contracted to be sole distributors of the respondents, were false statements in that the respondents did not make competent efforts to organize such sales forces and to instruct them in soliciting orders and these statements and representations were made to so many dealers who entered into distributors' contracts with the respondents and were in so many instances not kept or observed by the respondents that the respondents knew when making such statements and representations that they never intended to make more than a formal performance of such promises such as would be sufficient as an effort to keep the matter of performance in suspense pending the time when the obligations of the distributors to make payments for the paints they were induced to purchase would become due.

Complaint

25 F. T. C.

The statement of representations that inquiries and orders received by the respondents from the respective territories of the dealer distributors would be turned over to the dealers were false and fraudulent in their implication that such inquiries and orders in substantial number had been and were being received by the respondent which was not the fact.

The statements and representations made that the respondents would furnish the dealer distributors with advertising matter and regarding the financing of the business done by the dealers in the sale of the paints and that the dealer distributors were merely to act as warehousemen for the material and distribute it as orders came in to them from purchasers were each and all false statements and representations both as to the facts themselves and to the implications arising from the statements in that the respondents did not furnish the advertising matter to the dealers which they had represented they would furnish nor do the financing of the business done by dealers, and in that the distributors were not merely to act as warehousemen, in that the amount of advertising matter which they in most instances furnished dealers was inadequate to the decent performance of the respondents' promises in that respect and such failures to furnish the advertising referred to were so numerous that respondents well knew at the time such representations were made that they would not perform the promises to the extent that they knew they had led the dealer distributors to expect. The statement that there were distributors of respondents' paints who would not sell their distributorships for $50,000 was wholly false in that there was no such distributor who would not sell his distributorship for much less and in that most of respondents' distributors endeavored to return respondents' paints and cease being respondents' distributors and were willing to do so even though they sustained considerable loss in their transactions with the respondents.

The statements of the respondents that other water mixed paints in paste form on the market were inferior to respondents' said paints and were selling at approximately the same price as respondents' paints, were false statements and representations in that the products referred to were not inferior to respondents' paints and were selling at lower prices than respondents' paints.

PAR. 13. In consequence of the statements and representations made by the respondents, their agents and salesmen, many dealers among those above referred to were fraudulently induced to enter into distributor contracts with the respondents as a result of which large quantities of respondents' paints were delivered into the hands of the dealer distributors respectively under their alleged contractual liability to pay for the same. The paints so delivered to the dealers were not as represented as to their marketability and demand for use by consumers and in consequence thereof the dealers were unable to sell, or move, more than inconsiderable quantities thereof and the said stocks of paints were and became known as "distress merchandise," meaning thereby that it was merchandise that was offered on the market in competition with oil paints and other casein paints at prices much below the prices paid for the competing paints referred to and at which they were sold.

PAR. 14. The above statements and representations made by the respondents' agents and salesmen had the capacity and tendency to deceive and mislead dealers in various lines of merchandise to whom they were made into entering into alleged contracts to act as distributors of the respondents' paints and to accept deliveries of large stocks of respondents' paints at exorbitant prices as above stated; and also the capacity and tendency to deceive and mislead such dealers in merchandise into the belief that the statements regarding the use and application of the respondents' paints were true and into causing the dealers to pass on such representations to members of the public who bought respondents' paints, on occasions, from the dealers. In consequence thereof the dealers who were so deceived and misled, acquired large stocks of respondents' paints which they could not sell or move at the prices at which they allegedly contracted to pay for the same and in order to move or close out the whole or parts of such stocks of paint the dealers were compelled to offer or throw the same upon the market for sale at prices much less than those they had allegedly contracted to pay respondents therefor, or at any price or prices at all which they could obtain for it, thereby causing the market for both oil and casein paints to be demoralized and the trade of dealers in oil and casein and other paints to be injured and trade in paint was thereby diverted to respondents from their competitors. As a result of the deception of the public by means of the statements and representations of the respondents above mentioned and referred to members of the public were deceived and misled into purchasing respondents' paints in the belief that they were purchasing paints which were washable and had no disagreeable odor, among others of the representations and statements of the respondents above mentioned and referred to, and trade in paints was thereby diverted to respondents from their competitors.

PAR. 15. The above acts and things done and caused to be done by the respondents were and are each and all to the prejudice of the public and of respondents' competitors and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the meaning and intent of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914.

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

The respondents filed their answer to the complaint on December 4, 1935, and thereafter testimony and evidence in support of the allegations of the complaint were introduced by Edward E. Reardon, Esq., attorney for the Commission, before John L. Hornor, Esq., an examiner of the Commission, theretofore duly designated by it, and in opposition to the allegations of the complaint by Herbert S. Vogel, Esq., attorney for the respondents; and the testimony and evidence were duly recorded and filed in the office of the Commission.

Thereafter, the proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission upon the complaint and the answer thereto, the testimony and evidence, and the brief in support of the complaint; and, the Commission, having duly considered the same, and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that the proceeding is in the interest of the public, and makes this, its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. The respondent, Parco Products, Inc., is a corporation, organized March 4, 1930, under the laws of the State of New York and having its principal place of business in the city of New York.

PAR. 2. The respondent, Solomon L. Goldberg, is an individual residing in the city of New York and at all times since on or about February 1, 1932, he has been and still is the manager of the business of the respondent, Parco Products, Inc., and its sales executive in charge and control of its agents and salesmen and of the methods employed in the sale and distribution of the paint sold by Parco Products as hereinafter mentioned.

PAR. 3. The respondent Parco Products, Inc., is and has been, since sometime in April 1932, engaged in the sale and distribution of a lithopone casein paint under the brand or trade names "Artwall" and "Partwall" which it has sold principally to dealers for resale, as well as to members of the public for use, purchasers of the paint, located in various States of the United States other than New York, or the State of origin of the shipment.

Respondent Parco Products, Inc., has caused its "Artwall" or "Partwall" paint, when so sold by it, to be transported from New York, or the State of origin of the shipment to the purchasers located in said other States.

PAR. 4. Prior to and during all the times above mentioned or referred to, other individuals, firms, and corporations, located in various States of the United States, hereinafter referred to as sellers, are and have been engaged in the manufacture, sale, and distribution of casein paints and oil paints and the sellers have sold and distributed their paints to dealers for resale and to the public for use, purchasers thereof, located in States other than the State of the seller, or the State of origin of the shipment.

The sellers, respectively, have caused the paints when so sold by them, to be transported from the State of the seller, or from the State of origin of the shipment, to the purchasers located in said other States.

PAR. 5. The respondent Parco Products, Inc., during all the times mentioned and referred to in paragraph 3 hereof, is and has been in substantial competition in interstate commerce with the other individuals, firms, and corporations, referred to as sellers in paragraph 4 hereof, in the sale of its "Artwall" or "Partwall" paints.

PAR. 6. The following individuals were connected with Parco Products, Inc., prior to the issuance of the complaint by the Commission in this proceeding:

Philip Jeffay, a British citizen, 44 years of age, born in Scotland, who has been in this country 15 years. At his instance the respondent Parco Products was incorporated as set forth later herein.

The respondent Solomon L. Goldberg, above mentioned, who promoted taking over of Parco Products, from Jeffay, up to that time an inactive corporation, and its employment in the business of the sale of paint, including the casein paint called "Artwall" or "Partwall."

Goldberg and Jeffay, during the 15 years that the latter has been in the United States, were intimately acquainted with each other and have visited at each other's homes.

Lester P. Van Duzer, who was persuaded by respondent Goldberg to put money into the project to engage Parco Products, Inc., in the business of the sale of paint, and who became, on or about February 1932, and still is, the vice president of Parco Products.

Norman W. Englehart, who became president of Parco Products.

Benjamin H. Cappe, who was secretary and treasurer of Parco Products, Inc., and had had experience in the sale of roofing materials and paint.

PAR. 7. The Commission in a proceeding under its complaint issued on January 23, 1934, against the Duralith Corporation and its president and another, Docket No. 2157, found that the Duralith Corporation had employed unfair methods of competition in the sale of a casein paint and issued its order to the Duralith Corporation, its officers and agents to cease and desist from the said methods.¹ The methods of competition employed by respondents Parco Products and Solomon L. Goldberg, hereinafter described were, substantially, methods that were employed by the Duralith Corporation and restrained by the Commission's above order.

PAR. 8. Philip Jeffay knew the president of the Duralith Corporation quite a few years, and had visited his office quite a few times, prior to March 4, 1930. He knew that the Duralith Corporation was engaged in the sale of a casein paint in powder form to which, when used as a paint, water was added.

On March 4, 1930, Jeffay had just left employment with the Sterling Materials Company and was out of work. Because he wanted a job, he caused the respondent Parco Products to be incorporated on that date. To incorporate Parco Products, Jeffay employed the attorney who was counsel to the Duralith Corporation, and shared its suite of offices and the services of its stenographer. The attorney for the Duralith Corporation had engaged in the prosecution of suits for the collection of money due from dealers on commercial paper given for the purchase price of paint sold by the Duralith Corporation. He knew the paint was a casein paint.

He knew the nature of the defenses interposed by the defendants in those suits, one of which was that the Duralith paint had been misrepresented as washable.

PAR. 9. After the organization of the respondent Parco Products, Inc., Jeffay took a job with the Duralith Corporation and allowed Parco Products, Inc., to lie dormant without ever having been engaged in business. He was employed by the Duralith Corporation as sales manager in charge of a lot of its salesmen who, as was the case with the salesmen of Parco Products in the sale of its paint, were engaged in appointing dealers as distributors of Duralith paint. He remained in the employ of the Duralith Corporation as sales manager until the end of 1933. In the meantime he also remained as president of Parco Products, Inc., until March 1933, notwithstanding he transferred to Solomon L. Goldberg all of the books and effects and all of the capital stock of Parco Products on or about February 2, 1932, as hereinafter set forth. At the end of 1933, Jeffay left the employ of the Duralith Corporation. The time when he left the employ of the Duralith Corporation was only a few weeks before January 23, 1934, when the Federal Trade Commission issued its complaint against the Duralith Corporation after a usual preliminary investigation. Shortly thereafter, Jeffay, in or before March 1934, entered the employ of Parco Products, Inc., as sales manager at a salary of $125 a week, in charge of ten salesmen. In 1933, the stenographer named as an incorporator of Parco Products and whose services were shared jointly by the Duralith Corporation and by its attorney, who was employed to incorporate Parco Products, Inc., had become assistant secretary of the Duralith Corporation.

PAR. 10. Respondent Solomon L. Goldberg, on or about February 1, 1932, was out of work and vitally interested in getting a job. He solicited the interest of Mr. Lester P. Van Duzer in Parco Products. He told him that it was a corporation that had been formed by a man who had the roofing business in mind and could be bought very reasonably. Thereupon, Mr. Van Duzer put some money into the proposition and Mr. Goldberg, on or about February 1, 1932, negotiated the transfer of the books and seal and the capital stock of Parco Products, Inc., from Philip Jeffay for the sum of $150, of which $100 was paid Jeffay in cash. Mr. Van Duzer acquired 65% of the stock of Parco Products and became and since then has been its vice president. Mr. Goldberg retained custody of the remaining stock for the account of Jeffay until the balance of $50 owing to him was paid, and Jeffay, while acting as sales manager for the Duralith Corporation, remained as president of Parco Products until March 1933, even while it was engaged in selling its casein paint as above stated.

PAR. 11. Parco Products, Inc., was organized as a corporation primarily to engage in the sale of a roofing paint. On or about February 1, 1932, when control of it was acquired by respondent Goldberg and Lester P. Van Duzer, Parco Products did not have a formula for the successful manufacture of casein paint. It engaged for a short time in the sale of a roofing paint called Sealpor or Lockpor. In a transaction on February 4, 1932, it sold a quantity of Sealpor or Lockpor to a concern in Massachusetts and in another transaction it sold Sealpor or Lockpor, on February 23, 1932, to a concern at Elmira, N. Y. It made one or more other sales of such roofing paint between February 1 and April 1932.

PAR. 12. Substantially the same practices that were later employed by the respondents in the sale of its Artwall or Partwall casein paint, as hereinafter set forth, and that are alleged to be unfair methods of competition, were employed by the respondents in the few sales of its roofing paint above referred to. For example, a salesman of Parco Products approached the concern at Elmira, N. Y., above referred to. It was never before in the paint business. The salesman stated to its president that he wanted a distributing center for the paint and thought that Elmira, N. Y., was the proper place for it; that he had looked up his concern and found it was just about the best one in that locality. The proposal of Parco Products was that they would furnish the Elmira concern with a stock of roofing paint called Sealpor or Lockpor and that their agents would come on and sell it; that it was not to cost the Elmira concern anything until it was sold by the agents of Parco Products and then the Elmira concern was to pay for the paint; that the Elmira concern was to be the exclusive distributor and receive the paint and warehouse it. The Elmira concern signed a distributor's special franchise. The Parco Products salesman wrote into the signed franchise an order by the Elmira concern for 695 gallons of the paint for the price of $799.25. When the Elmira concern received the bill for $799.25, it objected to any further proceeding in the matter or to making payment, claiming it was not according to its agreement. Parco Products, Inc., threatened suit but later settled the claim of $799.25 for $400. The Elmira concern found no demand for the paint and sold it all off at a loss, obtaining about 60 cents a gallon for it instead of $1.50, the selling price fixed by Parco Products.

PAR. 13. Artwall paint, sold by Parco Products, later named Partwall, and the Duralith paint sold by the Duralith Corporation above mentioned, were both casein paints.

The Duralith paint was in powder form, and required to be diluted with sufficient water to the proper consistency when used as paint.

The Artwall or Partwall paint, containing about 29% of water, was in paste form when sold by Parco Products, and required the addition of some water when used as paint.

Casein, a constituent of the paint of the Duralith Corporation and the basis of the Artwall or Partwall paint of Parco Products, is the ingredient in milk that forms cheese or curd. Casein in dry form, after a period of time, deteriorates, if improperly stored, until it is in a condition in which it is not fit to be used for all purposes. If water should be added to casein and it was permitted to stand for a few days, it would then develop an odor obnoxious to most persons, such as emanates from a certain cheese product or from stale milk long soured and rotted.

PAR. 14. In or about April 1932, Parco Products, Inc., began the sale of Artwall casein paint which it manufactured from a certain formula. At first it sold the Artwall paint so made direct to consumers, certain large corporations in or about New York City, whose names and businesses conducted by them are nationally known and who are readily recognized by the public to be large users and purchasers of paint. The quantities of Artwall paint that Parco Products sold to nine, among others, of such large corporations, varied from one quart on May 13, 1932, to the Bell Telephone Laboratories, to five gallons on May 3, 1932, sold to a large department store. It sold one gallon on May 11, 1932, to the Equitable Building Corporation.

The contents of one of the containers of the paint sold to the department store exploded, as did also the contents of the container of the gallon of Artwall purchased by the Equitable Building Corporation. The last mentioned paint exploded all over the ceiling, all over the employee examining it, all over the floor and "stunk out" the entire room where it was kept. It smelled like rotten eggs.

The nine large purchasers of Artwall paint above referred to included, besides the Bell Telephone Laboratories and The Equitable Building Corporation, the following, all of New York City: The Consolidated Edison Company, formerly The Consolidated Gas Co. of New York; The Singer Building Rental Department; The Chrysler Building Corporation; The Cross & Brown Co., real estate operators, managing large properties in mid-town New York; and, the Shattuck Co., operating Schrafft's Stores; also, L. Bamberger & Co., a large department store at Newark, New Jersey; and, The Solo-Horton Brush Co., which is not actually a user of paint and never used in the past more than $\frac{1}{2}$ gallon of paint in a period of one year. None of these nine concerns, among many other consumers who bought trial quantities of Artwall paint were ever in any position, by reason of the purchase and use of the paint, to recommend its purchase and use to others. At least two of the nine concerns mentioned above wrote to the respondents requesting them not to refer prospective purchasers to them concerning their use of the paint.

PAR. 15. Sometime shortly after Parco Products, Inc., made the first sales of Artwall paint above referred to, the formula for the paint was submitted by respondent Goldberg to a chemist for correction or revision and the chemist was engaged in that work for a period of a month or two. However, Artwall paint manufactured later under its revised formula and sold by Parco Products in 1933, was examined and analyzed. It was found to have "soft-settled" in its container and also to have a disagreeable odor such as above described. By "soft-settled" it is meant that the paint was getting into a condition where the liquid in its composition was coming to the top and the part of the paint which settled in the bottom of the container was becoming hard. Such soft-settling in casein paint is a condition that is objectionable in the use of the paint and to its sale commercially for, in some instances, that condition progresses until the paint becomes so hard it cannot be used. The respondents received complaints from purchasers, whom they induced to buy large quantities of Artwall and Partwall paint, that it had become so hard it could not be used or sold for use. One of these complaints was made in October 1934. A representative of Parco Products examined the paint complained of in this instance. He said it was useless and ordered it returned to Parco Products for a replacement.

PAR. 16. The respondents, having caused Artwall paint to be purchased by numerous large nationally known consumers, amongst others, in comparatively small or trial quantities, as above mentioned in paragraph 14 hereof, proceeded to use, and they used such sales as recommendations or testimonials of those purchasers, as hereinafter set forth, among other means to the same purpose, falsely to induce dealers to believe that the Artwall paint was in practical use a proven success, and that there existed a very large demand for its purchase and use in large quantities by large users of paint throughout the United States, such as large industrial and institutional organizations.

In order to use the purchases of those small or trial quantities, indicating the purchase and use of the paint by large and discriminating purchasers and users, as recommendations or testimonials of the proven success of Artwall paint and a consequent large existing demand for its purchase and sale by consumers, the respondents caused the purchasers' orders, bearing the names of those consumers, to be photographically reproduced in part, with the figures representing the amounts and prices of the paint omitted. The respondents assembled a great many of such photographs, bound in portfolio form, and exhibited and caused their agents and salesmen to exhibit them to dealers, prospective purchasers of Artwall paint, stating at the same time, and causing their salesmen and agents to state to the dealers that those concerns were large purchasers and users of Artwall paint.

PAR. 17. The unsatisfactory formula under which the respondents at first manufactured and sold Artwall paint was revised about the middle of 1932, and the respondents were then prepared to manufacture the paint under the revised formula, under which the paint produced also was an inferior paint. In some instances it was found to be useless and unsalable, as above set forth.

The respondents began the business of the manufacture of Artwall paint under the revised formula and its sale in wholesale quantities to dealers about the middle of 1932. The selling price of the paint to dealers in wholesale quantities was fixed by the respondents at $2.05 per gallon, regardless of the amount purchased. The price at which the dealers were to resell the paint to consumers was fixed by respondents at $3.15 per gallon. Substantially all dealer-purchasers were required to make the price to consumers $3.15, regardless of the amount purchased. The respondents warned dealers that they must sell to consumers at $3.15 a gallon, otherwise they would be cut off by respondents from further purchases of the paint.

During all the times the respondents were engaged in the sale of Artwall or Partwall casein paint there were other manufacturers of paint, competitors of Parco Products, Inc., whose products were being, and for some time had been, successfully purchased and used by consumers. Casein paint was, and had been sold by such competitors to dealers at prices ranging from $1.00 to $1.29 a gallon, and resold by dealers to consumers at prices from $1.75 to $2.10 a gallon. Both dealers and consumers, respectively, could freely purchase such competing paint in any quantities, from one gallon upwards.

Prior to the time in 1932 when the respondents began the sale of Artwall paint in wholesale quantities, it sold the paint to a large number of consumers in gallon quantities, at from $2.50 to as low as $1.95, or in other words, at considerably less than the price at which they later sold it to dealers for resale, or at from 65 cents to $1.20 a gallon less to consumers than the price of $3.15 which they later suggested and required dealers to obtain from consumers, regardless of quantity. Indicative of the cost of production of Artwall paint to Parco Products is the fact that, an arbitration committee, acting under the arbitration clause in respondent's contract, decided the matter by directing that the balance of 1,750 gallons of paint which the dealer had on hand, should be returned to Parco Products at the price of $2 a gallon or, in the alternative, that Parco Products was to pay the dealer $1,250, the dealer to retain the 1,750 gallons of paint. Parco Products could thus have repossessed itself of 1,750 gallons of paint at the price of about 70 cents a gallon. The respondents paid the dealer the alternative award of $1,250, rather than take back the 1,750 gallons at 70 cents a gallon.

PAR. 18. During all the times from about the middle of 1932 until up to the present time, the respondents, their agents and salesmen, have represented to dealers, for the purpose of inducing them to enter into contracts with Parco Products, Inc., which included orders for large wholesale quantities of Artwall or Partwall paint, among other things, that the vice president of Parco Products, Lester P. Van Duzer, had been associated in the paint industry before his connection with Parco Products; that Parco Products was backed by well-known financiers and was a subsidiary of a large oil paint corporation.

These representations were wholly false. Lester P. Van Duzer was not at any time associated with the paint industry before his connection with Parco Products. Parco Products was not backed by any well-known financiers. There was no financial interest connected with or associated with it outside of its own officers and stockholders. Parco Products was not a subsidiary of any large or small oil paint corporation.

The respondents, their agents and salesmen, represented among other things respecting the nature and quality of Artwall or Partwall paint, that it was a one coat paint, meaning that one coat of Artwall or Partwall paint would cover a surface to be painted, whereas in the case of oil or other paints, two or more coats would be required; that it was a new discovery in paint, an unusual casein or cold water paint; that when applied as paint it left no disagreeable odor; that it left no hot spots; that it could be used by amateurs or persons inexperienced in painting to obtain a finish that, with the use of other paints, could only be obtained by professional painters; and, that it was washable.

The above representations concerning the nature and quality of Artwall paint were each and all false. Artwall or Partwall paint is not and has not been a one coat paint. It leaves a very disagreeable odor, apparently from decomposing casein, an odor described by purchasers to be like the odor from certain cheese or rotten eggs; hot spots appeared on walls painted with it; it could not be successfully applied in painting walls or other surfaces by amateurs or persons inexperienced in painting. In many instances, professional painters found they could not successfully paint various surfaces with it that could be painted successfully with other paints.

The respondents, their agents, and salesmen, represented to dealers that the territory assigned or to be assigned to a distributor of Artwall or Partwall paint was virgin territory and that the dealers, as distributors, would have the exclusive sale of the paint in that territory; and, that Parco Products would organize and instruct a competent sales force for the dealers who entered into contracts with it as distributors of its paint.

The representations that the territory assigned to the distributor was virgin territory and that the distributor would have exclusive sale of the Artwall or Partwall paint therein, were false. In many instances where such representations were made, the dealer learned later that others before him had entered into similar contracts with Parco Products, were unable to dispose of the paint acquired similarly by them and ever since had most of the paint remaining on hand because it was unsalable and they were unable to sell it or to return it to Parco Products, Inc. The representations that Parco Products would organize and instruct a competent sales force for its distributors were not bona fide representations. Usually only one or two days was spent by the representatives of Parco Products in selecting organizing and instructing a sales force, consisting sometimes of only one or two, or at the most six or eight salesmen, who afterwards, in every instance from Massachusetts to Wisconsin, left their employment in the sale of the paint because there was no demand existing for the paint and it was otherwise unsalable. After such slight efforts to organize and instruct a sales force, the respondents made no further efforts to assist distributors in selling the paint and the circumstances in connection with the paint and its sale, on the whole, were such that no matter what efforts were put forth by the respondents, no sales force could be assembled that could possibly sell Artwall or Partwall paint at the prices to consumers that the respondents obtained per gallon from its dealers who bought it for resale.

PAR. 19. The respondents sold a total of 44,033 gallons of Artwall or Partwall paint from 1932 to 1935 to at least 61 dealers in eight States for substantially all of which they obtained $2.05 a gallon, or a total amount of approximately $90,267.

In selling the paint, the respondents furnished their salesmen with a governing sales talk containing representations which the salesmen were to make to the dealers whom they approached. The salesmen made statements and representations to dealers substantially in accordance with the sales talk in every instance of their transactions with the dealers. In the sales talk, the respondents' salesmen, in contacting the dealers, stated to them that they were not authorized by Parco Products to offer them the appointment to be a distributor of the paint but that the officials of Parco Products, who were in New York City, must first pass upon their selection to be distributors of the paint. Thereafter, substantially all the dealers who were appointed distributors visited the New York office of the respondents, and on such occasions the same representations mentioned and referred to in paragraph 18 hereof, and those set forth or indicated in the sales talk, were made to the dealers, respectively, by the representatives of Parco Products in New York City, and on all such occasions particularly by respondent Solomon L. Goldberg. The sales talk referred to was in substance as follows:

I am here to place with one distributor in this territory a business proposition with a material that has very little competition, the nature of which is unusual, requires very little or no time or personal attention and is sold through an advertising campaign conducted by my company—a plan whereby the consumer is not asked to buy one penny's worth of merchandise until he has tried, at our expense, a generous sample which is furnished by us for the purpose of proving to the consumer's entire satisfaction that our merchandise is the best and most economical; the consumer is not asked to purchase until he has actually seen the demonstration or tested the product; a plan whereby every order or inquiry that comes to us from this territory is referred to the distributor; a plan whereby the distributor does not carry any dead stock on his shelves; a plan whereby my company assists the distributor in financing the business; a plan whereby we help build a selling organization for the distributor. If I could satisfy you that this material is an absolute necessity for which there is an enormous market, and if I could show you how it is possible to make a substantial turnover on a profitable basis and the plan contains all the features I have mentioned, would you be in a position to expand your business with additional lines? Now where is your desk, so I can tell you all about the famous, revolutionary one-coat paint and its distribution. (After being seated): Mr. Prospect, I tell you we have investigated a few concerns in this town in order to satisfy ourselves as to whom we shall offer the distribution of our paint, and your name appears on our list. This does not mean that I am authorized by my company to place it with you—My company must pass upon it.

PAR. 20. In making the false statements and representations above mentioned and referred to, including the statements and representations indicated in the sales talk of their salesmen and agents, referred to in paragraph 19 hereof, the respondents adopted and put in practice a systematic method or procedure which was designed to and did accelerate the decision of the dealers with respect to entering into the agreements while they were under the influence or dominance of the false statements and representations.

The essential features of the method and procedure referred to, consisted first in causing agents or salesmen to travel and make surveys of dealers in the various communities or trading centers, and to interview among those dealers one or more whose financial or credit standing was found to be satisfactory, and preferably those not engaged or experienced in the sale of paint and to make statements that tended to and did overcome the natural sales resistance on the part of dealers to purchase large quantities of paint, the merchandising of which was unfamiliar to them. To that end, the respondents' agents and salesmen stated to the dealers they contacted that they were not interviewing them for the purpose of selling anything, and then, following the false representations concerning the respondent, and its paint and concerning its financial associations or connections, the demand for the paint and the possibilities of large profits in its sale, they stimulated the interest of the dealers so incited by stating that their appointment as exclusive distributor of the paint could only be made by the officials of Parco Products at its New York office; that they, the salesmen, having investigated and approved the selection of the dealer in question, would recommend his appointment, and they offered to pay his expenses to and from New York where he might, they said, if satisfactory to those officials, obtain the appointment as distributor in his territory.

PAR. 21. In the light of all the facts regarding the prices of competitive casein paints to dealers and to consumers and the prices paid for its products to Parco Products, Inc., by dealers who, respectively, from time to time, over a period of four years, entered into contracts to act as distributors of its paint and none of whom, to the respondents' knowledge at all times, were able to dispose of the paint except at great loss, if at all, and in the absence of any proof that any dealer-distributor purchased more of the paint after the initial shipment, it is reasonable to infer, and the Commission finds it is the fact, that the object of the respondents in securing distributor contracts from dealers was solely to include therein orders for as large an amount of the paint as was possible with no reasonable hope or expectation of their making any further sales to the same dealers. Outside of those one-time sales, and the receipt of payment for the paint, the respondents neither evinced nor had further interest in the dealers' contracts or their resale of the paint.

To succeed in making such sales to dealers the respondents caused the transactions with the dealers to be begun with a preliminary approach by agents, called salesmen, who were merely false propagandists or cappers, and to be concluded with the dealers at the New York City offices of Parco Products, invariably by respondent Goldberg in the name of the respondent company.

PAR. 22. The purpose of the respondents in sending salesmen or agents to make the first contact with dealers and the effect thereof was to break down the dealers' sales resistance and stimulate their interest sufficiently to cause them, or their representatives who had authority to execute contracts, to visit the offices of Parco Products in New York to consider, primarily, not the purchase of paint but the proposal to become a distributor of respondents' paint. At New York the dealers were invariably met by respondent Goldberg, whose efforts were ostensibly directed to selling them the proposition of becoming distributors and securing their signatures to agreements to act as distributors of the paint. Up to the moment when the dealer appeared to agree to become a distributor, the matter of including an order for paint in the agreement, or the quantity was not mentioned. By such means and artifices, the false statements and method of approach above referred to, the salesmen first contacting dealers and respondent Goldberg later, largely overcame the dealer's sales resistance, his normal antagonistic, skeptical, and questioning attitude towards the purchase of respondents' paint, or other merchandise, particularly when approached by strangers, and shifted the dealer's interest to the proposition as to whether or not he would be approved by the respondent as a distributor, and it was in that mental attitude the distributors were caused to visit the offices of Parco Products and to discuss, invariably with respondent Goldberg, that proposition. Up to this time, and up to the time the dealer was persuaded by respondent Goldberg to become a party to a distributor's franchise, the purchase of the paint and the amount was only incidentally or subconsciously considered by the dealer. On the other hand, the sale of the paint to the dealer in as large an amount as possible, utterly regardless of any reasonable requirements of the dealer for its resale, was the principal objective of the respondents.

PAR. 23. By means of the false statements and representations above set forth, the respondent Goldberg succeeded in getting dealers to agree to accept a distributor's franchise. He thereupon took up with them the matter of the amounts of the paint in its several colors, that he stated would be the requisite quantities for them to have on hand to begin its sale. The dealers were, to his knowledge, without experience in the merchandising of paint. He falsely represented to them the amounts they would require. He cited to them statistics of the use and demand for paint in general in their territories that he knew were an impractical basis for his estimates of their need of the respondents' paint. He continued this practice of false representation of the amounts of respondents' paint that would be required by the dealers, notwithstanding that he knew for over a period of four years that dealers who previously entered into such franchises were unable to dispose of the paint. To hurry the dealers into accepting the amounts of the paint estimated by him as necessary for them to begin its sale, respondent Goldberg falsely represented, among other things, that the franchise was only an application for their appointment and would not be in effect until it was approved by the offices of Parco Products to whom it would be submitted; that Parco Products, Inc., was having such a demand for its paint that it was unable immediately to fill the orders it received from distributors and that sometimes there was a delay of from one to two or three weeks in manufacturing and shipping the paint ordered by the dealers. Substantially in every instance where a dealer signed a distributor's franchise and left it with respondent Goldberg, the franchise was accepted and shipment of the paint by Parco Products followed within about two or three days and, in many instances, the shipment of its paint was started before the dealer was able to arrive at his home on his return from the office of Parco Products.

The Distributor's Franchise provided that the amount of the order for the paint included in it was payable ten days from date of shipment, less 2% discount, and that the purchaser had the option of remitting in equal payments at one and two months from date of shipment, provided settlement was made by notes (but without interest) upon arrival of merchandise at destination. Accordingly, payment for the paint was required to be made by the dealers to Parco Products in substantially all instances before the dealers were able to organize the business of its sale and before the sales organization promised in the franchise could be, and before it was, undertaken by Parco Products to be formed and before the advertising could be begun that Parco Products engaged to do under the terms of the franchise. Payment by the dealers for the paint was by the above means secured to respondents before the dealers, by reason of the resale of the paint by them, could receive and before they received complaints from purchasers that were later received from substantially all of their customers to the effect that the paint and its qualities and use were misrepresented and that they could not use it and, therefore, before the dealers discovered there was no demand for the paint; that it could not be resold by them except at a great loss, if at all, and the result in most instances was that having paid or given notes for the payment of the paint the dealers were without redress for the losses they sustained. Parco Products, Inc., refused in nearly all instances to accept return of paint or to make any money allowances to dealers on that account.

PAR. 24. As above set forth, the Artwall or Partwall paint sold by Parco Products, Inc., to dealers was a casein paint inferior to casein paint sold by competitors. Its qualities, its workability, and the results of its use by persons experienced or inexperienced in painting were severally and at all times misrepresented to dealers by respondents. If truthfully represented in the above respects, the circumstances or conditions under which the paint could satisfactorily be used, were so limited that there was not and could not be any substantial demand for its purchase or use. For many purposes of its use, including the limited occasions last mentioned, it was also, in general, and to respondents' knowledge, commercially unsalable by dealers to consumers by reason of the prices at which it was sold by respondents to dealers for resale. At all times during the period of four years, to the knowledge of the respondents, it could not, except in occasional instances and in inconsiderable amounts, be resold by dealers even at prices to consumers substantially less than the dealers paid to respondents.

In soliciting dealers to enter into distributor contracts, they were falsely told by respondent Goldberg that Parco Products was a subsidiary of large oil paint manufacturers whose interests would be affected by the displacement of their products by respondents' paint and that their names could not be disclosed on that account until the distribution of its paint by Parco Products had made a certain amount of progress. Following that statement by respondent Goldberg, when dealers persisted in their inquiry as to the identity of such manufacturers and suggested the name or names of one or more of the largest oil paint manufacturers in the country as the interested party or parties, respondent Goldberg did not deny the truth of their suggestion. He remained silent and by his manner and by appropriate facial gestures and expression led the dealers to believe that they had shrewdly hit upon the truth as to the identity of the oil paint manufacturers referred to.

By reason of the false representations made to dealers by the respondents, their agents and salesmen, as above set forth, the respondents succeeded in inducing dealers more or less inexperienced in the paint business, erroneously to believe that the respondents' casein paint was a new discovery in casein paints; that its successful use was demonstrated by large industrial users of paint who were discriminating purchasers; that such large consumers were and had been large purchasers and users of the paint; and, in consequence that there was a large existing and potential demand for its purchase and sale. In reliance upon such erroneous belief, dealers were induced by respondents to enter into an agreement in writing, called a Distributor's Franchise, which purported to appoint the dealers sole distributors of respondents' paint in their respective localities. In all cases, there was included in the form of the Distributor's Contract, when executed by Parco Products and dealers, an order for the purchase of large quantities of the paint, amounting in the various transactions to from several hundred to several thousand gallons and in at least one instance, a carload lot, which at the price to the dealer of $2.05 a gallon, for the latter amounted, approximately, to $7,800.

In consequence of the premises, dealers purchased for resale and distribution large quantities of respondents' paint in preference to paint sold by competitors of Parco Products, Inc., with the further consequence that they were unable to resell respondents' paint at prices which would be profitable and it was left on the hands of the dealers as "distress merchandise" to be offered and sold, if at all, at prices greatly under the prices at which the similar paint of respondents' competitors was offered for sale and sold. Many of the dealers who bought respondents' paint were caused to and did sell it at such lower prices and, in some cases, gave it away without charge, to the prejudice and injury of respondents' competitors.

PAR. 25. The merchandising of the Artwall or Partwall paint of Parco Products, Inc., was pursuant to a fraudulent plan, fraudulently conceived by respondent Goldberg and fraudulently carried out by him and the officers of Parco Products, Inc., whereby respondents used the paint mentioned as the means or device, fraudulently to obtain large sums of money from the dealers as above set forth, and used the corporate form, Parco Products, Inc., as an instrumentality and more effectively to accomplish the object and purpose of the fraudulent plan or scheme by concealing the officers of Parco Products and respondent Goldberg individually as the sellers of the paint.

CONCLUSION

The above acts and practices of the respondents, Parco Products, Inc., and Solomon L. Goldberg, are to the prejudice of the public and of the competitors of respondent Parco Products, Inc., and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce, within the meaning and intent of Section 5 of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

This proceeding having been heard by the Federal Trade Commission upon the complaint of the Commission, the answer of the respondents, testimony and other evidence taken before John L. Hornor, Esq., an examiner of the Commission, theretofore duly designated by it, in support of the allegations of the complaint and in opposition thereto, and the brief filed herein in support of the complaint, and the Commission having made its findings as to the facts and its conclusion that the respondents have violated the provision of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

It is ordered, That the respondent Parco Products, Inc., its officers, agents, and employees, and the respondent Solomon L. Goldberg, in connection with the sale and distribution, or the offering for sale of the Artwall or Partwall casein paint or any other paint product of Parco Products, Inc., in interstate commerce or in the District of Columbia, do forthwith and forever;

Cease and desist, From stating verbally or in writing or representing directly or indirectly:

1. That the Artwall or Partwall casein paint of Parco Products, Inc., or any casein paint sold by the respondents or either of them, of substantially the same composition and qualities in its application and use as paint:

(a) Is a one-coat paint; i. e., that surfaces, required to be painted with two coats in the case of oil or other paints, would require to be painted with only one coat of the Artwall or Partwall paint of Parco Products, Inc.

(b) Is washable on surfaces painted with it.

(c) Leaves no disagreeable odor.

(d) Is not followed by "hot spots" on surfaces painted with it.

(e) Can be used by amateurs or persons inexperienced in painting as successfully as when used by experienced painters.

(f) Will give a finish to painted surfaces that can be obtained with other paints only by experienced painters.

2. That Lester P. Van Duzer, vice president of respondent Parco Products, Inc., is or was at any time associated with the paint industry before he became connected with Parco Products, Inc.

3. That Parco Products, Inc., is or has been at any time a subsidiary of any other corporation, or that any person or persons other than its own proper officers, agents, and employees are or have been financially or otherwise interested in the sale or distribution of its Artwall or Partwall casein paint or of any other of its products; unless or until such representations shall hereafter, by change of circumstances, have their basis in fact and in truth.

4. That the territory offered a dealer as a distributor of the paint of Parco Products, Inc., is virgin territory, or that such dealer would be the exclusive seller of its paint therein, when previously Parco Products, Inc., had made other dealers its distributors in the same territory, who were at the time holding large stocks of its paint, whether or not the paint held by them was bought upon misrepresentation of respondents concerning its qualities and the demand for its purchase and use.

5. That Parco Products, Inc., would select, organize, and instruct a competent sales force for dealers acting as its distributors unless such representation of respondents is made in good faith to be thereafter fulfilled by substantial performance.

6. To dealers solicited by Parco Products to act as distributors, or for any purpose, that its paint is in large demand for purchase and use by large industrial or institutional organizations, or others, when, to the knowledge of respondents, such demand is purely hypothetical and there is no substantial basis therefor on actual purchases made by such users of paint.

7. That there is demand by large industrial or institutional organizations, or others, for the purchase and use of Artwall or Partwall casein paint or any paint product of Parco Products, Inc., by exhibiting to dealers, prospective distributors, or to others, purchase orders of large users, or others, for small quantities of paint sold to them by respondents prepared in such manner as to omit the amounts of the paint purchased and the amounts of its purchase price.

8. To dealers solicited to act as distributors of the paint of Parco Products, or to others, that there is a large demand for the purchase and resale and use of its paint at prices to dealers and consumers greater than the competitive prices for the same class of paints, when such is not the fact.

It is further ordered, That the respondents shall each, within 30 days after service upon them of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which they each, respectively, have complied with this order.

IN THE MATTER OF

J. W. GIBSON, TRADING AS J. W GIBSON COMPANY

COMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 26, 1914

Docket 2932. Complaint, Sept. 29, 1936—Decision, Sept. 21, 1937

Where an individual engaged in sale and distribution of food flavoring, spices, toilet articles, and kindred merchandise, to distributors and house-to-house canvassers, in substantial competition with those engaged in sale of such products in commerce among and between the various States; in advertising, in periodicals or publications of interstate circulation, to facilitate the sales of such products and to obtain distributors for purchase of his said merchandise for resale, usually, through house-to-house canvassing, to members of the purchasing public—

- (a) Represented, to prospective distributors and purchasers, that, on becoming distributors, they would receive free sales kits, and that they could earn up to $24.00 a day, and would earn $35.00 a week, and that they would be given new automobiles as a bonus in addition to their regular earnings, through such statements as "Free Sales Kit * * * filled with 5 full size Samples * * * at Absolutely NO COST to workers * * *," "Up to $24 a day," etc., "MEN AND WOMEN needing up to $35 a WEEK Operate one of my New Kind of Cut-Rate Store-on-Wheels * * *," "I average between $40.00 and $50.00 EACH WEEK," "BRAND NEW TUDOR FORD SEDAN FURNISHED WORKERS * * ," " * * I give it to you IN ADDITION TO YOUR REGULAR EARNINGS," "* * * representatives have earned as many as three, even four brand new Ford cars within a space of two or three years. Not having use for more than one car, they sold the others and pocketed the easy cash for themselves," facts being no such kits are furnished, deposit is required on each, subject to refund in event of aggregate purchase amounting to some $12.00, distributors did not earn any such amounts under normal conditions in due course of business, but average weekly earnings of all distributors under such conditions were much less than said $35.00 per week, sale of $4,500 of merchandise, exclusive of free deals and combinations, was required before any automobile was furnished, and in fact no automobile had ever been supplied by said individual to distributor;
- (b) Represented that merchandise was given away as a gratuity in consideration of purchase of other products, through such statements as "We frequently offer to customers valuable kitchen utensils and many other useful articles when they purchase a big high-quality bottle of food flavoring at regular retail price. This is just one of the hundreds of special combinations and free gift offers that are bound to make you the most popular person in your community," facts being no merchandise was given away as gratuity in consideration of purchase of other products, but cost of such merchandise was included as part of purchase price charged for another article or combination of articles;
- (c) Represented, on letterheads and in pamphlets of instructions sent to his distributors and otherwise, that he was a manufacturer of the products sold by him, and that his goods were sold "direct from the factory to the customer," facts being he did not own, operate or control plant or factory in which were made, manufactured or compounded all the products sold by him, but purchased in bulk and repackaged many of the items so sold; and

- (d) Designated food flavorings sold by him, in advertisements, literature, and instructions published and furnished to his purchasers, as "extracts," and represented said flavorings as triple strength, through such statements as "famous triple strength guaranteed food flavorings," facts being compounds thus referred to were not extracts or juices from fruits, beans, berries, or other similar products, dissolved and carried in alcoholic solution, but were made and composed largely of imitation and synthetic flavoring materials dissolved and carried in emulsions and oils, and were not three times as strong as ordinary food flavorings, but were ordinary imitation flavoring compounds;

With capacity and tendency to mislead and deceive potential distributors and customers into a mistaken and erroneous belief that earnings to be achieved in sale of said merchandise were far in excess of those that could actually be obtained, and that respondent was manufacturer of the merchandise sold by him, furnishing his distributors with bonuses, free automobiles, sales kits and merchandise, and offering genuine extracts and triple strength food flavors, and with result, by reason of such erroneous beliefs thus engendered, that prospective distributors and members of the public were induced to buy his said merchandise and become distributors therefor, and trade was unfairly diverted to him from his said competitors similarly engaged, and who do not misrepresent their said merchandise or business status or make false and misleading statements to prospective distributors and representatives concerning earning opportunities, conditions of employment or otherwise, and said competitors' abilities successfully to compete with him were thereby lessened; to the substantial injury of competition in commerce:

Held, That such acts and practices were to the prejudice of the public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition.

Before Mr. Robert S. Hall, trial examiner.

Mr. Astor Hogg for the Commission.

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that J. W. Gibson, an individual, trading and doing business under the firm name and style of J. W. Gibson Company, hereinafter referred to as the respondent, has been and is using unfair methods of competition in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in said act, and it appearing to the Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint, stating its charges in that respect as follows:

Complaint

25 F. T. C.

PARAGRAPH 1. Said respondent, J. W. Gibson, is an individual, trading and doing business under the firm name and style of J. W. Gibson Company, with his office and principal place of business at 1828 Central Avenue, in the city of Indianapolis and State of Indiana. Respondent is now, and for more than one year last past has been, engaged in the business of selling food flavorings, spices, toilet articles, and kindred merchandise to agents and house-to-house canvassers. In the course and conduct of his business, respondent sells and distributes said products in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia, causing said products, when sold, to be shipped from his place of business in the State of Indiana to purchasers thereof located in a State or States of the United States other than the State of Indiana.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of his business aforesaid, respondent is now, and for more than one year last past has been, in substantial competition with other individuals, and with other corporations, firms, and partnerships engaged in the business of manufacturing, selling and distributing food flavorings, extracts, spices, toilet articles, and kindred merchandise in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 3. In the course and conduct of his business, respondent has made and is making false and misleading representations in advertisements inserted in various publications circulated throughout the United States, and in letters, circulars, pamphlets, and otherwise. Among such advertisements, published and circulated as aforesaid, are the following:

which concludes with the identical offer of a Ford automobile contained in the preceding advertisement.

After prospective agents or purchasers have communicated with respondent because of said advertisements, they receive letters and circulars, in which, among other things, it is stated that:

I want every one of my successful representatives to have one of these beautiful latest model Fords ABSOLUTELY FREE * * *

Understand you pay nothing now or ever for this free Ford * * * I give it to you IN ADDITION TO YOUR REGULAR EARNINGS.

Why, I know of cases where representatives have earned as many as three, even four brand new Ford cars within a space of two or three years. Not having use for more than one car, they sold the others and pocketed the easy cash for themselves.

On his letterheads, in his pamphlets of instructions, and otherwise, the respondent describes and holds himself out to be a manufacturer of the merchandise he sells, stating that the "J. W. Gibson Company has been manufacturing quality food products," that his said business is "unlike other manufacturers," and that his goods are sold "direct from the factory to the customer."

In the advertisements, literature, and instructions which respondent publishes and furnishes to his purchasers, the imitation flavoring compounds referred to are described in many instances as "extracts" and "Gibson's Famous Triple Strength Guaranteed Food Flavors."

In the catalogue sent by the respondent to prospective agents and purchasers, respondent makes the following statement:

We frequently offer to customers valuable kitchen utensils and many other useful articles when they purchase a big high-quality bottle of food flavoring at regular retail price. This is just one of the hundreds of special combinations and free gift offers that are bound to make you the most popular person in your community.

PAR. 4 Respondent, by such false and misleading advertising in interstate commerce, has falsely represented to prospective agents that they can obtain free sales kits, that they can earn from $24 to $50 per week, and that they are given new automobiles by respondent as a bonus in addition to their regular earnings.

By the use of false and misleading representations appearing in respondent's circulars and other advertising matter pertaining to the quality of flavoring extracts and the giving of gifts and premiums, which representations are passed on to the purchasing public by agents and representatives of respondent, the public is deceived concerning the character and quality of said merchandise and the value thereof.

PAR. 5. In truth and in fact, respondent does not furnish free sales kits to prospective agents or purchasers, but on the contrary requires a deposit of one dollar for each of such sales kits, which said amount is not refunded until such purchaser has bought certain merchandise, the aggregate price of which is $11.76; the agents or workers do not earn up to $24 a day. The statement "men and women needing up to $35 a week" implies that, by operating one of respondent's "Cut Rate Stores on Wheels," an agent is enabled to earn said amount of money in one week, when in truth and in fact said agents do not earn such amount; and in truth and in fact agents of respondent do not average between $40 and $50 per week, but on the contrary earn only amounts which do not even approximate such sum; respondent does not furnish any automobiles as a bonus to his agents in addition to their regular earnings, but on the contrary requires that such agents sell merchandise amounting to $4,500, exclusive of free deals and combinations, before they are entitled to any automobile; in fact, no agent has ever received an automobile from respondent, free or otherwise; the representation, made in one of respondent's letters, to the effect that he knows of agents who have earned three or four brand new Ford cars, is false; respondent is not a manufacturer of the merchandise he sells, but on the contrary purchases all of his products from manufacturers and wholesalers; the extracts referred to by respondent as Guaranteed Triple Strength Food Flavors are in truth and in fact imitation flavoring compounds; respondent does not furnish to ultimate consumers gifts, premiums or money saving deals, but on the contrary the price of all such goods is included in the price of the merchandise sold to the public.

PAR. 6. Respondent, in his catalogue, pamphlets, and letters, distributed as aforesaid, has used the terms "extracts" and "Gibson's Famous Triple Strength Guaranteed Food Flavors" to describe imitation flavoring compounds which lack the necessary alcohol content required as a vehicle for carrying genuine flavoring extracts. Over a period of many years the trade and the public generally have been led to, and they now do, believe and consider a "flavoring extract" to be a flavoring compound wherein the flavoring is secured by extraction of juices from beans, berries, nuts, or fruits. These juices are then suspended in alcohol which is recognized as the most valuable and desirable vehicle that can be used for dissolving and preserving extractions of juice from beans, berries, nuts, or fruits.

PAR. 7. A substantial portion of the purchasing public has expressed and has had a marked preference for genuine "flavoring extracts," as that term is known and used by the trade and public generally, over any imitation flavoring compounds composed of synthetic substitutes and chemicals suspended in inferior oils or emulsions. The cost of producing genuine flavoring extracts is greatly in excess of the cost of producing imitation flavoring compounds.

Also, a substantial portion of the purchasing public has a marked preference for dealing with and purchasing items of merchandise from manufacturers or distributors who operate on a large scale and do a large volume of business, believing that superior quality and closer prices can be secured by dealing with such distributor.

PAR. 8. In the course and conduct of his business as hereinabove described, respondent is and has been in competition with individuals, and with firms, partnerships and corporations engaged in the manufacture, sale, and distribution in interstate commerce of food flavoring extracts, spices, toilet articles and kindred merchandise, which said competitors are likewise selling to representatives and agents, and who do not misrepresent and have not misrepresented their said merchandise, and who do not make and have not made false and misleading statements to prospective agents and representatives concerning their opportunity to earn large sums of money and otherwise.

PAR. 9. The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondent, as detailed herein, in the offering for sale and sale of his products, were calculated to, and had, and now have, the capacity and tendency to and do, mislead and deceive potential representatives, salesmen or employees into the false and erroneous belief that the earnings to be achieved in selling the wares and merchandise of the respondent are far in excess of the earnings that can actually be obtained and to mislead and deceive said representatives, salesmen or employees, as well as the purchasing public, into the mistaken and erroneous beliefs that the respondent is the manufacturer of the merchandise which he sells and that the representations with reference to bonuses, free deals and combinations are true, and into the purchase of respondent's merchandise on account of such erroneous beliefs. As a result thereof, trade has been unfairly diverted to the respondent from his said competitors whose ability to successfully compete with him has been and is lessened by reason of said methods. As a consequence thereof, substantial injury has been done by the respondent to competition in commerce among and between the various States of the United States.

PAR. 10. The acts and things above alleged to have been done, and the false representations alleged to have been made by respondent, are to the prejudice of the public and the competitors of respondent and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914.

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, on September 29, 1936, issued and on October 1, 1936, served its complaint in this proceeding upon respondent J. W. Gibson, trading as J. W. Gibson Company, charging him with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of the provisions of said act. After the issuance of said complaint and the filing of respondent's answer thereto, testimony and other evidence in support of the allegations of said complaint were introduced by Astor Hogg, attorney for the Commission, before Robert S. Hall, an examiner of the Commission, theretofore duly designated by it. No testimony or evidence was offered by respondent in opposition to the allegations of the complaint. The testimony and other evidence offered were duly recorded and filed in the office of the Commission. Thereafter the proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on the said complaint, the answer thereto, testimony and other evidence and brief in support of the complaint (respondent having filed no brief), and the Commission having duly considered the same and being now fully advised in the premises finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom.

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. J. W. Gibson is an individual trading under the name and style of J. W. Gibson Company with his principal place of business located in the city of Indianapolis, in the State of Indiana. He is now, and for several years last past has been, engaged in the sale and distribution of food flavorings, spices, toilet articles, and kindred merchandise to distributors and house to house canvassers. In the course and conduct of his business respondent sells and distributes said products in commerce between and among the various States of the United States. He causes said products, when sold, to be shipped from his place of business in the State of Indiana to purchasers thereof located in the various States of the United States other than the State of Indiana. There is now, and has been at all times mentioned herein, a constant current of trade and commerce by the respondent in said products between and among the various States of the United States. Respondent is now, and at all times mentioned herein has been, in substantial competition with other individuals and with corporations, firms, and persons engaged in the sale and distribution of food flavorings, spices, toilet preparations, and allied products in commerce among and between the various States of the United States.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of his business as described in paragraph 1 hereof respondent sold and sells his merchandise to distributors designated by him as agents, who in turn sold and sell such products usually by house to house canvassing to members of the purchasing public. To facilitate the sales of such products and as a means of obtaining such distributors respondent caused and causes advertising matter to be inserted in magazines or publications having an interstate circulation. Typical advertisements published and circulated as aforesaid are the following:

After prospective distributors or purchasers have communicated with respondent because of said advertisements they receive letters and circulars from respondent in which, among other things, it is stated:

I want every one of my successful representatives to have one of these beautiful latest model Fords ABSOLUTELY FREE * * *.

Understand you pay nothing now or ever for this free Ford * * * I give it to you IN ADDITION TO YOUR REGULAR EARNINGS.

Why, I know of cases where representatives have earned as many as three, even four brand new Ford cars within a space of two or three years. Not having use for more than one car, they sold the others and pocketed the easy cash for themselves.

On his letterheads, in his pamphlets of instructions sent to his distributors and otherwise, respondent represents that he is a manufacturer of the products he sells and that his goods are sold "direct from the factory to the customer."

In the advertisements, literature and instructions which respondent publishes and furnishes to his purchasers the flavoring compounds referred to are described in many instances as "extracts" and "Gibson's famous triple strength guaranteed food flavorings."

In the catalogue sent by the respondent to prospective distributors and purchasers respondent makes the following statement:

We frequently offer to customers valuable kitchen utensils and many other useful articles when they purchase a big high-quality bottle of food flavoring at regular retail price. This is just one of the hundreds of special combinations and free gift offers that are bound to make you the most popular person in your community.

PAR. 3. In the manner and by the means aforesaid respondent has represented to prospective distributors and purchasers that they will receive free sales kits when they become distributors, that they can earn up to $24.00 per day and that they will earn $35.00 per week; that they will be given new automobiles by respondent as a bonus in addition to their regular earnings; that the food flavorings advertised and offered for sale are "extracts"; that gifts and premiums are granted purchasers without cost and that respondent offers hundreds of special combinations and free gifts of merchandise; and that respondent manufactures all the merchandise sold by him.

PAR. 4. In truth and in fact respondent does not furnish free sales kits to prospective purchasers or distributors but on the contrary requires a deposit of $1.00 for each of such sales kits which amount is subject to be refunded in the event such purchaser buys certain merchandise, the aggregate price of which is $11.76. The distributors of respondent's products do not earn up to $24.00 a day under normal conditions in due course of business. The statement made by respondent "men and women needing up to $35.00 a week" implies that the distributors of respondent's products make $35.00 a week profit from selling respondent's goods. In truth and in fact the majority of said distributors do not earn any such amount. The average earnings of all distributors achieved under normal conditions, are much less than $35.00 per week. Respondent's distributors do not average between $40.00 and $50.00 a week and neither do their earnings approximate any such sum. Respondent does not furnish any automobiles as a bonus to his distributors in addition to their regular earnings, or otherwise, but on the contrary requires that such distributors sell merchandise amounting to $4500 exclusive of free deals and combinations before they are entitled to any automobile. In fact no distributor has ever received an automobile from the respondent. Respondent does not own, operate, or control the plant or factory in which are made, manufactured, or compounded all the products sold by him. Many of the items which he sells are purchased in bulk and repackaged by him. The flavoring compounds referred to as being of triple strength are not three times as strong as ordinary food flavorings, and on the contrary are ordinary imitation flavoring compounds. Respondent does not furnish to ultimate consumers or distributors gifts, premiums or free merchandise but on the contrary the price of all such goods is included as a part of the purchase price charged for another article or combination of articles.

PAR. 5. In his catalogues, pamphlets, and letters distributed to prospective purchasers respondent uses and used the term "extracts" to describe imitation flavoring compounds, which said representations are passed on to the consuming public by respondent's distributors. Such flavoring compounds so represented were not and are not extracts or juice from fruits, beans, berries, or other similar products dissolved and carried in alcoholic solution, but were and are, on the contrary, made and composed of flavoring materials, largely imitation and synthetic, dissolved and carried in emulsions and oils.

A substantial portion of the purchasing public has a preference for flavoring extracts as that term is generally known and understood over imitation flavoring compounds composed of synthetic substitutes and chemicals suspended in oils and emulsions.

Also a substantial portion of the purchasing public has a preference for dealing with and purchasing merchandise from the manufacturers thereof, believing that in so doing they can and do save middlemen's profits and secure other advantages.

PAR. 6. There are among the competitors of respondent corporations, individuals, partnerships, and firms engaged in the sale of food flavorings, spices, toilet articles, and kindred merchandise in commerce between and among the various States of the United States, which said competitors likewise sell to representatives and distributors and who do not misrepresent and have not misrepresented their said merchandise or business status and who do not make and have not made false or misleading statements to prospective distributors and representatives concerning the opportunity to earn sums of money, conditions of employment or otherwise.

PAR. 7. The use by respondent of the foregoing false and misleading representations has had and now has the capacity and tendency to mislead and deceive potential distributors and customers into the mistaken and erroneous belief that the earnings to be achieved in selling the wares and merchandise of respondent are far in excess of the earnings that can actually be obtained and to mislead and deceive such persons as well as the purchasing public into the mistaken and erroneous belief that the respondent is a manufacturer of the merchandise which he sells and into the erroneous belief that respondent furnishes his distributors with bonuses, free automobiles, free sales kits, and free merchandise; and into the erroneous beliefs that the food flavorings offered for sale are genuine extracts and that food flavorings offered for sale as such are three times stronger than ordinary food flavors. And as a result of such erroneous beliefs engendered as above set forth prospective distributors and members of the public are induced to purchase respondent's merchandise and to become distributors for such merchandise. As a result thereof trade has been unfairly diverted to the respondent from his said competitors whose abilities to successfully compete with respondent have been and is lessened by the reason of use of said methods. As a consequence thereof substantial injury has been, and is being, done by respondent to competition in commerce among and between the various States of the United States.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondent, J. W. Gibson, trading as J. W. Gibson Company, are to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce, within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

1094

Order

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

It is ordered, That the respondent, J. W. Gibson, trading as J. W. Gibson Company, or trading under any other name or names, his agents, servants, and employees, in soliciting the sale of and selling food flavorings, spices, toilet articles, grocery products and similar merchandise, and in advertising for distributors to sell such merchandise, do cease and desist from:

1. Representing, or holding out, as possible or maximum earnings for any fixed period through the use of such statements or expressions "up to" or "as much as" or any other statements or expressions of similar import and effect, or through any other means or device or in any manner, any amount in excess of amounts actually earned during said fixed period by distributors of respondent's merchandise under normal conditions in due course of business.

2. Representing, or holding out, as usual or customary earnings or profits to be derived from the sale of respondent's products any sum or amount in excess of the average, usual and customary sums or amounts actually so earned under normal conditions in due course of business.

3. Representing that prospective distributors are given sales kits free or that any article of merchandise will be given free unless such article is given without the payment of any money.

4. Representing in any manner that merchandise is given as a gratuity in consideration of the purchase of other products when the cost of such merchandise is included as a part of the purchase price charged for another article or combination of articles.

5. Representing in any manner that Fords or automobiles of any kind are furnished or supplied to, or earned by, workers or distributors.

6. Representing in any manner that respondent is the manufacturer of all the products sold by him or that he owns, operates, or controls a factory where all the products sold by him are manufactured or made or that customers in purchasing from respondent are dealing directly with the manufacturer of all products sold by him, unless and until respondent actually owns, operates or directly and absolutely controls a factory where all of said products are in fact made and manufactured by him.

7. Designating any food flavors as extracts until and unless the product is composed of genuine ingredients, as distinguished from synthetic chemical substitutes, and such ingredients are suspended in alcohol.

8. Representing in any manner that ordinary food flavorings are of triple strength.

It is further ordered, That the respondent shall, within 60 days after service upon him of this order; file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which he has complied with this order.

IN THE MATTER OF

BABIGLO COMPANY, INC.

COMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION
OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 26, 1914

Docket 3033. Complaint, Apr. 3, 1937¹—Decision, Sept. 30, 1937

Where a corporation engaged in sale and distribution, as jobber, to wholesale and retail dealers in various other States, of soaps made for it by various manufacturers to its order, in direct and substantial competition with those similarly engaged in sale and offer of soaps in interstate commerce, and including among its competitors those who manufacture, sell, and distribute soaps which are actually made of olive oil and who advertise and represent their said soaps fairly and accurately—

Labeled, stamped, branded, stenciled, offered, sold, and distributed large and substantial quantities of its said soap with such words and phrases, on labels and containers thereof, as "Olive Oil," "Imported Olive Oil," "Imported Spanish Olive Oil," "Genuine Imported Spanish Olive Oil," "Made with Imported Olive Oil," and in connection therewith the words and phrases, "Old Seville," "Old Madrid," "Florentine," "Infanta," and "Rosario," notwithstanding fact aforesaid brands, thus advertised, designated, represented and sold by it, were not soaps made wholly of olive oil, long considered, by manufacturers of and dealers in said product and by public generally, as excellent soap, free from harmful substances, and possessing desirable qualities not possessed by others, and, by medical profession and drug trade, as having qualities requisite for the care of the sick or ailing, for medical use and for babies, and were not products of Spain, noted producer of olive oil, nor of Italy, but consisted of products saponified and mixed with other oils and fats containing for their fatty bases large percentages of cocoanut oil, palm kernel oil and tallow, with only small percentage of olive oil, in some instances;

With effect of confusing, prejudicing, and injuring its competitors through use of such false and misleading statements, designations, and descriptions, and diverting trade to it from them, operating as a detriment to free and legitimate competition in business of marketing soap, and placing in hands of wholesale and retail dealers an instrument permitting them more easily to substitute its goods for those of another, and of causing trading public in United States to buy its said soap as and for olive oil soaps made with one hundred percent olive oil base:

AMENDED COMPLAINT

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent, Babiglo Company, Inc., is a corporation organized under the laws of the State of New York, with its principal place of business located at No. 37 West 20th St., New York City. It is, and for two years last past has been engaged, as hereinafter described, in the business of selling and distributing, as jobbers, to wholesale and retail dealers located in various States of the United States, other than the State of New York, soaps manufactured for it by various manufacturers located in the States of New York, New Jersey, Ohio, and elsewhere. In consummating such sales and in distributing such merchandise, respondent causes the soaps so sold by it to be transported and delivered from the city of New York, through and into various other States of the United States to the respective purchasers thereof at their several points of location. In the course and conduct of its business, Babiglo Company, Inc., the respondent herein, has been, and now is, engaged in direct and substantial competition with various corporations, partnerships, and individuals likewise engaged in selling soap and in offering such product for sale, in interstate commerce.

PAR. 2. Spain has always been noted as a producer of olive oil. Because of the recognized qualities of olive oil as an agent for health and cleanliness, and for other reasons, soap made of olive oil has long been, and now is, considered by manufacturers of, and dealers in soap, and by the public generally, as an excellent soap, free from substances harmful to the human skin or to delicate fabrics, a product of undoubted excellence and possessing desirable qualities not contained in some other soaps. Soap made of olive oil has long been known as one of the world's best known toilet soaps. Soap made of olive oil has long been, and now is, considered and held by the medical profession and the drug trade, to have the qualities requisite and desirable for the cleansing and bathing of sick or ailing persons, and for use in medical preparations. Such soap has long been, and now is, prescribed and recommended by said profession and said trade as a Baby Soap.

PAR. 3. In connection with its business of selling and distributing soap in interstate commerce, respondent contracts with various manufacturers of soap who manufacture such product for it. Said manufacturers make soap to the order of respondent and the said soap, after being so manufactured, is weighed according to size and is then shipped to respondent by said manufacturers. Respondent thereupon assort the same, and stencils, brands, or labels and wraps it in accordance with respondent's own methods of marketing. Said soap is then sold to respondent's customers, wholesalers and retailers. Said stenciling, branding, labeling, wrapping, and representations appearing upon or in connection with respondent's soap products, represent and reflect the advertising ideas and policies of respondent.

PAR. 4. In further connection with the sale and distribution of its said soap to wholesalers and retailers as hereinabove described, respondent has caused and still causes large and substantial quantities of its said soap to be labeled, stamped, branded, stenciled, offered for sale, sold, and distributed under designations as hereinafter described, said representations indicating, and intended to indicate, that said soaps are, and were, made wholly of imported Spanish olive oil or were Spanish products made of olive oil, or were and are, products of Spanish or Italian origin, when such are not the facts.

The respondent has caused toilet soaps made and sold as herein described to be offered for sale, and sold, respectively, in wrappers and containers having on the wrappers, labels, and containers of the said soaps, among others, the words and phrases, "Olive Oil," "Imported Olive Oil," "Imported Spanish Olive Oil," "Genuine Imported Spanish Olive Oil," "Made With Imported Olive Oil," and in connection therewith the words and phrases, "Old Seville," "Old Madrid," "Florentine," "Infanta," "Rosario," and "Spanish Floating Soap."

PAR. 5. When in truth and in fact the aforementioned brands of soap advertised, represented and sold by respondent are not, and have not been made as alleged, and claimed, from olive oil, but are instead highly adulterated soaps of cheaper grade, type or composition, saponified and mixed with other oils and fats, containing for their fatty bases, large percentages of cocoanut oil, palm kernel oil, and tallow, with only a small percentage of olive oil in any instance, and containing no olive oil in some instances; the brands of soap containing Spanish names indicating Spanish origin, such as "Old Seville," "Old Madrid," "Infanta," and "Spanish Floating Soap" are not, and never were, of Spanish origin; the brand known as "Florentine" is not, and never has been, a product of Italian origin, and the brand designated as "Rosario" is not, and never has been, a product either of Spanish or Italian origin.

PAR. 6. Respondent's use of the words, terms, and expressions, "Olive Oil," "Imported Olive Oil," "Imported Spanish Olive Oil," "Genuine Imported Spanish Olive Oil," "Made With Imported Olive Oil" in designating, describing, representing, and offering for sale and in selling its said soaps as hereinbefore described is, and was, false, misleading, and deceptive and has, and has had, the capacity to mislead and deceive substantial members of the wholesale and retail trade and the consuming public into purchasing respondent's said soaps in the erroneous belief that the same are, and were, "Olive Oil" soaps made with a hundred percent olive oil base, when such is not, and was not, the fact. The further use by respondent of such Spanish words and expressions as "Old Seville," "Old Madrid," "Spanish Floating Soap," and "Infanta"; of the Italian word "Rosario" in connection with the expressions, "Olive Oil," "Imported Olive Oil," "Imported Spanish Olive Oil," "Genuine Imported Spanish Olive Oil," "Made with Imported Olive Oil," in designating, describing and offering for sale and in selling its soaps as aforesaid are, and were, false, misleading, and deceptive, and have, and have had, the capacity to mislead and deceive substantial numbers of the wholesale and retail trade and the consuming public into purchasing respondent's said brands of soap in the erroneous belief that the same are, and were, respectively, of Spanish or Italian origin, when such is not the fact.

PAR. 7. There are among the competitors of respondent those engaged in the manufacture or importation of soap which is made exclusively from an olive oil base, and who accurately and fairly describe, represent, advertise and sell their products as "Olive Oil" soap, a soap made of olive oil; and there are other competitors of respondent who manufacture, describe, represent, advertise and sell soaps containing no olive oil, or a combination of olive oil and other fatty ingredients such as cocoanut oil, palm kernel oil, or other oils, who do not represent such products to be "Olive Oil" soap, but who advertise and represent and sell such soaps fairly and accurately.

PAR. 8. The use by respondent of the false, misleading, and deceptive statements, designations, and descriptions as hereinbefore set forth constitutes practices or methods of competition which tend to, and do, confuse, prejudice and injure respondent's competitors, divert trade to respondent from its competitors, operate as a detriment to free and legitimate competition in the business of marketing soap, place in the hands of wholesale and retail dealers an instrument which permits them more easily to substitute the goods of respondent for the more expensive products of another, have the capacity and tendency to cause, and do cause, the trading public in the United States to purchase respondent's said soaps, as and for olive oil soaps, which they are not, in preference to the more costly soaps of competitors which are made with a hundred percent olive oil base.

PAR. 9. Said false, deceptive, and misleading acts, practices, and methods of respondent are to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce, within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled, "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

proceeding is in the interest of the public and makes its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom.

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent, Babiglo Company, Inc., is a corporation organized, existing and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of New York, with its principal place of business located at No. 37 West 20th St., New York City. Respondent is now and for more than two years last past has been engaged in the business of selling and distributing as jobber, to wholesale and retail dealers located in various States of the United States, other than the State of New York, soaps manufactured for it by various manufacturers located in the States of New York, New Jersey, Ohio, and elsewhere. In consummating such sales and in distributing such merchandise, respondent causes the said soaps so sold by it to be transported and delivered from its place of business in New York City, State of New York, through and into various other States of the United States to the respective purchasers thereof at their several points of location.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of its business, Babiglo Company, Inc., the respondent herein, has been, and now is, engaged in direct and substantial competition with various corporations, partnerships, and individuals likewise engaged in selling soap and in offering such products for sale, in interstate commerce.

PAR. 3. Spain has always been noted as a producer of olive oil. Because of the recognized qualities of olive oil as an agent for health and cleanliness, and for other reasons, soap made of olive oil has long been, and now is, considered by manufacturers of, and dealers in soap, and by the public generally, as an excellent soap, free from substances harmful to the human skin or to delicate fabrics, a product of undoubted excellence and possessing desirable qualities not contained in some other soaps. Soap made of olive oil has long been recognized as one of the world's best known toilet soaps. Soap made of olive oil has long been, and now is, considered and held by the medical profession and the drug trade, to have the qualities requisite and desirable for the cleansing and bathing of sick or ailing persons, and for use in medical preparations. Such soap has long been, and now is, prescribed and recommended by said profession and said trade as a Baby Soap.

PAR. 4. In connection with its business of selling and distributing soap in interstate commerce, respondent contracts with various manufacturers of soap who manufacture such product for it. Said manufacturers make soap to the order of respondent and the said soap, after being so manufactured, is weighed according to size and is then shipped to respondent by said manufacturers. Respondent thereupon assort the same, and stencils, brands, or labels and wraps it in accordance with respondent's own methods of marketing. Said soap is then sold to respondent's customers, wholesalers and retailers. Said stenciling, branding, labeling, wrapping, and representations appearing upon or in connection with respondent's soap products, represent and reflect the advertising ideas and policies of respondent.

PAR. 5. In further connection with the sale and distribution of its said soap to wholesalers and retailers as hereinabove described, respondent has caused and still causes large and substantial quantities of its said soap to be labeled, stamped, branded, stenciled, offered for sale, sold, and distributed under designations as hereinafter described.

On wrappers and containers in which respondent's said soap has been offered for sale and sold respectively appear, among others, the following words and phrases: "Olive Oil," "Imported Olive Oil," "Imported Spanish Olive Oil," "Genuine Imported Spanish Olive Oil," "Made With Imported Olive Oil," and in connection therewith the words and phrases, "Old Seville," "Old Madrid," "Florentine," "Infanta," and "Rosario."

PAR. 6. In truth and in fact the aforementioned brands of soap as advertised and designated, represented and sold by respondent, are not and have not been made wholly of olive oil but are instead soaps saponified and mixed with other oils and fats, containing for their fatty bases, large percentages of coconut oil, palm kernel oil, and tallow, with only a small percentage of olive oil in some instances. The brands of soap having Spanish names, such as "Old Seville," "Old Madrid," and "Infanta" are not and never were of Spanish origin, the brand known as "Florentine" is not and never has been a product of Italian origin, and the brand designated as "Rosario" is not and never has been a product either of Spanish or Italian origin.

PAR. 7. There are among the competitors of respondent referred to in paragraph 1 hereof those who manufacture, sell, and distribute in competition with respondent, soaps which are actually made of olive oil and who advertise and represent their said soaps fairly and accurately.

PAR. 8. Respondent's use of the statements, designations, and descriptions as hereinbefore set forth is false and misleading and constitutes practices or methods of competition which tend to, and do, confuse, prejudice, and injure respondent's competitors, divert trade to respondent from its competitors, operate as a detriment to free and legitimate competition in the business of marketing soap, place in the hands of wholesale and retail dealers an instrument which permits them more easily to substitute the goods of respondent for the products of another, and have the capacity and tendency to cause, and do cause, the trading public in the United States to purchase respondent's said soaps, as and for olive oil soaps, made with a hundred percent olive oil base, which they are not.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondent, Babiglo Company, Inc., a corporation, are to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce, within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

This proceeding having been heard by the Federal Trade Commission upon the original and amended complaints of the Commission, the answers of respondent thereto, and the agreed stipulation as to the facts entered into between the respondent herein, Babiglo Company, Inc., and W. T. Kelley, Chief Counsel for the Commission, which stipulation provides, among other things, that without further evidence or other intervening procedure, the Commission may issue and serve upon the respondent herein findings as to the facts (including inferences which it may draw from the said stipulated facts) and conclusion based thereon and an order disposing of the proceeding, and the Commission having made its findings as to the facts and conclusion that said respondent has violated the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

It is ordered, That the respondent, Babiglo Company, Inc., its officers, representatives, agents, individual or corporate, and its employees, in connection with the offering for sale, sale and distribution of soap in interstate commerce or in the District of Columbia, do forthwith cease and desist from:

1. The use of the words "olive" or "olive oil," alone or in conjunction with any other word or words, to designate or describe a soap product composed in part of olive oil and in part of other oils and fats unless there appears in immediate connection and conjunction with the words "olive" or "olive oil" and in clear and legible type or lettering in size equal to that of the word "olive" or the words "olive oil," other words which accurately and truthfully describe and designate the true content of the product;

2. The use of the words "Old Seville," "Old Madrid," or "Infanta," or any other words of similar import and effect, alone or in conjunction with each other or with any other word or words describing said product, or the use of any pictorial representation, as a brand or label for soap so as to import or imply that said soap was produced in and imported from Spain, unless or until such statements and representations are true in fact and said soap was actually produced in and imported from Spain; or any similar use of the word "Florentine" or the word "Rosario," or any other words of similar import and effect, unless and until such statements and representations are true in fact and said soap was produced in and imported respectively from Italy, or from Italy or Spain.

3. Representing, through the use of the word "imported," alone or in conjunction with any other word or words as descriptive of soap, or in any manner, or through any means or device, that soap manufactured in the United States was made in and subsequently imported from Spain or from any other foreign country.

It is further ordered, That the respondent shall, within 60 days after service upon it of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which it has complied with this order.

IN THE MATTER OF CHRISTMAS CLUB

Docket 3050. Complaint, Feb. 5, 1937—Decision, Sept. 30, 1937

Where a corporation engaged, for more than three years last past, in the sale, in commerce among the various States and in the District of Columbia, of pass books, account books, advertising literature, and other paraphernalia for use by banks and trust companies in their conduct of Christmas Clubs and other savings systems, in substantial competition with others engaged in sale in commerce of systems for use by banks and trust companies and their depositors in the conduct of such clubs and other savings systems, and, as thus engaged, in furnishing such systems for such purposes to more banks and trust companies for their use than any of its competitors, with annual revenues from such activity during aforesaid period likewise exceeding that of any other of said competitors—

- (a) Represented that it had the right to the sole and exclusive use of name or phrase "Christmas Club" for its said systems, and that said name had been trade-marked by it for use thereon, facts being that, while it was owner of registered trade-mark "Christmas Club" for use as magazine title, said name or phrase had not been registered by it as trade-mark for its said system, nor had it established in any court of competent jurisdiction its sole and exclusive right to use of name or phrase in question thereon;
- (b) Represented that it was the manufacturer and printer of its said systems, through inclusion in certain of its contract forms of statement that its said systems would be shipped f. o. b. its factories, facts being that approximately ninety-five percent of its said systems, furnished by it to banks and trust companies, were made for its order by manufacturing printing concerns in which it had no financial or other interest, while approximately five percent thereof were printed by affiliated corporations, stock of which, along with a part of its own stock, was held by another concern;
- (c) Represented that it had spent, over a period of time, more than $3,500,000 in promoting the Christmas Club name and idea among the banks and people of the United States, facts being said figure represented an arbitrary fraction of the total selling expenses, other than cost of goods sold and executive selling expenses over a period of years, of itself and certain other companies, assets of which had been acquired by it;

With capacity and tendency to mislead certain banks and trust companies purchasing such systems from it into believing that such representations as aforesaid, as to such right to use of said name or phrase and as to manufacture of said systems, were true, and to induce them to buy such systems from it in such erroneous belief, and as manufactured and printed by it, and with effect of inducing banks and trust companies to purchase said products from it without knowing sense in which word "promotion" was used, and of diverting trade to it from its competitors; to the substantial injury of substantial competition in commerce:

Held, That such acts and practices were to the prejudice of the public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of said Section 5 of an Act of Congress approved Sept. 26, 1914; and

Where aforesaid corporation, engaged as above set forth—

(d) Entered into contracts for and made sales of its said systems on the condition, agreement, and understanding that purchaser thereof should not purchase or deal in the systems of a competitor or competitors, under contracts, many of which were for term of seven years and provided that the bank or trust company concerned should purchase such systems from it exclusively;

With result that companies having such contracts with it, by reason thereof, did not buy systems of competitors, and with the result that effect of such contracts had been and was to substantially lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in it:

Held, That such acts and practices, under the circumstances set forth, constituted violation of the provisions of Section 3 of an act of Congress approved Oct. 15, 1914; and

Where aforesaid corporation, engaged as above set forth—

(e) Discriminated in price through failing to provide for payments on the same percentage basis in contracts entered into and carried out by it with banks and trust companies, providing that it would furnish such systems, of like grade and quality, to each bank or trust company and would accept in payment therefor a percentage of the deposits in the Christmas Club of the particular company, with the particular company, as the case might be, privileged under the terms of such contracts to requisition unlimited quantities of said systems from it, regardless of rate of percentage paid by it or regardless of the total deposits in its Christmas Club;

With the result that the effect of such discrimination in price between different purchasers of systems of like grade and quality had been and was to substantially lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in interstate commerce in such systems:

Held, That such acts and practices, under the circumstances set forth, constituted a violation of the provisions of Sec. 2 (a) of an act of Congress approved Oct. 15, 1914, as amended by Sec. 1 of an Act of Congress approved June 19, 1936.

Before Mr. John W. Norwood, trial examiner.

Mr. Edward L. Smith for the Commission.

Crawath, DeGersdorff, Swaine & Wood and Mr. Henry G. Walter, Jr., of New York City, and Mr. Richard H. Wilmer, of Washington, D. C., for respondent.

COMPLAINT

Count I

Complaint

the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that Christmas Club, a corporation, hereinafter referred to as respondent, has been and now is using unfair methods of competition in commerce as "commerce" is defined in said act, and it appearing to said Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be to the public interest, hereby issues its complaint stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent Christmas Club, a corporation, is a corporation organized, existing, and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of New York with its principal office and place of business at 341 Madison Avenue, New York City in said State. It is now and for more than three years last past has been engaged in the sale of passbooks, account books, advertising literature, and other paraphernalia for use by banks and trust companies in the conduct by them of Christmas Clubs and other saving systems, which said passbooks, account books, advertising literature, and other paraphernalia will hereinafter be referred to as "systems." In the course and conduct of its said business, it now ships and for more than three years last past has shipped from its place of business in New York City aforesaid, such "systems" when sold by it, to the purchasers thereof located in the State of New York, and others located in various other States of the United States and in the District of Columbia. Such "systems" are sold by respondent for use by banks and trust companies and their depositors in the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia. There is now and for more than three years last past has been a constant current of trade and commerce by respondent in such "systems" between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia. In the course and conduct of its business, respondent is now and for more than three years last past has been in substantial competition with other corporations and with persons, firms, and partnerships engaged in the sale of "systems" for use by banks and trust companies and their depositors in the conduct of Christmas Clubs and other saving systems, between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia. The conduct of Christmas Clubs and other saving systems is a popular form of saving and their favor with the public is increasing and the use of such Christmas Clubs and other saving systems is a very important factor in the conduct of banks and trust companies. Respondent is now and for more than three years last past has been the largest single dealer in the United States in "systems" for use by banks and trust companies in the conduct of Christmas Clubs and of other saving systems and now sells and for more than three years last past has sold "systems" to more banks and trust companies than has or does any of its aforesaid competitors.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of its aforesaid business between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia, respondent in selling and in offering for sale its "systems" has falsely represented and still falsely represents that it is the sole owner of and has exclusive right to the use of the phrase "Christmas Club," that said phrase is trademarked by respondent, and that no one without its consent or license has the right to use the aforesaid name, "Christmas Club." In truth and in fact respondent is not and has not been the sole owner of the phrase "Christmas Club"; nor has it ever had the exclusive right to the use of the said phrase "Christmas Club"; the said phrase "Christmas Club" is not trademarked by respondent; and the aforesaid phrase may be used by others without the consent, permission, or license of the respondent.

PAR. 3. In the course and conduct of its aforesaid business between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia, respondent in selling and in offering for sale its "systems" has falsely represented and still falsely represents that it is the manufacturer and printer of the "systems" which it sells, when in truth and in fact it is not the manufacturer thereof, but such "systems" are manufactured for the respondent by manufacturing and printing concerns in which the respondent has no financial or other interest.

PAR. 4. In the course and conduct of its aforesaid business between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia, respondent in selling and in offering for sale its "systems" has represented and still represents to its customers and prospective customers that it has been and is still spending on advertising and promoting the growth of Christmas Clubs throughout the country, amounts of money considerably in excess of the amounts it has expended and is still expending for the purpose aforesaid.

PAR. 5. The aforesaid representations made by the respondent as set out in paragraphs 2, 3, and 4 hereof, have had and still have the capacity and tendency to mislead and deceive, have misled and deceived, and do mislead and deceive purchasers and prospective purchasers into the beliefs that the aforesaid representations are and have been true, and have tended to and do tend to induce, and have induced and do induce banks and trust companies to purchase "systems" from respondent in such erroneous beliefs. Thereby trade has been diverted and is being diverted by respondent from its competitors and substantial injury has been done and is being done by respondent to substantial competition in interstate commerce.

PAR. 6. The above alleged acts and practices of respondent are all to the injury and prejudice of the public and respondent's competitors and constitute unfair methods of competition within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914.

Count II

The Federal Trade Commission having reason to believe that Christmas Club, a corporation, hereinafter called respondent, has violated and is now violating the provisions of Section 3 of the Act of Congress entitled "An Act to supplement existing laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes," approved October 15, 1914, (the Clayton Act), hereby issues this its complaint against respondent and states its charges with respect thereto as follows, to wit:

PARAGRAPH 1. For its charges under this paragraph of this count, said Commission relies upon the matters and things set out in paragraph 1 of count 1 of this complaint to the same extent and as though the allegations of said paragraph 1 of said count 1 were set out in full herein, and said paragraph 1 of said count 1 is incorporated herein by reference and made a part of the allegations of this count.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of its business described in paragraph 1 of count 1, respondent in the course of commerce between and among the various States of the United States and the District of Columbia described in said paragraph of said count, has made sales and is still making sales and contracts for the sale of "systems" on the condition, agreement, and understanding that the purchasers thereof shall not deal in the "systems" of a competitor or competitors of respondent, the effect of which said sales and contracts for sale upon such condition, agreement, and understanding may be, is and has been to substantially lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in respondent in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia in "systems."

PAR. 3. The aforesaid acts of respondent constitute a violation of the provisions of Section 3 of the hereinabove mentioned Act of Congress entitled "An Act to supplement existing laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes, approved October 15, 1914 (the Clayton Act).

Count III

The Federal Trade Commission having reason to believe that Christmas Club, a corporation, hereinafter called respondent, since June 19, 1936, has violated and is now violating the provisions of Section 2 (a) of the Act of Congress entitled "An Act to supplement existing laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes," approved October 15, 1914, (the Clayton Act), as amended by Section 1 of the Act of Congress entitled "An Act to amend Section 2 of the Act entitled 'An Act to supplement existing laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes,' approved October 15, 1914, as amended (U.S.C., title 15, sec. 13), and for other purposes," approved June 19, 1936, (the Robinson-Patman Act), hereby issues this its complaint against Respondent and states its charges with respect thereto as follows, to wit:

PARAGRAPH 1. For its charges under this paragraph of this count, said Commission relies upon the matters and things set out in paragraph 1 of count 1 of this complaint to the same extent and as though the allegations of said paragraph 1 of said count 1 were set out in full herein, and said paragraph 1 of said count 1 is incorporated herein by reference and made a part of the allegations of this count.

PAR. 2. Since June 19, 1936, in the course and conduct of its business described in paragraph 1 of count 1 hereof, respondent while engaged in the commerce therein described, in the course of such commerce, directly and indirectly has discriminated and is still discriminating in price between different purchasers of "systems" of like grade and quality, the effect of which said discriminations may be to substantially lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in the aforesaid commerce in "systems," or to injure, destroy, or prevent competition with respondent.

PAR. 3. The aforesaid acts of respondent constitute a violation of the provisions of Section 2 (a) of the above mentioned Act of Congress entitled "An Act to supplement existing laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes," approved October 15, 1914, (the Clayton Act), as amended by Section 1 of the Act of Congress entitled "An Act to amend Section 2 of the Act entitled 'An Act to supplement existing laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes,' approved October 15, 1914, as amended (U.S.C., title 15, sec. 13), and for other purposes," approved June 19, 1936 (the Robinson-Patman Act).

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

1116

Findings

as, nor were they to be taken as, admissions of fact for any other purpose or in any other proceeding whatsoever. Thereafter, this proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on the said complaint and said amended answer (briefs and oral arguments of counsel having been waived), and the Commission having duly considered the same and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusions drawn therefrom.

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. The respondent is a corporation organized, existing, and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of New York, with its principal office and place of business at 341 Madison Avenue, New York City, in said State.

PAR. 2. The respondent is now and for more than three years last past has been engaged, among other things, in the sale of passbooks, account books, advertising literature, and other paraphernalia for use by banks and trust companies in the conduct by them of Christmas Clubs and other savings systems (which said passbooks, account books, advertising literature, and other paraphernalia are hereinafter referred to as "systems").

PAR. 3. In the course and conduct of its business, the respondent now causes to be shipped and for more than three years last past has caused to be shipped such "systems," when sold by it from Harrisburg, Pa., to the purchasers thereof, some located in the State of Pennsylvania and others located in various other States of the United States and in the District of Columbia; and there is now and for more than three years last past has been a constant current of trade and commerce by the respondent in such "systems" between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 4. In the course and conduct of its business, the respondent is now, and for more than three years last past has been, in substantial competition with other corporations and with persons, firms, and partnerships engaged in the sale of "systems" for use by banks and trust companies and their depositors in the conduct of Christmas Clubs and other savings systems in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 5. In 1936 there were approximately 17,800 banks and trust companies throughout the United States, of which approximately 5,200 operated Christmas Clubs.

Findings

25 F. T. C.

PAR. 6. The respondent now furnishes, and for more than three years last past has furnished, "systems" to more banks and trust companies, for use by them in the conduct of Christmas Clubs and other savings systems, than has or does any one of its competitors.

PAR. 7. The annual revenues of the respondent from furnishing "systems" to banks and trust companies now exceeds, and for more than three years last past has exceeded, that of any of its competitors.

PAR. 8. While prior to 1934 the respondent represented to banks or trust companies that it had the sole and exclusive right to the use of the name or phrase "Christmas Club" and represented that such name or phrase had been trade-marked by it for use on "systems," during the past three years it has not made such representations except as to the name of a magazine.

PAR. 9. In 1910 Merkel Landis conceived the Christmas Club plan and in 1911 transferred to the Landis Savings Club Company all of his rights, title, and interest in the plan. Early in 1912 Mr. H. F. Rawll acquired from the Landis Savings Club Company the right to use the plan. Mr. Rawll immediately gave the plan the name "Christmas Club" and operated his business under the unincorporated name "Christmas Club" from March 1912, until June 1914, when he incorporated his business under the name "Christmas Club, A Corporation," the respondent herein. The respondent subsequently acquired all the assets of the Landis Savings Club Company. While prior to 1934 the respondent represented that it had the right to the exclusive use of the name or phrase "Christmas Club," it has not established such right in any judicial proceeding. From time to time, various persons, firms and corporations, other than the respondent, have been engaged in the business of supplying banks and trust companies with "systems" inscribed with the name "Christmas Club" for use in the operation of Christmas Clubs and from 1929 to 1932, inclusive, the respondent acquired the assets of a number thereof for a substantial consideration.

PAR. 10. Since March 1927, the respondent has been and now is the owner of the registered trade-mark "Christmas Club" for use as the title of a magazine in Class 38 (Reg. No. 225139), but the name or phrase "Christmas Club" has not been so registered by it as a trade-mark for "systems." The aforesaid representations made prior to 1934, that the respondent had the sole and exclusive right to the use of the name or phrase "Christmas Club" without having registered it or having established it in a court of competent jurisdiction, and that such name or phrase had been trade-marked by it for use on "systems" without having registered it or having established it in or by a court of competent jurisdiction for use on "systems" has had the capacity and tendency to mislead certain banks and trust companies purchasing such "systems" from the respondent into believing that such representations were true and to purchase "systems" from respondent in such erroneous beliefs.

PAR. 11. Certain forms of contracts entered into by the respondent prior to the issuance of the complaint herein contained the statement that "systems" would be shipped "f. o. b. its factories." However, approximately 95% of the "systems" furnished to banks and trust companies by the respondent are manufactured for its order by manufacturing and printing concerns in which the respondent has no financial or other interest and approximately 5% of such "systems" are printed by affiliated corporations, the stock of which is owned by a corporation which also owns a part of the stock of the respondent. All "systems" furnished by the respondent are manufactured and printed for it under its directions and instructions. Said statement contained in such forms of contracts that "systems" would be shipped by the respondent "f. o. b. its factories" has had the capacity and tendency to mislead certain banks and trust companies purchasing "systems" from the respondent into believing that the respondent itself manufactured and printed its own "systems" and to induce them to purchase "systems" from the respondent in such erroneous belief.

PAR. 12. At various times the respondent has represented, without explanation of the sense in which the term "promoting" is used, that it has spent over a period of time more than $3,500,000 in promoting the Christmas Club name and idea among the banks and people of the United States, such figure representing an arbitrary fraction of the total selling expenses, other than cost of goods sold, and executive selling expenses, over a period of years, of the respondent and certain other companies the assets of which have been acquired by the respondent. Such representation without explanation of the sense in which the word "promotion" has been used has not informed banks and trust companies as to the sense in which respondent has used the word "promotion" and has induced them to purchase "systems" from respondent without knowing the sense in which the word "promotion" was used.

PAR. 13. By the representations hereinbefore described, trade has been diverted to respondent from its competitors and substantial injury has been done by respondent to substantial competition in interstate commerce.

PAR. 14. Prior to the issuance of the complaint herein, the respondent contracted to furnish "systems" to banks and trust companies under forms of contracts, many of which were for a term of seven years and provided that the bank or trust company should purchase "systems" from the respondent exclusively.

PAR. 15. Certain banks and trust companies having such contracts with the respondent have not, by reason thereof, purchased "systems" from competitors of the respondent, and the effect of such contracts has been and is to substantially lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in the respondent.

PAR. 16. Since June 19, 1936, and prior to the issuance of the complaint herein, the respondent entered into and is carrying out contracts with banks and trust companies providing that the respondent would furnish "systems" of like grade and quality to each bank or trust company and would accept in payment therefor a percentage of the deposits made in the Christmas Club of the bank or trust company. All of such contracts did not provide for payments on the same percentage basis. However, under the terms of such contracts the bank or trust company was privileged to requisition unlimited quantities of "systems" from the respondent regardless of the rate of percentage paid by the bank or trust company or regardless of the total deposits in its Christmas Club.

PAR. 17. Under such contracts the respondent has, in the course of interstate commerce, discriminated and is still discriminating in price between different purchasers of "systems" of like grade and quality, the effect of which discriminations has been and is to substantially lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in interstate commerce in "systems."

CONCLUSIONS

1. The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondent Christmas Club, a corporation, as described in paragraphs 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, and 13 of the foregoing findings, considered in connection with the facts set forth in paragraphs 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, and 7 thereof, are to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce, within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

2. The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondent Christmas Club, a corporation, as described in paragraphs 14 and 15 of the foregoing findings, considered in connection with the facts set forth in paragraphs 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, and 7 of the foregoing findings, constitute a violation of the provisions of Section 3 of an Act of Congress entitled "An Act to supplement existing laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes," approved October 15, 1914.

3. The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondent Christmas Club, a corporation, as described in paragraphs 16 and 17 of the foregoing findings, considered in connection with the facts set forth in paragraphs 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, and 7 thereof, constitute a violation of the provisions of Section 2 (a) of an Act of Congress entitled "An Act to supplement existing laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes," approved October 15, 1914, as amended by Section 1 of an Act of Congress entitled "An Act to amend Section 2 of the Act entitled 'An Act to supplement existing laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes,' approved October 15, 1914, as amended (U. S. C., Title 15, Sec. 13), and for other purposes," approved June 19, 1936.

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

This matter coming on to be heard by the Commission on the complaint filed herein on February 5, 1937, and the amended answer of the respondent filed herein on September 28, 1937, and the Commission having made its findings as to the facts and conclusions of law; (1) that the respondent has violated the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes"; (2) that said respondent has violated the provisions of Section 3 of an Act of Congress approved October 15, 1914, entitled "An Act to supplement existing laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes"; (3) that said respondent has violated the provisions of Section 2 (a) of the said Act of Congress approved October 15, 1914, entitled "An Act to supplement existing laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes," as amended by Section 1 of an Act of Congress entitled "An Act to amend Section 2 of the Act entitled 'An Act to supplement existing laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes' approved October 15, 1914, as amended (U. S. C. Title 15, Sec. 13), and for other purposes," approved June 19, 1936.

It is ordered, That respondent Christmas Club, a corporation, and its successors, officers, agents, servants, and employees, forthwith cease and desist in connection with the business of selling or offering for sale "systems" (as that term is defined in the aforesaid findings as to the facts) in interstate commerce and in the District of Columbia, from doing and performing any of the following acts and things:

1. Representing that it has the right to the sole and exclusive use of the name or phrase "Christmas Club" for "systems"; and repre-sending that the name or phrase "Christmas Club" has been trademarked by the respondent for use on "systems": Provided, however, That nothing contained in this order shall prohibit the respondent from exercising its lawful right to prevent other corporations, persons, firms or partnerships from unlawfully using the name or phrase "Christmas Club" or from unlawfully using as a trade-mark, the name or phrase "Christmas Club";

2. Representing through advertisements, circulars, correspondence, stationery, or in any manner whatsoever, that it is the manufacturer and printer of "systems," unless and until it actually owns and operates, or directly and absolutely controls, a printing establishment wherein are printed any and all "systems" by it sold or offered for sale;

3. Representing that it has spent over a period of time more than $3,500,000, or any other sum, in promoting the Christmas Club name and idea among the banks and trust companies and the people of the United States, without accurately explaining the manner in which such sum has been computed;

4. Entering into contracts for the sale of "systems" or continuing to make sales of "systems" on the condition, agreement and understanding that the purchaser thereof shall not purchase or deal in the "systems" of a competitor or competitors of the respondent: Provided, however, That nothing contained in this order shall prohibit the respondent from entering into contracts whereby it agrees to furnish purchasers with such "systems" as they may requisition from the respondent if such purchasers are free to purchase "systems" from competitors of the respondent;

5. Unlawfully discriminating in price as found in paragraphs 16 and 17 of the aforesaid findings as to the facts, and conclusions.

Nothing contained in this order shall be construed to prevent the respondent from continuing to deal with banks or trust companies so long as such dealings shall not violate the provisions of this order.

It is hereby further ordered, That the said respondent shall within 90 days from the date of service upon it of this order, file with this Commission a report in writing, setting forth in detail the manner and form in which it shall have complied with this order.

IN THE MATTER OF
DAVIS PAINT COMPANY, INC., ET AL.

COMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION
OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 26, 1914

Docket 2737. Complaint, Mar. 5, 1936—Decision, Oct. 1, 1937

Where two corporations engaged in sale to purchasing public of paint, varnish, enamel, and allied products made by third concern, owner of their capital stock, and likewise engaged, along with the president thereof and said concern's principal stockholder and founder, in sale to purchasing public, directly or indirectly, through wholesale and retail dealers and through agents—

- (a) Made use of words, in advertising and soliciting the sale of the products sold by them, "Direct from factory to you," or of words of like and similar import, notwithstanding fact they did not, themselves, as above set forth, manufacture products thus offered and sold by them; and

Where said manufacturing concern, in course and conduct of its business, and to induce customers and prospective customers to purchase its products—

- (b) Represented, through guarantees, that claims by customers for refunds or adjustments would be allowed, through such statements in its advertisements and advertising matter, and on the labels attached to the containers of its products, as "GUARANTEE * * * Double-Barreled Money-Back GUARANTEE," If, for any reason, Davis' Ever-Bright Guaranteed Paint does not come up to your expectations after applying a portion of it, you may return the remainder and we will refund all you have paid for your entire order," along with offer, after all the paint had been applied according to directions and had failed to give "the service you have a right to expect of any paint, regardless of price," to replace same free of charge, paying all shipping charges and for applications "ON YOUR BUILDINGS. Or, if you prefer, we will REFUND YOUR MONEY IN FULL," facts being such claims were not in fact thus allowed, through conceded exaction of questionnaire compliance, subjection of customers to considerable correspondence and, in some cases, refusal to accede to customers' claims;

- (c) Caused to appear on its price lists, circulated widely among its agents and dealers, customers and prospective customers, depiction of "Three Large Factory Buildings," together with statement that such "up-to-date modern paint and varnish factories" were located at Kansas City, Cleveland, and Berkeley, Calif., facts being said manufacturing concern never actually owned entire paint factory in said last-named city, though stock therein was assertedly owned by its founder, president, principal stockholder, and then vice-president; and

Where an agent of a corporation, then dormant and thereafter dissolved, but capital stock of which was owned by said manufacturing concern—

- (d) Represented, through letters mailed to customers and prospective customers, that paints of said various companies and individual could be purchased for prices substantially lower than the regular or current prices, and that said paints ordinarily sold for prices substantially higher than the asserted special prices, through stating, among other things, in said letters that said company "has authorized me to dispose of as much paint as possible between now and Saturday," and that, because of the short time for such disposal, he was offering "any paint, varnish, enamel, etc., at EXACTLY ONE-HALF the list prices on the enclosed price list," facts being enclosed list was an old one which did not reflect current prices at which paint was being offered by aforesaid company at times such letter was forwarded;

With tendency and capacity to mislead and deceive a substantial portion of purchasing public into erroneous belief that all said representations were true, and with result that a number of the consuming public, as a direct consequence of the mistaken and erroneous belief induced by advertisements and misrepresentations of said companies and the aforesaid president, etc., of such manufacturing concern, purchased substantial volume of their product and trade was unfairly diverted to them from those likewise engaged in sale of paint, varnish, enamel, and allied products and who truthfully advertise the same; to the substantial injury of competition in commerce:

Heid, That such acts and practices were to the prejudice of the public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition.

Mr. George Foulkes for the Commission.

Mr. Harold E. Neibling, of Kansas City, Mo. and Mr. Clinton Robb, of Washington, D. C., for respondents.

COMPLAINT

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent, Davis Paint Company, Inc., is a corporation organized January 2, 1924, existing and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Missouri, with its principal offices and place of business at 14th and Iron Streets, in Kansas City in said State. Respondent, Davis Paint Company, Inc., does business and trades under its corporate name and also under the trade name, Burlington Paint Company, in Kansas City in the State of Missouri, and also under the trade name, Robertson Products Company, in Cleveland in the State of Ohio. Respondents, W. H. Beard Paint Company, Farm and Home Paint Company, Manchester Paint Corporation, New Method Paint Company, Painter's Paint Company, and World Star Paint Company, are all corporations organized, existing, and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Missouri and have their respective principal offices and places of business located in Kansas City in the said State. Respondent, Berry J. Davis, is now and since the date of the incorporation of each of said corporations has been the principal stockholder in each of the corporate respondents and now has his principal office and place of business at 14th and Iron Streets in Kansas City, Mo. Said individual respondent manages, controls and directs the policies and operations of all the corporate respondents named herein. Said Berry J. Davis is the president of the corporate respondents, Davis Paint Company, Inc., and Manchester Paint Corporation, and is vice president of the corporate respondents, W. H. Beard Paint Company, Farm and Home Paint Company, New Method Paint Company, Painter's Paint Company, and World Star Paint Company.

PAR. 2. Respondent corporations named herein doing business under their respective corporate names and the respondent, Davis Paint Company, Inc., doing business also under the trade names, Burlington Paint Company and Robertson Products Company, now are and have been for many years engaged in the sale of paint, varnish, enamel, and allied products to members of the public either directly to the purchasing public or indirectly through wholesale and retail dealers and through agents. Said corporate respondents in the course and conduct of their respective businesses ship, or cause to be shipped or transported, their products when sold by them, from the States of Missouri and Ohio or the State of origin of the shipment to the purchasers thereof located at points in various States of the United States other than in the States of Missouri and Ohio or in the State of origin of the shipment. There is now and has been during all the times hereinbefore mentioned a constant current of trade or commerce in the products sold by the several corporate respondents between and among various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 3. In the course and conduct of their respective businesses all of the respondent corporations now are, and have been during all the times hereinabove mentioned, engaged in substantial competition with various other corporations, firms, and individuals selling or offering for sale paint, varnish, enamel, and allied products to members of the general public in the several manners set out in paragraph 2 hereof in commerce among and between the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

Complaint

25 F. T. C.

PAR. 4. In the course and conduct of its business respondent, Davis Paint Company, Inc., acting under the direction of respondent, Berry J. Davis, is now and has been during all of the times above mentioned, both under its corporate name and under the trade names, Burlington Paint Company and Robertson Products Company, manufacturing, offering for sale and selling paint, varnish, enamel, and allied products, to members of the public directly and to wholesalers and retailers who in turn sell to members of the public and to the public through its own agents. Said respondent, Davis Paint Company, Inc., operates retail stores in Kansas City, Mo., Kansas City, Kans. and Wichita, Kans. The business of said respondent is solicited by various advertising methods such as circulars, catalogues, price lists, and publications mailed to customers, prospective customers, agents, and dealers throughout the United States.

Respondent, Davis Paint Company, Inc., has been and now is manufacturing all the paint, varnish, enamel and allied products sold and offered for sale by it and by all the respondent corporations named herein.

PAR. 5. Respondent, Davis Paint Company, Inc., not only manufactures all of the products sold and offered for sale by the respondent corporations named herein, but owns and controls said respondent corporations and directs their policies. Respondent, Davis Paint Company, Inc., in the course and conduct of its business and acting under the direction of the respondent, Berry J. Davis, conceals the fact that the Davis Paint Company, Inc., owns or has a controlling interest in the other respondent corporations named herein, and causes said corporations to be held out and advertised through the use of labels on containers bearing the corporate name of the particular corporation making the sale together with such phrases as "direct from factory to you," and in other ways, as being the manufacturer of the products respectively sold by each of said respondents and as being wholly apart from, independent of, and having no connection with the Davis Paint Company, Inc. By so concealing the fact that said respondent corporations are its subsidiaries, it permits said corporations to be held out as competing with it.

PAR. 6. Respondent, Berry J. Davis, as principal stockholder and manager of respondent, Davis Paint Company, Inc., organized and created all the other respondent corporations named, for the purpose of soliciting business for the sale of the products of the Davis Paint Company, Inc., in such a way as to conceal the fact that said respondent corporations and the businesses conducted by the respondent, Davis Paint Company, Inc., under the several trade names indicated herein are in any way connected with or controlled by respondent, Davis Paint Company, Inc. For example, some of the respondent corporations above referred to solicit business only from paint contractors and retailers; others solicit business direct from the consumer by mailing lists; others solicit business by dealing only through agents; and still others solicit business through department stores by means of a leased department arrangement. By this method of doing business respondent, Davis Paint Company, Inc., is able to and does in fact vary the prices of its products, depending upon which class of trade it seeks, and to increase its business by concealing the fact that the products, supposedly manufactured by one of the corporations above referred to sold or offered for sale by an agent, by a retail dealer or by a department store in one and the same locality, are in fact all the same products and manufactured by respondent, Davis Paint Company, Inc.

PAR. 7. Respondent, Davis Paint Company, Inc., acting under the direction of respondent, Berry J. Davis, in the course and conduct of its business and for the purpose of inducing customers and prospective customers to purchase its products, in its advertisements and advertising matter circulated generally throughout the United States among agents and customers and prospective customers, and on the labels attached to the containers of the paint sold under its corporate name, has caused and still causes a form of guarantee which contains the following, among other statements, to be used:

Could any Guarantee be more fair? * * *

Why not buy your paint where you are fully protected by a printed Guarantee that means something?

Said guarantee is false and misleading in that respondent, Davis Paint Company, Inc., upon the report to it of dissatisfaction of the products purchased by the customer, has not complied, and does not comply with or fulfill the terms of the guarantee, but in truth and in fact, respondent, Davis Paint Company, Inc., has made it a practice to evade the guarantee hereinbefore mentioned by forcing such customers who are dissatisfied to adjust their claims in a manner different from that set forth in its guarantee.

PAR. 8. In the course and conduct of its business respondent, Davis Paint Company, Inc., acting under the direction of Berry J. Davis, has caused to appear on its price list which it circulates widely among its agents, dealers, customers and prospective customers, the false and misleading pictorial representation of "three large factory buildings," together with the following words:

These three up-to-date modern paint and varnish factories are located at Kansas City, Mo., Cleveland, Ohio, and Berkeley, California * * * Three great factories ready to serve you.

The said pictorial representation, together with the statements appearing in connection therewith, serve as a representation to the purchasing public that the respondent, Davis Paint Company, Inc., actually owns, controls, and operates paint and varnish factories located at Kansas City, Mo., Cleveland, Ohio, and Berkeley, Calif. In truth and in fact said respondent, Davis Paint Company, Inc., does not have and never did have any factory at Berkeley, Calif.

PAR. 9. All the respondent corporations except respondent, Davis Paint Company, Inc.; acting under the direction and control of respondent, Berry J. Davis, in the course and conduct of their respective businesses, describe and represent themselves, by false and misleading representations appearing in their catalogues, price lists, and advertisements circulated widely among their customers and prospective customers, and among members of the public, and on labels attached to the containers of their products; to be the manufacturers of the products sold and offered for sale by them, such representations being made by the statement "Direct from Factory to You" and in other ways. In truth and in fact no one of the respondent corporations hereinabove named is the manufacturer of the products sold or offered for sale by it, nor does any of them own, control, or operate any factory for the manufacture of said products.

PAR. 10. In the course and conduct of its business and for the purpose of inducing customers and prospective customers to purchase its products, respondent, World Star Paint Company, acting under the direction of respondents, Berry J. Davis and Davis Paint Company, Inc., causes to be inserted in its advertisements and advertising matter circulated among agents, dealers, customers and prospective customers, and on labels attached to the containers of its products, a "Guarantee" which contains the following, among other statements:

We guarantee to refund your money in full or replace any paint with which you are not completely satisfied.

Said guarantee is false and misleading in that respondent, World Star Paint Company, upon the report to it of dissatisfaction of the products purchased by the customer, has not complied, and does not comply with or fulfill the terms of the guarantee, but in truth and in fact respondent, World Star Paint Company, has made it a practice to evade the guarantee hereinbefore mentioned by forcing customers who are dissatisfied to adjust their claims in a manner different from that set forth in its guarantee.

PAR. 11. In the course and conduct of its business and for the purpose of inducing customers and prospective customers to purchase its products, World Star Paint Company, acting under the direction of respondents, Berry J. Davis and Davis Paint Company, Inc., caused to be mailed to customers and prospective customers a letter written on stationery bearing the name of an attorney-at-law and signed by said attorney, in which letter the following statements and representations were made:

I am handling the affairs of the World Star Paint Company of this city.

This company has authorized me to dispose of as much paint as possible between now and Saturday, May 26. Consequently, because I must dispose of quite a lot of paint in this short time, I offer you any paint, varnish, enamel, etc., at EXACTLY ONE-HALF the list prices on the enclosed price list.

The said letter hereinabove referred to had the capacity to and did mislead purchasers and prospective purchasers to believe that said products offered for sale were distress merchandise, that said company was insolvent, and that it would be closing out. In truth and in fact said merchandise being sold and offered for sale was not distress merchandise, said company was not insolvent and said company was not closing out. The merchandise offered for sale was being supplied at all times to the respondent, World Star Paint Company, by respondent, Davis Paint Company, Inc. Further, said letter contained false and misleading statements in that it offered said merchandise for "Exactly one-half Price," when in truth and in fact the merchandise sold and offered for sale was not sold or offered for sale at exactly one-half the list price, but at the price at which said products were, and had been, usually sold to members of the public by the said respondent, World Star Paint Company, and by other subsidiary corporations of respondent, Davis Paint Company, Inc., hereinbefore named.

PAR. 12. The above and foregoing fraudulent acts, practices and representations of the respondents in the course of their advertising, offering for sale and the selling of their products in commerce as aforesaid have the capacity and tendency to mislead and deceive, and have misled and deceived, a substantial portion of the purchasing public in various States of the United States into the erroneous belief that the products sold by the respective corporate respondents other than the respondent, Davis Paint Company, Inc., are in fact manufactured by such respondents; that said corporate respondents are independent of and in no way connected with the respondent, Davis Paint Company, Inc., that said corporate respondent, Davis Paint Company, Inc., and other of the corporate respondents would in fact guarantee their products as set forth in paragraphs 7 and 10 hereof; that the corporate respondent, World Star Paint Company, was about to close out its business and dispose of distress merchandise, as a result of which high grade merchandise could be purchased at exactly one-half the regular price, as set forth in paragraph 11 hereof; that respondent, Davis Paint Company, Inc., owned three large factories as set forth in paragraph 8 hereof; and thereby induce the ultimate consumer to purchase a substantial quantity of the products of the respondent, Davis Paint Company, Inc., in reliance upon such erroneous beliefs.

There are manufacturers of paint, varnish, enamel, and allied products who sell and offer for sale their products in commerce as aforesaid, who do not in any way misrepresent the size or character of their respective businesses or otherwise misrepresent their business or products. There are dealers of paint, varnish, enamel, and allied products who are not manufacturers of said products and who sell and offer for sale their products in commerce as aforesaid, and who do not in any way misrepresent the size or character of their respective businesses or otherwise misrepresent their business or products. Thereby trade is diverted to the respondent, Davis Paint Company, Inc., and to the other respondents named herein, from other competitors who do not make such misrepresentations and thereby substantial injury is done by the respondents to substantial competition in commerce as aforesaid.

PAR. 13. The above acts and things done and caused to be done by the respondents were and are each and all to the prejudice of the public and of the respondents' competitors and constitute unfair methods of competition in interstate commerce within the meaning and intent of Section 5 of an Act of Congress entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914.

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission on March 5, 1936, issued and served its complaint in this proceeding upon the respondents herein, charging them with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of the provisions of said act. On May 29, 1936, the respondents filed their answer in this proceeding. Thereafter, a stipulation was entered into whereby it was stipulated and agreed that a statement of facts signed and executed by the respondents' counsel, Harold E. Neibling, and W. T. Kelley, Chief Counsel for the Federal Trade Commission, subject to the approval of the Commission, may be taken as the facts in this proceeding and in lieu of testimony in support of the charges stated in the complaint, or in opposition thereto; and that the Commission may proceed upon said statement of facts to make its report as to the findings of facts (including inferences which it may draw from the said stipulated facts) and its conclusion based thereon, and enter its order disposing of the proceeding without the presentation of argument or the filing of briefs. Thereafter this proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on said complaint, answer and stipulation, said stipulation having been approved and accepted, and the Commission having duly considered the same and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public, and makes its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent, Davis Paint Company, is a corporation organized January 2, 1924, existing and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Missouri, with its principal offices and place of business in Kansas City, Mo. Respondent, Davis Paint Company, also formerly did a limited business in the State of Ohio under the name of Robertson Products Company (a corporation whose assets it purchased). Respondent, Davis Paint Company, owned the capital stock of the following corporate respondents, to wit:

Name of Corporation	Date Dissolved
Burlington Paint Company-----	April 24, 1935
Painter's Paint Company-----	May 1, 1925
World Star Paint Company-----	September 12, 1935
W. H. Beard Paint Company-----	January 2, 1936
Manchester Paint Corporation-----	December 15, 1936

which, on the dates set forth above, were duly, actually, and finally dissolved according to law, and since said dates have transacted and attempted to transact no business whatsoever, but prior to said dissolution dates, each of said corporations were duly organized, existing and carrying on business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Missouri, with their respective principal offices and places of business located in Kansas City in said State. Respondents, New Method Paint Company, and Farm and Home Paint Company, are corporations organized, existing, and now doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Missouri, and have their respective principal offices and places of business located in Kansas City, Mo. Respondent, Berry J. Davis, an individual, is the founder, President, and principal stockholder of the Davis Paint Company, which company is the owner of the stock of respondents, New Method Paint Company and Farm and Home Paint Company.

PAR. 2. All of the above respondents named in paragraph 1 were, and some now are, as set forth in paragraph 1, engaged in the sale of paint, varnish, enamel and allied products to members of the public, either directly to the purchasing public or indirectly through wholesale and retail dealers and through agents. Said corporate respondents, in the course and conduct of their respective businesses, cause or caused to be shipped or transported their products, when sold by them, from the State of Missouri, or the State of origin of shipment to purchasers thereof located in various points of the United States other than in the State of Missouri or in the State of origin of the shipment, and said respondents are in substantial competition with other firms and individuals engaged in similar business among and between the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 3. In the course and conduct of their respective businesses all of the respondent corporations now are, and have been during all the times hereinabove mentioned, engaged in substantial competition with various other corporations, firms, and individuals selling or offering for sale paint, varnish, enamel, and allied products to members of the general public in the several manners set out in paragraph 2 hereof in commerce among and between the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 4. Respondent, Davis Paint Company, has been and now does manufacture the paint, varnish, enamel, and allied products offered for sale by the respondents named herein, which were and are now engaged in offering said products for sale to the public under their respective corporate and trade names. The business of all the respondents was, and is, solicited by various advertising methods, such as circulars, catalogs, price lists, and publications mailed to prospective customers, agents, and dealers throughout the United States.

Formerly it was the practice of the said non-manufacturing corporate respondents, in advertising and soliciting the sale of the products sold by them, to use the words "Direct from factory to you," or words of like and similar import, which practice, however, was voluntarily abandoned by the respondents herein, and since the abandonment of said practice, the same has never been renewed; said products sold or offered for sale by said non-manufacturing corporate respondents for more than a year last past have been labeled with the words "Manufactured for," or "Mfgd. for," or words of similar import, indicating to the general public that the said non-manufacturing corporate respondents do not claim to manufacture the said products.

PAR. 5. Respondent, Davis Paint Company, in the course and conduct of its business and for the purpose of inducing customers and prospective customers to purchase its products, in its advertisements and advertising matter circulated generally throughout the United States among agents and customers and prospective customers, and on the labels attached to the containers of the paint sold under its corporate name, formerly used a form of guarantee which contained the following, among other statements,

GUARANTEE

Davis Ever-Bright Brand
Double-Barreled Money-Back

GUARANTEE

Here is our Guarantee printed in black and white. Always demand a printed Money-Back Guarantee, signed by the Manufacturer, before you buy Paints * * *

If, for any reason, Davis' Ever-Bright Guaranteed Paint does not come up to your expectations after applying a portion of it, you may return the remainder and we will refund all you have paid for your entire order.

After you have applied all the paint to your buildings according to our directions and if it does not give you the service you have a right to expect of any paint, regardless of price, we will replace it free of charge, pay all shipping charges and PAY FOR PUTTING IT ON YOUR BUILDING. Or, if you prefer, we will REFUND YOUR MONEY IN FULL.

Could any Guarantee be more fair? * * *

Why not buy your paint where you are fully protected by a printed Guarantee that means something?

Complaint alleges that respondent, Davis Paint Company, has not complied and did not comply in full with the terms of said guarantee, but had made a practice to require customers who were dissatisfied to adjust their claims in a manner different from that set forth in its guarantee. Respondents admit that a few customers have complained to respondents concerning adjustments proposed by them under said guarantee and respondents further admit that in answer to said complaints reporting dissatisfaction with the paint purchased by them, respondents sent to said customers questionnaires, which respondents required to be filled out by the complainants, and sometimes subjected said customers to considerable correspondence, and in some cases respondents admit that they refused to accede to the customer's claims. Respondents further state that over a year ago they voluntarily revised the terms of said guarantee in such a manner as to narrow the scope of the same.

PAR. 6. Formerly, in the course and conduct of its business, respondent, Davis Paint Company, caused to appear on its price list, which it circulated widely among its agents, dealers, customers, and prospective customers, a pictorial representation of "Three Large Factory Buildings" together with the following words:

These three up-to-date modern paint and varnish factories are located at Kansas City, Missouri; Cleveland, Ohio, and Berkeley, California * * *
Three great factories ready to serve you.

Respondent, Davis Paint Company, admits that it never actually owned an entire paint factory in Berkeley, Calif., but states that at the time said representations were made, respondent, Berry J. Davis, was vice-president of and owned capital stock in a large paint factory in Berkeley, Calif., which factory was represented in said pictorial advertising; but respondents state that long since they have voluntarily completely abandoned representing that they own or control any other factories except those in Kansas City, Mo., and Cleveland, Ohio.

PAR. 7. Prior to the dissolution in September 1935, of the respondent, World Star Paint Company, and while said company was in a dormant condition, an agent of said company caused to be mailed to customers and prospective customers a letter, in which letter the following statements and representations were made:

I am handling the affairs of the World Star Paint Company of this city.

This company has authorized me to dispose of as much paint as possible between now and Saturday, May 26. Consequently, because I must dispose of quite a lot of paint in this short time, I offer you any paint, varnish, enamel, etc., at EXACTLY ONE-HALF the list prices on the enclosed price list.

Respondents state that the price list enclosed in the letter as above set forth was an old price list which did not reflect the current prices at which paint was being offered by respondent, World Star Paint Company, at the time said letter was forwarded.

Order

PAR. 8. Each and all of the false and misleading statements and misrepresentations made by respondents as hereinabove set forth had, and now have, the tendency and capacity to mislead and deceive a substantial portion of the purchasing public into the erroneous belief that all of said representations are true. Further, as a direct consequence of the mistaken and erroneous belief induced by the advertisements and misrepresentations of the respondents as hereinabove enumerated, a number of the consuming public purchased a substantial volume of respondents' product, with the result that trade has been unfairly diverted to respondents from corporations, firms and individuals likewise engaged in the business of selling paint, varnish, enamel and allied products and who truthfully advertise their products. As a result thereof, substantial injury has been done by respondents to competition in commerce among and between the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondents have been and are to the prejudice of the public and respondents' competitors and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

It is ordered, That respondents, Davis Paint Company, Inc., a corporation, trading under its own name and also as Robertson Products Company; Farm and Home Paint Company, a corporation; and New Method Paint Company, a corporation; and Berry J. Davis, an individual, their officers, representatives, agents, and employees in connection with the offering for sale, sale and distribution of paint, varnish, enamel, and allied products in interstate commerce or in the District of Columbia, do forthwith cease and desist from:

1. Representing that any of said corporate respondents, with the exception of the Davis Paint Company, owns, controls and operates any factory wherein the products, which they sell and distribute, are manufactured;

2. Representing that respondent, Davis Paint Company, has factories located elsewhere than in Kansas City, Mo., and Cleveland, Ohio;

3. Representing in guarantees, or in any other manner, that claims by customers for refunds or adjustments will be allowed when such claims are not in fact so allowed;

4. Representing that their paints can be purchased for prices substantially lower than the regular or current prices, and that said paints ordinarily sell for prices substantially higher than the prices represented to be special, when such are not the facts.

It appearing that the respondents herein:

Burlington Paint Company, Painter's Paint Company, World Star Paint Company, W. H. Beard Paint Company, and Manchester Paint Corporation, have been duly, actually and finally dissolved according to law, the complaint as to them shall be, and the same hereby is, dismissed.

It is further ordered, That the respondents herein shall within 30 days from the date of the serving upon them of this order, file with the Commission, their report in writing stating the manner and form in which they have complied with this order.

IN THE MATTER OF

FEDERAL ENAMELING AND STAMPING COMPANY

Docket 2842. Complaint, June 11, 1936—Decision, Oct. 1, 1937

Where a corporation engaged in manufacture, sale, and distribution of enamel kitchen and other enamelware, under trade name "FEDERALWARE," in competition with many engaged in sale and distribution, among the various States and in the District of Columbia, of such ware and who do not misrepresent the quality thereof or resort to unfair acts and practices in sale and distribution of their said products; in advertising its said products through radio announcements and programs, hand bills, booklets, display cards, window trims, sales promotion announcements, letters, etc., and through advertisements in periodicals, newspapers and catalogs—

- (a) Represented that its said product would not chip and was thirty-six times more durable than ordinary enamelware and would save its cost to the ultimate purchaser, in one year or less, through fuel savings, facts being said products were not, and never had been, chip-proof or chip-proofed as represented, nor thirty-six times more durable, nor to a substantial degree more durable, than ordinary enamelware, would not and did not save their cost to the purchaser as above set forth, nor save purchaser any material amount in fuel; and
- (b) Represented that its said product was stainless, facts being its said enamelware would not withstand, without showing signs of etching or stain, tentative test of boiling in citric and malic acid solution under certain conditions arrived at by Committee on Standardization of Tests of Technical Research Service of the Porcelain Enamel Institute;

With tendency and capacity to mislead and deceive purchasing public and retail dealers, and with effect of so misleading such public and dealers into erroneous belief that aforesaid various representations were true, and into buying its said products on account of such mistaken beliefs, and with effect of placing in hands of wholesalers and retailers means of deceiving ultimate purchasers through its said advertising and representations, and of unfairly diverting trade to it from competitors likewise engaged in sale, in commerce among the States and in the District of Columbia, of truthfully advertised products of the same kind and nature:

Held, That such acts and practices were to the prejudice of the public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition.

Complaint

25 F. T. C.

Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that Federal Enameling and Stamping Company, a corporation, hereinafter referred to as respondent, has been and now is using unfair methods of competition in commerce as "commerce" is defined in said act, and it appearing to said Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be to the public interest hereby issues its complaint stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent, Federal Enameling and Stamping Company, is a corporation organized, existing and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Pennsylvania with its factory and principal place of business at McKees Rocks, Pa. Respondent also maintains a mailing address at Pittsburgh, Pa. Respondent is, and for more than five years last past has been, engaged in the manufacture of porcelain enamel kitchen utensils which it sells under the trade name of "Federalware," and otherwise and in the selling thereof between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia. During all of said time it has caused and still causes such products, when sold by it, to be transported from its place of business in Pennsylvania or other places within the United States to purchasers thereof, some located in the State of Pennsylvania and others located in various other States of the United States other than the State of origin of the shipment and in the District of Columbia. In the course and conduct of its said business, respondent is now, and for more than five years last past, has been in constant competition with other corporations and with persons, firms, and partnerships engaged in the sale of similar products in commerce among and between the various States of the United States and the District of Columbia.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of its business described herein respondent, for more than two years last past, has by means of catalogues, advertising matter carried in magazines having national distribution and in metropolitan daily newspapers, radio announcements, radio programs, labels, booklets, stickers, dodgers, stuffers, folders, display cards, counter cards, window trims, "guarantee" cards, sales promotion announcements, letters, and by other means represented, and still represents that said products are:

- (a) Chip proof,
- (b) Chip proofed,
- (c) Stainless,
- (d) Thirty six times more durable than ordinary enamelware, or to a substantial degree more durable than ordinary enamelware, and that
- (e) The covers or lids supplied with said products are chromium;
- (f) Said products will save their cost to the ultimate purchaser in one year or less through fuel saving.

In truth and in fact each and every said representation has been and is untrue, and said products are not nor have they ever been chip proof, chip proofed, stainless, thirty six times more durable, nor to a substantial degree more durable than ordinary enamelware, nor are the covers or lids supplied with said products chromium nor have they ever been chromium, nor will said products save their cost in fuel saving in one year or less time. There is a preference by a substantial number of retail dealers in products similar to those of respondent hereinabove described and by a substantial part of the purchasing public for products that are chip proof, chip proofed, stainless, thirty six times more durable, or substantially more durable than ordinary enamelware and that have chromium covers or lids and that will save their cost to the ultimate purchaser in one year or less through fuel saving.

The aforesaid representations by the respondent have had and still have a capacity and tendency to mislead and deceive, and have misled and deceived and still mislead and deceive retailers and the purchasing public into the erroneous belief that the said products of the respondent have all of the properties, capacities or effects claimed for them by the respondent as aforesaid and the use of said misrepresentations causes them to purchase respondent's products in such erroneous belief. The aforesaid representations by the respondent have placed and still place in the hands of retailers of the products of respondent hereinabove described the means of misleading and deceiving the purchasing public.

PAR. 3. There are among the competitors of respondent manufacturers and distributors of products similar to those of respondent hereinabove described who truthfully represent their said products. There are also among said competitors of respondent manufacturers and distributors who do not misrepresent the properties, capacities, or effects of their said products.

By the representations made by the respondent as set out hereinabove, trade has been and still is unfairly diverted to the respondent from such competitors. Thereby substantial injury has been done and still is being done by respondent to competition in interstate commerce.

PAR. 4. The above acts and things done by the respondent are all to the injury and prejudice of the public and competitors of respondent in interstate commerce within the meaning and intent of Section 5 of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission on June 11, 1936, issued and served its complaint in this proceeding upon respondent, Federal Enameling and Stamping Company, a corporation, charging it with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of the provisions of said act. After the issuance of said complaint and the filing of respondent's answer thereto, testimony and other evidence in support of the allegations of said complaint were introduced by Thomas H. Kennedy, attorney for the Commission, before John W. Addison, an examiner of the Commission, theretofore duly designated by it, and in opposition to the allegations of the complaint by William H. Parmelee, attorney for the respondent; and said testimony and other evidence were duly recorded and filed in the office of the Commission. Thereafter the proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on said complaint, the answer thereto, testimony and other evidence, briefs in support of the complaint and in opposition thereto, and the Commission having duly considered the same and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. The respondent, Federal Enameling and Stamping Company, is a Pennsylvania corporation, organized and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Pennsylvania. Its principal place of business is located at McKees Rocks, Pa. Respondent maintains a mailing address at Pittsburgh, Pa. Respondent is now, and has been since 1913, engaged in the manufacture, sale and distribution of enamel kitchenware and other enamelware and has been manufacturing, selling, and distributing said enamelware under the trade name of "FEDERALWARE." Respondent causes said product, when sold, to be transported in commerce, from its different places of business, to purchasers thereof located at various points in States of the United States other than the State of origin of said shipment, and in the District of Columbia. Respondent maintains a constant current of trade and commerce in said products among and between the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

Findings

PAR. 2. During the course and conduct of respondent's business as hereinabove set out, respondent has been, and is now, in active, substantial competition with other corporations, and with individuals, firms, and partnerships, likewise engaged in the sale and distribution of enamel kitchenware and other enamelware, in commerce among and between the various States of the United States and the District of Columbia. There are among respondent's competitors many who are engaged in the sale and distribution, in commerce among and between the various States of the United States and the District of Columbia, of enamelware and enamel kitchenware who do not misrepresent the quality of the enamelware and enamel kitchenware sold by them, and who do not resort to unfair acts and practices in the sale and distribution of their said products.

PAR. 3. In the course and conduct of respondent's business in selling and offering for sale its enamel kitchenware and other enamelware, respondent advertises said products through radio announcements, radio programs, handbills, booklets, stickers, dodgers, stuffers, folders, display cards, counter cards, window trims, guarantee cards, sales promotion announcements, letters, and through advertisements in magazines, newspapers and through the use of catalogs. Through the use of said advertising mediums, and in other ways and by other means, respondent has represented and still represents, that said products are:

Chip-proof;

Chip-proofed;

Stainless;

36 times more durable than ordinary enamelware or to a substantial degree more durable than ordinary enamelware; and that said products will save their cost to the ultimate purchaser in one year or less through fuel savings.

PAR. 4. Said representations had and now have the tendency and capacity to mislead and deceive the purchasing public and retail dealers, and have misled, and do now mislead, the purchasing public and retail dealers into the erroneous belief that said representations are true, and into the belief that said products sold and distributed by respondent will not chip and will not stain; that said products are 36 times more durable than ordinary enamelware or are to a substantial degree more durable than ordinary enamelware, and that said products will save their cost to the purchaser in one year or less through fuel savings.

PAR. 5. Each and every said representation as above set out has been and is untrue, for in truth, and in fact, said products are not now, neither have they ever been chip-proof. Said products are not now, neither have they ever been chip-proofed. Said products are not now, neither have they ever been 36 times more durable than ordinary enamelware nor to a substantial degree more durable than ordinary enamelware. Said products do not now, neither did they ever save their cost to the purchaser in one year or less through fuel savings. Neither will they now nor did they ever save the purchaser any material amount in fuel.

PAR. 6. There is a preference on the part of a substantial number of retail dealers in enamelware and enamel kitchenware, and a substantial portion of the purchasing public, for enamelware and enamel kitchenware that is chip-proof, chip-proofed, stainless, 36 times more durable, or substantially more durable, than ordinary enamelware, and for enamelware that will save fuel. At the time of the hearings in this matter the Committee on Standardization of Tests of Technical Research Service of the Porcelain Enamel Institute had arrived at a tentative test for stainless enamel kitchenware, and that test requires that enamel kitchenware represented as stainless shall pass a test of boiling a 1½% citric acid solution plus a 1½% malic acid solution for one-half hour in the utensil tested and that the utensil should then not show any visible signs of etching or stain. Respondent's enamelware products as constituted at the date of the hearings in this case will not withstand the aforementioned test without showing signs of etching or stain.

PAR. 7. The representations of respondent as hereinbefore set forth, in describing and advertising its enamelware and enamel kitchenware, are false and misleading, and have the capacity and tendency to deceive, and have deceived, and do deceive retailers and the purchasing public into buying respondent's products, on account of the mistaken beliefs herein set out. Through its advertising and aforesaid representations respondent has placed, and is placing, in the hands of wholesalers and retailers the means of deceiving the ultimate purchasers. The aforesaid acts and practices have the capacity and tendency to, and did, and do unfairly divert trade to respondent from respondent's competitors who are likewise engaged in selling in commerce among and between the various States of the United States and the District of Columbia, products of the same kind and nature as those of respondent's, which products are truthfully advertised.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondent, Federal Enameling and Stamping Company, are to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

It is ordered, That the respondent, Federal Enameling and Stamping Company, a corporation, its officers, representatives, agents, and employees, in connection with the offering for sale, sale, and distribution of enamelware or enamel kitchenware in interstate commerce or in the District of Columbia, do forthwith cease and desist from:

1. Representing that said enamelware will not chip;
2. Representing that said enamelware is 36 times more durable or to any substantial degree more durable than ordinary enamelware;
3. Representing that said enamelware products will save their cost to the ultimate purchaser in one year or less through fuel savings or will save the user any material amount on fuel cost;
4. Using the word "stainless," or any word of similar import and meaning, as a brand, stamp, or label upon or for enamelware or enamel kitchenware, or in advertising the same unless such enamelware or enamel kitchenware is made of material which can successfully withstand the test of boiling in it as a container a solution of 1½% citric acid plus 1½% malic acid for a period of one-half hour without showing visible signs of etching or stain.

It is further ordered, That the respondent shall within 60 days after service upon it of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing, setting forth in detail the manner and form in which it has complied with this order.

IN THE MATTER OF
NEW YORK STATE SHEET METAL ROOFING AND AIR-CONDITIONING CONTRACTORS' ASSOCIATION, ET AL.

COMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION
OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 26, 1914

Docket 2931. Complaint, Sept. 28, 1936—Decision, Oct. 4, 1937

Where a corporate trade association or organization, membership of which consisted of plumbing contractors and dealers in sheet metal roofing supplies and hot air furnaces, with respective places of business at various points in New York State, and in competition with one another and other plumbing contractors and dealers in such products located in other States and members therein of similar trade associations; and corporate manufacturer of hot air furnaces engaged in sale and distribution of its products in interstate commerce to customers located in States other than that of said manufacturer, and in substantial competition with others likewise engaged in business of making, selling, and distributing such furnaces in interstate commerce, and, but for the matters and things below set forth, naturally and normally in competition with other manufacturers who normally also sell not only to contractors and dealers comprising membership of various trade organizations above described, but to certain large mail order houses—

- Entered into and engaged in carrying out an agreement and understanding among themselves to list those manufacturers who were thus selling their hot air furnaces to mail order houses aforesaid, and to urge members of their above association, and also the other various trade associations and their respective members, to purchase only from manufacturers recommended by them, and in the accomplishment of their aforesaid purposes—
- (a) Held meetings to devise ways of exerting influence or pressure or other means of inducing members of the respective trade associations not to purchase the products of manufacturers named by them as being concerns dealing with mail order houses;
 - (b) Printed and published "White Lists" containing names of manufacturers approved by them who were not selling to such houses;
 - (c) Used, in concert and agreement among themselves and with others, coercive and concerted action, boycott, threats thereof, and other united action against manufacturers who were selling to such houses; and
 - (d) Caused to be published, and distributed, many thousands of pamphlets and bulletins to the various trade associations in the several States and to their respective members, urging latter to discontinue buying products of manufacturers named therein, and said associations to induce their membership to discontinue trading with such manufacturers;

With effect of monopolizing in themselves business of dealing in and distributing such products, unreasonably lessening, eliminating, restraining, stifling, hampering, and suppressing competition in industry concerned, and depriving purchasing and consuming public of advantages in price, service and other considerations which they would receive and enjoy under conditions of normal and unobstructed, or free and fair, competition in said trade and industry, and otherwise operating as a restraint upon and a detriment to the freedom of fair and legitimate competition therein, and obstructing natural flow of trade in channels of interstate commerce, and with capacity and tendency so to monopolize, etc.:

Held, That such acts and practices of said corporate association and manufacturer and their respective officers were to the prejudice of the public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition.

Mr. William L. Pencke for the Commission.

Griffith, Wager & Brackett, of Utica, N. Y., for New York State Sheet Metal Roofing and Air-Conditioning Contractors' Ass'n, and its officers.

Mr. Gilbert H. Montague, of New York City, for Fox Furnace Co., and its officers.

COMPLAINT

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent, New York State Sheet Metal, Roofing and Air-Conditioning Contractors' Association, Inc., is a corporation organized in the month of September 1935, existing and doing business under the laws of the State of New York, with its principal office and place of business located at 916-918 Columbia Street in the city of Utica in said State. Its officers are the respondents, H. W. Noregon, president, Clarence J. Meyer, first vice-president, James F. Keys, second vice-president, Adolph Hesse, secretary, and Edward Klick, treasurer. Said corporation is the successor to an unincorporated association known as New York State Sheet Metal and Roofing Contractors' Association, which had its place of business and office at the same place as the present corporation. Its officers were as follows: William J. Schmitt, president, H. W. Noregon, first vice-president, Adolph Hesse, secretary and Edward Klick, treasurer. Both said corporation and its predecessor will hereinafter be referred to as the New York Association.

PAR. 2. Respondent, Fox Furnace Company, is a corporation, organized and existing under the laws of the State of Ohio, with its office and principal place of business in the city of Elyria in said

State. Its officers are respondents, Clarence A. Olsen, president, George W. Cobb, Jr., secretary, and M. M. Suppes, treasurer. It will hereinafter be referred to as the Fox Company.

PAR. 3. Respondent, New York Association, is a trade organization whose membership consists of plumbing contractors, and dealers in sheet metal, roofing supplies, and hot air furnaces, with their respective places of business located at various points in the State of New York. Said members are in competition with each other, and with other plumbing contractors and dealers in sheet metal, roofing supplies, and hot air furnaces, located in States other than the State of New York, and who are likewise members of similar trade associations in their respective States.

PAR. 4. Respondent, Fox Furnace Company, is now, and for more than three years last past has been, engaged in the manufacture, sale, and distribution of hot air furnaces. Respondent sells and distributes its products in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia, causing said products when sold to be shipped from its place of business in the State of Ohio to purchasers thereof located in a State or States of the United States other than the State of Ohio. In the course and conduct of its business aforesaid, respondent, Fox Furnace Company, is now, and for more than three years last past has been, in substantial competition with other corporations, firms, partnerships, and individuals engaged in the business of manufacturing, selling, and distributing hot air furnaces in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 5. The members of said New York Association and other trade associations described in paragraph 3 hereof purchase hot air furnaces from said Fox Company in Ohio and from other manufacturers located in various other States of the United States. Said manufacturers ship their said products when purchased by the aforesaid members of the aforesaid associations from their respective places of business to the aforesaid members of the said associations located in the various States of the United States. There are certain manufacturers of hot air furnaces who not only sell to the contractors and dealers comprising the membership of the various trade organizations hereinabove described, but who have been and are selling hot air furnaces to certain large mail order houses. In the course and conduct of their aforesaid respective businesses, the said last mentioned manufacturers, but for the matters and things hereinafter set out, would be and would have been naturally and normally in competition with the other manufacturers of hot air furnaces, among which manufacturers is the Fox Company.

PAR. 6. On or about September 1934, the said New York Association and the said Fox Company entered into, have since carried out and are still carrying out an agreement, combination, understanding, and conspiracy among themselves, to blacklist those manufacturers who were and are selling hot air furnaces to the mail order houses aforesaid; to prejudice the members of the New York Association and the various other trade associations and their respective members against said manufacturers; to urge the members of said trade associations to purchase only from manufacturers recommended by said respondents.

To carry out the aforesaid purposes, the said respondents have done among others, the following acts and things:

(a) Held meetings to devise means of exerting influence, pressure, or other means of inducing or requiring members of the respective trade associations not to purchase the products of manufacturers named by them as being manufacturers dealing with mail order houses;

(b) Printed and published lists (so-called "White-Lists") containing the names of manufacturers approved by them who are not selling to mail order houses;

(c) Used in concert and agreement among themselves and with others coercive and concerted action, boycott, threats of boycott and other united action against manufacturers selling to mail order houses;

(d) Caused publication and distribution of many thousands of pamphlets and bulletins to the various trade associations in the several states of the United States and to the respective members thereof, urging and requiring said members to discontinue purchasing the products of manufacturers named in said pamphlets and bulletins, and urging and requiring the said trade associations to induce their membership to discontinue trading with said manufacturers.

PAR. 7. The capacity, tendency, and effect of said agreements, combinations, understandings and conspiracies, and the said acts and practices of the said respondents set forth in paragraph 6 hereof, are and have been to unreasonably lessen, eliminate, restrain, stifle, hamper, and suppress competition in said hot air furnace industry throughout the several States of the United States; to operate as a restraint upon and a detriment to the freedom of fair and legitimate competition in such trade and industry; to obstruct the natural flow of commerce in the channels of interstate trade; to prejudice and injure the public and manufacturers, dealers and others who did not conform to respondents' program, and to spread into States other than New York and Ohio the same methods of boycott and "white-listing" employed by respondents.

PAR. 8. The above acts and things done or caused to be done by the respondents were and are each and all to the prejudice of the public and of respondents' competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in interstate commerce within the meaning and intent of Section 5 of "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914.

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

The said Commission having duly considered the above and being fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public, and makes these its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom.

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent, New York State Sheet Metal Roofing and Air-Conditioning Contractors' Association, was incorporated under the laws of the State of New York in the month of September 1935. It is the successor to an unincorporated association known as New York State Sheet Metal and Roofing Contractors' Association. The principal office and place of business of said respondent is in the city of Utica, State of New York. Its officers are the respondents, H. W. Noregon, president, Clarence J. Meyer, first vice-president, James F. Keys, second vice-president, Adolph Hesse, secretary, and Edward Klick, treasurer.

PAR. 2. Respondent, Fox Furnace Company, is a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Ohio, with its office and principal place of business in the city of Elyria, in said

State. Its officers are respondents, Clarence A. Olsen, president, George W. Cobb, Jr., secretary, and M. M. Suppes, treasurer. It will hereinafter be referred to as the Fox Company.

PAR. 3. Respondent, New York Association, is a trade organization whose membership consists of plumbing contractors, and dealers in sheet metal roofing supplies and hot air furnaces, with their respective places of business located at various points in the State of New York. Said members are in competition with each other, and with other plumbing contractors and dealers in sheet metal roofing supplies and hot air furnaces located in States other than the State of New York, and who are likewise members of similar trade associations in their respective States.

PAR. 4. Respondent, Fox Furnace Company, is now and for many years has been engaged in the manufacture, sale, and distribution of hot air furnaces. It sells and distributes its products in interstate commerce, shipping said products to customers who are located in States other than the State of Ohio. The Fox Furnace Company is now, and for many years has been, in substantial competition with other corporations, firms, partnerships, and individuals who are also engaged in the business of manufacturing, selling and distributing hot air furnaces in interstate commerce.

PAR. 5. The members of said New York Association and other trade associations described in paragraph 3 hereof purchase hot air furnaces from said Fox Company in Ohio and from other manufacturers located in various other States of the United States. Said manufacturers ship their said products when purchased by the aforesaid members of the aforesaid associations from their respective places of business to the aforesaid members of the said associations located in the various States of the United States. There are certain manufacturers of hot air furnaces who not only sell to the contractors and dealers comprising the membership of the various trade organizations hereinabove described, but who have been and are selling hot air furnaces to certain large mail order houses. In the course and conduct of their aforesaid respective businesses, the said last mentioned manufacturers, but for the matters and things hereinafter set out, would be and would have been naturally and normally in competition with the other manufacturers of hot air furnaces, among which manufacturers is the Fox Company.

PAR. 6. On or about September 1934, the said New York Association and the said Fox Company entered into and carried out, and up to a date prior to the filing of the complaint were still carrying out, an agreement and understanding among themselves, to list those manufacturers who were and are selling hot-air furnaces to mail order houses aforesaid; and to urge the members of the New York Association and the various trade associations and their respective members to purchase only from manufacturers recommended by said respondents.

To carry out the aforesaid purposes, the said respondents have done, among others, the following acts and things:

(a) Held meetings to devise means of exerting influence, pressure, or other means of inducing members of the respective trade associations not to purchase the products of manufacturers named by them as being manufacturers dealing with mail-order houses;

(b) Printed and published lists (so-called "White Lists") containing the names of manufacturers approved by them who are not selling to mail-order houses;

(c) Used in concert and agreement among themselves and with other coercive and concerted action, boycott, threats of boycott and other united action against manufacturers selling to mail-order houses;

(d) Caused publication and distribution of many thousands of pamphlets and bulletins to the various trade associations in the several States of the United States and to the respective members thereof, urging said members to discontinue purchasing the products of manufacturers named in said pamphlets and bulletins, and urging the said trade associations to induce their membership to discontinue trading with said manufacturers.

PAR. 7. The capacity, tendency, and effect of said agreement and understanding and the said acts and practices of these respondents as set forth in paragraph 6 hereof, are, and have been to monopolize in said respondents the business of dealing in and distributing hot-air furnaces; to unreasonably lessen, eliminate, restrain, stifle, hamper, and suppress competition in said industry, and to deprive the purchasing and consuming public of the advantages in price, service and other considerations which they would receive and enjoy under conditions of normal and unobstructed or free and fair competition in said trade and industry; to otherwise operate as a restraint upon and a detriment to the freedom of fair and legitimate competition in said trade and industry and to obstruct the natural flow of trade in the channels of interstate commerce.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of respondents New York State Sheet Metal Roofing and Air-Conditioning Contractors' Association, a corporation, and H. W. Noregon, president, Clarence J. Meyer, first vice-president, James F. Keys, second vice-president, Adolph Hesse, secretary and Edward Klick, treasurer, and Fox Furnace Company, a corporation, and Clarence A. Olsen, president, George W. Cobb, Jr., secretary, and M. M. Suppes, treasurer, are to the prejudice of the public and of said respondents' competitors and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce, within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

This matter coming on to be heard by the Commission on the complaint filed herein on September 28, 1936, and the answers of the respondents herein, New York State Sheet Metal Roofing and Air-Conditioning Contractors' Association, and H. W. Noregon, president, Clarence J. Meyer, first vice-president, James F. Keys, second vice-president, Adolph Hesse, secretary, and Edward Klick, treasurer, of said association, and Fox Furnace Company, and Clarence A. Olsen, president, George W. Cobb, Jr., secretary, and M. M. Suppes, treasurer, of said company, filed on November 13, 1936, in which they state that they desire to and have hereby waived hearing on the charges set forth in the complaint insofar as the same referred to alleged unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," and that they and each of them, for the sole purpose of avoiding the trouble and expense incident to further continuation of this proceeding, refrain from contesting the proceeding, and that they and each of them consent that all the material facts alleged in said complaint may be deemed to be admitted; but not within the intent and meaning of any law of the United States other than the Federal Trade Commission Act, said respective answers not constituting an admission of any conclusions of law, and not constituting an admission of fact for any other purpose, nor to be used against them in any other proceeding, suit, or action, and that they and each of them consent that the Commission may, without trial and without further evidence and without any intervening proceeding, make and enter its findings as to the facts and issue and serve upon them and each of them an order to cease and desist from any methods of competition alleged in the said complaint which constitute violations of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

It is ordered, That the respondents, New York State Sheet Metal Roofing and Air-Conditioning Contractors' Association, and H. W.

Noregon, president, Clarence J. Meyer, first vice-president, James F. Keys, second vice-president, Adolph Hesse, secretary, and Edward Klick, treasurer, of said association, and Fox Furnace Company, and Clarence A. Olsen, president, George W. Cobb, Jr., secretary, and M. M. Suppes, treasurer, of said company, and their successors, officers, agents, and employees cease and desist, in connection with the business of selling and offering for sale of hot-air furnaces, from doing and performing by agreement, or understanding between or among any two or more of said respondents, the following acts and things:

(a) Holding meetings to devise means of exerting influence, pressure, or other means of inducing members of the respective trade associations not to purchase the products of manufacturers named by them as being manufacturers dealing with mail order houses;

(b) Printing and publishing lists (so-called "White Lists") containing the names of manufacturers approved by them who are not selling to mail order houses;

(c) Using in concert and agreement among themselves and with others coercive and concerted action, boycott, threats of boycott and other united action against manufacturerers selling to mail order houses;

(d) Causing publication and distribution of pamphlets and bulletins to the various trade associations in the several States of the United States and to the respective members thereof, urging said members to discontinue purchasing the products of manufacturers named in said pamphlets and bulletins, and urging the said trade associations to induce their membership to discontinue trading with said manufacturers.

It is further ordered, That the above respondents shall within 60 days after service upon them of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which they and each of them have complied with this order.

IN THE MATTER OF

NACIONAL DESTILERIAS CORPORATION

COMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION
OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 26, 1914

Docket 2477. Complaint, June 28, 1935—Decision, Oct. 9, 1937

- Where a corporation engaged as a wholesaler, in the purchase and importation from the Philippine Islands of rum, brandy, gins, and cordials, such as Creme de Menthe, Anisette, Creme de Cacao, and Vermouth, and in the storing of its goods, on importation, in various warehouses in certain cities in the United States, and in resale and reshipment thereof from such points to wholesale and retail purchasers thereof in other States, in substantial competition with (1) those engaged in manufacture by distillation of rums, brandies, gins, cordials, and other spirituous beverages, and in sale thereof in trade and commerce among the various States and in the District of Columbia, (2) those engaged in purchasing, rectifying, blending, and bottling such various beverages and similarly selling same, and (3) those engaged in purchasing, and reselling such various beverages as aforesaid, and including among said competitors those who (1) manufacture and distill from mash, wort, or wash, through process of original and continuous distillation from raw materials, such as grain, mash, or wort, and truthfully use words "distillery," "distilleries," "distillers," or "distilling" as a part of their corporate or trade names on the labels of the bottles in which they sell and ship such products as rums, brandies, cordials, gins, and other alcoholic beverages, (2) those who, engaged in purchasing, rectifying, blending, bottling, and selling such various beverages, do not use aforesaid word as above set forth, and (3) those who, engaged as wholesalers of rums, brandies, etc., and other such beverages, also do not use aforesaid words as above set forth—
- Represented, through use of word "Destilerias" in its corporate name printed on its stationery and on the labels attached to the bottles in which it sold and shipped its said products, along with names "Destilerias Ayala" and "Destilerias La Tondena," Manila distilleries for which it was exclusive distributing agent in the United States, and in various other ways to its customers and furnished them with means of representing to their vendees, both retailers and ultimate consuming public, that it was a distiller of cordials, gins, and other spirituous beverages, notwithstanding fact it did not own, operate, or control any place or places where any alcoholic beverages were by it made by process of original and continuous distillation from mash, wort, or wash, through continuous closed pipes and vessels until manufacture is complete, and was not a distiller, for the purchase of the bottled liquors of which there is a preference on the part of a substantial portion of the purchasing public;
- With effect of misleading and deceiving dealers and said public into belief that it was a distiller and of inducing such dealers and public, acting in such belief, to buy rums, brandies, cordials, gins, and other spirituous beverages labeled and sold by it, and of thereby diverting trade to it from those of its competitors who do not, by their corporate or trade names or in any

PARAGRAP II 1. Respondent is a corporation organized, existing and doing business under the laws of the State of Indiana, with its office and principal place of business in the city of Indianapolis, in said State. It is now, and for more than one year last past has been, engaged as a wholesaler, purchasing and importing from the Philippine Islands and elsewhere and reselling whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages in constant course of trade and commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia. In the course and conduct of its said business, it causes its said products when sold to be transported from its place of business aforesaid into and through various States of the United States to the purchasers thereof, consisting of wholesalers and retailers, located in other States of the United States and the District of Columbia. In the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid, respondent is now, and for more than one year last past has been, in substantial competition with other corporations and with individuals, partnerships, and firms, engaged in the manufacture by distillation of whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages and in the sale thereof in trade and commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia; and in the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid, respondent is now, and for more than one year last past has been, in substantial competition with other corporations, and with individuals, firms, and partnerships engaged in the business of purchasing, rectifying, blending, and bottling whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages and in the sale thereof in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia; and in the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid, respondent is now, and for more than one year last past has been, in substantial competition with other corporations, and with individuals, firms, and partnerships engaged in the business of purchasing and reselling whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 2. For a long period of time the word "distilleries" when used in connection with the liquor industry and the products thereof has had and still has a definite significance and meaning to the minds of the wholesalers and retailers in such industry and to the ultimate purchasing public, to wit, the places where such liquors are manufactured by the process of original and continuous distillation from mash, wort, or wash, through continuous closed pipes and vessels until the manufacture thereof is completed; and a substantial portion of the purchasing public prefers to buy spirituous liquors prepared and bottled by distillers. The words "Nacional Destilerias" are the Spanish for "National Distillers" and are so similar in spelling and sound to their English equivalent as to be readily understood by a substantial portion of the purchasing public.

PAR. 3. In the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid, by the use of the word "Destilerias" in its corporate name, printed on its stationery and advertising, and on the labels attached to the bottles in which it sells and ships its said products, and in various other ways, respondent represents to its customers and furnishes them with the means of representing to their vendees, both retailers and the ultimate consuming public, that it is a distiller and that the whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages therein contained were by it manufactured through the process of distillation from mash, wort, or wash, as aforesaid, when, as a matter of fact, respondent is not a distiller, does not distill the said whiskies, gins, or other spirituous beverages by it so labeled, sold, and transported, and does not own, operate, or control any place or places where such beverages are manufactured by the process of distillation from mash, wort, or wash.

PAR. 4. There are among the competitors of respondent engaged in the sale of spirituous beverages, as mentioned in paragraph 1 hereof, corporations, firms, partnerships, and individuals who manufacture and distill from mash, wort, or wash, as aforesaid, whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages sold by them and who truthfully use the words "distillery," "distilleries," "distillers," or "distilling" as a part of their corporate or trade names and on their stationery and advertising and on the labels of the bottles in which they sell and ship such products. There are also among such competitors corporations, firms, partnerships, and individuals engaged in the business of purchasing, rectifying, blending, bottling, and selling whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages who do not use the words "distillery," "distilleries," "distilling," or "distillers," as a part of their corporate or trade names, nor on their stationery or advertising, nor on the labels attached to the bottles in which they sell and ship their said products. There are also among such competitors corporations, firms, partnerships, and individuals engaged in business as wholesalers of whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages who do not use the words "distillery," "distilleries," "distilling," or "distillers," as a part of their corporate or trade names, nor on their stationery or advertising, nor on the labels attached to the bottles in which they sell and ship their said products.

PAR. 5. Representation by respondent as set forth in paragraph 3 hereof, is calculated to and has the capacity and tendency to and does mislead and deceive dealers and the purchasing public into the beliefs that respondent is a distiller and that the whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages sold by the respondent are manufactured and distilled by it from mash, wort, or wash, as aforesaid, and is calculated to and has the capacity and tendency to and does induce dealers and the purchasing public, acting in such beliefs, to purchase the whiskies, gins and other spirituous beverages labeled and sold by the respondent, thereby diverting trade to respondent from its competitors who do not by their corporate or trade names or in any other manner misrepresent that they are manufacturers by distillation from mash, wort, or wash, of whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages, and thereby respondent does substantial injury to substantial competition in interstate commerce.

PAR. 6. The acts and things above alleged to have been done and the false representations alleged to have been made by respondent are to the prejudice of the public and the competitors of respondent and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914.

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

1159

Findings

1, 1935, served its complaint in this proceeding upon the respondent, Nacional Destilerias Corporation, charging it with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of the provisions of said act. After the issuance of said complaint and the filing of respondent's answer thereto, testimony and other evidence in support of the allegations of the said complaint were introduced by PGad B. Morehouse, attorney for the Commission, before John J. Keenan, an examiner of the Commission, theretofore duly designated by it. No testimony or other evidence was introduced by the respondent in opposition to the allegations of the complaint. The said testimony and other evidence in support of the allegations of the complaint were duly recorded and filed in the office of the Commission. Thereafter, the proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on the said complaint, the answer thereto, testimony, other evidence, and brief in support of the complaint, no brief in opposition thereto and no oral arguments having been made; and the Commission having duly considered the same, and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public, and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. The repondent is a corporation organized, existing, and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Indiana, with its principal office and place of business at 130 East Washington Building, Room 609, in the city of Indianapolis, in said State. It was incorporated on November 28, 1933, and since a time shortly after its organization has been engaged as a wholesaler, purchasing and importing from the Philippine Islands and re-selling rum, brandy, and gins, and cordials such as Creme de Menthe, Anisette, Creme de Cacao, and Vermouth. Upon importation, respondent stores its goods in various warehouses in Chicago, New York, New Orleans, and Los Angeles, and such goods are re-shipped from those points upon the order of the respondent to the purchasers thereof consisting of wholesalers, and retailers located in States of the United States other than the point of origin of such shipments, including the States of Massachusetts, New York, Rhode Island, Kentucky, Illinois, and Missouri. In the course and conduct of its business, respondent is engaged in selling its said products in constant course of trade and commerce between and among the various States of the United States.

In the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid, respondent is now and for more than one year last past has been, in substantial competition with other corporations and with individuals, partnerships, and firms, engaged in the manufacture by distillation of rums, brandies, gins, cordials, and other spirituous beverages and in the sale thereof in trade and commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia; and in the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid, respondent is now, and for more than one year last past has been, in substantial competition with other corporations, and with individuals, firms, and partnerships engaged in the business of purchasing, rectifying, blending, and bottling rums, brandies, gins, cordials, and other spirituous beverages and in the sale thereof in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia; and in the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid, respondent is now, and for more than one year last past has been, in substantial competition with other corporations, and with individuals, firms, and partnerships engaged in the business of purchasing and reselling rums, brandies, gins, cordials, and other spirituous beverages in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 2. The words "Nacional Destilerias" in the corporate name of this respondent are the Spanish equivalent for "National Distillers" and are so similar in spelling and sound to the English equivalent thereof as to be readily misunderstood by a substantial portion of the purchasing public to mean "National Distillers." For a long period of time, the word "Distilleries" when used in connection with the liquor industry and the products thereof has had and still has a definite significance and meaning to the minds of wholesalers and retailers in such industry and to the ultimate purchasing public, to wit, the places where whiskies, gins, and other alcoholic beverages are manufactured by the process of original and continuous distillation from raw materials such as grain, mash, or wort.

Within the cities of Indianapolis, Ind.; St. Louis, Mo.; Kansas City, Mo.; and Chicago, Ill., more than thirty-five witnesses testified, as disinterested members of the public, what "Nacional Destilerias Corporation" meant to them in association with the liquor industry. With the exception of some four or five who did not understand the words, they all testified substantially to the effect that the corporate name "Nacional Destilerias Corporation" meant to them "National Distillery Company"; that such trade name printed on the labels of bottles as used by the respondent would influence them to purchase the merchandise of respondent under the belief that they were purchasing the merchandise of a distillery. The gist of the testimony of practically all these public witnesses was to the effect that in purchasing a product with a distiller's name upon the same, preference would be given to such product in the belief that it would be more uniform, up to certain specifications, etc., because it was made under Government supervision; that they preferred buying in as direct manner as possible; that distillers have more responsibility than a rectifier or wholesaler in the field of spirituous liquors; that the use of the word "Destilerias" as used in the corporate name by respondent would indicate to them that respondent was a distiller; that they would give preference to respondent's package over a bottle which did not contain any words indicating a distillery.

The Commission finds that a substantial portion of the purchasing public prefers to buy from the retailer spirituous liquors prepared and bottled by, and purchased by the retailer from, real distillers; and that the inclusion of respondent's present corporate name upon the labels of the bottles in which it sells and ships its aforesaid liquors therefore has a tendency unfairly to induce purchasers and prospective purchasers to purchase respondent's said liquors in preference to liquors sold by competing wholesalers who do not falsely designate themselves as distillers or distilling companies, and to induce retailers to purchase the respondent's cordials, gins, and liquors in preference to like products sold by wholesalers who do not use trade or corporate names having a capacity and tendency to confuse the purchasing public as to their status in the trade.

PAR. 3. In the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid, by the use of the word "Destilerias" in its corporate name, printed on its stationery and on the labels attached to the bottles in which it sells and ships its said products, and in various other ways, respondent represents to its customers and furnishes them with the means of representing to their vendees, both retailers and the ultimate consuming public, that it is a distiller of cordials, gins, and other spirituous beverages, when, as a matter of fact, respondent is not a distiller, and does not own, operate, or control any place or places where any alcoholic beverages are manufactured by the process of distillation from mash, wort, or wash.

The specimens of labels introduced in this case, show that in some instances the names of the Manila distilleries; viz, Destilerias Ayala and Destilerias La Tondena, for which respondent is the exclusive distributing agent in the United States, appear thereon in addition to the words "Imported by Nacional Destilerias Corporation, Indianapolis, Indiana." The Commission finds that such labeling, under the circumstances hereinabove set forth; namely, the existing preference of a substantial portion of the public to deal in as direct a manner as possible with the actual distillers and bottlers of the package of liquors which it buys, is misleading and deceptive in fact, and has led retail liquor dealer purchasers to purchase respondent's products under the false impression induced by such labeling and by the use of respondent's name upon its stationery and invoices, that respondent was a distiller and owned and operated distilleries of those names in the Philippine Islands.

PAR. 4. There are among the competitors of respondent engaged in the sale of spirituous beverages, as mentioned in paragraph 1 hereof, corporations, firms, partnerships and individuals who manufacture and distill from mash, wort, or wash, as aforesaid, whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages sold by them and who truthfully use the words "distillery," "distilleries," "distillers," or "distilling" as a part of their corporate or trade names on the labels of the bottles in which they sell and ship such products as rums, brandies, cordials, gins, and other alcoholic beverages. There are also among such competitors corporations, firms, partnerships, and individuals engaged in the business of purchasing, rectifying, blending, bottling, and selling whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages who do not use the words "distillery," "distilleries," "distilling," or "distillers," as a part of their corporate or trade names on the labels attached to the bottles in which they sell and ship their said products. There are also among such competitors corporations, firms, partnerships and individuals engaged in business as wholesalers of rums, brandies, cordials, gins, and other spirituous beverages who do not use the words "distillery," "distilleries," "distilling," or "distillers," as a part of their corporate or trade names, on the labels attached to the bottles in which they sell and ship their said products.

PAR. 5. Representation by respondent as set forth in paragraph 3 hereof has the capacity and tendency to and does mislead and deceive dealers and the purchasing public into the belief that respondent is a distiller, and has the capacity and tendency to and does induce dealers and the purchasing public, acting in such belief, to purchase the rums, brandies, cordials, gins, and other spirituous beverages labeled and sold by the respondent, thereby diverting trade to respondent from those of its competitors who do not by their corporate or trade names or in any other manner misrepresent that they are distillers of whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages, and thereby respondent does substantial injury to competition in interstate commerce.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of respondent, Nacional Destilerias Corporation, are to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

1159

Order

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

It is ordered, That the respondent, Nacional Destilerias Corporation, its officers, representatives, agents, and employees, in connection with the offering for sale or sale and distribution by it in interstate commerce or in the District of Columbia, of whiskies, gins, or other spirituous beverages, do cease and desist from:

Representing, through the use of the word "Destilerias", or any form of the words distiller, distilleries, distilling, or distilled, or equivalents thereof, in its corporate name on its stationery, invoices, or labels attached to the bottles in which its said products are sold and shipped (a) that respondent is a distiller of the said rums, brandies, cordials, or other spirituous beverages; or, (b) that the said whiskies, gins, or other spirituous beverages were by it manufactured through a process of distillation; or (c) that respondent owns, operates, or controls a place or places where such products are by it manufactured by a process of original and continuous distillation from mash, wort or wash, through continuous closed pipes and vessels until the manufacture thereof is completed, unless and until respondent shall actually own, operate, or control such a place or places.

It is further ordered, That the said respondent, within 60 days from and after the date of service upon it of this order, shall file with the Commission a report or reports in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which it is complying and has complied with the order to cease and desist hereinabove set forth.

Docket 2431. Complaint, June 7, 1935—Decision, Oct. 20, 1937

Where a corporation engaged in the distilled spirits rectifying industry, in purchasing, rectifying, blending, and bottling various kinds of gin, rock and rye, and a wide variety of cordials or liqueurs, and in producing gin with a still used therefor, by redistillation of purchased alcohol, not produced by it, over juniper berries and other aromatics, and in use for experimental purposes, in connection with production of cordials, of two small stills of five-gallon capacity or less, and in sale of its aforesaid various products chiefly to wholesalers and State Liquor Commissions, in other States and in District of Columbia, in substantial competition with those engaged in manufacture by true distillation of various kinds of alcoholic beverages from mash, wort, or wash, and in selling same in trade and commerce among the various States and in said District, and with those engaged in purchasing, rectifying, blending, and bottling cordials, gins, and other alcoholic beverages in rectifying plants and under rectifier's permits, and in sale thereof as aforesaid, and including among said competitors those who, as manufacturers and distillers from mash, wort, or wash of whiskies, gins, and other alcoholic beverages sold by them, truthfully used words "distillery," "distilleries," "distilling," or "distillers" as a part of their corporate or trade names and on their stationery, catalogs, and advertising and on the labels of the bottles in which they sell and ship such products and do not misrepresent that they have had one hundred years' experience in making quality liquors, and those who, engaged in purchasing, rectifying, blending, and bottling cordials, gins, and other alcoholic beverages in rectifying plants as above set forth, do not use such words as aforesaid, nor misrepresent, as above stated, their years of experience in the making of quality liquors—

Represented, through use of word "Distilleries" in its corporate name, printed on its stationery, catalogs and advertising, and on the labels attached to the bottles in which it sold and shipped its said products, and through printed representations, that it had had "100 years experience making quality liqueurs," to its customers, and furnished same with means of representing to their vendees, both retailers and ultimate consuming public, that it was a distiller of cordials, gins, and other alcoholic beverages and had been making quality liqueurs for one hundred years, notwithstanding fact it did not own, operate or control any distillery or place where any alcoholic beverages are made by process of distillation from mash, wort, or wash by original and continuous distillation therefrom, through continuous closed pipes and vessels until manufacture is complete, as long understood from word "distilleries" when used in connection with industry in question and products thereof by trade and ultimate purchasing public, had not had one hundred years' experience, and was not, either under the Internal Revenue laws or as commonly understood, a distiller, for the spirituous bottled liquors of which there is a preference on the part of a substantial portion of the purchasing public;

With effect of misleading and deceiving dealers and purchasing public into belief that the cordials, gins, and other alcoholic beverages sold by it were by it made or distilled from mash, wort or wash by one continuous process, and of inducing dealers and purchasing public, acting in such beliefs, to buy its said cordials, gins and other alcoholic beverages, rectified and bottled by it, and of thereby diverting trade to it from its competitors who do not, by their corporate or trade name or in any other way, misrepresent the extent of their past experience or that they are manufacturers by distillation from mash, wort, or wash of whiskies, gins, or other such beverages; to the substantial injury of substantial competition in commerce:

COMPLAINT

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent is a corporation organized September 15, 1933, existing and doing business under the laws of the State of Michigan, with its office and principal place of business in the city of Detroit, in said State. It is now, and for more than one year last past has been, engaged in the business of purchasing, rectifying, blending, and bottling whiskies, gins, and other alcoholic beverages in a rectifying plant under a rectifier's permit, and in the sale thereof in constant course of trade and commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia. In the course and conduct of its said business it causes its said products when sold to be transported from its place of business aforesaid into and through various States of the United States to the purchasers thereof, consisting of wholesalers and distributors, some located within the State of Michigan and some located in other States of the United States and the District of Columbia. In the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid, respondent is now, and for more than one year last past has been, in substantial competition with other corporations and with individuals, partnerships, and firms engaged in the manufacture by true distillation of whiskies, gins, and other alcoholic beverages from mash, wort, or wash, and in the sale thereof in trade and commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia; and in the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid respondent is, and for more than one year last past has been, in substantial competition with other corporations and with individuals, firms, and partnerships engaged in the business of purchasing, rectifying, blending, and bottling whiskies, gins, and other alcoholic beverages in rectifying plants under rectifiers' permits and in the sale thereof in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 2. Upon the premises of respondent's place of business aforesaid there is a still for use in the production of gins by the process of rectification whereby alcohol, purchased but not produced by respondent, is redistilled over juniper berries and other aromatics. Such rectification of alcoholic spirits does not make or constitute respondent a distillery or a distiller, as defined by Section 3247 of the Revised Statutes regulating Internal Revenue, nor as commonly understood by the public and the liquor industry. For a long period of time the word "distilleries" when used in connection with the liquor industry and with the products thereof has had and still has a definite significance and meaning to the minds of wholesalers and retailers in such industry and to the ultimate purchasing public, to wit, places where alcoholic liquors are produced by an original and continuous distillation from mash, wort, or wash, through continuous closed pipes and vessels until the manufacture thereof is complete, and a substantial portion of the purchasing public prefers to buy spirituous liquors bottled and prepared by the actual distillers thereof.

PAR. 3. In the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid by printed representations that it has had "100 years experience making quality liqueurs" and by the use of the word "Distilleries" in its corporate name, printed on its stationery, catalogs, advertising, and on the labels attached to the bottles in which it sells and ships its said products, and in various other ways, respondent represents to its customers and furnishes them with the means of representing to their vendees, both retailers and the ultimate consuming public, that the said whiskies, gins, and other alcoholic beverages therein contained were by it manufactured through the process of distillation from mash, wort, or wash, when, as a matter of fact, respondent is not a distiller, does not distill the said whiskies, gins, and other alcoholic beverages by it so bottled, labeled, sold, and transported, and merely by the use of a still operated by it as aforesaid in the rectification of alcoholic spirits by re-distillation over juniper berries and other aromatics, does not distill the whiskies, gins, and other alcoholic beverages by it so bottled, labeled, sold, and transported in the sense in which the word "distilleries" is commonly accepted and understood by those engaged in the liquor trade and the public. Respondent does not own, operate, or control any place or places where alcoholic beverages are manufactured by a process of original and continuous distillation from mash, wort, or wash. Respondent has not had 100 years experience making quality liqueurs.

PAR. 4. There are among the competitors of respondent engaged in the sale of spirituous beverages as mentioned in paragraph 1 hereof corporations, firms, partnerships, and individuals who manufacture and distill from mash, wort or wash, whiskies, gins, and other alcoholic beverages sold by them and who truthfully use the words "distillery," "distilleries," "distillers," or "distilling" as a part of their corporate or trade names and on their stationery, catalogs, advertising, and on the labels of the bottles in which they sell and ship such products, and who do not misrepresent that they have had 100 years experience in making quality liqueurs. There are also among such competitors corporations, firms, partnerships, and individuals engaged in the business of purchasing, rectifying, blending, and bottling whiskies, gins and other alcoholic beverages in rectifying plants under rectifiers' permits who do not use the words "distillery," "distilleries," "distilling," or "distillers" as a part of their corporate or trade names, nor on their stationery, catalogs, advertising, nor on the labels attached to the bottles in which they sell and ship their said products, and who do not misrepresent that they have had 100 years experience making quality liqueurs.

PAR. 5. The representations by respondent, as set forth in paragraph 3 hereof, are calculated to and have a capacity and tendency to and do mislead and deceive dealers and the purchasing public into the belief that the whiskies, gins, and other alcoholic beverages sold by the respondent or manufactured or distilled by it from mash, wort, or wash by one continuous process and are calculated to and have the capacity and tendency to and do induce dealers and the purchasing public, acting in such beliefs, to purchase the whiskies, gins and other alcoholic beverages rectified and bottled by the respondent, thereby diverting trade to respondent from its competitors who do not by their corporate or trade name or in any other manner misrepresent the extent of their past experience or that they are manufacturers by distillation from mash, wort, or wash of whiskies, gins, or other alcoholic beverages, and thereby respondent does substantial injury to substantial competition in interstate commerce.

PAR. 6. The acts and things above alleged to have been done and the false representations alleged to have been made by respondent are to the prejudice of the public and the competitors of respondent and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914.

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission on June 7, 1935, issued, and on June 10, 1935, served its complaint in this proceeding upon the respondent, Arrow Distilleries, Inc., charging it with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of the provisions of said act. After the issuance of said complaint and the filing of respondent's answer thereto, testimony and other evidence in support of the allegations of said complaint were introduced by PGad B. Morehouse, attorney for the Commission, before John L. Hornor, an examiner of the Commission theretofore duly designated by it, and in opposition to the allegations of the complaint by R. E. Joyce and Saul A. Dann, attorneys for respondent; and said testimony and other evidence were duly recorded and filed in the office of the Commission. Thereafter, the proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on the said complaint, the answer thereto, testimony, other evidence, and brief in support of the complaint, no briefs in opposition thereto having been filed and no oral arguments having been made; and the Commission having duly considered the same, and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent is a corporation organized September 15, 1933, under the laws of the State of Michigan, with its principal office and place of business at 3539 Concord Avenue, in the city of Detroit in said State. It was incorporated with an authorized capital stock of $175,000, and ever since a date shortly after its incorporation has been and now is engaged in the distilled spirits rectifying industry under the necessary permits from the United States, in the business of purchasing, rectifying, blending, and bottling various kinds of gin, rock and rye, and a wide variety of cordials of liqueurs such as Kuemmel, Triple Sec, Creme de Menthe, Creme de Cacao, Cocktails, Tom Collins, Greek Liqueurs, Polish Liqueurs, Tom and Jerry, and other alcoholic beverages, in a rectifying plant, and in the sale thereof in constant course of trade and commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia. While it has some retail accounts, it sells chiefly to wholesalers and State Liquor Commissions in States having liquor monopolies. As of October 1, 1936, it had sold approximately $1,575,000 worth of spirituous beverages.

Findings

In the course and conduct of its said business, it causes its said products when sold to be transported from its place of business aforesaid into and through some thirty-one States of the United States, to the purchasers thereof, consisting of wholesalers and retailers located in other States of the United States and the District of Columbia.

In the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid, respondent is now, and for more than one year last past has been, in substantial competition with other corporations and with individuals, partnerships, and firms engaged in the manufacture by true distillation of various kinds of alcoholic beverages from mash, wort, or wash, and in the sale thereof in trade and commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia; and in the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid, respondent is, and for more than one year last past has been, in substantial competition with other corporations and with individuals, firms, and partnerships engaged in the business of purchasing, rectifying, blending, and bottling cordials, gins, and other alcoholic beverages in rectifying plants under rectifiers' permits, and in the sale thereof in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 2. Prior to August 15, 1936, when the regulations of the Federal Alcoholic Administration of the Treasury Department became effective under the Act of August 29, 1935, 49 Stat. 977, certain cordials (synonymous with liqueurs) could be and were labeled and referred to in the trade as "distilled" products. Thereafter, that Department would not permit such products to be labeled "distilled."

Findings

25 F. T. C.

The Commission takes notice of Regulation No. 5, Article 2, of the aforesaid regulations entitled "Standards of Identity for Distilled Spirits," Class Six, "Cordials and Liqueurs," which reads as follows:

(a) Cordials or Liqueurs are products obtained by mixing or redistilling neutral spirits, brandy, gin, or other distilled spirits with or over fruits, flowers, plants, or pure juices therefrom, or other natural flavoring materials, or with extracts derived from infusions, percolations, or maceration of such materials, and to which sugar or dextrose or both have been added in an amount not less than 2½% by weight of the finished product. Synthetic or imitation flavoring materials shall not be included.

(b) "Sloe gin" is a cordial or liqueur with the main characteristic flavoring derived from sloe berries.

(c) Cordials and liqueurs shall not be designated as "distilled" or "compound."

The evidence of record shows that in the trade cordials are produced either by the method of percolation, distillation, maceration, or compounding. Percolation, as to cordials, is the distilling of various fruits and herbs to obtain the flavor from them, the berries or herbs being placed in a still and alcohol put into the still. This alcohol is then vaporized through the berries to extract all of the flavor from them, and then condensed on the other side of the still. All of the distillate that comes off is a cordial. All cordials are made by compounding, but the flavor therein is derived by percolation, distillation, or macerations. Maceration is a cold water method of extracting the flavor.

Approximately 75% of respondents' products are such "non-distilled" products, approximately 3% is gin, and the balance consists of brandies, rums, Slivowitz, and various other distilled products which respondent bottles but does not distill itself, and these are marked in compliance with the aforesaid regulations with the words "Bottled by."

Respondent has no distiller's permit from the Federal Government, and acquires such alcohol products as it requires in its business directly or indirectly from distillers. Its answer admits that it does not own, operate, or control any place or places where whiskies, gins, or other alcoholic beverages are manufactured from mash, wort, or wash.

PAR. 3. Upon the premises of respondent's place of business aforesaid there is a 250-gallon capacity gin still, wherein respondent manufactures gin from alcohol purchased but not produced by it, through the redistillation of said alcohol over juniper berries and other aromatics. This gin constitutes approximately 3% of its total output and approximately 2% of its total sales volume. In addition to the aforesaid gin still it has two small stills of a 2- and 5-gallon capacity respectively, which are used as a part of its laboratory equipment in experimenting with the production of cordials. The aforesaid manufacture of gin by redistillation of purchased alcohol is well recognized in the trade as a process of rectification, and it is not necessary under the pertinent laws and regulations for one engaging in such a process to possess a permit to distill. Neither such rectification of alcoholic spirits nor the use of the two smaller stills above mentioned for experimental purposes, make or constitute this respondent a distiller nor its place of business a distillery, within the intent and meaning of Section 3247 of the revised statutes regulating Internal Revenue. (U. S. C. Tit. 26, Sec. 1158.) The Commission finds that this respondent is a rectifier, its place of business a rectifying plant, and that it is engaged in the business of rectifying, within the intent and meaning of Section 3244 of the revised statutes of the United States. (U. S. C. Tit. 26, Sec. 1397f.) Neither does such rectification and experimentation make or constitute this respondent a distiller as commonly understood by the public and by those engaged in any branch of the liquor industry. For a long period of time the word "distilleries" when used in connection with the liquor industry and with the products thereof has had and still has a definite significance and meaning to the minds of wholesalers and retailers in such industry and to the ultimate purchasing public, to wit, places where alcoholic liquors are produced by an original and continuous distillation from mash, wort, or wash, through continuous closed pipes and vessels until the manufacture thereof is complete, and a substantial portion of the purchasing public prefers to buy spirituous liquors bottled and prepared by the actual distillers thereof.

PAR. 4. In the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid, by printed representations that it has had "100 years experience making quality liqueurs" and by the use of the word "Distilleries" in its corporate name, printed on its stationery, catalogues, advertising, and on the labels attached to the bottles in which it sells and ships its said products, and in various other ways, respondent represents to its customers and furnishes them with a means of representing to their vendees, both retailers and the ultimate consuming public, that it is a distiller of cordials, gins, and other alcoholic beverages and has been making quality liqueurs for 100 years, when as a matter of fact respondent is not a distiller and does not own, operate or control any distillery or place where any alcoholic beverages are manufactured by the process of distillation, from mash, wort, or wash. Respondent has not had 100 years experience making quality liqueurs.

The specimens of labels introduced in evidence in this case show that in several instances respondent has caused to be conspicuously printed thereon such phrases as "Made by Arrow Distilleries, Inc."

"Distilled and Bottled by Arrow Distilleries, Inc.," "Prepared by Arrow Distilleries, Inc." and "Made and Bottled by Arrow Distilleries, Inc."

PAR. 5. In support of the allegations contained in paragraph 2 of the complaint, relating to public preference to buy alcoholic beverages bottled and prepared by the actual distillers thereof, witnesses were called who were members of the purchasing public and who were examined with respect to any such preference on their part for the purchase of liqueurs or cordials as well as other alcoholic beverages when bottled by a distiller. The greater number of these witnesses testified that the use of such words would induce them or did induce them to purchase the products of the concern using such words in their corporate name or on the label of the bottle containing the products, in the belief that a distiller's product would be more uniform and up to certain specifications and that a manufacturer's name should mean something. They testified that they preferred buying in as direct a manner as practical, and considered distillers as having more responsibility than a rectifier or bottler of spirituous liquors. It was testified that the use of the word "Distilleries" in the corporate name of the respondent would indicate to them that the respondent was the actual distiller of the product and that they would give preference in purchasing a product which bore a label containing such corporate name in competition with a product bearing a label which did not contain the word "Distilleries" or any word indicating a "Distilling" process in its corporate name or otherwise. This preference on the part of the public was confirmed by the testimony of several retailers, one of whom had found that due to the preference arising from the use of such term as "Distilleries" on the package, he could advance the price 15 percent over that of a similar package which did not contain such a representation.

PAR. 6. There are among the competitors of respondent engaged in the sale of spirituous beverages as mentioned in paragraph 1 hereof corporations, firms, partnerships, and individuals who manufacture and distill from mash, wort, or wash, whiskies, gins, and other alcoholic beverages sold by them and who truthfully use the words "distillery," "distilleries," "distillers," or "distilling" as a part of their corporate or trade names and on their stationery, catalogues, advertising, and on the labels of the bottles in which they sell and ship such products, and who do not misrepresent that they have had 100 years experience making quality liqueurs. There are also among such competitors corporations, firms, partnerships, and individuals engaged in the business of purchasing, rectifying, blending, and bottling cordials, gins and other alcoholic beverages in rectifying plants under recti-fier's permits who do not use the words "distillery," "distilleries," "distilling," or "distillers" as a part of their corporate or trade names, nor on their stationery, catalogs, advertising, nor on the labels attached to the bottles in which they sell and ship their said products, and who do not misrepresent that they have had 100 years experience making quality liqueurs.

PAR. 7. The representations by respondents, as set forth in paragraph 4 hereof, are calculated to and have a capacity and tendency to and do mislead and deceive dealers and the purchasing public into the belief that the cordials, gins, and other alcoholic beverages sold by the respondent are manufactured or distilled by it from mash, wort, or wash by one continuous process, and are calculated to and have the capacity and tendency to and do induce dealers and the purchasing public, acting in such beliefs, to purchase the cordials, gins and other alcoholic beverages rectified and bottled by the respondent, thereby diverting trade to respondent from its competitors who do not by their corporate or trade name or in any other manner misrepresent the extent of their past experience or that they are manufacturers by distillation from mash, wort, or wash of whiskies, gins, or other alcoholic beverages, and thereby respondent does substantial injury to substantial competition in interstate commerce.

PAR. 8. Existing regulations promulgated under the Federal Alcohol Administration Act approved August 29, 1935 (49 Stat. L. 977), which regulations became effective August 15, 1936, provide that rectifiers who redistill tax-paid purchased alcohol over juniper berries and other aromatics may call such resulting product "distilled gin," and require that the labels shall state thereon who distilled it. For this reason the Commission has excepted from the application of its order herein gins so produced by this respondent.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondent Arrow Distilleries, Inc., are to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce, within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

This proceeding having been heard by the Federal Trade Commission upon the complaint of the Commission, the answer of respondent, testimony and other evidence taken before John L. Hornor, an examiner of the Commission theretofore duly designated by it, in support of the allegations of said complaint and in opposition thereto, brief filed herein by PGad B. Morehouse, counsel for the Commission (no brief having been filed in opposition thereto by R. E. Joyce and Saul Dann, attorneys for respondent, and no oral arguments having been requested), and the Commission having made its findings as to the facts and its conclusion that said respondent has violated the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

It is ordered, That the respondent, Arrow Distilleries, Inc., its officers, representatives, agents, and employees, in connection with the sale and distribution of cordials, gins, and all other alcoholic beverages in interstate commerce and in the District of Columbia (except gins produced by it through a process of rectification whereby alcohols purchased, but not produced, by respondent are redistilled over juniper berries and other aromatics), do forthwith cease and desist from:

1. Representing, through the use of the word "Distilleries" in its corporate name, on its stationery, advertising, or on the labels attached to the bottles in which it sells and ships said products, or in any other way by word or words of like import, (a) that it is a distiller of cordials, gins or other spirituous beverages; or (b) that the said cordials, gins or other spirituous beverages were by it manufactured through the process of distillation; or (c) that it owns, operates or controls a place or places where any such products are by it manufactured by a process of original and continuous distillation from mash, wort, or wash, through continuous closed pipes and vessels until the manufacture thereof is completed, unless and until respondent shall actually own, operate, or control such a place or places; and from

2. Representing that it has had 100 years experience making quality liqueurs, or in any other way by words or phrases of like import, representing that it has been making liqueurs for a longer period of time than is actually the fact.

It is further ordered, That the said respondent within 60 days from and after the date of the service upon it of this order, shall file with the Commission a report or reports in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which it is complying, and has complied, with the order to cease and desist hereinabove set forth.

Docket 3057. Complaint, Feb. 12, 1937—Decision, Oct. 26, 1937

Where a corporation engaged in promoting sale of mushroom spawn, purchased by it from producer thereof, and by it sold primarily through mail order, in response to prolific advertising, for price, ordinarily, about ten-fold that paid by professional planters for same quantity of same identical spawn produced by same producer, and, as thus engaged, in competition with those who sell mushroom spawn in interstate and foreign commerce without falsely representing that there is a shortage of fresh mushrooms on the market, no experience is necessary in growing of said product, there is a big profit in such growing at home, or making use of any false and misleading representations below set forth; in soliciting sale of and selling its said spawn, in correspondence, advertisements and trade literature—

- (a) Represented that same would produce extraordinary financial returns to purchasers and users thereof, and that mushroom growing was so simple inexperienced amateurs possessing no previous knowledge or technical skill might earn substantial weekly income raising such product in any idle space about the house, there was shortage on the market, spawn sold by it was a new and superior type which would produce white mushrooms at rate of from two and one-half to three pounds per square foot per planting, and mushrooms grown therefrom were superior to, or commanded higher prices than, white mushrooms grown from other spawn, and it gave book free to its customers, through such statements, among others, as "Shortage of fresh mushrooms on the market. - (b) Represented that it was the largest concern in the world of its kind, and that it had a world-wide service and gave "Expert Advice—Laboratory Analysis—Research," and maintained "a staff of experts to advise you on every phase of the industry" and it had an office in London, England, facts being it maintained no offices in said city, nor any such world-wide service, had no personnel in the United States competent to give expert advice on raising of such products, nor any laboratories, or research facilities of

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent, American Mushroom Industries, Ltd., is a Canadian Corporation, having its principal office and place of business at 28-30 Bloor Street, West, Toronto, Canada. It also maintains a branch office in the United States located at 73 West Eagle Street, Buffalo, N. Y. The respondent company is now, and has been, for more than one year last past, engaged in the business of promoting the sale of mushroom spawn. Approximately 95% of its total sales are made in the United States and the balance in Canada. In the course and conduct of its business in the United States it ships said mushroom spawn when sold from its place of business in New York; to the purchasers thereof, some located in the State of New York, and others located in various other States of the United States and in the District of Columbia. There is now, and has been for more than one year last past, a constant current of trade and commerce by respondent in the aforesaid mushroom spawn, between and among the various States of the United States and between the United States and the Dominion of Canada. In the course and conduct of its business the respondent is now, and has been, in substantial competition with other corporations, firms, partnerships, and persons likewise engaged in the sale of mushroom spawn in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of its business, as described in paragraph 1 hereof, and for more than one year last past, the respondent herein, in soliciting the sale of and selling its mushroom spawn in commerce, as herein set out, states in its correspondence, advertisements, and trade literature, among other things, that:

Shortage of fresh mushrooms on the market. New growers needed immediately. Earn up to $25.00 or more growing fancy White Queen Mushrooms in your cellar, shed, stable or some other vacant space.—Experience is unnecessary.

So simple to do that even a boy or girl can really grow mushrooms the AMI way.

Fast increasing demand insures ready market.

Start this BIG PROFIT business at your own Home Make BIG MONEY full or part time—year around.

There's a real shortage of fresh mushrooms on the market. This is the ideal time to start.

Prices are advancing rapidly all over the country.

Said statements together with other similar statements not herein set out, serve as representations on the part of the respondent to a substantial portion of the purchasing public that there is a shortage of and a tremendously increasing demand for fresh mushrooms and that the respondent's mushroom spawn will produce extraordinary financial returns to purchasers and users thereof; that said spawn may be planted in any idle space about the home; that mushroom growing is an easy and pleasant occupation and may be successfully accomplished by persons of no experience whatsoever.

In truth and in fact, there is no shortage of mushrooms or any unusual demand therefor, and prices are not advancing. On the contrary prices for a number of years have been on a downward trend. The production of mushrooms by amateur growers at home, in small beds, is not highly remunerative financially. Mushrooms cannot be successfully raised in any idle space about the home, but can only be grown in properly constructed places kept at a definite temperature, ventilated in a precise manner, accompanied by the exclusion of light. The raising of mushrooms cannot be satisfactorily accomplished in the home as the preparation of the beds involves the use of a compost made from manure, which produces a highly disagreeable odor. Mushrooms cannot be successfully grown without experience, as production requires a high degree of horticultural skill. It is not a simple or easy occupation, due to the hard work and skill required, the disagreeable odor incident to preparing the compost, erecting the beds, and the constant care and attention required in regulating the temperature, humidity, and ventilation. Mushrooms cannot be grown the year around.

PAR. 3. In the course and conduct of its business, as described in paragraph 1 hereof, and for more than one year last past, the respondent herein, in soliciting the sale of and in selling its mushroom spawn in commerce as herein set out, states in its correspondence, advertisements, or trade literature, among other things, that:

It has a "World Wide Service."

That it gives "Expert Advice—Laboratory Analysis—Research."

We maintain a staff of experts to advise you on every phase of the industry.

Largest concern of its kind in the World.

No competition with fancy variety, White Queens.

Improved type, AMI spawn is entirely different from any other spawn offered for sale.

Said statements serve as representations on the part of respondent to a substantial portion of the purchasing public that respondent maintains a world-wide service, maintains a staff of experts; is in a position to give expert advice, laboratory and research service; that it maintains an office in London, England, and is the largest concern in the world of its kind and that the spawn which it sells is superior to all other types of mushroom spawn and produces mushrooms entirely superior to all other types of white mushrooms at the rate of from two and one-half to three pounds per square foot per planting; that they command higher prices than other mushrooms and that it gives books free to its customers.

In truth and in fact, respondent does not maintain offices in London, England, and does not maintain a world-wide service. It maintains no personnel in the United States competent to give expert advice on the raising of mushrooms and has no laboratory or research facilities of its own. It is not the largest concern in the world in the mushroom business. Mushroom spawn of the same type, sold by respondent, under the name of "White Queen" is sold in large quantities by the producer thereof to many corporations, firms, and individuals other than to the respondent, and the mushrooms raised therefrom do not command a higher price than mushrooms raised from other types of spawn producing white mushrooms and the said spawn will not produce from two and one-half to three pounds of mushrooms per square foot per planting. Respondent does not give books free to its customers, but the cost thereof is included in the purchase price of the spawn sold.

PAR. 4. There are among the competitors of respondent, as set forth in paragraph 1 hereof, other corporations, individuals, or partnerships who do sell mushroom spawn in interstate and foreign commerce and who do not falsely represent that there is a shortage of fresh mushrooms on the market, or that no experience is necessary in the growing of mushrooms, or that there is big profit in growing mushrooms at home, or use any of the false and misleading representations set forth in paragraphs 2 and 3 hereof.

PAR. 5. The acts and practices of respondent in falsely representing and advertising that there is a tremendous demand for mushrooms, that there is a shortage of mushrooms on the market, that it maintains offices in London, England; and has a world-wide service; that its mushroom spawn is superior to all other mushroom spawn and in making the other representations set forth in paragraphs 2 and 3 hereof, have the capacity, tendency, and effect of misleading and deceiving, and have misled and deceived, a substantial portion of the purchasing and consuming public into the erroneous belief that all of said representations are true and into the purchase of respondent's mushroom spawn, in reliance on said representations.

By means of these false and misleading representations, made to the purchasing public as above described, respondent has increased its own sales of said mushroom spawn, so dishonestly promoted, advertised, or represented, thereby lessening the market for similar spawn sold by other growers, merchants, or dealers, who truthfully represent the nature, advantage, or expectant financial return from planting their mushroom spawn or the desirability of becoming mushroom growers, and their true size and character as commercial concerns in the mushroom industry and the expert advice and service which they are capable of giving purchasers of their products.

As a result thereof, trade is unfairly diverted to the respondent from competitors engaged in the sale in interstate commerce of similar mushroom spawn, who truthfully represent the nature of the mushroom business or the desirability of becoming mushroom growers, or the demand for mushrooms, and the financial returns obtainable thereby, or the desirability of using the mushroom spawn sold by them or their true size in the industry and the financial returns to be obtained from growing mushrooms. Further, as a result thereof, substantial injury has been and is being done by respondent to the purchasing public and to competition in commerce among and between the various States of the United States and the District of Columbia.

PAR. 6. The above and foregoing acts, practices, and representations of the respondent have been and are all to the prejudice of the public and respondent's competitors, as aforesaid, and have been, and are, unfair methods of competition within the meaning and intent of Section 5 of an Act of Congress entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, on February 12, 1937, issued and served its complaint in this proceeding upon respondent, American Mushroom Industries, Ltd., charging it with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of the provisions of said act. After the issuance of said complaint and the filing of respondent's answer thereto, testimony and other evidence in support of the allegations of said complaint were introduced by James M. Hammond, attorney for the Commission, before John W. Addison and Irving D. Royal, trial examiners of the Commission theretofore duly designated by it, and said testimony and other evidence were duly recorded and filed in the office of the Commission. Thereafter, the proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on the said complaint, the answer thereto, testimony and other evidence, and Commission's brief in support of the complaint, and the Commission having duly considered the same and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public, and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent, American Mushroom Industries, Ltd., is a Canadian corporation, having its principal office and place of business at 28-30 Bloor Street, West, Toronto, Canada. It also maintains a branch office in the United States located at 73 West Eagle Street, Buffalo, N. Y. The respondent company was, prior to the filing of the complaint herein, and for a long time prior thereto, engaged in the business of promoting the sale of mushroom spawn. This spawn was purchased by it from a Pennsylvania producer, who packed the same in one-pound containers furnished by the respondent. It is what is known in the trade as "dry" spawn, as distinguished from the "wet" spawn, the article generally used by professional growers. Respondent's sales were primarily of the "mail order" type, and deliveries were made in that manner on receipt of orders in response to its prolific advertising. All advertising and the labels on respondent's containers featured the words "White Queen." Respondent claimed great superiority for this spawn over other types of white mushroom spawn, as hereinafter shown, although the expert testimony taken shows that all white mushrooms are grown from the same identical type of spawn. Approximately 90% of respondent's total sales are made in the United States, and the balance in Canada. In the course of its business in the United States, it ships said mushroom spawn, when sold, from its place of business in Buffalo, N. Y. to the purchasers thereof, some located in the State of New York, and others located in various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia. There was, prior to the filing of the complaint in this case, a constant current of trade and commerce by the respondent in the aforesaid mushroom spawn, between and among the various States of the United States and between the United States and the Dominion of Canada. In the conduct of its business, the respondent was, prior to the filing of the complaint herein, in February 1937, in substantial competition with other corporations, firms, partnerships, and persons likewise engaged in the sale of mushroom spawn in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 2. In the conduct of its business, as described hereinabove, the respondent herein, in soliciting the sale of and selling its mushroom spawn in commerce, states in its correspondence, advertisements and trade literature, among other things, that:

Shortage of fresh mushrooms on the market. New growers needed immediately. Earn up to $25.00 or more growing fancy White Queen Mushrooms in your cellar, shed, stable or some other vacant space.—Experience is unnecessary.

So simple to do that even a boy or girl can really grow mushrooms the AMI way.

Fast increasing demand insures ready market.

Start this BIG PROFIT business at your own Home Make BIG MONEY full or part time—year around.

There's a real shortage of fresh mushrooms on the market. This is the ideal time to start.

Prices are advancing rapidly all over the country.

These statements together with other similar statements not herein set out, serve as representations on the part of the respondent to a substantial portion of the purchasing public that there is a shortage and a tremendously increasing demand for fresh mushrooms, and that the respondent's mushroom spawn will produce extraordinary financial returns to purchasers and users thereof; that said spawn may be planted in any idle space about the home; that mushroom growing is an easy and pleasant occupation and may be successfully accomplished by persons of no experience whatsoever.

In truth and in fact, there is no shortage of mushrooms or any unusual demand therefor, and prices are not advancing. On the contrary, prices for a number of years have been on a downward trend, and many professional mushroom growers have been forced into bankruptcy because of that fact. The production of mushrooms by amateur growers at home, in small beds, is not highly remunerative financially, particularly in view of the fact that the respondent usually charges approximately $5.00 per one-pound unit for his spawn, as compared with the price of 50c paid by professional planters for the same quantity of the same identical spawn produced by the same producer. Mushrooms cannot be successfully raised in any idle space about the home, but can only be grown in properly constructed places kept at a definite temperature between fifty-five and sixty-five degrees Fahrenheit, and ventilated in a precise manner. The raising of mushrooms cannot be satisfactorily accomplished in the home, as the preparation of the beds involves the use of a compost made from manure which, for several weeks after the preparation commences, produces a highly disagreeable odor. In metropolitan areas, this fact alone would, in many cases, prevent preparation of the beds. Mushrooms cannot be successfully grown without experience, as production requires a high degree of horticultural skill. It is not a simple or easy occupation, due to the hard work and skill required, the disagreeable odor incident to preparing the compost, erecting the beds, and the constant care and attention required in regulating the temperature, humidity, and ventilation. Mushrooms cannot be grown the year around without artificial refrigeration or cooling devices necessary to keep the temperature below 65 degrees Fahrenheit. In most sections, the growing operations require heating in winter, and if grown in summer, cooling apparatus is necessary.

PAR. 3. In the course and conduct of its business, as described hereinabove, the respondent, in soliciting the sale of and in selling its mushroom spawn in commerce as herein set out, states in its correspondence, advertisements, or trade literature, among other things, that:

It has a "World Wide Service."

That it gives "Expert Advice—Laboratory Analysis—Research."

Said statements serve as representations on the part of respondent to a substantial portion of the purchasing public that respondent maintains a world-wide service and maintains a staff of experts; that it is in a position to give expert advice and laboratory and research service; that it maintains an office in London, England, and is the largest concern in the world of its kind; that the spawn which it sells is superior to all other types of mushroom spawn and produces mushrooms entirely superior to all other types of white mushrooms at the rate of from two and one-half to three pounds per square foot per planting; that mushrooms grown from its spawn command higher prices than other mushrooms and that it gives books free to its customers.

The testimony and pleadings in this case show that the respondent does not maintain offices in London, England, and does not maintain a world-wide service. It maintains no personnel in the United States competent to give expert advice on the raising of mushrooms and has no laboratory or research facilities of its own. It is not the largest concern in the world engaged in selling mushroom spawn. Mushroom spawn of the same type as that sold by respondent under the name of "White Queen" is sold in large quantities by the producer thereof to many corporations, firms and individuals other than to the respondent. The mushrooms raised from respondent's spawn do not command a higher price than mushrooms raised from other types of spawn producing white mushrooms and the said spawn will not produce from two and one-half to three pounds of mushrooms per square foot per planting. In fact, expert professional growers only average from one to one and one-fourth pounds per square foot, and the crop which an amateur would obtain, if one were obtained at all, would probably be less. Respondent does not give books free to its customers, but the cost thereof is included in the purchase price of the spawn sold.

PAR. 4. There are among the competitors of respondent, as set forth in paragraph 1 hereof, other firms and individuals who sell mushroom spawn in interstate and foreign commerce and who do not falsely represent that there is a shortage of fresh mushrooms on the market, or that no experience is necessary in the growing of mushrooms, or that there is big profit in growing mushrooms at home, and who do not use any of the false and misleading representations set forth in paragraphs 2 and 3 hereof.

PAR. 5. The acts and practices of respondent in falsely representing and advertising that there is a tremendous demand for mushrooms; that there is a shortage of mushrooms on the market; that it maintains offices in London, England, and has a world-wide service; that its mushroom spawn is superior to all other mushroom spawn and in making the other representations set forth in paragraphs 2 and 3 hereof, have the capacity, tendency and effect of misleading and deceiving, and have misled and deceived, a substantial portion of the purchasing and consuming public into the erroneous belief that all of said representations are true and into the purchase of respondent's mushroom spawn, in reliance on said representations.

By means of these false and misleading representations, made to the purchasing public as above described, respondent has increased its own sales of said mushroom spawn, so dishonestly promoted, advertised, or represented, thereby lessening the market for similar spawn sold by other growers, merchants, or dealers, who truthfully represent the nature, advantage, or expectant financial return from planting their mushroom spawn or the desirability of becoming mushroom growers, and their true size and character as commercial concerns in the mushroom industry and the expert advice and service which they are capable of giving purchasers of their products.

As a result thereof, trade has been unfairly diverted to the respondent from competitors referred to herein who do not make use of the same or similar misrepresentations in the conduct of their respective businesses. As a further result, substantial injury has been done by respondent to competition in commerce among and between the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondent, American Mushroom Industries, Ltd., are to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce, within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

It is ordered, That the respondent, American Mushroom Industries, Ltd., its officers, representatives, agents, and employees, in connection with the offering for sale, sale, and distribution of mushroom spawn in interstate commerce or in the District of Columbia, do forthwith cease and desist from:

1. Representing, or holding out, as usual or customary earnings or profits to be derived by mushroom growers, any sum or amount in excess of the average, usual, and customary sums or amounts actually earned by users of respondent's spawn or other spawn, under normal conditions in due course of business;
2. Representing that mushroom growing is so simple inexperienced amateurs possessing no previous knowledge or technical skill may earn substantial weekly incomes raising mushrooms in any idle space about the home, such as an attic, garage or basement;
3. Representing that there is a shortage of mushrooms on the market, or distorting or exaggerating in any manner the true facts concerning mushroom growing;

4. Representing that the mushroom spawn sold by it is a new and superior type or variety which will produce white mushrooms in a greater quantity per square foot than is actually the case, or that mushrooms grown from its spawn are superior to or command higher prices than white mushrooms grown from other spawn;

5. Representing itself to be a larger concern than it actually is or that it is one of the pioneers in the mushroom or mushroom spawn industry;

6. Representing that it is one of the largest concerns of its kind in the world;

7. Representing that it maintains a world-wide service or maintains a staff of scientific and laboratory personnel;

8. Representing that it has an office in London, England, or any other place when such is not the case.

It is further ordered, That the respondent shall, within 30 days after the service upon it of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing, setting forth in detail the manner and form in which it has complied with this order.

IN THE MATTER OF
NATIONAL LABORATORYCOMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION
OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 20, 1914

Docket 2900. Complaint, Aug. 14, 1936—Decision, Oct. 30, 1937

Where a corporation engaged in sale and distribution of its alleged "Nuga-Tone" tablet remedy for treatment of those suffering from diseases and ailments of the stomach, intestines, and other organs, and in transporting and causing its said product to be transported in commerce among the several States, direct from its place of business to consumers in other States, to and through wholesale druggists for resale, and otherwise, in competition with those engaged in offer and sale in like commerce of compounds or preparations for use in treatment of same or similar ailments and diseases; in advertising its said "Nuga-Tone" by radio and in periodicals and newspapers and by mail—

- (a) Represented that it was a combination of bitter stomachic tonics, or a valuable and effective alterative tonic, which might be taken over long periods by anyone without harmful results, and constituted an effective remedy or cure for indigestion and stomach or intestinal ailments, and would aid digestion, relieve pains or discomfort following eating, increase the appetite, and permit one to eat anything;
- (b) Represented that said "Nuga-Tone" removed the causes of aches and pains in the muscles, nerves, and bones, and gave new power and energy to the muscular and nervous system, and constituted an effective remedy or treatment for poor heart action and for loss of power and energy, which would protect the body against the most serious diseases and stimulate and invigorate the entire system, and act directly on the vital organs, and make sick people strong and healthy and cause paleness to disappear, and produce normal sleep; and
- (c) Represented, through use of word "Laboratory" in its corporate name, that it owned, operated, or controlled a laboratory, and made use of such statements on labels, cartons, etc., as "Distributed by" or "From" National Laboratory, etc.;

Facts being preparation in question contained arsenic, corrosive sublimate and strychnin, and constituted dangerous composition, by reason of presence of said fatal poisons, which should only be taken under prescription of physician and which no good doctor would thus combine for any purpose, no warning against use for children was included in connection with sale thereof nor that product should be taken under doctor's prescription, number of tablets which, as asserted thereon, could be taken at one time safely, would result, based on aggregate content of aforesaid poisons thus involved, under accepted medical authority, in dosage for child far beyond accepted standard, and in fatal dosage under maximum suggested for adult, preparation had no such value and brought about no such effects as above set forth, but constituted "shot-gun" prescription, of type carefully avoided by modern medical profession, and product which could not be taken indefinitely without harmful results, and dangerous mixture with its three aforesaid fatal poisons, presence of none of which was disclosed to purchaser, and it did not maintain, conduct, or operate a laboratory in connection with said preparation or have laboratory at its three-room place of business, or at any place:

With tendency and capacity to cause members of purchasing public to believe that said "Nuga-Tone" was harmless and might be taken with impunity and constituted valuable combination of bitter stomachic tonics and preparation which was remedy or cure for, or would afford relief for, stomach and intestinal troubles and other human diseases and ailments, and relieve persons suffering therefrom as above indicated, and completely restore them to health, and with result that many members of public, acting under such erroneous beliefs induced by such various misrepresentations, purchased its said "Nuga-Tone," and with effect of unfairly diverting trade to it from competitors engaged in sale in interstate commerce of drugs, preparations and remedies which are truthfully advertised and represented and recommended for use in connection with treatment of the various diseases and ailments involved herein; to the substantial injury of competition in commerce:

Held, That such acts and practices were to the prejudice of the public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition.

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that National Laboratory, a corporation, hereinafter referred to as respondent, has been and now is using unfair methods of competition in commerce as "commerce" is defined in said act, and it appearing to the Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent National Laboratory is a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Illinois, with its office and principal place of business located at 767 Milwaukee Avenue, Chicago, State of Illinois.

Respondent is now and for more than one year last past has been engaged in the manufacture and in the sale to wholesale druggists located in the various States of the United States other than in the State of Illinois, and in the District of Columbia, of a remedy known as "Nuga-Tone," designed by respondent for treatment of human beings suffering from diseases of the stomach, intestinal, and other organs. There is now and has been for more than one year last past a constant current of trade and commerce by said respondent in the aforesaid product, Nuga-Tone, between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia. In connection with the sale and distribution of its said product, "Nuga-Tone," respondent causes the same to be transported in interstate commerce from its place of business at Chicago, Ill., into and through States of the United States other than the State of Illinois to the vendees thereof at their respective points of location. In the course and conduct of its said business, respondent is and has been in substantial competition with other corporations and with partnerships and individuals engaged in the sale and distribution in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia, of remedies designed for the treatment of the stomach, digestive, and other organs of the human body.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of its said business as described in paragraph 1 hereof, respondent has been and is now soliciting the sale of and selling its aforesaid remedy "Nuga-Tone" through the medium of radio, magazines, and newspaper advertising, and by mail. Sales are made direct to wholesale druggists. These in turn sell to the retail trade and in this way respondent's product, moving through the channels of commerce, reaches the consuming public. Said consuming public is informed of respondent's product "Nuga-Tone" principally through the medium of weekly broadcasts over a large Chicago station.

PAR. 3. In offering for sale and selling in interstate commerce its product "Nuga-Tone," respondent, among others, has made the following statements and representations:

Use of term LABORATORY as part of the trade name.

A valuable Alterative Tonic.

Stimulating Tonic. A combination of Bitter Stomachic tonics, Alterative tonics, Intestinal tonics, and Stimulating Tonics, arranged in accord with Modern Medical Science.

NUGA-TONE contains the elements that are used by all good doctors for correcting these troubles.

It is a doctor's own prescription.

Makes you strong and healthy.

PAR. 4. In truth and in fact the foregoing representations of respondent are false, deceptive, and misleading in the following, among other, particulars:

The therapeutic claims expressed in such advertising are false almost in their entirety.

This product is not an efficient remedy or treatment for lost manhood, indigestion and stomach troubles; nor will it make one strong and healthy;

This product is not of value as an alterative tonic; nor will it remove the cause of aches and pains in the muscles, nerves and bones;

This product does not give new power and energy to the muscular and nervous system; nor will it protect the body against more serious disease;

This product will not cause the worries of old age to disappear and life to become a pleasure again;

This product is a potentially harmful character and particularly dangerous in the hands of lay users, which fact is not disclosed to the general purchasing public.

PAR. 5. Among the competitors of respondent referred to in paragraph 1 herein, there are those who sell and distribute in competition with respondent remedies designed for the treatment of stomach, intestinal, and other human ailments, and who advertise and represent their said products fairly and accurately.

The above mentioned false and misleading representations in connection with the sale of respondent's said product have induced and do induce the consuming public to purchase said product under the erroneous belief that it is a remedy or cure for stomach and intestinal troubles and other diseases and ailments of the human body, and that the use of respondent's said product would relieve or completely restore health to persons suffering from the aforesaid ailments or diseases. The marketing of respondent's said product is directly contrary to the interest of the public welfare, the consuming public has been and is being deceived and misled, trade is being and has been diverted to respondent from such competitors in interstate commerce, and thereby substantial injury is done and has been done by the respondent to competition in interstate commerce.

PAR. 6. The acts and things above alleged to have been done and the false representations alleged to have been made by respondent are to the prejudice of the public and the competitors of respondent and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914.

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

an examiner of the Commission theretofore duly designated by it, and in opposition to the allegations of the complaint by Newby & Burditt, attorneys for the respondent, and said testimony and other evidence were duly recorded and filed in the office of the Commission. Thereafter, the proceeding came on for final hearing before the Commission on the said complaint, the answer thereto, testimony and other evidence and briefs in support of the complaint and in opposition thereto; and the Commission having duly considered the same and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public, and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. The respondent is a corporation, organized, existing, and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Illinois, with its principal office and place of business located at 767 Milwaukee Avenue, in the city of Chicago. Respondent is now and for several years last past has been engaged in the business of selling and distributing an alleged remedy known as "Nuga-Tone," in tablet form, designed by respondent for treatment of human beings suffering from diseases and ailments of the stomach, intestines, and other organs.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of its said business as described in paragraph 1 hereof, respondent, National Laboratory, in response to orders received, has offered its said product for sale and has sold and transported and caused the same to be transported in commerce among the several States of the United States direct from its aforesaid place of business in Chicago to consumers located at points in States of the United States other than the State of Illinois.

In the course and conduct of such selling, respondent has been, and now is engaged in competition with corporations, firms, partnerships, and individuals, offering for sale and selling in like commerce, compounds or preparations for use in the treatment of the same or similar ailments and diseases.

PAR. 3. Respondent, in connection with the sale and distribution of the aforementioned product "Nuga-Tone," has advertised the same by radio, and in magazines and newspapers and by mail. Respondent sells direct to wholesale druggists who in turn sell to the retail trade, thus reaching the ultimate consumer and general public. Sales are not limited to druggists or pharmacists, however, nor to licensed physicians, surgeons, dentists, or veterinarians. Respondent uses pasteboard cartons which can be employed in addressing and mailing individual bottles of Nuga-Tone tablets. Respondent company has used the United States mail in distributing its product in interstate commerce, sending larger quantities by express or freight, or by parcel post.

Through the use of radio, magazines, newspapers, and mail, as aforesaid, respondent has advertised and represented its product Nuga-Tone as a valuable alterative tonic; a stimulating tonic; a combination of bitter stomachic tonics; as a bitter stomachic tonic increasing the activity of the mucous membrane of the gastro-intestinal tract; as an intestinal tonic; as aiding in establishing a more healthy functioning in the process of nutrition; as stimulating the appetite and the tone of the general system; as making the weak and sickly strong and healthy; as having given better health and greater strength to millions of men and women in all parts of the world; as relieving stomach distress, removing the causes of aches and pains in the muscles, nerves, and bones and giving new power and energy to the nervous system; bringing back the pleasures of good health to those who have been distressed with life, who are weak, get tired easily, whose stomach does not function properly, whose nerves are all unstrung and their "previous eagerness has disappeared"; as invigorating or acting upon the entire system, aiding run-down vital organs, helping them to function as they were intended, giving back "the power and energy of younger days"; causing the worries of old age to disappear and life to become a pleasure again; as a remedy for sleeplessness and irritability, toning the nervous system; as something one can keep on taking without harmful results; as a remedy for those who are pale or without vigor and whose "blood is probably like water"; as stimulating to natural activity the organs of those whose strength does not respond to their will, who are weak and infirm, life having no value to them; as a remedy guaranteed to "bring back your old-time strength and health"; as a remedy for those troubled with indigestion, stomach or intestinal sluggishness, poor heart action, exhausted nerves and "lack of confidence in yourself"; as a remarkable remedy, ridding the system of poisons causing dizzy spells, stomach pains due to indigestion, and headaches; as being a genuine red blood builder; as eliminating bloating after eating, foul breath or sour stomach; and as enabling the patient to eat anything he wants.

PAR. 4. Each tablet of Nuga-Tone contains three deadly poisons, namely, arsenic trioxide, mercuric chloride, otherwise known as corrosive sublimate, and strychnin sulphate.

Respondent's Nuga-Tone, the record discloses, is composed of the following ingredients:

Corrosive sublimate.....	Gr. $\frac{1}{60}$
Strychnin sulphate.....	" $\frac{1}{60}$
Arsenic Trioxide.....	" $\frac{1}{40}$
Reduced Iron.....	" $\frac{1}{2}$
Extract Gentian.....	" $\frac{1}{2}$
Extract Cascara Sagrada.....	" $\frac{3}{4}$
Extract Taraxacum.....	" $\frac{1}{4}$
Zinc Phosphide.....	" $\frac{1}{60}$

This formula has been used by respondent since about 1916.

Arsenic Trioxide is a white odorless, tasteless powder used in the manufacture of pigments, glass, shot and bullets, insecticides, rat poison, cattle dip, weed killer; as a hide preservative; and in medicine being a violent irritant. The average dose of arsenic for medicinal use is given in Volume II of the Pharmacopoeia of the United States at $\frac{1}{30}$ grain.

Mercuric Chloride, otherwise known as corrosive sublimate, is a white crystalline powder, very poisonous, variously used in the manufacture of calomel and other mercury compounds, and in medicine as a remedy for syphilis, rheumatism, and as an antiseptic. It is also used in the manufacture of various articles of commerce.

The average dose as given by the United States Pharmacopoeia is $\frac{1}{15}$ grain.

Strychnin sulphate is a hard white crystalline alkaloid, very bitter in taste and very poisonous. It is used in medicine as a stimulant to the nervous system. The average dose of strychnin according to the United States Pharmacopoeia is $\frac{1}{30}$ grain.

The United States Pharmacopoeia in treating of arsenic, mercuric chloride, and strychnin carries the following identical warning as to each:

Caution * * * Extremely Poisonous

On one side of the bottle in which the product Nuga-Tone is sold and delivered in interstate commerce to the consuming public Nuga-Tone is described as a "Stomachic Alterative and General Tonic" * * * containing eight active drugs, six of which are indorsed by the United States Pharmacopoeia and each tablet contains a full adult dose. On another of the four sides of the bottle under the heading, "Directions for Taking," it is stated:

To obtain highest beneficial results, Nuga-Tone should be taken regularly for at least 30 days or longer. Take one Tablet three times daily before or after eating.

Neither the label nor the carton discloses the ingredients of Nuga-Tone. There is no indication on the label or elsewhere, that Nuga-Tone contains three deadly poisons! The preparation some years ago was sold with this wording on the bottle:

Do not give to Children under 16 Years of Age.

The directions at this time do not contain this warning nor do they suggest that Nuga-Tone should be taken under the advice of a physician. Respondent in connection with the sale of Nuga-Tone has never made any representations or given any warning to the effect that the product should be taken under the direction of a physician. On the contrary, respondent has represented that one can keep on taking Nuga-Tone without harmful results. Each tablet contains $\frac{1}{60}$ of a grain of strychnin, $\frac{1}{60}$ of a grain of mercuric chloride, and $\frac{1}{40}$ of a grain of arsenic and the person engaging in such self-medication has no way of knowing that he is taking these three poisons into his system.

PAR. 5. Bitters are only effective as such in liquid form and respondent's product is a tablet. Leading medical and pharmacological authorities treat "bitters" under the title or heading "Stomachics".

Bitter, aromatic, and sharp drugs have been used since antiquity as "tonics" and in functional dyspepsias. They were supposed to increase the appetite and improve digestion, and thus favor nutrition. These are divided into two principal classes, "simple" and "aromatic." "Bitters" are always administered shortly before meals, it being conceivable that they act as a sort of "chemical dinner bell."

Bitters are substances that are employed to give a bitter taste, the object of their administration being to improve the appetite. When the appetite is below normal, a strong stimulation of the taste buds will often restore it; and substances with a bitter taste that is not otherwise disagreeable, tend to act as stimulants to the taste buds. The bitter effect on the appetite is solely the local one on the taste buds. The effects of bitters depend on the taste. The value of a bitter, therefore, is not obtained if the bitter is hidden, as in capsules or coated pills, although this is often done.

It is useless to administer bitters in the form of pills and tablets. If a bitter is put into a pill or capsule, a patient does not taste it and it does not produce the effect that a bitter is supposed to produce. Bitters have no medicinal effect "except to the taste." Through the taste bitters stimulate; through the mouth may stimulate gastric secretion if one likes the bitters. The "taste buds" are found in the mouth and throat of human beings, the tongue, palate, tonsils, and fauces comprising important units. To affect the brush-like ends of the nerves of taste, which ramify in the taste buds, substances must be soluble. Bitters given after the meal are useless as such.

Pharmacologists do not carry corrosive sublimate or arsenic in lists of simple, astringent or aromatic bitters, and strychnin is not so listed except when "well diluted."

PAR. 6. The various representations of the respondent in respect to the diseases, ailments and conditions for which respondent claims Nuga-Tone to be a remedy or as affording relief or accomplishing certain stated results as hereinbefore related, were carefully considered in connection with the ingredients contained in Nuga-Tone and in the light of a knowledge of medicine and the accepted methods of the treatment of such diseases, ailments and conditions. As a result of the testimony of competent medical authorities, findings are as follows:

Nuga-Tone is a dangerous composition because of the corrosive sublimate, the strychnin and the arsenic. Arsenic, corrosive sublimate, and strychnin are fatal poisons which should only be taken under the prescription of a physician and no good doctor would make this combination for any purpose.

Nuga-Tone contains one element, strychnin, that might have a stimulating action, but a dangerous stimulating action, for a specific depression. Strychnin increases the excitability and activity of the spinal cord and brain. Strychnin is ordinarily given to patients under the care and observation of physicians. Strychnin increases the excitability of the spinal cord to the point of convulsions and death if taken in excess. Strychnin is a foreign substance and any amount of strychnin is an excessive dose unless there is a prior diagnosis by a physician that this poison will help. It should only be taken at the doctor's prescription when the situation specifically calls for it. Strychnin sulphate does not stimulate the gastric reflexes nor the appetite. It can be classed as a stimulant in that it raises the excitability of the spinal cord which is not desirable in the normal individual. Strychnin sulphate does not aid digestion; it does not have any effect on the appetite. All that strychnin does is to increase the reflex excitability and a person who has excessive reflex excitability will be harmed by it. Its use as a tonic must be interpreted in such a way as to understand that it will only act as a tonic if it happens to fit the case. No Doctor would give or would be foolish enough to prescribe strychnin as a stimulant to increase the flow of the gastric and biliary juices.

Arsenic, supposed under certain conditions in small amounts to stimulate the rate of production of red cells, is a dangerous drug and can produce chronic poisoning. The arsenic in the composition would possess for the ordinary person the danger of chronic poisoning, which if it went too far would tend to impairment. Arsenic is a remedy that is used in syphilis and related conditions. Arsenic trioxide is not used extensively now for anything. It was formerly used by some in the hope that it would stimulate the red bone marrow, increase the production of red cells, improve the hair growth and the form of the skin. These were hopes and guesses of former days. There is no known effect that arsenic would have on either growth or nutrition except in an injurious way. Arsenic is not used by any competent doctor in the treatment of blood cells or like conditions.

Corrosive sublimate is not a stimulant and Nuga-Tone as a whole is a dangerous composition because of the corrosive sublimate, the strychnin and arsenic, three fatal poisons. Nuga-Tone is liable to produce serious diseases because it contains these poisons, especially arsenic and corrosive sublimate, if used without discrimination and for a certain length of time. It is not customary for doctors in writing prescriptions to use three poisonous substances in one. To use a mixture like this is termed the worst kind of malpractice. Taken as a whole Nuga-Tone must be regarded as a dangerous combination, and it would not rightly be described as a stimulating tonic.

The cascara in Nuga-Tone might have a slight action on the bowels. Zinc is essentially an antiseptic. Zinc phosphide tends to increase the degree of dilation of blood vessels. It does not stimulate metabolism nor increase red blood cells, nor may it be used as a sedative for nerves. The iron might help an anemic condition. The only ingredient in the preparation that might affect the appetite is the gentian and it is doubtful whether it increases or has any real effect on the appetite. Extract of gentian does increase the flow of saliva but does not increase the flow of gastric juice.

The term "alterative" is not used in modern medicine at all, that is, as practiced by modern doctors in the last decade or twenty-five years. It is an old term. An alterative was supposed to modify the activity of the alimentary canal, particularly the liver. A good many of the substances which were supposed to change the action of the liver, the action of the alimentary canal, were called alteratives in the old days.

Nuga-Tone is not a valuable alterative tonic; is not a combination of bitter stomachic tonics, alterative tonics, intestinal tonics and stimulative tonics, arranged in accord with medical science; it does not aid in reestablishing a more healthy functioning in the process of nutrition; it is not effective in increasing the activity of the mucous membrane of the gastro-intestinal tract by increasing its tone or stimulating the appetite; it does not stimulate and increase the tone of the general system; weak and sickly people should not take it to make them strong and healthy; it is not a wonderful remedy and does not remove the cause of aches and pains in the muscles, nerves and bones; it does not give new power and energy to the muscular and nervous systems; it is not a wonderful help to protect the body against more serious diseases. Nuga-Tone possesses no properties which would alleviate nervous conditions. Persons past middle age do not need a tonic of this description. Nuga-Tone does not act as an aid to run-down vital organs, helping them to function as they were intended, nor give persons past middle age the power and energy of younger days. It does not aid in producing sleep; it is not a great body builder nor health builder; it will not make food digest more readily; will not cause pain and distress in the stomach to disappear; will not aid poor heart action, will not tend to relieve general debility; is not a remarkable remedy for ridding the system of poisons; is not a genuine red blood builder; will not cause gas and bloating in the stomach to disappear; does not contain the elements that are used by all good doctors for correcting the various troubles outlined hereinbefore and will not make one strong and healthy.

"Self-medication" cannot be approved at any time because it is harmful to the patient. * * * A patient harms himself by taking a medicine that may not relieve the cause of his condition, but actually aggravates it.

PAR. 7. Respondent's product, by reason of the varied nature of its ingredients and the numerous therapeutic claims made for it, qualifies under the heading of a "shot-gun" prescription. A "shot-gun prescription" is defined as one containing many ingredients or features of which one is expected to prove efficacious. It contains ingredients having various kinds of effects. If one might fit the case another might not. Prescribing so many ingredients in one prescription is stated by medical authority to be one of the worst medical practices. Our forefathers in medicine are stated to have done that as long as they did not understand the way in which medicine acted but nowadays the medical profession very carefully avoids employing so many ingredients in one prescription.

PAR. 8. Respondent's representations as to the harmless character of "Nuga-Tone" are deceptive, false, and misleading. In its advertising matter respondent has represented that "you can keep on taking it without harmful result" and respondent in support of this representation, variously contends through the medium of a medical expert that Nuga-Tone may be taken safely two, three, or four times a day for two or three years with no harm at all resulting to a person; that it would do no harm to children in medicinal doses; would not thus hurt a child above three years of age; that a child four or five years of age could take a full pill without harm; two or three doses would not hurt such child. Medical authority prescribes the dose of corrosive sublimate for a child up to three years old as $1/100$ of a grain and $1/75$ of a grain for a child 5 years of age. A tablet of Nuga-Tone contains $1/60$ of a grain. The dosage of strychnin for a child three to five years of age is $1/100$ of a grain. A tablet of Nuga-Tone contains $1/60$ of a grain of strychnin. The dose of arsenic for a child three years of age is $1/150$ of a grain and $1/100$ of a grain for a child five years of age. Each table of Nuga-Tone contains $1/40$ grain of arsenic, nearly four times the dose prescribed for children three years of age and more than double the dose suitable for children five years of age.

Findings

25 F. T. C.

The label on a bottle of Nuga-Tone contains no caution against the administering of the drug to children.

Respondent in further support of its representation that one may keep taking its Nuga-Tone without harmful results also asserts through the medium of a medical expert that ten pills may be given to an adult at one dose "with perfect safety." In taking ten tablets at one time the adult would have in his system at the same time $1/6$ grain of corrosive sublimate, $1/6$ grain of strychnin and $1/4$ grain of arsenic, in all $7/12$ grains of three deadly poisons. Accepted medical authority is to the effect that $1/12$ grain of strychnin is a fatal dose.

PAR. 9. The respondent does not operate, conduct or maintain a laboratory. The bottle or container in which Nuga-Tone is distributed in interstate commerce contains as a part of the label thereon the following language:

Distributed by National Laboratory
Chicago, Ill. U. S. A.

The carton in which the bottle is kept contains the same wording and the so-called shipping carton contains language reading:

From National Laboratory
767 Milwaukee Ave.,
Chicago, Ill. U. S. A.

Findings

The directions enclosed with each bottle of Nuga-Tone, printed in several languages, carry the following in English:

Distributed by National Laboratory,
Chicago, Ill. U. S. A.

National Laboratory has been in business twenty-one years, selling the product Nuga-Tone during all that period from Chicago. The respondent's place of business is in the Security Bank Building, Milwaukee and Ogden Avenue, Chicago, occupying three rooms in such building. Respondent has no laboratory at such address; does not have a laboratory at any place. A laboratory was maintained by the late Dr. C. E. Cessna for a period of seven years prior to his death. Cessna was a doctor and compounded some prescriptions there. Some of the equipment still remains but it has not since been used.

At the time the complaint herein was issued, Nuga-Tone was being manufactured for respondent by Parke, Davis & Company, of Detroit, Mich., shipped to respondent in bulk, packaged by respondent at its place of business in Chicago, and transported from there to respondent's various customers throughout the country. The product is at present being manufactured for respondent by the Shores Company of Cedar Rapids, Iowa, and by them sent to respondent in Chicago, where it is packaged and distributed.

The formula for Nuga-Tone was originated many years ago by the late Dr. Charles E. Cessna, father of the real and present owners of the formula. Dr. Cessna died in 1929, and since that time the business has been carried on by his sons. Since Dr. Cessna's death, there has been no doctor connected with respondent company, and respondent has not had anything that might be called a laboratory for many years.

PAR. 10. The various statements and representations made by respondent, through the medium of radio, magazines, newspapers, and by mail, as set forth and enumerated in paragraph 3 herein, in selling and offering for sale its product "Nuga-Tone" in the respective states of the United States, were and are, as shown in paragraphs 5 and 6 herein, false, deceptive and misleading. Nuga-Tone is not a valuable alterative tonic, nor a combination of bitter stomachic tonics, alterative tonics and stimulating tonics arranged in accord with medical science. Nuga-Tone does not provide a remedy for or prove effective in treating or relieving the diseases, ailments and conditions set forth in paragraph 3 hereof. Nuga-Tone is not a product one can keep on taking without harmful results. On the contrary, Nuga-Tone is a dangerous mixture containing three fatal poisons, the presence of none of which is disclosed by respondent to the purchaser of said product. Respondent does not maintain, conduct or operate a laboratory in connection with the preparation of Nuga-Tone for sale.

PAR. 11. There are among the competitors of respondent as referred to hereinbefore, corporations, partnerships, firms, and persons who are engaged in the sale of preparations which are recommended for use in the treatment of such diseases, ailments, or conditions as those mentioned by respondent in its advertising but who truthfully represent their products and the therapeutic value which may be attributed to them, and honestly vend the same.

PAR. 12. The use of the aforesaid false and misleading representations and practices on the part of respondent in the sale and offering for sale of its product known and designated as "Nuga-Tone" has had, and now has, the tendency and capacity to cause members of the purchasing public to form the erroneous beliefs that respondent's said product Nuga-Tone is harmless, and may be taken with impunity, is a valuable combination of Bitter Stomachic Tonics, and is a remedy or cure for or will afford relief for stomach and intestinal troubles and other diseases and ailments of the human body, and that the use of respondent's said product will relieve persons suffering from the aforesaid diseases, ailments and conditions and completely restore them to health. Acting under such erroneous beliefs, induced by the various misrepresentations of the respondent as herein detailed, many of said members of the public have purchased respondent's product "Nuga-Tone." As a result the aforesaid representations and practices on the part of respondent have and have had the capacity and tendency to unfairly divert trade to respondent from competitors engaged in selling in interstate commerce, drugs, preparations and remedies which are truthfully advertised and represented and which are recommended for use in connection with the treatment of the various diseases and ailments enumerated herein. Thereby substantial injury has been done, and is being done, by respondent to competition in commerce among and between the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondent, National Laboratory, are to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce, within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

It is ordered, That the said respondent, National Laboratory, a corporation, its officers, servants, employees, or agents, individual or corporate, in connection with the offering for sale, sale and distribution in interstate commerce or in the District of Columbia, of a pharmaceutical preparation in tablet or other form, designated as "Nuga-Tone," or any other preparation of substantially the same ingredients sold under that name or under any other name, legend or title, do forthwith cease and desist from:

1. Representing it is a combination of Bitter Stomachic Tonics or a valuable and effective alterative tonic and may be taken over long periods by any one without harmful results;
2. Representing it is an effective remedy or cure for indigestion and stomach or intestinal ailments and will aid digestion, relieve pains or discomfort following eating, increase the appetite and permit one to eat anything;
3. Representing it removes the causes of aches and pains in the muscles, nerves and bones, and gives new power and energy to the muscular and nervous system;
4. Representing it is an effective remedy or treatment for poor heart action and for loss of power and energy;
5. Representing it will protect the body against the more serious diseases, stimulate and invigorate the entire system and act directly on the vital organs;
6. Representing it will make sick people strong and healthy, cause paleness to disappear and produce normal sleep;
7. Representing, through the use of the word "Laboratory" in its corporate name, or in any other manner, or through the use of any other word of similar import and meaning, or through any other means or device, that it owns, operates or controls a laboratory until and unless it actually owns and operates or directly and absolutely controls a laboratory wherein said preparation is actually manufactured by it.

Order

It is further ordered, That the respondent shall, within 60 days after service upon it of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which it has complied with this order.

Complaint

IN THE MATTER OF
SHEFFORD CHEESE COMPANY, INC.

COMPLAINT, MEMORANDUM OPINION, AND ORDER CLOSING CASE IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION OF SEC. 2 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED OCT. 15, 1914, AS AMENDED BY AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED JUNE 19, 1936

Docket 2936. Complaint, Sept. 30, 1936—Order, Oct. 30, 1937

DISCRIMINATING IN PRICE—CLAYTON ACT. SEC. 2, SUBSEC. (A)—QUANTITY AND VOLUME DISCOUNTS AND DIFFERENTIALS—WHERE PRESUMPTION OF REASONABLENESS; COMPETITIVE INJURY NEITHER INTENDED NOR EVIDENT; TO MEET DISCOUNTS, ETC., OF COMPETITORS; AND OTHER DISCOUNT EVENTUALLY OPEN TO ALL.

Where, on complaint charging respondent, engaged in manufacturing, processing, offering, selling, and distributing cheese, cheese products, and cheese foodstuffs, with unlawful discrimination in violation of section in question, in allowing from one cent to three cents discount, as case might be, on certain quantity purchases of loaf cheese, and fifteen percent discount on weekly purchases of package cheese and cheese products (excepting such loaf cheese and cream loaf cheese subject to discounts as above indicated), exceeding $100 in volume, it appeared that said company's pricing policies were very similar to, and its discounts on most items were identical with, those shown to have been used by Kraft-Phenix Cheese Corporation, Docket 2935, July 17, 1937, 25 F. T. C. 537, in which order of dismissal issued, all sales of package cheese during period covered by Commission's supplemental investigation were made at list prices less fifteen percent discount, and allegation that the differing discounts appearing in respondent's price schedule were made to meet those of competitors or services and facilities furnished by competitors, was not controverted by information in hands of Commission, closing of proceeding without prejudice indicated and so ordered.

Mr. Allen C. Phelps and Mr. James I. Rooney for the Commission.

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress, approved October 15, 1914, entitled "An Act to supplement existing laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes" as amended by an Act of Congress, approved June 19, 1936, entitled "An Act to amend Section 2 of the Act entitled 'An Act to supplement existing laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes,' approved October 15, 1914, as amended (U. S. C. Title 15, Section 13) and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that Shefford Cheese Company, a corporation, is violating and has been violating the provisions of Section 2 (a) of said Act, hereby issues its complaint stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent, Shefford Cheese Company, Inc., is a corporation with its principal office, and place of business in the city of Syracuse, N. Y. Said respondent maintains zone or branch offices at Green Bay, Wis., Chicago, Ill., Brooklyn, N. Y., and at various other points in different States of the United States.

PAR. 2. Said respondent corporation is and has been prior to June 19, 1936, engaged in the business of manufacturing, processing, offering for sale, selling, and distributing cheese, cheese products, and cheese foodstuffs. Respondent sells and distributes said products in commerce between and among the various States of the United States, causing said products to be shipped and transported from the respective places of origin or concentration thereof, located in various States of the United States, to purchasers of such products, located usually in different States of the United States from those in which such products originate or are concentrated for distribution, and there is and has been, at all times herein mentioned, a continuous current of trade and commerce in said products between respondent's factories, processing plants, branch offices, and distributing points and purchasers located in States of the United States different from those in which such factories, processing plants, branch offices, and distributing points are located; that said commodities are so sold and distributed for use, consumption, and resale within the different States of the United States.

PAR. 3. In the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid, respondent is now and during the time herein mentioned, has been in substantial competition with other corporations, individuals, partnerships, and firms engaged in the business of manufacturing, processing, offering for sale, selling, and distributing cheese, cheese products, and cheese foodstuffs in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and the District of Columbia.

PAR. 4. In the course and conduct of its business as above described, respondent since on or about September 19, 1936, has discriminated in price and is now discriminating in price between different purchasers buying said products of like grade and quality, so sold in interstate commerce for resale to consumers, by giving and allowing to some of its said purchasers of cheese and cheese products lower prices than those given or allowed other of its said purchasers competitively engaged one with the other in the resale of said products to the consumer within the United States. Said discriminations consist in the following:

1. In connection with the offering for sale and sale of Shefford five-pound loaf cheese, in the granting of an allowance of a one cent discount from the unit pound price set for lots of 5 pounds to 29 pounds of such product for purchases in lots of 30 pounds to 149 pounds; in the allowance of a one cent per pound discount from the price set for lots of 30 pounds to 149 pounds for purchases of lots from 150 pounds to 749 pounds; in the allowance of a one-half cent per pound discount from the price set for lots of 150 pounds to 749 pounds for purchases of 750 pounds or over.

2. In connection with the offering for sale and sale of Shefford cream loaf cheese in three pound boxes, in the granting of an allowance of a one cent discount from the unit pound price set for lots of 3 pounds to 15 pounds of such product for purchases in lots of 18 pounds to 297 pounds; in the allowance of a two cent per pound discount from the price set for lots of 18 pounds to 297 pounds for purchases in lots of 300 pounds or over.

3. In connection with the offering for sale and selling of Shefford package cheese and cheese products, except loaf cheese and cream loaf cheese, in the allowance of a fifteen percent discount on all purchases of such products by a customer in a volume in excess of $100.00 per week.

PAR. 5. That the purchasers of such commodities from respondent, so bought and sold in interstate commerce, are in competition in the resale of such products to the consumer with other such purchasers in the different States of the United States in which said purchasers are respectively located and engaged in business; that the effect of such discriminatory prices is to enable some of said purchasers to purchase such commodities at a lower price than competing purchasers can buy the same products, solely because of the variation of volume of resale trade done in such products by the different purchasers thereof.

PAR. 6. The general effect of said systematic discrimination in price, made by said respondents as above set forth has been or may be to substantially lessen competition or to injure, destroy or prevent competition in the sale and distribution of cheese and cheese products between the said respondent and other manufacturers and distributors of similar products engaged in interstate commerce, and also between the said favored purchasers of said products receiving such discriminatory prices and other unfavored competing purchasers of said products not receiving said discriminatory prices; and the effect of said discriminations has been or may be to tend to create a monopoly in respondent in said line of commerce and also in the said favored purchasers receiving said discriminatory prices from said respondent, in the resale of said products in different localities or trade territories in the United States in which such purchasers respectively operate.

PAR. 7. The foregoing alleged acts of the said respondent are in violation of Section 2 (a) of said Act of Congress, approved June 19, 1936, entitled "An Act to amend Section 2 of the Act entitled 'An Act to supplement existing laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes', approved October 15, 1914, as amended (U. S. C. Title 15, Section 13), and for other purposes."

MEMORANDUM OPINION

The complaint in this case charges respondent Shefford Cheese Company, Inc., with price discrimination in connection with the sale of loaf cheese and packaged cheese in violation of Section 2 (a) of the Clayton Act as amended (the Robinson-Patman Act). Respondent, after having answered, subsequently filed a motion to dismiss the complaint on certain grounds set out therein. This matter comes before the Commission upon respondent's said motion to dismiss.

After the issuance of the complaint, the Commission caused a supplemental investigation of the facts in this case to be made, and in addition has available to it certain information voluntarily submitted by the respondent.

It appears that this respondent's pricing policies are very similar to, and on most items its discounts are identical with, those shown by the evidence in Docket 2935 to have been used by the respondent in the case, Kraft-Phenix Cheese Corporation. It further appears that during the period covered by the Commission's supplemental investigation all sales of packaged cheese by respondent Shefford Cheese Company were made at list prices less a discount of 15%; hence there was in fact no discrimination between two classes of customers in connection with the sale of this class of products. In addition, it is to be noted that this respondent alleges in its answer that the differing discounts appearing in its price schedule were made to meet those of competitors or the services and facilities furnished by competitors, and the information in the hands of the Commission does not controvert this allegation.

The Commission therefore considers, on the basis of the facts before it, that this proceeding should be closed without prejudice, and it has been so ordered.

ORDER CLOSING CASE

This matter coming on to be heard by the Commission upon the motion of respondent to dismiss the complaint, and the Commission having duly considered said motion and the record herein, and being now fully advised in the premises;

It is ordered, That respondent's motion to dismiss the complaint be denied, but that the case growing out of the complaint herein, be and the same hereby is, closed, without prejudice to the right of the Commission, should the facts so warrant, to reopen the same and resume prosecution of the complaint in accordance with its regular procedure..

IN THE MATTER OF
E. O. JACKSON DISTILLING COMPANY

COMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION
OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 26, 1914

Docket 2940. Complaint, Oct. 6, 1936—Decision, Oct. 30, 1937

Where a corporation engaged in distilled spirits rectifying industry, in purchasing, rectifying, blending, and bottling whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages, and in producing gin with a still which it used therefor by redistillation of purchased alcohol, not produced by it, over juniper berries and other aromatics, and in sale of its aforesaid various products, and of whisky theretofore, and for a time, distilled by it as lessee of a Kentucky distillery prior to discontinuance of such distilling operations, to wholesale purchasers, principally, in most of the other States and in the District of Columbia, in substantial competition with those engaged in the manufacture by distillation of whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages, and in the sale thereof in trade and commerce among the various States and in said District, and with those engaged in purchasing, rectifying, blending, and bottling such various beverages and similarly selling same, and including among said competitors those who, as manufacturers and distillers by original and continuous distillation from mash, wort, or wash through continuous closed pipes and vessels until manufacture is complete, of whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages, truthfully use words "distillery," "distilleries," "distillers," or "distilling" as a part of their corporate or trade names and on their stationery and advertising, and on the labels of the bottles in which they sell and ship such products, and those who, engaged in purchasing, rectifying, blending, bottling, and selling such various products, do not use aforesaid words as above set forth, and also those who, engaged in either distilled spirits or distilled spirits rectifying industry, or both, do not make grossly exaggerated and misleading statements regarding the quality of a whisky artificially aged in from 30 to 60 days so as to give it appearance of whisky which had been aged in the wood for approximately two years—

- (a) Represented, through use of word "distilling" in its corporate name, printed on its stationery and advertising and on the labels attached to the bottles in which it sold and shipped its said products, and in various other ways to its customers, and furnished same with means of representing to their vendees, both retailers and ultimate consuming public, that all its said whiskies and other alcoholic beverages bottled by it were by it made through process of distillation from mash, wort, or wash, notwithstanding fact it was not, as to all its products excepting liquor actually produced by it under lease as aforesaid, a distiller, for the spirituous bottled liquors of which there is a preference on the part of a substantial portion of the purchasing public, but a rectifier, within true intent and meaning of the law and as commonly understood by trade and consuming public, and with tendency to induce public to purchase products of concern using such words in its corporate name, in preference to those of other bottlers, as and for products bottled by actual distiller and as giving purchaser, in buying as directly as possible from distiller, better grade of merchandise, saving in money or more uniform product; and

- (b) Represented, through statement "Kentucky's Best" straight Bourbon whiskey, bottled by the distillers, direct from Kentucky, in advertising its "charred chip" whiskey, in which "charred chip" process is employed to give whiskey approximately same satisfactory color in from 30 to 60 days as obtained by approximately 2 years of aging in the wood, as claimed by it that its said whiskey was of same or equivalent quality as whiskey properly and normally aged in the wood, facts being that such representations, as applied to Bourbon whiskey distilled in Kentucky and aged by aforesaid process, were grossly exaggerated and misleading;

With effect of misleading and deceiving dealers and purchasing public into the beliefs that all said representations were true, and that the whiskeys, gins and other spirituous beverages bottled and sold by it were by it made and distilled from mash, wort, or wash, as aforesaid, and of inducing dealers and purchasing public, acting in such beliefs, to buy its said whiskeys and other spirituous beverages bottled and sold by it, and of thereby diverting trade to it from its competitors who do not, by their corporate or trade names or in any other manner, misrepresent that they are manufacturers, by distillation from mash, wort, or wash, of such products; to the substantial injury of substantial competition in commerce:

Held, That such acts and practices were to the prejudice of the public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition.

COMPLAINT

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent is a corporation organized, existing, and doing business under the laws of the State of Illinois, having its principal office and place of business at 8440 South Chicago Avenue in the city of Chicago in said State. It is now and since January 1, 1936, has been engaged in the distilled spirits rectifying industry, purchasing, rectifying, blending, and bottling whiskeys, gins, and other spirituous beverages and engaging in the sale thereof in constant course of trade and commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia. In the course and conduct of its said business, it causes its said products when sold to be transported from its place of business aforesaid into and through various States of the United States to the purchasers thereof, consisting of wholesalers and retailers located in other States of the United States and the District of Columbia. In the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid, respondent is now, and since its organization has been, in substantial competition with other corporations and with individuals, partnerships, and firms engaged in the manufacture by distillation of whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages and in the sale thereof in trade and commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia; and in the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid, respondent is now, and since its organization has been, in substantial competition with other corporations, and with individuals, firms, and partnerships engaged in the business of purchasing, rectifying, blending, and bottling whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages and in the sale thereof in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid, respondent has upon its said premises a still which it uses in the production of gin by a process of rectification, whereby alcohol purchased but not produced by respondent is redistilled over juniper berries and other aromatics. Such rectification of alcoholic spirits and liquors does not make or constitute respondent a distiller as defined by Section 3247 of the Revised Statutes regulating Internal Revenue, nor a distilling company as commonly understood by the public or the liquor industry. For a long period of time the word "distilling" when used in connection with the liquor industry and the products thereof has had and still has a definite significance and meaning to the minds of the wholesalers and retailers in such industry and to the ultimate purchasing public, to wit, the manufacture of distilled spirits by the process of original and continuous distillation from mash, wort, or wash, through continuous closed pipes and vessels until the manufacture thereof is completed; and substantial portion of the purchasing public prefers to buy spirituous liquors prepared and bottled by those actually engaged in the operation, ownership, or control of such a distillery.

bottles in which it sells and ships its said products, and in various other ways, respondent represents to its customers and furnishes them with the means of representing to their vendees, both retailers and the ultimate consuming public, that respondent is a distiller and that the whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages therein contained were by it manufactured through the process of distillation from mash, wort, or wash, as aforesaid, when as a matter of fact respondent is not a distiller, does not distill the said whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages by it so bottled, labeled, sold, and transported, and does not own, operate, or control any place or places where such beverages are manufactured by the process of distillation from mash, wort, or wash.

In the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid, respondent bottles at Chicago, Illinois, and ships and sells in interstate commerce and in the District of Columbia, among other brands, a brand of whiskey labeled as follows:

From Old Kentucky
BOTTLED BY THE DISTILLERS
Your Assurance of Uniformly High Quality Proof 90

C O T T O N
C L U B
KENTUCKY STRAIGHT BOURBON WHISKEY
SUPERBLY SMOOTH AND MELLOW Distilled At Distillery No. 17
5th Dist. of Kentucky

As a means of inducing and promoting the sale of said "Cotton Club" brand of whiskey in interstate commerce, respondent has widely distributed advertising matter in which it has made, among others, the following representations of fact, to wit:

KENTUCKY'S BEST NOW COSTS YOU LESS
BOTTLED BY THE DISTILLERS
DIRECT FROM KENTUCKY

Try COTTON CLUB and your taste will convince you that it's the greatest Kentucky Whiskey value on the market. You'll marvel that so fine a whiskey can be sold at so low a price * * * Handled from the grain to the finished bottle by one organization.

Distilled and Bottled by
E. O. JACKSON DISTILLING CO.,
Louisville, Kentucky.
A uniformly high quality product—

Said representations of fact are grossly exaggerated, false and misleading in that (a) the said whiskey is not of high quality; (b) respondent has no place of business in Louisville, Ky.; (c) has not since January 1, 1936, actually owned, operated or controlled any distillery whatever in the sense in which said term is commonly accepted and used in the distilled spirits industry.

"Distillery No. 17," 5th District of Kentucky became and was favorably known to many engaged in the liquor trade by reason of the production there between 1903 and 1935 of whiskey of a high quality by A. Ph. Stitzel, Inc., and in 1929 this particular distillery received one of the first licenses issued by the government for the manufacture of medicinal whiskey during the prohibition period. Between July 1, 1935, and January 1, 1936, this respondent, under lease from the vendee of A. Ph. Stitzel, Inc., produced 5,000 barrels of whiskey at said distillery at high proof by what is known as the "charred chip process," which said whiskey was of a quality inferior to a good grade of Kentucky Bourbon whiskey, and the respondent's aforesaid "Cotton Club" brand is, therefore, not of the grade and quality indicated by the representation "Distilled at Distillery No. 17, 5th District of Kentucky, and is not "Kentucky's Best."

The other brands of whiskies, cordials and liquors sold by respondent were not by it distilled "from the grain to the finished bottle."

PAR. 4. There are among the competitors of respondent engaged in the sale of spirituous beverages, as mentioned in paragraph 1 hereof, corporations, firms, partnerships, and individuals who manufacture and distill from mash, wort, or wash, as aforesaid, whiskies, gins and other spirituous beverages sold by them and who truthfully use the words "distillery," "distilleries," "distillers," or "distilling" as a part of their corporate or trade names and on their stationery and advertising, and on the labels of the bottles in which they sell and ship such products. There are also among such competitors corporations, firms, partnerships and individuals engaged in the business of purchasing, rectifying, blending, bottling, and selling whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages who do not use the words "distillery," "distilleries," "distilling," or "distillers" as a part of their corporate or trade names, nor on their stationery or advertising, nor on the labels attached to the bottles in which they sell and ship their said products.

There are also among the competitors of respondent corporations, firms, partnerships and individuals engaged in either the distilled spirits industry or the distilled spirits rectifying industry, or both, who neither misrepresent their location nor the place where their spirits are bottled nor the reputation, grade or quality of their product.

PAR. 5. Representations by respondent, as hereinabove set forth, are calculated to and have the capacity and tendency to and do mislead and deceive dealers and the purchasing public into the beliefs that all of the aforesaid representations are true and that respondent is a distiller and that all the whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages sold by the respondent are manufactured and distilled by it from mash, wort, or wash, as aforesaid, and is calculated to and has the capacity and tendency to and does induce dealers and the purchasing public, acting in such beliefs, to purchase the whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages bottled and sold by the respondent, thereby diverting trade to respondent from its competitors who do not by their corporate or trade names or in any other manner misrepresent that they are manufacturers by distillation from mash, wort, or wash, of such products; and thereby respondent does substantial injury to substantial competition in interstate commerce.

PAR. 6. The acts and things above alleged to have been done and the false representations alleged to have been made by respondent are to the prejudice of the public and the competitors of respondent and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914.

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

the proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on the said complaint, the answer thereto, testimony and other evidence, briefs in support of the complaint and in opposition thereto (no oral arguments having been made); and the Commission having duly considered the same, and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public, and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. The respondent, E. O. Jackson Distilling Company, is a corporation organized, existing, and doing business under the laws of the State of Illinois, with its office and principal place of business at 8440 South Chicago Avenue, in the city of Chicago, in said State. It is also authorized to do business in the State of Kentucky, and its principal office in that State is 1407 West Jefferson Street, Louisville, Ky., where, since January 1936, it has maintained a bottling plant and office. It is now and since January 1, 1936 has been engaged in the distilled spirits rectifying industry, purchasing, rectifying, blending, and bottling whiskeys, gins, and other spirituous beverages, and engaging in the sale thereof in constant course of trade and commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

In the course and conduct of its said business, it causes its said products when sold to be transported from its place of business aforesaid into and through the various States of the United States to the purchasers thereof, consisting principally of wholesalers located in most of the other States of the United States and the District of Columbia. Its dollar sales volume sometimes amounts to as much as $100,000 a month.

In the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid, respondent is now, and since its organization has been, in substantial competition with other corporations and with individuals, partnerships, and firms engaged in the manufacture by distillation of whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages and in the sale thereof in trade and commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia; and in the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid, respondent is now, and since its organization has been, in substantial competition with other corporations, and with individuals, firms, and partnerships engaged in the business of purchasing, rectifying, blending, and bottling whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages and in the sale thereof in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid, respondent has upon its above described premises in the city of Chicago, a 500-gallon gin still, properly registered, which it uses in the production of gin by a process of rectification, whereby tax-paid alcohol purchased by it is redistilled over juniper berries and other aromatics. This gin constitutes approximately 15 to 20% of respondent's total production. This manufacture of gin by redistillation is well recognized in the trade as a process of rectification. It is not necessary, under the pertinent laws and regulations, for one engaging therein to possess a permit to distill. Such rectification of alcoholic spirits does not make or constitute this respondent a distilling company within the intent and meaning of Section 3247 of the revised statutes regulating Internal Revenue (U. S. Code Tit. 26, Sec. 1158). The Commission finds that this respondent is a rectifier, its place of business a rectifying plant, and that it is engaged in the business of rectifying, within the intent and meaning of Section 3244 of the revised statutes of the United States (U. S. Code Tit. 26, Sec. 1397-f). Neither does such rectification make or constitute this respondent a distiller as commonly understood by the public and by those engaged in any branch of the liquor industry. For a long period of time the word "distilling" when used in connection with the liquor industry and with the products thereof, has had and still has a definite significance and meaning to the minds of wholesalers and retailers in such industry and to the ultimate purchasing public, to-wit, the production of alcoholic liquors by an original and continuous distillation from mash, wort, or wash, through continuous closed pipes and vessels until the manufacture thereof is completed, and a substantial portion of the purchasing public prefers to buy spirituous liquors bottled and prepared by the actual distillers thereof.

PAR. 3. Rectifying in the distilled spirits industry means the mixing of whiskey of different ages or types or the mixing of other ingredients with whiskeys, but reducing proof of the whiskey by adding water is not rectifying. Rectifiers also blend whiskeys with neutral spirits (grain alcohol).

Many distillers operate a separate establishment six hundred feet or more away from the distillery, known as a rectifying plant, wherein they operate in the same manner as an ordinary rectifier, sometimes exclusively with spirits of their own distillation and often with spirits purchased from other distillers, or both. Some distilleries have a tax paid bottling room on the distillery bonded premises wherein their distilled spirits are bottled straight as they come from the still or in a bonded warehouse after aging and after reduction of proof.

Any rectifying by a distiller must be done in his rectifying plant under his rectifier's permit.

On all bottled liquors, whether bottled at a distillery rectifying plant or at any rectifying plant, appear the word "bottled" or "blended," as the case may be, "By the ----- Company."

If the distilled spirits therein contained are bottled by a distiller in his distillery or are spirits of his distillation bottled in his rectifying plant, the distiller may and does put "Distilled and bottled by ----- Company."

If in the distillery's rectifying plant other spirits have been blended or rectified, they put "Blended and bottled by ----- Company."

Finally, usually blown in the bottom of each bottle, is a symbol consisting of a letter followed by a number, a "D" for a distillery and a "R" for a rectifier, the number following the letter corresponding with the distiller's or rectifier's permit.

Respondent's rectifier's permit is designated as R-259.

A distiller who also operates a rectifying plant, having both kinds of permits, may use either symbol, depending on whether the liquor contained in the bottle was produced and bottled under his distiller's or under his rectifier's permit.

Knowledge of these details is not widespread among the retail trade although it is more so now than it was during the first year after the repeal of the Prohibition Amendment, and knowledge of such details is quite limited to the general public.

All whiskeys, whether emanating from distillers or from rectifiers, are generally in the trade conceded to be distilled products.

It is not always possible to determine from the presence of the phrase "Blended and bottled by" or the phrase "Bottled by" on the label whether the package was bottled by a rectifier who is a distiller or by a rectifier who is not a distiller.

The process used by this respondent in the production of its gin, insofar as the redistillation process is concerned, is the same identical process that is used in many distilleries in the United States for the production of gin, except that in the case of the respondent, it purchases its alcohol, and in the case of the distilleries, they distill the alcohol which they redistill over the juniper berries, and, in some cases, such alcohol is conveyed through closed pipes and vessels in one continuous process from the mash through the cistern tank to the gin still.

Findings

PAR. 4. Prior to January 1, 1936, respondent, as lessee of the Frankfort Distilleries, Incorporated, at Louisville, Kentucky, operated a distillery, under a distillers' basic permit issued by the Federal Alcohol Administration Division of the Treasury Department. Respondent also filed warehousing bond, dated July 13, 1935, effective July 25, 1935, in the penal sum of $100,000, with the Seaboard Surety Company as surety. Pursuant to the authority contained in such permit, this respondent, prior to January 17, 1936, produced by distillation from mash, wort or wash, approximately 5,000 barrels of whiskey, of which, at the time of the hearing, it had about 2,500 barrels remaining, which, in the ordinary progress of its business activities, would last for approximately two years. Respondent then suspended operations on January 17, 1936, and has not operated said distillery since. Its bonds stand cancelled, according to their own terms, as of May 1, 1936. Respondent's aforesaid basic distillers' permit is still outstanding, but is subject to revocation in the event that it does not again engage in the operations thereby authorized, for a period of more than two years, which two years will expire on January 17, 1938.

The whiskey which respondent distilled prior to January 17, 1936, and the gin produced by it as aforesaid, constitute roughly approximately 65% of its business, the other 35% being taken up by cordials which it compounds, and blended whiskies which it prepares from distilled spirits and whiskies purchased from others. This respondent has not operated under lease or otherwise produced from raw materials by distillation alcoholic spirits of any kind since January 17, 1936, but has since been engaged solely as a rectifier in the bottling and sale of the spirits which it did produce (under various brand names such as "Cotton Club," "Barrel Tap Bourbon," "Kentucky Trotter," "Kentucky State," and "Kentucky Classic"), spirits obtained by purchase from other sources, and its gin, as aforesaid. Its cordials, gin, and blends are bottled in the city of Chicago, and all of the whiskeys which it produced under lease as aforesaid, together with some purchased whiskeys, are bottled in its plant in Kentucky. While a lessee-operator of a distillery, who has ceased distilling, but who warehouses and sells liquors previously so distilled, remains a distiller within the provisions of law imposing forfeiture for wrongful acts of a distiller, insofar as the liquor so distilled is concerned, the Commission finds that this respondent, as to all of its products, except the liquor actually produced by it under such lease, is not a distiller, but a rectifier, within the true intent and meaning of the law, and as commonly understood by the trade and the consuming public.

PAR. 5. With respect to all of the whiskeys and other alcoholic beverages not produced by this respondent during its lessee operation of the distillery, as aforesaid, in the regular course and conduct of its business, by the use of the word "Distilling" in its corporate name, printed on its stationery and advertising, and on the labels attached to the bottles in which it sells and ships its said products, and in various other ways, respondent represents to its customers, and furnishes them with the means of representing to their vendees, both retailers and the ultimate consuming public, that the said whiskies and other alcoholic beverages bottled by it were by it manufactured through the process of distillation from mash, wort, or wash.

PAR. 6. Based upon the testimony of a large number of witnesses from both the trade and the purchasing public, the Commission finds that the word "distilling," or similar words such as "distillers" and "distilleries," when used in the corporate name of the bottler of spirits or other alcoholic beverages, on the bottles in which such spirits are contained, indicates the distillation by such bottler of such spirits from fermented grain, mash, or wort, and that the use of such words tends to induce the public to purchase the products of the concern using such words in its corporate name, in preference to the products of other bottlers, in the belief that they are buying the product bottled by the actual distiller of its contents; and that in buying as directly as possible from the distiller, they would get a better grade of merchandise, save money, or secure a more uniform product. For these reasons they would be inclined to give preference to a product bearing the name of a distiller or distilling company.

PAR. 7. In its production by distillation of the 5,000 barrels of whiskey in the Kentucky distillery, which it leased as aforesaid, this respondent used a method known as the "charred chip" process. This is a process of running the whiskey over charred wood chips between the still and the cistern room, to give the whiskey color at an earlier age than normally. In such manner, approximately the same satisfactory color is obtained in from 30 to 60 days, as would be obtained by approximately 2 years of aging in the wood, according to the claim made by an officer of the respondent corporation. This alleged aging process was represented by respondent's salesmen as an exclusive process of aging which it and no one else had, and that it was used by it in a famous old Kentucky distillery, owned by respondent. In one instance a sale of ten cases of such whiskey was made to a retailer who, from such representations, was under the impression at the time he made the purchase, that he was purchasing the liquor from a distillery. Respondent advertised such "charred chip" whiskey, part of which on the occasion of the sale aforesaid was returned by the purchaser as unsatisfactory, as "Kentucky's Best" straight Bourbon whiskey, bottled by the distillers, direct from Kentucky. The Commission finds that such representations, when applied to a Bourbon whiskey distilled in Kentucky and aged by the charred chip process, aforesaid, are grossly exaggerated and misleading.

PAR. 8. There are among the competitors of respondent engaged in the sale of spirituous beverages, as mentioned in paragraph 1 hereof, corporations, firms, partnerships, and individuals who manufacture and distill from mash, wort, or wash, as aforesaid, whiskies, gins and other spirituous beverages sold by them and who truthfully use the words "distillery," "distilleries," "distillers," or "distilling" as a part of their corporate or trade names and on their stationery and advertising, and on the labels of the bottles in which they sell and ship such products. There are also among such competitors corporations, firms, partnerships, and individuals, engaged in the business of purchasing, rectifying, blending, bottling, and selling whiskies, gins and other spirituous beverages who do not use the words "distillery," "distilleries," "distilling," or "distillers" as a part of their corporate or trade names, nor on their stationery or advertising, nor on the labels attached to the bottles in which they sell and ship their said products.

There are also among the competitors of respondent corporations, firms, partnerships and individuals engaged in either the distilled spirits industry or the distilled spirits rectifying industry, or both, who do not make grossly exaggerated and misleading statements concerning the quality of a whiskey artificially aged in from 30 to 60 days, so as to give it the appearance of a whiskey which has been aged in the wood for approximately 2 years.

PAR. 9. Representations by respondent, as hereinabove set forth, have the capacity and tendency to and do mislead and deceive dealers and the purchasing public into the beliefs that all of the aforesaid representations are true and that all the whiskies, gins, and other spirituous beverages bottled and sold by respondent are manufactured and distilled by it from mash, wort or wash, as aforesaid, and have the capacity and tendency to and do induce dealers and the purchasing public, acting in such beliefs, to purchase the whiskies, gins and other spirituous beverages bottled and sold by the respondent, thereby diverting trade to respondent from its competitors who do not by their corporate or trade names or in any other manner misrepresent that they are manufacturers by distillation from mash, wort, or wash, of such products; and thereby respondent does substantial injury to substantial competition in interstate commerce.

PAR. 10. Existing regulations promulgated under the Federal Alcohol Administration Act approved August 29, 1935 (49 Stat. L. 977), which regulations became effective August 15, 1936, provide that rectifiers who redistill tax-paid purchased alcohol over juniper berries and other aromatics may call such resulting product "distilled gin," and require that the labels shall state thereon who distilled it. For this reason the Commission has excepted from the application of its order herein, gins so produced by this respondent, as well as such of respondent's whiskies as it actually produced as lessee-operator of a distillery, by distillation from mash, wort, or wash, prior to January 17, 1936.

Order

25 F. T. C.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondent E. O. Jackson Distilling Company, are to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce, within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

It is now ordered, That the respondent E. O. Jackson Distilling Company, its officers, agents, representatives, and employees, in connection with the offering for sale, sale and distribution of whiskies, gins, or other spirituous beverages, in interstate commerce or in the District of Columbia (except gins produced by it through a process of rectification whereby alcohols purchased but not produced by respondent are redistilled over juniper berries and other aromatics), do forthwith cease and desist from:

1. Representing through the use of the word "distilling" in its corporate name, on its stationery, advertising, or on the labels attached to the bottles in which it sells and ships said products, or in any other way by word or words of like import, (a) that it is the distiller of the said whiskies, gins or other spirituous beverages when such is not the fact; or (b) that it owns, operates, or controls a place or places where any such products are by it manufactured, by a process of original and continuous distillation, from mash, wort, or wash, through continuous closed pipes and vessels until the manufacture thereof is completed, unless and until respondent shall actually own, operate, or control such a place or places;

2. Representing by means of the statement "Kentucky's Best" in connection with whiskey manufactured or distilled by it, and run over charred chips for the purpose of simulating the true color of older whiskies, or by the use of words and phrases of similar import, that the said whiskey is of the same or equivalent quality as whiskey that has been properly and normally aged in the wood.

It is further provided, That nothing herein contained shall prevent respondent from representing through the use of the word "distilling" in its corporate name, on its stationery, advertising or on the labels attached to the bottles in which it sells and ships any of its products, which it did in fact produce by distillation, that it is the distiller thereof.

It is further ordered, That the said respondent, within 60 days from and after the date of the service upon it of this order shall file with the Commission a report or reports in writing, setting forth in detail the manner and form in which it is complying and has complied with the order to cease and desist hereinabove set forth.

PITTSBURGH PLATE GLASS COMPANY, ET AL.

COMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 26, 1914, AND OF SEC. 2 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED OCT. 15, 1914, AS AMENDED BY AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED JUNE 19, 1936

Docket 3154. Complaint, June 16, 1937—Decision, Oct. 30, 1937

Where (1) eight manufacturers of window glass, owning and controlling practically all the factories producing such product in the United States and producing most of such product sold and distributed therein, and able to influence prices and terms at which, and conditions under which, such product was sold throughout the United States, and in competition among themselves, except to the extent that their said competition had been lessened, restricted or restrained, or their potential competition forestalled, by practices and methods below described and set forth, and in competition with other competitor manufacturers, except as such competition or potential competition had been hindered, etc., as above described; (2) the association of which such eight manufacturers, along with a ninth company, owner of the stock of one of said manufacturing concerns and affiliated with five of their number and engaged as exclusive selling agent for said manufacturing concerns and four of the other manufacturers above set forth were members; and (3) association of distributors of such products including window glass particularly, of which one of said manufacturers, with eight manufacturing plants at various points in the United States and with approximately seventy warehouses in many different States, was member, and of which the other seven manufacturers were associate members, and the members of which distributors' association were in competition with one another and with other competitor distributors in resale and distribution of products in question to dealers and consumers in the various localities and trade areas of the United States, except insofar as such competition or potential competition had been hindered, etc., as hereinbefore set forth, by the acts and practices hereinafter described, directly and substantially, affecting such competition and that among manufacturers of such products, and the members of which distributors' association, with five divisions covering the United States, constituted group of distributors so large and influential in the trade as to be able, by themselves and in cooperation with aforesaid manufacturers first referred to, to influence flow of trade in channels of commerce in window glass throughout the country and terms and conditions under which distributors thereof buy such products; and (4) the officers, directors, and members of said two associations, and the executive committeemen of said latter association; associated and allied together to carry into effect certain policies, practices and methods relating to sale and distribution of window glass as below described—

Agreed and conspired, and combined and confederated together and with others, and united in and pursued a common and concerted course of action and undertaking among themselves and with others, to adopt, follow, carry out, enforce, and maintain certain policies, sales methods and trade practices upon which they had agreed and to which they adhered, and which they attempted to and did impose, by coercion and compulsion, upon glass distributors and dealers who were not permitted, or did not desire, to be members of said distributors' association, and upon others, to the actual or potential injury of some of such distributors and dealers and of ultimate purchasers and consumers of glass generally; and in pursuance of said agreement, course of action and undertaking above referred to, and as respects said policies, sales methods, and trade practices, and through official and unofficial meetings of their associations, discussions, bulletins, circulars, etc., distributed among the members and others, and the seeking and obtaining of promises and assurances from one another and exchange of information with one another with respect to their businesses and activities, and through action of aforesaid distributors in inducing the granting of such discriminatory prices, as below set forth, by said manufacturers, and in receiving and accepting the same—

- (a) Classified all buyers of window glass from manufacturers as "quantity buyers" or "carload lot buyers," and formulated, printed and circulated among themselves list of such "quantity buyers," whose classification as such was dependent upon purchase of a minimum of from 3,000 to 5,000 50-foot boxes of window glass for stock per year, and made it the policy and practice of such manufacturers to issue only one window glass price list showing prices to "quantity buyers" only, and issued to and intended for their use exclusively, and confined, as a policy and practice, to a restricted trade area sales of window glass by "quantity buyers," who rarely, if ever, accepted orders for such product for transmission to the manufacturer from dealers located outside their respective designated trade areas, and granted or denied admittance to list of "quantity buyers," as policy and practice, only after complete investigation by secretary of said manufacturers' association to determine eligibility of such buyers, with final decision made by the association, and refused sales of window glass in carload lots by said manufacturers directly to any buyer except "quantity buyers";
- (b) Published, exclusively, price lists for window glass to "carload lot buyers," through said distributors' association, and distributed same only by members thereof, and required and compelled all such "carload lot buyers" and others not classified as "quantity buyers" and placed on said list, to purchase window glass from such so-called "quantity buyers" or from aforesaid manufacturer members through such buyers, and all such other buyers to pay up to $7\frac{1}{2}\%$ more for window glass of same grade and quality than price quoted to and paid by "quantity buyers," with manufacturer, as agreed, to receive $2\frac{1}{2}\%$, and "quantity buyer" 5%, over such quoted list price on sales to such "carload lot buyers," and made numerous sales from said manufacturers to "carload lot buyers" at such higher prices and on aforesaid basis, referring orders to said manufacturers from such "carload lot buyers" to so-called "quantity buyers" and filling same by direct shipment to former with aforesaid $2\frac{1}{2}\%$ markup over manufacturer's list price and understanding that "quantity buyer" would add and receive additional markup of 5%, as above set forth; and
- (c) Precluded, under policies and practices adopted, any two or more dealers from making pooled purchases of window glass in carload lots, or "carload lot buyer" of such product from reconsigning or diverting such carload to some other dealer, and supervised and directed practices and policies of dealers reselling window glass to other dealers and consumers and, generally, controlled distribution and outlets for such products, and adopted, generally, policy and practice, tendency of which was to lessen and restrain competition in sale and distribution of window glass in the United States, and prevented dealers who did not conform to their practices, policies, and prices from buying window glass at manufacturer's list price or in carload lots, and acted in concert to control channels of distribution and require dealer conformance to such practices and methods;

With capacity and tendency to, and effect of, tending to (1) concentrate in such "quantity buyers" opportunity to purchase window glass from manufacturer at manufacturer's discount from list price, (2) standardize prices at, and conditions under, which window glass was sold by manufacturers in carload lots to other than those classified as such "quantity buyers," (3) bring about an unlawful discrimination in prices at which such product is sold by the manufacturer to different purchasers, (4) unreasonably lessen, eliminate, restrain, stifle, hamper, and suppress competition in window glass trade and industry and tend to deprive purchasing and consuming public of advantages in price, service, or other considerations which they would receive and enjoy under conditions of normal and unobstructed, or free and fair, competition in said trade and industry, and operate as a restraint upon and detriment to the freedom of fair and legitimate competition therein, (5) tend to increase cost to purchasers of such product, (6) discriminate against small business enterprises engaged or desiring to engage in sale or distribution of said product, (7) tend to obstruct establishment of new distributors thereof, (8) lessen and restrain price competition among manufacturers in sale thereof in carload lots to other than "quantity buyers," (9) burden, hamper and interfere with normal and natural flow of trade in commerce therein into, through and from the various States, and injure competitors of individual distributor-respondents by unfairly diverting business and trade from them, and otherwise depriving them unfairly of competitive advantage which they would receive under conditions of free and open competition, and (10) prejudice and injure dealers, distributors and others who do not conform to program or methods above set forth, or desire to do so, but are so compelled by concerted action of said manufacturers and distributors and their associations, etc.; and

Where aforesaid various concerns, manufacturers, and distributors, as above set forth, and their associations, officers, etc.—

(d) Conspired and confederated together to bring about, and did bring about and make effective, a policy and system whereby manufacturers aforesaid discriminated in price between different purchasers of window glass of like grade and quality, as above set forth, with effect of lessening competition between and among manufacturers in said line of commerce and of injury, destroying, and preventing competition between and among such "quantity buyers" and such "carload lot buyers," and between and among the customers of such buyers buying such product for resale to consumers; and

Where manufacturers aforesaid—

(e) Discriminated in price between different purchasers buying window glass of like grade and quality in interstate commerce for resale to dealers and

1228

consumers, by charging some of their said purchasers of such product higher prices than those charged others of their said purchasers competitively engaged with one another in resale of said product within the United States, and consisting in imposition of 2½% markup by the manufacturers upon all "carload lot buyers" over and above manufacturer's list price at which window glass had been and was being sold to so-called "quantity buyers"; and

Where aforesaid distributor members—

(f) Knowingly induced said manufacturer members thus to discriminate in price as above set forth, and knowingly received such discriminations in price on purchases of window glass made by them;

With result that the general effect of said systematic discriminations in price, so made by said manufacturers and induced and received by said distributors, had been or might be substantially to lessen competition and tend to create a monopoly in sale and distribution of window glass, and to injure, destroy, and prevent competition between and among said distributors and their competitors, and between and among customers of each:

Held, That such acts and practices had a dangerous tendency unduly to hinder competition in window glass trade throughout the United States, and to create a monopoly thereof in the hands of aforesaid manufacturers and distributors and their associations, etc., and constituted unfair methods of competition, in violation of Sec. 5 of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, and that discriminatory acts and practices last above set forth constituted violation of Sec. 2 (a) and Sec. 2 (f) of an Act of Congress approved June 19, 1936.

COMPLAINT

Count 1

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent Pittsburgh Plate Glass Company is a corporation organized and existing under the laws of Pennsylvania with its principal office and place of business located in the Grant Building, Pittsburgh, Pa.

Respondent Libbey-Owens-Ford Glass Co. is a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Ohio with its principal office and place of business located in the Nickel Building, Toledo, Ohio.

Respondent American Window Glass Co. is a corporation organized and existing under the laws of Pennsylvania with its principal office and place of business located in the Farmers Bank Building, Pittsburgh, Pa.

Respondent Fourco Glass Co. is a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of West Virginia with its principal office and place of business located at Clarksburg, W. Va.

Respondent Harding Glass Co. is a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Arkansas with its principal office and place of business located at Fort Smith, Ark.

Respondent Adamston Flat Glass Co. is a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of West Virginia with its principal office and place of business located at Clarksburg, W. Va.

Respondent Rolland Glass Co. is a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of West Virginia with its principal office and place of business located at Clarksburg, W. Va.

Respondent Scohy Sheet Glass Co. is a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of West Virginia, with its principal office and place of business located at Sistersville, W. Va.

Respondent Blackford Window Glass Co. is a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Indiana with its principal office and place of business located at Vincennes, Ind.

PAR. 2. Respondent The Window Glass Manufacturers Association is an unincorporated association with its principal office and place of business located at 19 W. 44th St., New York, N. Y. The officers of said association are, or were in 1936 respondent William L. Monro, president, who is likewise president of respondent American Window Glass Co., Pittsburgh, Pa.; respondent Frank Bastin, vice president, who is the president of respondent Blackford Window Glass Co., Vincennes, Ind.; and respondent Charles R. Stevenson, secretary-treasurer, of 19 W. 44th St., New York, N. Y. The membership of said respondent association consists of respondents Adamston Flat Glass Co., American Window Glass Co., Blackford Window Glass Co., Harding Glass Co., Libbey-Owens-Ford Glass Co., Pittsburgh Plate Glass Co., Rolland Glass Co., and Scohy Sheet Glass Co. The board of directors of said respondent association consists of one representative of each of said respondent members. Said respondent members are hereinafter collectively referred to for convenience as "respondent manufacturers."

PAR. 3. Respondent The National Glass Distributors Association is an unincorporated association with its principal office and place of business located at 2217 Tribune Tower, Chicago, Ill.

The officers of said respondent association are, or were in 1936 respondent G. G. Postlewait, president and vice president, a representative of respondent Postlewait Glass Co., Kansas City, Mo.; respondent N. J. Klein, vice president, a representative of respondent Patek Bros. Inc., Milwaukee, Wis.; respondent J. J. Gibian, vice president, a representative of respondent Schrenk & Co., Hoboken, N. J.; respondent W. F. Bennett, vice president, a representative of respondent Bennett Glass Co., Salt Lake City, Utah; respondent T. W. Pritchard, vice president, a representative of respondent Pritchard Paint & Glass Co., Charlotte, N. C.; and respondent

Complaint

25 F. T. C.

North Storms, secretary-treasurer, of 2217 Tribune Tower, Chicago, Ill.

The executive committee of said respondent association is composed of approximately twenty-four individuals who respectively represent individual members. Among such executive committeemen are, or were in 1936, respondent S. C. Gilmore, a representative of respondent Hires Turner Glass Co.; respondent George L. Heater, a representative of respondent Toledo Plate and Window Glass Co.; respondent A. H. Brawner, a representative of respondent W. P. Fuller and Co.; respondent S. E. Binswanger, a representative of respondent Binswanger and Co.; and respondents T. E. Jackson and R. B. Tucker, representatives of respondent Pittsburgh Plate Glass Co. at Dallas, Tex. and Pittsburgh, Pa. respectively. Said named executive committeemen are representative members of said committee, and all of said committeemen are also made respondents herein, as a class, of which those specifically named are representative of the whole.

The membership of said respondent association is principally made up of corporations, firms, and partnerships dealing in and distributing glass products, particularly window glass. Among the members of said respondent association are respondent Postlewait Glass Co., a corporation, with its principal office and place of business in Kansas City, Mo.; respondent Patek Bros. Inc., a corporation, with its principal office and place of business located at Milwaukee, Wis.; respondent Schrenk & Co., a corporation, with its principal office and place of business located at Hoboken, N. J.; respondent Bennett Glass Co., a corporation, with its principal office and place of business located in Salt Lake City, Utah; respondent Pritchard Paint & Glass Co., a corporation, with its principal office and place of business located in Charlotte, N. C.; respondent Hires Turner Glass Co.; a corporation, with its principal office and place of business located at Philadelphia, Pa.; respondent Toledo Plate and Window Glass Co., a corporation, with its principal office and place of business located at Toledo, Ohio; respondent W. P. Fuller and Co., a corporation, with its principal office and place of business located at San Francisco, Calif.; respondent Binswanger and Co., a corporation, with its principal office and place of business located at Richmond, Va. The above-named members of said association do not constitute the entire membership thereof but are representative members of said association. All members of said association are also made respondents herein, as a class, of which those specifically named are representative of the whole. Said respondent members are hereinafter collectively referred to for convenience as "respondent distributors."

Respondent manufacturers, except respondent Pittsburgh Plate Glass Co., are associate members of said respondent National Glass Distributors Assn. Respondent Pittsburgh Plate Glass Co. is a member of said respondent association with approximately thirty-eight distributing establishments, for each of which it holds a full membership in said association.

PAR. 4. Respondent Pittsburgh Plate Glass Co. is engaged in the business of manufacturing window glass and other glass products, and of selling and distributing the same throughout the United States. It maintains and operates factories or manufacturing plants at Creighton, Pa., Ford City, Pa., Ellwood, Ind., Kokomo, Ind., Crystal City, Mo., Mt. Vernon, Ohio, Clarksburg, W. Va., and Henriette, Ohio. It also maintains and operates approximately seventy-three warehouses and controls approximately forty-two stores located in many different states of the United States, from which it sells and distributes its manufactured glass products to dealers and consumers located in the same and different States. In the sale and distribution of its glass products respondent causes the same to be shipped and transported from its said factories to such warehouses and to purchasers in the various States and from the said warehouses and stores to buyers located in many cases in states other than the State in which such warehouse or store is located. The major portion of respondent's said products are so transported from one State to another and between and among the several States of the United States. In the course and conduct of its said business, said respondent is engaged in making sales of and distributing its said products in the course of interstate commerce. Said respondent in numerous cases sells its glass products to distributors who are in competition with it in the sale of such products to other dealers and consumers.

PAR. 5. Respondents Libby-Owens-Ford Glass Co., American Window Glass Co., Adamston Flat Glass Co., Rolland Glass Co., Scohy Sheet Glass Co., Blackford Window Glass Co., and Harding Glass Co., are, and each of them is engaged in the business of manufacturing window glass and flat glass products and of distributing and selling the same in many different States of the United States. Certain of these respondents manufacture and sell other glass products. In the course and conduct of their respective businesses, said respondents and each of them causes to be shipped and transported the products so manufactured by them from the place of manufacture to, into and through States of the United States other than said state of manufacture, and receive and accept orders for such products which are filled by the shipment of such goods, to, into and through the various States of the United States. Each of said respondents is engaged in making sales of and distributing their said products in the course of interstate commerce.

PAR. 6. Respondent Fourco Glass Co. owns the capital stock of and controls respondent Harding Glass Co. Respondent Fourco Glass Co. is engaged in the business of selling and distributing the window glass manufactured by respondents Harding Glass Co., Adamston Flat Glass Co., Rolland Glass Co., Scohy Sheet Glass Co. and Blackford Window Glass Co. In the course and conduct of its business said respondent Fourco Glass Co. sells the products of said named respondents and acts generally as an exclusive selling agent for them on a commission basis. In the sale and distribution of said products respondent Fourco Glass Co. accepts orders for the same from purchasers and allocates said orders among and transmits them to said manufacturers. Said orders are so accepted from and transmitted to and through states of the United States other than the State of West Virginia, where said respondent has its principal place of business. Respondent Fourco Glass Co. is engaged in selling and distributing said products in the course of interstate commerce. Said respondent Fourco Glass Co. is an associate member of respondent National Glass Distributors Association.

PAR. 7. Respondent manufacturers are in competition among themselves, except insofar as their said competition has been hindered, lessened, restricted or restrained or potential competition among them forestalled by their practices and methods hereinafter particularly described and set forth. There are other manufacturers of glass products, particularly window glass, who sell and distribute said products in the various States of the United States, and who, in the ordinary course of their business, seek the same customers that are sought by one or more of respondent manufacturers. These non-member manufacturers also cause their glass products to be shipped and transported from the various points of production or importation in certain states through and into other states of the United States. They are also in competition among themselves and with respondent manufacturers except insofar as their said competition has been hindered, lessened, restricted or restrained or potential competition forestalled as a result of the use by respondent manufacturers of the practices and methods hereafter described. Respondent The Window Glass Manufacturers Association and its officers and directors are not engaged in commerce, but are engaged in unfair methods, hereafter described, which directly affect competition among respondent manufacturers, and substantially among respondent manufacturers and other manufacturers, and also directly affect competition in the sale of window glass and other glass products, between and among dealers and distributors who sell said products for the manufacturer or buy them for resale and resell the same in commerce in and among the various States of the United States.

PAR. 8. Respondent National Glass Distributors Association was organized in 1914 for the avowed purpose of promoting the general welfare of its members engaged in the window glass jobbing business. Its membership purports to be limited to any form of enterprise (including jobbing warehouses owned, operated or controlled by manufacturers) whose business consists of the purchasing for resale of flat glass from manufacturers, (foreign and domestic); and the selling of same to glass dealers and to other wholesale buyers who purchase such products for re-sale and/or utilization; the warehousing and maintaining of such products in jobbing establishments commensurate with the needs of the community and the incidental rehandling, cutting, processing, or otherwise working or handling such products, excluding such processing as changes the products of this trade into the products of another trade or industry; but said membership includes many manufacturers, processors, and enterprises who do not do business in the manner stated, do not have the facilities specified, and who sell to consumers. The membership is divided into five (5) divisions covering the United States: Eastern Division with approximately 26 members; Western Division with approximately 66 members; Pacific Coast Division with approximately 15 members; Southeast Division with approximately 11 members; and Southwest Division with approximately 27 members. The activities and policies of said association are directed by its officers and executive committee named as respondents herein. Said association and its officers and executive committee are not engaged in commerce but are engaged in unfair methods, as hereafter described, which directly and substantially affect competition among manufacturers and among distributors and dealers selling and distributing glass products in interstate commerce in the United States.

PAR. 9. Respondent distributors, being the members of The National Glass Distributors Association, are in competition with one another in the sale or resale and distribution of glass products to dealers and consumers in the various localities and trade areas in the United States in which they respectively operate, except insofar as their said competition has been hindered, lessened, restricted, or restrained or potential competition among them forestalled by their practices and methods hereinafter specifically described and set forth. There are numerous other dealers and distributors dealing in glass products who are engaged in the resale and distribution of such products to dealers and consumers in the various localities and trade areas in the United States in competition with one another and with one or more of respondent distributors, except insofar as such competition has been hindered, lessened, restricted or restrained by or potential competition among them forestalled by the use by respondent distributors and the other respondents named herein of the practices and methods hereafter described. All or nearly all of respondent distributors and their competitors above mentioned are engaged in purchasing glass products which are transported from one state to and through other states as a result of such purchases and in reselling said products in many instances to buyers ordering such products for delivery in States other than the State in which the seller and the product are located when the order is so placed. All of said respondent distributors are engaged in unfair methods, as hereafter set forth, which directly and substantially affect competition among themselves, and between themselves and other dealers, and among manufacturers of glass products.

PAR. 10. Respondent manufacturers above named, who constitute the membership of respondent Window Glass Manufacturers' Association, own and control practically all of the factories producing window glass in the United States and produce most of the window glass sold and distributed in this country. Such respondent manufacturers are able to and do determine and control the prices and terms at which and conditions under which window glass is sold and distributed by manufacturers throughout the United States. Said members of respondent National Glass Distributors Association constitute a group of distributors so large and influential in the trade as to be able by themselves and in cooperation with respondent manufacturers to control and influence the flow of trade and channels of distribution in window glass throughout the country, as well as the prices at which, and the terms and conditions under which non-member distributors of window glass buy and resell such products.

PAR. 11. Respondent officers, directors and members of the Window Glass Manufacturers' Association are banded and allied together in said association to carry into effect certain policies, practices, and methods relating to the manufacture, sale and distribution of window glass, hereinafter more particularly described. Respondent officers, executive committeemen, and members of respondent National Glass Distributors' Association are likewise banded and allied together in their said association to carry into effect certain policies, practices and methods relating to the sale and distribution of window glass, also hereinafter more specifically described. Said respondent officers, directors, executive committeemen, and members direct and control the policies of their respective associations and act collectively and concertedly through said associations as a medium of enforcing such policies and making the same effective.

PAR. 12. Respondents named herein have since about 1935 agreed and conspired, combined and confederated together and with others, and have united in and pursued a common and concerted course of action and undertaking, among themselves and with others, to adopt, follow, carry out, enforce, fix, and maintain throughout the United States, certain monopolistic prices, policies, sales methods and trade practices, hereinafter described, which said respondents have agreed to and adhered to themselves and which they have attempted to and have, by coercion and compulsion imposed upon and on glass manufacturers, distributors and dealers who were not permitted to be or did not desire to be members of either of respondent associations, and others, to the substantial or potential injury of some of such manufacturers, distributors, and dealers and of ultimate purchasers and consumers of glass generally.

PAR. 13. The said monopolistic policies, sales methods, trade practices and prices referred to in the preceding paragraph and which were so adopted, fixed and put into effect are as follows:

1. A policy and practice of requiring that all buyers of window glass from respondent manufacturers be arbitrarily classified either as "quantity buyers" or "carload lot buyers."

2. A policy and practice of requiring that each of respondent manufacturers publish only one window glass price list, showing prices to those classified as "quantity buyers" only and issued to and available to such "quantity buyers" exclusively.

3. A policy and practice of requiring that price lists for window glass to "carload lot buyers" be published only by respondent National Glass Distributors' Association, and distributed only by the members of said association.

4. A policy and practice of requiring that all "carload lot buyers" and other buyers except those classified as "quantity buyers" be required and compelled to purchase window glass from such so-called "quantity buyers" or from respondent manufacturers through such "quantity buyers."

5. A policy and practice of requiring that all "carload lot buyers" and other buyers except those classified as "quantity buyers" be required and compelled to pay 7½% more or a greater excess for window glass of the same grade and quality than the price quoted to and paid by those classified as "quantity buyers."

Complaint

25 F. T. C.

6. A policy and practice of requiring that said 7½% differential be divided, 2½% to the manufacturer and 5% to the so-called "quantity buyer."

7. A policy and practice of requiring that quotations of price for window glass by those classified as "quantity buyers" be confined to a restricted trade area of the particular authorized "quantity buyer" and that such particular "quantity buyer" accept no orders for window glass for transmission to the manufacturer from dealers located outside a designated trade area.

8. A policy and practice of requiring that a "white list" of so-called "quantity buyers" be agreed upon, published and adhered to, and that no dealer not included in such "white list" be permitted to purchase window glass direct from the manufacturer at the price quoted by the manufacturer to those included in such list.

9. A policy and practice of requiring that admittance to such "white list" of quantity buyers be denied to all dealers until after complete investigation by the secretary of the respondent Window Glass Manufacturers Association and that admission to said list be arbitrarily denied for any reason sufficient to said secretary or to said association.

10. A policy and practice resulting in blacklisting certain dealers as ineligible for admittance to said "quantity buyers' white list" or as ineligible to continue to be included on such "white list."

11. A policy and practice of precluding any two or more dealers from making pooled purchases of window glass in carload lots.

12. A policy and practice of precluding a carload lot buyer of window glass from reconsigning or diverting said carload to some other dealer.

13. A policy and practice of enabling the so-called "quantity buyers" to purchase window glass from the manufacturers at the manufacturers' list price and of denying this privilege to all other buyers.

14. A policy and practice used by respondent manufacturers of simultaneously issuing and of using identical price lists for window glass, and making effective substantially the same trade discounts from each manufacturer's list.

15. A policy and practice used by respondent manufacturers of agreeing upon and fixing and maintaining the prices at which and the terms upon which their said window and other glass should be and was offered for sale and sold.

16. A policy and practice by which prices on window glass to "carload buyers" was and is fixed and maintained at 7½% more than the price quoted by respondent manufacturers to said approved "quantity buyers."

17. A policy and practice of supervising and directing the practices and policies of dealers reselling window glass to other dealers and consumers, of causing resale prices for such window glass to be fixed and maintained and generally of controlling resale markets and outlets for such product.

18. Generally, a policy and practice which was designed to and tended to monopolize the manufacture, sale, and distribution of window glass in the respondents named herein.

PAR. 14. That for the purpose of making such sales practices and policies and pricing methods effective, and of requiring compliance therewith and observance thereof by all dealers in window glass throughout the United States, said respondent associations, acting through their officers, directors, and executive committee, and with the knowledge, consent, approval, and active cooperation and participation of respondent members and other members, and the individual respondents named herein or one or more of them, acting in furtherance of and in pursuance of the general plan, undertaking, conspiracy, and policy, have collectively as groups or individually done the following things:

1. Formulated, adopted, followed, carried out, enforced, imposed, and made effective the policies, practices, and methods described in the preceding paragraph.

2. Held official and unofficial meetings of said associations at which the policies and practices hereinabove described were discussed, adopted and agreed to, and issued and distributed bulletins, circulars, letters, price lists, and other printed matter, and distributed the same among the members of said associations and others, announcing the adoption of the policies, practices and requirements referred to and the imposition of the same upon all affected thereby.

3. Classified all buyers of window glass from manufacturers throughout the United States either as "quantity buyers" or "carload lot buyers."

4. Each of respondent manufacturers has published a single window glass price list quoting prices to approved "quantity buyers" only and issued said price lists to such "quantity buyers" exclusively.

5. Respondent National Glass Distributors Association has issued price lists for window glass to "carload lot buyers" for glass to be purchased from respondent manufacturers.

6. Respondent manufacturers have and do refuse to sell window glass in carload lots directly to any buyer except approved "quantity buyers."

7. Respondent manufacturers have compelled all "carload lot buyers" of window glass to purchase such glass through the members of the National Glass Distributors Association or through approved "quantity buyers."

8. Members of the National Glass Distributors Association have issued price lists to "carload lot buyers" and made the same available only to certain buyers whom they considered eligible to buy in carload lots.

9. Respondent distributors have refused to accept orders for carload lots of window glass for transmission to the manufacturers from dealers located outside of their respective restricted trade areas.

10. Respondents generally have formulated and published a "white list" of "quantity buyers" who were authorized to purchase direct from the manufacturers at the manufacturers' list price and arbitrarily included and excluded certain dealers from said "white list."

11. Respondent manufacturers have issued identical price lists simultaneously and offered substantially the same trade discounts from each particular list.

12. Respondents generally have issued bulletins, circulars and other printed matter listing the names and addresses of said authorized "quantity buyers" and setting forth the plan and policy which would be followed in marketing window glass to dealers in the United States.

13. Respondents generally have sought and obtained promises and assurances of cooperation from one another in establishing and making effective the sales practices, policies and pricing methods hereinabove described.

14. Respondent manufacturers have sold window glass to numerous "carload lot buyers" at prices $7\frac{1}{2}\%$ greater than those at which sales were made to "quantity buyers" for glass of the same grade and quality.

15. Respondent manufacturers have diverted orders for carloads of window glass from "carload lot buyers" to so-called "quantity buyers" and filled such orders by direct shipment to the carload lot buyer at a $7\frac{1}{2}\%$ mark-up over the manufacturers' list prices for such products.

16. Respondent manufacturers have agreed upon and fixed and maintained the prices, terms and trade discounts at which their said window glass was offered for sale and sold.

17. Respondent distributors have induced respondent manufacturers to grant them discriminatory prices and have received and accepted such discriminatory prices.

18. Respondents generally have exchanged information with reference to their respective businesses and activities which was used in furtherance of the policies and methods referred to.

19. Respondents generally have supervised and investigated the practices and policies of dealers engaged in reselling window glass to other dealers and to consumers and the prices at which such product was so resold, and have prevented some dealers who did not conform to their practices, policies, and prices from buying window glass at the manufacturers' list price or in carload lots, and have acted concertedly to maintain certain resale prices agreed upon, to control resale markets and to coercively require recalcitrant dealers to conform to such practices and methods.

PAR. 15. The capacity, tendency, and effect of said plan, agreement, combination, conspiracy, undertaking, policies, and methods, and the said acts and practices of said respondents in pursuance thereof, are and have been:

1. To monopolize in said respondent manufacturers the business of manufacturing and of selling and distributing window glass to distributors in the United States.

2. To monopolize in said respondent distributors the opportunity to purchase window glass from the manufacturers at the manufacturers' list price.

3. To fix and maintain the prices at and conditions under which such window glass is sold by the manufacturers.

4. To fix and maintain the prices at and conditions under which window glass is resold by distributors to dealers and consumers.

5. To bring about an unlawful discrimination in the prices at which window glass is sold by the manufacturers to different purchasers.

6. To unreasonably lessen, eliminate, restrain, stifle, hamper, and suppress competition in the window glass trade and industry and to deprive the purchasing and consuming public of advantages in price, service, and other considerations which they would receive and enjoy under conditions of normal and unobstructed or free and fair competition in said trade and industry; and to otherwise operate as a restraint upon and a detriment to the freedom of fair and legitimate competition in such trade and industry.

7. To substantially increase the cost to purchasers of such window glass.

8. To suppress, eliminate, and discriminate against small business enterprises which are or have been engaged or desire to engage in manufacturing, selling, or distributing window glass.

9. To obstruct and prevent the establishment of new distributors of window glass.

Complaint

25 F. T. C.

10. To suppress and eliminate all price competition among manufacturers in the sale of window glass and among distributors in the resale thereof.

11. To eliminate all sales of window glass through sales agencies or brokers.

12. To burden, hamper, and interfere with the normal and natural flow of trade and commerce in window glass, into, through and from the various States of the United States; and to injure the competitors of individual respondents by unfairly diverting business and trade from them, depriving them thereof, and otherwise driving or freezing them out of business.

13. To prejudice and injure manufacturers, dealers, distributors, and others who do not conform to respondent's program or methods or who do not desire to conform to them, but are compelled to do so by the concerted action of respondents herein alleged.

PAR. 16. The above alleged acts and things done by respondents have a dangerous tendency unduly to hinder competition in the window glass trade throughout the United States, and to create a monopoly thereof in the hands of respondents and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26th, 1914.

Count 2

PARAGRAPH 1. Paragraphs 1 to 15 inclusive of count 1 hereof are hereby adopted and made a part of this charge as fully as if set out herein verbatim.

PAR. 2. All of the respondents herein named have since sometime prior to June 16, 1936, conspired and confederated together to bring about and have brought about and made effective a policy and system whereby respondent manufacturers discriminate and have discriminated in price between different purchasers of window glass of like grade and quality, in the manner hereinabove set forth, with the effect of lessening competition and tending to create a monopoly in said line of commerce and with the effect of injuring, destroying and preventing competition between and among such "quantity buyers" and such "carload lot buyers" and between and among the customers of such buyers purchasing such product for resale to consumers.

PAR. 3. In the course and conduct of their respective businesses as above described, respondent manufacturers since sometime prior to June 19th, 1936, have discriminated in price and are now discriminating in price between different purchasers buying window glass of like grade and quality in interstate commerce for re-sale to dealers and consumers, by charging some of their said purchasers of window glass higher prices than those charged other of their said purchasers, competitively engaged one with the other in the resale of said products within the United States. Said discriminations consist in the imposition of a mark-up of $7\frac{1}{2}\%$ upon all "carload lot buyers" over and above the manufacturers' list price at which window glass has been and is being sold to the so-called "quantity buyers."

PAR. 4. Respondent members of the National Glass Distributors Association have knowingly induced said respondent manufacturers to so discriminate in price as charged in the preceding paragraph hereof and have knowingly received such discriminations in price on purchase of window glass made by them.

PAR. 5. The general effect of said systematic discriminations in price so made by respondent manufacturers and induced and received by respondent distributors has been or may be substantially to lessen competition and tend to create a monopoly in the manufacture, sale, and distribution of window glass and to injure, destroy and prevent competition between and among respondent distributors and their competitors and between and among customers of each.

PAR. 6. The foregoing alleged acts of the said respondents are in violation of Section 2A and Section 2F of said Act of Congress approved June 19, 1936 entitled "An Act to amend Section 2 of the Act entitled 'An Act to supplement existing laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies and for other purposes' approved October 15, 1914 as amended (U. S. C. Title 15, Section 13), and for other purposes."

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," (the Federal Trade Commission Act) and pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved October 15, 1914, entitled "An Act to supplement existing laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies and for other purposes" (the Clayton Act), as amended by "An Act to amend Section 2 of the Act entitled 'An Act to supplement existing laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies and for other purposes' approved October 15, 1914 as amended (U. S. C. Title 15, Section 13), and for other purposes" (the Robinson-Patman Act), the Federal Trade Commission, on June 16,

Findings

25 F. T. C.

1937, issued, and subsequently served, its complaint in this proceeding upon the respondents named in the caption hereof, charging them with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce, in violation of the provisions of said Federal Trade Commission Act, and with acts and practices in violation of subsections (a) and (f) of Section 2 of said Robinson-Patman Act.

After the issuance and service of said complaint, said respondents filed their answer to the complaint, in which respondents admitted, for the purposes of this proceeding only, all the material allegations of said complaint, except those contained in sub-paragraphs 14 and 15, paragraph 13, sub-paragraphs 11 and 16 of paragraph 14 and sub-paragraph 10 of paragraph 15, thereof. Said respondents also consented in said answer that the Commission might proceed to make its findings of fact without further proceedings and that an order might issue and be served upon the respondents requiring them to cease and desist from the unfair methods of competition and the violations of law alleged in the complaint. The said Commission having duly considered the above and being fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom.

Respondent Adamston Flat Glass Co. is a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of West Virginia with its principal office and place of business located at Clarksburg, W. Va.

Respondent Rolland Glass Co. is a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of West Virginia with its principal office and place of business located at Clarksburg, W. Va.

Respondent Scohy Sheet Glass Co. is a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of West Virginia, with its principal office and place of business located at Sistersville, W. Va.

Respondent Blackford Window Glass Co. is a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Indiana with its principal office and place of business located at Vincennes, Ind.

PAR. 2. Respondent The Window Glass Manufacturers Association is an unincorporated association with its principal office and place of business located at 19 W. 44th St., New York, N. Y. The officers of said association in 1936 were respondent William L. Monro, president, who is likewise president of respondent American Window Glass Co., Pittsburgh, Pa.; respondent Frank Bastin, vice president, who was the president of respondent Blackford Window Glass Co., Vincennes, Ind.; and respondent Charles R. Stevenson, secretary-treasurer, of 19 W. 44th St., New York, N. Y. The officers of said Association are at present William L. Monro, president, who is likewise president of respondent American Window Glass Company; Eugene Rolland, vice president who is president of respondent Rolland Glass Company; and respondent, Charles R. Stevenson, secretary-treasurer. The membership of said respondent association consists of respondents Adamston Flat Glass Co., American Window Glass Co., Blackford Window Glass Co., Harding Glass Co., Libbey-Owens-Ford Co., Pittsburgh Plate Glass Co., Rolland Glass Co., and Scohy Sheet Glass Co. Said respondent members are hereinafter collectively referred to for convenience as "respondent manufacturers."

PAR. 3. Respondent The National Glass Distributors Association is an unincorporated association with its principal office and place of business located at 2217 Tribune Tower, Chicago, Ill.

The officers of said respondent association in 1936 were respondents G. G. Postlewait, president and vice president, a representative of respondent Postlewait Glass Co., Kansas City, Mo.; respondent N. J. Klein, vice president, a representative of respondent Patek Bros. Inc., Milwaukee, Wis.; respondent J. J. Gibian, vice president, a representative of respondent Schrenk & Co., Hoboken, N. J.; respondent W. F. Bennett, vice president, a representative of respondent

Bennett Glass Co., Salt Lake City, Utah; respondent T. W. Pritchard, vice president, a representative of respondent Pritchard Paint & Glass Co., Charlotte, N. C.; and respondent North Storms, secretary-treasurer, of 2217 Tribune Tower, Chicago, Ill. The present officers of said respondent association are: president, William Plummer, Jr., a representative of respondent Hires Turner Glass Co., Philadelphia, Pa.; vice presidents, Ben Newton of Semon Bache & Co., New York, N. Y.; N. J. Klein of Patek Brothers, Inc., Milwaukee, Wis.; Wallace F. Bennett of Bennett Glass & Paint Co., Salt Lake City, Utah; T. W. Pritchard of Pritchard Paint & Glass Co., Charlotte, N. C.; G. G. Postlewait of Postlewait Glass Co., Kansas City, Mo.; and Harold Florman of Florman Manufacturing Co., Pueblo, Colo.; and secretary-treasurer, respondent North Storms.

The executive committee of said respondent association is composed of approximately twenty-four individuals who respectively represent individual members. Among such executive committeemen in 1936 were respondent S. C. Gilmore, a representative of respondent Hires Turner Glass Co.; respondent George L. Heater, a representative of respondent Toledo Plate and Window Glass Co.; respondent A. H. Brawner, a representative of respondent W. P. Fuller and Co.; respondent S. E. Binswanger, a representative of respondent Binswanger and Co.; and respondents T. E. Jackson and R. B. Tucker, representatives of respondent Pittsburgh Plate Glass Co. at Dallas, Tex., and Pittsburgh, Pa. respectively. Said executive committee at the present time is composed of: J. J. Gibian of Schrenk & Company, Hoboken, N. J.; Geo. E. Hills of Boston Plate & Window Glass Co., Boston, Mass.; E. J. Lienert of Buffalo Plate & Window Glass Corp., Buffalo, N. Y.; Adolph Maeulen, of Williamsport Mirror & Glass Co., Williamsport, Pa.; J. J. Tanyan, of Pittsburgh Plate Glass Co., Brooklyn, N. Y.; G. Frank Wallace of Syracuse Glass Company, Syracuse, N. Y.; R. J. Clemens of Standard Glass & Paint Company, Des Moines, Iowa; A. E. Clerihew of Forman, Ford & Co., Minneapolis, Minn.; Arthur Dole, Jr., of Hooker Glass & Paint Mfg. Co., Chicago, Ill.; George L. Heater of The Toledo Plate & Window Glass Co., Toledo, Ohio; L. B. Huguenor of Pittsburgh Plate Glass Co., Chicago, Ill.; C. W. Kendle of Central Glass Co., Louisville, Ky.; D. H. Startzman of The Wm. Glenn Glass Company, Cincinnati, Ohio; Robert J. Fulton of Raphael Glass Co., Los Angeles, Calif.; Rudolph Habenicht of Habenicht & Howlett, San Francisco, Calif.; Ben Tyre of Tyre Bros. Glass & Paint Co., Inc., Los Angeles, Calif.; S. E. Hardy of Pittsburgh Plate Glass Co., Denver, Colo.; W. R. McFarland of McMurtry Manufacturing Co., Denver, Colo.; G. A. Vaughan of Southwestern Sash & Door Co., Albuquerque, N. Mex.; and R. B. Tucker of Pittsburgh Plate Glass Co., Pittsburgh, Pa.

The membership of said respondent association is principally made up of corporations, firms, and partnerships dealing in and distributing glass products, particularly window glass. Among the members of said respondent association are respondent Postlewait Glass Co., a corporation, with its principal office and place of business in Kansas City, Mo.; respondent Patek Bros., Inc., a corporation, with its principal office and place of business located at Milwaukee, Wis.; respondent Schrenk & Co., a corporation, with its principal office and place of business in Hoboken, N. J.; respondent Bennett Glass Co., a corporation, with its principal office and place of business located in Salt Lake City, Utah; respondent Pritchard Paint & Glass Co., a corporation, with its principal office and place of business located in Charlotte, N. C.; respondent Hires Turner Glass Co.; a corporation, with its principal office and place of business located at Philadelphia, Pa.; respondent Toledo Plate and Window Glass Co., a corporation, with its principal office and place of business located at Toledo, Ohio; respondent W. P. Fuller and Co., a corporation, with its principal office and place of business located at San Francisco, Calif.; respondent Binswanger and Co., a corporation, with its principal office and place of business located at Richmond, Va. The above named members of said association do not constitute the entire membership thereof but are representative members of said association. All members of said association were also made respondents herein, as a class, of which those specifically named are representative of the whole. Said respondent members are hereinafter collectively referred to for convenience as "respondent distributors."

Respondent manufacturers, except respondent Pittsburgh Plate Glass Co., are associate members of said respondent National Glass Distributors Assn. Respondent Pittsburgh Plate Glass Co. is a member of said respondent association with approximately seventy distributing establishments, for thirty-eight of which it holds a full membership in said association.

PAR. 4. Respondent Pittsburgh Plate Glass Co. is engaged in the business of manufacturing window glass and other glass products, and of selling and distributing the same throughout the United States. It maintains and operates factories or manufacturing plants at Creighton, Pa., Ford City, Pa., Ellwood, Ind., Kokomo, Ind., Crystal City, Mo., Mt. Vernon, Ohio, Clarksburg, W. Va., and Henryetta, Okla. It also maintains and operates approximately seventy warehouses located in many different States of the United States, from which it sells and distributes its manufactured glass products to dealers and consumers located in the same and different States. In the sale and distribution of its glass products respondent causes the same to be shipped and transported from its said factories to such warehouses and to purchasers in the various States and from the said warehouses to buyers located in many cases in States other than the State in which such warehouse is located. The major portion of respondent's said products are so transported from one State to another and between and among the several States of the United States. In the course and conduct of its said business, said respondent is engaged in making sales of and distributing its said products in the course of interstate commerce. Said respondent in numerous cases sells its glass products to distributors who are in competition with it in the sale of such products to other dealers and consumers.

PAR. 5. Respondent Libbey-Owens-Ford Glass Co., American Window Glass Co., Adamston Flat Glass Co., Rolland Glass Co., Schohy Sheet Glass Co., Blackford Window Glass Co., and Harding Glass Co., are and each of them is engaged in the business of manufacturing window glass and flat glass products and of distributing and selling the same in many different States of the United States. Certain of these respondents manufacture and sell other glass products. In the course and conduct of their respective businesses, said respondents and each of them causes to be shipped and transported the products so manufactured by them from the place of manufacture to, into and through States of the United States other than said State of manufacture, and receive and accept orders for such products which are filled by the shipment of such goods, to, into and through the various States of the United States. Each of said respondents is engaged in making sales of and distributing their said products in the course of interstate commerce.

PAR. 6. Respondent Fourco Glass Co. owns the capital stock of and controls respondent Harding Glass Co. Respondent Fourco Glass Co. is engaged in the business of selling and distributing the window glass manufactured by respondents Harding Glass Co., Adamston Flat Glass Co., Rolland Glass Co., Schohy Sheet Glass Co., and Blackford Window Glass Co. In the course and conduct of its business said respondent Fourco Glass Co. sells the products of said named respondents and acts generally as an exclusive selling agent for them on a commission basis. In the sale and distribution of said products respondent Fourco Glass Co. accepts orders for the same from purchasers and allocates said orders among and transmits them to said manufacturers. Said orders are so accepted from and transmitted to and through States of the United States other than the State of West Virginia, where said respondent has its principal place of business. Respondent Fourco Glass Co. is engaged in selling and distributing said products in the course of interstate commerce.

PAR 7. Respondent manufacturers are in competition among themselves, except insofar as their said competition has been hindered, lessened, restricted, or restrained or potential competition among them forestalled by their practices and methods hereinafter particularly described and set forth. There are other manufacturers of glass products, particularly window glass, who sell and distribute said products in the various States of the United States, and who, in the ordinary course of their business, seek the same customers that are sought by one or more of respondent manufacturers. These nonmember manufacturers also cause their glass products to be shipped and transported from the various points of production or importation in certain States through and into other States of the United States. They are also in competition among themselves and with respondent manufacturers except insofar as their said competition has been hindered, lessened, restricted, or restrained or potential competition forestalled as a result of the use by respondent manufacturers of the practices and methods hereafter described. Respondent The Window Glass Manufacturers Association and its officers and directors are not engaged in commerce, but are engaged in unfair methods, hereafter described, which directly affect competition among respondent manufacturers, and also directly affect competition in the sale of window glass and other glass products, between and among dealers and distributors who sell said products for the manufacturer or buy them for resale and resell the same in commerce in and among the various States of the United States.

PAR 8. Respondent National Glass Distributors Association was organized in 1914 for the avowed purpose of promoting the general welfare of its members engaged in the window glass jobbing business. Its membership purports to be limited to any form of enterprise (including jobbing warehouses owned, operated or controlled by manufacturers) whose business consists of the purchasing for resale of flat glass from manufacturers (foreign and domestic); and the selling of same to glass dealers and to other wholesale buyers who purchase such products for resale and/or utilization; the warehousing and maintaining of such products in jobbing establishments commensurate with the needs of the community and the incidental rehandling, cutting, processing, or otherwise working or handling such products, excluding such processing as changes the products of this trade into the products of another trade or industry; but said membership includes some manufacturers; and also includes enterprises who do not do business in the manner stated, do not have the facilities specified, and who sell to consumers. The membership is divided into five (5) divisions covering the United States: Eastern Division with approximately 34 members; Western Division with approximately 66 members; Pacific Coast Division with approximately 17 members; Southeast Division with approximately 11 members; Southwest Division with approximately 27 members; and Rocky Mountain Division with approximately 6 members. The activities and policies of said association are directed by its officers and executive committee. Said association and its officers and executive committee are not engaged in commerce but are engaged in unfair methods, as hereafter described, which directly and substantially affect competition among manufacturers and among distributors and dealers selling and distributing glass products in interstate commerce in the United States.

PAR. 9. Respondent distributors, being the members of The National Glass Distributors Association, are in competition with one another in the sale or resale and distribution of glass products to dealers and consumers in the various localities and trade areas in the United States in which they respectively operate, except insofar as their said competition has been hindered, lessened, restricted or restrained or potential competition among them forestalled by their practices and methods hereinafter specifically described and set forth. There are numerous other dealers and distributors dealing in glass products who are engaged in the resale and distribution of such products to dealers and consumers in the various localities and trade areas in the United States in competition with one another and with one or more of respondent distributors, except insofar as such competition has been hindered, lessened, restricted or restrained by or potential competition among them forestalled by the use by respondent distributors and the other respondents named herein of the practices and methods hereafter described. All or nearly all of respondent distributors and their competitors above mentioned are engaged in purchasing glass products which are transported from one State to and through other States as a result of such purchases and in reselling said products in many instances to buyers ordering such products for delivery in States other than the State in which the seller and the product are located when the order is so placed. All of said respondent distributors are engaged in unfair methods, as hereafter set forth, which directly and substantially affect competition among themselves, and between themselves and other dealers, and among manufacturers of glass products.

PAR. 10. Respondent manufacturers above named, who constitute the membership of respondent Window Glass Manufacturers' Association, own and control practically all of the factories producing window glass in the United States and produce most of the window glass sold and distributed in this country. Such respondent manufacturers are able to influence the prices and terms at which and conditions under which window glass is sold by manufacturers throughout the United States. Said members of respondent National Glass Distributors Association constitute a group of distributors so large and influential in the trade as to be able by themselves and in cooperation with respondent manufacturers to influence the flow of trade and channels of distribution in window glass throughout the country, as well as the prices at which, and the terms and conditions under which distributors of window glass buy such products.

PAR. 11. Respondent officers, directors, and members of the Window Glass Manufacturers' Association have been associated and allied together in said association to carry into effect certain policies, practices and methods relating to the sale and distribution of window glass, hereinafter more particularly described. Respondent officers, executive committeemen and members of respondent National Glass Distributors' Association have been likewise associated and allied together in their said association to carry into effect certain policies, practices and methods relating to the sale and distribution of window glass, also hereinafter more specifically described. Said respondent officers, directors, executive committeemen, and members form and control the policies of their respective associations and act collectively and concertedly through said associations as a medium of making the same effective.

PAR. 12. Respondents named herein have since about 1935 agreed and conspired, combined and confederated together and with others, and have united in and pursued a common and concerted course of action and undertaking, among themselves and with others, to adopt, follow, carry out, enforce and maintain throughout the United States, certain policies, sales methods, and trade practices, hereinafter described, which said respondents have agreed to and adhered to themselves and which they have attempted to and have, by coercion and compulsion imposed upon glass distributors and dealers who were not permitted to be or did not desire to be members of respondent distributors association, and others, to the actual or potential injury of some of such distributors and dealers and of ultimate purchasers and consumers of glass generally.

PAR. 13. The said policies, sales methods and trade practices referred to in the preceding paragraph and which were so adopted and put into effect are as follows:

1. A policy and practice by which all buyers of window glass from respondent manufacturers were classified either as "quantity buyers" defined as buyers purchasing a minimum of from 3,000 to 5,000 50-foot boxes of window glass for stock per year, or "carload lot buyers," and a list of such quantity buyers was formulated, printed and circulated among respondents.

2. A policy and practice by which each of respondent manufacturers published only one window glass price list, showing prices to those classified as "quantity buyers" only and issued to and intended for use by such "quantity buyers" exclusively.

3. A policy and practice as a result of which price lists for window glass to "carload lot buyers" were published exclusively by respondent National Glass Distributors' Association, and distributed only by the members of said association.

4. A policy and practice by which all "carload lot buyers" and other buyers except those classified as "quantity buyers" and placed on the "quantity buyers" list were required and compelled to purchase window glass from such so-called "quantity buyers" or from respondent manufacturers through such "quantity buyers."

5. A policy and practice by which all "carload lot buyers" and other buyers except those classified as "quantity buyers" were required and compelled to pay up to $7\frac{1}{2}\%$ more for window glass of the same grade and quality than the price quoted to and paid by those classified as "quantity buyers."

6. A policy and practice of agreeing that on sales of window glass to carload lot buyers, the manufacturers were to receive $2\frac{1}{2}\%$ and the quantity buyers 5% over the quoted list price charged quantity buyers by the manufacturers.

7. A policy and practice by which sales of window glass by those classified as "quantity buyers" were confined to a restricted trade area of the particular authorized "quantity buyer" and such particular "quantity buyer" accepted no orders or rarely accepted orders for window glass for transmission to the manufacturer from dealers located outside a designated trade area.

8. A policy and practice by which admittance to such list of "quantity buyers" was granted or denied only after complete investigation by the secretary of the respondent Window Glass Manufacturers Association to determine eligibility as quantity buyers, the final decision being made by the association.

9. A policy and practice of precluding any two or more dealers from making pooled purchases of window glass in carload lots.

10. A policy and practice of precluding a carload lot buyer of window glass from reconsigning or diverting said carload to some other dealer.

11. A policy and practice of supervising and directing the practices and policies of dealers reselling window glass to other dealers and consumers, and generally of controlling distribution and outlets for such product.

12. Generally, a policy and practice which tended to lessen and restrain competition in the sale and distribution of window glass in the United States.

PAR. 14. That for the purpose of making such sales practices and policies and pricing methods effective, and of requiring compliance therewith and observance thereof by all dealers in window glass throughout the United States, said respondent associations, acting through their officers, directors and executive committee, and with the knowledge, consent, approval, and active cooperation and participation of respondent members and other members, and the individual respondents named herein or one or more of them, acting in furtherance of and in pursuance of the general plan, undertaking, conspiracy, and policy, have done the following things:

1. Formulated, adopted, followed, carried out, enforced, imposed, and made effective the policies, practices, and methods described in the preceding paragraph.

2. Held official and unofficial meetings of said associations at which the policies and practices hereinabove described were discussed, adopted, and agreed to, and issued and distributed bulletins, circulars, letters, and other printed matter, and distributed the same among the members of said association and others, announcing the adoption of and the intention to adhere to the policies and practices referred to.

3. Classified all buyers of window glass from manufacturers throughout the United States either as "quantity buyers" or "carload lot buyers."

4. Each of respondent manufacturers has published a single window glass price list quoting prices to approved "quantity buyers" only and issued said price lists to such "quantity buyers" exclusively.

5. Respondent National Glass Distributors Association has issued price lists for window glass to "carload lot buyers" for glass to be purchased from respondent manufacturers.

6. Respondent manufacturers have refused to sell window glass in carload lots directly to any buyer except approved "quantity buyers."

7. Respondents generally have issued bulletins, circulars and other printed matter listing the names and addresses of authorized "quantity buyers" and setting forth the plan and policy which would be followed in marketing window glass to dealers in the United States.

8. Respondents generally have sought and obtained promises and assurances of cooperation from one another in establishing and making effective the sales practices, policies and pricing methods hereinabove described.

9. Respondent manufacturers have indirectly sold window glass to numerous "carload lot buyers" at prices $7\frac{1}{2}\%$ more than the prices at which sales were made to "quantity buyers" for glass of the same grade and quantity.

10. Respondent manufacturers have referred orders for carloads of window glass from "carload lot buyers" to so-called "quantity buyers" and filled such orders by direct shipment to the carload lot buyer with a $2\frac{1}{2}\%$ mark-up over the manufacturers' list price, and with the understanding that said quantity buyers would add and receive an additional mark-up of 5%.

11. Respondent distributors have induced respondent manufacturers to grant them discriminatory prices as hereinbefore stated and have received and accepted such discriminatory prices.

12. Respondents generally have exchanged information with reference to their respective businesses and activities which was used in furtherance of the policies and methods referred to.

13. Respondents generally have supervised and investigated the practices and policies of dealers engaged in reselling window glass to other dealers and to consumers and the prices at which such product was so resold to effectuate the practices herein found to have been used; and have prevented some dealers who did not conform to their practices, policies and prices from buying window glass at the manufacturers' list price or in carload lots, and have acted concertedly to control channels of distribution and to require dealers to conform to such practices and methods.

PAR. 15. The capacity, tendency and effect of said plan, agreement, combination, conspiracy, undertaking, policies and methods, and the said acts and practices of said respondents in pursuance thereof, are and have been:

1. To tend to concentrate in said quantity buyers the opportunity to purchase window glass from the manufacturers at the manufacturers' discount from the list price.

2. To standardize the prices at and conditions under which window glass is sold by the manufacturers in carload lots to other than those classified as quantity buyers.

3. To bring about an unlawful discrimination in the prices at which window glass is sold by the manufacturers to different purchasers.

4. To unreasonably lessen, eliminate, restrain, stifle, hamper, and suppress competition in the window glass trade and industry and to tend to deprive the purchasing and consuming public of advantages in price, service and other considerations which they would receive and enjoy under conditions of normal and unobstructed or free and fair competition in said trade and industry; and to operate as a restraint upon and a detriment to the freedom of fair and legitimate competition in such trade and industry.

5. To tend to increase the cost to purchasers of such window glass.

6. To discriminate against small business enterprises which are engaged or desire to engage in selling or distributing window glass.

7. To tend to obstruct the establishment of new distributors of window glass.

8. To tend to lessen and restrain price competition among manufacturers in the sale of window glass in carload lots to other than quantity buyers.

9. To burden, hamper, and interfere with the normal and natural flow of trade and commerce in window glass, into, through and from the various States of the United States; and to injure the competitors of individual distributor-respondents by unfairly diverting business and trade from them, and otherwise depriving them unfairly of competitive advantages which they would receive under conditions of free and open competition.

10. To prejudice and injure dealers, distributors and others who do not conform to respondents' program or methods or who do not desire to conform to them, but are compelled to do so by the concerted action of respondents herein.

PAR. 16. All of the respondents herein named have since sometime prior to June 19, 1936, conspired and confederated together to bring about and have brought about and have made effective a policy and system whereby respondent manufacturers discriminate and have discriminated in price between different purchasers of window glass of like grade and quality, in the manner hereinabove set forth, with the effect of lessening competition between and among manufacturers in said line of commerce and with the effect of injuring, destroying and preventing competition between and among such "quantity buyers" and such "carload lot buyers" and between and among the customers of such buyers purchasing such product for resale to consumers.

PAR. 17. In the course and conduct of their respective businesses as above described, respondent manufacturers since sometime prior to June 19th, 1936, have discriminated in price between different purchasers buying window glass of like grade and quality in interstate commerce for resale to dealers and consumers, by charging some of their said purchasers of window glass higher prices than those charged other of their said purchasers, competitively engaged one with the other in the resale of said products within the United States. Said discriminations consist in the imposition of a markup of $2\frac{1}{2}\%$ by the manufacturer upon all "carload lot buyers" over and above the manufacturers' list price at which window glass has been and is being sold to the so-called "quantity buyers."

PAR. 18. Respondent members of the National Glass Distributors' Association have knowingly induced said respondent manufacturers to so discriminate in price as set forth in the preceding paragraph hereof and have knowingly received such discriminations in price on purchases of window glass made by them.

PAR. 19. The general effect of said systematic discriminations in price so made by respondent manufacturers and induced and received by respondent distributors has been or may be substantially to lessen competition and tend to create a monopoly in the sale and distribution of window glass and to injure, destroy and prevent competition between and among respondent distributors and their competitors and between and among customers of each.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of respondents have a dangerous tendency unduly to hinder competition in the window glass trade throughout the United States, and to create a monopoly thereof in the hands of respondents and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes" approved September 26th, 1914; and the acts and practices set forth in paragraphs 16 to 19 inclusive of the said respondents are in violation of Section 2 (a) and Section 2 (f) of said Act of Congress approved June 19, 1936, entitled "An Act to amend Section 2 of the Act entitled 'An Act to supplement existing laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies and for other purposes' approved October 15, 1914, as amended (U. S. C. Title 15, Section 13), and for other purposes."

Order

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

It is ordered, That respondent, The Window Glass Manufacturers Association, and its officers, directors, and members, in connection with the manufacture, sale and distribution of window glass in interstate commerce by respondents, Pittsburgh Plate Glass Company, Libbey-Owens-Ford Glass Company, American Window Glass Company, Fourco Glass Company, Harding Glass Company, Adamston Flat Glass Company, Rolland Glass Company, Scohy Sheet Glass Company, and Blackford Window Glass Company, or either or any of them, forthwith cease and desist:

1. From combining or conspiring among themselves or with other respondents to engage in, or pursuant to any such combination or conspiracy, directly or indirectly, from engaging in, any of the following acts, practices, or policies:

1. Formulating, adopting, or using any standard of classification of jobbers, wholesalers, or distributors dealing in window glass to be used as a test of eligibility for such dealers to purchase window glass from the manufacturers thereof;

2. Compiling or publishing any list of jobbers, wholesalers, or distributors for use by members of said Window Glass Manufacturers Association or other manufacturers for the purpose of accomplishing anything prohibited by this order.

3. Investigating, or collecting or disseminating information concerning the pricing policies, trade practices, facilities, or function of any jobber, wholesaler, or distributor dealing in window glass for the purpose of accomplishing anything prohibited by this order.

4. Collectively selecting the customers to whom members of said Window Glass Manufacturers Association will make direct sales of window glass;

5. Hindering, obstructing or preventing any jobber, wholesaler, or distributor from freely purchasing or obtaining window glass usually handled by members of the said Window Glass Manufacturers Association in the course of their business, or from freely competing with the members of the National Glass Distributors Association or others engaged in similar business;

6. Hindering, obstructing, or preventing two or more jobbers, wholesalers, or distributors from pooling purchases of window glass, or from reconsigning or diverting purchases of window glass;

7. Hindering, obstructing or preventing any jobber, wholesaler or distributor from purchasing or ordering window glass in carload lots from any manufacturer and directing the manufacturer to ship it to any desired designated point.

8. Giving oral, written, or other notices or communications to jobbers, wholesalers, or distributors dealing in window glass that any business concern is not entitled to purchase and obtain window glass upon the same terms and conditions usually accorded by members of the Window Glass Manufacturers Association to their customers generally.

9. Hindering, obstructing, or preventing any jobber, wholesaler, or distributor dealing in window glass from dealing with one or more of the members of the Window Glass Manufacturers Association upon as favorable terms and conditions as are usually accorded by said manufacturers to their customers generally.

10. Cooperating with or aiding any jobber, wholesaler, or distributor in putting into effect any understanding or agreement to add any amount to the manufacturer's price for window glass in carload lots for direct shipment in order to arrive at the invoice price of such glass to the purchaser thereof.

It is further ordered, That respondent, The National Glass Distributors Association, its officers, executive committee, and members, in connection with the purchase, sale and distribution of window glass in interstate commerce by the members of said Association, or either or any of them, forthwith cease and desist:

From combining or conspiring among themselves or with others, to engage in, or pursuant to any such combination or conspiracy, directly or indirectly, from engaging in, any of the following acts, practices or policies:

1. Inducing, persuading, or compelling members of respondent Window Glass Manufacturers Association to, or themselves formulating, adopting or using any standard of classification of jobbers, wholesalers, or distributors dealing in window glass or any test of eligibility for such dealers to purchase window glass from the manufacturers thereof, or classifying jobbers, wholesalers, or distributors dealing in window glass as quantity buyers and carload buyers;

2. Compiling or publishing any list of jobbers, wholesalers, or distributors for use by members of said Window Glass Manufacturers Association or other manufacturers, or investigating, collecting, or disseminating information concerning the pricing policies, trade practices, facilities, or function of any jobber, wholesaler, or distributor dealing in window glass for the purpose of accomplishing anything prohibited by this order;

3. Agreeing upon any amount to be added by them to the manufacturers' price for window glass in carload lots for direct shipment, in order to arrive at the invoice price of such glass to the purchaser thereof;

4. Coercing or compelling certain jobbers, wholesalers, or distributors dealing in window glass to purchase window glass in carload lots from or through other competing jobbers, wholesalers, or dealers;

5. Hindering, obstructing, or preventing any jobber, wholesaler, or distributor from freely purchasing or obtaining window glass usually handled by members of said Window Glass Manufacturers Association in the course of their business, or from freely competing with the members of the National Glass Distributors Association or others engaged in similar business;

6. Aiding, assisting or encouraging members of the Window Glass Manufacturers Association collectively to select the customers to whom they will make direct sales of window glass in carload lots;

7. Hindering, obstructing, or preventing two or more jobbers, wholesalers, or distributors from pooling purchases of window glass, or from reconsigning or diverting purchases of window glass;

8. Giving oral, written, or other notices or communications to manufacturers of window glass, that certain business concerns are not entitled to purchase and obtain window glass upon the same terms and conditions usually accorded by manufacturers to their customers generally;

9. Hindering, obstructing, or preventing any jobber, wholesaler, or distributor dealing in window glass from dealing with one or more of the members of the Window Glass Manufacturers Association upon as favorable terms and conditions as are usually accorded by said manufacturers to their customers generally;

10. Inducing, persuading, or compelling any manufacturer of window glass to charge any jobber, wholesaler, or distributor more for window glass than the price usually accorded their customers generally;

11. Inducing, persuading, or compelling any jobber, wholesaler, or distributor to refrain from selling or accepting orders for window glass in carload lots for shipment to points outside of a certain restricted trade territory, designated or agreed upon.

It is further ordered, That respondents, Pittsburgh Plate Glass Company, Libbey-Owens-Ford Glass Company, American Window Glass Company, Fourco Glass Company, Harding Glass Company, Adamston Flat Glass Company, Rolland Glass Company, Scohy Sheet Glass Company, and Blackford Window Glass Company forthwith cease and desist from:

1. Discriminating in price between carload lot purchases of window glass, to whom shipment is made direct from the factory, by charging some of such purchasers, or causing them to be charged, two and one-half percent more than the price charged other of such purchasers for window glass of the same grade and quality, and of comparable strength, sizes, and kinds.

2. Discriminating in price between carload lot purchasers of window glass, to whom shipment is made direct from the factory, by charging some of such purchasers any amount more than the price charged other of such purchasers for window glass of the same grade and quality and of comparable strength, size and kinds, in violation of Section 2 (a) of the Clayton Act, as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act, but the foregoing is not intended to prevent the jobbing warehouses of a manufacturer, whose functions parallel those of an independent jobber, from selling carload lots on a brokerage basis at prices commonly obtained by such independent jobbers.

It is further ordered, That respondent members of the National Glass Distributors Association forthwith cease and desist from:

1. Receiving or accepting any discriminatory price or the benefit of any discrimination in price prohibited by the preceding section of this order;

2. Inducing or attempting to induce any manufacturer of window glass to discriminate in price in the manner prohibited by the preceding section hereof.

It is further ordered, That the respondents shall, within 60 days after service upon them of this order, file with the Commission a

THE WM. M. HARDIE COMPANY

COMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION
OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 26, 1914

Docket 3209. Complaint, Aug. 21, 1937—Decision, Nov. 1, 1937

Where a corporation engaged in manufacture and sale of candy, including certain assortments which were so packed and assembled as to involve, or which were designed to or might involve, use of a lottery scheme when sold and distributed to ultimate consumers thereof, and which were composed of two packages separately packed, as a subterfuge and in an effort to avoid effect of selling candy to be distributed by lottery scheme, and sometimes separately billed, but with knowledge and intent that assortments might be, and in many cases would be, resold at retail by lottery scheme, and containing, respectively, number of small penny pieces of uniform size and shape, a few of which had centers of a color different from that of those of majority, and number of larger pieces or bars of candy, to be given without charge to those securing, by chance, one of said penny pieces, colored center of which differed, as aforesaid, from that of the majority of pieces—

Sold, to wholesalers, jobbers, and retailers, for display and resale to purchasing public in accordance with aforesaid sales plan, said assortments, and thereby supplied to and placed in the hands of others the means of conducting, and by which they did conduct, lotteries in the sale of its said products in accordance with such plan, contrary to public policy long recognized by the common law and criminal statutes and to an established public policy of the United States Government, and in competition with many who, unwilling to offer or sell candy so packed and assembled as above described, or otherwise arranged and packed for sale to purchasing public, as to involve a game of chance, refrain therefrom;

With capacity and tendency to induce purchasers to buy its said product in preference to candy offered and sold by its competitors, and with result that many dealers in and ultimate purchasers of candy were attracted by said method and manner of packing same and by element of chance involved in sale thereof as above described, and were thereby induced to purchase its candy, so packed and sold by it, in preference to that offered and sold by its competitors who do not use same or equivalent method, and with tendency and capacity, because of said game of chance, to divert trade and custom from its competitors as aforesaid, exclude from candy trade all competitors who are unwilling to and do not use such or an equivalent method as unlawful, lessen competition therein, and tend to create a monopoly thereof in it and such other distributors as do use same or equivalent method, deprive purchasing public of benefit of free competition in trade in question, and eliminate from said trade all actual, and exclude therefrom all potential competitors who do not adopt and use such or an equivalent method:

Complaint

Held, That such method, acts, and practices, under the conditions and circumstances set forth, were all to the prejudice of the public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition in commerce.

Before Mr. Miles J. Furnas, trial examiner.

Bulkley, Hawthurst, Inglis & Sharp, of Cleveland, Ohio, for respondent.

COMPLAINT

PARAGRAPH 1. The respondent, The Wm. M. Hardie Company, is a corporation organized and doing business under the laws of the State of Ohio, with its principal office and place of business located at 1584 East 19th Street, Cleveland, Ohio. Respondent is now, and for several years last past has been, engaged in the manufacture, sale, and distribution of candy to wholesale dealers and jobbers and to retail dealers located at points in the various States of the United States. Respondent causes and has caused its said products when sold to be transported from its principal place of business in the city of Cleveland, State of Ohio, to purchasers thereof in Ohio and in other States of the United States at their respective points of location. There is now, and has been for several years last past, a course of trade and commerce by said respondent in such candy between and among the States of the United States. In the course and conduct of said business, respondent is in competition with other corporations and with partnerships and individuals engaged in the manufacture, sale, and distribution of candy in commerce between and among the various States of the United States.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of its business, as described in paragraph 1 hereof, the respondent sells and has sold to wholesale dealers and jobbers and retail dealers various assortments of candy so packed and assembled as to involve, or which are designed to or may involve, the use of a lottery scheme when sold and distributed to the ultimate consumers thereof. Said assortments are composed of two separate packages of candy. One package contains a number of small pieces of candy of uniform size and shape, the majority of which have centers of the same color, but a small number of which have centers of a different color. The other package contains a number of larger pieces or bars of candy, the number thereof being approximately the same as the number of small pieces of candy of uniform size and shape with centers colored differently from the majority in the package first above described. The color of the centers of the small pieces of candy in the package first above described is effectively concealed from customers and prospective customers until a selection has been made and the piece of candy selected broken open. The said pieces of candy of uniform size and shape retail at the price of 1¢ each, but the purchaser who procures one of the said candies having a center colored differently from the majority is entitled to receive and is to be given free of charge one of the larger pieces or bars of candy contained in the second package referred to above. The aforesaid purchasers of said candy of uniform size and shape, who procure a piece of candy having a center colored differently from the majority, thus procure one of the said larger pieces or bars of candy wholly by lot or chance.

While the two packages above described are sometimes billed separately, the respondent sells, in practically all instances, the same number of each to its customers. The purpose of respondent in so packing this assortment in separate packages is a subterfuge and an effort to avoid the effect of selling candy to be distributed by a lottery scheme, and the respondent is placing in commerce merchandise to be sold by means of a lottery scheme. Respondent packs this assortment so that it may be resold at retail by a lottery scheme, and respondent knows that in many cases it will be and is sold by means of a lottery scheme.

PAR. 3. The wholesale dealers and jobbers to whom respondent sells its assortment resell said assortment to retail dealers, and said retail dealers and the retail dealers to whom respondent sells direct expose said assortment for sale and sell said candy to the purchasing public in accordance with the aforesaid sales plan. Respondent thus supplies to and places in the hands of others the means of conducting lotteries in the sale of its products in accordance with the sales plan hereinabove set forth. Said sales plan has the capacity and tendency of inducing purchasers thereof to purchase respondent's said products in preference to candy offered for sale and sold by its competitors.

PAR. 4. The sale of said candy to the purchasing public in the manner above alleged involves a game of chance or the sale of a chance to procure larger pieces or bars of candy. The use by respondent of said method in the sale of candy, and the sale of candy by and through the use thereof and by the aid of said method, is a practice of the sort which the common law and criminal statutes have long deemed contrary to public policy, and is contrary to an established public policy of the Government of the United States. The use by respondent of said method has the tendency unduly to hinder competition or create monopoly in this, to wit: that the use thereof has the tendency and capacity to exclude from the candy trade competitors who do not adopt and use the same method or an equivalent or similar method involving the same or an equivalent or similar element of chance or lottery scheme. Many persons, firms, and corporations who make and sell candy in competition with respondent, as above alleged, are unwilling to offer for sale or sell candy so packed and assembled as above alleged, or otherwise arranged and packed for sale to the purchasing public so as to involve a game of chance, and such competitors refrain therefrom.

PAR. 5. Many dealers in and ultimate purchasers of candy are attracted by respondent's said method and manner of packing said candy and by the element of chance involved in the sale thereof in the manner above described, and are thereby induced to purchase said candy so packed and sold by respondent in preference to candy offered for sale and sold by said competitors of respondent who do not use the same or an equivalent method. The use of said method by respondent has the tendency and capacity, because of said game of chance, to divert to respondent trade and custom from its said competitors who do not use the same or an equivalent method; to exclude from said candy trade all competitors who are unwilling to and who do not use the same or an equivalent method because the same is unlawful; to lessen competition in said candy trade and to tend to create a monopoly of said candy trade in respondent and such other distributors of candy as use the same or an equivalent method; and to deprive the purchasing public of the benefit of free competition in said candy trade. The use of said method by respondent has the tendency and capacity to eliminate from said candy trade all actual competitors, and to exclude therefrom all potential competitors who do not adopt and use said method or an equivalent method.

PAR. 6. The aforementioned method, acts, and practices of respondent are all to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors, as hereinabove alleged. Said method, acts, and practices constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, on August 21, 1937, issued and on August 23, 1937, served its complaint in this proceeding upon the respondent, The Wm. M. Hardie Company, a corporation, charging it with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of the provisions of said act. On September 29, 1937, respondent filed its answer dated September 15, 1937, in which answer it admitted all the material allegations of the complaint to be true and stated that it waived hearing on the charges set forth in said complaint and consented that, without further evidence or other intervening procedure, the Commission might issue and serve upon it findings as to the facts and conclusion and an order to cease and desist from the violations of law charged in the complaint. Thereafter, this proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on the said complaint and the answer thereto, and the Commission, having duly considered the matter and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. The respondent, The Wm. M. Hardie Company, is a corporation organized and doing business under the laws of the State of Ohio, with its principal office and place of business located at 1584 East 19th Street, Cleveland, Ohio. Respondent is now and for several years last past has been, engaged in the manufacture, sale, and distribution of candy to wholesale dealers and jobbers and to retail dealers located at points in the various States of the United States. Respondent causes and has caused its said products when sold to be transported from its principal place of business in the city of Cleveland, State of Ohio, to purchasers thereof in Ohio and in other States of the United States at their respective points of location. There is now, and has been for several years last past, a course of trade and commerce by said respondent in such candy between and among the States of the United States. In the course and conduct of said business, respondent is in competition with other corporations and with partnerships and individuals engaged in the manufacture, sale, and distribution of candy in commerce between and among the various States of the United States.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of its business, as described in paragraph 1 hereof, the respondent has sold to wholesale dealers and jobbers and to retail dealers various assortments of candy so packed and assembled as to involve, or which were designed to or might involve, the use of a lottery scheme when sold and distributed to the ultimate consumers thereof. Said assortments were composed of two separate packages of candy. One package contained a number of small pieces of candy of uniform size and shape, the majority of which had centers of the same color but a small number of which had centers of a different color. The other package contained a number of larger pieces or bars of candy, the number thereof being approximately the same as the number of small pieces of candy of uniform size and shape with centers colored differently from the majority in the package first above described. The color of the centers of the small pieces of candy in the package first above described was effectively concealed from customers and prospective customers until a selection had been made and the piece of candy selected broken open. The said pieces of candy of uniform size and shape retailed at the price of 1¢ each, but the purchaser who procured one of the said candies having a center colored differently from the majority was entitled to receive and was to be given free of charge one of the larger pieces or bars of candy contained in the second package referred to above. The aforesaid purchasers of said candy of uniform size and shape, who procured a piece of candy having a center colored differently from the majority, thus procured one of the said larger pieces or bars of candy wholly by lot or chance.

While the two packages above described were sometimes billed separately, the respondent sold in practically all instances the same number of each to its customers. The purpose of respondent in so packing said assortment in separate packages was a subterfuge and an effort to avoid the effect of selling candy to be distributed by a lottery scheme, and the respondent was placing in commerce merchandise to be sold by means of a lottery scheme. Respondent packed this assortment so that it might be resold at retail by a lottery scheme, and the respondent knew that in many cases it would be and was sold by means of a lottery scheme.

PAR. 3. The wholesale dealers and jobbers to whom respondent sold its assortments resold the same to retail dealers, and said retail dealers and the retail dealers to whom respondent sold direct exposed said assortments for sale and sold said candy to the purchasing public in accordance with the aforesaid sales plan. Respondent thus supplied to and placed in the hands of others the means of conducting lotteries in the sale of its products in accordance with the sales plan hereinabove set forth; and said sales plan had the capacity and tendency of inducing purchasers thereof to purchase respondent's said products in preference to candy offered for sale and sold by its competitors.

PAR. 4. The sale of said candy to the purchasing public in the manner above described involves a game of chance or the sale of a chance to procure larger pieces or bars of candy. The use by respondent of said method in the sale of candy, and the sale of candy by and through the use thereof and by the aid of said method, is a practice of the sort which the common law and criminal statutes have long deemed contrary to public policy, and is contrary to an established public policy of the Government of the United States. The use by respondent of said method has the tendency unduly to hinder competition or create monopoly in this, to wit: that the use thereof has the tendency and capacity to exclude from the candy trade competitors who do not adopt and use the same method or an equivalent or similar method involving the same or an equivalent or similar element of chance or lottery scheme. Many persons, firms and corporations who make, sell or distribute candy in competition with respondent are unwilling to offer for sale or sell candy so packed and assembled as above described, or otherwise arranged and packed for sale to the purchasing public so as to involve a game of chance, and such competitors refrain therefrom.

PAR. 5. Many dealers in and ultimate purchasers of candy were attracted by respondent's said method and manner of packing said candy and by the element of chance involved in the sale thereof in the manner above described, and were thereby induced to purchase said candy so packed and sold by respondent in preference to candy offered for sale and sold by said competitors of respondent who do or did not use the same or an equivalent method. The use of said method by the respondent had the tendency and capacity, because of said game of chance, to divert to respondent trade and custom from its said competitors who do or did not use the same or an equivalent method; to exclude from said candy trade all competitors who are unwilling to and who do not use the same or an equivalent method because the same is unlawful; to lessen competition in said candy trade and to tend to create a monopoly of said candy trade in respondent and in such other distributors of candy as use the same or an equivalent method; and to deprive the purchasing public of the benefit of free competition in said candy trade. The use of said method by respondent had the tendency and capacity to eliminate from said candy trade all actual competitors, and to exclude therefrom all potential competitors, who do or did not adopt and use said method or an equivalent method.

The answer of the respondent states, and the Commission finds, that the respondent discontinued the sale and distribution of the assortments described in paragraph 2 hereof prior to the issuance of the said complaint.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid method, acts and practices of the respondent, The Wm. M. Hardie Company, a corporation, under the conditions and circumstances set forth in the foregoing findings of fact, were all to the prejudice of the public and respondent's competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

It is ordered, That the respondent, The Wm. M. Hardie Company, a corporation, its officers, representatives, agents, and employees, in connection with the offering for sale, sale and distribution in interstate commerce of candy, do forthwith cease and desist from:

1. Selling and distributing to jobbers and wholesale dealers for resale to retail dealers, or to retail dealers direct, candy so packed and assembled that sales of such candy to the general public are to be made, or may be made, by means of a lottery, gaming device, or gift enterprise.

2. Supplying to or placing in the hands of wholesale dealers and jobbers or retail dealers assortments of candy which are used, or which may be used, without alternation or rearrangement of the contents of such assortments, to conduct a lottery, gaming device, or gift enterprise in the sale or distribution of the candy contained in said assortments to the public.

3. Packing or assembling, for sale to the public at retail, assortments of candy composed of two separate packages of candy, one package containing small pieces of candy of uniform size and shape having centers of different colors, and the other package containing larger pieces or bars of candy, which said larger pieces or bars of candy are to be given as prizes to the purchaser procuring a piece of candy having a center of a particular color from the first above described package.

It is further ordered, That the respondent, The Wm. M. Hardie Company, a corporation, shall, within 30 days after service upon it of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which it has complied with the order to cease and desist hereinabove set forth.

IN THE MATTER OF

D. GOLDENBERG, INC., IN ITS OWN NAME AND RIGHT
AND TRADING AS P. C. SALES COMPANYCOMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 26, 1914*Docket 1810. Complaint, May 19, 1937¹—Decision, Nov. 2, 1937*

Where a corporation engaged in manufacture and sale of candy, including certain assortments which were so packed and assembled as to involve, or which were designed to or might involve use of a lottery scheme when sold and distributed to ultimate consumers thereof, and which included assortments composed of (1) number of penny pieces of chocolate covered candy of uniform size and shape, together with number of larger pieces of candy to be given as prizes to chance purchasers of one of a relatively small number of said penny pieces, color of centers of which differed from that of those of the majority, and also together with small package of candy to be given, likewise free of charge, to purchaser of last of said penny pieces in assortment; and (2) number of individually wrapped bars of uniform size, shape and quality, price of which was one cent, two cents, or three cents, as determined by figure contained on slip of paper enclosed as concealed within the individual wrappings of said various pieces—

Sold, to wholesalers and to retailers for display and resale to purchasing public in accordance with aforesaid sales plan, said assortments, and thereby supplied to and placed in the hands of others the means of conducting and by which they did conduct, lotteries in the sale of such products in accordance with such plans, contrary to public policy long recognized by the common law and criminal statutes, and to an established public policy of the United States Government, and in competition with many who, unwilling to offer or sell candy so packed and assembled, or otherwise arranged and packed for sale to purchasing public, as to involve a game of chance, refrain therefrom;

With capacity and tendency to induce purchasers to buy its said products in preference to candy offered and sold by its competitors, and with result that many dealers in and ultimate purchasers of candy were attracted by its said methods and manner of packing same, and by element of chance involved in sale thereof, as above set forth, and thereby induced to purchase its said candy, thus packed and sold by it, in preference to that offered and sold by said competitors who do not use same or equivalent methods, and with tendency and capacity, because of said game of chance, to divert to it trade and custom from its said competitors as aforesaid, exclude from said trade all competitors who are unwilling to and do not use such or equivalent methods as unlawful, lessen competition therein and tend to create a monopoly thereof in it and such other distributors of candy as do use same or equivalent method, and deprive purchasing public of benefit of free competition in trade in question, and eliminate

Whereas, The Federal Trade Commission did heretofore, to wit, on May 1, 1930, issue its complaint herein charging and alleging that respondent herein was and had been guilty of unfair methods of competition in interstate commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes"; and

Whereas, This Commission having reason to believe that respondent herein has been and is using unfair methods of competition in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in said act, other than and in addition to those in relation to which the Commission issued its complaint as aforesaid, and it appearing to said Commission that a further proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest;

Now, therefore, Acting in the public interest, pursuant to the provisions of the Act of September 26, 1914, aforesaid, the Federal Trade Commission charges that D. Goldenberg, Inc., a corporation, in its own name and right and trading as P. C. Sales Company, has been and now is using unfair methods of competition in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in said act, and states its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent is a corporation organized and doing business under the laws of the State of Pennsylvania, with its principal office and place of business located at I and Ontario Streets, in the city of Philadelphia, State of Pennsylvania. Respondent is, and for several years last past has been, engaged in the manufacture of candy and in the sale and distribution thereof to wholesale and retail dealers located at points in the various States of the United States. Respondent causes and has caused its said products when sold to be transported from its principal place of business in the city of Philadelphia, State of Pennsylvania, to purchasers thereof in Pennsylvania and in other States of the United States at their respective points of location. There is now, and has been for several years last past, a course of trade and commerce by said respondent in such candy between and among the States of the United States. In the course and conduct of said business, respondent is in competition with other corporations and with partnerships and individuals engaged in the manufacture of candy and in the sale and distribution thereof in commerce between and among the various States of the United States.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of its business, as described in paragraph 1 hereof, respondent sells and has sold to wholesale and retail dealers assortments of candy so packed and assembled as to involve, or which are designed to or may involve, the use of a lottery scheme when sold and distributed to the ultimate consumers thereof.

(a) One of said assortments of candy is composed of a number of pieces of chocolate covered candy of uniform size and shape, together with a number of larger pieces of candy and a small package of candy, which larger pieces of candy and small package of candy are to be given as prizes to purchasers of said chocolate covered candies in the following manner: the majority of the said chocolate covered candies in said assortment have centers of the same color, but a small number of said chocolate covered candies have centers of a different color. The said pieces of candy of uniform size and shape in said assortment retail at the price of 1¢, but the purchaser who procures one of the said candies having a center of a color different from the majority of said candy is entitled to receive and is to be given free of charge one of the said larger pieces of candy, and the purchaser of the last piece of the aforesaid chocolate covered candy of uniform size and shape in said assortment is entitled to receive and is to be given free of charge the small package of candy heretofore referred to. The aforesaid purchasers of said candy, who procure a piece of candy having a center colored differently from the majority of the said pieces of candy, and the purchaser of the last piece of candy in said assortment, are thus to procure one of the said larger pieces of candy or the small package of candy wholly by lot or chance.

(b) Another assortment of candy which respondent was formerly distributing was composed of a number of candy bars of uniform size, shape, and quality, and each of said bars of candy was contained within a wrapper. Also, within each of said wrappers was a slip of paper which had printed thereon the retail price at which said piece of candy was to be sold to the consuming public. Said printed slip was effectually concealed from consumers and prospective consumers until a purchase had been made and the wrapper removed. The retail prices printed on said slips were 1¢, 2¢, or 3¢, and these were the prices which the purchaser paid the retail merchant. The ultimate consumers thus procured bars of candy of uniform size, shape and quality at a price of 1¢, 2¢, or 3¢, the said price being determined wholly by lot or chance.

PAR. 3. The wholesale dealers to whom respondent sells and has sold its assortments resell the same to retail dealers, and said retail dealers and the retail dealers to whom respondent sells direct expose and have exposed said assortments for sale and sell and have sold said candy to the purchasing public in accordance with the aforesaid sales plans. Respondent thus supplies to and places in the hands of others the means of conducting lotteries in the sale of its products in accordance with the sales plans hereinabove set forth; and said sales plans have the capacity and tendency of inducing purchasers thereof to purchase respondent's said products in preference to candy offered for sale and sold by its competitors.

PAR. 4. The sale of said candy to the purchasing public in the manner above alleged involves a game of chance or the sale of a chance to procure larger pieces of candy or small packages of candy or bars of candy at a price less than 3¢. The use by respondent of said methods in the sale of candy, and the sale of candy by and through the use thereof and by the aid of said methods, is a practice of the sort which the common law and criminal statutes have long deemed contrary to public policy, and is contrary to an established public policy of the Government of the United States. The use by respondent of said methods has the tendency unduly to hinder competition or create monopoly in this, to wit: that the use thereof has the tendency and capacity to exclude from the candy trade competitors who do not adopt and use the same methods or equivalent or similar methods involving the same or an equivalent or similar element of chance or lottery scheme. Many persons, firms, and corporations who make and sell candy in competition with the respondent, as above alleged, are unwilling to offer for sale or sell candy so packed and assembled as above alleged, or otherwise arranged and packed for sale to the purchasing public so as to involve a game of chance, and such competitors refrain therefrom.

PAR. 5. Many dealers in and ultimate purchasers of candy are attracted by respondent's said methods and manner of packing said candy and by the element of chance involved in the sale thereof in the manner above described, and are thereby induced to purchase said candy so packed and sold by respondent in preference to candy offered for sale and sold by said competitors of respondent who do not use the same or equivalent methods. The use of said methods by respondent has the tendency and capacity, because of said game of chance, to divert to respondent trade and custom from its said competitors who do not use the same or equivalent methods; to exclude from said candy trade all competitors who are unwilling to and who do not use the same or equivalent methods because the same are unlawful; to lessen competition in said candy trade and to tend to create a monopoly of said candy trade in respondent and in such other distributors of candy as use the same or equivalent methods; and to deprive the purchasing public of the benefit of free competition in said candy trade. The use of said methods by respondent has the tendency and capacity to eliminate from said candy trade all actual competitors, and to exclude therefrom all potential competitors who do not adopt and use said methods or equivalent methods.

PAR. 6. The aforementioned methods, acts and practices of respondent are all to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors, as hereinabove alleged. Said methods, acts, and practices constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission on May 19, 1937, issued and on May 20, 1937, served its amended and supplemental complaint in this proceeding upon the respondent, D. Goldenberg, Inc., a corporation in its own name and right and trading as P. C. Sales Company, charging it with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of the provisions of said act. On September 30, 1937, respondent filed its answer in which answer it admitted all the material allegations of the amended and supplemental complaint to be true and stated that it waived hearing on the charges set forth in said amended and supplemental complaint and consented that without further evidence or other intervening procedure, the Commission might issue and serve upon it findings as to the facts and conclusion and an order to cease and desist from the violations of law charged in the amended and supplemental complaint. Thereafter, this proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on the said amended and supplemental complaint and the answer thereto, and the Commission having duly considered the matter and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent is a corporation organized and doing business under the laws of the State of Pennsylvania, with its principal office and place of business located at I and Ontario Streets, in the city of Philadelphia, State of Pennsylvania. Respondent is, and for several years last past has been, engaged in the manufacture of candy and in the sale and distribution thereof to wholesale and retail dealers located at points in the various States of the United States. Respondent causes and has caused its said products when sold to be transported from its principal place of business in the city of Philadelphia, State of Pennsylvania, to purchasers thereof in Pennsylvania and in other States of the United States at their respective points of location. There is now, and has been for several years last past, a course of trade and commerce by said respondent in such candy between and among the States of the United States. In the course and conduct of said business, respondent is in competition with other corporations and with partnerships and individuals engaged in the manufacture of candy and in the sale and distribution thereof in commerce between and among the various States of the United States.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of its business, as described in paragraph 1 hereof, the respondent sold to wholesale and retail dealers assortments of candy so packed and assembled as to involve, or which were designed to or might involve, the use of a lottery scheme when sold and distributed to the ultimate consumers thereof.

(a) One of said assortments of candy was composed of a number of pieces of chocolate covered candy of uniform size and shape, together with a number of larger pieces of candy and a small package of candy, which larger pieces of candy and small package of candy were given as prizes to purchasers of said chocolate covered candies in the following manner: The majority of the said chocolate covered candies in said assortment had centers of the same color, but a small number of said chocolate covered candies had centers of a different color. The said pieces of candy of uniform size and shape in said assortment retailed at the price of 1¢, but the purchaser who procured one of the said candies having a center of a color different from the majority of said candy was entitled to receive and was to be given free of charge one of the said larger pieces of candy, and the purchaser of the last piece of the aforesaid chocolate covered candy of uniform size and shape in said assortment was entitled to receive and was to be given free of charge the small package of candy heretofore referred to. The aforesaid purchasers of said candy, who procured a piece of candy having a center colored differently from the majority of the said pieces of candy, and the purchaser of the last piece of candy in said assortment, were thus to procure one of the said larger pieces of candy or the small package of candy wholly by lot or chance.

(b) Another assortment of candy which respondent was formerly distributing was composed of a number of candy bars of uniform size, shape, and quality, and each of said bars of candy was contained within a wrapper. Also, within each of said wrappers was a slip of paper which had printed thereon the retail price at which said piece of candy was to be sold to the consuming public. Said printed slip was effectually concealed from consumers and prospective consumers until a purchase had been made and the wrapper removed. The retail prices printed on said slips were 1¢, 2¢, or 3¢, and these were the prices which the purchaser paid the retail merchant. The ultimate consumers thus procured bars of candy of uniform size, shape, and quality at a price of 1¢, 2¢, or 3¢, the said price being determined wholly by lot or chance.

PAR. 3. The wholesale dealers to whom respondent sold its assortments resold the same to retail dealers, and said retail dealers and the retail dealers to whom respondent sold direct have exposed said assortments for sale and have sold said candy to the purchasing public in accordance with the aforesaid sales plans. Respondent thus supplied to and placed in the hands of others the means of conducting lotteries in the sale of its products in accordance with the sales plans hereinabove set forth; and said sales plans had the capacity and tendency of inducing purchasers thereof to purchase respondent's said products in preference to candy offered for sale and sold by its competitors.

inal statutes have long deemed contrary to public policy, and is contrary to an established public policy of the Government of the United States. The use by respondent of said methods has the tendency unduly to hinder competition or create monopoly in this, to wit: that the use thereof has the tendency and capacity to exclude from the candy trade competitors who do not adopt and use the same methods or equivalent or similar methods involving the same or an equivalent or similar element of chance or lottery scheme. Many persons, firms and corporations who make and sell candy in competition with the respondent are unwilling to offer for sale or sell candy so packed and assembled as above described or otherwise arranged and packed for sale to the purchasing public so as to involve a game of chance, and such competitors refrain therefrom.

PAR. 5. Many dealers in and ultimate purchasers of candy were attracted by respondent's said methods and manner of packing said candy and by the element of chance involved in the sale thereof in the manner above described, and were thereby induced to purchase said candy so packed and sold by respondent in preference to candy offered for sale and sold by said competitors of respondent who do or did not use the same or equivalent methods. The use of said methods by the respondent had the tendency and capacity, because of said game of chance, to divert to respondent trade and custom from its said competitors who do or did not use the same or equivalent methods; to exclude from said candy trade all competitors who are unwilling to and who do not use the same or equivalent methods because the same are unlawful; to lessen competition in said candy trade and to tend to create a monopoly of said candy trade in respondent and in such other distributors of candy as use the same or equivalent methods; and to deprive the purchasing public of the benefit of free competition in said candy trade. The use of said methods by respondent had the tendency and capacity to eliminate from said candy trade all actual competitors, and to exclude therefrom all potential competitors who do or did not adopt and use said methods or equivalent methods.

The answer of the respondent states, and the Commission finds, that the respondent discontinued the sale and distribution of the assortments described in paragraph 2 hereof prior to the filing of its answer.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid methods, acts and practices of the respondent, D. Goldenberg, Inc., a corporation in its own name and right and trading as P. C. Sales Company, under the conditions and circumstances set forth in the foregoing findings of fact, were all to the prejudice of the public and respondent's competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

This proceeding having been heard by the Federal Trade Commission upon the amended and supplemental complaint of the Commission and the answer of the respondent, admitting all the material allegations of the amended and supplemental complaint to be true and waiving the taking of further evidence and all other intervening procedure, and the Commission having made its findings as to the facts and conclusion that the respondent has violated the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

It is ordered, That the respondent, D. Goldenberg, Inc., a corporation, in its own name and right and trading as P. C. Sales Company, or trading under any other name, its officers, representatives, agents, and employees, in connection with the offering for sale, sale, and distribution in interstate commerce of candy, do forthwith cease and desist from:

1. Selling and distributing to jobbers and wholesale dealers for resale to retail dealers, or to retail dealers direct, candy so packed and assembled that sales of such candy to the general public are to be made, or may be made by means of a lottery, gaming device, or gift enterprise.

2. Supplying to or placing in the hands of wholesale dealers and jobbers or retail dealers assortments of candy which are used, or which may be used, without alteration or rearrangement of the contents of such assortments, to conduct a lottery, gaming device, or gift enterprise in the sale or distribution of the candy contained in said assortments to the public.

3. Packing or assembling in the same package or assortment of candy for sale to the public at retail, pieces of candy of uniform size and shape having centers of different colors, together with larger pieces of candy and a small package of candy, which said larger pieces of candy and small package of candy are to be given as prizes to the purchaser procuring a piece of candy having a center of a particular color.

Order

25 F. T. C.

4. Packing or assembling in the same package or assortment of candy for sale to the public at retail, bars of candy of uniform size, shape and quality containing within their wrappers tickets or printed slips bearing different prices.

It is further ordered, That the respondent, D. Goldenberg, Inc., a corporation shall, within 30 days after service upon it of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which it has complied with the order to cease and desist hereinabove set forth.

Complaint

IN THE MATTER OF
HOFFMAN BEVERAGE COMPANY

COMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION
OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 26, 1914

Docket 2819. Complaint, May 26, 1936—Decision, Nov. 2, 1937

Where a corporation engaged in sale of beer, subjected to treatment and process making pasteurization unnecessary, and in distribution of said product in trade and commerce among the various States and in the District of Columbia, in substantial competition with those engaged in similar sale and distribution of such product—

Falsely and misleadingly disparaged products of competitors through representing, in advertising of its said product, that "Heat treating beer during bottling operations spoils the fresh taste," in conjunction with statement that such treating "is necessary in all other American breweries" except its own, and that its product was only unpasteurized bottled beer in America and through such label statements as that, due to avoidance of pasteurization, as above noted, "its fine vat quality is fully retained"; facts being that heat treating does not spoil fresh taste of properly pasteurized beer, as now treated pasteurization flavor is avoided, and ordinary consuming public would not be able to detect difference in taste due to pasteurization between pasteurized and other beer;

With effect of misleading and deceiving dealers and purchasing public into belief that beer products of its competitors were inferior in quality, purity or taste to its own, and with result that such dealers and purchasing public were induced, in reliance upon truth of its aforesaid representations, to purchase its said beer in preference to other products which were competitive as to price, quality, taste, and purity, and with effect of thereby diverting trade to it from its competitors who do not, in the aforesaid or any other manner, falsely disparage competitive products; to the substantial injury of substantial competition in commerce:

Held, That such acts and practices were to the prejudice of the public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition.

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that Hoffman Beverage Company, a corporation, hereinafter referred to as

Complaint

respondent, has been and is using unfair methods of competition in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in said act, and it appearing to the said Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint, stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent is a corporation organized in 1913, existing and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of New Jersey, with its principal office and place of business at 402 Grove Street, in the city of Newark, in said State. It now is, and since July 1934 has been, engaged in the sale and distribution of beer in constant course of trade and commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia. In the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid it causes said beer to be bottled and, when sold, to be shipped and transported from its place of business in Newark, N. J., to the purchasers thereof, consisting of wholesalers and retailers located in other States of the United States and in the District of Columbia. In the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid respondent is now, and for more than one year last past has been, in substantial competition with other corporations and with individuals, partnerships, and firms engaged in the sale and distribution of beer in trade and commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid respondent, in soliciting the sale of and selling its beer, has falsely disparaged the products of its aforesaid competitors through publication and dissemination of the following statements, to wit:

Heat-treating beer during bottling operations spoils the fresh taste. This is necessary in all other American breweries except Hoffman.

The vat-fresh taste of Hoffman Bottled Beer is due to the fact that Hoffman Beer is not heat-treated after bottling. Protection from impurities at every step preserves the fine vat-fresh flavor by making pasteurization unnecessary. You taste the difference at the first sip! The only unpasteurized bottled beer in America.

The difference in taste between draught beer and the usual bottled beer is due chiefly to the fact that bottled beer—with a single exception—is pasteurized (heat-treated) in the bottle * * *

Pasteurization affects the taste of beer.

Hoffman Beer is not pasteurized.

On the labels attached to the bottles in which respondent's beer is sold appears the statement:

Because of extraordinary biological control pasteurizing this beer is avoided. Thus its fine vat quality is fully retained.

By means of the foregoing statements respondent represents that the beer sold by its competitors is stale and inferior in quality, purity, and taste, and in other ways less desirable for human consumption than is the beer of respondent, when in truth and in fact such is not the case.

PAR. 3. The representations by respondent, as set forth in the foregoing paragraph hereof, and each of them, have the capacity and tendency to and do mislead and deceive dealers and the purchasing public into the belief that the beer products of respondent's competitors are inferior in quality, purity and taste to the beer of respondent, and such dealers and purchasing public, relying upon the truth of the aforesaid representations, are thereby induced to purchase Hoffman Beer in preference to other beer products which are competitive as to price, quality, taste, and purity, thus diverting trade to respondent from its competitors who do not in the aforesaid or any other manner falsely disparage competitive products, and thereby respondent does substantial injury to substantial competition in interstate commerce.

PAR. 4. The acts and things above alleged to have been done and the false representations alleged to have been made by respondent are to the prejudice of the public and the competitors of respondent and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914.

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Hornor; and said testimony and other evidence were duly recorded and filed in the office of the Commission. Thereafter the proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on the said complaint, the answer thereto, testimony and other evidence, briefs in support of the complaint and in opposition thereto, and the oral arguments of counsel aforesaid; and the Commission having duly considered the same, and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public, and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. The respondent, Hoffman Beverage Company, is a corporation organized in 1911, existing and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of New Jersey, with its principal office and place of business at 402 Grove Street, in the city of Newark, in said State.

It is now, and since August 1934, has been, engaged in the sale and distribution of beer in constant course of trade and commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

In the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid, it causes said beer to be bottled and, when sold, to be shipped and transported from its place of business in Newark, N. J., to the purchasers thereof, consisting of wholesalers and retailers located in other States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

In the course and conduct of its business, as aforesaid, respondent is now and for more than one year last past, has been in substantial competition with other corporations and with individuals, partnerships, and firms engaged in the sale and distribution of beer in trade and commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid, respondent, in soliciting the sale of and selling its beer, has made, through publication of advertisements, the following statements:

1. Heat treating beer during bottling operations spoils the fresh taste. This is necessary in all other American breweries except Hoffman;

2. The vat-fresh taste of Hoffman Bottled Beer is due to the fact that Hoffman Beer is not heat treated after bottling. Protection from impurities at every step preserves the fine vat-fresh flavor by making pasteurization unnecessary. You taste the difference at the first sip! The only unpasteurized bottled beer in America;

3. The difference in taste between fine draught beer and the usual bottled beer is due chiefly to the fact that bottled beer—with a single exception—is pasteurized (heat-treated) in the bottle;

4. Pasteurization affects the taste of beer ;
5. Hoffman Beer is not pasteurized ;

On the labels attached to the bottles in which the respondent's beer is sold appears the statement :

6. Because of extraordinary biological control, pasteurizing this beer is avoided. Thus its fine vat quality is fully retained.

The statement contained in subparagraph (1) was not made by respondent subsequent to March, 1935, and was made as a one-time insertion in approximately eight papers, including the New York "Herald Tribune," the said papers having interstate circulation. Statement (2) appeared about May 29th, 1935, in the New York "Journal," "World," "Sun," the Newark "News," and other papers. Statements (3), (4), (5), or (6) were contained in advertisements published in the New York "World Telegram," the Newark, N. J., "Star-Eagle," and other papers, statement (6) being shown on the reproduction of the bottle label appearing in the advertisements.

Respondent's representation, (1), that "heat treating beer during bottling operations spoils the fresh taste" and that "this is necessary in all other American breweries except Hoffman," was and is contrary to fact so far as it might be construed to convey the meaning that all other bottled beer than Hoffman's was stale or of such inferior quality, purity, or taste as to be less fit for human consumption than respondent's beer. It was shown by experts, and is so found, that heat-treating does not ordinarily spoil the fresh taste of beer but does so only when the pasteurization is improperly done by the application of too much heat. Thermostatic control is employed in modern brewing to keep uniform temperatures and prevent spoiling. Beer is now treated in such a way as not to give a pasteurization flavor.

With respect to respondent's representation (2) above, which in substance is that the absence of pasteurization or heat-treating produces a vat-fresh taste in respondent's beer that can be distinguished "with the first sip" and that respondent's is the only unpasteurized bottled beer in America, it was shown (a) that the distinction between pasteurized and unpasteurized beer could not ordinarily be detected by taste, although experts in the science of beer making, notably those in Germany and France, agree that such a difference is appreciable. When beer is improperly pasteurized by the application of too much heat there is a "bread taste," but when pasteurization is properly done the taste is not affected adversely. There is a difference in taste between bottled and draught beer which is not due to pasteurization or the lack of it. Prior to thirty or thirty-five years ago pasteurization affected the taste of beer, such effect being known as a "pasteurized taste," but that has not been so in recent years. It was agreed that respondent's product, up to the time of the publication of the above advertisements, was the only unpasteurized bottled beer produced in America. Since that date other unpasteurized beers have appeared. Draught beer is not pasteurized.

PAR. 3. That the implication arising from respondent's concurrent use of the representations hereinbefore set out are disparaging to competitive beer products is apparent from the advertisements themselves as well as shown by the testimony to be false or misleading insofar as they might be construed to disparage competing products. By the use of a process known as the Nathan System, respondent's beer is subjected to a filtration treatment whereby yeast and other organisms which might result in later spoiling of the beer after bottling, are removed, and it is not necessary to pasteurize it. At the time of the appearance of the above advertised claims, all other breweries than Hoffman's subjected their beer, after bottling, to pasteurization, i. e., a heat treatment of approximately 145° F., for the purpose of killing the yeast and other organisms so that the beer would keep indefinitely. The Commission finds from the evidence that while some experts might be able to detect a difference in taste due to pasteurization between pasteurized beer and other beer, the ordinary consuming public would not be able to do so.

PAR. 4. The representations by respondent, as set forth in the foregoing paragraph hereof, and each of them, have the capacity and tendency to and do mislead and deceive dealers and the purchasing public into the belief that the beer products of respondent's competitors are inferior in quality, purity or taste to the beer of respondent, and such dealers and purchasing public, relying upon the truth of the aforesaid representations, are thereby induced to purchase Hoffman Beer in preference to other beer products which are competitive as to price, quality, taste and purity, thus diverting trade to respondent from its competitors who do not in the aforesaid or any other manner falsely disparage competitive products, and thereby respondent does substantial injury to substantial competition in interstate commerce.

PAR. 5. The record in this case shows that since 1935 respondent has not repeated the disparaging statements set forth, but in this proceeding it has asserted its legal right to do so, wherefore the Commission can have and has no assurance whatever that in the absence of any inhibition, respondent might not resume such practice.

Order

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of respondent Hoffman Beverage Company are to the prejudice of the public and respondent's competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

It is now ordered, That the respondent, Hoffman Beverage Company, a corporation, its officers, agents, representatives, and employees, in the sale and distribution of beer in interstate commerce and in the District of Columbia, do cease and desist from:

Representing that "Heat treating beer during bottling operations spoils the fresh taste" in conjunction with the statement that such heat treating "is necessary in all other American breweries except Hoffman," or in any other manner falsely or misleadingly disparaging competing products.

Provided further, that nothing herein contained shall restrict respondent from making any legitimate claims regarding the desirability or distinctive taste of its beer so long as such claims are not coupled with false or misleading disparaging references to competing products.

It is further ordered, That said respondent shall, within 60 days from the date of service of this order upon it, make a report or reports to the Commission in writing, showing the manner and form of its compliance herewith.

thol Company, Inc., a corporation, has been and now is using unfair methods of competition in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in said act, and it appearing to said Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint and states its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPHS 1. Respondent, The Eucathol Company, Inc., is a corporation, organized and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Oklahoma, with its office and principal place of business located in the city of Shawnee, in said State. Respondent is now, and has been for several years last past, engaged at said location in the manufacture and sale of a compound for use in the treatment of coughs, colds, scalds, burns, sunburn, insect bites, hay fever, asthma, and other human afflictions. Said compound is also sold for use as an after shaving cream. Said compound is put up in containers and is to be applied by rubbing or massaging it onto the flesh, or by inhaling its vapors. Respondent has designated said compound as "Eucathol." Respondent sells said product to wholesale druggists who sell said product to retail druggists, and also direct to retail druggists. The retail druggists sell said product directly to the consumers thereof.

In the course and conduct of said business respondent ships, or causes to be shipped or transported, said product when so sold from the city of Shawnee in the State of Oklahoma to said wholesale and retail druggists, many of whom are located in points in various States other than the State of Oklahoma. There is now, and has been during all of the times herein mentioned, a constant current of trade in said product so sold by said respondent in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of said business, respondent is now, and has been during all of the times herein mentioned, engaged in substantial competition with various corporations, firms, and individuals selling, or offering for sale, to the general public compounds, medicines, salves, and ointments and other remedies used for the purposes described in paragraph 1 hereof.

PAR. 3. In the course and conduct of the business as aforesaid, respondent, in soliciting the sale of and selling said products, has advertised the same in newspapers, magazines, periodicals of general circulation, by means of radio broadcasts, and in pamphlets, printed testimonials, and other printed matter. It has also made use of photographs, other pictures and legends on cartons containing said compound and in circulars inclosed in said cartons, and in other advertising media. In and through each and all of the advertising media above enumerated, respondent has made, and is making, expressly or by implication, the following representations:

That the use of Eucathol will prevent and cure, or is beneficial in the treatment of: insect bites, sunburn, piles and hemorrhoids, asthma and hay fever, catarrh, colds, skin irritations, scalds and burns, skin disorders, flu and pneumonia, and other ailments.

PAR. 4. The representations described and set forth in paragraph 3 above are false and misleading, in that the use of Eucathol will not prevent and cure, and is not beneficial in the treatment of, insect bites, sunburn, piles and hemorrhoids, asthma and hay fever, catarrh, colds, skin irritations, skin disorders, scalds and burns, flu and pneumonia, or other ailments or afflictions of the human body for which it is recommended by the respondent.

PAR. 5. Said statements and representations set forth in paragraph 3 so made by respondent have, and have had, the tendency and capacity to induce members of the public and prospective purchasers to form the mistaken and erroneous belief that said statements and representations are true, and, acting in such erroneous belief, the said purchasing public has been induced to purchase, and has purchased, respondent's product, thereby unfairly diverting trade to respondent from its said competitors, to the injury of competition in commerce among and between the various States of the United States, and to the injury of the public.

PAR. 6. The above alleged acts and practices are each and all to the prejudice of the public, and of respondent's competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in interstate commerce within the meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914.

REPORT, MODIFIED FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

of further evidence and all other intervening procedure, which substitute answer was duly filed in the office of the Commission. Thereafter, this proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on the said complaint and the substitute answer, briefs and oral arguments of counsel having been waived, and the Commission, having duly considered the same, made and entered its findings of facts and conclusion on the 29th day of June, A. D., 1937, and the Commission now being desirous of modifying its said findings, as is provided for under the provisions of said Act of Congress, makes this its modified findings as to the facts and conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent, the Eucathol Company, Inc., is a corporation organized and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Oklahoma, with its office and principal place of business located in the city of Shawnee, in said State.

Respondent is now, and has been for several years last past, engaged at said location in the manufacture and sale of a compound, or medicine, for use in the treatment of coughs, colds, scalds, burns, sunburn, insect bites, hay fever, asthma, influenza and other human afflictions. Said compound is also sold for use as an after-shaving cream. Said compound is put up in containers and is to be applied by rubbing or massaging it on the flesh, or by inhaling its vapors. Respondent has designated the said compound as "Eucathol." Respondent sells said product direct to retail druggists and to wholesale druggists, who also sell the same to retail druggists. The said retail druggists sell said product directly to the consumer thereof.

In the course and conduct of said business respondent ships, or causes to be shipped or transported, said product, when so sold, from the city of Shawnee in the said State of Oklahoma, to said wholesale and retail druggists, many of whom are located at points in various States other than the State of Oklahoma. There is now, and has been, during all of the times herein mentioned, a constant current of trade in said product so sold by said respondent in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of said business, respondent is now, and has been, during all of the times herein mentioned, engaged in substantial competition with various corporations, copartnerships, firms, and individuals, selling, or offering for sale to the general public, compounds, medicines, salves and ointments used for the purposes described in paragraph 1 hereof.

Conclusion

25 F. T. C.

PAR. 3. In the course and conduct of the business, as aforesaid, respondent, in soliciting the sale and selling said product has advertised the same in newspapers, magazines, periodicals of general circulation, by means of radio broadcasts, and in pamphlets, and by, in and through the use of printed testimonials and other printed matter, photographs, and other pictures and legends on cartons containing said compound, and in circulars enclosed in said cartons, and in and upon other advertising media. In and through each and all of the advertising media above enumerated respondent has made, expressly or by implication, the following representations:

That the use of "Eucathol" will prevent or cure, or is beneficial in the treatment of, insect bites, sunburn, piles, hemorrhoids, asthma, hay fever, catarrh, colds, skin irritations, scalds and burns, skin disorders, influenza, pneumonia, and other ailments.

PAR. 4. The use of "Eucathol" will not prevent or cure, nor is its use beneficial in the treatment of piles, hemorrhoids, asthma, hay fever, catarrh, influenza (flu), or pneumonia, nor is its use beneficial in the treatment of other human ailments, except in cases of head colds and the coughs associated therewith and in afflictions wherein a counter-irritant is indicated.

PAR. 5. The said statements and representations as to the efficacy of "Eucathol" in the treatment of piles, hemorrhoids, asthma, hay fever, catarrh, influenza (flu) or pneumonia are each and all false and misleading, and said statements so made by respondent with respect to such last-named afflictions have, and have had, a tendency and capacity to induce members of the public and prospective purchasers to form the mistaken and erroneous belief that said statements and representations are true, and, acting on such erroneous belief, the said purchasing public has been induced to purchase and has purchased respondent's said product, thereby unfairly diverting trade to respondent from its said competitors to the injury of competition in commerce among and between the various States of the United States and to the injury of the public.

CONCLUSION

The acts and practices of the respondent, Eucathol Company, Inc., a corporation, in selling, offering for sale, and advertising as aforesaid, the product "Eucathol" as a preventive or cure, or as beneficial in the treatment of piles, hemorrhoids, asthma, hay fever, catarrh, influenza (flu) or pneumonia, are to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

MODIFIED ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

This proceeding having been heard by the Federal Trade Commission upon the complaint of the Commission and the substitute answer filed herein, on the 1st day of May 1937, by respondent, admitting all of the material allegations of the complaint to be true and waiving the taking of further evidence and all other intervening procedure, and the Commission, on the 29th day of June, A. D., 1937, having made its findings as to the facts and its conclusion that said respondent had violated the provisions of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," and having issued its order to cease and desist on the said 29th day of June, A. D., 1937, and the Commission having on the 3rd day of November, A. D., 1937, modified its said findings of facts and conclusion, and now being desirous of modifying its order so as to conform with its said modified findings of facts and conclusion, and being advised in the premises,

It is ordered, That the said order to cease and desist be, and the same is hereby, modified to read as follows:

Respondent Eucathol Company, Inc., a corporation, its officers, representatives, agents, and employees, in connection with the offering for sale, sale and distribution of a pharmaceutical preparation now designated as "Eucathol" or in the sale and distribution of any other pharmaceutical preparation composed of substantially the same ingredients, whether sold under the name "Eucathol" or any other name, in interstate commerce or in the District of Columbia, forthwith cease and desist from:

Representing, directly or by implication, that said preparation will prevent or cure, or is beneficial in the treatment of, piles, hemorrhoids, asthma, hay fever, catarrh, influenza (flu) or pneumonia, or any other ailments, conditions, and afflictions of the human body, provided, however, that respondent is not hereby prohibited from representing that said preparation may be beneficial in the treatment of head colds, and coughs associated therewith, or in the treatment of other conditions wherein a counter-irritant is indicated.

It is further ordered, That respondent shall, within 60 days after service upon it of this modified order, file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which it has complied with this modified order.

IN THE MATTER OF
GEORGE EARL McKEWEN, ET AL., DOING BUSINESS AS HERBAL MEDICINE COMPANY AND NATEX COMPANY
COMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION
OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 26, 1914

Docket 3075. Complaint, Mar. 12, 1937—Decision, Nov. 3, 1937

Where partners engaged in distribution and sale of "Herb Doctor Compound" and "Natex," medicinal preparations, compounded from practically the same ingredients and sold and distributed between and among the various States and in the District of Columbia for substantially same use and conditions, in substantial competition with those likewise engaged in distribution and sale in commerce as aforesaid, of medicinal preparations, and including among its competitors many who distribute and sell preparations designed, intended and sold as aids or adjuncts in the treatment of the same or similar conditions and who do not in any way misrepresent the effectiveness of their respective products—

Represented, directly or through implication, in their advertising in newspapers of general interstate circulation and by circulars and pamphlets sent by mail into the various States, and by radio, that said preparations were new remedies and that they constituted competent and effective cures, remedies, or treatments for stomach troubles, rheumatism, neuritis, liver troubles, deranged kidney, nervousness, headaches due to constipation, general run-down condition, indigestion, constipation, dizziness, gastritis, colds, billiousness and similar maladies, ailments and conditions of the human body, facts being they were not new remedies and did not constitute competent cures, remedies or treatments for any of the ills, maladies and conditions named, or for any other similar ailments and maladies, and representations made by them with respect to the nature of their products, their therapeutic value and effectiveness in use, were grossly exaggerated, false, misleading, and untrue;

With tendency and capacity to mislead and deceive a substantial portion of the purchasing public into the erroneous belief that all said representations were true, and that results claimed by them would be obtained by purchaser users of such products, and with result that substantial number of the consuming public, as a true consequence of the mistaken and erroneous beliefs induced by their said acts, advertisements, and representations, purchased substantial volume of their preparations, and trade in such commerce was unfairly diverted to them from those engaged in the distribution and sale of products intended for similar usage, and who truthfully advertise their respective products; to the substantial injury of competitors in commerce:

Held, That such acts, practices and representations were to the prejudice of the public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition.

Complaint

COMPLAINT¹

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondents, George Earl McKewen, George McKewen, Mrs. George McKewen, Samuel Oler, Mrs. Samuel Oler, Albert W. Oler, Leroy Burdette, Mrs. Leroy Burdette, James Howard, Jr., and Publicity Engravers, copartners doing business under the firm names of Herbal Medicine Company and Natex Company, have their principal office and place of business in the city of Baltimore, State of Maryland. Respondents are now, and for some time have been engaged in the business of distributing and selling, in commerce as herein set out, certain medicinal preparations designated "Herb Doctor Compound" and "Natex."

PAR. 2. Said respondents, being engaged in business as aforesaid, cause said products, when sold, to be transported from their office and place of business in the State of Maryland to purchasers thereof located at various points in States of the United States other than the State from which said shipments were made. Respondents now maintain a constant current of trade in commerce, in said products distributed and sold by them between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 3. In the course and conduct of their said business, respondents are now, and have been, in substantial competition with other individuals and with firms and corporations likewise engaged in the business of distributing and selling medicinal preparations for use in connection with treatment for various human ailments, in commerce, among and between the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

In the course and operation of said business, and for the purpose of inducing the purchase of said medicinal preparations as a remedy for persons suffering from any one or more of numerous ailments, respondents, in their advertising in newspapers of general interstate circulation, by circulars and pamphlets sent by mail into various States of the United States, and by radio, have made, published, or caused to be published, among others, the following statements, claims and representations:²

Similar and almost identical representations to those set forth above are being made by respondents for their preparation Natex, which is compounded from practically the same ingredients as Herb Doctor Compound, and both preparations are sold for substantially the same use and conditions.

The aforesaid statements, together with other similar statements not herein set out with reference to respondents' products "Herb Doctor Compound" and "Natex," purport to be descriptive of said products, their therapeutic value and their effectiveness in use. All of said statements serve as representations, either directly or through implication, that said products form competent and effective cures, remedies or treatments for stomach troubles, rheumatism, neuritis, liver troubles, deranged kidney, nervousness, headaches due to constipation, general run-down condition, indigestion, constipation, dizziness, gastritis, colds, biliousness and similar maladies, ailments and conditions of the human body.

PAR. 4. The representations made by respondent, as above set out, with respect to the nature of its products, their therapeutic value and effectiveness in use are grossly exaggerated, false, and misleading and untrue. Said products are not new remedies and they do not constitute competent cures, remedies or treatments for any of the ills, maladies and conditions of the human body named in paragraph 3 above, or for any other similar ailments and maladies of the human body.

PAR. 5. There are among respondents' competitors many who distribute and sell preparations, designed, intended and sold as aids or adjuncts in the treatment of the same or similar conditions, who do not in any way misrepresent the effectiveness of their respective products.

²The quoted matter which follows here at length, dealing with the qualities or properties claimed by respondent for its said preparations, and therapeutic value and effectiveness in use, are set forth verbatim in the findings, infra, at page 1301, and are accordingly omitted here in the interest of brevity.

PAR. 6. Each and all of the false and misleading statements and representations made by the respondents as to the effectiveness of their said products, as hereinabove set out, in their advertising in the course of distributing their products, were and are calculated to, and had, and now have a tendency and capacity to mislead and deceive a substantial portion of the purchasing public into the erroneous belief that all of said representations are true, and that the results claimed by the respondents will be obtained by the purchasers thereof upon the use of said products. Further, as a true consequence of the mistaken and erroneous beliefs induced by the acts, advertisements and representations of respondents as hereinbefore set out, a substantial number of the consuming public has purchased a substantial volume of respondents' preparations with the result that trade has been unfairly diverted to the respondents from individuals, firms, and corporations likewise engaged in the business of distributing and selling products intended for similar uses, who truthfully advertise their respective products. As a result thereof, substantial injury has been and is now being done by respondents to competitors, in commerce, among and between the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 7. The above and foregoing acts, practices and representations of the respondents have been, and are, all to the prejudice of the public and respondents' competitors as aforesaid, and have been, and are, unfair methods of competition within the meaning and intent of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

mission to withdraw said answer and to substitute therefor an answer admitting all the material allegations of the complaint to be true and waiving the taking of further evidence and all other intervening procedure, which substitute answer was duly filed in the office of the Commission. Thereafter, this proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on the said complaint and the substitute answer, briefs and oral arguments of counsel having been waived, and the Commission having duly considered the same and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondents, George Earl McKewen, George McKewen, Mrs. George McKewen, Samuel Oler, Mrs. Samuel Oler, Albert W. Oler, Leroy Burdette, Mrs. Leroy Burdette, James Howard, Jr., and Publicity Engravers, copartners doing business under the firm names of Herbal Medicine Company and Natex Company, have their principal office and place of business in the city of Baltimore, State of Maryland. Respondents are now, and for some time have been engaged in the business of distributing and selling, in commerce as herein set out, certain medicinal preparations designated "Herb Doctor Compound" and "Natex."

PAR. 2. Said respondents, being engaged in business as aforesaid, cause said products, when sold, to be transported from their office and place of business in the State of Maryland to purchasers thereof located at various points in States of the United States other than the State from which said shipments were made. Respondents now maintain a constant current of trade in commerce, in said products distributed and sold by them, between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 3. In the course and conduct of their said business, respondents are now, and have been, in substantial competition with other individuals and with firms and corporations likewise engaged in the business of distributing and selling medicinal preparations for use in connection with treatment for various human ailments, in commerce, among and between the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 4. In the course and operation of said business, and for the purpose of inducing the purchase of said medicinal preparations as a remedy for persons suffering from any one or more of numerous ailments, respondents, in their advertising in newspapers of general

Similar and almost identical representations to those set forth above are being made by respondents for their preparation Natex, which is compounded from practically the same ingredients as Herb Doctor Compound, and both preparations are sold for substantially the same use and conditions.

The aforesaid statements, together with other similar statements not herein set out with reference to respondents' products "Herb Doctor Compound" and "Natex," purport to be descriptive of said products, their therapeutic value and their effectiveness in use. All of said statements serve as representations, either directly or through implication, that said products form competent and effective cures, remedies or treatments for stomach troubles, rheumatism, neuritis, liver troubles, deranged kidney, nervousness, headaches due to constipation, general run-down condition, indigestion, constipation, dizziness, gastritis, colds, biliousness, and similar maladies, ailments, and conditions of the human body.

PAR. 5. The representations made by respondents, as above set out, with respect to the nature of their products, their therapeutic value and effectiveness in use are grossly exaggerated, false, and misleading and untrue. Said products are not new remedies and they do not constitute competent cures, remedies, or treatments for any of the ills, maladies and conditions of the human body named above, or for any other similar ailments and maladies of the human body.

PAR. 6. There are among respondents' competitors many who distribute and sell preparations, designed, intended and sold as aids or adjuncts in the treatment of the same or similar conditions, who do not in any way misrepresent the effectiveness of their respective products.

PAR. 7. Each and all of the false and misleading statements and representations made by the respondents as to the effectiveness of their said products, as hereinabove set out, in their advertising, in the course of distributing their products, were and are calculated to, and had, and now have a tendency and capacity to mislead and deceive a substantial portion of the purchasing public into the erroneous belief that all of said representations are true, and that the results claimed by the respondents will be obtained by the purchasers thereof upon the use of said products. Further, as a true consequence of the mistaken and erroneous beliefs induced by the acts, advertisements and representations of respondents as hereinbefore set out, a substantial number of the consuming public has purchased a substantial volume of respondents' preparations with the result that trade in said commerce has been unfairly diverted to the respondents from individuals, firms, and corporations likewise engaged in the business of distributing and selling products intended for similar uses, who truthfully advertise their respective products. As a result thereof, substantial injury has been and is now being done by respondents to competitors, in said commerce, among and between the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

CONCLUSION

The above and foregoing acts, practices, and representations of the respondents, George Earl McKewen, George McKewen, Mrs. George McKewen, Samuel Oler, Mrs. Samuel Oler, Albert W. Oler, Leroy Burdette, Mrs. Leroy Burdette, James Howard, Jr., and Publicity Engravers, copartners doing business under the firm names of Herbal Medicine Company and Natex Company, are to the prejudice of the public and of respondents' competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce, within the intent and meaning of Section

5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

It is ordered, That the respondents, George Earl McKewen, George McKewen, Mrs. George McKewen, Samuel Oler, Mrs. Samuel Oler, Albert W. Oler, Leroy Burdette, Mrs. Leroy Burdette, James Howard, Jr., and Publicity Engravers, copartners doing business under the firm name of Herbal Medicine Company and Natex Company, themselves, their representatives, agents and employees, in connection with the offering for sale, sale and distribution of "Herb Doctor," "Herb Doctor Compound" and "Natex," or any preparation or compound composed of the same or similar ingredients and possessing the same or similar therapeutic properties, under the same or any other name or designation, in interstate commerce or in the District of Columbia, do forthwith cease and desist from:

1. Representing that said preparations, or any of them, are competent or effective cures, remedies or treatments for stomach troubles, rheumatism, neuritis, liver troubles, deranged kidney, nervousness, general run-down condition, indigestion, dizziness, gastritis, colds, biliousness and other similar maladies, ailments and conditions of the human body; or that said preparations, or any of them, will cure constipation or headaches due to constipation;

2. Representing that said preparations, or any of them, are new remedies.

It is further ordered, That the respondents shall, within 60 days after service upon them of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which they have complied with this order.

IN THE MATTER OF

ELITE GLOVE COMPANY, INC.

COMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 26, 1914

Docket 3187. Complaint, July 24, 1937—Decision, Nov. 3, 1937

Where a corporation engaged in manufacture, sale, and distribution of gloves, in commerce among the various States and in the District of Columbia, in substantial competition with others similarly engaged, and including among such competitors manufacturers and distributors of like and similar products who truthfully advertise and represent the nature, merit, and origin of their respective products and refrain from advertising or representing, through catalogs, brand marks, or other advertising media, that the merchandise offered by them has a merit, value, and origin which it does not have; in advertising its said product through price lists, newspapers, periodicals and other advertising matter circulated through the mails to its customers and prospective customers—

Represented, through used of word "British," and through sale and distribution of gloves with such brands as "Lady Daphne A British Doeskin MADE IN U. S. A." and "Lady Daphne A British Suede MADE IN U. S. A.," that the leather used in the manufacture thereof was processed or made into the finished leather in England, such as long distinctly preferred by a substantial part of the consuming public in gloves, shoes, and other personal wearing effects, and was imported therefrom into the United States, facts being the hides used in making its said products were imported from the Sudan of Egypt into the United States, and there tanned and processed into finished leather product;

With result of misleading customers and prospective customers into the belief that leather in question was processed into finished leather product in England and imported therefrom into the United States and there made into gloves, and with tendency and capacity to mislead substantial portion of consuming public into erroneous belief that all of its said representations were true with respect to its said products, and source or origin of materials entering into manufacture thereof, and into purchase thereof on account of such belief, and with result that trade was diverted to it from competitors engaged in similar businesses as hereinbefore set forth; to the substantial injury of competition in commerce:

Held, That such acts and practices were to the prejudice of the public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition.

Mr. H. Andrew Schlusberg, of Gloversville, N. Y., for respondent.

COMPLAINT

Complaint

25 F. T. C.

the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that Elite Glove Company, Inc., a corporation, hereinafter referred to as respondent, has been and is now using unfair methods of competition in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in said act of Congress, and it appearing to said Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent, Elite Glove Company, Inc., is a corporation organized and doing business under the laws of the State of New York, and having its principal place of business in the city of Gloversville, State of New York. It is now, and for more than one year last past has been, engaged in the manufacture, sale, and distribution of women's purses and gloves in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 2. When said products are sold, respondent transports or causes the same to be transported from its principal place of business in the city of Gloversville, State of New York, to purchasers thereof located in other States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

There is now, and has been at all times mentioned herein, a constant current of trade and commerce in said above described products sold by respondent between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 3. In the course and conduct of its said business respondent is now, and has been, in substantial competition with other corporations, and with individuals, partnerships, and firms likewise engaged in the business of manufacturing, selling, and distributing women's purses and gloves in commerce among and between the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 4. In the course and conduct of its said business, and for the purpose of inducing the purchase of its products, respondent has caused to be printed and circulated through the United States mails, to its customers and prospective customers in the various States of the United States, catalogs, price lists, and other printed matter.

The respondent has also caused and still causes advertisements to be inserted in newspapers and magazines having a general interstate circulation. And further, it has caused and still causes to be imprinted on said finished products and on the containers thereof as herein set out words and phrases purporting to be descriptive of its said product. Among the statements made in the aforesaid catalogs, price lists, newspapers, and magazine advertisements, and among the words and phrases imprinted on respondent's said products, and upon the containers thereof, the following are representative:

1305

1. Lady Daphne
 A British Doeskin
 MADE IN U. S. A.

2. Lady Daphne
 A British Suede
 MADE IN U. S. A.

In the above set out quoted representations appearing on respondent's products the old English letters in the words "Lady Daphne—A British Doeskin" and "Lady Daphne—A British Suede" are approximately three times the size of the letters, all capitals, in the phrase "Made in U. S. A." The words appearing in large type Old English as contrasted with the phrase "Made in U. S. A.," in very much smaller letters, serve to heighten and to unduly stress the words "Lady Daphne—A British Doeskin" and "Lady Daphne—A British Suede."

PAR. 5. All of the foregoing false and misleading statements and representations made by the respondent, particularly the use of the words "Lady Daphne," said words being indicative of English Royalty, in connection with the words "A British Doeskin" or "A British Suede," and the disparity of the size of the letters used therein as compared to the size of the letters used in the phrase "Made in U. S. A.," serve as representations to customers and prospective customers that the leather used in the manufacture of the respondent's products is processed into a finished leather in England and imported into the United States.

The said representation is further heightened by the use of the phrase "Made in U. S. A." in conjunction with the above set out words in that it leads customers and prospective customers into the belief that the leather is processed into a finished leather in England and imported into the United States, where it is made into gloves and purses.

PAR. 6. In truth and in fact, the leather used in the manufacture of respondent's products is not processed into a finished leather in England and imported into the United States, but is tanned and processed into finished leather in this country and therefrom made directly into the purses and gloves manufactured by the respondent.

PAR. 7. For many years, a substantial part of the consuming public has had, and still has, and has so expressed, a marked preference for purses, gloves, and particularly shoes, and other personal wearing effects made of leather, which are manufactured in England or manufactured in this country from leathers processed in England and then imported into the United States.

PAR. 8. There are among the competitors of the respondent in commerce as herein set out manufacturers and distributors of like and similar commodities who truthfully advertise and represent the nature, merit, and origin of their respective products, and who refrain from advertising or representing through their catalogs, brand marks, and other advertising media that the merchandise offered for sale by them has a merit, value, and origin that it does not have.

PAR. 9. Each and all of the false and misleading statements and representations made by the respondent in designating or describing its products, and the source of origin of the materials entering into their manufacture, in offering for sale and selling its said products, were and are calculated to, and had, and now have, a tendency and capacity to mislead a substantial portion of the consuming public into the erroneous belief that all of the said representations are true, and into the purchase of respondent's said products on account of said beliefs.

PAR. 10. As a result thereof trade has been diverted from those competitors of respondent engaged in similar businesses herein referred to. As a consequence thereof substantial injury has been and is being done by respondent to competition in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 11. The aforementioned methods, acts and practices of respondent are all to the prejudice of the public and respondent's competitors as hereinabove alleged. Said methods, acts, and practices constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914.

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Kelley, Chief Counsel for the Commission, and H. Andrew Schlusberg, counsel for respondent, which said stipulation was thereafter approved by the Commission. Thereafter, this proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on the said complaint and answer thereto and the stipulation as to the facts (respondent having waived the filing of a brief); and the Commission having duly considered the same and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. The respondent, Elite Glove Company, Inc., is a corporation having its principal office and place of business in the city of Gloversville, State of New York.

PAR. 2. The respondent has been, for more than one year last past, engaged in the business of manufacturing, selling, and distributing gloves in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 3. In the sale of said products respondent has transported or caused the same to be transported from its principal place of business in the State of New York to purchasers thereof located in States of the United States other than the State from which the shipment originated, and in the District of Columbia.

There has been for more than one year last past, and there still is, a constant current of trade and commerce in said gloves so sold and distributed between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 4. For more than one year last past the respondent has been engaged in substantial competition with other individuals, partnerships, and corporations engaged in the manufacture, sale, and distribution of like and similar products in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 5. In the course and conduct of its business the respondent, in soliciting the sale of, and in selling, its products, and for the purpose of creating a demand upon the part of the consuming public for said products, has for more than one year last past caused its products to be advertised through the media of price lists, newspapers, magazines, and other advertising media, printed, published, and circulated through the United States mails to its customers and prospective customers located in the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

In the aforesaid ways and by the aforesaid means the respondent makes, and has made, to the general public false and misleading statements with reference to the commodities offered for sale by it. The price lists and other printed matter published and distributed by respondent, and hereinbefore referred to, contain misleading descriptions and representations concerning respondent's products. Certain of the gloves manufactured, sold, and distributed by it are branded and represented to the purchasing public in the following manner:

1. Lady Daphne
A British Doeskin
MADE IN U. S. A.
2. Lady Daphne
A British Suede
MADE IN U. S. A.

PAR. 6. The foregoing statements and representations made by respondent in connection with the words "A British Doeskin" or "A British Suede," and the disparity of the size of the letters used therein as compared with the size of the letters used in the phrase "MADE IN U. S. A.," serve as representations to customers and prospective customers that the leather used in the manufacture of respondent's products is processed into the finished-leather in England and imported into the United States.

The use of the words and phrases set out immediately above leads customers and prospective customers into the belief that the leather is processed into the finished leather in England and imported into the United States, where it is made into gloves.

PAR. 7. The leather used in the manufacture of respondent's products is not processed into a finished leather in England and imported into the United States, but is tanned and processed into a finished leather in this country and therefrom made directly into the gloves made by respondent. The hides used in the making of respondent's products are imported from the Sudan of Egypt into this country, and after the hides are imported into this country they are tanned and processed into the finished leather product.

PAR. 8. For many years a substantial part of the consuming public has had, and still has, and has so expressed, a marked preference for gloves, and particularly shoes, and other personal wearing effects made of leather which are manufactured in England, or manufactured in this country from leather processed in England and then imported into the United States.

PAR. 9. There are among the competitors of respondent in commerce as herein set out manufacturers and distributors of like and similar commodities who truthfully advertise and represent the nature, merit, and origin of their respective products, and who refrain from advertising or representing through their catalogs, brand marks, or other advertising media that the merchandise offered for sale by them has a merit, value, and origin that it does not have.

PAR. 10. All the statements and representations made by respondent in designating or describing its products and the source of origin of the materials entering into their manufacture in offering for sale, and selling, said products were, and are, calculated to, and had, and now have, a tendency and capacity to mislead a substantial portion of the consuming public into the erroneous belief that all the said representations are true, and into the purchase of respondent's said products on account of said belief.

As a result of the representations made by respondent trade has been diverted from those competitors of respondent engaged in similar businesses hereinbefore referred to. As a consequence thereof substantial injury has been and is being done by respondent to competition in commerce among and between the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondent, Elite Glove Company, Inc., are to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce, within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

It is ordered, That the respondent, Elite Glove Company, Inc., a corporation, its representatives, agents, and employes, in connection with the offering for sale, sale and distribution of gloves in commerce among and between the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia, do forthwith cease and desist from representing, directly or indirectly, through the use of the word "British," or any other word or words of similar import and meaning, alone or in conjunction with other words, or through any other means or device, or in any manner, that its gloves, or the leather from which said gloves are made, were imported from or made from hides processed into finished leather in England or any other part of the British Empire.

It is further ordered, That the respondent shall, within 60 days after service upon it of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which it has complied with this order.

COMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION
OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 26, 1914*Docket 3204. Complaint, Aug. 16, 1937—Decision, Nov. 4, 1937*

Where a corporation engaged in sale and distribution of life preservers to purchasers in other States and in District of Columbia, in substantial competition with those engaged in manufacture, sale and distribution, as aforesaid, of like and similar products, and including therein manufacturers and distributors of such products who truthfully advertise and represent the merit of their respective goods and refrain from advertising or representing that merchandise offered by them has a merit which it does not have, or, falsely, that it has met the requirements of the Steamboat Inspection Service—

Represented, through brand on certain of its said life preservers, "Guaranteed to comply with the Rules and Regulations of the Steamboat Inspection Service; allowing cushions as Life Preservers on Pleasure Boats," that life preservers in question complied with rules and regulations of the United States Steamboat Inspection Service and might lawfully be used as life preservers on pleasure boats, facts being that they did not so comply and might not lawfully be used as such;

With result of misleading a substantial portion of consuming public in the several States and in aforesaid District by inducing them mistakenly and erroneously to believe that its said life preservers were guaranteed as above set forth, and might lawfully be used as hereinbefore stated, and with tendency and capacity to mislead and deceive purchasing public into erroneous and mistaken belief that such statements and representations were true, and with effect of inducing them to buy such preservers of it by reason of such erroneous beliefs, and with result of thereby unfairly diverting trade to it from those competitors similarly engaged who do not make use of similar acts and practices; to the substantial injury of competition in commerce:

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that Acme Products Company, a corporation, hereinafter referred to as respondent, has been and is now using unfair methods of competition in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in said act of Congress, and it appearing to said Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent, Acme Products Company, is a corporation having its principal office and place of business at 152 Brewery Street, city of New Haven, State of Connecticut. It has been for more than one year last past engaged in the sale and distribution of life preservers.

In the course and conduct of its business respondent, for more than one year last past, offered said products for sale, sold, and sells the same in commerce between the State of Connecticut and the several States of the United States and in the District of Columbia. When said products are sold respondent transports or causes same to be transported from its place of business in the State of Connecticut to purchasers thereof located in States of the United States other than the State of Connecticut and in the District of Columbia. There has been for more than one year last past, and still is, a constant current of trade and commerce in said products so sold by respondent between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 2. Respondent is now and for more than one year last past has been engaged in substantial competition with other individuals, firms, partnerships, and corporations engaged in the manufacture, sale, and distribution of, or in the sale and distribution of, like and similar products in commerce among and between the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 3. Respondent, in soliciting the sale of, and in selling, its products, and for the purpose of creating a demand on the part of the consuming public for said commodities, has advertised its commodities through the media of price lists and other printed matter published and circulated through the United States mails to their customers and prospective customers located in the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

In the aforesaid ways and by the aforesaid means respondent makes and has made to the general public false and misleading statements with reference to the commodities offered for sale by it.

PAR. 4. The said price lists and other printed matter published and distributed by respondent as aforesaid contain misleading descriptions and representations concerning its products. For example, certain of the cushions sold and distributed by it are branded and represented to the purchasing public in the following manner:

Guaranteed to comply with the Rules and Regulations of the Steamboat Inspection Service; allowing cushions as Life Preservers on Pleasure Boats.

The aforementioned branding and representations appearing on the aforesaid articles and their containers serve to lead purchasers and prospective purchasers into the erroneous and mistaken belief that the commodities so branded and represented comply with the rules and regulations of the U. S. Steamboat Inspection Service; that said products meet the requirements of the said Service; and said cushions may be lawfully used as life preservers on boats.

The aforementioned requirements of the U. S. Steamboat Inspection Service are that a life preserver must be capable of sustaining afloat for a continuous period of 24 hours a weight so arranged as to provide a continuous downward gravitation pull of 20 pounds.

PAR. 5. In truth and in fact the aforesaid commodities do not meet the requirements of the U. S. Steamboat Inspection Service and cannot be lawfully used as life preservers on boats. Respondent's life preservers are not capable of sustaining afloat for a continuous period of 24 hours a weight so arranged as to provide a continuous downward gravitation pull of 20 pounds, and may not lawfully be used as life preservers on boats.

PAR. 6. There are among the competitors of the respondent manufacturers and distributors of like and similar products who truthfully advertise and represent the merit of their respective products, and who refrain from advertising or representing that the merchandise offered for sale by them has a merit that it does not have, or that it has met the requirements of the U. S. Steamboat Inspection Service.

PAR. 7. The effect of the foregoing false and misleading representations and acts of respondent in selling and offering for sale such items of merchandise as hereinbefore referred to is to mislead a substantial part of the purchasing and consuming public in the several States of the United States and in the District of Columbia by inducing them to mistakenly believe that the articles hereinabove set out and described in paragraph 1 will meet the requirements of the U. S. Steamboat Inspection Service, and that the said commodities, as a result of meeting the requirements of the said service, may and can be lawfully used as life preservers on boats.

PAR. 8. The aforesaid false and misleading representations and statements on the part of respondent have induced and still induce a substantial number of consumer purchasers of said commodities to buy products offered for sale, sold, and distributed by the respondent on account of the aforesaid erroneous and mistaken belief. As a result thereof trade has been unfairly diverted to respondent from those competitors of respondent engaged in similar businesses referred to in paragraph 6. As a consequence thereof substantial injury has been and is being done by respondent to competition in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 9. The aforementioned methods, acts, and practices of respondent are all to the prejudice of the public and respondent's competitors as hereinabove alleged. Said methods, acts, and practices constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914.

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, on August 17, 1937, issued and served its complaint in this proceeding upon respondent, Acme Products Company, charging it with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of the provisions of said act. After the issuance of said complaint and the filing of respondent's answer thereto, a stipulation as to the facts was entered into between W. T. Kelley, Chief Counsel of the Commission, and Woodruff, Klein and White, counsel for respondent, which said stipulation was thereafter approved by the Commission. Thereafter this proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on the said complaint and answer thereto, and the stipulation as to the facts (respondent having waived the filing of a brief); and the Commission having duly considered the same and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. The respondent, Acme Products Company, is a corporation having its principal office and place of business at 152 Brewery Street, city of New Haven, State of Connecticut.

PAR. 2. The respondent has been for more than one year last past engaged in the business of selling and distributing life preservers.

PAR. 3. In the sale of said products respondent has transported or caused the same to be transported from its principal place of business in the State of Connecticut to purchasers thereof located in States of the United States other than the State from which shipment originated, and in the District of Columbia.

There has been for more than one year last past, and there still is, a constant current of trade and commerce in said life preservers so sold and distributed by respondent between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 4. For more than one year last past the respondent has been engaged in substantial competition with other individuals, partnerships, and corporations engaged in the manufacture, sale, and distribution of like and similar products in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 5. In the course and conduct of its business the respondent, in soliciting the sale of, and in selling, its products, and for the purpose of creating a demand on the part of the consuming public for said products, has for more than one year last past caused its products to be advertised through the media of price lists and other printed matter published and circulated through the United States mails to their customers and prospective customers located in the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

In the aforesaid ways and by the aforesaid means the respondent makes, and has made, to the general public false and misleading statements with reference to the commodities offered for sale by it. The price lists and other printed matter published and distributed by respondent, and hereinbefore referred to, contain misleading descriptions and representations concerning its products. Certain of the life preservers sold and distributed by it are branded and represented to the purchasing public in the following manner:

Guaranteed to comply with the Rules and Regulations of the Steamboat Inspection Service; allowing cushions as Life Preservers on Pleasure Boats.

The branding and representations above set out and appearing on respondent's articles and their containers serve to lead customers and prospective customers into the erroneous and mistaken belief that the commodities so branded and represented comply with the rules and regulations of the U. S. Steamboat Inspection Service; that the products meet the requirements of the Steamboat Inspection Service, and further that the products may be lawfully used as life preservers on boats.

The requirements of the U. S. Steamboat Inspection Service are that a life preserver must be capable of sustaining afloat for a continuous period of 24 hours a weight so arranged as to provide a continuous downward gravitation pull of 20 pounds.

PAR. 6. In truth and in fact the respondent's commodities do not meet the requirements of the U. S. Steamboat Inspection Service. The respondent's life preservers are not capable of sustaining afloat for a continuous period of 24 hours a weight so arranged as to provide a continuous downward gravitation pull of 20 pounds, and may not lawfully be used as life preservers on boats.

PAR. 7. There are among the competitors of the respondent manufacturers and distributors of like and similar products who truthfully advertise and represent the merit of their respective products, and who refrain from advertising or representing that the merchandise offered for sale by them has a merit that it does not have, or that it has met the requirements of the U. S. Steamboat Inspection Service when such is not the fact.

PAR. 8. The effect of the foregoing false and misleading representations of the respondent in selling and offering for sale its life preservers is to mislead a substantial portion of the consuming public in the several States of the United States and in the District of Columbia by inducing them to mistakenly and erroneously believe:

(1) That the respondent's life preservers are guaranteed to comply with the rules and regulations of the U. S. Steamboat Inspection Service, and (2) that said life preservers may be lawfully used as life preservers on pleasure boats.

PAR. 9. The use of each and all of the foregoing false and misleading statements and representations as herein set out has had, and now has, a tendency and capacity to mislead and deceive the purchasing public into the erroneous and mistaken belief that said statements and representations are true, and has induced and now induces members of the public to purchase the life preservers of the respondent on account of such erroneous beliefs.

Said representations have thereby unfairly diverted trade to said respondent from those competitors of respondent engaged in similar businesses who do not make use of similar acts and practices, and substantial injury has been done by respondent to competition in commerce among and between the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondent Acme Products Company are to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce, within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes.”

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

It is ordered, That the respondent, Acme Products Company, a corporation, its representatives, agents, and employes, in connection with the offering for sale, sale, and distribution of life preservers in commerce among and between the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia, do forthwith cease and desist from representing, directly or indirectly, through advertisements, price lists, circulars, labels, containers, or any other form of printed matter, or by radio broadcasting, or in any other manner:

1. That the said life preservers comply with the rules and regulations of the U. S. Steamboat Inspection Service; and
2. That said life preservers may be lawfully used as life preservers on pleasure boats.

It is further ordered, That the respondent shall, within 60 days after service upon it of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which it has complied with this order.

THE MASONITE CORPORATION

COMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION
OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 26, 1914

Docket 2614. Complaint, Nov. 6, 1935—Decision, Nov. 6, 1937

Where a corporation engaged in manufacture of wall board and wall coverings compounded from wood chips and fibers and other substances under a process resulting in a hard durable sheeting or covering upon which were scored or stamped squares resembling, when painted or lacquered by others with different color from remainder of the sheet, mortar lines upon completely installed ceramic surface, and in the sale and distribution, in other States and in the District of Columbia, of such products, in competition, among others, with many engaged in manufacture, sale and transportation, as aforesaid, of tile made from clay and baked in kilns and properly described and designated as such, and with others who make, sell, and distribute wall board and wall coverings and various other products, including copper tile, glass tile, wood tile, rubber tile, cork tile, and the like, properly thus designated and described—

Made use of designation "Temprtle" as designation of its said products in extensively advertising the same, notwithstanding fact its aforesaid board and coverings were not that baked clay or ceramic product connoted by word "tile" standing alone and without qualifying prefix as hereinbefore set forth; with tendency and capacity to mislead and deceive substantial portion of purchasing public, to its damage and injury, into the belief that aforesaid products, thus designated, were made from baked clay, and with tendency to and effect of diverting trade from tile or baked clay products of competitor-manufacturers who make and sell, as aforesaid, tile products:

Held, That such acts and practices were to the prejudice of the public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition.

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that The Masonite Corporation, hereinafter referred to as respondent, has been and is using unfair methods of competition in commerce as "commerce"

is defined in said act of Congress, and it appearing to said Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint, stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAP^H 1. Said respondent The Masonite Corporation is a corporation organized and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Delaware with its principal office and place of business located in Chicago in the State of Illinois. Respondent has been, during its entire corporate existence, engaged in the manufacture, sale, and distribution in interstate commerce of insulating board and wall board manufactured out of wood refuse.

Respondent, in the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid, has manufactured, sold, distributed, and transported, or caused to be transported, from its factory in Laurel, Miss., and from other warehouses used by the respondent in the State of Mississippi and in the State of Illinois for the purpose of storing its said products, insulating board and wall board, and has caused such products to be transported from the place where the same is manufactured or stored in the States aforesaid into States other than the State of origin of such shipments, and has maintained a constant current of trade and commerce between and among the various States of the United States.

PAR. 2. Respondent is the sole owner and patent holder of the process of the manufacture of the various commodities above described as being manufactured and vended by it, and in the course and conduct of its business has manufactured and sold under the trade name of "Temprtile" a commodity manufactured solely of wood or wood refuse, and has displayed and featured the name so adopted and attached to such commodity in advertisements and advertising matter issued and circulated by it, and has caused, either separately or in immediate conjunction with such trade name the following statements to appear:

Aristocrat in Beautiful Low Cost Tile.

There are two methods of installing Temprtile. One is to cement the tile over plaster * * *.

This new, modern all wood Temprtile is made of all new Presdwood * * *.

It is furnished in $\frac{1}{8}$ inch and $\frac{3}{8}$ inch thicknesses; 4 feet by 12 feet panels, with indentations compressed in the surface. When properly finished it produces the effect of 4 inch by 4 inch tile and in several ways it is superior to regular tile.

PAR. 3. The use of the trade name "Temprtile," and the use of the advertisements and advertising matter as quoted above, have the capacity and tendency to, and do, in fact, mislead and deceive a substantial portion of the purchasing public into the belief that the product so described is "tile" as that word is understood in the building trade and by the general public.

The word "tile" as understood in the building trade and by the general public designates a product consisting of clay or earth; such product being manufactured by a process of baking in a kiln or oven.

PAR. 4. In the course and conduct of the business of the respondent as above related, it manufactures for sale to and resale by non-manufacturing individuals, firms, copartnerships and corporations engaged in competition with respondent in the merchandising of similar products, a commodity identical, or virtually identical, in its composition and processing with the commodity last above described, and distributes such commodity in interstate commerce among such competitors, prohibiting, however, the use by them of the trade name "Temprtle," but permitting, encouraging, and directing the selection of various other names which it approves and which names are trade names under which the identical or virtually identical, product is marketed by such competitors to the public. Some of the names so selected and approved by the respondent are as follows:

Celotex Hard Tile

Hamasote Tempered Tile

Armstrong Temwood Tile

Tuffwood Tile

Canic Dense Tile

Gold Bond Hard Board Tile

Beaver Dense Tile

and other similar names, all of which contain as part thereof, the word "tile."

In addition to the practice last above set forth, the said respondent prepared and furnished and does now prepare and furnish to such competitors, advertisements and advertising matter which they used and now use in soliciting the sale of and selling said products in interstate commerce, and which advertisements and advertising matter contained and do contain expressions and representations similar to those set forth in paragraph 1 of this complaint.

In truth and in fact, none of the products so sold to competitors, as above related, are clay products, nor are they baked in a kiln, and they are not and have not been "tile" as that word is understood in the building trade and by the general public.

PAR. 5. There are, among the competitors of respondent, a substantial number of persons, partnerships, and corporations engaged in the manufacture of insulating boards and wall boards out of wood or pulp refuse, who do not falsely represent the product so manufactured by them to be "tile."

There are, among the competitors of respondent, a substantial number of persons, partnerships, and corporations engaged in the manufacture of "tile," which said "tile" is made by a process and of basic materials in consonance with the conception of "tile" as understood in the building trade and by the general public. The acts and practices of the respondent as above set forth have had and have the capacity and tendency to divert trade unfairly to respondent from the aforesaid competitors.

PAR. 6. The acts and practices done by the respondent are all to the injury and prejudice of the public and of competitors of the respondent in interstate commerce, and constitute unfair methods of competition in interstate commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled, "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission on November 6, 1935, issued, and on November 8, 1935, served its complaint in this proceeding upon respondent, The Masonite Corporation, a corporation, charging it with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of the provisions of said act. After the issuance of said complaint, and the filing of respondent's answer thereto, testimony and other evidence in support of the allegations of said complaint were introduced by Alden S. Bradley and Morton Nesmith, attorneys for the Commission, before John J. Keenan, an examiner of the Commission theretofore duly designated by it, and in opposition to the allegations of the complaint by Dyke and Schaines, attorneys for the respondent; and said testimony and other evidence were duly recorded and filed in the office of the Commission. Thereafter, the proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on the said complaint, the answer thereto and testimony and other evidence; and the Commission having duly considered the same, and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public and makes this, its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. The respondent, The Masonite Corporation, is a corporation organized and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Delaware, with its office and principal place of business located at Chicago in the State of Illinois. Respondent has been, during its corporate existence, engaged, among other things, in the business of manufacturing, selling, and distributing wall board and wall coverings, which products are manufactured from wood fibre, and which respondent designates as "Temprtle." Respondent owns and operates a factory wherein its products are manufactured in the city of Laurel, State of Mississippi.

Respondent, in the course and conduct of its business, has sold, distributed, and transported or caused to be transported, its aforesaid product from its factory in the State of Mississippi to purchasers thereof located in various points of the States of the United States other than the State of Mississippi, and has maintained a constant current of trade and commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

There are among competitors of respondent many persons, firms, and corporations located and doing business in the United States, engaged in the manufacture, sale, and transportation of tile in commerce between and among the various States of the United States, which tile is manufactured from clay and baked in kilns, whose products are properly described and designated as tile. There are others who manufacture, sell and distribute wall board and wall coverings, and various other products, such as copper tile, glass tile, wood tile, rubber tile, cork tile, and the like, whose products are properly designated and described by such names.

PAR. 2. The term "tile," when used alone and not in conjunction with other words is generally understood in the building trade and by the general public to be a hard clay product which has been baked in kilns and in its final form shaped into comparatively small-sized units. Tile, as so understood, is compounded from clays and a mixture of clays, feldspar, flint, talc, ball clays, prophyllite, aluminum hydroxid, silica, and some chemicals for coloring purposes. These materials are mixed in various proportions to produce various qualities in the tile. They are mixed in large mixing vats containing agitators, until the mixture of the ceramic materials with the admixture of water approaches the consistency of a thick soup. Then it is put in a filter press, the water being reduced to a certain percentage of the total content of the materials, and the materials coming from the filter presses are dried until they have a moisture content ranging from ten to fifteen percent. The materials are then pulverized into a dust form, which is pressed into tiles of various shapes. The tiles are then dried down to approximately zero per cent moisture content and fired in a kiln at a temperature exceeding red heat, which may run from 1,200° Fahrenheit upward. The purpose of this firing is to harden the ceramic material until it is an impervious, dense, durable mass. There are glazed and unglazed types of tiles. The unglazed tile has a rough, unfinished surface, while the glazed tile has a shiny glass or decorative surface, the glaze being matured after the first firing operation by the addition of certain mineral oxides; after which it is put through a process known as "gloss firing." Floor and wall tiles are produced in relatively small individual units, the extreme permissible size of the units being about six by twelve inches, the reason being that the manufacturers of ceramic products are confronted with the fact that clays and mixtures of clays with other materials, when formed into wares, undergo shrinkage during the drying and firing processes. Therefore, one of the problems of the tile manufacturer is to produce ware free from warping or cracking, and the larger the unit the greater the liability of warping and cracking resulting from shrinkage of the mixture.

Floor and wall tile of baked clay is installed upon a proper base and set in cement by workmen known as "tile setters." The term "tile" when used alone and without descriptive words, means ceramic tile, which is a more complete name for the product just described.

The use of the word "tile," standing alone and without descriptive words, dates back some four thousand years to the Egyptians, who, according to man's knowledge, were the first to discover the art of molding and baking clay into hard units, as above described.

There are manufacturers, however, of other products designed to be used as floor and wall coverings, whose said products are properly designated and described as rubber tile, glass tile, copper tile, acoustical tile, cork tile, wood tile, composition tile, metal tile, cement tile, linoleum tile, asphaltum tile, stone tile, and the like. These products are generally understood in the building trade and by a substantial portion of the general public as being coverings made from the substances so indicated by word or words preceding the word "tile."

The respondent's product, known as "Temprtile," is compounded from wood chips and wood fibres and other substances and siccative materials, which are unique, and are baked in an oven at a high temperature, pressed and tempered, so that the final product is a hard, durable sheeting or covering. These sheets can be cut in practically any size desired, but the general size ordinarily sold by respondent is three by four feet. The surface of this sheeting or covering known as "Temprtile" is scored or stamped so that lines forming squares are impressed upon the sheeting and when painted or lacquered by others with a different color from the remainder of the sheeting appear similar to mortar lines upon a completely installed ceramic surface.

Findings

PAR. 3. Many experts, including prominent architects, tile manufacturers, tile contractors, tile jobbers, professors of ceramic, structural engineers, architectural and structural standardists and contractors, testified, and the Commission finds it to be a fact, that the word "tile" when standing alone means or connotes a baked clay or ceramic product; further, that the term "tile" standing alone does not have to be accompanied by the word "ceramic" to denote a ceramic tile. By the use of the word "tile" alone a ceramic tile is meant. There are different types of tiles, or ceramic tiling, such as roofing tiles, hollow tiles, drain tiles, and decorative wall tiles. The term "tile," if used in conjunction with some other word or words, descriptive of the material or substance of which the product is composed, means or connotes not a baked clay or ceramic product, but a product manufactured from the other material or substance employed. Examples of this are rubber tile, asbestos tile, cork tile, wood tile, tin tile, glass tile, and cement tile. These various products have been so known to the building trade and to a portion of the general public for a number of years. Several experts and others, including prominent architects, manufacturers, building contractors, jobbers, and members of the general purchasing public, testified that the word "tile" when standing alone meant nothing to them, and they had to be informed of the substance of which the tile was made.

The Government of the United States, through the Procurement Department of the Treasury, in asking for bids on public buildings, includes in its specifications references to various products under the designations of cork tile, rubber tile, linoleum tile, acoustical tile, and others.

PAR. 4. Respondent, in the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid, in extensive advertising of its products, uses the name "Temprtle." The aforesaid designation, when used alone by respondent as descriptive of or as a designation for its products, has the tendency and capacity to mislead and deceive a substantial portion of the purchasing public into the belief that the products so described are manufactured from baked clay, all of which is to the damage and injury of said purchasing public, and tends to and does divert trade from competitors of respondent, who manufacture and sell tile products manufactured from baked clay.

PAR. 5. The designation and description by respondent of its products as "Temprtle" as heretofore described, is deceptive and misleading and has the capacity and tendency to deceive purchasers of said product into the belief that said products are manufactured from baked clay.

1320

Order

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondent, The Masonite Corporation, are to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce, within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

It is ordered, That the respondent The Masonite Corporation, a corporation its officers, representatives, agents, and employees, in connection with the offering for sale, sale and distribution of its wall board and wall covering in interstate commerce or in the District of Columbia, do forthwith cease and desist from representing:

1. Directly or indirectly, by the use of the words, "Temprtle" or "tile" that its products are "tile" unless in immediate conjunction with the words "Temprtle" or "tile" wherever used, in the same conspicuous type, there appear a word or words designating the material or substance of which the products are made, such as wood tile, glass tile, rubber tile, asbestos tile, copper tile, cork tile, or metal tile.

It is further ordered, That the respondent shall, within 90 days after service upon it of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail, the manner and form in which it has complied with this order.

Complaint

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that Standard Wall Covering Company, Inc., hereinafter referred to as "respondent," has been, and is now, using unfair methods of competition in commerce as "commerce" is defined in said act, and it appearing to the Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint, stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent, Standard Wall Covering Company, Inc., is a Delaware corporation, which has its principal office and place of business at 1819 North 9th Street, in the City of Philadelphia, State of Pennsylvania. Respondent is now, and has been for some time, engaged in the business of manufacturing, distributing, and selling, in commerce, as herein set out, a line of interior fiber wall coverings designated variously as "Tile," "Stanco-tile," "Mono-Tile," "Wall Tile," and "Mono-Marble."

PAR. 2. Said respondent, being engaged in business as aforesaid, causes said fiber wall coverings, when sold, to be transported from its place of business in the State of Pennsylvania to purchasers thereof located in various points of the States of the United States other than the State from which said shipments are made. Respondent now maintains a constant current of trade in commerce in said fiber wall coverings, manufactured, distributed, and sold by it between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 3. In the course and conduct of said business, respondent is now, and has been, in substantial competition with other individuals and with firms and corporations engaged in the business of manufacturing, distributing and selling wall coverings, particularly ceramic or burned clay tile, and marble, for use as wall coverings, in commerce, among and between the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia. In the course and operation of said business and for the purpose of inducing the purchase of its said line of wall coverings, respondent has issued and circulated throughout the various States, and to customers and prospective customers, advertising folders, and literature. Some of respondent's said advertising and literature, so transmitted and circulated by respondent, is intended to convey the impression that respondent's products are clay tile and marble, respectively, by omitting therefrom any reference to indicate that its product, which resembles tile, is other than burned clay tile, or to indicate that its product which resembles marble is other than marble.

The general public preference is for genuine tile and marble, over any substitutes or simulations. Historically "tile" is a ceramic or kiln or oven-baked product of comparatively small sizes to make them available both for places and designs. It is so understood in the building trade and by the general public. Respondent's products are neither tile nor marble.

On its letters, bill heads and price lists, respondent states:

Originators of one-piece tile in 1908

Originators of one-piece marble in 1932

On its bill heads appear also the following:

Mono-Tile—Tile in Sheets Not a Metal or Cement

Mono-Marble

On its circulars appears the following:

Stanco One-Piece Tile Non-Metallic A Modern Wall Tile at a Reasonable Cost

On its retail price lists and some of its circulars appears the following:

MONO-TILE: SIZES AND COLORS

Number	Field	Mortar Line
110	White	Warm Gray.
120	White	Chinese Red.
130	White	Black.
210	Ivory	Warm Gray.
310	Nile Green	Light Ivory.
320	Ocean Green	Olive Green.
410	Blue	Light Ivory.
510	Black	Light Ivory.
610	Apricot	Light Ivory.

In some of its advertisements appear the following:

Mono-Tile Mono-Marble * * * for bath, kitchen Any Interior * * *
We are manufacturers and contractors of these one-piece wall coverings which simulate ordinary tile and are photographic reproductions of quarry marble

On some of its circulars appear illustrations in color of Mono-Marble which closely resembles photographs of genuine mottled marble, and are designated as follows:

"Verde," "Breche Rose," "Light Skyros," "Black and Gold."

PAR. 4. There are among respondent's competitors many who manufacture, distribute and sell, for use as interior wall coverings, silica, burned clay tile, and also marble.

1328

Complaint

Burned clay tile is ordinarily made and sold in slabs or pieces of comparatively small size, and set in place with cement. Marble, in somewhat larger slabs, is also set in place with mortar or cement. To further simulate tile and marble, respondent has made its tile products with a glazed surface with scores and lines of various colors in such manner and at such intervals as to make its said wood fiber products more closely resemble tile slabs with various colored cement between them. Its fiber Mono-Marble slabs are made with a polished marble-like surface, with color schemes which make them resemble genuine marble as closely as an ordinary photographic reproduction.

PAR. 5. Such products so produced, advertised, sold, and shipped by respondent, have the capacity and tend to put the means and power into the hands of unscrupulous builders, architects, and speculative builders and dealers to confuse, impose upon and deceive those who buy houses and those for whom houses are built, into the belief that when they are buying respondent's wood fiber tile products and installations, they are buying and receiving silica or burned clay tile products and installations, to the injury of said buying and owning public, and also to the injury of those who manufacture and sell, in interstate commerce, genuine silica and clay surface tile for similar purposes, in competition with respondent.

Likewise, in the production, advertising, and distribution of its product, Mono-Marble, a product glazed and colored to imitate and resemble genuine marble, respondent puts the means and power into the hands of unscrupulous builders, architects, speculative builders and dealers, to confuse, impose upon and deceive those who buy houses and those for whom houses are built, into the belief that when they are buying respondent's Mono-Marble, they are buying and receiving genuine marble or receiving genuine marble installation, to their injury, and also to the injury of those who produce and sell, in interstate commerce, genuine marble for similar purposes, in competition with respondent.

The effect of such actions, representations, and dealings of respondent is also to divert to respondent some trade of those who desired and intended to purchase or own genuine tile and marble products and installations, from competitors who make such genuine products; and the effect is also to divert to respondent certain trade from those competitors who make and sell similar products but who represent their products truthfully, all to the injury of said competitors.

PAR. 6. The above and foregoing acts, practices, and representations of the respondent have been, and are, all to the prejudice of the public and respondent's competitors as aforesaid, and have been, and are, unfair methods of competition within the meaning and intent of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission on April 17, 1936, issued, and on April 20, 1936, served its complaint in this proceeding upon respondent, Standard Wall Covering Company, Inc., charging it with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of the provisions of said act. After the issuance of said complaint, and the filing of respondent's answer thereto, testimony and other evidence in support of the allegations of said complaint were introduced by Alden S. Bradley and Morton Nesmith, attorneys for the Commission, before C. F. Diggs, an examiner of the Commission theretofore duly designated by it, and the witnesses for the Commission were cross-examined by Dyke and Schaines, attorneys for the respondent; and said testimony and other evidence were duly recorded and filed in the office of the Commission. Thereafter, the respondent, through its attorneys, filed a motion to withdraw the original answer filed on June 1, 1936, and in lieu thereof to substitute its answer annexed to said motion, in which answer respondent admitted all the material allegations of the complaint to be true, and stated that it waived hearings on the charges set forth in the said complaint and consented that, without further evidence or other intervening procedure, the Commission might issue and serve upon it findings as to the facts and conclusions and an order to cease and desist from the violations of law charged in the complaint. Thereafter the Commission granted the respondent's motion to withdraw its original answer, and received and filed respondent's substitute answer. Thereafter the proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on said complaint, substitute answer and the record; and the Commission having duly considered the same and being fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

Findings

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. The respondent, Standard Wall Covering Company, Inc., is a corporation organized and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Delaware, with its principal place of business and office located at 1819 North Ninth Street in the city of Philadelphia, State of Pennsylvania. Respondent has been, during its entire corporate existence, engaged, among other things, in the business of selling and distributing interior fibre wall coverings designated variously as "tile," "Stancotile," "Mono-tile," "Wall Tile," and "Mono-Marble."

Respondent, in the course and conduct of its business, has sold, distributed and transported or caused to be transported, its aforesaid products from its place of business in the State of Pennsylvania to purchasers thereof located in various points of the States of the United States other than the State of Pennsylvania, and has maintained a constant current of trade and commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

There are among competitors of respondent many persons, firms, and corporations located and doing business in the United States, engaged in the sale and transportation of tile in commerce between and among the different States of the United States, which tile is manufactured from clay and baked in kilns, whose products are properly described and designated as tile. There are others who sell and distribute interior wall coverings and various other products, such as copper tile, glass tile, wood tile, rubber tile, cork tile, and the like, whose products are properly designated and described by such names. There are also competitors of respondent who sell and distribute wall coverings manufactured from quarried marble, who properly describe their products as marble.

PAR. 2. The term "tile," when used alone and not in conjunction with other words, is generally understood in the building trade and by the general public to be a hard clay product which has been baked in kilns and in its final form shaped into comparatively small-sized units. Tile, as so understood, is compounded from clays and a mixture of clays, feldspar, flint, talc, ball clays, prophyllite, aluminum hydroxid, silica, and some chemicals for coloring purposes. The materials are mixed in various proportions to produce various qualities in the tile. They are mixed in large mixing vats containing agitators, until the mixture of the ceramic materials with the admixture of water approaches the consistency of a thick soup. Then it is put in a filter press, the water being reduced to a certain percentage of the total content of the materials, and the materials coming from the filter press are dried until they have a moisture content ranging from ten to fifteen percent. The materials are then pulverized into a dust form, which is pressed into tiles of various shapes. The tiles are then dried down to approximately zero percent moisture content and fired in a kiln at a temperature exceeding red heat, which may run from twelve hundred degrees Fahrenheit upward. The purpose of this firing is to harden the ceramic material until it is an impervious, dense, durable mass. There are glazed and unglazed types of tiles. The unglazed tile has a rough, unfinished surface, while the glazed tile has a shiny glass or decorative surface; the glaze being matured after the first firing operation by the addition of certain mineral oxides, after which it is put through a process known as "gloss firing." Floor and wall tiles are produced in relatively small individual units, the extreme permissible size of the units being about six by twelve inches, the reason being that the manufacturers of ceramic products are confronted with the fact that clays and mixtures of clays with other materials, when formed into wares, undergo shrinkage during the drying and firing processes. Therefore, one of the problems of the tile manufacturer is to produce ware free from warping or cracking, and the larger the unit the greater the liability of warping and cracking resulting from shrinkage of the mixture.

Floor and wall tile of baked clay is installed upon a proper base and set in cement by workmen known as "tile setters." The term "tile" when used alone and without descriptive words, means ceramic tile, which is a more complete name for the product just described.

The use of the word "tile," standing alone and without descriptive words, dates back some four thousand years to the Egyptians, who, according to man's knowledge, were the first to discover the art of molding and baking clay into hard units as above described.

There are sellers and distributors, however, of other products designed to be used as interior wall coverings, whose said products are properly designated and described as rubber tile, glass tile, copper tile, acoustical tile, cork tile, composition tile, metal tile, cement tile, linoleum tile, wood tile, asphaltum tile, stone tile, and the like. These products are generally understood in the building trade and by a substantial portion of the general public as being coverings made from the substances so indicated by word or words preceding the word "tile."

The respondent's products, known as "Staucotile," "mono-tile," and "Wall Tile" are compounded from wood chips and wood fibres and other substances, and siccative materials, which are unique, and are baked in an oven at a high temperature, pressed and tempered, so that the final product is a hard, durable sheeting or covering. These sheets can be cut in practically any size desired, but the general size ordinarily sold by respondent is three by four feet. The surfaces of these sheetings or coverings known as "Stancotile," "Mono-tile" and "Wall Tile," are scored or stamped by the manufacturer from whom respondent purchases, so that lines forming squares are impressed upon the sheets or coverings, and when painted or lacquered by respondent a different color from the remainder of the sheeting appear similar to mortar lines on a completely installed ceramic surface. The respondent, after finishing these products, brands and labels them "Stancotile," "Mono-Tile," or "Wall Tile."

"Marble," as generally understood in the building trade and by the purchasing public, is a natural, one-piece, solid formation which is quarried out of the earth and cut and finished from the solid mass formation, and is capable of taking a polish.

PAR. 3. Many experts, including prominent architects, tile manufacturers, tile contractors, tile jobbers, professors of ceramics, structural engineers, architectural and structural standardists, and contractors, testified, and the Commission finds it to be a fact, that the word "tile" when standing alone means or connotes a baked clay or ceramic product; further, that the term "tile" standing alone does not have to be accompanied by the word "ceramic" to denote a ceramic tile. By the use of the word "tile" alone a ceramic tile is meant. There are different types of tiles, or ceramic tiling, such as roofing tiles, hollow tiles, drain tiles, and decorative wall tiles. The term "tile," if used in conjunction with some other word or words, descriptive of the material or substance of which the product is composed, means or connotes not a baked clay or ceramic product but a product manufactured from the other material or substance employed. Examples of this are rubber tile, asbestos tile, cork tile, wood tile, tin tile, glass tile, and cement tile. These various products have been so known to the building trade and to a portion of the general public for a number of years. Several experts and others, including prominent architects, manufacturers, building contractors, jobbers, and members of the general purchasing public, testified that the word "tile" when standing alone meant nothing to them, and they had to be informed of the substance of which the tile was made.

The Government of the United States, through the Procurement Department of the Treasury, in asking for bids on public buildings, includes in its specifications references to various products under the designations of cork tile, rubber tile, linoleum tile, acoustical tile, and others.

Order

25 F. T. C.

PAR. 4. Respondent, in the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid, in extensive advertising of its products, uses the names "tile," "Stancotile," "Mono-tile," and "Wall Tile." The aforesaid designations, when used alone by respondent as descriptive of or as a designation for its products, have the tendency and capacity to mislead and deceive a substantial portion of the purchasing public into the belief that the products so described are manufactured from baked clay, all of which is to the damage and injury of said purchasing public, and tends to and does divert trade from competitors of respondent, who sell and distribute tile products manufactured from baked clay.

The use by the respondent of the words "Mono-Marble" has a tendency and capacity to and does in fact mislead and deceive a substantial portion of the purchasing public into the belief that the product so described is marble, to the damage and injury of the purchasing public, and tends to and does divert trade from competitors of respondent who quarry and finish marble.

PAR. 5. The designation and description by respondent of its products as "tile," "Stancotile," "Mono-tile," and "Wall Tile," as heretofore described, is deceptive and misleading, and has the capacity and tendency to deceive purchasers of said products into the belief that said products are manufactured from baked clay.

The designation and description by respondent of its product as "Mono-Marble," as heretofore described, is deceptive and misleading, and has the capacity and tendency to deceive purchasers of said product into the belief that said product is marble, as before described.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondent Standard Wall Covering Company, Inc., are to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce, within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

thereto, no briefs being filed and oral argument not having been requested and the Commission having made its findings as to the facts and its conclusion that said respondent has violated the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled, "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

It is ordered, That the respondent Standard Wall Covering Company, a corporation, its officers, representatives, agents, and employees, in connection with the offering for sale, sale and distribution of its interior wall coverings in interstate commerce or in the District of Columbia, do forthwith cease and desist from representing:

1. Directly or indirectly, by the use of the words "tile," "Stanco-tile" and "Mono-tile," that its products are "tile," unless in immediate conjunction with the words "tile" "Stanco-tile" or "Mono-tile" wherever used, in the same conspicuous type, there appear a word or words designating the material or substance of which the products are made, such as wood tile, glass tile, rubber tile, asbestos tile, copper tile, cork tile, or metal tile; and

2. Directly or indirectly, by the use of the words "Mono-Marble" that its products are marble when such is not the fact.

It is further ordered, That the respondent shall, within 90 days after service upon it of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail, the manner and form in which it has complied with this order.

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that Marsh Lumber Company, a corporation, trading as Marsh Wall Tile Company, hereinafter designated as respondent, is now, and has been, using unfair methods of competition in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in said act, and it appearing to said Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint stating the charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. The respondent, Marsh Lumber Company, is a corporation organized, existing, and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Ohio, with its offices and principal place of business located at 535-611 Tuscarawas Avenue, in the city of Dover, State of Ohio. Respondent is now and for more than one year last past has been engaged, under its corporate name of Marsh Lumber Company, and also under the trade-name and style of Marsh Wall Tile Company, in the business of selling wall coverings and counter coverings, which are products manufactured from wood fibre, and which respondent designates and terms "Marsttile" and "Marsh Marble." Respondent distributes said products to purchasers thereof, and when orders are received therefor they are filled by respondent by shipping said wall coverings and counter coverings to purchasers from the city of Dover, Ohio, in and through other States of the United States, and in the District of Columbia, and there is now, and has been during the time hereinbefore mentioned, a constant current of trade in commerce in said wall coverings and counter coverings so distributed and sold by said respondent, between and among the various States of the United States, and in the District of Columbia.

In the course and conduct of its business, respondent was and is in substantial competition with other individuals, firms, partnerships, and corporations likewise engaged in the sale and distribution of wall coverings and counter coverings, between and among the various States of the United States, and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 2. Respondent, in the course and operation of its business as described in paragraph 1 hereof, in soliciting the sale of, and selling its products in interstate commerce, sells its wall coverings and counter coverings under the trade name and style of "Marsh Wall Tile Company," which name respondent caused and causes to be conspicuously displayed on its letterheads and advertising matter, and also caused and causes said products to be described in its advertisements, letterheads, billheads, contracts, and specifications circulated in interstate commerce as "Marshtile," "Marsh Wall Tile," "tile," "wall tile," "Marsh Marble."

PAR. 3. The aforesaid wall coverings and counter coverings sold and distributed by respondent, as set forth in paragraph 1 hereof, are made by exploding pine wood chips with high pressure steam treating with oil welding together, and compressing into sheets by subjecting to high pressure in steam heated hydraulic presses. The products are then glazed with lacquer and processed in such a manner as to give said products the appearance of tile or marble respectively. To further simulate tile the products are made with a glazed surface with scores and lines of various colors in such manner and at such intervals as to make the said wood fibre products more closely resemble tile slabs, with various colored cement between them; and to simulate marble the products are grained, giving said product the appearance of marble. The use of the words "Marshtile," "Marsh Wall Tile," "tile," "wall tile," and "Marsh Marble," in said trade name and in said advertising literature hereinabove referred to, and the placing of said wall coverings and counter coverings in the hands of builders and dealers, enables builders, architects and speculative builders, and dealers to confuse, impose upon, and deceive those members of the purchasing public who buy houses, and also those for whom houses are built, into the belief that when they are buying respondent's wood fibre products and installations, they are buying and receiving silica or burned clay tile products and installations, or marble as the case may be.

PAR. 4. The word "tile" is understood in the building trade, and by the general public, to mean a clay product shaped in comparatively small sized units and baked in a kiln or oven.

Marble is understood by the building trade and the purchasing public to be a stone, which is a product of nature and which is capable of taking a polish.

PAR. 5. A substantial number of the members of the purchasing public, who have occasion to purchase buildings or equipment wherein wall coverings and counter coverings form an integral and necessary part thereof, have a preference in many instances, for wall coverings and counter coverings, made from tile or from marble, believing that tile and marble are products of a quality and durability superior for the purposes herein named, to other products, such as wood, irrespective of any method of processing. Such members, when they observe such wall coverings and counter coverings already installed that have the same appearance, such as graining in various types of marble or marking simulating mortar joints in tile construction, as marble or tile respectively, believe that said products are actually tile or marble, and not a product made of wood; and said members of the purchasing public, when buying wall coverings and counter coverings having the appearance of tile or marble and unaccompanied by any explanation or description of said products and which have been installed as aforesaid, are entitled to receive tile or marble, as the case may be, and not wall coverings or counter coverings manufactured from wood fibre.

PAR. 6. The acts and practices of respondent, as herein set forth, are calculated to and do have the capacity and tendency of inducing many of the purchasing public to purchase said wall coverings and counter coverings as aforesaid, in the mistaken belief that they are purchasing wall coverings and counter coverings made of tile or marble.

PAR. 7. There are among the competitors of respondent engaged in the sale of wall coverings and counter coverings, as mentioned in paragraph 1 hereof, corporations, individuals, firms and partnerships, who sell and distribute wall coverings and counter coverings manufactured by the same methods as respondent's products, but who truthfully represent that the counter coverings and wall coverings sold by them are not tile or marble but are imitations of tile or marble. There are also among the competitors of respondent engaged in the sale and distribution of wall coverings and counter coverings, corporations, individuals, firms, and partnerships, who sell and distribute wall coverings and counter coverings which are made of clay baked in a kiln or oven, or wall coverings and counter coverings which are marble, and who truthfully represent the same to be tile or marble.

The acts and practices of respondent, as herein set forth, are calculated to, tend to and do unfairly divert trade to respondent from such corporations, individuals, firms and partnerships, engaged in the sale of wall coverings and counter coverings in interstate commerce, throughout the various States of the United States, and in the District of Columbia. By the acts and practices of the respondent hereinbefore set forth, substantial injury is done to competitors in interstate commerce.

PAR. 8. The above and foregoing acts, practices, and representations of respondent, have been, and are, all to the prejudice of the public and respondent's competitors as aforesaid, and have been, and are, unfair methods of competition, within the meaning and intent of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled, "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, on May 29, 1936, issued, and on June 3, 1936, served its complaint in this proceeding upon respondent, The Marsh Lumber Company, a corporation, charging it with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of the provisions of said act. After the issuance of said complaint, and the filing of respondent's answer thereto, testimony and other evidence in support of the allegations of said complaint were introduced by Alden S. Bradley and Morton Nesmith, attorneys for the Commission, before John J. Keenan, an examiner of the Commission theretofore duly designated by it, and in opposition to the allegations of the complaint by Dyke and Schaines, attorneys for the respondent; and said testimony and other evidence were duly recorded and filed in the office of the Commission. Thereafter the proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on the said complaint, the answer thereto and testimony and other evidence; and the Commission having duly considered the same and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public, and makes this, its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. The respondent, The Marsh Lumber Company, is a corporation, organized and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Ohio, with its office and principal place of business located at 535-611 Tuscarawas Avenue, city of Dover, State of Ohio. Respondent has been, during its corporate existence, engaged, among other things, in the business of selling and distributing wall coverings and counter coverings, which products are manufactured from wood fibre and which respondent designates as "Marshtile," "Marsh Wall Tile," and "Marsh Marble."

Respondent, in the course and conduct of its business, has sold, distributed, and transported or caused to be transported, its aforesaid products from its place of business in the State of Ohio to purchasers thereof located in various points of the States of the United States other than the State of Ohio, and has maintained a constant current of trade and commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

There are among competitors of respondent many persons, firms and corporations located and doing business in the United States, engaged in the sale and transportation of tile in commerce between and among the different States of the United States, which tile is manufactured from clay and baked in kilns, whose products are properly described and designated as tile. There are others who sell and distribute wall coverings and counter coverings and various other products, such as copper tile, glass tile, wood tile, rubber tile, cork tile, and the like, whose products are properly designated and described by such names. There are also competitors of the respondent who sell and distribute wall coverings and counter coverings manufactured from quarried marble, who properly describe their products as marble.

through a process known as "gloss firing." Floor and wall tiles are produced in relatively small individual units, the extreme permissible size of the units being about six by twelve inches, the reason being that the manufacturers of ceramic products are confronted with the fact that clays and mixtures of clays with other materials, when formed into wares, undergo shrinkage during the drying and firing processes. Therefore, one of the problems of the tile manufacturer is to produce wares free from warping or cracking, and the larger the unit the greater the liability of warping and cracking resulting from shrinkage of the mixture.

There are sellers and distributors, however, of other products designed to be used as wall and counter coverings, whose said products are properly designated and described as rubber tile, glass tile, copper tile, acoustical tile, cork tile, composition tile, metal tile, cement tile, linoleum tile, wood tile, asphaltum tile, stone tile, and the like. These products are generally understood in the building trade and by a substantial portion of the general public as being coverings made from the substances so indicated by word or words preceding the word "tile."

The respondent's products, known as "Marsttile" and "Marsh Wall Tile," are compounded from wood chips and wood fibres and other substances, and siccative materials, which are unique, and are baked in an oven at a high temperature, pressed and tempered, so that the final product is a hard, durable sheeting or covering. These sheets can be cut in practically any size desired, but the general size ordinarily sold by respondent is three by four feet. The respondent, after finishing these products, brands and labels them "Marsttile" and "Marsh Wall Tile."

"Marble," as generally understood in the building trade and by the purchasing public, is a natural, one-piece, solid formation which is quarried out of the earth and cut and finished from the solid mass formation, and is capable of taking a polish.

PAR. 3. Many experts, including prominent architects, tile manufacturers, tile contractors, tile jobbers, professors of ceramics, structural engineers, architectural and structural standardists, and contractors, testified, and the Commission finds it to be a fact, that the word "tile" when standing alone means or connotes a baked clay or ceramic product; further, that the term "tile" standing alone does not have to be accompanied by the word "ceramic" to denote a ceramic tile. By the use of the word "tile" alone a ceramic tile is meant. There are different types of tiles, or ceramic tiling, such as roofing tiles, hollow tiles, drain tiles, and decorative wall tiles. The term "tile," if used in conjunction with some other word or words, descriptive of the material or substance of which the product is composed, means or connotes not a baked clay or ceramic product, but a product manufactured from the other material or substance employed. Examples of this are rubber tile, asbestos tile, cork tile, wood tile, tin tile, glass tile, and cement tile. These various products have been so known to the building trade and to a portion of the general public for a number of years. Several experts and others, including prominent architects, manufacturers, building contractors, jobbers and members of the general purchasing public, testified that the word "tile" when standing alone meant nothing to them, and they had to be informed of the substance of which the tile was made.

The Government of the United States, through the Procurement Department of the Treasury, in asking for bids on public buildings, includes in its specifications references to various products under the designation of cork tile, rubber tile, linoleum tile, acoustical tile, and others.

PAR. 4. Respondent, in the course and conduct of its business as aforesaid, in extensive advertising of its products, uses the names "Marshtile" and "Marsh Wall Tile." The aforesaid designations, when used alone by respondent as descriptive of or as a designation for its products, have the tendency and capacity to mislead and deceive a substantial portion of the purchasing public into the belief that the products so described are manufactured from baked clay, all of which is to the damage and injury of said purchasing public, and tends to and does divert trade from competitors of respondent, who sell and distribute tile products manufactured from baked clay.

Order

25 F. T. C.

The use by the respondent of the words "Marsh Marble" has a tendency and capacity to mislead and deceive a substantial portion of the purchasing public into the belief that the product so described is marble, to the damage and injury of the purchasing public, and tends to and does divert trade from competitors of respondent who quarry and finish marble.

PAR. 5. The designation and description by respondent of its products as "Marshtile" and "Marsh Wall Tile" as heretofore described, is deceptive and misleading, and has the capacity and tendency to deceive purchasers of said products into the belief that said products are manufactured from baked clay.

The designation and description by respondent of its product as "Marsh Marble," as heretofore described is deceptive and misleading, and has a capacity and tendency to deceive purchasers of said product into the belief that said product is marble, as before described.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondent, The Marsh Lumber Company, are to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce, within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

It is ordered, That the respondent The Marsh Lumber Company, a corporation, its officers, representatives, agents, and employees, in connection with the offering for sale, sale and distribution of its wall boards, wall coverings and counter coverings in interstate commerce or in the District of Columbia, do forthwith cease and desist from representing:

Order

1. Directly or indirectly, by the use of the words "Marshtile," "Marsh Wall Tile," "Wall Tile," or "tile" that its products are "tile" unless in immediate conjunction with the words "tile," "Marshtile," "Marsh Wall Tile," or "Wall Tile" wherever used, in the same conspicuous type, there appear a word or words designating the material or substance of which the products are made, such as wood tile, glass tile, rubber tile, asbestos tile, copper tile, cork tile, or metal tile; and
2. Directly or indirectly, by the use of the words "Marsh Marble" or "Marble" that its products are marble, when such is not the fact.

It is further ordered, That the respondent shall, within 90 days after service upon it of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail, the manner and form in which it has complied with this order.

Docket 2934. Complaint, Sept. 30, 1936—Decision, Nov. 6, 1937

Where a corporation engaged in the sale and distribution of various pharmaceutical preparations including, in tablet and capsule form, so-called "Dr. Haller's Prescription 5000," made for it by others and sold and distributed by it, through wholesale and retail druggists and direct to the consuming public on mail order, to purchasers in other States, in active competition with those engaged in manufacture and sale, or sale, of various preparations for treatment of conditions similar to those for which it recommended its aforesaid preparation—

(a) Represented, in advertisements thereof in newspapers and periodicals of general circulation, and in circular letters distributed among its customers and prospective customers, that preparation in question was a safe and dependable remedy for delayed or suppressed menstruation, and that through the use thereof women suffering therefrom would end such condition and obtain relief safely, quickly and dependably, and that preparation in question had been dispensed to American women through ethical channels for almost half a century; and

(b) Represented, as aforesaid, that said preparation was best product in the world for cases of unnaturally delayed menstruation and successfully relieved some of the longest and most stubborn cases, and that with it countless women had obtained and were obtaining most gratifying results; Facts being it would not bring about such relief or end such delay safely, quickly, and dependably, and was completely ineffectual in many cases, and use thereof was always dangerous, it was not best product in such unnaturally delayed cases, and did not successfully relieve some of the longest and most stubborn cases, and was not a dependable product nor a safe or competent abortifacient, and various representations aforesaid were false;

With effect of misleading and deceiving many members of the purchasing public and causing them erroneously to believe that said representations were true, and, because of such erroneous belief, to purchase substantial quantities of its said preparation, and of thereby diverting trade in such commerce to it from its competitors who truthfully represent their products; to their substantial injury and to that of public:

Held, That such acts practices were to the prejudice of the public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition.

Before Mr. Charles P. Vicini, trial examiner.

sion, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission having reason to believe that Lewyn Drug Incorporated has been and is using unfair methods of competition in commerce as "commerce" is defined in said act, and it appearing to said Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereto would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. The respondent, Lewyn Drug Incorporated, is a corporation organized and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the State of California with its principal office and place of business located at 1928 Taft Avenue in the city of Hollywood, within the State of California. Said respondent is now and for more than one year last past has been engaged in the sale of a preparation recommended for the treatment of unnaturally delayed menstruation and known and designated as "Dr. Haller's Famous Prescription 5000," and the distribution thereof in commerce between and among the various States of the United States. It causes said "Dr. Haller's Famous Prescription 5000" when sold by it to be transported to the purchasers thereof located in the State of California and in various States of the United States other than the State of California. There is now and has been for a long time, to wit, for more than one year last past, a constant current of trade and commerce by respondent in said "Dr. Haller's Famous Prescription 5000" between and among the various States of the United States.

In the course and conduct of its said business, said respondent is now and for a long time, to wit, for more than one year last past has been in substantial competition in commerce between and among the various States of the United States with sundry other corporations, partnerships, firms, and individuals engaged in the interstate sale and distribution of other preparations recommended for the treatment of unnaturally delayed menstruation.

PAR. 2. The preparation "Dr. Haller's Famous Prescription 5000" is manufactured for said respondent by several manufacturers and is sold and distributed by said respondent through drug stores located in the various States of the United States and also directly to consumers located in the various States of the United States.

PAR. 3. Said respondent, in the course and conduct of its said business as hereinbefore set out in paragraphs 1 and 2, has been and now is engaged in extensive advertisement of its said product as a means of furthering and aiding in the interstate sale and distribution of "Dr. Haller's Famous Prescription 5000," and as a medium of advertising it has been and now is using various magazines of national circulation and distribution.

Said respondent in its said advertisements of the preparation known as "Dr. Haller's Famous Prescription 5000," sold and distributed by it, has made and is now making various false, deceptive and misleading statements concerning said preparation. Among the said statements which said respondent has used and is now using in its advertisements in magazines and in its circulars distributed with its said preparation are the following:

In Europe women are not distressed about unnatural delay—when the calendar passes the danger mark. They use Dr. Haller's Famous Prescription 5000, and end delay safely, quickly, dependably.

For almost half a century Prescription 5000 has also been dispensed to American women through ethical channels.

Dr. Haller's Prescription 5000 is the best product in the world for cases of unnaturally delayed menstruation.

Whereas in truth and in fact "Dr. Haller's Famous Prescription 5000" does not end delay safely, quickly, dependably, has not been dispensed to American women through ethical channels for almost a half a century, and is not the best product in the world for cases of unnaturally delayed menstruation.

Respondent in its said advertising has created and is now creating upon the public the impression and the belief that "Dr. Haller's Famous Prescription 5000" is a safe and dependable preparation for use in ending cases of unnaturally delayed menstruation, whereas in truth and in fact said "Dr. Haller's Famous Prescription 5000" is not safe and dependable and its use may produce serious results, and it will not end cases of unnaturally delayed menstruation.

PAR. 4. The use by said respondent, Lewyn Drug Incorporated, of the foregoing false, deceptive, and misleading representations has had and does now have the capacity and tendency to and does mislead and deceive the public into the erroneous and untrue belief that "Dr. Haller's Famous Prescription 5000" is in truth and in fact a safe and harmless preparation which will end unnaturally delayed menstruation. Acting in such erroneous belief, the consuming public and especially women suffering from delayed menstruation, have been induced and are now induced to purchase "Dr. Haller's Famous Prescription 5000" in preference to other preparations designed to end delayed menstruation offered for sale by manufacturers, retail dealers, and distributors. As a result of such false, deceptive, and misleading representations on the part of said respondent, trade is unfairly diverted to respondent from such manufacturers, retail dealers, or distributors of other preparations for ending delayed menstruation who do not misrepresent the character and quality of their respective products or the results obtained from the use thereof.

Findings

PAR. 5. Said false, deceptive, and misleading representations of said respondent contained in its advertisements have resulted in injury to respondent's competitors and to retail dealers and in prejudice to the buying public and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, and entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, on September 30, 1936, issued and served its complaint in this proceeding upon respondent Lewyn Drug, Inc., charging it with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of the provisions of said act. After the issuance of said complaint and the filing of respondent's answer thereto, testimony and other evidence in support of the allegations of said complaint were introduced by Reuben J. Martin, attorney for the Commission, before Charles P. Vicini, an examiner of the Commission theretofore duly designated by it (no testimony or other evidence being introduced by the respondent in opposition to the allegations of the complaint); and said testimony and other evidence were duly recorded and filed in the office of the Commission. Thereafter the proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on the said complaint, the answer thereto, testimony and other evidence and brief in support of the complaint (no brief having been filed on behalf of respondent and respondent not having requested oral argument); and the Commission having duly considered the same and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom.

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent, Lewyn Drug, Inc., is a corporation, organized under the laws of the State of California with its principal place of business at 655 North Arden Blvd., in the city of Hollywood, State of California, and with a branch office or place of business at Steubenville, Ohio. Respondent, in 1934, succeeded to the business of a partnership conducted under the name and style of Lewyn Drug Company. Respondent is engaged in the sale and distribution of various pharmaceutical preparations, including a preparation in tablet and capsule form designated "Dr. Haller's Prescription 5000." Said preparation is manufactured for respondent by others and is sold and distributed by the respondent through wholesale and retail druggists and direct to the consuming public on mail orders. Respondent causes the preparation, "Dr. Haller's Prescription 5000," when sold by it, to be transported from its principal place of business or its branch office through and into various other States of the United States to the respective purchasers thereof, located at various points in such States of the United States other than the States of California and Ohio. In the course and conduct of its said business, respondent has been, and is now, in active competition with various persons, partnerships, and corporations, engaged in the manufacture and sale, or the sale, of various preparations for the treatment of conditions similar to those for which respondent recommends the use of its said preparation, "Dr. Haller's Prescription 5000."

PAR. 2. Respondent, in the course and conduct of its business, represents and recommends its preparation, "Dr. Haller's Prescription 5000," as a safe, dependable remedy for delayed or suppressed menstruation, and claims that, by its use, women suffering from delayed or suppressed menstruation will obtain relief safely, quickly, and dependably.

PAR. 3. In the course and conduct of its business, respondent has caused and is causing advertisements in aid of the sale of its said preparation, "Dr. Haller's Prescription 5000," to be published in newspapers and magazines of general circulation in various States of the United States and has also used and is using advertising in the form of circular letters which it causes to be distributed among its customers and prospective customers. In its said advertisements, respondent has made and is making numerous claims and representations concerning the therapeutic qualities of and the benefits accruing to the users of said preparation, "Dr. Haller's Prescription 5000," and the uses for which said preparation is recommended by the respondent. Among said representations so made by said respondent are representations to the effect:

That in Europe women are not disturbed about unnatural delay, for in such cases they use said prescription and end the delay safely, quickly, and dependably;

That for almost half a century the prescription has been dispensed to American women through ethical channels;

That said preparation, "Dr. Haller's Prescription 5000," is the best product in the world for cases of unnaturally delayed menstruation;

1348

Findings

That "Dr. Haller's Prescription 5000" successfully relieves some of the longest and most stubborn cases; and

That with this dependable product countless women have obtained most gratifying results.

PAR. 4. The claims made by the respondent for its preparation "Dr. Haller's Prescription 5000" are false, deceptive, and misleading. Said preparation does not have a wide distribution through the usual wholesale and retail drug channels and it has not been dispensed to American women through ethical channels for almost half a century.

Respondent's said preparation, "Dr. Haller's Prescription 5000" consists of tablets, capsules and ampules, whose respective contents are as follows:

Each white tablet contains:

Ext. Cotton Root Bark.....	1	Grain
Ext. Black Hellebore.....	½	"
Ergotin (Bonjean).....	1	"
Aloes (Curacao).....	2½	"
Iron Sulphate dried.....	1	"
Oil Pennyroyal.....	¼	Minim
Oil Savin.....	¼	"

Each red tablet contains:

Quinine Sulphate.....	5	Grains
-----------------------	---	--------

Each capsule contains:

Ergotin (Bonjean).....	1	Grain
Oil Savin.....	½	Minim
Aloin.....	⅓	Grain
Apiol Green q. s. to.....	5	Minims

Each ampule contains:

Pituitary Extract.....	½	cc
------------------------	---	----

The ingredients composing said preparation are known to the medical profession and to pharmacists as "emmenagogues."

Delayed menstruation may be functional due to a misbalance of the endocrine glands. Delayed menstruation may be due to or caused by any of the severe major diseases, such as tuberculosis, cancer, pneumonia, or hyperthyroidism, or it may be due to pregnancy.

Medical testimony is that where the delayed menstruation is functional due to a misbalance of the endocrine glands or where it is due to such diseases as tuberculosis, cancer, pneumonia or hyperthyroidism, the use of "Dr. Haller's Prescription 5000" would in no way correct the situation, end the delay and bring about menstruation, and its use would be definitely dangerous. If the user is suffering from high blood pressure, its use would be dangerous due to the adverse effect on the pressure caused by some of the ingredients, notably pituitary extract, contained in the preparation. In cases where pregnancy exists it would be definitely dangerous because the drugs contained in said preparation are entirely too potent to be administered without the attendance of a physician, and when given without the attendance of a physician and in an overdose it will possibly produce excessive uterine hemorrhage or rupture of the uterus with the invariable danger of puerperal sepsis or secondary infection of the uterine contents with resulting high mortality rate. In many cases said preparation will not expel the uterine contents.

The use of "Dr. Haller's Prescription 5000" will not bring about relief in cases of delayed or suppressed menstruation. It will not end delay safely, quickly and dependably, but is completely ineffectual in many cases and its use is always dangerous. It is not the best product in cases of unnaturally delayed menstruation and it does not successfully relieve some of the longest and most stubborn cases of delayed menstruation. It is not a dependable product and it is not a safe or competent abortifacient.

PAR. 5. Respondent, in its newspaper and magazine advertisements, has made use of various letters of the alphabet preceding its corporate name so that the corporate name would appear to be V. B. Lewyn Drug, Inc., U. S. Lewyn Drug, Inc., etc. Different letters or combinations of letters of the alphabet are used in each advertisement and a number of different combinations were used and are so being used. This was done and is being done for identification purposes in order that respondent might be able to tell which of its advertisements were producing the most results, but each of said advertisements so used were and are published on the authority of the respondent.

PAR. 6. The representations and implications used by the respondent, as above set out, in connection with the offering for sale and sale of the preparation herein described in said commerce, are false, misleading and deceptive and have had, and now have, the tendency and capacity to, and do, mislead and deceive many members of the purchasing public and cause them erroneously to believe that said representations are true and cause them, because of said erroneous belief, to purchase substantial quantities of respondent's said preparation, thereby unfairly diverting trade in said commerce to the respondent from its competitors who truthfully represent their product, to the substantial injury of said competitors in said commerce and to the injury of the public.

Order

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondent, Lewyn Drug, Inc., are to the prejudice of the public and competitors of the respondent, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

It is ordered, That the respondent, Lewyn Drug, Inc., its officers, agents, employees, representatives, or successors, whether acting under said name of Lewyn Drug, Inc., or under any other name or in any other manner, in connection with the offering for sale, sale and distribution of the preparation now known and sold under the name "Dr. Haller's Prescription 5000," or any other preparation, under whatever name sold, composed of the same or similar ingredients, and possessing similar properties, in interstate commerce, or in the District of Columbia, do forthwith cease and desist from:

1. Representing that said preparation is a safe, dependable remedy for delayed or suppressed menstruation;
2. Representing that by the use of said preparation women suffering from delayed or suppressed menstruation will end such delay or suppression and will obtain relief safely, quickly and dependably;
3. Representing that said preparation has been dispensed to American women through ethical channels for almost a half century;
4. Representing that said preparation is the best product in the world for cases of unnaturally delayed menstruation;
5. Representing that said preparation successfully relieves some of the longest and most stubborn cases of delayed menstruation, and that with this said preparation countless women have obtained and are obtaining most gratifying results;

6. And from making any other similar representations of like import or effect as to the therapeutic or medicinal value of said preparation or the benefits accruing from the use thereof.

It is ordered, That the respondent, Lewyn Drug, Inc., shall, within 60 days after service upon it of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which it has complied with the order hereinabove set forth.

IN THE MATTER OF AL HARTMAN, INC.

COMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION
OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 26, 1914

Docket 3241. Complaint, Oct. 9, 1937—Decision, Nov. 6, 1937

Where a corporation engaged in manufacture of dresses and sale and distribution thereof to retail dealers and other customers in the various States and in the District of Columbia, in substantial competition with others engaged in such sale and distribution of dresses; in advertising the same in newspapers of interstate circulation—

- (a) Represented, designated and referred thereto as "Indo China Washable Crepe Prints"; and
- (b) Set forth on tags attached to dresses thus advertised, offered and sold, language stating that "Owing to the peculiar delicacy of all silk weaves, manufacturers will not guarantee them as flawless," etc., and that "There are certain characteristics appearing in the weave of all silks that should not be considered as imperfections," etc.;

Notwithstanding fact dresses thus advertised and offered were not composed of silk, product of cocoon of silk worm, as long definitely understood in mind of retail dealers and consuming public from word "silk," products of which have long held, and still hold, great public esteem and confidence for their preeminent qualities, and as understood from word "crepe" without descriptive qualification, as applied to dress goods and other items of wearing apparel, as meaning one of terms applied to fabrics resulting from different types of weaving silk fiber, and fabric made from cocoon of silk worm, and as commonly known and understood by public generally, "silk";

With capacity and tendency to mislead and deceive substantial portion of purchasing public into erroneous belief that such dresses were made of silk, and to cause them to purchase said dresses by reason of such erroneous beliefs, thus engendered, and to divert trade unfairly to it from competitors engaged in manufacture and sale of silk dresses who do not misrepresent the kind of dresses made and offered for sale by them; to the substantial injury of competition in commerce:

Held, That such acts and practices were to the prejudice of the public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition.

Mr. Astor Hogg for the Commission.

COMPLAINT

been and is using unfair methods of competition in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in said act, and it appearing to said Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent, Al Hartman, Inc., is a corporation organized, existing, and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of New York, with its office and principal place of business located at 1400 Broadway in the city of New York, in said State. It is now, and for many years last past has been, engaged in the business of manufacturing dresses. It sells, and has sold and distributed, such dresses to retail dealers and other customers located in the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia. It causes, and during the time above mentioned has caused, its said dresses, when sold, to be shipped from its place of business in New York City to the purchasers thereof located in the various States of the United States other than the State of New York. There is now, and has been at all times mentioned herein, a constant current of trade and commerce by said respondent in said dresses, so sold by it, between and among the various States of the United States. Respondent is now, and at all times herein mentioned has been, in substantial competition with other corporations and with persons, firms, and partnerships engaged in the sale and distribution of dresses in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of its business as described in paragraph 1 herein, respondent, in soliciting the sale of and selling certain of its dresses, caused, and causes, advertisements and advertising matter to be inserted in newspapers having an interstate circulation. In said advertisements, such dresses offered for sale and sold by respondent were represented, designated and referred to as "Indo China Washable Crepe Prints." The dresses so advertised and offered for sale, and sold, had, and have, attached thereto tags bearing the following language:

Owing to the peculiar delicacy of all silk weaves, manufacturers will not guarantee them as flawless, or against perspiration, slipping or roughing. There are certain characteristics appearing in the weave of all silks that should not be considered as imperfections. They are unavoidable results for which the manufacturer cannot be held responsible.

The foregoing statements and representations made by the respondent, as in this paragraph set out, serve as representations to members of the purchasing public and to retail dealers that such dresses so advertised and offered for sale were, and are, silk dresses.

Complaint

The representations hereinabove set forth are, and were, grossly false and misleading in that said dresses so represented, designated and referred to are not, and were not, composed of silk, the product of the cocoon of the silkworm, but are, and were, composed of materials other than silk.

PAR. 3. The word "silk" for many years last past has had, and still has, in the mind of the retail dealers and consuming public generally a definite and specific meaning, to wit, the product of the cocoon of the silkworm. Silk products for many years have held, and still hold, great public esteem and confidence for their preeminent qualities. Silk fibre has long been woven into a variety of fabrics. A variety of distinctive terms has been applied to the fabrics resulting from different types of weaving of silk fibre. Dress goods and other items of wearing apparel designated, described and referred to as "crepe" have been for a long time, and at the present time still are, associated in the public mind with the fabric made from the cocoon of the silkworm, commonly known and understood by the public generally as "silk."

PAR. 4. There are among the competitors of respondent mentioned in paragraph 1 herein corporations, individuals, partnerships, and firms engaged in the manufacture and sale of silk dresses who do not misrepresent the kind of dresses manufactured and offered for sale by them.

PAR. 5. The use by respondent of the representations set forth herein have had, and now have, the capacity and tendency to mislead and deceive a substantial portion of the purchasing public into the erroneous belief that such representations are, and were, true and to cause them to purchase said products as a result of such erroneous beliefs engendered as above set forth. The use by respondent of the representations aforesaid has unfairly diverted, and does unfairly divert, trade in said commerce to the respondent from its said competitors, and thereby substantial injury is being, and has been done, by respondent to competition in commerce among and between the various States of the United States.

PAR. 6. The above alleged acts and practices of respondent, as hereinabove alleged, are all to the prejudice of the public and respondent's said competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914.

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, on the 9th day of October 1937, issued and subsequently served its complaint in this proceeding upon respondent Al Hartman, Inc., a corporation, charging it with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of the provisions of said act. On November 3, 1937, the respondent filed its answer in which answer it admitted all the material allegations of the complaint to be true and stated that it waived hearing on the charges set forth in the said complaint and consented that, without further evidence or other intervening procedure, the Commission may issue and serve upon it findings as to the facts and conclusion and an order to cease and desist from the violations of law charged in the complaint. Thereafter, this proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on the said complaint and the answer thereto, and the Commission having duly considered the same and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent, Al Hartman, Inc., is a corporation organized, existing and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of New York, with its office and principal place of business located at 1400 Broadway in the city of New York, in said State. It is now, and for many years last past has been, engaged in the business of manufacturing dresses. It sells, and has sold and distributed, such dresses to retail dealers and other customers located in the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia. It causes, and during the time above mentioned has caused, its said dresses, when sold, to be shipped from its place of business in New York City to the purchasers thereof located in the various States of the United States other than the State of New York. There is now, and has been at all times mentioned herein, a constant current of trade and commerce by said respondent in said dresses, so sold by it, between and among the various States of the United States. Respondent is now, and at all times herein mentioned has been, in substantial competition with other corporations and with persons, firms, and partnerships engaged in the sale and distribution of dresses in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of its business as described in paragraph 1 herein, respondent, in soliciting the sale of and selling certain of its dresses, caused, and causes, advertisements and advertising matter to be inserted in newspapers having an interstate circulation. In said advertisements, such dresses offered for sale and sold by respondent were, and are, represented, designated and referred to as "Indo China Washable Crepe Prints." The dresses so advertised and offered for sale, and sold, had, and have, attached thereto tags bearing the following language:

Owing to the peculiar delicacy of all silk weaves, manufacturers will not guarantee them as flawless, or against perspiration, slipping or roughing. There are certain characteristics appearing in the weave of all silks that should not be considered as imperfections. They are unavoidable results for which the manufacturer cannot be held responsible.

PAR. 3. In the manner and through the means above stated, respondent represented, and represents, to retail dealers and to members of the purchasing public generally that such dresses so advertised and offered for sale were, and are, silk dresses. The representations hereinabove set forth are, and were, false and misleading in that said dresses so represented, designated and referred to were not, and are not, composed of silk, the product of the cocoon of the silkworm, but were, and are, composed of materials other than silk.

PAR. 4. The word "silk" for many years last past has had, and still has, in the mind of the retail dealers and consuming public generally a definite and specific meaning, to wit, the product of the cocoon of the silkworm. Silk products for many years have held, and still hold, great public esteem and confidence for their pre-eminent qualities. Silk fibre has long been woven into a variety of fabrics. A variety of distinctive terms has been applied to the fabrics resulting from different types of weaving of silk fibre. Dress goods and other items of wearing apparel designated, described or referred to as "crepe," without a modifying word descriptive of the fibre from which they are made, have been for a long time, and at the present time still are, associated in the public mind with a fabric made from the cocoon of the silkworm, commonly known and understood by the public generally as "silk."

PAR. 5. There are among the competitors of respondent mentioned in paragraph 1 hereof corporations, individuals, partnerships, and firms engaged in the manufacture and sale of silk dresses who do not misrepresent the kind of dresses manufactured and offered for sale by them.

Order

25 F. T. C.

PAR. 6. The representations made by respondent in connection with the sale and distribution of said dresses in said commerce as hereinabove set out have had, and now have, the capacity and tendency to mislead and deceive a substantial portion of the purchasing public into the erroneous belief that such dresses were made of silk, and to cause them to purchase such dresses on account of such erroneous beliefs engendered as above set forth. The representations made by respondent, as aforesaid, have the capacity and tendency to unfairly divert trade to respondent from said competitors, and thereby substantial injury is being done, and has been done, by the respondent to competition in commerce as herein set out.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of respondent Al Hartman, Inc. are to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce, within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

This proceeding having been heard by the Federal Trade Commission upon the complaint of the Commission and the answer of respondent, in which answer respondent admits all the material allegations of the complaint to be true, and states that it waives hearing on the charges set forth in said complaint and consents that, without further evidence or other intervening procedure, the Commission may issue and serve upon it findings as to the facts and conclusion and an order to cease and desist from the violations of law charged in the complaint, and the Commission having made its findings as to the facts and conclusion that said respondent has violated the provisions of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

It is ordered, That the respondent Al Hartman, Inc., its officers, representatives, agents, and employees, in connection with the offering for sale, sale and distribution of its merchandise, women's wearing apparel and dress goods, in interstate commerce or in the District of Columbia, do forthwith cease and desist from:

1. Using the word "silk," or any other word of similar import or meaning, to describe products which are not composed wholly of silk, the product of the cocoon of the silkworm, but which are composed of a material or materials other than silk.

2. Using the word "crepe" to describe, advertise, brand or label any product which is not composed wholly of silk, the product of the cocoon of the silkworm, unless there is used in immediate connection and conjunction with said word "crepe," in letters of equal size and conspicuousness, a word or words accurately describing the material or materials from which said products are actually made.

It is further ordered, That the respondent shall, within 30 days after the service upon it of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which it has complied with this order.

PRODUCTS, ETC.COMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION
OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 26, 1914*Docket 2875. Complaint, July 11, 1936—Decision, Nov. 8, 1937*

Where an individual engaged in sale, under various trade names, of numerous baby foods and health preparations purchased by her from various manufacturing druggists and chemists throughout the United States and thereafter packed, bottled, labeled and sold through medium of wholesale houses, and through doctors and health food stores, principally, located throughout the various States, and, as thus engaged in distribution of her said preparations in commerce among the various States, in substantial competition with others engaged in interstate sale of such foods and preparations recommended for use in treatment of various conditions and ailments for which her respective products were sold and recommended; in extensively advertising the same through newspapers in various cities and health magazines, and through booklets and pamphlets describing her said products and furnished to food stores and by them distributed to public, and through advertising cuts furnished to recognized dealers for use in local newspaper advertising, expense of which she assumed in whole or half, as case might be—

- (a) Falsely represented that her "Regular Alberty's Food," "Phosphate Pellets," "Calcatine Pellets," "Cheno Combination Tablets," and "Spleen and Iron Tablets" had therapeutic value, facts being such preparations, by virtue of the composition thereof, were without therapeutic value and might, in the case of two of said products, have detrimental effect in certain cases or result in strychnine poisoning if long continued in use, and especially in case of children;
- (b) Falsely represented that her "Laxative Blend" and "Hemoglobin Tonic Tablets" had therapeutic value, and that former affected the muscles of the intestines and latter would produce blood regeneration, facts being former did not thus stimulate such muscles in the physiological sense, or affect said muscles, other than as they might be affected by the cathartic Senna ingredient, and only active constituent thereof, latter preparation would not produce blood regeneration nor act as a tonic, and both were without therapeutic value;
- (c) Falsely represented that her said preparation "Cheno," by virtue of the composition thereof, would bring about weight reduction, notwithstanding preparation in question contained no ingredient which, in and of itself, caused or produced any reduction in weight of person using the same;
- (d) Falsely represented that her "Old Style" Food and other Food, sold under her personal trade name, were foods with special therapeutic values, and that latter rebuilt the intestinal tract, was only food so to do, eliminated rickets and other calcium starvation diseases in people, and so modified milk that calcium element was assimilated, and that through use thereof more calcium and phosphorus were stored in the body than through use of three or four times the quantity of ordinary milk, and that it was the only food discovered which offsets acidosis, and was most powerful alkaline food known, notwithstanding fact former preparation, composed in part of skimmed milk, had no special therapeutic value beyond such value as ordinary milk might have as food, and use thereof could possibly cause gastrointestinal disturbances, her said so-called "New Style" Food was made from condensed milk combined under certain process with her so-called Food, and her said Food was not necessarily such and had no special therapeutic value beyond that of ordinary milk;

- (e) Misrepresented cause and effect of excess of magnesium in the body and character and properties of said substance, and effect on the system of a lack thereof, and results and benefits accruing from the taking thereof, and falsely represented that she was the first person in the United States to recognize its value, and that it was a great rejuvenative agency and that the taking of her said Food supplied the necessary calcium to the body in proper quantities, and that stunted growth, tooth decay, acidosis, sickness, suffering, premature old age and death were due either to lack of, or inability to assimilate, calcium;
- (f) Deceptively represented that the spleen controls the sex organs, and that acid fruits or vinegar, as "foreign acids," destroy red blood corpuscles and have detrimental effect on the spleen, and that acidosis is one of the contributing causes of waning sex life, and that her gland treatment would produce or bring about beneficial results to user;
- (g) Deceptively represented that bismuth subnitrate had a soothing effect on the digestive tract and was a valuable harmless remedy, and that gall bladder should never be removed;
- (h) Represented that her various products had a value and efficacy which they did not possess, through citing case histories of supposedly disinterested parties relating to such matters as asserted value of calcium and her said Food and treatment and reducing preparation, without disclosing fact that subjects thereof were parties in interest, and through citing such cases, histories of which were not true, and through use of testimonials which were untrue in fact or not given by persons alleged to have given testimonials in question; and
- (4) Represented, through use of word "laboratory" and references to discoveries by her said "laboratories" and through other references thereto, and their alleged part in discovery, etc., of preparations in question, and through her trade name and otherwise, that she conducted, operated, or maintained a laboratory for the purpose of manufacturing, testing and experimenting with the various preparations sold by her, notwithstanding fact she did not own, operate or maintain any laboratories or manufacture or test any of her said various preparations;

With capacity and tendency to mislead and deceive the public into the erroneous and untrue belief that the various preparations sold and distributed by her had great therapeutic value, and that use thereof would result in benefit to the user, and to induce purchasing public to buy said preparations in preference to others designed and sold for the treatment of the various ailments for which her respective products were recommended and offered, by manufacturers, retailers, and distributors, and with result of unfairly diverting trade to her from such manufacturers, retailers, or distributors of such other preparations, and who do not misrepresent the character and quality of their own respective products or the results to be obtained from the use thereof:

Held, That such acts and practices were to the prejudice of the public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition.

COMPLAINT ¹

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission having reason to believe that Adah Alberty, trading as Alberty's Food Products, Alberty's Food Lab., Alberty's Food Laboratories, The Alberty Food Laboratories, Cheno Laboratories, Cheno Products, and U. S. Okey, has been and is using unfair methods of competition in commerce as "commerce" is defined in said act, and it appearing to said Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereto would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint, stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Said respondent, Adah Alberty, is an individual trading and doing business under the names and styles of Alberty's Food Products, Alberty's Food Lab., Alberty's Food Laboratories, The Alberty Food Laboratories, Cheno Laboratories, Cheno Products, and U. S. Okey, with her office and place of business located at 729 Seward Avenue in the city of Hollywood, within the State of California. Said respondent is now and for more than three years last past has been engaged in the sale of a number of baby foods and health preparations under various trade names, and in the distribution thereof between and among the various States of the United States. Respondent causes said baby foods and health preparations, when sold by her, to be transported in interstate commerce to the purchasers thereof located in the various States of the United States. There is now, and for more than three years last past has been, a constant current of trade and commerce by respondent in said baby foods and health preparations between and among the various States of the United States. In the course and conduct of her business

¹ The complaint as published omits, in the interest of brevity, numerous quoted, alleged, false, deceptive and misleading statements set forth at length in Par. 4 thereof, allegedly made by respondent concerning the therapeutic value and benefits to be achieved by using the same, said various quoted matter, thus omitted, being set forth verbatim in correspondingly numbered paragraph of the findings, infra, at page 1372.

the said respondent is now and for more than three years last past has been in substantial competition in commerce between and among the various States of the United States with various other individuals, firms, partnerships, and corporations, engaged in the interstate sale of baby foods and health preparations.

PAR. 2. Among the various baby foods and health preparations sold by said respondent are preparations known and designated as follows:

- Regular Alberty's Food
- Instant Alberty's Food—(old form)
- Instant Alberty's Food—(new form)
- Alberty's Phosphate Pellets—(formerly called Nerve Food Pellets)
- Alberty's CA-MO—(formerly called Calcatine products)
- Alberty's Laxative Blend—(formerly called German Herb Lax-Tonic)
- Cheno Combination Tablets—(formerly called Restorex Cheno Tablets)
- Chena Phytolacca Berry Juice
- Cheno Herb Tea
- Alberty's No. 3 Tablets—(formerly called Alberty's Spleen and Iron Tablets)
- Alberty's Special Formula Tablets—(formerly called Hemoglobin Tonic Tablets)
- Alberty's Labara Tablets—(formerly called Labara cell salts)
- Alberty's Herb Laxative
- Alberty's Vegetable Compound Capsules
- Alberty's Phenix Pluri-Gland Tablets for Women
- Alberty's Phenix Pluri-Gland Tablets for Men
- Malto-De
- Alberty's Dextrose
- Concentrated Meloripe Banana Powders
- Alberty's Cero-Fig Coffee

All of said preparations are manufactured for said respondent by various manufacturing druggists located throughout the United States and are purchased from said manufacturers by said respondent. Said preparations are packed and bottled by said respondent and are then labelled and sold by said respondent throughout the United States through wholesale houses and doctors and principally through health food stores located throughout the various States of the United States.

PAR. 3. In the regular course and conduct of her business, as hereinbefore set out in paragraph 1, said respondent has been and now is engaged in extensive advertising as a means of furthering and aiding in the interstate sale and distribution of the various baby foods and health preparations sold and distributed by her. As media of advertising said respondent has used and is now using newspapers located in various cities throughout the United States, health magazines, booklets, and pamphlets.

Complaint

25 F. T. C.

In advertising the various preparations sold by her, said respondent furnishes booklets and pamphlets describing said products to the various food stores and these booklets and pamphlets are in turn distributed by the said food stores to the public. Respondent also furnishes advertising cuts to certain recognized dealers who insert the advertisements in local newspapers in the cities in which they are located. In some instances said respondent pays the entire expense of the newspaper advertisements, and in other instances said respondent pays one-half of the expense of the advertising.

PAR. 4. Said respondent, in her said advertisements of baby foods and health preparations sold by her, has made and is now making various false, deceptive, and misleading statements concerning the therapeutic value and benefits to be achieved by using said baby foods and health preparations sold and distributed by said respondent, among which said false, misleading, and deceptive statements are the following:²

PAR. 5. Said respondent, Adah Alberty, in the regular course and conduct of her said business trades under various names, among which are Alberty's Food Lab., Alberty's Food Laboratories, The Alberty Food Laboratories, and Cheno Laboratories, whereas in truth and in fact said respondent does not maintain or operate any laboratory, does not manufacture the products sold and distributed by her, and does not test any of the said products, but confines her activities to packing, bottling, and labelling the said preparations which are bought by her in bulk from various manufacturers.

PAR. 6. The use by the said respondent, Adah Alberty, trading as Alberty's Food Products, Alberty's Food Lab., Alberty's Food Laboratories, The Alberty Food Laboratories, Cheno Laboratories, Cheno Products, and U. S. Okey, of the foregoing false, deceptive, and misleading representations alleged to be used by the said respondent in paragraph 4 hereof, and the use by the said respondent of said vari-

²The quoted matter which follows here at length, dealing with the asserted therapeutic value and benefits to be obtained by using said preparations, is, with the five exceptions below set forth, reproduced verbatim in the correspondingly numbered paragraph of the findings, infra, at page 1372, and is accordingly omitted here in the interest of brevity, the five exceptions referred to being as follows, namely:

Laboratory tests show that magnesium and not calcium is the mineral which deposits itself wherever convenient, it being a sedative, sluggish, lazy mineral.

Calcium is the most difficult, being a "peppy," quick-acting mineral.

Mrs. Alberty, of the Alberty Laboratories, who has spent her life in the study of dietetics, discovered the "missing link."

Today our streets are filled with men and women of small stature—many of them less than five feet tall. They are weak, prematurely old, toothless, and bald-headed, and yet many are not old in years.

Sickness, suffering, premature old age, and death, is due to either a lack of calcium in the daily diet, or else the inability to assimilate it.

ous trade names containing the words "laboratory" and "laboratories" as alleged in paragraph 5 hereof, have had and do now have the capacity and tendency to mislead and deceive the public into the erroneous and untrue belief that the various baby foods and health preparations sold by said respondent have great therapeutic value and that the use of the same will result in material benefit to the user, and that the said respondent maintains and operates laboratories where said products are manufactured and tested by her, and has thereby induced, and does now induce, the consuming public and especially that portion of the public which purchases baby foods and health preparations, acting in said erroneous belief, to purchase the baby foods and health preparations sold and distributed by said respondent in preference to baby foods and health preparations offered for sale by manufacturers and other distributors of baby foods and health preparations who do not falsely, deceptively and misleadingly advertise their said products. As a result of such false, deceptive, and misleading representations on the part of said respondent, and contained in various books and pamphlets, instrumentalities are placed in the hands of food stores and dealers throughout the country who, by distributing the same to the public, thereby are enabled to dispose of respondent's products in preference to products which are truthfully advertised. As a result of such false, deceptive and misleading representations on the part of said respondent, trade has been diverted to respondent from such manufacturers and distributors of baby foods and health preparations who do not falsely, deceptively, and misleadingly advertise their products, and thereby injury has been done, and is being done, by said respondent.

PAR. 7. Said false, deceptive, and misleading representations of said respondent contained in her advertising have resulted in injury to respondent's competitors and to retail dealers and distributors, and in prejudice to the buying public, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, and entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, on the 11th day of July 1936, issued and served its complaint in this proceeding upon the respondent,

Adah Alberty, an individual trading as Alberty's Food Products, Alberty's Food Lab., Alberty's Food Laboratories, The Alberty Food Laboratories, Cheno Laboratories, Cheno Products, and U. S. Okey, charging her with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of the provisions of said act. After the issuance of said complaint and the filing of respondent's answer thereto, testimony and other evidence in support of the allegations of said complaint were introduced by Reuben J. Martin, attorney for the Commission, before Charles P. Vicini, an examiner of the Commission theretofore duly designated by it, and in opposition to the allegations of the complaint by W. I. Gilbert, Jr., attorney for the respondent; and said testimony and other evidence were duly recorded and filed in the office of the Commission. Thereafter the proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on the said complaint, the answer thereto, testimony and other evidence, and briefs in support of the complaint and in opposition thereto, counsel for the respondent having not requested oral argument; and the Commission, having duly considered the same and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. The respondent, Adah Alberty, is an individual trading and doing business since September 1935, under the name and style of Alberty's Food Products. Prior to September 1935, said respondent conducted her said business under the names of Alberty's Food Lab., Alberty's Food Laboratories, The Alberty Food Laboratories, Cheno Laboratories, Cheno Products, and U. S. Okey. Respondent maintains her office and place of business at 729 Seward Avenue in the city of Hollywood within the State of California. The respondent is now, and for more than three years last past has been, engaged in the sale of a number of baby foods and health preparations under various trade names, and in the distribution thereof in commerce between and among the various States of the United States. Respondent causes said baby foods and health preparations, when sold by her, to be transported from her aforesaid place of business in the State of California to the purchasers thereof located in the various States of the United States other than California. There is now, and for more than three years last past has been a constant current of trade and commerce by respondent in said baby foods and health preparations between and among the various States of the United States.

Findings

In the course and conduct of her business, the respondent is now, and for more than three years last past has been, in substantial competition in commerce between and among the various States of the United States with various other individuals, firms, partnerships, and corporations engaged in the interstate sale of baby foods and health preparations recommended for use in the treatment of the various conditions or ailments for which respondent's respective products are sold and recommended.

PAR. 2. Among the various baby foods and health preparations sold by said respondent are preparations known and designated as follows: Regular Alberty's Food; Instant Alberty's Food (Old Form); Instant Alberty's Food (New Form); Alberty's Phosphate Pellets (formerly called Nerve Food Pellets); Alberty's Ca-Mo (formerly called Calcatine Products); Alberty's Laxative Blend (formerly called German Herb Lax-Tonic); Cheno Combination Tablets (formerly called Restorex Cheno Tablets); Cheno Phytolacca Berry Juice; Cheno Herb Tea; Alberty's No. 3 Tablets (formerly called Alberty's Spleen and Iron Tablets); Alberty's Special Formula Tablets (formerly called Hemoglobin Tonic Tablets); Alberty's Labara Tablets (formerly called Labara Cell Salts); Alberty's Herb Laxative; Alberty's Vegetable Compound Capsules; Alberty's Phenix Pluri-Gland Tablets for Women; Alberty's Phenix Pluri-Gland Tablets for Men; Malto-De; Alberty's Dextrose; Concentrated Meloripe Banana Powder; Alberty's Cero Fig Coffee.

All of said preparations are manufactured for said respondent by various manufacturing druggists and chemists located through the United States, and are purchased by the respondent from said manufacturers. Respondent packs, bottles, and labels said preparations, and sells them throughout the United States through the medium of wholesale houses and doctors, and principally through health food stores located throughout the various States of the United States.

PAR. 3. In the regular course and conduct of her business, respondent has been, and now is, engaged in extensive advertising as a means of furthering and aiding in the interstate sale and distribution of the various baby foods and health preparations sold and distributed by her. As media of advertising, said respondent has used, and is now using, newspapers located in various cities throughout the United States, health magazines, booklets, and pamphlets. In advertising the various preparations sold by her, said respondent furnishes booklets and pamphlets describing said products to the various food stores, and these booklets and pamphlets are in turn distributed by the said food stores to the public. Respondent also furnishes advertising cuts to certain recognized dealers who insert the advertisements in local newspapers in the cities in which they are located. In some instances, said respondent pays the entire expense of the newspaper advertisements, and in other instances said respondent pays one-half of the expense of the advertising.

PAR. 4. The respondent, in her said advertisements of baby foods and health preparations sold by her, has made, and is now making, various statements concerning the therapeutic value and benefits to be achieved by using said baby foods and health preparations sold and distributed by respondent, among which said statements are the following:

It (Alberty's Food) rebuilds the intestinal tract and is the only food yet discovered that does.

It was proved that magnesium excess is caused either by certain home remedies, or dietary errors, foods rich in magnesium and low in protein and calcium.

Magnesium gradually accumulates in every portion of the body as calcium lessens—causing acid excess and a dormant condition of cells, tissues and nerve shafts.

The gall bladder should never be removed.

The Alberty Laboratories were the first concern in the United States to recognize the real value of this wonderful life-giving substance—calcium.

Over 800,000 people will die this year from preventable diseases caused by faulty diet!

The spleen seems to take first place in connection with the sex organism. For instance, when women in advanced cases of anemia cease to menstruate, the spleen is the first organ in the body involved. The spleen must first be aroused into activity before normal sex life can fully be restored.

Acidosis is one of the contributing causes of waning sex life.

Acid fruits or vinegar being "foreign acids", have a detrimental effect on the spleen, destroying red blood corpuscles.

Alberty's foods is the combination that unlocks this wonder-working calcium, exposing the "Guarded Treasure" to the digestive juices.

Never before has anyone thought of, or attempted to combine a nerve restorer with a gland rejuvenator.

It has been said that Mrs. Alberty's discovery will revolutionize gland treatment.

Sperum (from the interstitial cells of Leydig). It increases dynamos—muscular, nervous and sexual, and it hemostimulates the gonads. Its effect on the sex organism is very marked and never fails to give satisfactory results.

The cause of stunted growth, tooth decay, acidosis, sickness, suffering, premature old age and death, is due to either a lack of calcium in the daily diet, or else the inability to assimilate it.

That Alberty's Food eliminates rickets and other calcium-starvation diseases in both children, adults and animals, is now being recognized by many physicians throughout the United States.

That Alberty's Food does modify milk so that the calcium element is assimilated is a proven fact beyond dispute.

1364

Findings

Tests have proved conclusively that more calcium and phosphorus are stored up in the body in normal amounts, by using Alberty's Food even when the intake of ordinary milk is three or four times greater than the quantity of Alberty's Food used.

Long ago, the Alberty Laboratories discovered that calcium was a great rejuvenating agency. People taking the Alberty Treatment looked years younger and felt that way.

Alberty's Food is the only food ever discovered that does offset acidosis. Acidosis can only be neutralized by a powerful alkaline—the Alberty Combination makes the most powerful alkaline food known.

Bismuth subnitrate has a soothing effect on the digestive tract and is a valuable harmless remedy.

The above and foregoing representations made by said respondent concerning her said baby food and health preparations and contained in her advertisements thereof are extravagant and misleading and, therefore, necessarily deceptive.

PAR. 5. Respondent does not own, operate or maintain any laboratories, and she does not manufacture or test any of the various baby foods and health preparations which are sold and distributed by her in interstate commerce.

PAR. 6. Respondent's preparation, Labara Pellets are homeopathic pellets known as "Natrum Sulphate."

Respondent's preparation, Alberty's Phosphate Pellets are homeopathic pellets composed of $\frac{1}{1000}$ grain each of potassium phosphate, sodium phosphate, iron phosphate, and calcium phosphate. Medical testimony is that these pellets are a polypharmaceutical mixture of insoluble phosphates of calcium, iron, soda and potassium and that the doses contained therein are too small to do any good and the preparation is without therapeutic value.

Respondent's preparation, Calcatine Pellets, are homeopathic pellets known as Calca-Phosphate. Medical testimony shows that said pellets contain a trace of calcium phosphate which is the least soluble form of calcium and that they do no good and have no therapeutic value.

Respondent's preparation, Alberty's Laxative Blend (formerly called German Herb Lax-Tonic) consists of Elder flowers, Ononis root, Buchu Leaves, Gnaiaic wood, Shave grass, Yarrow, Althea leaves, Buck thorn, Uva-Ursi leaves, Dog grass, Nettle leaves, Licorice root, Peppermint, Sassafras bark, Anise seed, Fennel seed, and Senna leaves. Medical testimony is that this preparation is a mixture of ten crude drugs and that the only active constituent is Senna which is a cathartic. The remainder of the constituents of the preparation are obsolete and are without additional value. The cathartic action of the preparation is due to Senna but the Senna contained therein does not stimulate the muscles of the intestines in the physiological sense of stimulation and the preparation is without therapeutic value.

Findings

Respondent's preparation, Cheno Combination Tablets, (formerly called Restorex Cheno Tablets) are composed of dehydrated vegetables containing Dulse, Okra, Irish moss, Rhubarb root, Celery, Spinach, Homeopathic calca phos, and combined phosphates. Medical testimony is that this preparation is without any therapeutic value.

Respondent's preparation, Alberty's Spleen and Iron Tablets, now known as Alberty's No. 3 Tablets, are composed of Spleen substance, 1 grain, Reducing Iron, $\frac{1}{4}$ grain, Gadual, $\frac{3}{5}$ grain, Zinc Phosphate, $\frac{1}{20}$ grain, Berberine Sulphur Neutral, $\frac{1}{32}$ grain, Ginger, $\frac{1}{4}$ grain, Strychnine, $\frac{1}{960}$ grain. Medical testimony is that said preparation is a polypharmaceutical mixture of a number of obsolete drugs. The only ingredient claimed to be present in the preparation which would in any way have some value is iron but the quantity claimed to be present is too small to be of any significance and the preparation is without therapeutic merit or value. While the strychnine contained therein is claimed to be only $\frac{1}{960}$ of a grain, strychnine is a powerfully acting drug when used in sufficient doses and if the preparation were used over a long period continually and especially by children, it could result in strychnine poisoning.

Respondent's preparation, Alberty's Special Formula Tablets (formerly called Hemoglobin Tonic Tablets) according to medical testimony have no therapeutic value. Its use will not produce blood regeneration and the use of it would not act as a tonic.

Respondent's preparation, Regular Alberty's Food, is composed of cereals, mainly wheat, which is combined with organized calcium phosphate which is prepared from finely ground beef bone. Medical testimony is that the composition of the preparation is such as to indicate that the mixture is not necessarily a food and that it has no therapeutic value. The use of the preparation might have a detrimental effect on some persons, especially if the wheat claimed to be therein is whole wheat.

Respondent's preparation, Old Style Instant Alberty's Food is partially skimmed milk prepared with Alberty's Food dried on steam rollers. Medical testimony is that said preparation would not have any special therapeutic value any more than ordinary milk might have as a food and that its use could possibly cause gastro-intestinal disturbances.

Respondent's preparation, New Style Alberty's Food, is made from condensed ordinary milk combined with Alberty's Food run through a homogenizer and visculized spray dried. Medical testimony is that Alberty's Food is not necessarily a food and that it has no special therapeutic value beyond that of ordinary milk.

Respondent's preparation, Cheno Herb Tea, is composed of Kelp bean shells, Licorice, Peppermint, Black elder bark, Anise Seed, Coriander seed, Fennel seed, Chickwood, Sassafras bark, Rest-harrow, Senna, and Ivy. Medical testimony is that said preparation does not contain any ingredient which in and of itself causes or produces any reduction in weight in the person using said preparation.

PAR. 7. Respondent, in a booklet entitled "Calcium—The Staff of Life", which said booklet was written by the respondent and is distributed by her in aid of the sale of her said preparations, in connection with various photographs contained therein, gives the case history of various users of her said preparations and states what are purported to be the results obtained by the respective users of her said preparations. The photographs exhibit persons either in apparent health or for the purpose of contrasting the apparent comparative health of the person, exhibits the persons before and after using the preparations.

In one case respondent misrepresents the condition of the patient after taking her preparation in that she represents the patient to have been suffering with ulcers in the duodenum and pylorus, as being forced to live on a liquid diet and being unable to work, and that after taking Alberty's Food he was able in three weeks' time to go to work, in two months' time he had gained eight pounds, and can now eat solid food and works every day. As a matter of fact, the patient, after using her treatment, is still suffering with ulcers in the duodenum and pylorus, he was unable to go to work within three weeks after starting Alberty's Food, and although he gained some weight he was, at the same time during which he took respondent's treatment, living on a diet and following practices that would naturally tend to increase his weight, and he was unable in two months to work every day and eat solid food.

In said pamphlet, respondent also represented that a certain Albert Smith, suffering from an advanced case of tuberculosis which had produced a large cavity in his lung, was treated by the use of Alberty's Food, and that after one week's use of said Food there was such an improvement in the patient that the attending physician was amazed, that the improvement continued, and that the patient was now "back home established in business." She also represented that prior to the beginning of the treatment, a noted lung specialist had stated that the patient Smith's case was hopeless. As a matter of fact, the patient was not visited by a lung specialist, and the person referred to in respondent's statement as a lung specialist was, in fact, a doctor of osteopathy and a doctor of divinity. There was not such improvement as to "amaze" the attending physician, and said product, Alberty's Food, did not and could not have produced the therapeutic effects and benefits represented in respondent's booklet.

In said pamphlet, respondent gives the case history of a child using the Alberty treatment who, at the age of thirteen years, was 4 feet 9 inches in height and weighed 77 pounds, and at the age of fourteen years was 5 feet in height and weighed 93 pounds, which case history purports to be the history of a disinterested person whereas, in truth and in fact, the history reported is that of the grandchild of said respondent. Further, the said Alberty's treatment did not and could not have produced the therapeutic benefit and effect claimed for it in this case.

In the booklet "Cheno—Keep or Regain that Youthful Figure," written by said respondent and distributed by her in aid of the sale of her said products, respondent gives the case history of a patient who took Cheno Tablets for the purpose of reducing her weight. Said booklet contains a testimonial purported to have been written by the user of said preparation. In truth and in fact, the said testimonial was not written by the user of said preparation, nor were the results claimed to have been obtained by the said testimonial in truth and in fact so obtained. The use of the preparation Cheno did not and could not have produced the beneficial and therapeutic results and effects attributed to it by said testimonial and, in truth and in fact, the loss in weight brought about was produced by a strict diet, extending over a period of months, and strenuous exercise.

PAR. 8. The advertisements and representations made to the purchasing public by the respondent, as hereinbefore set out in paragraph 4, are false and misleading. They have had, and do now have, the capacity and tendency to mislead and deceive the public into the erroneous and untrue belief that the various preparations sold and distributed by the respondent have great therapeutic value and that the use of said products will result in benefit to the user, and to induce such purchasing public to purchase said preparations in preference to other preparations designed and sold for the treatment of the various ailments for which respondent's respective products are recommended and offered for sale by manufacturers, retail dealers and distributors. The result of such false, deceptive and misleading representations on the part of said respondent is to unfairly divert trade to said respondent from such manufacturers, retailers, or distributors of other preparations for use in treating the various ailments for which respondent's respective products are recommended, who do not misrepresent the character and quality of their respective products or the results to be obtained from the use thereof.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondent, Adah Alberty trading as Alberty's Food Products, Alberty's Food Lab., Alberty's Food Laboratories, The Alberty Food Laboratories, Cheno Laboratories, Cheno Products, and U. S. Okey, are to the prejudice of the public and competitors of the respondent, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

It is ordered, That the respondent, Adah Alberty, an individual, individually, and trading as Alberty's Food Products, Alberty's Food Lab., Alberty's Food Laboratories, The Alberty Food Laboratories, Cheno Laboratories, Cheno Products, and U. S. Okey, or trading under any other name, her representatives, agents and employees, in connection with the offering for sale, sale and distribution of various baby foods and health preparations now sold by her under various and sundry names, in interstate commerce or in the District of Columbia, do forthwith cease and desist from:

1. Representing that the preparations now designated as Regular Alberty's Food, Alberty's Phosphate Pellets, Calcatine Pellets, Cheno Combination Tablets and Alberty's Spleen and Iron Tablets, or any other preparations composed of the same or similar ingredients and possessing similar properties under whatever name sold, have any therapeutic value;

2. Representing that the preparations now designated as Old Style Instant Alberty's Food and Alberty's Food, or any other preparations composed of the same or similar ingredients and possessing similar properties under whatever name sold, are foods and have any special therapeutic value over and beyond the ordinary value of milk;

3. Representing that the preparation now designated as Alberty's Laxative Blend, or any other preparation composed of the same or similar ingredients and possessing similar properties under whatever name sold, has any therapeutic value or affects the muscles of the intestines, other than that the Senna contained in the compound is a cathartic;

4. Representing that the preparation now designated as Hemoglobin Tonic Tablets, or any other preparation composed of the same or similar ingredients and possessing similar properties under whatever name sold, is a tonic, will produce blood regeneration or has any therapeutic value;

5. Representing that the preparation now designated as Cheno, or any other preparation composed of the same or similar ingredients and possessing similar properties under whatever name sold, contains any ingredient which will cause or produce a weight reduction or that by the use thereof the user will bring about a reduction in weight;

6. Representing that the preparation now designated as Alberty's Food, or any other preparation composed of the same or similar ingredients and possessing similar properties under whatever name sold, rebuilds the intestinal tract and is the only food which accomplishes this result; that it eliminates rickets and other calcium-starvation diseases in children, adults and animals; that it modifies milk so that the calcium element is assimilated; that by taking it more calcium and phosphorus are stored up in the body than would be by the use of three or four times the quantity of ordinary milk; that it is the only food discovered that offsets acidosis and is the most powerful alkaline food known;

7. Misrepresenting the cause of and the effect of an excess of magnesium in the human body;

8. Misrepresenting the character and properties of calcium, the effect on the system of a lack of calcium content, and the results and benefits accruing from the taking of calcium;

9. Representing that respondent was the first person in the United States to recognize the value of calcium; that calcium is a great rejuvenating agency; that the taking of Alberty's Food supplies the necessary calcium to the body in the proper quantities; and that stunted growth, tooth decay, acidosis, sickness suffering, premature old age, and death are due either to a lack of calcium or the inability to assimilate it;

10. Representing that the spleen controls the sex organism and that acid fruits or vinegar, being "foreign acids", have a detrimental effect on the spleen, destroying red blood corpuscles;

11. Representing that acidosis is one of the contributing causes of waning sex life;

12. Representing that respondent's gland treatment will produce or bring about any beneficial results to the user;

13. Representing that bismuth subnitrate has a soothing effect on the digestive tract and is a valuable, harmless remedy;

14. Representing that the gall bladder should never be removed;

15. Representing by citing case histories of supposedly disinterested parties without disclosing the fact that the subjects of the case histories are parties in interest, by citing purported case histories of users thereof which said case histories are not true, and by the use of testimonials which are untrue in fact or which were not given by the person alleged to have given the testimonial that the various products sold by her have a value and efficacy which they do not possess;

16. Representing through the use of the word "laboratory," or any other term of similar meaning or like import, as a part of her trade name, or in any other manner or through any other means or device, that she conducts, operates or maintains a laboratory for the purpose of manufacturing, testing or experimenting with the various preparations sold by her, until and unless she actually owns and operates, or directly and absolutely controls, a laboratory maintained for said purposes;

17. And from making any other similar representations of like import or effect as to the therapeutic or medicinal value of said preparations or the benefits accruing from the use thereof.

It is further ordered, That the respondent, Adah Alberty, an individual, shall, within 60 days after service upon her of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which she has complied with the order hereinbefore set forth.

IN THE MATTER OF
LAVOPTIK COMPANY, INC.COMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION
OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 26, 1914*Docket 3188. Complaint, July 24, 1937—Decision, Nov. 8, 1937*

Where a corporation engaged in sale and distribution of its "Lavoptik," alleged remedy for diseases and ailments of the eye, to consumers in other states and in the District of Columbia, through medium of direct sales to druggists, optometrists, oculists, and ophthalmologists, for resale to retail trade and thus to ultimate consumer and general public, in competition with those similarly engaged, including among such competitors those engaged in sale of preparations recommended for use in treatment of such diseases, ailments or conditions as those mentioned in its advertising, but who truthfully represent their products and the therapeutic value which may be attributed thereto, and honestly vend the same; in advertising its said "Lavoptik" through the radio, magazines, newspapers and mails—

- (a) Represented that the same had been endorsed by "6,000 eyesight specialists," notwithstanding fact it had not been and was not recommended by 6,000 graduate medical doctors especially trained in the treatment of the eyes; and
- (b) Represented, directly or by inference, that said preparation would restore strength to the eyesight, and that use thereof would be a constant protection for the eyes, and that it constituted a cure or remedy for, and would heal, diseases of the eye, facts being preparation was composed of a boric base combined in distilled water with certain substances, and constituted an astringent lotion or eyewash for use in local, non-systemic, non-functional, non-constitutional, non-refractive ailments, and diseases of the eye, and would not heal or cure infections and diseases thereof due to constitutional, functional, systemic, or refractive ailments, diseases, and causes, nor restore sight to, nor strengthen, the eyes, nor heal, cure, or rejuvenate strained or impaired eyesight, nor protect the eyes from strain;

With tendency and capacity to cause members of purchasing public to form erroneous beliefs and impressions as above indicated, and with result that many thereof, acting under such erroneous beliefs, bought its said preparation, and with capacity and tendency further to unfairly divert to it trade of competitors engaged in selling, in interstate commerce, preparations or remedies truthfully advertised, represented and recommended for use in connection with treatment of various diseases and ailments enumerated by it; to the substantial injury of competitors in commerce:

Held, That such acts and practices were to the prejudice of the public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition.

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that Lavoptik Company, Inc., a corporation, hereinafter referred to as respondent, has been and now is using unfair methods of competition in commerce as "commerce" is defined in said act of Congress, and it appearing to the Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be to the public interest, hereby issues its complaint stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent, Lavoptik Company, Inc., is a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Minnesota. Respondent's plant, office and principal place of business is located at Michigan Avenue and 7th Street, St. Paul, Minn. Said respondent is now, and for more than one year last past has been, engaged in the business of manufacturing or compounding, advertising, selling and distributing a lotion, or eye wash, commonly known and designated as "Lavoptik Eye Wash." It now causes, and for more than one year last past has caused, said preparation, when sold, to be shipped from its place of business in St. Paul, Minnesota, to purchasers thereof, some located in the State of Minnesota, others located in various other States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

Respondent is now, and for more than one year last past has been, in substantial competition with other corporations and with persons, firms, and partnerships engaged in the sale of eye lotions and eye washes, and other preparations similar to that sold by respondent in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of its said business as described in paragraph 1 hereof, in soliciting the sale of and selling its product, designated as "Lavoptik Eye Wash," respondent now represents, and for more than one year last past has represented, in newspapers, magazines, pamphlets, circulars, letters, wrappers, radio broadcasts, and other forms of advertising media having an interstate circulation, and in a booklet entitled "How to Safeguard Your Eyes," which it issues, ships, and distributes in large number to the public generally throughout the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia, through its distributors, sales branches, and sales people, as follows:

INFLAMED EYES? Bathe them with Lavoptik. Prompt Relief. Use also for granulated eyelids, tired, sore, strained, itching, sticky, burning, irritated, watery eyes. 6,000 eyesight specialists endorse it.

IRRITATED EYELIDS? Bathe them with Lavoptik, prompt relief.

EYES SORE? TIRED? Here's Relief Instantly! Bathe eyes with Lavoptik. Burning, inflammation, watery, tired, strained feeling, or itching vanishes at once. Wonderful, too, for granulated eyelids. Soothes, cools, heals. No harmful drugs. Advised by 6,000 eyesight specialists.

* * * Lavoptik will bring eye strength and eye comfort.

A daily eye bath with Lavoptik will be a constant protection to your eyes from the incessant strain that modern living places upon them. Keep a bottle of soothing, healing Lavoptik in your bathroom medicine cabinet, and go through the restful "Eyecup Drill" (as explained by the picture on this page) every evening and morning. Your eyes will not only feel better, but will be healthier and more efficient.

Four Important Suggestions:

1. Give the eyes of babies and small children careful attention. In treating them, moisten a little cotton in Lavoptik and bathe the edges of the lids and drop a liberal amount into the eyes after the lower lid is pulled down.

2. After driving exposure to dust heat or wind or after you leave a smoke-laden room, a Lavoptik eye bath will instantly refresh those dry, tired eyes.

3. If you use LAVOPTIK before going out, you will enjoy that happy, refreshed feeling of knowing your eyes look their best.

4. In the morning, if your eyes are stiff and heavy, you will be astonished how much Lavoptik eye bath will help them.

PAR. 3. In truth and in fact, the preparation "Lavoptik Eye Wash" has not been endorsed and approved by 6,000 graduate medical doctor eyesight specialists, or eye specialists, and said preparation, "Lavoptik," is not a cure for diseases of the eye or impaired vision, and will not strengthen the nerves of the eye, nor relieve eye strain, conjunctivitis, and other diseases of the eye, and will not make eyes healthier and more efficient, but is merely an eye wash composed of a boric acid base in distilled water with camphor, sodium chloride, and hydrastine hydrochloride, which can in no way influence the delicate nerves of the eye, or heal diseases of the eye.

PAR. 4. The representations of respondent as aforesaid are false and grossly exaggerated and have had and do have a capacity to confuse, mislead and deceive members of the purchasing public into the mistaken and erroneous belief that respondent's product, designated "Lavoptik," is different from other eye lotions or eye washes, and that the preparation has been endorsed by 6,000 graduate medical doctors, especially trained in the treatment of the eyes; that said preparation has the property to heal and rejuvenate strained and impaired eyesight, and is an effective treatment for all forms of defective eyesight, no matter from what cause. The said representations of respondent have had and do have the capacity and tendency to induce members of the public to buy and use said preparation because of erroneous beliefs engendered as above set forth, and to divert trade unfairly from competitors of respondent engaged in the sale of eye lotions and eye washes similar to the preparation sold by respondent in commerce in and among the various States of the United States, and deceives the public and injures competitors, and places in the hands of others the means whereby the public are deceived, and competitors are injured. There are among competitors of respondent many who sell and distribute in commerce similar lotions and eye washes and preparations for the treatment of the eyes, who do not misrepresent the properties, the qualities or the therapeutic virtues, functions or effects of their said competing products.

PAR. 5. The above alleged acts and practices of respondent are all to the prejudice and injury of the public and of respondent's competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission on the 24th day of July 1937, issued, and on the 26th day of July, 1937, served its complaint in this proceeding upon said respondent, Lavoptik Company, Inc., charging it with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of the provisions of said act. On August 11, 1937, the respondent filed its answer in this proceeding. Thereafter, a stipulation was entered into whereby it was stipulated and agreed that a statement of facts signed and executed by the respondent by its counsel, Monte Appel, and W. T. Kelley, Chief Counsel for the Federal Trade Commission, subject to the approval of the Commission, may be taken as the facts in this proceeding and in lieu of testimony in support of the charges stated in the complaint, or in opposition thereto, and that the said Commission may proceed upon said statement of facts to make its report, stating its findings as to the facts and its conclusion based thereon and enter its order disposing of the proceeding without the presentation of argument or the filing of briefs. Thereafter this proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on said complaint, answer and stipulation, said stipulation having been approved and accepted, and the Commission having duly considered the same and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public and makes its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. Lavoptik Company, Inc., is a corporation organized, existing and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Minnesota, with its principal office and place of business located at Michigan Avenue and Seventh Street, St. Paul, Minn. Respondent is now and for several years last past has been engaged in the business of selling and distributing an alleged remedy known as "Lavoptik," designed by respondent for treatment of human beings suffering from diseases and ailments of the eye.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of its said business, as described in paragraph 1 hereof, respondent, Lavoptik Company, Inc.; in response to orders received, has offered its said preparation for sale and has sold and transported and caused the same to be transported in commerce among the several States of the United States direct from its aforesaid place of business in St. Paul, Minn., to consumers located at points in the several States of the United States other than the State of Minnesota, and in the District of Columbia.

In the course and conduct of such selling, respondent has been and now is engaged in competition with corporations, firms, partnerships, and individuals offering for sale and selling in like commerce preparations for use in the treatment of the same or similar ailments and diseases.

PAR. 3. Respondent, in connection with the sale and distribution of its said product, "Lavoptik," has advertised the same by radio and in magazines and newspapers sent through the mail. Respondent sells direct to druggists, or pharmacists, optometrists, oculists, ophthalmologists, who in turn sell to the retail trade, thus reaching the ultimate consumer and general public. Sales are not limited to druggists, or pharmacists, however, nor to licensed graduate medical physicians and surgeons. Respondent company has used the United States mail in distributing its product in interstate commerce and has shipped large quantities by express or freight or by parcel post.

Findings

Through the use of radio, magazines, newspapers and mail, as aforesaid, respondent has advertised and represented its preparation, "Lavoptik," is a remedy for and affords prompt relief from various ailments and affections of the eye.

Among the statements and representations made by Lavoptik Company, Inc., in the course and conduct of its business in the sale and distribution of its preparation, "Lavoptik," are statements and representations as follows:

INFLAMED EYES? Bathe them with Lavoptik. Prompt Relief. Use also for granulated eyelids, tired, sore, strained, itching, sticky, burning, irritated, watery eyes. 6,000 eyesight specialists endorse it.

IRRITATED EYELIDS? Bathe them with Lavoptik, prompt relief.

EYES SORE? TIRED? Here's Relief Instantly! Bathe eyes with Lavoptik. Burning, inflammation, watery, tired, strained feeling, or itching vanishes at once. Wonderful, too, for granulated eyelids. Soothes, cools, heals. No harmful drugs. Advised by 6,000 eyesight specialists.

* * * Lavoptik will bring eye strength and eye comfort.

A daily eye bath with Lavoptik will be a constant protection to your eyes from the incessant strain that modern living places upon them. Keep a bottle of soothing, healing Lavoptik in your bathroom medicine cabinet, and go through the restful "Eyecup Drill" (as explained by the picture on this page) every evening and morning. Your eyes will not only feel better, but will be healthier and more efficient.

Four important suggestions:

1. Give the eyes of babies and small children careful attention. In treating them, moisten a little cotton in Lavoptik and bathe the edges of the lids and drop a liberal amount into the eyes after the lower lid is pulled down.
2. After driving, exposure to dust, heat or wind, or after you leave a smoke-laden room, a Lavoptik eye bath will instantly refresh those dry, tired eyes.
3. If you use LAVOPTIK before going out, you will enjoy that happy, refreshed feeling of knowing your eyes look their best.
4. In the morning, if your eyes are stiff and heavy, you will be astonished how much a Lavoptik eye bath will help them.

The use by respondent of these representations leads the purchasing public to believe and has a tendency to create in their minds the erroneous impression that the preparation "Lavoptik" has been endorsed or approved by 6,000 medical doctors especially trained in the treatment of the eyes and that the preparation is an effective remedy for granulated eyelids, soreness and diseases of the eye, no matter from what cause and that it will heal or cure any and all infections and diseases of the eye and impairments of the vision.

PAR. 4. The preparation, "Lavoptik," is composed of a boric base, combined in distilled water with camphor sodium chloride and hydrastine hydrochloride, and is an astringent lotion or eyewash to be used in local non-systemic, non-functional, non-constitutional, non-refractive ailments, and diseases of the eye.

Conclusion

25 F. T. C.

PAR. 5. The various statements and representations made by respondent through the medium of radio and by mail, as set out and enumerated in paragraph 3 herein, in selling and offering for sale its preparation, "Lavoptik" in the respective states of the United States and in the District of Columbia were and are, as set out and described in paragraph 2 herein, false, deceptive, and misleading. "Lavoptik" preparation has not been and is not recommended by 6,000 graduate medical doctors, especially trained in the treatment of the eyes and will not heal or cure infections and diseases of the eye due to constitutional, functional, systemic or refractive ailments, diseases and causes. "Lavoptik" will not restore sight to, or strengthen, the eyes and will not heal, cure or rejuvenate strained or impaired eyesight, and will not protect the eyes from strain.

PAR. 6. There are among the competitors of respondent, corporations, partnerships, firms, and persons who are engaged in the sale of preparations which are recommended for use in the treatment of such diseases, ailments or conditions as those mentioned by respondent in its advertising, but who truthfully represent their products and the therapeutic value which may be attributed to them, and honestly vend the same.

PAR. 7. The use of the aforesaid false and misleading representations and practices on the part of the respondent in the sale and offering for sale of its preparation known and designated as "Lavoptik," has had and now has the tendency and capacity to cause members of the purchasing public to form the aforesaid erroneous beliefs and impressions. Acting under such erroneous beliefs induced by the various representations of the respondent, as herein detailed, many of said members of the public have purchased respondent's preparation, "Lavoptik." The aforesaid representations and practices on the part of the respondent have and have had the capacity and tendency to unfairly divert to respondent the trade of competitors engaged in selling in interstate commerce preparations or remedies which are truthfully advertised and represented and which are recommended for use in connection with the treatment of the various diseases and ailments enumerated by the respondent. Thereby substantial injury has been done and is being done by respondent to competitors in commerce among and between the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondent, Lavoptik Company, Inc., are to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

Order

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

It is ordered, That the respondent, Lavoptik Company, Inc., its officers, representatives, and employees in connection with the sale or offering for sale by it in interstate commerce or in the District of Columbia of a preparation now designated as Lavoptik or any other preparation of substantially similar ingredients or effect, whether designated by that name or some other name, forthwith cease and desist from:

1. Representing, through any means whatsoever, that said preparation is endorsed or recommended by any designated number of eyesight specialists for any purpose unless and until said preparation is in fact endorsed or recommended by said number of graduate doctors of medicine who specialize in the treatment of the eyes.

2. Representing, directly or by inference, that said preparation restores strength to the eyesight; that the use of said preparation will be a constant protection to the eyes; that the said preparation is a cure or remedy for or will heal any named diseases of the eye.

It is further ordered, That the respondent shall, within 60 days after the service upon it of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing, setting forth in detail the manner and form in which it shall have complied with this order.

CROXONOL SALES CORPORATIONCOMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION
OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 26, 1914*Docket 3192. Complaint, July 29, 1937—Decision, Nov. 8, 1937*

Where a corporation engaged in manufacture, sale and distribution of its so-called "Croxon Method" preparation for treatment of superfluous hair, in commerce among the various States and in the District of Columbia, in advertising the same through price lists, newspapers, periodicals, and other advertising media, printed, published and circulated through the mails to customers and prospective customers located in the various States and in said District—

Represented that said product would permanently remove and completely stop growth of superfluous hair, and was guaranteed permanently to remove same from face, arms and legs, and would keep user free from hair and well-groomed, and that no odor resulted from use of said product, facts being said various statements or representations as to nature, merit and effect of its said product were exaggerated, misleading, and false;

With tendency and capacity to mislead a substantial portion of consuming public into erroneous belief that all said representations were true and into purchase of its said product on account of such belief, and with result that trade was diverted from competitors similarly engaged as manufacturers and distributors of like and similar commodities, and who truthfully advertise and represent the nature and merit of their respective products and refrain from advertising or representing, through their catalogs or other advertising media, that their commodities have a nature and merit which they do not have; to the substantial injury of competition in commerce:

Held, That such acts and practices were to the prejudice of the public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition.

in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in said act of Congress, and it appearing to said Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint, stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent, Croxonol Sales Corporation, is a corporation organized and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of New York, with its principal office and place of business at 142 West 24th Street, city of New York, State of New York.

Alfred W. Lublin, an individual, is President of the Croxonol Sales Corporation, and has his principal office and place of business at 142 West 24th Street, city of New York, State of New York, and directs and controls sales policies of the respondent Croxonol Sales Corporation.

Respondents are now, and for more than one year last past, have been engaged in the manufacture, sale, and distribution of a certain preparation for the treatment of superfluous hair known as the "Croxon Method" in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 2. When said product is sold, respondents transport or cause the same to be transported from their principal place of business in the city of New York, State of New York, to purchasers thereof located in other States of the United States and in the District of Columbia. There is now, and has been at all times mentioned herein, a constant current of trade and commerce in said above described product sold by respondents between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 3. In the course and conduct of their said business, respondents are now and have been in substantial competition with other corporations and with individuals, partnerships, and firms likewise engaged in the business of distributing and selling preparations for the treatment of superfluous hair in commerce among and between various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 4. In the course and conduct of their said business, respondents have caused to be printed and circulated through the United States mails to their customers and prospective customers in the various states of the United States catalogs, price lists, and other printed matter. Respondents have also caused, and still cause, their advertisements to be inserted in newspapers and magazines having a general interstate circulation. Each and all of the catalogs, price lists, and advertisements contain statements which purport to be descriptive of

CROXON METHOD

PAR. 5. All of said statements above set out, together with many similar statements appearing in respondents' advertising literature purport to be descriptive of respondents' product. In all of their advertising literature respondents represent through statements and representations herein set out, and other statements of similar import and effect, that:

(1) Their product will remove superfluous hair and when first applied; (2) their product will keep the user thereof well groomed and free from hair, and completely stop the growth of superfluous hair; (3) their product is guaranteed to remove superfluous hair from the face, arms, and legs; (4) and there will be no odor resulting from the use of respondents' said product.

PAR. 6. The representations made by the respondents with respect to the nature and effect of their product when used are grossly exaggerated, false, misleading, and untrue. In truth and in fact, the respondents' product will not remove superfluous hair; said product will not keep the user thereof well groomed, and completely stop the growth of superfluous hair; and said product is not guaranteed to remove superfluous hair from the face, arms and legs. There is an odor resulting from the use of the said product.

PAR. 7. Each and all of the false and misleading statements and representations made by respondents in designating or describing their product and the effectiveness of said product for removing and treating conditions resulting from superfluous hair growth in offering for sale and selling their product were, and are, calculated to, and has and now have a tendency and capacity to mislead and deceive a substantial portion of the purchasing public into the erroneous belief that all of said representations are true, and that said product will in truth accomplish results claimed.

Findings

Further, as a direct consequence of the mistaken and erroneous beliefs induced by the acts and representations of the respondents as hereinabove detailed, a number of the consuming public have purchased a substantial volume of respondents' product with the result that trade has been unfairly diverted to the respondents from competitors likewise engaged in the business of distributing and selling similar products or other products designed and sold for use in removing and treating conditions resulting from superfluous hair growth and other conditions named herein who truthfully represent the effectiveness of their respective products. As a consequence thereof, a substantial injury has been done to competition in commerce among the several States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 8. The above and foregoing acts, practices, and representations of respondents have been and are all to the prejudice of the public and respondents' competitors and have been and are unfair methods of competition within the meaning and intent of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

ceeding is in the interest of the public and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent, Croxonol Sales Corporation, is a corporation having its principal place of business and office in the city of New York, State of New York.

PAR. 2. The corporate respondent has been for more than one year last past engaged in the business of manufacturing, selling, and distributing a certain preparation for the treatment of superfluous hair known as the "Croxon Method" in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 3. In the sale of said product respondent has transported or caused the same to be transported from its principal place of business in the State of New York to purchasers thereof located in States of the United States other than the State from which the shipment originated, and in the District of Columbia.

There has been for more than one year last past, and there still is, a constant current of trade and commerce in said product so sold and distributed by the corporate respondent among and between the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 4. In the course and conduct of its business said respondent, in soliciting the sale of, and in selling its product, and for the purpose of creating a demand upon the part of the consuming public for said product, has for more than one year last past caused its product to be advertised through the media of price lists, newspapers, magazines, and other advertising media printed, published, and circulated through the United States mails to its customers and prospective customers located in the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

In the aforesaid ways and by the aforesaid means the respondent makes, and has made, to the general public false and misleading statements with reference to the commodity offered for sale by it. The price lists and other printed matter published and distributed by respondent, and hereinbefore referred to, contain false and misleading representations concerning respondent's product. The product sold and distributed by respondent is represented to the purchasing public in the following manner:

CROXON METHOD

PAR. 5. The statements as set out above together with many similar statements appearing in respondent's advertising literature, and other statements of similar import, represent to the consuming public that:

(1) Its product will permanently remove superfluous hair; (2) its product will keep the user thereof well groomed and free from hair, and will completely stop the growth of superfluous hair; (3) its product is guaranteed to remove superfluous hair from face, arms, and legs; and (4) there will be no odor resulting from the use of respondent's product.

PAR. 6. In truth and in fact the representations made by the respondent with respect to the nature, merit and effect of its product are exaggerated and misleading. Respondent's product will not permanently remove superfluous hair. It will not keep the user thereof free from hair and well groomed, and will not completely stop the growth of superfluous hair. Said product is not guaranteed to permanently remove superfluous hair from face, arms, and legs; and there is an odor resulting from the use thereof.

PAR. 7. There are among the competitors of respondent in commerce as herein set out manufacturers and distributors of like and similar commodities who truthfully advertise and represent the nature and merit of their respective products, and who refrain from advertising or representing through their catalogs or other advertising media that the commodities offered for sale by them have a nature and merit which they do not have. All of the aforesaid statements and representations made by the respondent in designating or describing its product, and in offering for sale and selling said product, were, and are, calculated to, and had, and now have, a tendency and capacity to mislead a substantial portion of the consuming public into the erroneous belief that all the said representations are true, and into the purchase of respondent's said product on account of said belief.

As a result of the representations made by respondent trade has been diverted from those competitors of respondent engaged in similar businesses, hereinbefore referred to. As a consequence thereof substantial injury has been and is being done by respondent to competition in commerce among and between the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

Order

25 F. T. C.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondent, Croxonol Sales Corporation, are to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce, within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

It is ordered, That the respondent, Croxonol Sales Corporation, its officers, representatives, agents and employees, in connection with the offering for sale, sale, and distribution of a preparation for the treatment of superfluous hair now known as the "Croxon Method" or of any other similar preparation designed for similar usage whether sold under that name or under any other name, in commerce among and between the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia, do forthwith cease and desist from representing, directly or indirectly:

(1) that said product will permanently remove superfluous hair; (2) that said product will keep the user thereof free from hair and well groomed, and will completely stop the growth of superfluous hair; (3) that said product is guaranteed to permanently remove superfluous hair from face, arms, and legs; (4) that there will be no odor resulting from the use of respondent's said product.

It is further ordered, That as to the individual respondent Alfred W. Lublin, the case be dismissed without prejudice due to the death of said individual respondent on September 12, 1937.

It is further ordered, That the respondent Croxonol Sales Corporation shall, within 60 days after service upon it of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which it has complied with this order.

MODIFIED CEASE AND DESIST ORDER

Docket 1134. Order, Nov. 12, 1937

Order modifying Commission's previous modified order of April 7, 1926, in 10 F. T. C. 23, in view of provisions of so-called Miller-Tydings Act (Title VIII of an Act of Congress approved August 17, 1937, entitled "An Act to provide additional revenue for the District of Columbia, and for other purposes"), so that said order, directing respondent to cease and desist from resale price maintenance practices as therein set forth, shall not, effective as of August 17, 1937, "prohibit contracts or agreements prescribing minimum prices for the resale of any commodity which bears, or the label or container of which bears, the trade mark, brand, or name of the respondent or other producer or distributeor thereof, and which is in free and open competition with commodities of the same general class produced by others than respondent, when the contract or agreement is lawful as applied to intrastate transactions in the State in which such resale is to be made, or into which the commodity is to be transported for resale, under the laws or public policy of said State."

Before Mr. John W. Addison, trial examiner.

Mr. Robt. N. McMillen for the Commission.

Mr. H. H. Shelton, of Washington, D. C. and Manly, Hendren & Womble and Mr. T. O. Moore, of Winston Salem, N. C., for respondent.

MODIFIED ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

On this day there is taken up the petition of the above respondent, entitled "Petition and motion to vacate order to cease and desist," but praying that all orders to cease and desist entered against respondent under the above docket number be either modified or set aside; and,

It appearing that on December 21, 1925, the Commission issued its order that respondent cease and desist from certain business methods and practices therein enumerated; and that on April 7, 1926, said order was superseded by a modified order to cease and desist, modifying said previous order to the extent and in the particulars in said modified order set forth; and,

It also appearing to the Commission that said modified order of April 7, 1926, should be modified in the light of the provisions of Title VIII of the Act of Congress, approved August 17, 1937, entitled "An Act to provide additional revenue for the District of Columbia, and for other purposes."

Order

25 F. T. C.

It is ordered that the modified order to cease and desist issued in this matter on April 7, 1926, be and hereby is modified, as of the date of the approval of the above entitled Act of Congress, to wit, August 17, 1937, by the addition thereto of the following proviso:

Provided, however, That effective August 17, 1937, this order shall not prohibit contracts or agreements prescribing minimum prices for the resale of any commodity which bears, or the label or container of which bears, the trade mark, brand, or name of the respondent or other producer or distributor thereof, and which is in free and open competition with commodities of the same general class produced by others than respondent, when the contract or agreement is lawful as applied to intrastate transactions in the State in which such resale is to be made, or into which the commodity is to be transported for resale, under the laws or public policy of said State.

COMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION
OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 26, 1914

Docket 2728. Complaint, Feb. 20, 1936—Decision, Nov. 13, 1937

Where a corporation engaged in manufacture, sale, and distribution of dolls, to purchasers at various points in other States, and chiefly through department stores, toy stores, and mail order houses, in substantial competition with others engaged in manufacture, sale, and distribution, or sale and distribution, of such products in commerce among the various States and in the District of Columbia—

Circularized doll trade with broadside displaying print of picture disclosing results of three weeks' immersion of one of its "paratex" hard rubber dolls, and of composition type doll, to the disadvantage of the latter, which was disclosed as in bad state of disintegration, and to the advantage of former, which showed no ill effects, together with statement that such "Dramatic Test of Paratex Dolls" was made by "buyer of a great retail store" and showed "absolutely no effect from its immersion" "for a Week" to "paratex doll," with "what happened to the other" plain enough, and an invitation to "Make this dramatic test yourself in your own doll department" and assertion that "It will sell Paratex dolls for you Right Now!";

Facts being immersion test in question had been for three weeks and not one, composition dolls can be handled and faces and hands washed or bathed without injury thereto, and said test, by reason of age and intelligence of child-buyers of composition dolls as compared with that of child users of rubber-dolls, and other relevant circumstances as to qualities desired in dolls, durability of composition dolls under ordinary and customary use, and actual conditions of ordinary usage and customary treatment, which test failed to portray, did not prove its "paratex" dolls more substantial or desirable or superior to the composition dolls for purposes intended;

With capacity and tendency to mislead and deceive substantial portion of trade and public into erroneous belief that composition dolls were inferior because they would disintegrate if left in water, and with result that public, as consequence of such mistaken and erroneous belief, induced by such false and misleading representations, purchased substantial volume of its said products in preference to those of its competitors, and trade was unfairly diverted to it from competitors likewise engaged in manufacture, sale, and distribution, or in sale and distribution, of dolls without in any way unfairly disparaging products of competitors or misrepresenting their own; to the substantial injury of competition in commerce:

Held, That such acts and practices, under the conditions and circumstances described, were to the prejudice of the public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition.

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that American Character Doll Company, Inc., hereinafter referred to as respondent, has been and is using unfair methods of competition in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in said act, and it appearing to said Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint, stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent, American Character Doll Company, Inc., is a corporation organized, existing, and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of New York, with its principal office at 200 Fifth Avenue, New York, N. Y. It is now, and for several years last past has been, engaged in advertising and selling dolls and toys between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia, and now causes, and for more than one year last past has caused, such products when sold by it to be shipped from its place of business in New York City aforesaid to the purchasers thereof, some located in the State of New York, and others located in the various other States of the United States and in the District of Columbia, and there is now, and has been for more than one year last past, a constant current of trade and commerce by the respondent in dolls and toys between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

Respondent is, and for more than one year last past has been, in substantial competition with other corporations, and with individuals, firms, and partnerships engaged in the sale of dolls and toys between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of its business, as described in paragraph 1 hereof, respondent, in soliciting the sale of and selling its "Sally Jane" dolls, to purchasers and prospective purchasers thereof, located in various States of the United States, distributed circulars among the retail doll trade, which circulars were used by the said trade in offering for sale and selling said dolls to the purchasing public. Said circulars featured certain pictorial illustrations of two dolls, immersed in a jar of water. One of the dolls seemed to show no ill effects from such immersion, but the other doll appeared to be in a bad state of disintegration, its legs having fallen off and the body portion having cracked, broken, and peeled. The following phraseology accompanied these pictures:

THIS DRAMATIC TEST OF PARATEX DOLLS

was made by the buyer of a great retail store who insisted upon PROVING to himself that PARATEX dolls are actually PROOF against wear and water * * * Here's what actually happened when he put an ordinary composition doll and a PARATEX doll into two pickle jars of water for a WEEK * * * The PARATEX doll showed absolutely no effect from its immersion * * * What happened to the other, is plain enough

Make this dramatic test yourself in your own doll department. It will sell PARATEX dolls for you RIGHT NOW!

In truth and in fact, the pictures of the featured test displayed in said advertising matter were made three weeks after the tests were initiated, and not, as alleged, one week after the test was started. Dolls are not made to be left in water; nor are dolls of ordinary composition inferior products because they are nonresistant to water. The test displayed in said advertising matter has the capacity and tendency to unwarrantedly disparage dolls of ordinary composition in that it tends to cause, or convey, an erroneous belief that such dolls of ordinary composition are inferior products because they are nonresistant to water and that such dolls, being nonresistant to water, will not withstand the ordinary usage and treatment for which dolls are made and to which they are usually and customarily subjected by the average user of said dolls.

PAR. 3. The use by the respondent of the representations set out in paragraph 2 hereof, have had and do have the capacity and tendency to mislead and deceive and do mislead and deceive wholesalers, retailers, and the purchasing public into the belief that composition dolls are inferior to Paratex or rubber dolls, and to purchase such dolls from respondent in preference to competitors composition dolls because of such erroneous belief. There are among the competitors of respondent, as mentioned in paragraph 1 hereof, manufacturers and distributors of dolls and toys who do not misrepresent the respective qualities of composition dolls and Paratex or rubber dolls, nor utter disparaging statements about competitors' products, who likewise advertise, sell, and distribute dolls and toys among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia. By the representations aforesaid, trade is diverted to respondent from such competitors; thereby substantial injury is being done and has been done by respondent to substantial competition in commerce as herein set out.

PAR. 4. Said acts and practices of respondent are all to the prejudice of the public and respondent's competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914.

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, on February 20, 1936, issued and on February 24, 1936, served its complaint in this proceeding upon respondent, American Character Doll Company, Inc., charging it with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of the provisions of said act. After the issuance of said complaint, and the filing of respondent's answer thereto, testimony and other evidence in support of the allegations of said complaint were introduced by DeWitt T. Puckett, attorney for the Commission before Joseph A. Simpson and John W. Bennett, examiners of the Commission theretofore duly designated by it, and in opposition to the allegations of the complaint by Philip Goldfarb, attorney for the respondent; and said testimony and other evidence were duly recorded and filed in the office of the Commission. Thereafter, the proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on the said complaint, the answer thereto, testimony and other evidence, briefs in support of the complaint and in opposition thereto (respondent having not requested oral argument), and the Commission having duly considered the same, and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public, and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. The respondent, American Character Doll Company, Inc., is a corporation organized in 1919 and doing business under the laws of the State of New York. Its principal office is at 200 Firth Avenue, New York, N. Y., and its factory is at 1027 Metropolitan Avenue, Brooklyn, N. Y. The respondent is now, and since 1919 has been, engaged in the manufacture, sale, and distribution of dolls.

1397

Findings

When orders are received for respondent's dolls, it causes them to be shipped from its factory at Brooklyn, N. Y., to the purchasers thereof located at various points in States of the United States other than the State of New York. Said dolls are marketed chiefly through department stores, toy stores, and mail-order houses. At all times mentioned herein the respondent has maintained a constant current of trade in said dolls, in commerce among and between the various States of the United States.

At all times since respondent entered into said business, it has been in substantial competition with other corporations and with partnerships, and individuals likewise engaged in the manufacture, sale and distribution or in the sale and distribution of dolls, in commerce among and between the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 2. Dolls are classified, as to type, according to the materials used in their manufacture. Composition dolls are manufactured from wood flour, rosin, starch, and glue. The materials are molded into a form by a heating process. Rubber dolls are made from crude rubber. Practically all dolls on the market today are either composition dolls or rubber dolls. Many years ago most dolls were made of a hard breakable substance and were known as bisque dolls. Because they were heavy and easily broken, they were gradually supplanted by composition dolls and rubber dolls.

During the past two or three years respondent has been offering for sale and selling a hard rubber doll which it calls a "paratex" doll. "Paratex" dolls are manufactured by respondent according to a secret formula. Respondent has featured its "paratex" doll in its advertising, representing it to be superior to composition dolls because it is impervious to water. Said "paratex" doll is manufactured to be sold in competition with the more expensive composition dolls, such as the Shirley Temple doll.

PAR. 3. In April 1935, a representative of J. C. Penney Company took two dolls, one of which was a composition doll known as the Shirley Temple doll and the other a "paratex" doll heretofore described, and immersed each of said dolls up to the neck in a jar of water. Three weeks after said immersion, pictures were taken of the dolls. The picture of the composition doll showed it to be in a bad state of disintegration. The legs had fallen off and the body covering had cracked and had peeled off in places. The picture of the "paratex" doll disclosed no ill effects of the water upon it. The respondent herein obtained a negative of said picture from a J. C.

Penney Company employee, had prints made therefrom, and circularized said picture in the form of a broadside among the doll trade. Alongside the picture appeared the following statement.

THIS DRAMATIC TEST OF PARATEX DOLLS

was made by the buyer of a great retail store who insisted upon PROVING to himself that PARATEX dolls are actually PROOF against wear and water * * * Here's what actually happened when he put an ordinary composition doll and a PARATEX doll into two pickle jars of water for a WEEK * * * The PARATEX doll showed absolutely no effect from its immersion * * * What happened to the other, is plain enough. Make this dramatic test yourself in your own doll department. It will sell PARATEX dolls for you RIGHT NOW!

In fact, the dolls had actually been in the water for three weeks at the time the picture was taken and not one week as represented by the respondent.

PAR. 4. From the testimony of doll buyers for three leading department stores and the proprietor of a toy and doll store it is found that composition dolls are not made to withstand immersion-in-water tests and that they are not inferior products because they will disintegrate if left in water for substantial periods of time. Composition dolls, as a rule, are sold to children who are old enough to understand that dolls of that character cannot be left in water. Rubber dolls of the cheaper variety are designed to be sold to infants too young to understand how to care for expensive composition dolls. Composition dolls can be handled and their faces and hands can be washed or bathed without injury to said dolls.

The essential qualities desired in dolls by children are attractiveness, style of dress, type of wig, finish, and, especially among older children, likeness to living models. Parents desire a doll that is sufficiently durable to withstand the use to which the doll will be subjected by children. Composition dolls are sufficiently durable to withstand the ordinary and customary use to which dolls are subjected by children under ordinary and usual conditions of use. Composition dolls are not immersed in water for any substantial period of time. The comparative test made, as hereinabove set forth, does not prove that the "paratex" dolls are more substantial, desirable or superior to composition dolls for the purposes intended inasmuch as such a test does not accurately portray the actual conditions of ordinary usage and customary treatment to which dolls are subjected and such test affords no basis in fact for the representations made.

Order

PAR. 5. The use by respondent of the representations described herein in its advertising literature has had and now has the capacity and tendency to mislead and deceive a substantial portion of the trade and public into the erroneous belief that composition dolls are inferior products because they will disintegrate if left in water. As a consequence of the mistaken and erroneous belief induced by the false and misleading representations above referred to, the public has purchased a substantial volume of the respondent's products in preference to the products of its competitors with the result that trade has been unfairly diverted to the respondent from its competitors likewise engaged in the manufacture, sale and distribution or in the sale and distribution of dolls, who in no way unfairly disparage their competitors' products or misrepresent their own products. As a result thereof a substantial injury has been done, and is now being done, by respondent to competition in commerce among and between the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of said respondent under the conditions and circumstances described in the foregoing findings of facts are to the prejudice of the public and of competitors of respondent and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

This proceeding having been heard by the Federal Trade Commission upon the complaint of the Commission, the answer of respondent, testimony and other evidence taken before Joseph A. Simpson and John W. Bennett, examiners of the Commission theretofore duly designated by it, in support of the allegations of said complaint and in opposition thereto, briefs filed herein by DeWitt T. Puckett, counsel for the Commission, and by Philip Goldfarb, counsel for respondent (no oral argument having been requested), and the Commission having made its findings as to the facts and its conclusion that said respondent has violated the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

It is ordered, That the respondent, American Character Doll Company, Inc., a corporation, its officers, representatives, agents, and employees in connection with the offering for sale, sale and distribution of dolls in interstate commerce or in the District of Columbia do forthwith cease and desist from :

1. Representing, through the use of comparative water immersion tests, or other similar tests which do not fairly simulate actual conditions of ordinary and customary usage, or through any other means or device, or in any manner, that, because of imperviousness to water when immersed for extended periods of time, its dolls are superior to composition dolls;

2. Representing, directly or by inference, through the use of comparative tests, or otherwise, that composition dolls are inferior products because they are not impervious to water when immersed for substantial periods of time.

It is hereby further ordered, That the said respondent shall within 60 days from the date of the service upon it of this order file with this Commission a report in writing, setting forth the manner and form in which it shall have complied with this order.

Where a corporation engaged in manufacture and sale of candy, including certain assortments which were so packed and assembled as to involve use of a lottery scheme when sold and distributed to ultimate consumers thereof, and several of which, so packed and assembled that they might be resold to consuming public as single assortment, were contained in two separate boxes, composed of (1) number of small penny pieces of candy, of uniform size and shape, the flavor of a small number of which differed from that of majority, and (2) number of larger pieces or bars, to be given free of charge, or as prizes, to chance purchasers of such uniform penny pieces, flavor of which differed as aforesaid from that of majority—

Sold, to wholesale and retail dealers for display and resale to purchasing public in accordance with aforesaid sales plans, said assortments, and thereby supplied to and placed in the hands of others the means of conducting, and under which they did conduct, lotteries in the sale of its said products, in accordance with such plan, contrary to public policy long recognized by the common law and criminal statutes and to an established public policy of the United States Government, and in competition with many who, unwilling to offer or sell candy so packed and assembled, or otherwise arranged and packed, for sale to purchasing public, as to involve a game of chance, refrain therefrom;

With capacity and tendency to induce purchasers to buy its said products in preference to candy offered and sold by its competitors, and with result that many dealers in and ultimate purchasers of candy were attracted by said method and manner of packing same and by element of chance involved in sale thereof as above described, and were thereby induced to purchase its said candy, so packed and sold by it, in preference to that offered and sold by its competitors who do not use same or equivalent method, and with tendency and capacity, because of said game of chance, to divert trade and custom from its competitors as aforesaid, exclude from candy trade all competitors who are unwilling to and do not use such or an equivalent method as unlawful, lessen competition therein, and tend to create a monopoly thereof in it and such other distributors as do use same or equivalent method, deprive purchasing public of benefit of free competition in trade in question, and eliminate from said trade all actual, and exclude therefrom all potential, competitors who do not adopt and use such or an equivalent method:

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that Mells Manufacturing Company, a corporation, hereinafter referred to as respondent, has been and is using unfair methods of competition in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in said act of Congress, and it appearing to said Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. The respondent, Mells Manufacturing Company, is a corporation organized and operating under the laws of the State of New Jersey, with its principal office and place of business located at 250 Park Avenue, in the city of Brooklyn, State of New York. The respondent is now, and for several years last past has been, engaged in the manufacture of candies and in the sale and distribution thereof to retail and wholesale dealers located at points in the various States of the United States, and causes and has caused its said products when so sold to be transported from its principal place of business in the city of Brooklyn, N. Y., to purchasers thereof in other States of the United States at their respective places of business; and there is now, and has been for several years last past, a course of trade and commerce by said respondent in such candies between and among the States of the United States. In the course and conduct of said business, respondent is in competition with other corporations and with partnerships and individuals engaged in the manufacture of candies and in the sale and distribution thereof in commerce between and among the various States of the United States.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of its business as described in paragraph 1 hereof, respondent sells and has sold to wholesale and retail dealers assortments of candy so packed and assembled as to involve the use of a lottery scheme when sold and distributed to the ultimate consumers thereof.

Several of said assortments manufactured and distributed by respondent are contained in two separate boxes but are so packed and assembled that they may be resold to the consuming public as a single assortment. One of said boxes contains a number of small pieces of candy of uniform size and shape, the majority of which are of one flavor but a small number of which are of a different flavor. The other box contains a number of larger pieces or bars of candy which are to be given free of charge or as prizes to purchasers of the pieces of candy of uniform size and shape in the following manner: The small pieces of candy of uniform size and shape retail at the price of 1¢ each, but the purchaser who procures one of the small pieces of candy of uniform size and shape having a flavor different from the majority is entitled to receive, and is to be given free of charge, one of the said larger pieces or bars of candy. The flavor of the said small pieces of candy of uniform size and shape is effectively concealed from said purchasers and prospective purchasers until a selection has been made and the particular piece of candy broken open. The larger pieces or bars of candy are thus distributed to purchasers of said small pieces of candy of uniform size and shape wholly by lot or chance.

1405

PAR. 3. The wholesale dealers to whom respondent sells its assortments to resell said assortments to retail dealers, and said retail dealers and the retail dealers to whom respondent sells direct expose said assortments for sale and sell said candy to the purchasing public in accordance with the aforesaid sales plan. Respondent thus supplies to and places in the hands of others the means of conducting lotteries in the sale of its product in accordance with the sales plan hereinabove set forth, and said sales plan has the capacity and tendency of inducing purchasers thereof to purchase respondent's said product in preference to candy offered for sale and sold by its competitors.

PAR. 4. The sale of said candy to the purchasing public in the manner above alleged involves a game of chance or the sale of a chance to procure a larger piece or bar of candy.

The use by respondent of said method in the sale of candy, and the sale of candy by and through the use thereof and by the aid of said method, is a practice of the sort which the common law and criminal statutes have long deemed contrary to public policy, and is contrary to an established public policy of the Government of the United States. The use by respondent of said method has the tendency unduly to hinder competition or create monopoly in this, to wit: that the use thereof has the tendency and capacity to exclude from the branch of the candy trade involved in this proceeding competitors who do not adopt and use the same method or an equivalent or similar method involving the same or an equivalent or similar element of chance or lottery scheme.

Many persons, firms, and corporations who make and sell candy in competition with the respondent, as above alleged, are unwilling to offer for sale or sell candy so packed and assembled as above alleged, or otherwise arranged and packed for sale to the purchasing public so as to involve a game or chance, and such competitors refrain therefrom.

PAR. 5. Many dealers in and ultimate purchasers of candy are attracted by respondent's said method and manner of packing said candy and by the element of chance involved in the sale thereof in the manner above described, and are thereby induced to purchase said candy so packed and sold by respondent, in preference to candy offered for sale and sold by said competitors of respondent who do not use the same or equivalent methods. The use of said method by respondent has the tendency and capacity, because of said game of chance, to divert to respondent trade and custom from its said competitors who do not use the same or an equivalent method; to exclude from said candy trade all competitors who are unwilling to and who do not use the same or an equivalent method because the same is unlawful; to lessen competition in said candy trade and to tend to create a monopoly of said candy trade in respondent and such other distributors of candy as use the same or an equivalent method; and to deprive the purchasing public of the benefit of free competition in said candy trade. The use of said method by the respondent has the tendency and capacity to eliminate from said candy trade all actual competitors, and to exclude therefrom all potential competitors who do not adopt and use said method or an equivalent method.

PAR. 6. The aforementioned method, acts and practices of the respondent are all to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors, as hereinabove alleged. Said method, acts, and practices constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914.

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, on February 15, 1937, issued and on February 17, 1937, served its complaint in this proceeding upon respondent, Mells Manufacturing Company, charging it with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of the provisions of said act. After the issuance of said complaint and the filing of respondent's answer, the Commission, by order entered herein, granted respondent's request for permission to withdraw said answer and to substitute therefor an answer admitting all the material allegations of the complaint to be true and waiving the taking of further evidence and all other intervening procedure, which substitute answer was duly filed in the office of the Commission. Thereafter, this proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on the said complaint and the substitute answer; and the Commission, having duly considered the same and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. The respondent, Mells Manufacturing Company, is a corporation organized and operating under the laws of the State of New Jersey, with its principal office and place of business located at 250 Park Avenue, in the city of Brooklyn, State of New York. The respondent is now, and for several years last past has been, engaged in the manufacture of candies and in the sale and distribution thereof to retail and wholesale dealers located at points in the various States of the United States, and causes and has caused its said products when so sold to be transported from its principal place of business in the city of Brooklyn, N. Y., to purchasers thereof in other States of the United States at their respective places of business; and there is now, and has been for several years last past, a course of trade and commerce by said respondent in such candies between and among the States of the United States. In the course and conduct of said business, respondent is in competition with other corporations and with partnerships and individuals engaged in the manufacture of candies and in the sale and distribution thereof in commerce between and among the various States of the United States.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of its business as described in paragraph 1 hereof, respondent sells and has sold to wholesale and retail dealers assortments of candy so packed and assembled as to involve the use of a lottery scheme when sold and distributed to the ultimate consumers thereof.

Several of said assortments manufactured and distributed by respondent are contained in two separate boxes but are so packed and assembled that they may be resold to the consuming public as a single assortment. One of said boxes contains a number of small pieces of candy of uniform size and shape, the majority of which are of one flavor but a small number of which are of a different flavor. The other box contains a number of larger pieces or bars of candy which are to be given free of charge or as prizes to purchasers of the pieces of candy of uniform size and shape in the following manner: The small pieces of candy of uniform size and shape retail at the price of 1¢ each, but the purchaser who procures one of the small pieces of candy of uniform size and shape having a flavor different from the majority is entitled to receive, and is to be given free of charge, one of the said larger pieces or bars of candy. The flavor of the said small pieces of candy of uniform size and shape is effectively concealed from said purchasers and prospective purchasers until a selection has been made and the particular piece of candy broken open. The larger pieces or bars of candy are thus distributed to purchasers of said small pieces of candy of uniform size and shape wholly by lot or chance.

PAR. 3. The wholesale dealers to whom respondent sells its assortments resell said assortments to retail dealers, and said retail dealers and the retail dealers to whom respondent sells direct expose said assortments for sale and sell said candy to the purchasing public in accordance with the aforesaid sales plan. Respondent thus supplies to and places in the hands of others the means of conducting lotteries in the sale of its product in accordance with the sales plan hereinabove set forth, and said sales plan has the capacity and tendency of inducing purchasers thereof to purchase respondent's said product in preference to candy offered for sale and sold by its competitors.

PAR. 4. The sale of said candy to the purchasing public in the manner above described involves a game of chance or the sale of a chance to procure a larger piece or bar of candy.

The use by respondent of said method in the sale of candy, and the sale of candy by and through the use thereof and by the aid of said method, is a practice of the sort which the common law and criminal statutes have long deemed contrary to public policy, and is contrary to an established public policy of the Government of the United States. The use by respondent of said method has the tendency unduly to hinder competition or create monopoly in this, to wit: that the use thereof has the tendency and capacity to exclude from the branch of the candy trade involved in this proceeding competitors who do not adopt and use the same method or an equivalent or similar method involving the same or an equivalent or similar element of chance or lottery scheme.

1405

Many persons, firms, and corporations who make and sell candy in competition with the respondent are unwilling to offer for sale or sell candy so packed and assembled, or otherwise arranged and packed for sale to the purchasing public so as to involve a game of chance, and such competitors refrain therefrom.

PAR. 5. Many dealers in and ultimate purchasers of candy are attracted by respondent's said method and manner of packing said candy and by the element of chance involved in the sale thereof in the manner above described, and are thereby induced to purchase said candy so packed and sold by respondent, in preference to candy offered for sale and sold by said competitors of respondent who do not use the same or equivalent methods. The use of said method by respondent has the tendency and capacity, because of said game of chance, to divert to respondent trade and custom from its said competitors who do not use the same or an equivalent method; to exclude from said candy trade all competitors who are unwilling to and who do not use the same or an equivalent method because the same is unlawful; to lessen competition in said candy trade and to tend to create a monopoly of said candy trade in respondent and such other distributors of candy as use the same or an equivalent method; and to deprive the purchasing public of the benefit of free competition in said candy trade. The use of said method by the respondent has the tendency and capacity to eliminate from said candy trade all actual competitors, and to exclude therefrom all potential competitors who do not adopt and use said method or an equivalent method.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondent Mells Manufacturing Company are to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce, within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

This proceeding having been heard by the Federal Trade Commission upon the complaint of the Commission and the substitute answer of the respondent filed herein on October 4, 1937, admitting all the material allegations of the complaint to be true and waiving

the taking of further evidence and all the other intervening procedure, and the Commission having made its findings as to the facts and its conclusion that said respondent has violated the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

It is ordered, That the respondent Mell's Manufacturing Company, its officers, representatives, agents, and employees, in connection with the offering for sale, sale and distribution in interstate commerce of candy do cease and desist from:

1. Selling and distributing to jobbers and wholesale dealers, for resale to retail dealers or to retail dealers direct, candy so packed and assembled that sales of such candy to the general public are to be made, or may be made, by means of a lottery, gaming device, or gift enterprise.

2. Supplying to or placing in the hands of wholesale dealers and jobbers or retail dealers assortments of candy which are used or which may be used, without alteration or rearrangement of the contents of such assortments, to conduct a lottery, gaming device, or gift enterprise in the sale or distribution of the candy contained in said assortments to the public.

3. Packing or assembling for sale to the public at retail an assortment of candy consisting of two packages; one package containing a number of small pieces of candy, the majority of which have one flavor, and the remaining pieces having a different flavor, and the second package containing a number of larger pieces or bars of candy, the number of which correspond to the number of pieces of candy in the first package, having a flavor different from the majority, which larger pieces or bars of candy in the second package are or may be given as prizes to purchasers procuring a small piece of candy having a flavor different from the majority.

It is further ordered, That the respondent Mell's Manufacturing Company, a corporation, shall, within 30 days after service upon it of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which it has complied with the order to cease and desist hereinabove set forth.

WALLY FRANK, LTD.

COMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION
OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 26, 1914

Docket 3148. Complaint, June 9, 1937—Decision, Nov. 13, 1937

Where a corporation engaged in sale and distribution of pipes and smokers' supplies to purchasing and consuming public in various States and in the District of Columbia, from its place of business in New York City, in substantial competition with those engaged in similar sale and distribution, or manufacture, sale, and distribution, of such products; in advertising in newspapers and periodicals and through depictions and labels and its own monthly publication, and in various other ways—

(a) Represented that it was a British or English concern with place of business in London, and that it dealt exclusively in goods imported from foreign countries, and that some of its pipes were prepared in accordance with and in conformity to certain famous and well-known processes, and that it offered and sold well-known and established brands at prices greatly reduced from the standard prices at which such pipes were customarily sold, facts being it did not sell any standard brand pipes, free from imperfections, at less than their usual and customary selling prices; and

(b) Represented that it was a manufacturer, through display in catalog mailed by it to prospective customers of reproduction of sign on its store in aforesaid city displaying, along with its corporate name, words "Pipe Manufacturers and Tobacconists," notwithstanding fact it did not manufacture pipes offered and sold by it, nor own, operate, or directly and absolutely control, a factory wherein such pipes are made;

With tendency and capacity to mislead and deceive purchasers of its said products into belief that in buying from it they were dealing with the manufacturer of pipes involved and thereby obtaining bargain by saving middleman's profit and other advantages, as commonly believed by purchasing public through association of such and other advantages, including superior merchandise, with such direct purchase, and with the effect of misleading and deceiving substantial portion of such public into erroneous belief that such representations were true, and into purchase of substantial quantities of pipes and smokers' supplies by reason thereof, and of unfairly diverting thereby trade to it from competitor-manufacturers and distributors of such products who advertise, sell and distribute their said products in commerce as above set forth, and do not misrepresent the status or nature of their business, origin or character of their products, or price at which sold, or otherwise publish untrue claims therefor; to the substantial injury of competition in commerce:

Held, That such acts and practices were to the prejudice of the public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition.

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that Wally Frank, Ltd., a corporation, hereinafter referred to as respondent, has been and is using unfair methods of competition in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in said act of Congress, and it appearing to said Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent, Wally Frank, Ltd., is a corporation, organized in 1933, and doing business under the laws of the State of New York. Its principal office and place of business is at 10 East 45th Street, New York, N. Y.

Respondent is now, and since the date of its incorporation has been, engaged in the sale and distribution of pipes and smokers' supplies to the purchasing and consuming public located in various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia. Respondent now causes, and since 1933 has caused, its products, when sold by it, to be shipped from its place of business in New York, N. Y., to the purchasers thereof located in the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia. There is now, and has been at all times since respondent has been in business, a constant current of trade and commerce by the respondent in smokers' supplies, between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

Respondent is, and since 1933 has been, in substantial competition with other corporations and with firms and individuals engaged in the sale and distribution of smokers' supplies in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 2. During the time respondent has been in business, as described in paragraph 1 hereof, it has represented, and, in certain particulars, still represents, through various types of advertising media, such as newspapers, magazines, pictorial representations, labels, its publication "Pipe Lore Monthly," and in various other ways, that it is a British concern, or that it has an office and does business in London; that it deals exclusively in goods imported from foreign countries; that some of its pipes are prepared in accordance with certain famous and well-known processes; and that it offers for sale and sells well-known and established brands of pipes at a price which has been greatly reduced from the standard price at which said pipes are customarily sold.

In truth and in fact, the respondent is not a British concern and has no office or place of business in London. It does not deal exclusively in imported goods. Its pipes are not prepared according to any famous and well-known process. It does not sell any standard brand pipes, which are free from imperfections, at less than the usual price for which said pipes are customarily sold.

PAR. 3. Respondent has represented in its advertising matter that it is a pipe manufacturer and that its pipes are shipped direct from the manufacturer to the purchaser. A sign on its store at 10 East 45th Street, New York, reads:

WALLY FRANK LTD.

PIPE MANUFACTURERS AND TOBACCONISTS

A picture of the store showing said sign appears in the 1937 "Annual Pipe Lore," a catalog which is mailed by respondent to prospective customers.

In truth and in fact the respondent does not manufacture the pipes offered for sale and sold by it, nor does it own, operate, or control a factory wherein said pipes are made.

It is a common belief among the purchasing public that a superior grade of merchandise can be purchased direct from the manufacturer thereof at a considerable saving in price and that other advantages can be secured by so purchasing. Representations made by respondent, as alleged in paragraph 3 hereof, have the tendency and capacity to mislead and deceive the purchasers of respondent's pipes into the belief that when they purchase said pipes from respondent they are dealing with the manufacturer of said pipes and thereby are obtaining a bargain by saving the middleman's profit and by obtaining other advantages.

PAR. 4. The use by respondent of the representations set forth herein has had, and now has, the capacity and tendency to mislead and deceive, and has misled, a substantial portion of the purchasing public into the erroneous belief that such representations are true and into the purchase of substantial quantities of said smokers' supplies as a result of such erroneous belief. There are among the competitors of respondent, as mentioned in paragraph 1 hereof, manufacturers and distributors of pipes and smokers' products who do not misrepresent the status or nature of their businesses, the origin or character of their products, and the price at which their products are sold, or otherwise publish claims for their products which are untrue, who likewise advertise, sell and distribute their smoker's supplies among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia. By the representations aforesaid, trade is unfairly diverted to respondent from such competitors and as a result thereof, substantial injury is being, and has been done, by respondent to competition in commerce as herein set out.

PAR. 5. The above alleged acts and practices of respondent are all to the injury and prejudice of the public and respondent's competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914.

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, on June 9, 1937, issued, and on June 10, 1937, served, its complaint in this proceeding upon respondent, Wally Frank, Ltd., a corporation, charging it with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of the provisions of said act. After the issuance of said complaint and the filing of respondent's answer, the Commission, by order entered herein, granted respondent's motion for permission to withdraw said answer and to substitute therefor an answer admitting all the material allegations of the complaint to be true and waiving the taking of further evidence and all other intervening procedure, which substitute answer was duly filed in the office of the Commission. Thereafter, this proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on the said complaint and the substitute answer, briefs and oral arguments of counsel having been waived, and the Commission having duly considered the same and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPHS 1. Respondent, Wally Frank, Ltd., is a corporation, organized in 1933, and doing business under the laws of the State of New York. Its principal office and place of business is at 10 East 45th Street, New York, N. Y. Respondent is now, and since the date of its incorporation has been, engaged in the sale and distribution of pipes and smokers' supplies to the purchasing and consuming public located in various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

When orders are received for respondent's products, it causes them to be shipped from New York, N. Y., to the purchasers thereof located at various points in States of the United States other than the State of New York. Since 1933 the respondent has maintained a constant current of trade in said products, in commerce among and between the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

At all times since respondent entered into said business, it has been in substantial competition with other corporations and with partnerships and individuals engaged in the sale and distribution, or in the manufacture, sale and distribution of pipes and smokers' supplies, in commerce among and between the several States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 2. During the time respondent has been in business, as described in paragraph 1 hereof, it has represented, and, in certain particulars, still represents, through various types of advertising media, such as newspapers, magazines, pictorial representations, labels, its publication "Pipe Lore Monthly," and in various other ways, that it is a British concern and has a place of business in London, England; that it deals exclusively in goods imported from foreign countries; that some of its pipes are prepared in accordance with and conformity to certain famous and well-known processes; and that it offers for sale and sells well-known and established brands of pipes at prices which have been greatly reduced from the standard prices at which said pipes are customarily sold.

The representations set forth above are untrue in that respondent is not a British concern nor does it have an office or place of business in London. It does not deal exclusively in imported goods. Its pipes are not prepared according to any famous and well-known process. It does not sell any standard brand pipes, which are free from imperfections, at less than the usual price for which said pipes are customarily sold.

PAR. 3. Respondent also represented in its advertising matter that it is a pipe manufacturer and that its pipes are shipped direct from the manufacturer to the purchaser. A sign on its store at 10 East 45th Street, New York, reads:

WALLY FRANK LTD.

PIPE MANUFACTURERS AND TOBACCONISTS.

A picture of the store showing said sign appears in the 1937 "Annual Pipe Lore," a catalog which is mailed by respondent to prospective customers.

The above representation is untrue in that the respondent does not manufacture the pipes offered for sale and sold by it, nor does it own, operate or directly and absolutely control a factory wherein said pipes are made.

PAR. 4. It is a common belief among the purchasing public that a superior grade of merchandise can be purchased direct from the manufacturer thereof at a considerable saving in price and that other advantages can be secured by so purchasing. Representations made by respondent, as alleged in paragraph 3 hereof, have the tendency and capacity to mislead and deceive the purchasers of respondent's pipes into the belief that when they purchase said pipes from respondent they are dealing with the manufacturer of said pipes and thereby are obtaining a bargain by saving the middleman's profit and obtaining other advantages.

PAR. 5. The use by respondent of the representations set forth herein has had, and now has, the capacity and tendency to mislead and deceive, and has misled and deceived, a substantial portion of the purchasing public into the erroneous belief that such representations are true and into the purchase of substantial quantities of pipes and smokers' supplies on account of such erroneous belief.

There are among the competitors of respondent, as mentioned in paragraph 1 hereof, manufacturers and distributors of pipes and smokers' products who do not misrepresent the status or nature of their businesses, the origin or character of their products, or the price at which their products are sold, or otherwise publish claims for their products which are untrue, who likewise advertise, sell and distribute their pipes and smokers' supplies in commerce as herein described. By the representations aforesaid, trade is unfairly diverted to respondent from such competitors and as a result thereof substantial injury is being, and has been, done by respondent to competition in commerce among and between the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondent Wally Frank, Ltd., are to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce, within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

Order

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

This proceeding having been heard by the Federal Trade Commission upon the complaint of the Commission and the answer filed on November 11, 1937, by respondent admitting all the material allegations of the complaint to be true and waiving the taking of further evidence and all other intervening procedure, and the Commission having made its findings as to the facts and its conclusion that said respondent has violated the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled, "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

It is ordered, That the respondent, Wally Frank, Ltd., a corporation, its officers, representatives, agents, and employees, in connection with the offering for sale, sale and distribution of pipes and smokers' supplies in interstate commerce or in the District of Columbia, do forthwith cease and desist from representing, directly or in any manner:

1. That it is a British or English concern;
2. That it has a place of business in London, England, or any other city where it does not actually maintain and operate a place of business;
3. That it deals exclusively in goods imported from foreign countries until and unless such is a fact;
4. That certain of its pipes are prepared in accordance with certain famous, well-known and established processes when such is not a fact;
5. That certain of its established and well-known brands of pipes are offered for sale and sold at prices which have been greatly reduced from the standard prices until and unless such is a fact;
6. That it is a manufacturer or that its pipes are shipped direct from the manufacturer until and unless it actually owns and operates, or directly and absolutely controls a factory or a mill wherein its products are made.

It is further ordered, That the respondent shall, within 60 days after service upon it of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which it has complied with this order.

IN THE MATTER OF PHOEBE PHELPS CARAMEL COMPANY

COMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION
OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 26, 1914

Docket 3079. Complaint, Mar. 16, 1937—Decision, Nov. 16, 1937

Where a corporation engaged in manufacture and sale of candy, including certain assortments which were so packed and assembled as to involve use of a lottery scheme when sold and distributed to consumers thereof, and one of which consisted of number of individually wrapped penny caramels of uniform size and shape, with small number thereof having different colored stripe, and of number of small packages of candy, to be given as prizes to chance purchasers of such striped penny caramels—

Sold, to wholesalers and to retailers for display and resale to purchasing public, in accordance with aforesaid sales plan, said assortments, and thereby supplied to and placed in the hands of others the means of conducting, and under which they did conduct, lotteries in the sale of its said product in accordance with such plan, contrary to public policy long recognized by the common law and criminal statutes and to an established public policy of the United States Government, and in competition with many who, unwilling to offer or sell candy so packed and assembled, or otherwise arranged and packed for sale to purchasing public, as to involve a game of chance, refrain therefrom, and with many who are unwilling to adopt and use said method or any method involving game of chance for sale of a chance to win by chance, or any other method contrary to public policy;

With capacity and tendency to induce purchasers to buy its said products in preference to candy offered and sold by its competitors, and with result that many dealers in and ultimate purchasers of candy were attracted by said method and manner of packing same and by element of chance involved in sale thereof as above described, and were thereby induced to purchase its said candy, so packed and sold by it, in preference to that offered and sold by its competitors who do not use same or equivalent method, and with tendency and capacity, because of said game of chance, to divert trade and custom from its competitors as aforesaid, exclude from candy trade all competitors who are unwilling to and do not use such or an equivalent method as unlawful, lessen competition therein, and tend to create a monopoly thereof in it and such other distributors as do use same or equivalent method, deprive purchasing public of benefit of free competition in trade in question, and eliminate from said trade all actual, and exclude therefrom all potential, competitors who do not adopt and use such or an equivalent method:

Held, That such acts and practices were to the prejudice of the public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition.

Complaint

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that Phoebe Phelps Caramel Company, a corporation, hereinafter referred to as respondent, has been and is using unfair methods of competition in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in said act of Congress, and it appearing to said Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. The respondent, Phoebe Phelps Caramel Company, is a corporation organized and operating under the laws of the State of Massachusetts, with its principal office and place of business located at 74 Fulton Street, in the city of Boston, State of Massachusetts. Respondent is now, and for several years last past has been, engaged in the manufacture of candy and in the sale and distribution thereof to retail and wholesale dealers and jobbers located at points in the various States of the United States, and causes and has caused its said products when sold to be transported from its principal place of business in the State of Massachusetts to purchasers thereof in other States of the United States at their respective places of business; and there is now, and has been for several years last past, a course of trade in commerce by said respondent in such candy between and among the States of the United States. In the course and conduct of said business, respondent is in competition with other corporations and with partnerships and individuals engaged in the manufacture of candy and in the sale and distribution thereof in commerce between and among the various States of the United States.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of its business, as described in paragraph 1 hereof, respondent sells and has sold to retail and wholesale dealers and jobbers certain assortments of candy so packed and assembled as to involve the use of a lottery scheme when sold and distributed to the consumers thereof. One such assortment offered for sale, sold, and distributed by respondent is composed of a number of pieces of caramel candy of uniform size and shape, together with a number of small packages of candy, which small packages of candy are to be given as prizes to purchasers of said pieces of caramel candy of uniform size and shape in the following manner:

The majority of the said caramel candies of uniform size and shape in said assortment are plain or have the same color, but a small number of said caramel candies bear a stripe of a different color. The said caramels of uniform size and shape retail at the price of 1¢ each, but the purchaser who procures one of the said caramels bearing a colored stripe is entitled to receive, and is to be given free of charge, one of the small packages of candy heretofore referred to. The pieces of caramel candy of uniform size and shape are individually wrapped in non-transparent wrappers, and the fact as to whether the caramel is plain or has a stripe thereon is thus effectively concealed from purchasers and prospective purchasers until a selection has been made and the wrapper is removed. The aforesaid purchasers of said caramels, who procure one bearing a stripe, thus procure one of the small packages of candy wholly by lot or chance.

PAR. 3. The wholesale dealers to whom respondent sells its assortments resell the same to retail dealers, and said retail dealers and the retail dealers to whom respondent sells direct expose said assortments for sale and sell said candy to the purchasing public in accordance with the aforesaid sales plan. Respondent thus supplies to and places in the hands of others the means of conducting lotteries in the sale of its products in accordance with the sales plan hereinabove set forth, and said sales plan has the capacity and tendency of inducing purchasers thereof to purchase respondent's said product in preference to candy offered for sale and sold by its competitors.

PAR. 4. The sale of said candy to the purchasing public, in the manner above alleged, involves a game of chance or the sale of a chance to procure a small package of candy.

The use by respondent of said method in the sale of candy, and the sale of candy by and through the use thereof and by the aid of said method, is a practice of the sort which the common law and criminal statutes have long deemed contrary to public policy, and is contrary to an established public policy of the Government of the United States. The use by respondent of said method has a tendency unduly to hinder competition or create monopoly in this, to wit: that the use thereof has the tendency and capacity to exclude from the branch of the candy trade involved in this proceeding competitors who do not adopt and use the same method or an equivalent or similar method involving the same or an equivalent or similar element of chance or lottery scheme.

Many persons, firms and corporations who make and sell candy in competition with the respondent, as above alleged, are unwilling to offer for sale or sell candy so packed and assembled as above alleged, or otherwise arranged and packed for sale to the purchasing public so as to involve a game of chance, and such competitors refrain therefrom.

Findings

PAR. 5. Many dealers in and ultimate purchasers of candy are attracted by respondent's said method and manner of packing said candy and by the element of chance involved in the sale thereof in the manner above described, and are thereby induced to purchase said candy so packed and sold by respondent in preference to candy offered for sale and sold by said competitors of respondent who do not use the same or equivalent methods. The use of said method by respondent has the tendency and capacity, because of said game of chance, to divert to respondent trade and custom from its said competitors who do not use the same or equivalent method; to exclude from said candy trade all competitors who are unwilling to and who do not use the same or an equivalent method because the same is unlawful; to lessen competition in said candy trade, and to tend to create a monopoly of said candy trade in respondent and such other distributors of candy as use the same or an equivalent method; and to deprive the purchasing public of the benefit of free competition in said candy trade. The use of said method by the respondent has the tendency and capacity to eliminate from said candy trade all actual competitors and to exclude therefrom all potential competitors who do not adopt and use said method or an equivalent method.

PAR. 6. Many of said competitors of respondent are unwilling to adopt and use said method or any method involving a game of chance or the sale of a chance to win something by chance or any other method that is contrary to public policy.

PAR. 7. The aforementioned method, acts and practices of respondent are all to the prejudice of the public and respondent's competitors, as hereinabove alleged. Said method, acts, and practices constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

material allegations of the complaint to be true and waiving the taking of further evidence and all other intervening procedure. Thereafter, this proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on the said complaint and answer, and the Commission, having duly considered the same and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. The respondent, Phoebe Phelps Caramel Company, is a corporation organized and operating under the laws of the State of Massachusetts, with its principal office and place of business located at 74 Fulton Street, in the city of Boston, State of Massachusetts. Respondent is now, and for several years last past has been, engaged in the manufacture of candy and in the sale and distribution thereof to retail and wholesale dealers and jobbers located at points in the various States of the United States. It causes and has caused its said products, when sold, to be transported from its principal place of business in the State of Massachusetts to purchasers thereof in other States of the United States at their respective places of business. There is now, and has been for several years last past, a course of trade and commerce by said respondent in such candy between and among the various States of the United States. In the course and conduct of said business, respondent is in competition with other corporations and with partnerships and individuals engaged in the manufacture of candy and in the sale and distribution thereof in commerce between and among the various States of the United States.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of its business, as described in paragraph 1 hereof, respondent sells and has sold to retail and wholesale dealers and jobbers certain assortments of candy so packed and assembled as to involve the use of a lottery scheme when sold and distributed to the consumers thereof. One such assortment offered for sale, sold and distributed by respondent, is composed of a number of pieces of caramel candy of uniform size and shape, together with a number of small packages of candy, which small packages of candy are to be given as prizes to purchasers of said pieces of caramel candy of uniform size and shape in the following manner:

The majority of the said caramel candies of uniform size and shape in said assortment are plain or have the same color, but a small number of said caramel candies bear a stripe of a different color. The said caramels of uniform size and shape retail at the price of 1¢ each, but the purchaser who procures one of the said caramels bearing a colored stripe is entitled to receive, and is to be given free of charge, one of the small packages of candy heretofore referred to. The pieces of caramel candy of uniform size and shape are individually wrapped in non-transparent wrappers, and the fact as to whether the caramel is plain or has a stripe thereon is thus effectively concealed from purchasers and prospective purchasers until a selection has been made and the wrapper is removed. The aforesaid purchasers of said caramels who procure one bearing a stripe, thus procure one of the small packages of candy wholly by lot or chance.

PAR. 3. The wholesale dealers to whom respondent sells its assortments resell the same to retail dealers, and said retail dealers and the retail dealers to whom respondent sells direct expose said assortments for sale and sell said candy to the purchasing public in accordance with the aforesaid sales plan. Respondent thus supplies to and places in the hands of others the means of conducting lotteries in the sale of its products in accordance with the sales plan hereinabove set forth, and said sales plan has the capacity and tendency of inducing purchasers thereof to purchase respondent's said product in preference to candy offered for sale and sold by its competitors.

PAR. 4. The sale of said candy to the purchasing public, in the manner above found, involves a game of chance or the sale of a chance to procure a small package of candy.

The use by respondent of said method in the sale of candy, and the sale of candy by and through the use thereof and by the aid of said method, is a practice of the sort which the common law and criminal statutes have long deemed contrary to public policy, and is contrary to an established public policy of the Government of the United States. The use by respondent of said method has a tendency unduly to hinder competition or create monopoly in this, to wit: that the use thereof has the tendency and capacity to exclude from the branch of the candy trade involved in this proceeding competitors who do not adopt and use the same method or an equivalent or similar method involving the same or an equivalent or similar element of chance or lottery scheme.

Many persons, firms and corporations who make and sell candy in competition with the respondent are unwilling to offer for sale or sell candy so packed and assembled, or otherwise arranged and packed for sale to the purchasing public so as to involve a game of chance, and such competitors refrain therefrom.

PAR. 5. Many dealers in and ultimate purchasers of candy are attracted by respondent's said method and manner of packing said candy and by the element of chance involved in the sale thereof in the manner above described, and are thereby induced to purchase said candy so packed and sold by respondent in preference to candy offered for sale and sold by said competitors of respondent who do not use the same or equivalent methods. The use of said method by respondent has the tendency and capacity, because of said game of chance, to divert to respondent trade and custom from its said competitors who do not use the same or equivalent method; to exclude from said candy trade all competitors who are unwilling to and who do not use the same or an equivalent method because the same is unlawful; to lessen competition in said candy trade, and to tend to create a monopoly of said candy trade in respondent and such other distributors of candy as use the same or an equivalent method; and to deprive the purchasing public of the benefit of free competition in said candy trade. The use of said method by the respondent has the tendency and capacity to eliminate from said candy trade all actual competitors and to exclude therefrom all potential competitors who do not adopt and use said method or an equivalent method.

Order

PAR. 6. Many of said competitors of respondent are unwilling to adopt and use said method or any method involving a game of chance or the sale of a chance to win something by chance or any other method that is contrary to public policy.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondent Phoebe Phelps Caramel Company are to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce, within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

1420

Order

It is ordered, That the respondent Phoebe Phelps Caramel Company, a corporation, its officers, representatives, agents, and employees, in connection with the offering for sale, sale and distribution in interstate commerce of candy, do forthwith cease and desist from:

1. Selling and distributing to jobbers and wholesale dealers for resale to retail dealers, or to retail dealers direct, candy so packed and assembled that sales of such candy to the general public are to be made, or may be made, by means of a lottery, gaming device, or gift enterprise.

2. Supplying to or placing in the hands of wholesale dealers and jobbers or retail dealers assortments of candy which are used, or which may be used, without alteration or rearrangement of the contents of such assortments, to conduct a lottery, gaming device, or gift enterprise in the sale or distribution of the candy contained in said assortments to the public.

3. Packing or assembling in the same package or assortment of candy for sale to the public at retail pieces of candy of uniform size and shape, the majority of which are plain or the same color but a small number of which bear a stripe of a different color, together with a number of small packages of candy which said small packages of candy are or may be given as prizes to the purchaser procuring a piece of candy bearing a stripe.

It is further ordered, That the respondent Phoebe Phelps Caramel Company, a corporation, shall, within 30 days after service upon it of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which it has complied with the order to cease and desist hereinabove set forth.

NELSON E. WOOLMAN AND LYLE G. JACKSON, TRADING
AS POWER SEAL COMPANYCOMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 26, 1914*Docket 3014. Complaint, Dec. 11, 1936—Decision, Nov. 19, 1937*

Where partners engaged in manufacture and sale of their "Power Seal" pellet form preparation for use in internal combustion engine—

Represented, in newspaper and other advertising, through pamphlets and cards distributed to customers and prospective customers, and in extensive radio advertising of their aforesaid product under its aforesaid trade-mark and name, that said "Power Seal" would restore compression in such engines and completely rejuvenate sluggish motors through sealing and reseating leaky and pitted valves, and would restore efficiency and increase power and effect savings in oil and gas, facts being use thereof had no effect upon performance of engines in which used, power and efficiency of engine would not be changed thereby, as represented by it, and aforesaid various representations were false, misleading, and deceptive;

With capacity and tendency to mislead purchasing public into erroneous and untrue belief that said "Power Seal" would produce in such engines results claimed as aforesaid, and into purchase thereof by reason of such belief, and to divert trade to it from competitors engaged in sale of similar products for similar purposes in interstate commerce and who do not misrepresent the same:

Held, That such acts and practices were to the prejudice of the public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition.

Mr. Lawrence W. Allen, of Hollywood, Calif., for respondents.

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that Nelson E. Woolman and Lyle G. Jackson, copartners, trading and doing business under the name of Power Seal Company, have been and are using unfair methods of competition in commerce as "commerce" is defined in said act, and it appearing to said Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint stating its charges in that respect as follows:

Complaint

PARAGRAPH 1. The respondents, Nelson E. Woolman and Lyle G. Jackson, are copartners trading under the name and style of Power Seal Company, with their principal office and place of business located at 1601 South Broadway in the city of Los Angeles within the State of California. Said respondents are now and for more than one year last past have been engaged in the manufacture and sale of an engine dope in pellet form under the trade name "Power Seal." Said respondents cause said "Power Seal" when sold to be transported to the purchasers thereof located in the State of California and in various States of the United States other than the State of California. There is now and has been for a long time, to wit, more than one year last past, a constant current of trade and commerce by said respondents in said "Power Seal" between and among the various States of the United States.

In the course and conduct of their said business, said respondents are now and for a long time, to wit, more than one year last past, have been in substantial competition in commerce between and among the various States of the United States with sundry other corporations, partnerships, firms, and individuals engaged in the interstate sale and distribution of various other engine dopes.

PAR. 2. Said respondents, in the course and conduct of their said business, as hereinbefore set out in paragraph 1, have been and now are engaged in extensive advertisement of their said product "Power Seal." As a means of furthering and aiding in the interstate sale and distribution of said product, and as media of such advertising, they have been and now are using newspapers of interstate circulation, printed cards, and circulars, and broadcasts over radio stations with interstate transmittal.

Said respondents, in their said advertisements of the product "Power Seal" have made and are now making various false, deceptive, and misleading statements concerning said product, which said statements serve to deceive and mislead the public as to the character and effectiveness of said "Power Seal." Among the statements which said respondents have used and are now using in advertisements in newspapers and in printed cards and circulars, and over the radio are the following:

1. Restores Power;
2. Seals up leaky rings and valves;
3. Fills up valve pits and abrasions;
4. Makes valve seat perfectly;
5. Power Seal restores efficiency to your motor;
6. Saves money in oil and gas;
7. Power Seal Restores Compression;

Complaint

25 F. T. C.

8. Bring back power and pep with POWER SEAL;
9. Which? $20 to $40 for Ring and Valve job or "POWER SEAL" at $2 installed;
10. Increases POWER—SPEED—MILEAGE;
11. Eliminates Sloppy rings;
12. Reduces Oil Pumping;
13. A rare compound which expands and plates under heat, refined and blended in our laboratory, and formed into convenient PELLETS;
14. POWER SEAL expands plating the cylinder walls and sealing the valves. It is guaranteed to restore power and compression;
15. Ends all need for valve and ring jobs;
16. Your Power Seal dealer in San Francisco * * * will apply Power Seal and fully tune your motor for only two dollars. The results will be higher compression, a smoother running motor, more power, and less carbon.
17. Power Seal will loosen carbon, expand the rings, increase compression and give you new car performance.
18. My Chevrolet pumped oil * * * giving only 12 miles per gallon of gas; after powersealing my car uses only 1 quart of oil every 600 miles and I'm getting 18 miles per gallon on gas.
19. Power Seal is forced into hot cylinders under pressure—restores lost power—reduces excessive oil pumping—increases gas mileage, and is guaranteed harmless to motors.
20. The sparkplugs in my car were continually oily. Five minutes after using Power Seal they were dry and have stayed dry for nine months!
21. Eliminate carbon knocks, oil pumping, high gasoline consumption and low power in your car without tearing down the motor.
22. When high compression motors lose their high compression, then the trouble begins. Power Seal is a harmless compound which will remove the carbon from your motor and respring your piston rings, thus giving you higher compression—more power—more gasoline mileage—and lower oil consumption. You can have a quiet running motor and new car performance at a cost of only two dollars by visiting your Power Seal dealer * * *.
23. If the things you desire are higher compression, more power, more gasoline mileage, and less oil consumption, perhaps Power Seal is the answer to your problem. It costs only two dollars and one hundred thousand California motorists say that it will correct the motor faults just mentioned. * * * Spend two dollars for a Power Seal Job and Motor tune up and you will have new car performance.
24. If your car struggles over the hills—if it pounds and coughs because of carbon—if it burns oil as fast as gasoline and burns gasoline faster than it should—it needs Power Seal. * * * It will remove carbon—increase compression—cut down fuel and oil consumption—and give you quiet running motor in just a few minutes.

Said statements and representations used by said respondents in their said advertisements, as hereinabove set out, and many other statements and representations of like import and tenor which are not set out herein but which have been used and are now being used by said respondents, have had and do now have the tendency and capacity to, and have created, and do now create, among the public the false impression and erroneous belief that "Power Seal" is a reliable and efficient engine dope, the use of which will increase the power and efficiency of the engine, will increase the compression of the engine, and will bring about economy in operation by decreasing gasoline and oil compression.

In truth and in fact "Power Seal" is not a reliable and efficient engine dope. It will not increase the power or efficiency of the engine. It will not increase the compression of the engine. It will not bring about economy of operation by decreasing gasoline and oil consumption or by any other means.

PAR. 3. The use by the said respondents Nelson E. Woolman and Lyle G. Jackson, copartners, trading and doing business under the name and style of Power Seal Company, of the foregoing false, deceptive and misleading representations has had and does now have the capacity and tendency to and does mislead and deceive the public into the erroneous and untrue belief that Power Seal is in truth and in fact a reliable and efficient engine dope, and that by using same the user will obtain greater power and efficiency from his engine, and greater engine compression, and that the use thereof will bring about economy in operation by decreasing gasoline and oil consumption. Acting in such erroneous belief, the consuming public, and especially that portion of the public operating motor cars, have been induced and are now induced to purchase "Power Seal" in preference to other engine dopes offered for sale by manufacturers, retail dealers, and distributors. As a result of such false, deceptive and misleading representations on the part of said respondents, trade is unfairly diverted to respondents from such manufacturers, retail dealers, or distributors of other engine dope who do not misrepresent the character and quality of their respective products or the results obtained from the use thereof.

PAR. 4. Said false, deceptive, and misleading representations of said respondents contained in their advertisements have resulted in injury to respondents' competitors and to retail dealers, and in prejudice to the buying public, and constitute unfair competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, on December 11, 1936, issued and served its complaint in this proceeding upon respondents, Nelson E. Woolman and Lyle G. Jackson, copartners, trading and doing business under the name of Power Seal Company, charging them with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of the provisions of said act. After the issuance of said complaint and the filing of respondents' answer thereto, testimony and other evidence in support of the allegations of said complaint were introduced by Reuben J. Martin, attorney for the Commission, before Chas. P. Vicini, an examiner of the Commission theretofore duly designated by it, and in opposition to the allegations of the complaint by Lawrence W. Allen, attorney for the respondents, and said testimony and other evidence were duly recorded and filed in the office of the Commission. Thereafter the proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on the said complaint, the answer thereto, testimony and other evidence, and brief in support of the complaint (counsel for the respondents not having filed any brief herein and not having requested oral argument); and the Commission, having duly considered the same and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. The respondents, Nelson E. Woolman and Lyle G. Jackson, are partners who trade and carry on business under the firm name and style of Power Seal Company. They maintain their principal place of business at 1601 South Broadway in the city of Los Angeles within the State of California. Said respondents are engaged in the manufacture and sale of a preparation in pellet form known, designated and sold under the trade name of "Power Seal," which said preparation is recommended for the treatment of internal combustion engines. Respondents recommend the use of said preparation "Power Seal" for the purpose of releasing rings in combustion engines when such rings are gummed; for the purpose of causing the valves in combustion engines to seat properly; and for the purpose of acting as a lubricant.

Respondents, in the regular course and conduct of their said business, are engaged in interstate commerce and cause said "Power Seal," when sold by them, to be transported from their place of business in Los Angeles, Calif., through and into other States of the United States to the respective purchasers thereof. In the course and conduct of their said business, respondents are now, and have been, in competition with various persons and corporations and with other partnerships also engaged in the manufacture and sale or the sale of similar preparations recommended for like or similar uses and purposes.

PAR. 2. Respondents, in the course and conduct of their business, have caused advertisements to be published in various newspapers, have made and are making use of printed advertising matter in the form of pamphlets and cards which they have caused, and are causing, to be distributed among their customers and prospective customers, and have extensively advertised the product sold by them under the trade mark and name of "Power Seal" over various radio stations located in Los Angeles, Calif.

In said advertising, respondents have made, and are making, numerous claims and representations concerning said product known and designated as "Power Seal," the uses for which they recommend the same and the results that they claim will be accomplished by its use. Respondents claim that the use of "Power Seal" in internal combustion engines will restore compression, and will completely rejuvenate tired and sluggish motors by sealing leaky and pitted valves and reseating them; that the use of "Power Seal" will restore efficiency to ill-conditioned engines; that the use of "Power Seal" will effect savings in oil and gas consumption; and that the use of "Power Seal" will increase power, speed, and mileage.

PAR. 3. The use of "Power Seal" in internal combustion engines will not restore compression, will not rejuvenate tired and sluggish motors and will not seal leaky and pitted valves and reseal the valves. The use of "Power Seal" will not restore efficiency to ill-conditioned engines. The use of "Power Seal" will not effect savings in oil and gas consumption, and will not increase power, speed, and mileage. The use of "Power Seal" will have no effect upon engine performance in engines in which it is used, and the power and efficiency of an engine would be unchanged by the use of said "Power Seal" as described in the advertising matter of respondents.

PAR. 4. The advertisements and recommendations of the respondents, as set out herein in paragraph 2, are false, misleading, and deceptive, and have had, and do now have, the capacity and tendency to mislead the purchasing public into the erroneous and untrue belief that "Power Seal" will produce in internal combustion engines the results claimed to be produced in such advertisements, and into the purchase of respondents' said product on account of such erroneous belief. The misstatements and misrepresentations in such advertisements have had, and do now have, the capacity and tendency to divert trade from such of respondents' competitors selling similar products for similar purposes in interstate commerce as do not misrepresent their respective products.

Order

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondents, Nelson E. Woolman and Lyle G. Jackson, copartners, trading and doing business under the name of Power Seal Company, are to the prejudice of the public and competitors of the respondents, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

It is ordered, That the respondents, Nelson E. Woolman and Lyle G. Jackson, copartners, trading and doing business under the name of Power Seal Company, or trading under any other name, their representatives, agents, and employees, in connection with the offering for sale, sale and distribution of the preparation now known and designated as "Power Seal," or any other preparation under whatever name sold composed of the same or similar ingredients and possessing similar properties, in interstate commerce or in the District of Columbia, do forthwith cease and desist from

1. Representing that the use of said preparation in internal combustion engines will restore compression, will completely rejuvenate tired and sluggish motors, will seal leaky and pitted valves and reseal them, will restore efficiency to ill-conditioned engines, will effect savings in oil and gas consumption, or that it will increase the power, speed or mileage of said engines;

2. Making any other similar representations of like import or effect as to the results which will accrue from the use of said preparation.

It is further ordered, That the respondents, Nelson E. Woolman and Lyle G. Jackson, copartners, trading and doing business under the name of Power Seal Company, shall, within 60 days after service upon them of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which they have complied with the order hereinabove set forth.

IN THE MATTER OF

JOHN J. McCLOSKEY, INDIVIDUALLY AND TRADING AS
 H. B. KIMBALL COMPANY, H. B. KIMBALL, AND KIMBALL LABORATORIES

COMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION
 OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 26, 1914

Docket 2725. Complaint, Feb. 19, 1936—Decision, Nov. 20, 1937

Where an individual engaged in sale of proprietary "Kimball Tablets," preparation for disorders and ailments of the digestive system, compounded for him by a company which he neither owned, operated, nor controlled, and sold and shipped, directly and by parcel post, chiefly, from his place of business, to purchasers at various points in various other States, and not, generally, upon doctor's prescription, but indiscriminately, to purchasers who, in reliance upon representations in its advertising, attempted self-medication without medical consultation, and in substantial competition with others engaged in sale and distribution, or manufacture, sale, and distribution, of preparations designed and sold as cures and remedies, or as treatments, for various disorders and ailments of the digestive system, in commerce among the various States and in the District of Columbia; in advertising his said tablets by pamphlets, labels, broadsides, form letters and testimonials, and in newspapers of general interstate circulation—

- (a) Represented that said tablets constituted an effective or competent remedy of cure for stomach trouble and ulcers, constipation, indigestion, dyspepsia, gastritis, and faulty elimination, and was such a remedy or cure for gas pains, intestinal toxic conditions, acidosis, bloating after meals, and dyspepsia symptoms; and
- (b) Represented that said tablets would "rid" the user of any ailment and remove cause thereof, and produce instant or positive results, and be beneficial regardless of severity or duration of ailment or previous remedies used, and that beneficial results were guaranteed, and 100,000 chronic cases had been successfully treated;

Facts being only therapeutic value of product in question was that of an antacid which, properly administered, would temporarily neutralize gastric acidity and have soothing effect on mucous lining of stomach, no one medicine or tablet alone is competent and effective remedy or cure for ailments or disorders of digestive tract, irrespective of cause thereof, certain ingredients present in said tablets, used in some palliative treatments for temporary relief of certain digestive disorders, such as gas pains, intestinal toxic conditions and others, had no effect on causative factors of such conditions and did not serve as cures or remedies therefor, said tablets would not "rid" the user of any ailment, were not beneficial regardless of duration or severity thereof, various representations above set forth were otherwise false, no chronic cases had been successfully treated or cured thereby, but persons suffering from such chronic disorders or ailments had been known to use and rely on such preparations alone until their conditions became such that recovery was impossible; and

(c) Represented, through use of such trade names as "H. B. Kimball Laboratories" or "H. B. Kimball Company, formerly Kimball Laboratories", that he was manufacturer of product and depicted in certain advertising, said Kimball, his predecessor, in uniform, and set forth, in such connection, asserted history of origin of formula of said tablets as assertedly acquired by said Kimball, as a part of his World War experience in Germany from a certain German chemist and physician who had made use of same in treating his patients suffering from digestive disorders, notwithstanding fact he neither owned, operated nor controlled laboratory making aforesaid products compounded by him, said predecessor had no connection with business in question, but had sold same to such individual years theretofore and latter had no knowledge as to whether or not any such German chemist and physician, as above set forth, ever existed or whether formula was derived or obtained as above set forth;

With effect of misleading purchasers of his products into belief that, in buying from him, they were dealing with manufacturer of product and thereby gaining many advantages as result of such purchase, such as, as commonly believed among purchasing and consuming public, superior quality at considerable saving in price, and of misleading and deceiving substantial portion of purchasing public into erroneous belief that said representations were true, and that preparation in question had substantial therapeutic value as cure and remedy for many disorders and ailments, as represented, and with result that public, acting under such mistaken and erroneous beliefs, induced by such false and misleading statement and representations, purchased substantial volume of its said product and trade was unfairly diverted to it from competitors likewise engaged in sale and distribution, or in manufacture, sale, and distribution, of cures and remedies or treatments for ailments and disorders of digestive tract, and who truthfully represent efficacy and therapeutic value of their respective products, and status or character of their respective businesses; to the substantial injury of competition in commerce:

Held, That such acts and practices were to the prejudice of the public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition.

COMPLAINT

to said Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint, stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent, John T. McCloskey, trading as H. B. Kimball Company, H. B. Kimball, and Kimball Laboratories, is an individual whose office and place of business is located at 727 West Wisconsin Avenue, Milwaukee, Wis. He is now, and has been since 1930, engaged in selling a stomach remedy, advertised, labeled, and sold as "Kimball Tablets", between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia, and now causes, and for more than one year last past has caused, such products when sold by him to be shipped from his place of business in Milwaukee to purchasers thereof, some being located in the State of Wisconsin and others being located in various other States of the United States and in the District of Columbia, and there is now, and has been for more than one year last past, a constant current of trade and commerce by the respondent in Kimball Tablets between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

Respondent is now, and for more than one year last past has been, in substantial competition with other individuals, and with firms, partnerships, and corporations engaged in the sale of similar products between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of his business, as described in paragraph 1, hereof, in soliciting the sale of and in selling his Kimball Tablets, respondent now represents, and for more than one year last past has represented, in and by his advertising matter, which consists of circular letters, pamphlets, purported testimonials, folders, labels applied to the products, radio broadcasts, and through small advertisements in newspapers of interstate circulation, and in other ways, that Kimball Tablets are an effective remedy for stomach trouble, ulcers, gas pains, indigestion, constipation, intestinal toxicity, bloating, dyspepsia, gastritis, acidosis, hyperacidity, and faulty elimination; that his preparation will "rid" the user of any ailment; that it is not a patent medicine; that it will remove the cause of any ailment; that it will produce instant or positive results; that it will put a protective covering over the stomach membrane; that it will promote healing while taking care of digestion; that its use will enable the stomach to rest; that it will produce lasting relief; that it will be beneficial regardless of the severity or duration of the ailment or previous treatments used; that amazing results have been experienced by persons who had little or no hope of regaining their health; that it is sure to produce beneficial results, or that beneficial results are guaranteed; that over one hundred thousand chronic cases have been successfully treated; that regardless of how long you have been suffering, or how discouraged you are of ever being well again, "we positively guarantee results, or the treatment costs you nothing."

In truth and in fact the preparation of itself is in no way a cure for any of the conditions mentioned above, nor does the actual therapeutic value of the preparation warrant statements or representations that it will give relief to sufferers of such ailments or bring about any of the results claimed. The statements that one hundred thousand chronic cases have been successfully treated, and "results are guaranteed, or the treatment costs you nothing," are untrue.

PAR. 3. Only by a thorough diagnosis made by a competent physician can the causes of the various stomach disorders named be ascertained and successfully treated. Respondent is not a physician and there is no medical doctor connected with respondent's business in any capacity.

PAR. 4. Respondent clearly implies and represents, through the statements contained in his advertising media, that he maintains a laboratory wherein his products are compounded, manufactured, or otherwise prepared for the market. In truth and in fact, respondent does not own, operate, or control any factory wherein his Kimball Tablets are made, but respondent purchases the Kimball Tablets, which he advertises and sells, in commerce as aforesaid, from Shores-Mueller Company of Cedar Rapids, Iowa, which company manufactures and prepares the tablets upon the order of respondent.

It is the common belief among the purchasing and consuming public, that a superior grade of medicine can be purchased direct from the manufacturer thereof at a considerable saving in price. The representations made by respondent, as alleged in paragraph 4 hereof, have the tendency and capacity to mislead and deceive the purchasers of respondent's stomach medicine into the belief that when they purchase Kimball Tablets from respondent, they are dealing with the manufacturer of said tablets purchased and thereby are gaining an advantage by saving the middleman's profit.

PAR. 5. Respondent represents, in and by the advertising media described in paragraph 2 hereof, that H. B. Kimball, whose picture, military history and the history of the Kimball Tablets appear as part of said advertising, manufactures the respondent's stomach remedy, or is in some way connected with the business. On the contrary, H. B. Kimball sold the business, together with all the rights incident thereto, to the respondent in 1930, and thereby severed all connections with the respondent's business.

PAR. 6. Respondent also represents that Kimball Tablets are prepared according to a formula of the late Dr. Sternberger of Germany, whereas in truth and in fact respondent has no knowledge whether or not the said formula was ever used by Dr. Sternberger or anyone else in the manufacture of stomach medicines.

PAR. 7. Respondent employs as part of his advertising set up, purported testimonials in which statements are made by the persons giving said testimonials that the persons making said statements were or had been suffering from one or more of the stomach disorders herein referred to and that said persons had been cured or benefited by use of respondent's product when in truth and in fact the respondent was, and is, without knowledge as to the disease or diseases, if any, from which said persons were, or had been, actually suffering.

Respondent also employs certain purported endorsements of his preparation by doctors and chemists when in truth and in fact none of said doctors or chemists are known to respondent and he is now, and has been, without knowledge as to whether any of them have endorsed his preparation or not.

PAR. 8. The use by respondent of the representations hereinabove described has had, and now has, the capacity and tendency to mislead and deceive, and does mislead and deceive a substantial portion of the purchasing public into the belief that such representations are true, and to purchase substantial quantities of said stomach medicines from respondent in such erroneous belief. There are, among the competitors of respondent, as mentioned in paragraph 1 hereof, manufacturers and distributors of stomach remedies, who neither misrepresent their status as manufacturers nor the therapeutic value of their products in any way, who likewise advertise, sell, and distribute stomach medicines among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia. By the representations aforesaid, trade is diverted to respondent from such competitors; thereby substantial injury is being, and has been, done by respondent to substantial competition in commerce as herein set out.

PAR. 9. The above alleged acts and practices of respondent are all to the prejudice of the public and the respondent's competitors and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled, "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, on February 19, 1936, issued, and on February 21, 1936, served, its complaint in this proceeding upon respondent, John J. McCloskey, individually, and trading as H. B. Kimball Company, H. B. Kimball, and Kimball Laboratories, charging him with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of the provisions of said act. After the issuance of said complaint, and the filing of respondent's answer thereto, testimony and other evidence in support of the allegations of said complaint were introduced by DeWitt T. Puckett, attorney for the Commission, before John L. Hornor and Robert S. Hall, examiners of the Commission theretofore duly designated by it, and in opposition to the allegations of the complaint by E. V. Novotny, attorney for the respondent; and said testimony and other evidence were duly recorded and filed in the office of the Commission. Thereafter, the proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on the said complaint, the answer thereto, testimony and other evidence, and brief in support of the complaint, no brief having been filed by respondent and no oral argument having been requested; and the Commission having duly considered the same, and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public, and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. The respondent, John J. McCloskey, is an individual trading as H. B. Kimball Company, H. B. Kimball, and Kimball Laboratories. His place of business is at 727 West Wisconsin Avenue, Milwaukee, Wis. He is now, and since 1929 has been, engaged in the sale and distribution of a product called Kimball Tablets, a proprietary medicine advertised and sold as a remedy and cure for various disorders and ailments of the digestive system.

When orders are received for respondent's tablets, he causes them to be shipped from his place of business at Milwaukee, Wis., to the purchasers thereof located at various points in the various States of the United States other than the State of Wisconsin. Said tablets are shipped directly to the purchasers thereof chiefly by parcel post. Since 1929, the respondent has maintained a constant current of trade in said tablets, in commerce among and between the various States of the United States.

At all times since respondent entered into said business, he has been in substantial competition with other individuals and with partnerships and corporations engaged in the sale and distribution, or in the manufacture, sale, and distribution, of preparations designed and sold as cures and remedies or as treatments for various disorders and ailments of the digestive system, in commerce among and between the several States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 2. The respondent has advertised, and is now advertising, said Kimball Tablets by pamphlets, labels, broadsides, form letters, testimonials and through advertisements inserted in newspapers of general interstate circulation. Respondent formerly advertised his tablets by radio, but has done no radio advertising during the past three years. Said Kimball Tablets have been, and are now, advertised and represented by respondent as a competent or effective remedy or cure for stomach trouble, ulcers, gas pains, indigestion, constipation, intestinal toxicity, bloating, dyspepsia, gastritis, acidosis, hyperacidity, faulty elimination and various other ailments and disorders of the digestive tract. He also represents that said tablets will "rid" the user of any ailment; that they will remove the cause of any ailment; that they will produce instant or positive results; that they will be beneficial regardless of the severity or duration of the ailment or previous remedies used; that beneficial results are guaranteed; and that 100,000 chronic cases have been successfully treated.

PAR. 3. The qualitative formula for Kimball Tablets is:

Calcium carbonate, Sodium bicarbonate, Magnesium oxide, Peppermint Vanalin, Oleoresin Ginger, Saccharin, Bismuth.

Based upon an examination of the product and its qualitative formula by a governmental agency, and upon the testimony of duly qualified members of the medical profession, it is found that the only therapeutic value of said product is that of an antacid which, if properly administered, would temporarily neutralize gastric hyperacidity and would have a soothing effect on the mucous lining of the stomach.

The evidence establishes that the method of treating disorders and ailments of the digestive tract, which is followed generally by the medical profession, is, in all cases, to get a complete history of the patient's disorder or ailment, whereupon an exhaustive diagnosis is made which oftentimes involves a determination of the blood pressure, urina tests, blood tests, and an X-ray examination. After the patient's disorder or ailment is discovered and the cause thereof determined, if possible, said disorder or ailment is treated in accordance with certain standard methods of treatment employed by the medical profession for that particular disorder or ailment. Such treatment includes correcting the diet, administering certain medicines in some cases and, in others, surgical operations.

Disorders and ailments of the digestive tract arise from many causes and they are not all treated in the same manner. No one medicine or tablet alone is a competent and effective remedy or cure for ailments or disorders of the digestive tract, irrespective of the cause thereof. Kimball Tablets do contain certain ingredients used in some palliative treatments which are administered for temporary relief of certain digestive disorders such as gas pains, intestinal toxic conditions, acidosis, bloating after meals, symptoms of dyspepsia, and hyperacidity, but which have no effect on the causative factors of such conditions and which do not serve as cures or remedies for such conditions. Said tablets, however, have no therapeutic or beneficial value in the treatment of stomach trouble, ulcers of the stomach, constipation, indigestion, dyspepsia, gastritis and faulty elimination. They will not remove the cause of or "rid" the user of any ailment. They are not beneficial regardless of the duration or severity of the ailment, and they will not produce instant and positive results. Beneficial results are not guaranteed and no chronic cases have been successfully treated or cured by the use of said tablets. Persons suffering from chronic disorders or ailments of the digestive tract have been known to use and rely on such preparations alone until their conditions became such that recovery was impossible.

The testimony of a doctor who used Kimball Tablets in treating about fifty-five patients suffering from digestive disorders and ailments is substantially in accord with the other medical testimony adduced. His method of procedure in treating patients suffering from digestive disorders is in accordance with established methods of treatment above described. The witness testified that Kimball Tablets will not remove the cause of any ailment.

Respondent's tablets are not generally sold upon a doctor's prescription but are sold indiscriminately to purchasers who, relying upon the representations contained in respondent's advertising, attempt self-medication without consulting a doctor.

PAR. 4. Until about two years ago respondent used the trade names "H. B. Kimball Laboratories," and "H. B. Kimball Laboratory," on his letterheads. The letterheads now read "H. B. Kimball Company, formerly Kimball Laboratories." The trade names "H. B. Kimball Laboratories" and "Kimball Laboratories" still appear on certain of his advertising literature.

It is the common belief among the purchasing and consuming public, that a superior grade of medicine can be purchased direct from the manufacturer thereof at a considerable saving in price and that other advantages can be obtained thereby. The use by respondent of the word "laboratory" or "laboratories" as a part of his trade name has had, and now has, the capacity and tendency to mislead, and has misled, purchasers of respondent's products into the belief that when they purchase said products from respondent, they are dealing with the manufacturer of said products purchased and thereby are gaining many advantages as a result thereof. Respondent has never owned, operated or directly and absolutely controlled a laboratory or manufacturing plant in which Kimball Tablets were compounded. In fact, said tablets are compounded for the respondent by Shores-Mueller Company of Cedar Rapids, Iowa, which company compounds the tablets upon the order of respondent. Respondent has never owned, operated or exercised any control over the Shores-Mueller Company.

PAR. 5. Certain of respondent's advertising matter, which was also formerly used by H. B. Kimball, respondent's predecessor, carries a picture of H. B. Kimball in military uniform and a story about the origin and history of Kimball Tablets. According to said story, H. B. Kimball was a soldier in the late World War and had the good fortune of being billeted with a family at Heimersheim, Germany, that had in its possession the formula for Kimball Tablets, said formula having been discovered by the late Dr. Sternberger, a chemist and physician of Heimersheim, Germany, and having been used in treating Dr. Sternberger's patients suffering from digestive disorders. Further, according to the story, Kimball obtained a copy of the formula and compounded Kimball Tablets in accordance therewith. The aforesaid advertising matter and the right to use the same were obtained from Kimball at the time respondent purchased the business from him. Respondent never knew Dr. Sternberger or whether such person ever existed or whether the said formula was derived or obtained in the manner represented. The entire story is based upon hearsay. H. B. Kimball sold the business to respondent in 1929 and has not been connected with the business in any way since that time.

PAR. 6. The use by respondent of the representations set forth above in his advertising literature has had, and now has, the capacity and tendency to, and does, mislead and deceive a substantial portion of the purchasing public into the erroneous beliefs that said representations are true and that said preparation has the substantial therapeutic value as a cure and remedy for many disorders and ailments as represented. Acting under the mistaken and erroneous beliefs induced by the false and misleading statements and representations above referred to, the public has purchased a substantial volume of the respondent's products with the result that trade has been unfairly diverted to the respondent from his competitors likewise engaged in the sale and distribution, or in the manufacture, sale, and distribution, of cures and remedies or treatments for ailments and disorders of the digestive tract, who truthfully represent the efficacy and therapeutic value of their respective products and the status or character of their respective businesses. As a result thereof, a substantial injury has been done, and is now being done, by respondent to competition in commerce among and between the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

Order

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondent John J. McCloskey, individually, and trading as H. B. Kimball Company, H. B. Kimball, and Kimball Laboratories, are to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce, within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

It is ordered, That the respondent, John J. McCloskey, individually and trading as H. B. Kimball Company, H. B. Kimball, and Kimball Laboratories, or trading under any other name, his agents, representatives and employees in connection with the offering for sale, sale and distribution of a medicinal product now designated as "Kimball Tablets," or of any other medicinal product containing substantially the same ingredients, or possessing the same properties, sold under that name or any other name, in interstate commerce or in the District of Columbia, do forthwith cease and desist from:

A. Representing directly or through the use of testimonials or indorsements or in any other manner,

1. That said product constitutes an effective and competent remedy or cure for, or has any therapeutic or beneficial value in the treatment of, stomach trouble, ulcers of the stomach, constipation, indigestion, dyspepsia, gastritis, and faulty elimination;

2. That said product is an effective and competent remedy or cure for, or that it will remove the causes of, gas pains, intestinal toxic conditions, acidosis, bloating after meals, and symptoms of dyspepsia; provided respondent is not hereby prevented, however, from representing said product as a palliative treatment for temporary relief of such conditions;

3. That said product will remove the cause of, or rid the user of, any disease, disorder or ailment whatever;

4. That said product is beneficial regardless of the duration or severity of the ailment and that chronic cases have been successfully treated by the use thereof;

5. That said product will produce instant and positive results and that beneficial results are guaranteed.

B. Representing, through the use of the word "laboratory" alone or in conjunction with any other word, or through the use of any other word or words of similar import and meaning, or through any device, that he is the manufacturer of said product until and unless he owns, operates, or directly and absolutely controls a laboratory wherein said products are compounded by him.

C. Representing through the use of pictorial representations or in any manner:

1. That H. B. Kimball is connected with the said business;

2. That said product is compounded in accordance with a formula discovered by a Dr. Sternberger of Germany or by any other person who did not in fact discover the said formula.

It is further ordered, That the respondent shall, within 60 days after service upon him of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which he has complied with this order.

IN THE MATTER OF

JULIUS GOODMAN & SON, INC.

COMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 20, 1914

Docket 3028. Complaint, Jan. 5, 1937—Decision, Nov. 22, 1937

Where a corporation engaged, in retail jewelry business, in offer and sale, to customers and prospective customers in various States and in the District of Columbia, of new silverware and of secondhand silverware purchased by it from various sources and, in some instances, reconditioned and renovated at a cost which was generally lower than cost to it of new and unused silverware of similar quality, and enabled thereby to sell same at substantially lower prices than those at which competitors engaged in sale of new silverware were able to sell similar new products, and with appearance, in most instances, of new silverware which had never been used—

Sold its said used and renovated silverware with no mark, symbol or statement thereon or in connection therewith, or in the advertisements thereof to indicate same was not new, and without disclosing fact it had been previously used, then renovated and reconditioned, and under such circumstances as to indicate that it was new silverware, and failed, in its advertisements in newspapers and magazines in general circulation throughout the United States, to disclose secondhand or reconditioned nature of silverware thus offered by it;

With tendency and capacity to mislead and deceive a substantial portion of purchasing public into erroneous belief that said used and renovated silverware was new and unused, and with result that, by reason of such mistaken and erroneous belief induced by said advertisements and representations, number of the consuming public bought considerable volume of its said silverware and trade was unfairly diverted to it from those likewise engaged in sale of new and unused or used silverware, and who truthfully advertise their products; to the substantial injury of competition in commerce:

Held, That such acts and practices were to the prejudice of the public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition.

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that Julius Goodman & Son, Inc., is a corporation, hereinafter referred to as respondent, has been and is using unfair methods of competition in

Complaint

commerce, as "commerce" is defined in said act of Congress, and it appearing to said Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent, Julius Goodman & Son, Inc., is a corporation organized, existing, and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Tennessee, with its principal office and place of business located at 43 South Main Street, Memphis, Tennessee. Respondent is now, and for more than two years last past has been, engaged in the retail jewelry business and in the sale and offering for sale of new and used silver tableware to customers and prospective customers located in various States of the United States.

PAR. 2. Said respondent, being engaged in business as aforesaid, causes and has caused said tableware, when sold, to be transported from its office and principal place of business in the State of Tennessee to purchasers thereof located in various other States of the United States. There is now, and has been during the time hereinabove mentioned, a constant current of trade and commerce in said new and used silver tableware so distributed and sold by respondent between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

In the course and conduct of its said business said respondent was, and is in substantial competition with other corporations, individuals, firms, and partnerships likewise engaged in the sale and distribution of new and used silver tableware, in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 3. In the course and conduct of its business as described in paragraph 1 hereof, respondent, for more than two years last past has bought and still buys, second-hand, old, and used silver tableware, which it has caused and now causes to be renovated and reconditioned. Respondent has caused advertisements to be inserted in newspapers and magazines having a general circulation throughout the United States in which it has represented and now represents that said old second-hand and used silver tableware is new and unused.

Certain advertising matter used by said respondent in making said representation is herein set out as illustrative of said representation, but is not all inclusive. Such advertisements are as follows:

Lily	Versailles	Buttercup
Luxembourg	Violet	Strasbourg
Canterbury	Old English	Chantilly
Frontenac	Lancaster	Chrysanthemum

We have in stock the above and many others.

Said silver tableware so advertised and sold by respondent has the appearance of new tableware, which has never been used, and it is sold by respondent without disclosing the fact that it had been previously used, then renovated and reconditioned, and is sold under such circumstances to indicate that it is new tableware. Respondent has sold, and now sells said tableware without any marking, symbol, or statement on or about it, or in the advertisements describing the same, indicating that it is not new silver tableware.

The cost to respondent of obtaining, renovating and reconditioning said tableware is much less than the cost to tableware manufacturers of manufacturing and selling new tableware of similar quality, and respondent is thereby able to sell its said products at substantially lower prices than manufacturers of new tableware can sell their products of the same or similar quality.

PAR. 4. It is the common belief and understanding of the purchasing public that silver tableware, having the appearance of new and unused tableware, is in fact tableware which is new and unused. The purchasing public, when buying silver tableware having the appearance of being new and unused and without any marking, symbol, or statement on or about said tableware, or the advertisements describing the same, clearly indicating that said tableware is not in fact new or unused, are entitled to receive new tableware and not second-hand, old, and used tableware which has been renovated and made over.

PAR. 5. The acts and practices of respondent in offering for sale and selling said second-hand silver tableware had, and now has, a tendency and capacity to mislead and deceive a substantial portion of the purchasing public into the purchase of said second-hand, old and used silver tableware which has been renovated and made over by respondent, in the erroneous belief that they are purchasing new and unused silver tableware. Said acts and practices of respondent have had, and do have the tendency and capacity to induce prospective customers to answer respondent's advertisements and to purchase respondent's silver tableware, and unfairly to divert trade to respondents from competitors engaged in the sale of new and used silver tableware, and who truthfully advertise their products. Further, as a direct consequence of the misleading and erroneous belief induced by the advertisements and misrepresentation of the respondent, as hereinabove enumerated, a number of the consuming public purchased a substantial volume of respondent's reconditioned silver tableware with the result that trade has been unfairly diverted to respondent from corporations, firms, partnerships, and individuals likewise engaged in the business of selling new and used silver tableware, and who truthfully advertise their products. As a result thereof, substantial injury has been done, and is now being done by respondent, to competition in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 6. The above and foregoing acts, practices, and representations of respondent have been, and are, all to the prejudice of the public and respondent's competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in interstate commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

Findings

Thereafter, the proceeding came on for final hearing before the Commission on the said complaint and answer thereto, testimony and other evidence, and brief in support of the allegations of the complaint, no brief having been filed by respondent and oral argument having not been requested, and the Commission having duly considered the same, and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public, and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom :

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent, Julius Goodman & Son, Inc., is a corporation organized, existing, and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Tennessee, with its principal office and place of business located at 43 South Main Street, Memphis, Tenn.

Respondent is now, and for approximately five years last past has been, engaged, under its present corporate name, in the retail jewelry business and in offering for sale and selling new and used silverware to customers and prospective customers located in various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

The business is under the control of Julius Goodman and has been in existence since the year 1865. Respondent's gross dollar volume of business for the year 1936 was approximately $250,000.

PAR. 2. Respondent's merchandise is sold throughout the United States and in many foreign countries. When orders are received for respondent's merchandise, it is shipped from respondent's place of business in Memphis, Tenn., to the purchasers thereof at their respective locations, some of which are in States of the United States other than the State of Tennessee, and some of which are in foreign countries.

There is now and has been during the time hereinabove mentioned a constant current of trade and commerce in said new and used silverware so distributed and sold by respondent between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

In the course and conduct of its business respondent was, and is, in substantial competition with other corporations and with partnerships and individuals likewise engaged in the sale and distribution of new and used silverware in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 3. Respondent's silverware consists of new and unused silver and second-hand or used silverware which respondent purchases from various sources.

In some instances respondent reconditions and renovates the used silverware and offers it for sale to the purchasing public.

In the course of the operation of its business, respondent has caused advertisements to be inserted in newspapers and magazines having a general circulation throughout the United States in which advertisements the fact that said silverware was second-hand or reconditioned was not disclosed. The following advertisement is illustrative of said representations but is not all inclusive:

Respondent's silverware so advertised and sold as aforesaid had the appearance, in most instances, of new silverware which had never been used.

Respondent has sold said used and renovated silverware without disclosing the fact that it has been previously used, then renovated and reconditioned, and under such circumstances as to indicate that it was new silverware.

In some instances prospective customers made inquiry as to whether or not respondent's silverware was new or used merchandise, and were advised by respondent that the silverware was used and reconditioned silverware, if such was the case.

Respondent has in the past sold its used and renovated silverware without any marking, symbol, or statement on or about it or in its advertisements indicating that such silverware was not new silverware.

On or about December 4, 1936, respondent changed its advertising policy and in all its advertisements subsequent to December 4, 1936, respondent represented, or otherwise indicated that its old reconditioned silverware was, in fact, silverware that had been previously used then reconditioned.

PAR. 4. The cost to respondent of obtaining, renovating and reconditioning said silverware is generally lower than the cost to respondent of new and unused silverware of similar quality, and respondent is thereby able to sell its said products at substantially lower prices than competitors engaged in the sale of new silverware can sell similar new silverware.

When buying silverware having the appearance of new and unused silverware and without any marking, symbol, or statement on or about said silverware, or in the advertisements describing the same, clearly indicating that said silverware is not, in fact, new or unused, the purchasing public believes, and is entitled to believe, that such silverware is new silverware and not second-hand, old, and used silverware which has been renovated and made over.

PAR. 5. Respondent's misrepresentation concerning its silverware as hereinabove set forth in its advertising in newspapers, pamphlets, and other advertising literature had, and now has, the tendency and capacity to mislead and deceive a substantial portion of the purchasing public into the erroneous belief that said used and renovated silverware was new and unused silverware.

As a direct result of this mistaken and erroneous belief induced by advertisements and misrepresentations of respondent, as hereinabove enumerated, a number of the consuming public purchased a considerable volume of respondent's silverware with the result that trade has been unfairly diverted to respondent from corporations and partnerships and individuals likewise engaged in the business of selling new and unused, or used, silverware and who truthfully advertise their products.

As a result thereof substantial injury has been done, and is now being done, by respondent to competition in commerce among and between the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondent, Julius Goodman & Son, Inc., a corporation, are to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce, within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

It is ordered, That the respondent, Julius Goodman & Son, Inc., a corporation, its officers, representatives, agents, and employees, in connection with the offering for sale, sale, and distribution of used, old, and reconditioned silverware in interstate commerce, or in the District of Columbia, do forthwith cease and desist from:

Representing directly, or through failure to disclose the true nature, character, and condition thereof, that said old, used, and reconditioned silverware is new.

It is further ordered, That the respondent shall within 30 days after service upon it of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which it has complied with this order.

BLOOMINGDALE BROTHERS, INC.

COMPLAINT, MODIFIED FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 26, 1914

Docket 3176. Complaint, July 17, 1937—Decision, Nov. 22, 1937

Where corporate department store operator, engaged in sale and distribution of women's wearing apparel and other allied products, to purchasers in other States, in substantial competition with those engaged in sale and distribution of such apparel and products in various States and in District of Columbia; in advertising its said merchandise in newspapers of interstate circulation—

Represented, designated, and referred to certain dresses as "Windsor Crepe" and certain blouses as "Heim Crepe," notwithstanding fact garments thus advertised and offered were not composed of silk, product of cocoon of silkworm, as long definitely understood in mind of consuming public from word "silk," and were not products thereof, long and still held in great public esteem and confidence for their preeminent qualities, nor silk as understood from word "Crepe," without descriptive qualification, as applied to wearing apparel, as meaning one of terms applied to fabrics resulting from different types of weaving of silk fiber, and as meaning fabric made from cocoon of silkworm, and, as commonly known and understood by public generally, "silk";

With capacity and tendency to mislead portion of purchasing public into erroneous belief that such articles were made of silk, and to cause them to purchase same on account of such erroneous beliefs, and to divert trade unfairly to it from competitors; to the substantial injury of competition in commerce:

Held, That such acts and practices were to the prejudice of the public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition.

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission having reason to believe that Bloomingdale Brothers, Inc., hereinafter referred to as respondent, has been and now is using unfair methods of competition in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in said act, and it appearing to the Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent, Bloomingdale Brothers, Inc., is a corporation organized, existing and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of New York, with its office and principal place of business located at Lexington Avenue and 59th Street in the city of New York in said State. It is now, and for many years last past has been, engaged in the business of operating a department store from which it sells, among other things, women's wearing apparel. It sells and has sold and distributed such wearing apparel to members of the purchasing public located in the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia. Respondent causes, and during the time herein mentioned has caused, its articles of merchandise, when sold, to be shipped from its place of business in New York, N. Y., to the purchasers thereof located in the various States of the United States other than the State of New York. There is now, and has been at all times mentioned herein, a constant current of trade and commerce by said respondent in said merchandise so sold by it between and among the various States of the United States. Respondent is now, and at all times herein mentioned has been, in substantial competition with other corporations and with persons, firms, and partnerships engaged in the sale and distribution of women's wearing apparel and other allied products in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of its business as described in paragraph 1 hereof, respondent, in soliciting the sale of and selling said wearing apparel, caused, and now causes, advertising matter to be inserted in newspapers having interstate circulation. In said advertising matter certain dresses were and are represented, designated and referred to as "Windsor Crepe." In other of its newspaper advertising certain blouses were and are represented, designated and referred to as "Heim Crepe."

Such statements and representations on the part of respondent serve as representations to members of the public that such items of wearing apparel so advertised and offered for sale are and were silk products. The representations hereinabove set forth are and were grossly false and misleading in that said items of wearing apparel so represented, designated and referred to are not and were not composed of silk, the product of the cocoon of the silk worm, but were composed of materials other than silk.

PAR. 3. The word "silk" for many years past has had and still has, in the mind of the consuming public, a definite and specific meaning, to wit: The product of the cocoon of the silk worm. Silk products for many years have held and still hold great public esteem and confidence for their preeminent qualities. Silk fibre has long been woven into a variety of fabrics. A variety of distinctive terms have been applied to the fabrics resulting from different types of weaving of silk fibre. Dress goods and other items of women's wearing apparel designated, described and referred to as "crepe" have been for a long time and at the present time still are associated in the public mind with a fabric made from the cocoon of the silk worm, commonly known and understood by the public as silk.

Findings

PAR. 4. The use by respondent of the representations set forth herein have had and now have the capacity and tendency to mislead and deceive a substantial portion of the purchasing public into the erroneous beliefs that such representations are and were true and to cause them to purchase such items of wearing apparel on account of such erroneous beliefs engendered as above set forth. There are, among the competitors of respondent, as mentioned in paragraph 1 hereof, corporations, individuals, partnerships and firms engaged in the sale of women's wearing apparel who do not misrepresent the kind of wearing apparel offered for sale. By use of the representations aforesaid, trade has been, and is, unfairly diverted to respondent from said competitors and thereby substantial injury is being, and has been, done by respondent to competition in commerce as herein set out.

PAR. 5. The above alleged acts and practices of respondent are all to the injury and prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of the Act of Congress entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914.

REPORT, MODIFIED FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

for the Federal Trade Commission, and Proskauer, Rose & Paskus, counsel for the respondent, executed a stipulation as to the facts wherein it was agreed that the statement of facts therein recited might be taken as the facts in this proceeding and in lieu of testimony in support of the charges stated in the complaint or in opposition thereto, and that the Commission might proceed upon such statement of facts to make its report, stating its findings as to the facts (including inferences which it may draw from the said stipulated facts) and its conclusion based thereon, and enter its order disposing of the proceeding without the presentation of argument or the filing of briefs. Said stipulation as to the facts was subsequently approved by the Commission and was duly recorded and filed in the office of the Commission. Thereafter the proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on said complaint, the answer thereto and said stipulation as to the facts; and the Commission, having duly considered the same and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent, Bloomingdale Brothers, Inc., is a corporation, organized, existing, and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of New York, with its office and principal place of business located at Lexington Avenue and 59th Street in the city of New York in said State. It is now, and for many years last past has been, engaged in the business of operating a department store from which it sells and distributes women's wearing apparel and other allied products. It sells, and has sold and distributed, such articles of merchandise to members of the purchasing public located in various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia. It causes, and during the time herein mentioned has caused, its said articles of merchandise when sold, to be shipped from its place of business in New York, N. Y., to the purchasers thereof located in the various States of the United States other than the State of New York. Respondent is now, and at all times herein mentioned has been, in substantial competition with other corporations and with persons, firms, and partnerships engaged in the sale and distribution of women's wearing apparel and other allied products, in the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia, some of which said competitors sell and distribute their merchandise in commerce among and between the various States of the United States.

Conclusion

PAR. 2. In the course and conduct of its business as described in paragraph 1 hereof, respondent, in soliciting the sale of and selling its said merchandise, caused, and now causes, advertising matter to be inserted in newspapers having an interstate circulation. In said advertising matter, certain dresses were represented, designated and referred to as "Windsor Crepe," without a modifying word to indicate the fibre of which the fabric was made. In other of its newspaper advertising, certain blouses were represented, designated and referred to as "Heim Crepe," without a modifying word to indicate the fibre of which the fabric was made.

PAR. 3. In the manner and through the means above stated, respondent represented, and represents, to members of the purchasing public that such products so advertised and offered for sale were silk products. The said items of women's wearing apparel so represented, designated and referred to herein were not composed of silk, the product of the cocoon of the silk worm, but were composed of materials other than silk.

PAR. 4. The word "silk" for many years last past has had, and still has, in the mind of the consuming public, a definite and specific meaning, to wit: The product of the cocoon of the silkworm. Silk products for many years have held and still hold great public esteem and confidence for their preeminent qualities. Silk fibre has long been woven into a variety of fabrics. A variety of distinctive terms have been applied to the fabrics resulting from different types of weaving of silk fibre. Women's wearing apparel designated, described or referred to as "crepe," when used alone, without a modifying word, descriptive of the fibre from which they are made, have been for a long time, and at the present time still are, associated in the public mind with a fabric made from the cocoon of the silkworm, commonly known and understood by the public as "silk."

PAR. 5. The use by the respondent of the representations set forth herein have had and now have the capacity and tendency to mislead a portion of the purchasing public into the erroneous belief that such articles were made of silk and to cause them to purchase such articles on account of such erroneous beliefs. The representations made by respondent as aforesaid are deceptive and misleading and have the capacity and tendency unfairly to divert trade to respondent from competitors. Thereby, substantial injury is being done and has been done by the respondent to competition in commerce as herein set out.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of respondent, Bloomingdale Brothers, Inc., are to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

It is ordered, That the respondent, Bloomingdale Brothers, Inc., its officers, representatives, agents, and employees, in connection with the offering for sale, sale and distribution of its merchandise, women's wearing apparel and dress goods, in interstate commerce or in the District of Columbia, do forthwith cease and desist from

Using the word "crepe" or any other word of similar import and effect to describe, advertise, brand or label any product which is not composed wholly of silk, the product of the cocoon of the silkworm, unless there is used in immediate connection and in conjunction with said word "crepe," in letters of equal size and conspicuousness, a word or words accurately describing the material or materials from which said products are actually made.

It is further ordered, That the respondent shall within 30 days after the service upon it of this order file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which it has complied with this order.

IN THE MATTER OF HEALTH GUARD, INC.

COMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION
OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 23, 1914

Docket 2877. Complaint, July 15, 1936—Decision, Nov. 24, 1937

Where a corporation engaged, among other things, in manufacture, sale and distribution of its so-called "Health Guard," mechanical device for attachment to gas heaters and stoves to remove or reduce amount of carbon monoxide gas expelled therefrom and in marketing, chiefly, through department stores, jobbers and mail order houses throughout the United States, its product in substantial competition with others engaged in manufacture, sale, and distribution, or in sale and distribution, in commerce among the various States and in the District of Columbia, of stove pipes and of other devices and attachments for similar use on gas-burning appliances, air-conditioning vents and gas heaters; in advertising its said device through newspapers, folders, circulars, labels attached thereto, and in various other ways—

Represented that use thereof on gas appliances would change carbon monoxide gas passing through such device to a harmless substance, and that it was effective and sure in operation and protected against dangers of carbon monoxide poisoning, and constituted safe substitute for stove pipes, use of which it made unnecessary, facts being said device, thus attached, would not change carbon monoxide contained in products of combustion emitted thereby to a harmless gas, was not simple and sure in operation, would not protect user from dangers of carbon monoxide poisoning, and did not constitute safe substitute for stove pipes;

With capacity and tendency to mislead and deceive substantial portion of trade and public into erroneous beliefs that device in question constituted such a safe substitute and had the qualities or properties and result attributed to it as above set forth, and would protect user from dangers of aforesaid poisoning, and with result that public, as consequence of mistaken and erroneous beliefs induced by such false and misleading representations, purchased substantial volume of its said devices in preference to those of competitors, and trade was unfairly diverted to it from competitors engaged in manufacture, sale, and distribution, or in sale and distribution, of stove pipes and other devices used to remove from rooms carbon monoxide gas emitted from gas-burning appliances, and of devices used to prevent carbon monoxide poisoning, and who in no way misrepresented effectiveness, function, or purpose of their respective products; to the substantial injury of competition in commerce:

Held, That such acts and practices were to the prejudice of the public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition.

COMPLAINT

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that Health Guard, Inc., a corporation, hereinafter referred to as the respondent, has been, and is, using unfair methods of competition in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in said act, and it appearing to the said Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint, stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Health Guard, Inc., is a corporation, organized and existing under the laws of the State of New York, with its office and principal place of business located at 110 E. Utica Street, in the city of Buffalo, State of New York. Respondent is now, and for more than one year last past, has been, engaged in manufacturing, advertising, and selling a safety appliance, designated "Health Guard" and designed to remove carbon monoxide from gases produced by radiant-type stoves. In the course and conduct of its business, respondent causes said appliances, when sold, to be transported from its place of business in the State of New York into and through various States of the United States and the District of Columbia, to the purchasers thereof located in other States of the United States and the District of Columbia. In the course and conduct of its business aforesaid, respondent is now, and for more than one year last past, has been, in substantial competition with other individuals, partnerships, firms, and corporations engaged in the business of manufacturing and selling devices and appliances designed to protect consumers against the danger of poisonous gases in commerce between and among the various States of the United States and the District of Columbia.

PAR. 2. The device manufactured by respondent as aforesaid, consists of a sheet metal container cylindrical in shape, and approximately $6 \times 2\frac{3}{4} \times 7\frac{1}{2}$ inches in size. The interior is loosely packed with lathe turnings or curled strands of nickel. At one side, near the bottom of the container is a hole fitted with a collar which connects with the flue of the heater. The top of the container is covered by a lid perforated to form a screen having holes $\frac{1}{4}$ inch square. The products of combustion from the heater enter the device at the bottom, pass through the filler and out through the holes in the lid. Pure nickel, when raised to a temperature of about 600° Fahrenheit, absorbs or adsorbs carbon monoxide and acts as a catalytic agent in the transformation of this gas into carbon dioxide. This action ceases when the catalytic agent has reached the saturation point. Respondent's said appliance when used on the type of heater or stove for which it is advertised and sold has no appreciable effect upon carbon monoxide generated by gas combustion.

PAR. 3. In the course and conduct of its business, respondent has made, and is making, false and misleading statements and representations in advertisements, circulars, pamphlets, labels, letters, window displays, and otherwise, as follows:

The Health Guard is simple and sure in operation. It contains a catalyst that oxidizes the deadly, poisonous carbon monoxide, changing it to a harmless gas.

The only safe device for eliminating unsightly pipes on stoves and radiant heaters.

For Health and Economy use a Health Guard.

The Health Guard (patented) contains a catalyst that will oxidize (change) deadly, poisonous carbon monoxide that passes through it to a harmless gas.

The first and only completely safe substitute for stove pipes.

Positively converts stove fumes into harmless gas.

No Carbon Monoxide fumes. Own a "Health Guard." A protector from the dangers of carbon monoxide! Attach a Health Guard to your radiant heater for safety's sake. It traps dirt and saves gas.

No longer is it necessary to put up with an unsightly stove pipe on your gas range—or to endanger your health or even your life with carbon monoxide thrown off by a pipeless radiant heater due to incomplete combustion.

Now, for the first time you can replace an unsightly pipe with a device that oxidizes deadly carbon monoxide to relatively harmless carbon dioxide—thereby preventing carbon monoxide poisoning. Tests made by eminent chemists and testing laboratories prove it.

In truth and in fact said statements and representations were and are false and misleading in that the said device does not oxidize carbon monoxide and does not change carbon monoxide to a harmless gas; it is not the only device for eliminating unsightly pipes on stoves and radiant heaters; the catalyst contained in said "Health Guard" will not oxidize or change carbon monoxide into a harmless gas; it is not the only substitute for stove pipes; said appliance will not protect the user from the dangers of carbon monoxide, and will not prevent carbon monoxide poisoning.

PAR. 4. There are among the competitors of respondent engaged in the manufacture and sale of safety devices and appliances as mentioned in paragraph 1 hereof corporations, firms, partnerships, and individuals who manufacture and sell safety devices and appliances and who truthfully represent their products in their advertising and upon their stationery, pamphlets, circulars, and otherwise.

PAR. 5. The representations by respondent as set forth in paragraph 3 hereof have a capacity and tendency to, and do mislead and deceive the purchasing public into the belief that they are true and that the use of said appliance will accomplish the results set out in the advertisements, circulars, pamphlets and labels aforesaid; and they further have the capacity and tendency to, and do, cause purchasers of said appliance to remove flues or other means of removing carbon monoxide-containing products from the room, thereby endangering their health and lives because of the false sense of security induced by said statements and representations. Said representations further have the capacity and tendency to, and do, induce the purchasing public, acting in such belief, to purchase said appliance or device, thereby diverting trade to respondent from his competitors who do not misrepresent their products in any manner, and thereby respondent does substantial injury to substantial competition in interstate commerce.

PAR. 6. The acts and things above alleged to have been done and the false representations alleged to have been made by respondent are to the prejudice of the public and the competitors of respondent and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914.

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

counsel aforesaid; and the Commission having duly considered the same, and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public, and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAPH 1. The respondent, Health Guard, Inc., is a corporation organized in 1934 and doing business under the laws of the State of New York. Its principal office and factory are at 110 East Utica Street, Buffalo, N. Y. The respondent is now, and since 1934 has been, engaged continuously in the manufacture, sale, and distribution, among other products, of a mechanical device sold and marketed under the name "Health Guard." Said device is an appliance designed to be attached to gas heaters and stoves for the purpose of removing or reducing the amount of carbon monoxide gas expelled from said stoves and heaters when in operation.

When orders are received for said devices, respondent causes them to be shipped from its factory at Buffalo, N. Y., to the purchasers thereof located at various points in States of the United States other than the State of New York. Said products are marketed chiefly through department stores, jobbers, and mail-order houses throughout the United States. At all times mentioned herein the respondent has maintained a constant current of trade in said devices in commerce among and between the various States of the United States.

At all times since respondent entered into said business, it has been in substantial competition with other corporations and with partnerships and individuals engaged in the manufacture, sale and distribution or in the sale and distribution of stove pipes and of other devices and attachments for similar use on gas-burning appliances, air-conditioning vents, and gas heaters, in commerce among and between the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

PAR. 2. Said "Health Guard" device consists of a sheet metal container approximately $6 \times 2\frac{3}{4} \times 7\frac{1}{2}$ inches in size. The interior is loosely packed with metal turnings. A three-inch diameter hole, fitted with a collar which connects with the flue of the gas appliance or heater, is located at one side near the bottom of the container. The top of the container is covered by a lid perforated to form a screen having holes one-quarter inch in diameter. The products of combustion from the heater enter the device at the bottom, pass through the filler and out through the holes in the lid.

For the purpose of inducing the purchase of said "Health Guard," the respondent advertised said device through newspapers, folders, circulars, labels attached to the device, and in various other ways as follows:

The Health Guard is simple and sure in operation. It contains a catalyst that oxidizes the deadly, poisonous carbon monoxide, changing it to a harmless gas.

The only safe device for eliminating unsightly pipes on stoves and radiant heaters.

For health and economy use a Health Guard.

The Health Guard (patented) contains a catalyst that will oxidize (change) deadly, poisonous carbon monoxide that passes through it to a harmless gas. The first and only completely safe substitute for stove pipes.

Positively converts stove fumes into harmless gas.

No Carbon Monoxide fumes. Own a "Health Guard." A protector from the dangers of carbon monoxide! Attach a Health Guard to your radiant heater for safety's sake. It traps dirt and saves gas.

No longer is it necessary to put up with an unsightly stove pipe on your gas range—or to endanger your health or even your life with carbon monoxide thrown off by a pipeless radiant heater due to incomplete combustion.

Now for the first time you can replace an unsightly pipe with a device that oxidizes deadly carbon monoxide to relatively harmless carbon dioxide—thereby preventing carbon monoxide poisoning. Tests made by eminent chemists and testing laboratories prove it.

Such statements as those hereinabove set out serve as representations on the part of respondent to members of the purchasing public that the "Health Guard" device, when used on gas-burning appliances which emit carbon monoxide as a component part of the products of combustion, will change the carbon monoxide to a harmless gas; that it is a safe substitute for stove pipes; that the use of stove pipes is not necessary when said device is used; that said device will protect the user thereof from the dangers of carbon monoxide poisoning, and that said device is effective or sure in operation.

PAR. 3. Observing certain of respondent's advertising in the Pittsburgh Press, a representative of the Pittsburgh Experiment Station of the United States Bureau of Mines obtained two of said devices in the open market and in collaboration with other members of the staff, tested said devices for the purpose of determining whether or not they would reduce below the danger point the carbon monoxide contained in the products of combustion emitted by gas-burning appliances.

The first test of the device was conducted in a practically air-tight room of approximately 1,000 cubic foot volume, that is available at the Pittsburgh Experiment Station of the Bureau of Mines for tests with gases. A radiant-type heater was placed in this room and fitted with the Health Guard. The primary air supply to the burners was reduced by closing the air adjustment so that there would be a definite production of carbon monoxide by the heater. The heater was then operated for 1½ hours in this closed room, using Pittsburgh natural gas as the fuel. The atmosphere of the room was thoroughly stirred by a fan during the test to insure uniform gas composition throughout the room. Samples of the room atmosphere were collected at 15-minute intervals. A carbon monoxide indicator drew a sample from the room continuously so that the concentration of carbon monoxide in the room might be observed at any time during the test. The reading of this instrument was recorded at 15-minute intervals. At the conclusion of the 1½ hour test with the Health Guard attached to the heater, the room was opened and thoroughly ventilated. A similar test was then conducted with the Health Guard removed from the heater. The results of these tests are given in Table 1.

It is shown in Table 1 that no significant or substantial decrease in the concentration of carbon monoxide in the closed room was effected at any time during the test by the attachment of the Health Guard to the heater.

A second test was then conducted wherein the products of combustion were sampled directly from the outlet of the Health Guard, rather than from the accumulated products, as in the closed room test. The heater was operated in a well ventilated room with the Health Guard attached. To insure obtaining a representative and homogeneous mixture of the products of combustion from which to collect the samples, a metal hood was fitted over the outlet of the Health Guard. The products of combustion issuing from the Health

Guard entered this hood and were withdrawn from it by means of a pump. The pump was carefully regulated throughout the test so that atmospheric pressure was maintained within the hood at all times. Thus, no excessive draft nor back-pressure was exerted on the effluent opening of the Health Guard. A large bottle which acted as a mixing chamber was inserted in the pipe line which led from the hood to the pump. Gas samples were collected at the outlet of this bottle after the products of combustion had been mixed by passage through the bottle. A carbon monoxide recorder operating on the principle of the apparatus designed for control of ventilation in vehicular tunnels also drew a sample from this point. When production of carbon monoxide had reached a steady state, as indicated by the carbon monoxide recorder, a sample of the products issuing from the Health Guard was collected. At the conclusion of this test, the metal filler was removed from the interior of the Health Guard and a similar test conducted. In this test a damper was inserted in the hood above the Health Guard and regulated so that the products of combustion contained approximately the same concentration of carbon dioxide as in the test with the filler in place. By this means an approximately equal rate of flow of the products of combustion through the device was maintained in both tests. To eliminate the possibility of obtaining erroneous or misleading results which might be caused by variations in the performance of the heater, two additional, and similar tests were conducted. Thus, four tests were conducted alternately with and without the filler in place, and two pairs of samples of the products issuing from the device, and representing both conditions, were collected.

As two of the Health Guard units were available for test, a similar series of tests was conducted with a second unit. The units were of the same type, and were labelled "A" and "B" for the purpose of identification. The results of these tests are given in Table 2.

TABLE 2.—Analysis of products of combustion issuing from two Health Guard units attached to a radiant type space heater, with, and without, the filler in place

Condition of test	Tests with Health Guard "A"				Tests with Health Guard "B"
	With filler	Without filler	With filler	Without filler	With filler	Without filler	With filler	Without filler
Gas rate to stove, cu. ft. per minute	0.26	0.26	0.26	0.26	0.26	0.26	0.26	0.26
Carbon dioxide percent by volume	1.31	1.14	1.22	1.19	1.24	1.13	1.14	1.16
Oxygen, per cent by volume	18.45	18.70	18.62	18.66	18.68	18.73	18.80	18.69
Carbon monoxide by pyro-tannic method, percent by volume	.18	.18	.17	.17	.17	.18	.17	.17

It is shown in Table 2 that no significant or substantial decrease in the carbon monoxide content of the products of combustion was effected by the presence of the filler in the Health Guard.

The Health Guard device was also tested by other chemists for the purpose of determining its effectiveness in reducing the carbon monoxide gas contained in the products of combustion produced by gas-burning appliances. It is found that the results of said tests cannot be relied upon because proper and necessary equipment essential for obtaining accurate results in tests of such a character were not employed in said tests and said tests were not conducted in such a manner as to obtain reliable results.

PAR. 4. From the testimony and other evidence, it is found that the Health Guard device when attached to gas-burning appliances will not change the carbon monoxide contained in the products of combustion emitted by said device to a harmless gas; that it is not a safe substitute for stove pipes; that it is not simple and sure in operation, and will not protect the user from the dangers of carbon monoxide poisoning.

PAR. 5. The use by respondent of the representations described herein in its advertising literature has had, and now has, the capacity and tendency to mislead and deceive a substantial portion of the trade and public into the erroneous beliefs that the device known as "Health Guard" is a safe substitute for stove pipes; that it will change carbon monoxide gas contained in the products of combustion passing through said device to a harmless gas; that said device is simple and sure in operation; and that it will protect the user from the dangers of carbon monoxide poisoning.

As a consequence of the mistaken and erroneous beliefs induced by the false and misleading representations above referred to, the public has purchased a substantial volume of the respondent's devices in preference to the products of its competitors with the result that trade has been unfairly diverted to the respondent from its competitors engaged in the manufacture, sale and distribution, or in the sale and distribution of stove pipes and other devices used to remove from rooms carbon monoxide fumes emitted from gas-burning appliances, and devices used to prevent carbon monoxide poisoning, who in no way misrepresent the effectiveness, function or purpose of their respective products. As a result thereof, substantial injury has been done, and is now being done by respondent to competition in commerce among and between the various States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

Order

25 F. T. C.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondent, Health Guard, Inc., a corporation, are to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce, within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

This proceeding having been heard by the Federal Trade Commission upon the complaint of the Commission, the answer of respondent, testimony and other evidence taken before John L. Hornor, an examiner of the Commission theretofore duly designated by it, in support of the allegations of said complaint and in opposition thereto, briefs filed herein, and oral arguments by DeWitt T. Puckett, counsel for the Commission, and by Alfred M. Saperston, counsel for the respondent, and the Commission having made its findings as to the facts and its conclusion that said respondent has violated the provisions of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

It is ordered, That the respondent, Health Guard, Inc., its officers, representatives, agents, and employees in connection with the offering for sale, sale and distribution of a mechanical device for use on gas stoves now known as "Health Guard" or substantially the same device sold under that name or any other name in interstate commerce or in the District of Columbia, do forthwith cease and desist from:

1. Representing, directly or indirectly, that the use of said device on gas appliances will change carbon monoxide gas passing through said device to a harmless gas;
2. Representing that said device is a safe substitute for stove pipes and that stove pipes are not necessary when said device is used;
3. Representing that said device is effective or sure in its operation, and
4. Representing that use of said device will protect against the dangers of carbon monoxide poisoning.

It is further ordered, That the respondent shall, within 60 days after service upon it of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which it has complied with this order.

Complaint

IN THE MATTER OF

THE ELECTRIC APPLIANCE COMPANY

COMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 26, 1914

Docket 3008. Complaint, Dec. 4, 1936—Decision, Nov. 24, 1937

Where a corporation engaged in manufacture of electrical appliances, such as electric belts and insoles, and in sale thereof to purchasers in the various States and Canada, in competition with those engaged in sale of similar products for same and similar purposes, and who truthfully represent the same—

Represented in advertising matter circulated and distributed as aforesaid that its belts and insoles had therapeutic value in the treatment of nervous diseases, rheumatism, heart trouble, dyspepsia, and other diseases and ailments, including liver, kidneys, grippe, and similar trouble, and pains in chest and back and headaches, and that electric stimulation therefrom quickened liver and kidneys, and claimed thousands of testimonials from people who had been cured of rheumatism, cramps, foot, gout and other troubles, through use of said products, facts being said belts and insoles did not generate enough electricity to have any discernible effect on any part of the body they might contact, were not an adjunct to the cure of disease, and did not possess the curing qualities claimed in its advertising;

With capacity and tendency to deceive and mislead substantial portion of purchasing public into erroneous belief that such representations were true, and with result that consuming public, as a direct consequence of such mistaken and erroneous beliefs, thus engendered, was persuaded to purchase substantial volume of its products, trade was diverted unfairly to it from competitors engaged in sale of products of same kind and nature as above set out, and who truthfully advertise and represent the character and quality thereof, and means of deceiving such public was also placed in hands of agents, furnished by it, for distribution and circulation, with such advertising; to the substantial injury of consuming public and of competition in commerce:

Held, That such acts and practices were to the prejudice of the public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition.

COMPLAINT

Complaint

25 F. T. C.

the Federal Trade Commission, having reason to believe that The Electric Appliance Company, a corporation, hereinafter referred to as respondent, has been and is using unfair methods of competition in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in said act of Congress, and it appearing to said Commission that a proceeding by it in respect thereof would be in the public interest, hereby issues its complaint stating its charges in that respect as follows:

PARAGRAPH 1. Respondent, The Electric Appliance Company of Burlington, Kansas, is a corporation existing and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Kansas, with its principal place of business in the city of Burlington in said State. It is now, and for several years last past has been engaged in the manufacture and sale of electrical appliances such as electric belts and electric insoles. The respondent causes its products, when sold, to be shipped from its place of business in the State of Kansas to purchasers thereof located in a State or States other than Kansas. In the course and conduct of its business, the respondent was at all times herein referred to in competition with corporations, partnerships, firms, and other individuals engaged in the sale of other electrical devices, such as infra-red ray lamps, sun-ray lamps, massage machines, vibrator belt apparatus, and heating pads manufactured and designed for the treatment of diseases and ailments such as the respondent designates its products to be a remedy and treatment for. The respondent is also in competition with other corporations, partnerships, firms, and individuals engaged in the manufacture and sale of other products and treatments intended for the same purposes as those for which the respondent represents its products to be a specific.

In the course and conduct of its business the respondent causes statements and representations with reference to its products to appear in advertisements carried in periodicals and newspapers having interstate circulation, and in pamphlets and circulars distributed in the various States of the United States to the following effect, gist, or meaning:

These belts are an important adjunct in the treatment of nervous diseases, rheumatism, heart trouble, dyspepsia, diseases of the liver, pains in the chest, headaches, kidney trouble, poor circulation, LaGrippe, female trouble, pains in the back. Electric stimulation quickens the liver and kidneys, the two prime organs of purification, to life and activity. Why demoralize the system with poisonous drugs when the Addison Electric Belt affords you benefits to be derived no other way? Full directions, easy to follow, go with each belt. Even those who consider themselves in good health find these beneficial in preventing disease. The power is strong * * * You can easily test it by putting the negative electrode between your eyes and touching your tongue to the other electrode. The treatment is pleasant.

We recommend Prof. Wingren's Voltaic Electric Insoles to those having cold, tired or sweaty feet or who have rheumatism and kindred ailments.

It is always important to keep the feet warm and the circulation normal in sickness from any cause. These insoles tend to keep the feet comfortable both winter and summer. Warm the feet and legs and revitalize the blood.

During the years these insoles have been made, thousands of testimonials have been received from people who have used them and who tell how they were relieved of rheumatism, cramps, cold and sweaty feet, or gout in all its forms by wearing Prof. Wingren's Voltaic Electric Insoles. If your feet hurt you, even though you do not suffer from any of the complaints above enumerated, you may find comfort and ease by wearing these insoles.

Prof. Wingren's Voltaic Electric Insoles for Rheumatism, Cramps, and Sweaty Feet.

Salesmen make from $50 to $100 a week selling respondent's products.

The statements, hereinabove detailed, together with other statements of similar import and effect, purport to be descriptive of respondent's products and their effectiveness in use and serve as representations on the part of the respondent that said electric belt is effective in the treatment of nervous diseases, rheumatism, heart trouble, dyspepsia, diseases of the liver, headaches, kidney trouble, LaGrippe, poor circulation, pains in the back, pains in the chest, female trouble; and that said electric insoles are effective in the treatment of rheumatism and kindred ailments, such as cramps, cold and sweaty feet and gout. Respondent's advertising also represents that salesmen for its products make from $50 to $100 a week selling respondent's products.

PAR. 2. In truth and in fact, the products so described and referred to are not such devices that the use thereof will produce the results claimed so as to justify the aforesaid statements and representations. The respondent's electric belt has no value in the treatment of the various diseases, conditions and ailments of the human body as claimed, such as nervous diseases, rheumatism, heart trouble, dyspepsia, diseases of the liver, headaches, kidney trouble, LaGrippe, poor circulation, pains in the back, pains in the chest and female trouble. The respondent's electric insoles have no value in the treatment of the various diseases, conditions and ailments of the human body as claimed, such as rheumatism, cramps, cold and sweaty feet and gout. No physiological function or pathological condition of the body will be changed in the slightest degree through the use of either or both of said products. Salesmen of respondent's products do not customarily and generally earn from $50 to $100 a week selling said products.

Findings

25 F. T. C.

PAR. 3. There are and were at all times hereinabove mentioned, persons, partnerships and corporations engaged in the manufacture and sale of devices and remedies for the treatment and relief of diseases and ailments hereinabove mentioned who truthfully represent the therapeutic effect of the said devices and remedies; and with such other persons, firms, and corporations, respondent has been and is in active substantial competition.

PAR. 4. The foregoing false and misleading representations of the respondent, as set out in paragraph 1 hereof, all have a capacity and tendency to mislead and deceive, and have misled and deceived, and do mislead and deceive purchasers and prospective purchasers into the belief that such representations are true and that respondent's products are beneficial in the treatment of the diseases, ailments, afflictions, and conditions referred to herein, and cause a substantial portion of such purchasers, because of such erroneous belief, to purchase respondent's products, thereby unfairly diverting trade to the respondent from its competitors who truthfully represent their products and the effectiveness of said products in use. As a result thereof, substantial injury has been, and is now being done by respondent to competition in commerce, as hereinabove set out.

PAR. 5. The aforementioned methods, acts, and practices of respondent are all to the prejudice of the public and respondent's competitors as hereinabove alleged. Said methods, acts, and practices constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," approved September 26, 1914.

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

After the issuance of said complaint and the filing of respondent's answer thereto, testimony and other evidence in support of the allegations of said complaint were introduced by Thomas H. Kennedy, attorney for the Commission, before W. W. Sheppard, examiner for the Commission, theretofore duly designated by it, and in opposition to the allegations of the complaint, by F. R. Hannen, attorney for the respondent, and said testimony and other evidence were duly recorded and filed in the office of the Commission.

Thereafter, the proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on the said complaint, the answer thereto, the testimony and other evidence, and the brief of the counsel for the Commission, in support of the complaint, counsel for the respondent having waived the filing of brief and oral argument; and the Commission, having duly considered the same, and being fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public and makes its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS

PARAGRAP^H 1. The Electric Appliance Company is a corporation existing and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Kansas, with its principal place of business in the city of Burlington, Kans. S. P. Crahan is the president of respondent company, and has been its active manager for many years. Respondent has, for a number of years prior to this complaint, been engaged in the manufacture and sale of electrical appliances, such as electric belts and electric insoles, known as Galvanic Electric Belts, Addison Electric Belts, Morse IXL Electric Belts, and Prof. Wingren's Voltaic Electric Insoles, respectively. When sales of respondent's products are made, respondent causes the same to be transported from its place of business in the city of Burlington, in the State of Kansas, to the purchasers thereof located in the various States of the United States of America, and Canada.

There are other corporations, partnerships, firms, and individuals engaged in the sale of similar products, to be used for the same and similar purposes, who truthfully represent their products and who cause the same, when sold, to be transported from their respective places of business to purchasers thereof located in various other States of the United States, and with such corporations, partnerships, firms, and individuals the respondent is in competition.

PAR. 2. In connection with the promotion of sale, and sale of its products as aforesaid, the respondent causes representations and statements to be made in advertising matter, which is circulated and distributed in the various States of the United States and Canada, claiming that its belts and insoles have therapeutic value in the treatment of nervous diseases, rheumatism, heart trouble, dyspepsia, diseases of the liver, pains in the chest, headaches, kidney trouble, poor circulation, LaGrippe, female trouble, pains in the back, and that the electric stimulation from the belts and insoles quickens the liver and kidneys; also claiming thousands of testimonials from people who have been cured of rheumatism, cramps, cold and sweaty feet and gout in all its forms by use of its belts and insoles.

Neither the electric belts nor the electric insoles possess the curing qualities claimed in the respondent's advertising, and neither the electric belts nor the electric insoles generate enough electricity to have any discernible effect on any part of the human body they might contact, and are not an adjunct to the cure of disease.

PAR. 3. The representations and statements made by the respondent to the effect and meaning of those set forth in paragraph 2 supra are calculated to and have the tendency to deceive and mislead substantial portions of the purchasing public into the erroneous belief that such representations are true. As a direct consequence of such mistaken and erroneous beliefs so induced, the consuming public is persuaded to purchase a substantial volume of respondent's products, with the attendant result that trade is unfairly diverted to respondent from competitors engaged in selling products of the same kind and nature in commerce as hereinbefore set out, who truthfully advertise and represent the character and quality of their products. A means of deceiving the consuming public is also placed in the hands of agents of the respondent when it furnishes said agents with the advertising matter above described, to be distributed and circulated by them. Substantial injury is thereby done by respondent to the consuming public and to competition in commerce as hereinabove set forth.

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of the respondent, The Electric Appliance Company, a corporation, are to the prejudice of the public and of respondent's competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

1471

the respondent and its attorney having waived the filing of a brief and oral argument for the respondent; and the Commission having made its findings of the facts and its conclusion that the respondent has violated the provisions of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

It is ordered, That the respondent, The Electric Appliance Company, a corporation, its officers, representatives, agents, and employees, in connection with the offering for sale, sale and distribution of its Electric Belts and Voltaic Electric Insoles, in interstate commerce, or in the District of Columbia, do forthwith cease and desist from representing:

That said Electric Belts and Electric Insoles have any therapeutic value in the treatment of any disease or ailment.

It is further ordered, That the respondent shall, within 60 days after the service upon it of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which it has complied with this order.

IN THE MATTER OF METAL WINDOW INSTITUTE, ET AL.

COMPLAINT, FINDINGS, AND ORDER IN REGARD TO THE ALLEGED VIOLATION
OF SEC. 5 OF AN ACT OF CONGRESS APPROVED SEPT. 26, 1914

Docket 2978. Complaint, Nov. 11, 1936—Decision, Nov. 30, 1937

Where some eighteen corporations, comprising substantially all of the manufacturers and distributors of steel window products in the United States, engaged in sale of their said products to wholesalers, dealers and consumers located at various points throughout the United States, for use, principally, in construction of industrial, commercial, and municipal buildings, and sold generally through the submission of bids on a given project to the builders thereof by the sellers of such products, and with a substantial portion of their sales during the last several years to the United States and the several States and to municipalities or political subdivisions or agencies thereof, for use in construction of public buildings, and prior to and but for below-described practices in active substantial competition with one another, in making and seeking to make sales of their products in the several States and in the District of Columbia; acting through the trade association of which they were members, the executive secretary or "commissioner" of said association and the president thereof and four other members of its executive committee, in control of its practices, policies and activities, and of the association activities of aforesaid corporate manufacturer members, and in pursuance of understandings and agreements entered into by them, the result of which was to restrict, restrain, monopolize, and eliminate competition in sale of metal window products in trade and commerce among the several States and in the District of Columbia—

- (a) Agreed to use and did use gross or basic price book theretofore compiled by certain of said corporate manufacturers, and affording means of determining price or price formula for substantially all of the products of the industry in question through application of discounts shown therein or of formula therein given, and agreed to file and did file with aforesaid association schedule of each corporate manufacturer's discounts from prices established therein and at which it would sell and did sell its products, and not to deviate from prices thus established without first notifying, at specified period in advance of effective date of change, such other manufacturers, and that their said association could convey to all other members information contained in schedule of discounts thus filed;
- (b) Agreed to maintain and adhere to schedule of uniform discounts to be applied to prices determined from use of said gross or discount price book, and thereby established fixed, uniform minimum prices of products of said industry and agreed to and did fix uniform terms and conditions that were a part of all sales made, including, among others, mandatory erection, time for delivery and allowance for freight;
- (c) Agreed not to, and did not, sell products of industry for less than uniform minimum prices established through use of said uniform discounts without giving one another prior notice of such a sale, and to submit, and did submit, all estimates of bids on project in given geographic area to one of clearing bureaus theretofore established by them through said association and its predecessor, and designated by such association as bureau to clear bids or prices for trade area in question, in order to secure identical gross or, in some instances, net price estimates, and agreed to, and did, use such estimates in submitting bids on projects; and

Where said association—

- (d) Conveyed to all other members information contained in schedule of discounts filed with it by the respective members; and
- (e) Advised and required its members to adhere to prices established by said agreements and was agency for and actively policed industry in question, and by threats, penalties and persuasion induced many corporate price-cutter members to adhere to prices established as aforesaid; and

Where said corporate manufacturers, their association and above specified individuals—

- (f) Agreed to declare bidding on certain projects to be "open" in order to prevent competitors not parties to aforesaid understandings and agreements from being successful bidders on projects where such "non-cooperating" bidders were bidding and to force such competitors to become members of their association and a party to said understandings and agreements; and

Where said corporate manufacturers, following such above-described action—

- (g) Concertedly underbid and undersold such "non-cooperating" bidders with result that latter, by reason of such underselling and because of threats and exhortation, became members of said association and parties to such understandings and agreements; and

Where such corporate manufacturers, their association and aforesaid individuals—

- (h) Secured withdrawal and cancellation of bids submitted on projects where such bids offered said products at less than prices established by them, with result that said agreements and understandings and acts and things done thereunder and pursuant thereto and in furtherance thereof, and in concert with one another, had effect of unduly and unlawfully restraining trade and commerce in metal window products among the several States and in the District of Columbia, of substantially enhancing prices to purchasing public and maintaining same at artificial levels, and otherwise depriving public of benefit that would flow from normal competition among and between said corporate manufacturers in the sale and distribution of metal window products and of eliminating competition in the sale thereof, and with tendency and capacity to create monopoly in the sale thereof in said commerce, in themselves:

Held, That such acts and practices of said corporate manufacturers, aforesaid individuals and association in entering into and carrying out such agreements, understandings, combinations, and conspiracies, and in doing acts and things done thereunder pursuant thereto, and in furtherance thereof, were to the prejudice of the public and competitors and constituted unfair methods of competition in commerce.

Bayley of the William Bayley Company, Springfield, Ohio; Frank Garratt of Hope's Windows, Inc., 84 Hopkins Avenue, Jamestown, N. Y., and C. J. McIntosh of the Federal Steel Sash Company, Inc., Waukesha, Wis., are members of the executive committee of the Metal Window Institute.

Each of the above named individuals, with the exception of Ralph H. Sartor, is an officer of, or employed by, the corporate respondent indicated and is an officer of the respondent association in the capacity indicated, and all of said individuals control and direct the practices, policies, and activities of said respondent association under the supervision of Ralph H. Sartor, who is an employee of said respondent association. These individuals will hereinafter be referred to as the individual respondents.

1478

PAR. 4. All of said corporate respondents are, and at all of the times hereinafter mentioned have been, engaged in the manufacture and sale of metal window products, including all or a part of the products hereinbefore described, to wholesalers of, dealers in, and consumers of, said products, located throughout the United States, and pursuant to such sales, and as a part thereof, regularly have shipped and do ship such products to their said consumers at their respective places of business located at various points in the several States of the United States other than in the States of the origin of such shipments. Prior to the adoption of the practices hereinafter alleged, these corporate respondents were in active and substantial competition with each other, and with other members of the industry, some of whom have been members of the association respondent and others of whom have not been members of the association respondent, in making and seeking to make sales of their said products in such commerce, and, but for the facts hereinafter alleged, such active and substantial competition would have continued to the present time, and the said corporate respondents would now be in active and substantial competition with each other and with members of the industry not presently members of the corporate association.

The said corporate respondents now constitute, and have during all of the times mentioned herein constituted, substantially all of the manufacturers of said metal window products in the United States. The products of the industry are used principally in the construction of industrial, commercial, and monumental buildings and are sold principally to the builder through the submission of bids on a given project. For the past several years a substantial portion of the sales made have been to the United States Government, or some agency thereof, to the several States of the United States, or some agency thereof, and to municipalities located in the United States or some agency thereof.

PAR. 5. Prior to January 1934, certain of the corporate respondents organized a voluntary trade association, under the name Solid Section Steel Window Industry, for the promotion of the interests of the members of said association. On or about January 10, 1934, the name of said association was changed to, and it was succeeded by, the Metal Window Institute, the respondent association.

Complaint

25 F. T. C.

Acting by and through the respondent association and its predecessor, the corporate respondents have compiled a comprehensive and detailed gross or basic price book, which gives the price, or the formula by which such price may be determined, for each and every product of the industry. This price book is revised or supplemented from time to time to meet changing conditions in the trade or to include new products, and is distributed generally throughout the industry for use in determining the gross or basic sale price of said products. The prices stated in said price book, or the prices arrived at by the application of the formulas stated, are uniform as to any given product in each price book so used for the determination of the gross or basic sale prices. The actual sale prices of products are determined by the application of discounts to the gross or basic prices determined by the use of said price book.

Acting by and through the respondent association and its predecessor, the corporate respondents have established and do maintain so-called checking bureaus at convenient and strategic points throughout the United States. These checking bureaus are established ostensibly for the purpose of assisting the members of the respondent association in checking estimates made for the products of the industry from plans and specifications under which bids are to be received and in checking the application of the industry price book prices to such estimates.

PAR. 6. Said corporate respondents, through said respondent association and said individual respondents, for the several years last past, and more particularly since the month of May 1935, have, from time to time, entered into and thereafter carried out understandings, agreements, combinations, and conspiracies for the purpose of restricting, restraining, and monopolizing, and eliminating competition in, the sale of metal window products in trade and commerce between and among the several States of the United States and in the District of Columbia. From time to time members of the industry, other than those herein named as respondents, became parties to, and carried out, said understandings, agreements, combinations, and conspiracies.

PAR. 7. Pursuant to said understandings, agreements, combinations, and conspiracies, and in furtherance thereof, the said respondents have done and performed, and still do and perform, the following acts and things:

1. Said corporate respondents agreed to and did use said gross or basic price book in pricing the products of the industry.
2. Each of said corporate respondents (a) agreed to and did file with the respondent association a schedule of the discounts from the prices established by the gross or basic price book at which it would and did sell its products; (b) agreed that it would not change, or deviate from, the prices established by such discounts without first notifying the other corporate respondents of such a change at a specified period of time prior to the effective date of the change in prices; and (c) agreed that the respondent association could and it did convey to all other members the information contained in said schedule of discounts so filed.

1478

3. Said corporate respondents agreed to, and they did, establish, maintain, and adhere to a schedule of uniform discounts to be applied to the prices determined from the use of said gross or basic price book, the effect of which is to establish fixed uniform minimum prices for the products of the industry.

4. Said corporate respondents agreed to and did fix uniform terms and conditions that were a part of all sales made, including, but without limitation, mandatory erection, time for delivery, and allowance for freight.

5. Said corporate respondents agreed that they would not and they did not sell the products of the industry for less than the fixed uniform minimum prices established through the use of said uniform discounts without giving prior notice to each other of the fact that a sale was to be made at less than the minimum price agreed upon.

6. Said corporate respondents (a) agreed to and did submit all estimates of bids to be submitted on a project in a given geographical area to one of said clearing bureaus, theretofore designated by the respondent association as the bureau to clear bids or prices for that particular area, for the purpose of securing identical gross, or, in many instances, net price estimates, which they (b) agreed to and did use in submitting bids on said project.

7. Said respondent association advises and requires its members to adhere to the prices fixed by said agreements and is the agency for, and has been and is actively policing the industry; and by threats of penalties to those who sell below said fixed prices and by persuasion, it induces many of the corporate respondents to adhere to the prices fixed by the aforesaid agreements, when, but for said threats and persuasion, they would not adhere to the prices fixed by said agreements.

8. Said respondents, to prevent competitors who were not parties to the aforesaid understandings, agreements, combinations, and conspiracies, from being the successful bidders on projects where such "non-cooperating" competitors were bidding, and thereby to force such non-cooperative competitors to become members of said respondent association and a party to said understandings, agreements, combinations, and conspiracies, agreed to and did declare the bidding on certain projects to be "open," whereupon the corporate respondents agreed to and did concertedly underbid and undersell such "non-cooperating" competitors; and by such means, and through threats and exhortations, many "non-cooperating" competitors of said corporate respondents did become members of said respondent association and parties to said understandings, agreements, combinations, and conspiracies.

9. Said respondents secured the withdrawal and cancellation of bids submitted on projects where such bids offered said products at less than the prices fixed by the respondents as aforesaid.

10. Said respondents used other methods and means designed to suppress and prevent competition and restrict and restrain the sale of said products in said commerce.

11. Said respondents agreed to and did establish said checking bureaus and compile and circulate said price book as aforesaid.

PAR. 8. Each of said respondents acted in concert and cooperation with one or more of the other respondents in doing and performing the acts and things hereinabove alleged in furtherance of said understandings, agreements, combinations, and conspiracies.

PAR. 9. Said understandings, agreements, combinations, and conspiracies, and the things done thereunder and pursuant thereto, as hereinabove alleged, have had and do have the effect of unduly and unlawfully restricting and restraining trade and commerce in said products between and among the several States of the United States and in the District of Columbia; of substantially enhancing prices to the consuming public and maintaining prices at artificial levels and otherwise depriving the public of the benefits that would flow from normal competition among and between said corporate respondents; of eliminating competition, with the tendency and capacity of creating a monopoly in the sale of said products in said commerce. Said understandings, agreements, combinations, and conspiracies, and the things done thereunder and pursuant thereto, as above alleged, constitute unfair methods of competition within the intent and meaning of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes," and are to the prejudice of the public.

REPORT, FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS, AND ORDER

served, its complaint in this proceeding upon the respondents, Metal Window Institute, Ralph H. Sartor, Carl R. Raquet, Grover J. Meyer, James Allinson, Guy D. Bayley, Frank Garratt, The William Bayley Company, Bliss Steel Products Corporation, The Bougert and Carlough Company, Campbell Metal Window Corporation, Concrete Engineering Company, Crittall Manufacturing Company, Inc., Detroit Steel Products Company, Druwhit Metal Products Company, Federal Steel Sash Company, Inc., Michael Flynn Manufacturing Company, Hope's Windows, Inc., Kewanee Manufacturing Company, Mesker Brothers Iron Company, Michel & Pfeffer Iron Works, Inc., S. H. Pomeroy Company, Inc., Soule Steel Company, J. S. Thorn Company, Truscon Steel Company, and Vento Steel Sash Company, Inc., charging them with the use of unfair methods of competition in commerce in violation of the provisions of said act. After the issuance of said complaint and the filing of respondents' answers thereto, the Commission, by order entered herein, granted respondents' motion for permission to withdraw said answers and to substitute therefor answers stating that the respondents were without knowledge of the allegations contained in the complaint insofar as said allegations may refer to any violation of any law of the United States, that they desired to avoid the trouble and expense incident to further continuance of this proceeding, and to waive hearings on the charges set forth in the complaint and would not contest the proceedings, and stating further that, for the purpose of disposing of this proceeding, all the material facts alleged in the complaint (except that the respondents Campbell Metal Window Corporation and Vento Steel Products Company, formerly Vento Steel Sash Company, Inc., are presently members of respondent Metal Window Institute, said Campbell Metal Window Corporation having withdrawn its membership therein on April 3, 1936, and said Vento Steel Products Company having withdrawn its membership on June 20, 1936) may be deemed to be admitted within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, but not within the intent and meaning of any other law of the United States, and stating that said answers did not constitute an admission of any conclusion of law or of fact or admission of fact for any other purpose, and are not to be used against them in any other proceeding, suit or action, and stating that without any other intervening procedure the Commission may make and enter its findings as to the facts and issue and serve upon the respondents an order to cease and desist from any method of competition alleged in the complaint which constitutes a violation of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act; which substitute answers were duly filed in the office of the Commission. Thereafter, this proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission on said complaint and substitute answers, no briefs having been filed and no requests having been made for oral argument, and the Commission having duly considered the same and being now fully advised in the premises, finds that this proceeding is in the interest of the public and makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

Respondent Vento Steel Sash Company, Inc. is a corporation organized, existing, and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Michigan and has its office and principal place of business at Sherman Boulevard, in the city of Muskegon Heights, Mich. Respondent Vento Steel Sash Company has, since the issuance of the complaint herein, changed its name to Vento Steel Products Company.

The respondents named in this paragraph will hereafter be referred to as corporate respondents.

PAR. 2. All of the above named corporate respondents are now, and have been since prior to the month of May 1935, engaged in the manufacture, sale and distribution of one or more of the following products, made principally from solid or formed sections of steel, iron, bronze, aluminum or other metal or alloy; pivoted windows, projected windows, continuous windows, basement windows, utility windows, detention windows, industrial doors, double-hung windows, counter-balanced windows, casement windows, metal frames, mechanical operators, stools, and screens. The business of these corporate respondents is commonly referred to, and generally known as, the metal window business. All of said corporate respondents sell their said products to wholesalers, dealers and consumers located at various points throughout the United States, and, when sales are made and as a part thereof, regularly have shipped, and do ship, said products to the purchasers thereof at their respective points of location in the several States of the United States, other than in the States of the origin of such shipments. Said corporate respondents maintain a constant current of trade and commerce in said products between and among the several States of the United States and in the District of Columbia. These corporate respondents are substantially all of the manufacturers and distributors of steel window products in the United States.

Prior to the adoption of certain practices hereinafter described, these corporate respondents were in active and substantial competition with each other in making and seeking to make sales of their products in trade and commerce between and among the several States and in the District of Columbia, and, but for practices hereinafter described, such active and substantial competition would have continued until the present and such corporate respondents would now be in active and substantial competition with each other.

The products manufactured and distributed by the corporate respondents are used principally in the construction of industrial, commercial and monumental buildings and are sold generally through the submission of bids on a given project to the builder thereof by sellers of such products. A substantial portion of the sales made by the corporate respondents during the last several years has been to the United States, the several States and to municipalities or to some political subdivision or agency thereof, for use in the construction of public buildings.

PAR. 3. The respondent Metal Window Institute is a voluntary unincorporated trade association, the membership of which is made up of firms engaged in the sale and distribution of one or more of the metal window-products above described. This respondent will hereinafter be referred to as the respondent association.

All of the corporate respondents were members of the respondent association from prior to the month of May 1935 until April 3, 1936, when the corporate respondent Campbell Metal Window Corporation resigned. The corporate respondent Vento Steel Sash Company, Inc., resigned its membership in the respondent association on June 20, 1936. All of the other corporate respondents were members of the respondent association at the time of the issuance of the complaint herein.

The respondent association was the means by and through which the understandings and agreements hereinafter mentioned were entered into, and through which many of the acts and things done and performed in carrying out said understandings and agreements were effected.

PAR. 4. Respondent Ralph H. Sartor is now, and has been since prior to the month of May 1935, an employee of respondent association, designated and described as "commissioner" and in such capacity is the executive secretary, and controls and directs the execution of plans and policies adopted by said respondent association.

Respondent Carl R. Raquet is an employee of respondent Detroit Steel Products Company, and is president of the respondent association.

Respondent Grover J. Meyer is an employee of respondent Truscon Steel Company and he represents said respondent on, and is a member of, the executive committee of the respondent association.

Respondent James Allinson is an employee of respondent J. S. Thorn Company, and he represents said respondent on and is a member of the executive committee of the respondent association.

Respondent Guy D. Bayley is an employee of respondent The William Bayley Company and he represents said respondent on and is a member of the executive committee of the respondent association.

Respondent Frank Garratt is an employee of respondent Hope's Windows, Inc., and he represents said respondent on and is a member of the executive committee of the respondent association.

These respondents will hereinafter be referred to as individual respondents.

Said individual respondents, as members of said executive committee of the respondent association, have controlled and directed since prior to the month of May 1935, and now control and direct, the practices, policies and activities of the respondent association and the corporate respondents insofar as their association activities are concerned in doing the acts and things hereinafter mentioned.

PAR. 5. Prior to the year 1934 certain of the corporate respondents organized a voluntary unincorporated trade association, under the name Solid Section Steel Window Industry, for the promotion of the interests of the members of said association. This association was, on or about January 10, 1934, succeeded by the respondent association.

Prior to the formation of these associations, certain of the corporate respondents compiled, and acting through these associations the corporate respondents have from time to time revised, a comprehensive and detailed gross or basic price book which gives the price, or the formula by which such price may be determined, for substantially all of the products of the metal window industry. This price book is revised or supplemented from time to time to meet changing conditions in the trade, and to include new products, and is distributed generally throughout the industry and is used in determining the gross or basic prices of said products. The prices stated in said book, or the prices arrived at by the application of the formulas stated, are uniform as to any given product in each price book so used for the determination of gross or basic prices. The actual sale price of a given product is determined by the corporate respondents, and other members of the industry, through the application of discounts to the gross or basic price shown in said price book, or determined by the application of the formula therein given.

Acting through the respondent association and its predecessors, the corporate respondents have established and maintained so-called clearing bureaus, at given points throughout the United States. These clearing bureaus were established primarily for the purpose of assisting the members of the respondent association in checking estimates made for metal window products from plans and specifications under which bids were to be submitted, and, in some instances, to check the application of the gross or basic prices shown by the price book to such estimates.

PAR. 6. The corporate respondents, acting through the said respondent association and said individual respondents, have since the month of May 1935, from time to time, entered into and carried out understandings and agreements, which resulted in restricting, restraining, and monopolizing, and eliminating competition in, the sale of metal window products in trade and commerce between and among the several States of the United States and in the District of Columbia.

Pursuant to said understandings and agreements, and in furtherance thereof, the respondents have done and performed the following acts and things:

1. Said corporate respondents agreed to use, and they have used, said gross or basic price book in pricing the products of the industry.
2. Each of said corporate respondents (a) agreed to file, and they have filed, with the respondent association a schedule of the discounts from the prices established by the gross or basic price book at which it would sell, and has sold, its products; (b) agreed that it would not change, or deviate from, the prices established by such discounts without first notifying the other corporate respondents of such a change at a specified period of time prior to the effective date of the change in prices; and (c) agreed that the respondent association could convey, and it has conveyed, to all other members the information contained in said schedule of discounts so filed.
3. Said corporate respondents agreed to maintain and adhere to, and they have maintained and adhered to a schedule of uniform discounts to be applied to the prices determined from the use of said gross or basic price book, the effect of which has been to establish fixed uniform minimum prices for the products of the industry.
4. Said corporate respondents agreed to fix, and they have fixed uniform terms and conditions that were a part of all sales made, including, among other things, mandatory erection, time for delivery, and allowance for freight.
5. Said corporate respondents agreed that they would not sell, and they have not sold, the products of the industry for less than the uniform minimum prices established through the use of said uniform discounts without giving prior notice to each other of the fact that a sale was to be made at less than the minimum price agreed upon.

6. Said corporate respondents (a) agreed to submit and they have submitted, all estimates of bids to be made on a project in a given geographical area to one of said clearing bureaus, theretofore designated by the respondent association as the bureau to clear bids or prices for that particular area, for the purpose of securing identical gross, or, in some instances, net price estimates, which they (b) agreed to use, and they have used, in submitting bids on projects.

7. Said respondent association advised and required its members to adhere to the prices established by said agreements and was the agency for and it has been actively policing the industry; and, by threats of penalties to those who sold below said established prices and by persuasion, it induced many of the corporate respondents to adhere to the prices established by the aforesaid agreements, when, but for said threats and persuasion, they would not have adhered to the prices established by said agreements.

8. Said respondents, to prevent competitors who were not parties to the aforesaid understanding and agreements from being successful bidders on projects where such "non-cooperating" competitors were bidding, and to force such "non-cooperating" competitors to become members of said respondent association and a party to said understandings and agreements, agreed to declare and they have declared, the bidding on certain projects to be "open", whereupon the corporate respondents concertedly underbid and undersold such "non-cooperating" competitors; and because of such underselling and because of threats and exhortations, "non-cooperating" competitors of said corporate respondents did become members of said respondent association and parties to said understandings and agreements.

9. Said respondents secured the withdrawal and cancellation of bids submitted on projects where such bids offered said products at less than the prices established by the respondents.

In carrying out said understandings and agreements, and in doing the acts and things done and performed in furtherance thereof, each of said respondents acted in concert with one or more of the other respondents.

PAR. 7. The agreements and understandings, and the acts and things done thereunder, pursuant thereto, and in furtherance thereof, as hereinabove set forth, have had, and do have, the effect of unduly and unlawfully restricting and restraining trade and commerce in metal window products, between and among the several States of the United States and in the District of Columbia; of substantially enhancing prices to the purchasing public, and maintaining prices at artificial levels, and otherwise depriving the public of the benefit that would flow from normal competition among and between said corporate respondents in the sale and distribution of metal window products; of eliminating competition in the sale of said products; with the tendency and capacity of creating a monopoly in the sale of said products in said commerce in the corporate respondents.

Order

CONCLUSION

The aforesaid acts and practices of the corporate respondents, the individual respondents and the respondent association, in entering into and carrying out such agreements, understandings, combinations, and conspiracies, and in doing the acts and things done thereunder, pursuant thereto and in furtherance thereof, are to the prejudice of the public and of respondents' competitors, and constitute unfair methods of competition in commerce, within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST

This proceeding having been heard by the Federal Trade Commission upon the complaint issued herein on November 11, 1936, and the answers filed herein by the respondents Metal Window Institute, Ralph H. Sartor, Carl R. Raquet, Grover J. Meyer, James Allinson, Guy D. Bayley, Frank Garratt, The William Bayley Company, Bliss Steel Products Corporation, The Bougert and Carlough Company, Campbell Metal Window Corporation, Ceco Steel Products Corporation, formerly Concrete Engineering Company, Crittall Manufacturing Company, Inc., Detroit Steel Products Company, Druwhit Metal Products Company, Federal Steel Sash Company, Inc., Michael Flynn Manufacturing Company, Hope's Windows, Inc., Kewanee Manufacturing Company, Mesker Brothers Iron Company, Michel & Pfeffer Iron Works, Inc., S. H. Pomeroy Company, Inc., Soule Steel Company, J. S. Thorn Company, Truscon Steel Company and Vento Steel Products Company, formerly Vento Steel Sash Company, Inc., in which the respondents agree that, for the purpose of disposing of this proceeding, all the material facts alleged in the complaint (except that respondents Campbell Metal Window Corporation and Vento Steel Products Company are presently members of the respondent Metal Window Institute) may be deemed to be admitted within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, and that the respondents waive hearings, and all other intervening procedure, and the Commission having made its findings as to the facts and its conclusion that said respondents have violated the provisions of an Act of Congress, approved September 26, 1914, entitled, "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

It is ordered, That the corporate respondents The William Bayley Company, Bliss Steel Products Corporation, The Bougert and Carlough Company, Campbell Metal Window Corporation, Ceco Steel Products Corporation, formerly Concrete Engineering Company, Crittall Manufacturing Company, Inc., Detroit Steel Products Company, Druwhit Metal Products Company, Federal Steel Sash Company, Inc., Michael Flynn Manufacturing Company, Hope's Windows, Inc., Kewanee Manufacturing Company, Mesker Brothers Iron Company, Michel & Pfeffer Iron Works, Inc., S. H. Pomeroy Company, Inc., Soule Steel Company, J. S. Thorn Company, Truscon Steel Company and Vento Steel Products Company, formerly Vento Steel Sash Company, Inc., their officers, agents and employees cease and desist from entering into and carrying out any understanding, agreement, combination and conspiracy between and among any two or more of said respondents for the purpose or with the effect of restricting, restraining or monopolizing, or eliminating competition in, the sale in interstate commerce of any or all of the following products, made principally from solid or formed sections of steel, iron, bronze, aluminum, or other metal or alloy: pivoted windows, projected windows, continuous windows, basement windows, utility windows, detention windows, industrial doors, double-hung windows, counter-balanced windows, casement windows, mechanical operators, stools and screens for metal windows and doors, and other window products, and as a part of such understanding, agreement, combination or conspiracy from doing any of the following acts and things:

1. (a) Filing with the respondent association Metal Window Institute, or any other agency, schedules showing the discounts which will be allowed from the gross or basic prices shown in any gross or basic price book commonly in use in the metal window industry.

- (b) Maintaining the prices established by applying stated discounts to said gross or basic price book for a specified period of time and until after notice has been given competitors of a contemplated change in discounts allowed.

- (c) Circulating schedules of discounts from the gross or basic prices established by said gross or basic price book through the respondent association, Metal Window Institute, or otherwise, among competitors.

Order

2. Establishing, maintaining and adhering to schedules of uniform discounts to be applied to gross or basic prices as established from the use of any gross or basic price book commonly in use in the industry.

3. Establishing and maintaining minimum prices.

4. Establishing and maintaining uniform terms and conditions of sales, such as mandatory erection by the seller, time for delivery, and allowances for freight.

5. Declining to sell to purchasers for less than the prices established by stated discounts from the gross or basic price determined through the use of any gross or basic price book commonly in use in the industry without having first given notice to competitors that a sale is to be made at prices less than the prices established through the application of said discounts.

6. Submitting estimates to be used as the basis of bids on a project in a given geographical area to a clearing bureau of the respondent, Metal Window Institute, or any other agency designated as the agency to "clear" estimates for the particular area involved, for the purpose of eliminating price competition in bidding on such project or for any other purpose than that of detecting errors in the interpretation of specifications or in the preparation of the estimates; and in no case shall estimates or bids disclosing the discounts or net prices to be quoted be submitted to any such bureau.

7. Attempting by any form of concerted action, including underbidding and underselling in a given transaction, to induce, persuade or require any competitor to adopt, abide by, observe or maintain in any transaction, or series of transactions or for any stated period of time or generally, any schedule of discounts, net prices or terms and conditions of sale identical with or substantially similar to the schedules of discounts, net prices or terms or conditions of sale adopted or favored by the respondent making such attempt.

8. Securing the withdrawal and cancellations of bids submitted on projects where prices stated in such bids are less than those established and maintained by respondents.

9. Comparing net discounts or selling prices or terms or conditions of sale quoted or to be quoted in bidding on any project, or engaging in any form of collusive bidding on any project whether in connection with the checking of estimates to detect errors or otherwise.

10. Conducting any investigation or joint discussion for the purpose of ascertaining and reporting for their joint benefit if, when, and to what extent any competitor has deviated from any schedule of discounts, net prices or terms or conditions of sale or any announced or quoted prices, or otherwise bringing pressure or persuasion to bear upon competitors not to deviate from any such price list or price; provided that nothing herein contained shall prevent the gathering, compilation and distribution to the trade of statistics, including discounts, net prices, terms and conditions and other particulars of closed transactions when not done for the purpose or with the effect of policing the activities prohibited herein.

Order

It is further ordered, That the respondent association Metal Window Institute, its officers, agents, and employees, and the individual respondents Ralph H. Sartor, Carl R. Raquet, Grover J. Meyer, James Allinson, Guy D. Bayley, and Frank Garratt forthwith cease and desist aiding, abetting and encouraging, or cooperating with, said corporate respondent in doing any of the acts or things prohibited by this order.

It having been made known to the Commission that the death of the individual respondent C. J. McIntosh occurred during the pendency of this proceeding;

It is further ordered, That this proceeding be, and the same hereby is, dismissed as to the respondent C. J. McIntosh.

It is further ordered, That the respondents shall, within 60 days after service upon them of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which they complied with this order.

STIPULATIONS¹

DIGEST OF GENERAL STIPULATIONS OF THE FACTS AND AGREEMENTS TO CEASE AND DESIST²

1994. Misrepresenting Product—Food Products.—Wayne County Produce Co., a corporation, engaged in the business of manufacturing bottled, canned, and packed food products, including cider, vinegar, jelly, preserves, apple sauce, and the like, and in the sale and distribution thereof in interstate commerce, in competition with other corporations, firms, individuals, and partnerships likewise engaged, entered into the following agreement to cease and desist from the alleged unfair methods of competition as set forth therein.

Wayne County Produce Co., in connection with the offering for sale and selling its products in interstate commerce, agreed to cease and desist from the use of a so-called special or other gift offer of a skillet or other product having an alleged value of $1.25 or other represented value, when in fact the designated value of said product is exaggerated and greatly in excess of the price at which said product is regularly sold in the usual course of business. The said corporation also agreed to cease and desist from the use of the figure "$1.25" or of any other figure as representative of the value of a product offered as a so-called gift offer in connection with the sale of its merchandise or in any other way so as to import or imply that the represented figure is the price at which the so-called "special gift" product is customarily sold in the usual course of trade, when such is not the fact. (June 1, 1937.)

1995. False and Misleading Brands or Labels and Advertising—Perfumes.—Fragrant Perfumers, Inc., a corporation, engaged in the business of assembling perfumes and in the sale and distribution

The digests published herewith cover those accepted by the Commission during the period covered by this volume, namely, June 1, 1937, to Nov. 30, 1937, inclusive. Digests of all previous stipulations of this character accepted by the Commission—that is, numbers 1 to 1993, inclusive—may be found in vols. 10 to 24 of the Commission's decisions.

² In the interest of brevity there is omitted from the published digest of the stipulation the agreement under which the stipulating respondent or respondents, as the case may be, agree that should such stipulating respondent or respondents "ever resume or indulge in any of the practices in question, this said stipulation of the facts may be used in evidence" against such respondent or respondents, as the case may be, "in the trial of the complaint which the Commission may issue."

thereof, as well as other toilet articles, in interstate commerce, in competition with other corporations, firms, individuals, and partnerships likewise engaged, entered into the following agreement to cease and desist from the alleged unfair methods of competition as set forth therein.

Fragrant Perfumers, Inc., in soliciting the sale of and selling its product in interstate commerce, agreed to cease and desist from the use on labels, or otherwise to advertise said product, of exaggerated or misleading statements or representations concerning the value of said product or the price at which said product is sold or intended to be sold in the usual course of trade. The said Fragrant Perfumers, Inc., also agreed to cease and desist from the use of the word "France", in connection with the offering for sale and selling its said perfume product in interstate commerce, so as to import or imply that said product was made or manufactured in France, when such was not the fact. (June 1, 1937.)

1996. False and Misleading Advertising—Furniture, etc.—Reliable Stores Corp. engaged in the sale and distribution of furniture, house furnishings, jewelry and related commodities, operates a number of retail stores located in different states of the United States and in the District of Columbia. One of its said outlets is that known as "National Furniture Company", retail furniture store in Washington, D. C., engaged in the sale and distribution of merchandise of the kind and character aforesaid in commerce as defined by the Act, and in competition with other corporations, individuals, firms and partnerships likewise engaged, entered into the following agreement to cease and desist from the alleged unfair methods of competition as set forth therein.

Reliable Stores Corp., in soliciting the sale of and selling its merchandise in commerce as defined by the Act, agreed to cease and desist from the use in its advertising matter of whatever kind or character or in any other way of the words "free" or "gift" either alone or in connection or conjunction each with the other or with any other word or words as descriptive of merchandise represented to be given with the purchase of other merchandise, when in fact the price of the so-called "free" or "gift" merchandise is included in the price asked for the merchandise sold. Said corporation also agreed to cease and desist from the use of the words "free" or "gift" in any way so as to import or imply that the products to which said word or words refer are in fact a gift or are given free or as a gratuity to the purchaser of other merchandise, when such is not the fact. (June 7, 1937.)

1997. False and Misleading Brands or Labels and Advertising—Shampoo.—Tressol Laboratories, a corporation, engaged in the business of manufacturing or compounding a product for use as a shampoo and in the sale and distribution of said product under the trade name "Tressol" in interstate commerce, in competition with other corporations, individuals, firms and partnerships likewise engaged, entered into the following agreement to cease and desist from the alleged unfair methods of competition as set forth therein.

Tressol Laboratories, in soliciting the sale of and selling its product in interstate commerce, agreed to cease and desist from the use on its labels, cartons, in its advertising matter or in any other way, of statements or representations to the effect that said product contains no soap, when in fact it does contain ingredients which, in combination, are recognized to be soap; that shampoos containing alcohol are drying to the hair, scalp and hair roots, when, because such shampoos are necessarily diluted with sufficient water, they do not have such drying effect; that said product is a blend of oils or contains oil, when such is not the fact; that the use of said product as a hair shampoo will promote the growth of hair, when such is not the fact. (June 9, 1937.)

1998. False and misleading Brands or Labels—Hosiery, Undergarments, etc.—Van Raalte Co., Inc., a corporation, engaged in the business of manufacturing women's and misses' undergarments, hosiery and gloves and in the sale and distribution of said products in interstate commerce, in competition with other corporations, individuals, firms, and partnerships likewise engaged, entered into the following agreement to cease and desist from the alleged unfair methods of competition as set forth therein.

Van Raalte Co., Inc., in soliciting the sale of and selling its products in interstate commerce, agreed to cease and desist from the use on the labels or tags affixed to said products of the word "Satin" either alone or in connection or conjunction with any other word or words or in any way so as to import or imply that the products to which the said word or words refer are composed of silk, the product of the cocoon of the silk worm, when such is not the fact. (June 10, 1937.)

1999. False and Misleading Advertising—Check-Canceling Machines.—Louis J. Orlando, an individual, trading as American Bank Equipment Co., engaged in the business of repairing check-canceling machines and in the sale thereof in interstate commerce, in competition with other individuals, firms, and partnerships likewise engaged, entered into the following agreement to cease and desist from the alleged unfair methods of competition as set forth therein.

Louis J. Orlando, agreed to cease and desist from selling or offering for sale in interstate commerce his products as new or without disclosing the fact that said products are secondhand, repaired or reconditioned machines. The said Louis J. Orlando also agreed to cease and desist from the use on his printed matter of the words "makers of" or or any other word or words of similar meaning so as to import or imply that the said Louis J. Orlando makes or manufactures the products offered for sale and sold by him or that he actually owns and operates or directly and absolutely controls the plant or factory in which said products are made or manufactured, when such is not the fact. (June 11, 1937.)

2000. False and Misleading Advertising—Baby Chicks.—Ezra Neuhauser, David Neuhauser and Menno Neuhauser, copartners trading under the firm name and style of Neuhauser Chick Hatcheries and/or Neuhauser Hatchery, engaged in the hatching of baby chicks and in the sale and distribution thereof in interstate commerce, in competition with other partnerships, firms, individuals and corporations likewise engaged, entered into the following agreement to cease and desist from the alleged unfair methods of competition as set forth therein.

Ezra Neuhauser, David Neuhauser and Menno Neuhauser, jointly and severally agreed, in soliciting the sale of and selling their chicks in interstate commerce, to cease and desist from the use in their catalogs or printed matter or in any way of statements or representations to the effect that every "Good Luck" flock is raised on open range with acres of fresh-sodded slopes sowed in alfalfa and clover; that over 5,000,000 of said chicks are shipped each year; that David Neuhauser personally supervises the blood testing of 250,000 or other number of chicks during a year or other period of time; that such bloodtesting has been carried on for nine years; or that the said co-partners see to it that the flocks of chicks which they sell get the feeding program consisting of the Purina Embryo Feeding Program as a supplement to their own feeding program, when such are not the facts. (June 11, 1937.)

2001. False and Misleading Brands or Labels and Advertising—Perfumes.—A. Joncaire, Inc., a corporation, engaged in the sale and distribution of perfumes in interstate commerce, in competition with other corporations, firms, individuals, and partnerships likewise engaged, entered into the following agreement to cease and desist from the alleged unfair methods of competition as set forth therein.

A. Joncaire, Inc., in soliciting the sale of and selling its perfumes in interstate commerce, agreed to cease and desist from the use in its advertisements or printed matter or otherwise of the statement "Blended in France" either alone or in connection or conjunction with any other word or words, statement or representation so as to import or imply that the said perfumes were produced or compounded in France and imported as finished products into the United States of America, when such is not the fact. The said corporation also agreed to cease and desist from stating or representing in its advertising, printed matter or otherwise that it is the American representative or distributor of a perfumer in France, when such is not the fact, and from the use on its stationery or in any other way of the purported address "338 Rue St. Honore, Paris," when in fact the said corporation has no such Paris address. The said corporation further agreed to cease and desist from the use on its stationery or otherwise of the word "Importers", when in fact it is not engaged as an importer of products which it offers for sale and sells. (June 11, 1937.)

2002. False and Misleading Advertising—Radios.—Busch's Kredit Jewelers, a corporation, engaged in the sale and distribution of radio receiving sets, bearing escutcheon plates on which the word "Monarch" appears, in interstate commerce, in competition with other corporations, individuals, firms, and partnerships likewise engaged, entered into the following agreement to cease and desist from the alleged unfair methods of competition as set forth therein.

For domestic radio transmission, the so-called "long-wave" or "broadcast" band is used, while foreign transmission is based almost entirely on the use of the so-called "short-wave" band. The object to be achieved in an "all-wave" receiving set is to make it possible for the operator to receive through a single instrument either the domestic or broadcast bands or the foreign short-wave bands, at his pleasure. In the present state of the art, the reception of foreign short-wave bands is difficult and uncertain. Operators in certain localities obtained foreign stations at certain times of the year and during certain times of the day without difficulty and in satisfactory volume, while in other localities such stations are sometimes obtained and sometimes not, for no apparent reason. The "tuning in" or "logging" of a short-wave foreign station is always slow and difficult. The loud speaker volume varies from nothing to occasional satisfactory reception, and much attempted short-wave reception is rendered more difficult by noise interference or "static". These conditions are known to experts but not to the purchasing public who are not aware that there are no receiving instruments which will give easily tuned continuous and satisfactory reception of short-waves from foreign countries under all conditions.

Busch's Kredit Jewelers, in soliciting the sale of and selling its radio receiving sets in interstate commerce, agreed to cease and desist from the use of the words "all-wave" as descriptive of said products, when said products are not capable of reception of the entire meter range of broadcasts and commercial transmission. The said corporation also agreed to cease and desist from stating or representing or implying in its advertising of whatever kind or character that users of its radio sets can receive European and other foreign stations easily or at will and with satisfactory volume and/or from stating, representing or presenting the merits and value of its products in such way as to cover up or conceal the difficulties and deficiencies of short-wave reception, inherent in the present state of the art but unknown to the purchasing public. (June 14, 1937.)

2003. False and Misleading Brands or Labels and Advertising—Furs.—May Department Stores, Inc., a corporation, engaged in the business of operating a number of retail department stores, including one at Baltimore, Maryland, and in the sale and distribution from such stores of merchandise in interstate commerce, in competition with other corporations, individuals, firms, and partnerships likewise engaged, entered into the following agreement to cease and desist from the alleged unfair methods of competition as set forth therein.

May Department Stores, Inc., in soliciting the sale of and selling its products in interstate commerce, agreed to cease and desist from describing furs in any way other than by the use of the correct name of the fur as the last word of the description and which shall be printed in type that is not less conspicuous than that in which the accompanying descriptive word or words is or are printed; and when any dye or blend is used to simulate another fur, the true name of the fur, appearing as the last word of the description and printed as aforesaid, shall be immediately preceded by the word "Dyed" or "Blended", compounded with the name of the simulated fur, as thus: Seal-Dyed Muskrat, Hudson Seal-Dyed Muskrat, Mink-Dyed Marmot, Seal-Dyed Coney or Rabbit, Northern Seal-Dyed Coney or Rabbit, Beaver-Dyed Coney or Rabbit. (June 14, 1937.)

2004. False and Misleading Brands or Labels and Advertising—Crepe Products.—B. Altman & Co., a corporation, engaged in the business of operating department stores and from which stores the said corporation sells and distributes merchandise in interstate commerce, in competition with other corporations, individuals, firms, and partnerships likewise engaged, entered into the following agreement to cease and desist from the alleged unfair methods of competition set forth therein.

B. Altman & Co., in soliciting the sale of and selling its products in interstate commerce, agreed to cease and desist from the use of the word "Crepe" or "Crepes" as descriptive of products not composed of silk, the product of the cocoon of the silk worm, and from the use of the word "Crepe" or "Crepes" either alone or in connection or conjunction with any other word or words or in any way so as to import or imply that the products to which said word or words refer are composed of silk, when such is not the fact. (June 14, 1937.)

2005. False and Misleading Advertising—Monuments.—American Memorial Co., a corporation, engaged in the business of manufacturing marble monuments and in the sale and distribution thereof, and, in the capacity of broker, of granite monuments as well, in interstate commerce, in competition with other corporations, individuals, firms, and partnerships likewise engaged, entered into the following agreement to cease and desist from the alleged unfair methods of competition as set forth therein.

American Memorial Co., offering for sale and selling its marble monuments in interstate commerce, agreed to cease and desist from stating or representing in its advertising of whatever character that the said monuments are everlasting, or of the highest or finest quality, or are the world's best genuine marble, or that, because it is allegedly pure, hard and solid, it will never fade, check, crack or disintegrate no matter how many years pass away or that better marble cannot be bought, when such are not the facts. The said corporation also agreed to cease and desist from the use in its catalogs or otherwise of the pictorial representation of an elaborate and imposing or any monument finishing plant so as to import or imply that it actually owns and operates or controls the pictured plant, when such is not the fact. (June 17, 1937.)

2006. False and Misleading Brands or Labels and Advertising—Crepe Products.—Best & Co., Inc., a corporation, engaged in the business of operating a department store from which it sells and has sold and distributed merchandise in interstate commerce, in competition with other corporations, individuals, firms, and partnerships likewise engaged, entered into the following agreement to cease and desist from the alleged unfair methods of competition as set forth therein.

Best & Co., Inc., in soliciting the sale of and selling its products in interstate commerce, agreed to cease and desist from the use in its advertisements and advertising matter or otherwise of the word "Crepe" as descriptive of products not composed of silk, the product of the cocoon of the silk worm, and from the use of the word "Crepe" either alone or in connection or conjunction with any other word or words or in any way so as to import or imply that the products to which said word or words refer are composed of silk, when such is not the fact. (June 16, 1937.)

2007. False and Misleading Brands or Labels and Advertising—Silk Products.—Franklin Simon & Co., a corporation, engaged in the business of operating a department store from which it sells and distributes wearing apparel in interstate commerce, in competition with other corporations, individuals, firms, and partnerships likewise engaged, entered into the following agreement to cease and desist from the alleged unfair methods of competition as set forth therein.

Franklin Simon & Co., in soliciting the sale of and selling its products in interstate commerce, agreed to cease and desist from the use in its advertising matter, or in any other way, of the word "Silk" as descriptive of products which are not composed of silk, the product of the cocoon of the silk worm, and from the use of the words "Silk" and "Crepe", or of either of said words, alone or in connection or conjunction with any other word or words or in any way so as to import or imply that the products to which the said word or words refer are composed of silk, when such is not the fact. (June 18, 1937.)

2008. False and Misleading Prices and Advertising—Automobiles.—Hudson Motor Car Co., a corporation, engaged in the business of manufacturing passenger automobiles and other motor driven vehicles and in the sale and distribution thereof under the trade names "Hudson" and "Terraplane" to dealers and distributors in interstate commerce, in competition with other corporations, individuals, firms, and partnerships likewise engaged in similar businesses, entered into the following agreement to cease and desist from the alleged unfair methods of competition as set forth therein.

Hudson Motor Car Co., in soliciting the sale of and selling its products in interstate commerce, agreed to cease and desist or refrain from the use in any advertisement to facilitate the sale by dealers and distributors to the public of automobiles, of "$595" or of any other purported price figure, either with or without the pictorial representation of a passenger car, so as to import or imply that said price is the price of the car pictured or otherwise described, unless the designated price is in fact the price of and does refer to the car so pictured or described; of "$595" or of any other purported price figure, together with the pictorial representation of a passenger car or in any other way, so as to import or imply that the car, to which such price figure purportedly refers, can be purchased at the advertised point of delivery for the price designated, and that the purchaser can obtain lawful title to and possession of said car at said point of delivery without further payment of any amount whatsoever, except state and local taxes, assessments and sales taxes of any kind, unless such is the fact, or unless the items, but not necessarily the price of same, making up such further payment are also set forth in such advertisement in suitable words or phraseology printed in plain, prominent and easily readable type; of the pictorial or other representation of a car and more especially one equipped with accessories, and of what purports to be the price of said car, either "f. o. b.", "list at factory", or advertised point of delivery, so as to import or imply that said designated price is the price at which said car is offered for sale and sold, and that said price includes the price of all the accessories pictorially or otherwise represented or referred to in said advertisement and all other charges of whatever kind or character, except freight or transportation charges, in case the price advertised is "f. o. b." or "list at factory", and state and local taxes, assessments, and sales taxes of any kind, incident to the sale of such car, unless such is the fact; provided, if such designated price is used to refer to the sales price of the car without such accessories, and the said price does not include the cost of the said accessories, pictorially or otherwise represented or referred to and of all other charges of whatever kind or character, except freight or transportation charges and such taxes and assessments, then in such case the said price shall be accompanied by suitable words or phraseology printed in plain, prominent and easily readable type so as to indicate clearly that said price does not include such accessories and other charges and that the price of such accessories and other charges shall be added to the price represented to be the sales price of the car advertised. (June 18, 1937.)

2009. False and Misleading Prices and Advertising—Automobiles.—Graham-Paige Motors Corporation, engaged in the business of manufacturing passenger automobiles and other motor-driven vehicles and in the sale and distribution thereof to dealers and distributors in interstate commerce, in Canada, and other foreign countries, in competition with other corporations, individuals, firms, and partnerships likewise engaged, entered into the following agreement to cease and desist from the alleged unfair methods of competition as set forth therein.

Graham-Paige Motors Corporation, in soliciting the sale of and selling its products in commerce, agreed to cease and desist or refrain from the use in any advertisement to facilitate the sale by dealers and distributors to the public of automobiles—of "$595" or of any other purported price figure, either with or without the pictorial representation of a passenger car, so as to import or imply that said price is the price of the car pictured or otherwise described, unless the designated price is in fact the price of and does refer to the car so pictured and described; of "$595" or of any other purported price figure, together with the pictorial representation of a passenger car or in any other way, so as to import or imply that the car, to which such price figure purportedly refers, can be purchased at the advertised point of delivery for the price designated, and that the purchaser can obtain lawful title to and possession of said car at said point of delivery without further payment of any amount whatsoever, except state and local taxes, assessments and sales taxes of any kind, unless such is the fact, or unless the items, but not necessarily the price of same, making up such further payment are also set forth in such advertisement in suitable words or phraseology printed in plain, prominent, and easily readable type; of the pictorial or other representation of a car and more especially one equipped with accessories, and of what purports to be the price of said car, either "f. o. b.", "list at factory", or advertised point of delivery, so as to import or imply that said price includes the price of all the accessories pictorially or otherwise represented or referred to in said advertisement and all other charges of whatever kind or character, except freight or transportation charges, in case the price advertised is "f. o. b." or "list at factory", and state and local taxes, assessments, and sales taxes of any kind, incident to the sale of such car, unless such is the fact; provided, if such designated price is used to refer to the sales price of the car without such accessories, and the said price does not include the cost of the said accessories pictorially or otherwise represented or referred to and of all other charges of whatever kind or character, except freight or transportation charges and such taxes and assessments, then in such case the said price shall be accompanied by suitable words or phraseology printed in plain, prominent, and easily readable type so as to indicate clearly that said price does not include such accessories and other charges and that the price of such accessories and other charges shall be added to the price represented to be the sales price of the car advertised. (June 18, 1937.)

2010. False and Misleading Prices and Advertising—Automobiles.—The Studebaker Corporation, engaged in the business of manufacturing motor vehicles and in the sale and distribution thereof to dealers and distributors in interstate commerce, in Canada and other foreign countries, effecting such sales and distribution through the instrumentality of its owned and controlled subsidiary, The Studebaker Sales Corporation of America, in competition with other corporations, individuals, firms, and partnerships likewise engaged, entered into the following agreement to cease and desist from the alleged unfair methods of competition as set forth therein.

The Studebaker Corporation and The Studebaker Sales Corporation of America, in soliciting the sale of and selling their product in commerce, agreed to cease and desist or refrain from the use in any advertisement to facilitate the sale by dealers and distributors to the public of automobiles: of "$665*" or of any other purported price figure, either with or without the pictorial representation of a passenger car, so as to import or imply that said price is the price of the car pictured or otherwise described unless the designated price is in fact the price of and does refer to the car so pictured or described; of "$665*" or of any other purported price figure, together with the pictorial representation of a passenger car, or in any other way, so as to import or imply that the car, to which such price figure purportedly refers, can be purchased at the advertised point of delivery for the price designated and that the purchaser, can obtain lawful title to and possession of said car at said point of delivery without further payment of any amount whatsoever except state and local taxes, assessments, and sales taxes of any kind, unless such is the fact, or unless the items, but not necessarily the price of same, making up such further payment are also set forth in such advertisement in suitable words or phraseology printed in plain, prominent and easily readable type; of the pictorial or other representation of a car, and more especially one equipped with accessories, and of what purports to be the price of said car, either "f. o. b.," "list at factory," or advertised point of delivery, so as to import or imply that said designated price is the price at which said car is offered for sale and sold, and that said price includes the price of all the accessories pictorially or otherwise represented or referred to in said advertisement and all other charges of whatever kind or character except freight or transportation charges, in case the price advertised is "f. o. b." or "list at factory," and state and local taxes, assessments and sales taxes of any kind, incident to the sale of such car, unless such is the fact; provided, if such designated price is used to refer to the sales price of the car without such accessories, and the said price does not include the cost of the said accessories pictorially or otherwise represented or referred to and of all other charges of whatever kind or character, except such freight or transportation charges, and such taxes and assessments, then in such case the said price shall be accompanied by suitable words or phraseology printed in plain, prominent and easily readable type, so as to indicate clearly that said price does not include such accessories and other charges and that the price of such accessories and other charges shall be added to the price represented to be the sales price of the car advertised. Auburn Automobile Co. agreed to cease and desist or refrain from the use in any advertisement to facilitate the sale by dealers and distributors to the public of automobiles: of "$1995" or of any other purported price figure, either with or without the pictorial representation of a passenger car, so as to import or imply that said price is the price of the car pictured or otherwise described, unless the designated price is in fact the price of and does refer to the car so pictured or described; of "$1995" or of any other purported price figure, together with the pictorial representation of a passenger car or in any other way, so as to import or imply that the car, to which such price figure purportedly refers, can be purchased at the advertised point of delivery for the price designated, and that the purchaser can obtain lawful title to and possession of said car at said point of delivery without further payment of any amount whatsoever, except state and local taxes, assessments and sales taxes of any kind, unless such is the fact, or unless the items, but not necessarily the price of same, making up such further payment are also set forth in such advertisement in suitable words or phraseology printed in plain, prominent and easily readable type; of the pictorial or other representation of a car and more especially one equipped with accessories, and of what purports to be the price of said car, either "f. o. b." "list at factory," or advertised point of delivery, so as to import or imply that said designated price is the price at which said car is offered for sale and sold, and that said price includes the price of all the accessories pictorially or otherwise represented or referred to in said advertisement and all other charges of whatever kind or character, except freight or transportation charges, in case the price advertised is "f. o. b." or "list at factory," and state and local taxes, assessments, and sales taxes of any kind, incident to the sale of such car, unless such is the fact; provided, if such designated price is used to refer to the sales price of the car without such accessories, and the said price does not include the cost of the said accessories pictorially or otherwise represented or referred to and of all other charges of whatever kind or character, except freight or transportation charges and such taxes and assessments, then in such case the said price shall be accompanied by suitable words or phraseology printed in plain, prominent and easily readable type so as to indicate clearly that said price does not include such accessories and other charges shall be added to the price represented to be the sales price of the car advertised. (June 18, 1937.)

2015. False and Misleading Prices and Advertising—Silver Plated Ware.—Oneida, Ltd., a corporation, engaged in the manufacture of silver plated ware and in the sale and distribution thereof under the names of two of its subsidiary corporations, Wm. A. Rogers, Ltd., and Simeon L. and George H. Rogers Co., in interstate commerce, in competition with other corporations, individuals, firms, and partnerships likewise engaged, entered into the following agreement to cease and desist from the alleged unfair methods of competition as set forth therein.

Oneida, Ltd., acting in its own behalf or through its subsidiaries, or any of them, agreed in soliciting the sale of and selling its products in interstate commerce to cease and desist from the use of or from suggesting or recommending to its retailer customers or otherwise promoting any scheme, plan or method of sale designated or represented to be a "Half Price" or a "Save $20.00" sale wherein an alleged regular retail sales price of its products does not reflect or represent the normal and usual price at which the said products are sold in the regular course of trade; cooperating with its retailer customers in advertising, promoting or carrying out any scheme, plan or method of sale designated or represented to be a "Half Price" or a "Save $20.00" sale wherein an alleged regular retail or other sales price of its products, as compared with the normal and usual price at which the same is sold in the regular course of trade, is fictitious or exaggerated; from the use of the words "Special Sale" as descriptive of the price for which its products are offered for sale and sold, when in fact the so-called special sale price is not "Special" but is the price for which said products are or can be generally purchased in the regular course of trade. (June 22, 1937.)

2016. False and Misleading Trade Name, Brands or Labels and Advertising—Cough Preparation.—Roy J. Troutman, an individual trading as "G. E. Laboratories" and/or "Great Eastern Laboratories," engaged in the business of manufacturing or compounding a preparation designed for the alleviation of coughs and in the sale and distribution of said product in interstate commerce under the trade designation "Dr. Bayer's Horehound Cough Balsam" in competition with other individuals, firms, partnerships, and corporations likewise engaged, entered into the following agreement to cease and desist from the alleged unfair methods of competition as set forth therein.

The Bayer Co., Inc., a New York corporation, has been for more than twenty years last past and is now engaged in the manufacture or compounding of an aspirin product which it has extensively advertised and sold as "Bayer Genuine Aspirin," with the result that the said product has become known and referred to as "Bayer's Aspirin" and the said corporation has acquired a wide and favorable good will in the word "Bayer" or "Bayer's" as identifying the product of its manufacture. The name "Bayer" has become associated in the public mind with a demand for aspirin made by the said corporation.

Roy J. Troutman, in soliciting the sale of and selling his products in interstate commerce, agreed to cease and desist from the use of the words "Dr. Bayer's" as a part of or in connection or conjunction with the trade name under which he carries on his business, and from the use of the abbreviation "Dr." or the word "Bayer's," alone or in connection or conjunction each with the other, or with any other word or words, or in any way, in advertising or labeling his product offered for sale and sold in interstate commerce, so as to import or imply that the said product is made or compounded by the Bayer Co., Inc., the corporation referred to in paragraph 2 hereof. The said Roy J. Troutman also agreed to cease and desist from the use of the abbreviation "Dr." or the word "doctor," either alone or in connection or conjunction with a name, or with any other word or words, or in any way, so as to import or imply that the product to which said word or words refer and which is offered for sale and sold by the said individual in interstate commerce has been prepared in accordance with the formula or under the supervision of a doctor, when such is not the fact. (July 2, 1937.)

2017. Failure to Disclose—Files.—New Method File Grinders, Inc., a corporation engaged in the business of selling and distributing files in interstate commerce between and among various states of the United States in competition with other corporations, individuals, firms, and partnerships likewise engaged, entered into the following agreement to cease and desist from the alleged unfair methods of competition as set forth therein.

New Method File Grinders, Inc., in soliciting the sale of and selling its products in interstate commerce, agreed to cease and desist from offering for sale or selling in interstate commerce old, worn, used, or second-hand files which have been resharpened and reconditioned without clearly disclosing and indicating the fact that said products are resharpened and reconditioned and/or are not new. (July 9, 1937.)

Co., engaged in the business of pairing and packaging shoe laces and in the sale and distribution thereof in interstate commerce in competition with other individuals, firms, partnerships, and corporations likewise engaged, entered into the following agreement to cease and desist from the alleged unfair methods of competition as set forth therein.

Benjamin Gittleman, in offering for sale and selling his products in interstate commerce, agreed to cease and desist from the use of the letters "Mfg" as part of his trade name, and from the use of the letters "Mfg" or the word "Manufacturers", alone or in connection or conjunction with any other word or words, or in any way, on his stationery, printed matter, or otherwise, so as to import or imply that he makes or manufactures the products sold by him or that he actually owns and operates or directly and absolutely controls the plant or factory in which said products are made or manufactured, when such is not the fact. The said Benjamin Gittleman also agreed, in soliciting the sale of and selling his products in interstate commerce, to cease and desist from the use of any scheme, plan or method of sale, or of promoting the sale of his products, which involves or includes the use of any gift enterprise, lottery, or scheme of chance whereby the individual who is to receive any specified article of merchandise or so-called gift is determined by lot or chance. (July 12, 1937.)

2021.¹ False and Misleading Advertising—Books.—Garden City Publishing Co., Inc., a corporation engaged in the business of reprinting

Number 2020 was assigned to July 21 stipulation as to the facts and agreement to cease and desist in the matter of Civilian Preparatory Service, Inc., et al., Docket 2884, in which complaint—issued July 29, 1936, and charging respondents, broadly, with advertising falsely or misleadingly and misrepresenting business status as to government connection and opportunities in product or service and refunds or guarantees in connec-books and in the sale and distribution of the same in commerce between and among various states of the United States, in competition with other corporations, individuals, firms, and partnerships likewise engaged, entered into the following agreement to cease and desist from the alleged unfair methods of competition as set forth therein.

Garden City Publishing Co., Inc., agreed in soliciting the sale of and selling its products in interstate commerce to cease and desist from advertising, selling, or distributing in interstate commerce, any book or publication under a different name or title from that under which said book shall have been previously published and sold; unless, if that be done, a proper notice of the previously used name or title shall appear printed in type as equally conspicuous as that in which the new name is printed, on the title page of said book and on the jacket, if such book is provided with a jacket. Said corporation also agreed that in all advertisements and other printed matter used by it in the sale of and selling said book in interstate commerce there shall be clearly set forth, in connection with the new name or title, the name or title under which said book had been heretofore published and sold. Said corporation further agreed to cease and desist from stating or representing in its advertising matter or in any other way that the book offered for sale and sold by it in interstate commerce is "modern" or "up-to-date", or that the said book formerly sold for $4, when such are not the facts. (July 19, 1937.)

2022. False and Misleading Advertising—Lingerie.—Samuel A. Roth, an individual trading as Samuel A. Roth & Co., engaged in the sale and distribution primarily of ladies' undergarments in interstate commerce, in competition with other individuals, firms, partnerships, and corporations likewise engaged, entered into the following agreement to cease and desist from the alleged unfair methods of competition as set forth therein.

Samuel A. Roth, in soliciting the sale of and selling his products in interstate commerce, agreed to cease and desist from the use in his advertising matter or otherwise of the word "silk," either alone or in connection with the word "pure" without qualification to describe or designate products not composed wholly of silk but containing substantial quantities of mineral salts or substances other than silk, being what are known as "weighted silks." If said products are in fact composed of silk but are weighted to an amount exceeding tion with the making of various false and misleading representations in connection with the sale of civil service correspondence courses—was dismissed without prejudice by reason of respondents' admission in such stipulation, as therein set forth, of the making of such various false and misleading representations and agreement to cease and desist from use thereof and that, failing so to do, such stipulation might be used in evidence against them in trial of any proceeding which Commission might direct (see, for dismissal, supra, at page 1507).

15% in black goods or to an amount exceeding 10% in goods other than black, and if the word "silk" is used to designate or describe such products, then in that event the word "silk" shall be immediately accompanied by the word "weighted" or some other word or words printed in type equally as conspicuous as that in which the word "silk" is printed so as to indicate clearly that said products are weighted with mineral salts or other weighting substance. The said Samuel A. Roth further agreed to cease and desist from the use in his said advertising matter or otherwise of the words "pure dye" either alone or in connection or conjunction with any other word or words so as to import or imply that the products to which said words refer are composed of silk, when such is not the fact. Said individual also agreed to cease and desist from the use of the word "satin" in any way as descriptive of products so as to import or imply that the products so designated are composed of silk, when such is not the fact, and from the use of the word "satin" in connection with the word "rayon" or with any other words to designate the type of weave of said products, when in fact said products, which are composed of material other than silk, are "plain" woven, that is to say, are not made with a satin weave. (July 21, 1937.)

Harold Tanner, in soliciting the sale of and selling his pens in interstate commerce, agreed to cease and desist from stating or representing by means of advertising matter or otherwise that said pens are of a $3.00 value or that said pens are sold or are intended to be sold for the said amount in the usual course of trade, when such is not the fact; the certificate referred to in said advertising matter is worth $2.51 or any other specified amount, when such is not the fact; said pens are "indestructible" or that they have an "unbreakable" barrel or that they are "sackless", when the facts do not warrant such statements or representations; said pens are of "Master Banker's Size" and "Hold 200% More Ink," or of any other similar statements or representations which do not understandingly represent the size or capacity of the pen as the case may be; one can write a month on a single filling of the pen, or of any other similar exaggerated statement or representation; said pen would require no repair bills, when such statement or representation is not warranted by the facts. The said Harold Tanner also agreed to cease and desist from the use of the word "Duragold" as descriptive of his pen points, when in fact said pen points are not composed of gold, and from the use of the word "Gold" either alone or in connection with the letters "Dura" or in any other way so as to import or imply that the pen point to which the said word refers is composed of gold, when such is not the fact. The said Harold Tanner further agreed to cease and desist from stating or representing in its advertising matter or in any other way that his pens are offered for sale and sold by him under a "Lifetime Guaranty," when such is not the fact. (Aug. 23, 1937.)

2039. False and Misleading Brands or Labels—Lingerie.—Charm Silk Undergarments, Inc., a corporation, engaged in the business of manufacturing ladies' undergarments and in the sale and distribution thereof in interstate commerce in competition with other corporations, individuals, firms, and partnerships likewise engaged, entered into the following agreement to cease and desist from the alleged unfair methods of competition as set forth therein.

Charm Silk Undergarments, Inc., in soliciting the sale of and selling its products in interstate commerce, agreed to cease and desist from the use on its labels or in any other way of the words "Super Quality Silk" or the word "silk", without qualification, to designate or describe said products not composed wholly of silk but which contain substantial quantities of salts or substances other than silk, being what are known as "weighted silks". If said products are in fact composed of silk, the product of the cocoon of the silk worm, but are weighted to an amount exceeding 15% in black goods or to an amount exceeding 10% in goods other than black, and the word "silk" is used to designate or describe said products, then in that event, the word "silk" shall be immediately accompanied by the word "weighted" or some other word or words printed in type equally as conspicuous as that in which the word "silk" is printed so as to indicate clearly that said products are weighted with mineral salts or other weighting substance. (Aug. 24, 1937.)

2040. False and Misleading Trade Name, Brands or Labels and Advertising—Maple Syrup Compound.—Miracle Jel, Inc., a corporation, subsidiary of Curtiss Candy Co., engaged in the business of manufacturing a compound which is sold and distributed by its parent company, Curtiss Candy Co., in interstate commerce in competition with other corporations, individuals, firms, and partnerships likewise engaged, entered into the following agreement to cease and desist from the alleged unfair methods of competition as set forth therein.

The said corporation also agreed to cease and desist from stating or representing that its vaults are non-porous or impervious to water and will remain so everlastingly or forever, when such is not the fact. The said corporation further agreed to cease and desist from the use of any other or similar statements respecting the durability or other qualities of its vaults not warranted by the facts. (Aug. 27, 1937.)

2045.¹ False and Misleading Advertising—Clothing.—V. Portnoy & Sons, Inc., a corporation, engaged in the business of buying old, worn and second-hand clothing and also new wearing apparel, and in the sale and distribution of such garments, principally by mail order, in interstate commerce, in competition with other corporations, individuals, firms, and partnerships likewise engaged, entered into the following agreement to cease and desist from the alleged unfair methods of competition as set forth therein.

V. Portnoy & Sons, Inc., in soliciting the sale of and selling in interstate commerce its products consisting of both new and old, worn or second-hand garments or merchandise, agreed to cease and desist from the use of advertisements and advertising matter which refers to said garments or merchandise in such way as not to clearly indicate and set forth in conspicuous type, with reference to each particular garment or article of merchandise that is not new, that the same is old, worn or second-hand. The said corporation also agreed to cease and desist from the use in its advertising matter of the word "silk" either alone or in connection with any other word or words as descriptive of products not composed of silk, the product of the cocoon of the silk worm, and from the use of the word "silk" in any way so as to import or imply that the product to which said word refers is composed of silk, when such is not the fact. (Aug. 27, 1937.)

2046. False and Misleading Brands or Labels and Advertising—Veneers and Plywoods.—New York Plywood Co., Inc., a corporation, engaged in the sale and distribution of various kinds of veneers and plywoods in interstate commerce, in competition with other corporations, individuals, firms, and partnerships likewise engaged, entered into the following agreement to cease and desist from the alleged unfair methods of competition as set forth therein.

New York Plywood Co., Inc., in soliciting the sale of and selling its products in interstate commerce, agreed to cease and desist from the use of the term "Wh Pine" or the words "White Pine" either alone or in connection or conjunction with any other word or words as descriptive of products not made of wood derived from trees of the species "Pinus strobus" or "White Pine group," and from the use of the term "Wh Pine" in any way so as to import or imply that the products to which said term refers are made from trees of the "White Pine group" when such is not the fact; the use of the word "Walnut" either alone or in connection with the word "Oriental" or with any other word or words as descriptive of products not made of wood derived from trees of the Walnut or Juglandaceae family, and from the use of the word "Walnut" in any way so as to import or imply that the products so referred to are made of such walnut wood, when such is not the fact. (Sept. 1, 1937.)

agreement to cease and desist from the alleged unfair methods of competition as set forth therein.

Silas K. Himmelreich, Arthur S. Himmelreich and Irwin B. Schmidt, in soliciting the sale of and selling fur garments in interstate commerce, agreed to cease and desist from representing, designating or describing said furs in any way other than by the use of the correct name of the fur of which said garments are composed as the last word of the description and which shall be printed in type that is not less conspicuous than that in which any accompanying word or words is or are printed; and when any dye or blend is used to simulate another fur, the true name of the fur, appearing as the last word of the description and printed as aforesaid, shall be immediately preceded by the word "dyed" or "blended," compounded with the name of the simulated fur, as thus: Hudson Seal—Dyed Muskrat, French Seal—Dyed Coney, Nutria Lapin—Dyed Coney. (Sept. 1, 1937.)

2048. False and Misleading Advertising—"Silk" Merchandise.—Martin's, a corporation, engaged in the business of operating a department store from which it sells and has sold general merchandise at retail in interstate commerce, in competition with other corporations, individuals, firms, and partnerships likewise engaged, entered into the following agreement to cease and desist from the alleged unfair methods of competition as set forth therein.

(Sept. 15, 1937.)

American Vault Works, Inc., is a corporation organized, existing and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Illinois, having its principal place of business at the same local address at Forest Park, Ill., as aforesaid Wilbert W. Haase Co., Inc., Wilbert W. Haase is the president of and a large stockholder in each of the said corporations. American Vault Works, Inc., is now and for more than one year last past has been engaged in the business of manufacturing burial vaults and of all of the forms and materials, excepting sand, gravel and cement, used in the making of burial vaults under the aforesaid patents and which products have been sold and distributed by it or by the said Wilbert W. Haase Co., Inc., to and among the various vault manufacturers located in different states of the United States who have been licensed by the said Wilbert W. Haase Co., Inc., to operate under its patents.

In the course and conduct of business, Wilbert W. Haase Co., Inc., and American Vault Works, Inc., at all times herein referred to in competition with other corporations, individuals, firms and partnerships likewise engaged, entered into the following agreement to cease and desist from the alleged unfair methods of competition as set forth therein.

Wilbert W. Haase Co., Inc., and American Vault Works, Inc., in soliciting the sale of and selling their burial vaults in commerce as defined by the Act, agreed to cease and desist from using and from licensing others to use the word "Asphalt" as a trade name, in advertising matter, or otherwise, to describe said vaults which are not composed of asphalt in their entirety, and from the use of the word "Asphalt" in any way so as to import or imply that said vaults are composed wholly of asphalt, when such is not the fact; provided that if said vaults are composed in substantial part of asphalt, and the word "Asphalt" is used to describe such asphalt content, then in that case, the word "Asphalt" shall be immediately accompanied by some other word or words so as to indicate clearly that said vaults are not composed wholly of asphalt but are composed in part of material other than asphalt. The said corporation also agreed, and each of them agreed, to cease and desist from stating or representing or causing others to state or represent that said vaults are everlasting or eternal, that is to say, that they will give perpetual enduring protection to bodies encased therein, when in fact such quality of lasting durability has not been and cannot be proved. (Sept. 14, 1937.)

2052. False and Misleading Advertising—Radios.—Western Auto Supply Co., a corporation, owning and operating a large number of retail stores throughout the United States, including several such stores within the District of Columbia, engaged in selling various automobile and electrical accessories and appliances, among them radio receiving sets, in commerce as defined by the Federal Trade Commission Act, in competition with other corporations, individuals, firms, and partnerships likewise engaged, entered into the following agreement to cease and desist from the alleged unfair methods of competition as set forth therein.

For domestic radio transmission, the so-called "long-wave" or broadcast band is used, while foreign transmission is based almost entirely on the use of the so-called short-wave bands. The object to be achieved in an "all-wave" receiving set is to make it possible for the operator to receive through a single instrument either the domestic or broadcast bands, or the foreign short-wave bands, at his pleasure. In the present state of the art, the reception of foreign short-wave bands is difficult and uncertain. Operators in certain localities obtain foreign stations at certain times of the year and during certain parts of the day, without difficulty and in satisfactory volume; while in other localities, such stations are sometimes obtained and sometimes not, for no apparent reason. The "tuning in" or "logging" of a short-wave foreign station is usually slow and difficult. The loud-speaker volume varies from nothing to occasional satisfactory reception, and much attempted short-wave reception is rendered more difficult by noise interferences or "static." These conditions are known to experts, but not to the purchasing public, who are not aware that there are no receiving instruments which will give easily tuned, continuous and satisfactory reception of short waves from foreign countries under all conditions.

Western Auto Supply Co., in soliciting the sale and selling its radio receiving sets in commerce as defined by the Act, agreed to cease and desist from the use of the words "World-Wide" or "All-Wave" either alone or in connection or conjunction with the words "Not Just Foreign" or with any other word or words, to describe radio receiving sets which are not capable of reception over the entire meter range covering all broadcasts and commercial transactions; stating and representing in substance and effect that by the use of its radio receiving sets, the owners thereof can have world-wide, continuous reception of short-wave transmissions, with loud-speaker volume, as dependably and as easily tuned in or "logged" as with long-wave or broadcast transmissions; stating, representing or presenting the advantages of its sets in such way as to cover up or conceal the difficulties and deficiencies of the same, inherent in the present state of the art, but unknown to the purchasing public. (Sept. 21, 1937.)

Chipman-Lacrosse Hosiery Mills Co., Inc., in soliciting the sale of and selling its hosiery in interstate commerce, agreed to cease and desist from the use of the word "silk" either alone or in connection or conjunction with the word "pure" or with any other word or words or in any way as descriptive of the surface of said hosiery so as to import or imply that the surface of said hosiery is composed of silk, when such is not the fact; provided that if the surface of said hosiery is composed in substantial part of silk, and the word "silk" is used to describe the silk content of the surface of said hosiery, then in that case the word "silk" shall be immediately accompanied by some other word or words printed in type equally as conspicuous as that in which the word "silk" is printed so as to indicate clearly that the surface of said hosiery is not composed wholly of silk, but is composed in part of a material or materials other than silk; provided further, that if the hosiery or the surface thereof is composed of two or more fabrics or materials, each in substantial quantity, and the name of each of the materials is used to describe it, then in that case the names of the materials shall be printed in equally conspicuous type and arranged in the following manner, to-wit: The prevailing material shall be named first and followed by the name of the other material or materials in the order of their predominance. (Sept. 22, 1937.)

2054. False and Misleading Brands or Labels and Advertising—Hosiery.—Standard Hosiery Mills, Inc., a corporation, engaged in the business of manufacturing hosiery and in the sale and distribution thereof in interstate commerce in competition with other corporations, individuals, firms, and partnerships likewise engaged, entered into the following agreement to cease and desist from the alleged unfair methods of competition as set forth therein.

Standard Hosiery Mills, Inc., in soliciting the sale of and selling its hosiery in interstate commerce, agreed to cease and desist from the use of the word "silk" either alone or in connection or conjunction with the words "Pure Thread" or with any other word or words or in any way as descriptive of said hosiery so as to import or imply that said hosiery is composed of silk, the product of the cocoon of the silk worm, when such is not the fact; provided that if said hosiery is composed in substantial part of silk, and the word "silk" is used to describe such silk content, then in that case the word "silk" shall be immediately accompanied by some other word or words printed in type equally as conspicuous as that in which the word "silk" is printed so as to indicate clearly that said hosiery is not composed wholly of silk but is composed in part of a material or materials other than silk; provided further, that if said hosiery is composed of two or more fabrics or materials, each in substantial quantity, and the name of each of the materials is used to describe it, then in that case, the names of the materials shall be printed in equally conspicuous type and arranged in the following manner, to wit: The prevailing material shall be named first and followed by the name of the other material or materials in the order of their predominance. (Sept. 22, 1937.)

2055. False and Misleading Brands or Labels and Advertising—Men's Hosiery.—Walton Hosiery Mills, Inc., a corporation, engaged in the business of manufacturing men's hosiery and in the sale and distribution thereof in interstate commerce in competition with other

Walton Hosiery Mills, Inc., in soliciting the sale of and selling its products in interstate commerce, agreed to cease and desist from the use of the words "Silk Reinforced With Englo" either alone or in connection or conjunction with any other word or words as a mark, stamp or brand for its hosiery so as to import or imply that said hosiery is composed of a predominating quantity of silk reinforced with a smaller quantity of another material, when such is not the fact. The said corporation also agreed to cease and desist from the use of the word "Silk" either alone or in connection or conjunction with the word "Englo" or with any other word or words or in any way as descriptive of its hosiery or the surface thereof so as to import or imply that the said hosiery or the surface thereof is composed of silk, the product of the cocoon of the silk worm, when such is not the fact; provided that if said hosiery, or the surface thereof, is composed in substantial part of silk, and the word "Silk" is used as descriptive of such silk content, then in that case the word "Silk" shall be immediately accompanied by some other word or words printed in type equally as conspicuous as that in which the word "Silk" is printed so as to indicate clearly that the hosiery or surface described is not composed wholly of silk but is composed of a material or materials other than silk. (Sept. 23, 1937.)

Max D. Montague and Nathan N. Wallack, in soliciting the sale of and selling their products in interstate commerce, agreed to cease and desist from the use, in their advertising matter or otherwise, of the word "free" which refers to articles represented to be given without cost to the purchasers of other merchandise, when in fact the cost of said articles is included in the selling price of the merchandise. (Sept. 23, 1937.)

2057. False and Misleading Brands or Labels—Hosiery.—Garant Hosiery Mills, a corporation, engaged in the business of knitting hosiery and in the sale and distribution thereof in interstate commerce, in competition with other corporations, individuals, firms, and partnerships likewise engaged, entered into the following agreement to cease and desist from the alleged unfair methods of competition as set forth therein.

Garant Hosiery Mills, in soliciting the sale of and selling its hosiery in interstate commerce, agreed to cease and desist from the use of the words "English Rib" either alone or in connection or conjunction with any other word or words or in any way as a mark, stamp or brand for said hosiery so as to import or imply that said hosiery is made in England and in accordance with the process or method of making, in a single operation, finished hosiery capable of being accomplished only by English style machines; provided that, if said hosiery is made elsewhere than in England, but on English style machines, and the words "English Rib" are used as descriptive thereof, then in that case said words shall be accompanied by some other word or words printed in type equally as conspicuous as that in which the words "English Rib" are printed so as to indicate clearly the country in which said hosiery is made. (Sept. 24, 1937.)

2058. False and Misleading Brands or Labels and Advertising—Fur Products.—G. Fox & Co., Inc., a corporation, engaged in the sale of furs, fur goods and fur pieces in interstate commerce. A. & J. Engel, Inc., a corporation, engaged in the business of shipping furs and fur goods from its place of business in the State of New York to the place of business of the aforesaid G. Fox & Co., Inc., at Hartford, Conn., and from which place of business at Hartford, Conn., the two said corporations have cooperated each with the other in the sale of said fur products, shipped from New York to Connecticut, in interstate commerce, in competition with other corporations, individuals, firms, and partnerships likewise engaged in the sale and distribution in interstate commerce of similar products. G. Fox & Co. and A. & J. Engel, Inc. entered into the following agreement to cease and desist from the alleged unfair methods of competition as set forth therein.

G. Fox & Co., Inc., in soliciting the sale of and selling its fur products in interstate commerce, agreed to cease and desist from representing, designating or describing said products in any way other than by the use of the correct name of the fur of which said products are composed as the last word of the description and which shall be printed in type that is not less conspicuous than that in which accompanying descriptive words are printed; and when any dye or blend is used to simulate another fur, the true name of the fur, appearing as the last word of the description and printed as aforesaid, shall be immediately preceded by the word "dyed" or "blended," compounded with the name of the simulated fur, as thus: Mink-Dyed Marmot Seal-Dyed Rabbit. G. Fox & Co., Inc. and A. & J. Engel, Inc., in soliciting the sale of and selling fur products in interstate commerce, agreed to cease and desist from representing, designating or describing said products in any way other than by the use of the correct name of the fur of which said products are composed, as the last word of the description and which shall be printed in type that is not less conspicuous than that in which the accompanying descriptive words are printed; and when any dye or blend is used to simulate another fur, the true name of the fur, appearing as the last word of the description and printed as aforesaid, shall be immediately preceded by the word "dyed" or "blended" compounded with the name of the simulated fur, as thus: Hudson Seal-Dyed Muskrat, Seal Dyed Rabbit. (Sept. 22, 1937.)

2059. False and Misleading Brands or Labels—Mattresses.—Reliable Mattress Co., a corporation, engaged in the business of manufacturing mattresses and upholstered couches and in the sale and distribution of said products in commerce, in competition with other corporations, individuals, firms, and partnerships, likewise engaged, entered into the following agreement to cease and desist from the alleged unfair methods of competition as set forth therein.

Reliable Mattress Co., in soliciting the sale of and selling its mattresses in interstate commerce, agreed to cease and desist from selling or supplying its customers for sale to others, mattresses to which are affixed or which bear any false, fictitious or misleading price in excess of the price at which said mattresses are intended to be sold and usually are sold at retail. (Sept. 27, 1937.)

2060. False and Misleading Advertising—Grinding Machines, Tool Sets, Etc.—Marvin Friedland, an individual, trading as Philadelphia Machinery Co., engaged in the sale and distribution of various types of machines, including electric grinding machines and tool sets, in commerce, in competition with other individuals, firms, partnerships, and corporations likewise engaged, entered into the following agreement to cease and desist from the alleged unfair methods of competition as set forth therein.

Marvin Friedland, in soliciting the sale of and selling his products in interstate commerce, agreed to cease and desist from stating or representing by means of advertising matter or otherwise

(a) that any of his products are given free to the purchaser of other products when the price of the former is included in the price of the latter, or the said product represented as being given free is included, not as a gratuity but for and in consideration of the purchase of some other product;

(b) that any of his products have a greater value than prices at which such or similar products are usually sold or were intended to be sold. (Sept. 27, 1937.)

2. Scientifically trained men are in big demand;

3. Scientifically trained investigators are always at a premium;
 4. After studying this course, one will be in big demand;
 5. The nation needs more handwriting experts;
 6. After studying this course, one will be in a position to charge large fees for professional services;
 7. The nation needs trained men in Scientific Crime Detection; or
 8. The field is crying for scientifically trained men;
- (b) By direct statement or by reasonable inference, that one can learn fingerprinting only by studying a course such as this, or that no established fingerprint bureaus train their own experts as required, or that—
1. Personal training in an established Bureau requires years of effort;
 2. No resident schools offer courses in Scientific Crime Detection;
- (c) That graduates of this Institute are furnished any "official" credentials;
- (d) That everyone who has studied this course—
1. Will be mentally equipped to give the world expert professional advice;
 2. Will be prepared to qualify before high tribunals as an authority;
- (c) That, sooner or later, every county will have a complete Scientific Crime Detection Laboratory, or that they would have now, if the personnel were available;
- (f) That, sooner or later—
1. Every important town will have its corps of experts;
 2. Every big industry will employ fingerprint experts and scientifically trained investigators;
 3. Every city and town will require its citizens to have their fingerprints filed in their respective Bureaus of Identification;
 4. Every citizen of the United States will be compelled to have his or her fingerprints taken;
- (g) That students may be assured of obtaining a job after graduating, either because of a great "need" for men so trained, or otherwise;
- (h) That the type of employment service offered by respondent is not offered by any other similar institution;
- (i) That the work of a fingerprint expert is as simple as looking up a word in a dictionary;
- (j) That respondent's Enrollment officers meet to discuss individually the failure of prospective students to enroll;
- (k) That anything is given free when in truth and in fact the price thereof is included in the purchase price paid for the course, or that—
1. Students are given, free, one year's subscription to "The Detective";
 2. A valuable book is given free to graduates;
- (l) That students of this course receive confidential reports and information intended for law enforcement bodies only;
- (m) That after graduating one will have become the supreme master of Scientific Crime Detection in his locality;
- (n) That this course teaches every phase of the science of fingerprinting;
- (o) That everyone who studies this course—
1. Will become a master psychologist;
 2. Will have a thorough knowledge of all important phases of secret service work; or
 3. Will be capable of maintaining any fingerprint bureau in the United States—no matter how large, and no matter how many people you may employ;
- (p) That these lessons comprise the finest training obtainable in this science;
- (q) By direct statement or by reasonable inference that training is offered in the work of the United States Secret Service, or that respondent's training will qualify the student for a position with said Service. (July 7, 1937.)

(a) That the use of Dr. Wright's Irrigation Outfit will keep the inside of the body or the colon clean; or constitutes an internal bath;

(b) That failure to keep the inside of the body clean, and free from impurities will necessarily cause indigestion, appendicitis, biliousness, headache, rheumatism, colds, catarrh, sore throat, influenza, la grippe, pneumonia, malarial and all kinds of fevers and other disorders, typhoid, typhus, scarlet fever, piles, dysentery, lung and throat troubles, boils, and carbuncles, or that the best physicians now say that nearly all diseases come from an overloading of the system with an accumulation of retained impurities;

(c) That every dose of physic sets up an irritation the whole length of the intestinal tract and renders the digestive functions weak and disordered;

(d) That the colon can be effectively washed only by the use of Dr. Wright's New Colon Syringe;

(e) That the use of Dr. Wright's Irrigation Outfit is absolutely free from all objections, or that the "New Internal Bath" is superseding all other methods;

(f) That the use of the high enema in routine of practice by Dr. Wright has led to the general introduction of what is known as Dr. Wright's Colon Syringe;

(g) That all physicians familiar with the results that come from the use of the high enema as used in the hospitals recommend the use of Dr. Wright's new colon syringe for cleansing the system from impurities;

(h) That irrigation alone can flush and cleanse the intestinal pouches of dangerous bacteria;

(i) That more advanced doctors who look to natural methods of healing rather than drugs and serums are convinced that colonic irrigation is the only sure way of checking auto-intoxication;

(j) That colonic irrigations flush the sides of the intestinal walls leaving them toned up thus preventing absorption;

(k) That thousands of cases are on record where colonic irrigation has caused the patient to improve where all other forms of treatment had failed;

(l) That use of Dr. Wright's Irrigation Outfit will add years to the life, or remove the poisons that have been accumulating in the system for ages;

(m) That Toxemia is the cause of human illness;

(n) That use of Dr. Wright's Irrigation Outfit constitutes a new and improved method of flushing the colon and administering an enema;

(o) That use of Dr. Wright's Irrigation Outfit will afford relief from troubles that have become chronic and supposed to be incurable;

(p) That use of Dr. Wright's Irrigation Outfit will cure those suffering from consumption, rheumatism, catarrh, constipation, dysentery in its worst forms, emaciation, obesity, female disorders, biliousness, kidney troubles, headaches, nervousness, etc.;

(q) That appendicitis, diarrhoea, all forms of fever and nearly all acute diseases can be prevented or immediately relieved by the use of Dr. Wright's Irrigation Outfit, or that it removes the cause of such ailments;

(r) That Dr. Wright's Irrigation Outfit will cure progressive self-poisoning;

(s) That Dr. Wright's Irrigation Outfit is an effective treatment for colds, biliousness, sick headache, neuralgia, dysmenorrhoea, chlorosis, gastritis, dyspepsia, persistent constipation, congestion and inflammation of the kidneys and bladder, cholera infantum, summer diarrhoea, convulsions, infantile colic, cholera morbus and intestinal infusoria;

(t) That use of Dr. Wright's Irrigation Outfit is advisable for pneumonia, la grippe, bilious colic, gastritis, inflammation of the liver, intestinal catarrh, obstruction of the intestines in all cases, gall stones, paralysis and cancer of the stomach;

(u) That daily flushings should be resorted to at the outset of every disease for at least one week, or until there is improvement, and then every other day and finally once a week until fully recovered;

(v) That Dr. Wright's Irrigation Outfit is a competent treatment for inflammation of the bowels, womb, ovaries, bladder or kidneys, or a competent treatment for fevers;

(w) That use of Dr. Wright's Irrigation Outfit will cause a cold to disappear, or convert influenza or grippe into a simple mild attack;

(x) That use of Dr. Wright's Irrigation Outfit will cause neuralgia, gout and rheumatism to yield gracefully, or constitute a competent treatment for jaundice and rheumatism;

(y) That use of Dr. Wright's Irrigation Outfit will speedily remove the cause or check the course of diarrhoea, cure cholera infantum, and usually abort an attack of inflammation of the kidneys in a few days;

(z) That Dr. Wright's Irrigation Outfit constitutes a competent treatment for gall stones, inflammation of the liver, bowels, appendicitis, etc., and all diseases located above the bowels;

(aa) That use of Dr. Wright's Irrigation Outfit will usually abort mental attacks in the case of incipient insanity, or constitute a competent treatment for nervous disorders;

(bb) That use of Dr. Wright's Irrigation Outfit constitutes a competent treatment for worms, convulsions, and intestinal irritation, permits fevers to be avoided, and benefits every disease by its use;

(cc) That the use of Dr. Wright's Irrigation Outfit will eradicate the cause of disease originating in the alimentary canal;

(dd) That flushing the colon is not debilitating in any case;

(ee) That the use of Dr. Wright's Irrigation Outfit will preserve the health, or is a competent treatment for acute and chronic diseases;

(ff) That the use of the Wilhide Exhaler constitutes scientific deep breathing and lung culture;

(gg) That advantages of the Wilhide Exhaler are manifold; that its use strengthens the lungs, adds to the power of the voice, promotes the power of resisting disease, especially pulmonary disease, improves the entire health of the user, or is more effective than any other device known to physical culture for such purposes;

(hh) That the Wilhide Exhaler is a great improvement over any breathing tubes that have ever been made;

(ii) That the Wilhide Exhaler constitutes a complete pocket gymnasium;

(jj) That use of the Wilhide Exhaler will widen and strengthen the six million air cells in the lungs, increase their capacity and strengthen the elasticity of their tissue;

(kk) That the daily use of the Wilhide Exhaler for a short time insures a habit of deep breathing without its use;

(ll) That the use of the Wilhide Exhaler has most favorable results for catarrhal affections, enlarging the lungs, strengthening the vocal chords, and giving staying power to the voice;

(mm) That the Wilhide Exhaler is the only hope of many; that it has cured others and will cure the user; that daily use for months and even years may be necessary to establish a permanent cure, but faithfulness in its use will win its sure reward—health;

(nn) That the use of the Wilhide Exhaler can never prove harmful.

The respondent further agreed to cease and desist from representing directly or otherwise, that any ordained clergyman is connected with his business when such is not the case. (Aug. 27, 1937.)

(e) That the human body requires Nature's Minerals to be healthy, or that few people, if any, get the required amount of minerals in their daily diet;

(f) Is of more benefit than treatment by physicians;

(g) That this enterprise is being conducted as a corporation. (Oct. 18, 1937.)

01905. Vendor-Advertiser—Truss Appliance and Astringent Mixtures.—

E. O. Koch, an individual trading as The Easyhold Co. and Dr. Kaiser, Kansas City, Mo., vendor-advertiser, was engaged in selling an appliance designated The Easyhold Truss and an astringent mixture designated Hernaline, and agreed in soliciting the sale of and selling said products in interstate commerce to cease and desist from representing directly or otherwise:

(a) That the Easyhold Truss does away with binding spring bands and harsh plug pads;

(b) That the Easyhold Truss differs from ordinary trusses as sunshine from fog;

(c) That rupture will be cured by the use of the Easyhold Truss, or that people from all parts of the United States report their rupture cured;

(d) That the Easyhold Truss will cause rupture to disappear as if by magic;

(e) That the Easyhold Truss constitutes the discovery of a newer rupture method, other than such novelty as may be involved in the half-circle hip span spring worn in the upright position described;

(f) That Hernaline will aid nature in effecting a recovery from rupture or arouse the dormant forces of nature, bringing into activity nature's strengthening and healing power, causing the process of repair to quickly become active;

(g) That Hernaline will aid nature to strengthen and build up body tissue;

(h) That no charge is made for the Easyhold Truss or that persons receiving the Easyhold Truss on trial will not be out one penny if their rupture condition is not better in thirty days, unless and until all charges including postage are refunded the purchasers in the event of the return of the truss to the respondent under the terms of the agreement;

(i) That any article is given free by the respondent to purchasers of the Easyhold Truss, or that no money is to be paid now or ever for such article, unless the value, cost or price of such article is not included in the price paid for the Easyhold Truss and the return of such article is not required as a condition precedent to a refund in full of the price paid and the refund in full is made upon return of the Easyhold Truss only;

The respondent further agreed to cease and desist from using the name of a physician as a trade name, or from representing otherwise that a physician has a proprietary interest in respondent's business when such is not the case. (Oct. 20, 1937.)

(d) Representing that his product is—

1. A new bowel treatment;
2. A better way to health;
3. A pure vegetable food;
4. More than just an ordinary laxative;
5. Guaranteed;
6. A new vegetable corrective;
7. A food laxative;

8. A natural product;

9. More suitable for an individual than most of the food he eats;

10. Absolutely harmless regardless of how much or how long it is taken;

11. Entirely vegetable;

(e) Representing that his product has no equal for maintaining easy, normal action;

(f) Representing that his product is scientifically prepared with the pure vegetables best suited for overcoming constipation;

(g) Representing that his product contains those minerals, vitamins and food ingredients useful for toning up and invigorating the intestines, resulting in natural bowel movement without the use of laxatives thereafter;

(h) Representing that his product supplies food elements, which are often lacking in the diet, thereby helping to keep the system clean inside;

(i) Representing that his product affords a "safe" means of solving the problem of elimination;

(j) Representing that his product contains harmless food elements that help to correct harmful acid conditions in the upper bowel, soothe, and heal, feed and normalize the bowel condition, and give proper consistency to the bowel contents. (Oct. 26, 1937.)

1912. Vendor-Advertiser—Divining Rods and Information Relating to Location of Buried Treasure.—Frank Wyss, an individual, St. Joseph, Mo., vendor-advertiser, was engaged in selling divining rods and information relating to the location of buried treasure, and agreed in soliciting the sale of and selling said products in interstate commerce to cease and desist from representing directly or otherwise:

(a) That the divining rods sold or described by respondent work the same for everyone;

(b) That respondent furnishes information relative to scientific methods of locating buried treasure;

(c) That any instrument sold or described by respondent will indicate the presence of any metal unless such claim is clearly qualified by a statement as to the conditions necessary to the achievement of such results;

(d) That any device sold or described by respondent will indicate the location of oil or water;

(e) That all matter generates rays or vibrations similar to those emitted by radium;

(f) That anyone can determine the nature of hidden body by the type of "vibrations" emitted, or otherwise, except by digging it up, or that each kind of matter emits vibrations peculiar to itself;

(g) That anything is given "free" when in truth and in fact the price thereof is included in that of another article with which it is given, or when the recipient is required to make any payment or perform any service before qualifying to receive the so-called "free" article;

(h) That with the exceptions of the Telector, the Buried Treasure Finder and the Radio Gold Locator, any device sold or described by respondent is of any practical value in locating any metal or ore;

(i) That fortunes have been located by the use of the Magic Indicator;

(j) That there is any such phenomenon as a combination of personal magnetism, indicator magnetism and mineral magnetism, which set up an emotion of attraction for hidden wealth, or that there is any attraction set up such as that of the North Pole for the compass;

(k) That any device is sold by respondent on a yearly repair guarantee;

(l) That any device sold or described by respondent carries magnetic currents from the body to a proper conductor as a negative, or that such currents cause the Magic Indicator to point out the hiding place of wealth or anything else;

(m) That any device sold or described by respondent indicates the presence of metal by magnifying nervous or muscular reactions of the operator;

(n) That any device sold or described by respondent indicates the presence of metal by serving as a medium for psychic sensitivity to said metals on the part of the operator. (Oct. 26, 1937.)

01913. Vendor-Advertiser—System for Rupture Service.—Capt. W. A. Collings, Inc., a corporation, Box 58-C, Watertown, N. Y., vendor-advertiser, was engaged in selling Capt. (a) That the Collings System can be relied upon to "end", "stop" or "rid" one of rupture worries, troubles or burdens in any manner or connection to assert or imply that the person will not again be worried, troubled or burdened with recurring rupture conditions;

(b) That the Collings System can be relied upon to "end", "stop", or "rid" one of a rupture in any manner or connection to assert or imply that the person will never again suffer any recurring rupture conditions;

(c) That the Collings System does more than aid nature in reducing a reducible rupture by restoring and holding the intestine in its normal position, and by counter-irritant effect and massage to increase blood flow in that area to tone, strengthen and contract the muscular structure around the opening through which the hernia has protruded;

(d) That the Collings System can do more than support, for purposes of relief from discomfort, an irreducible rupture;

(e) That Collings pads are especially designed to meet every possible rupture condition, unless limited to reducible rupture or irreducible ruptures that can be supported;

(f) That respondent's treatment is offered on the basis of a "no risk trial," so long as the purchaser is required to make payment therefor with the privilege of applying for a refund in case of dissatisfaction, or that under such conditions one does not risk a dollar;

(g) That the mere fitting of the Collings appliance will immediately remedy the ruptured conditions and permit a person to "suddenly" remove the appliance;

(h) That a truss supplied in accordance with measurements furnished by mail in all cases fit as well as though made after a personal examination by the same expert;

(i) That any specified results can be "guaranteed";

(j) That any of Collings' rupture appliances will reduce fat;

(k) That the sole impulse of the writers of published testimonials is to assist suffering humanity. (Oct. 26, 1937.)

(b) That Sulpho-Sol is beneficial in the treatment of rheumatism or "rheumatic conditions";

(c) That "this form of" iodine is a vital ingredient in the body metabolism;

(d) That Sulpho-Sol is an effective or inexpensive remedy in the treatment of arthritis unless limited to arthritis due to sulphur deficiency;

(e) That the ingredients of Sulpho-Sol:

1. Are non-toxic;

2. Are non-heart depressing; or

3. Are safe to take, unless limited to Sulpho-Sol when taken as directed;

(f) That Sulpho-Sol:

1. Relieves arthritis; or

2. Brings blessed relief, unless limited to arthritis due to sulphur deficiency.

(Oct. 27, 1937.)

01915. Vendor-Advertiser—Books and Printed Matter.—H. T. Roberts, an individual, trading as H. T. Roberts & Co., Box 203, Frenchburg, Ky., vendor-advertiser, was engaged in selling Books and Printed Matter, and agreed in soliciting the sale of and selling said products in interstate commerce to cease and desist from representing directly or otherwise:

(a) That prospective agents are paid for distributing circulars or that remuneration is other than commissions on goods sold through the circulars they distributed;

(b) That respondent's Mystic Perfume Nuggets will subdue the odors of cooking, tobacco smoke or home brewing, or will discourage moths, flies or mosquitoes;

(c) That respondent's book will enable one to make $50 a week selling snapshots;

(d) That respondent's book "How To Be A Successful Agent" will tell one how or enable one to earn $100 a week;

(e) That purchasers of respondent's book "Twenty-four Ways to Make Money" can make $50 a week at home in their spare time;

(f) That respondent guarantees that those who own and study his "Library of Business Opportunities" will have a prosperous future;

(g) That respondent's Library of "Business Opportunities" is a guide to making $12,184 or $19,000 or any other large sums;

(h) That respondent's book "The Key to Business Opportunities" will open the door to a real financial position or that many persons have achieved prosperity because of reading the book;

(i) That respondent's "Buyers' Guide" includes information as where one may obtain a free diamond ring or where one can sell gulena pigs at $2.00 a pair;

(j) That respondent's book "How to Get Yourself a Better Job" is given "free" and "postpaid";

(k) That respondent's book "How to Get Yourself a Better Job" gives its readers a strange power or enables them to immediately get good jobs after months of failure, or will show one how to successfully secure or improve a job or position, or reveals the secret of successful business, or that persons applying the principles of the book have been successful in securing large salaried positions through its use. (Oct. 27, 1937.)

01916. Vendor-Advertiser—Medicinal Preparations.—Warner's Safe Remedies Co., a corporation, 82 St. Paul St., Rochester, N. Y., vendor-advertiser, was engaged in selling medicinal preparations designated Warner's Digestive Tablets and Warner's Compound, and agreed in soliciting the sale of and selling said products in interstate commerce to cease and desist from representing directly or otherwise:

- (a) That Warner's Compound is the "best known" product of its kind;
- (b) That Warner's Compound is made of "natural Herbs";
- (c) Inferentially or otherwise, that Warner's Compound will clean out all body poisons;
- (d) That Warner's Compound stimulates the liver;
- (e) Inferentially or otherwise, that certain stated symptoms are always indicative of an ailing condition of the kidneys, when in fact such symptoms may be indicative of other conditions;
- (f) That Warner's Digestive Tablets will relieve stomach "troubles", unless the said "troubles" are specifically stated in direct connection therewith and the representation so qualified as to indicate that the tablets will be a relief only when the conditions are due to gastric hyperacidity;
- (g) That Warner's Tablets are compounded according to the formula of a "world famous" specialist;
- (h) Inferentially or otherwise, that poor digestion is always due to lack of tone in the general system.

The respondent further agreed to cease and desist from using the word "digestive" as a part of the trade name for the product heretofore known as "Warner's Digestive Tablets."

The respondent further agreed to cease and desist from representing through the use of the word "laboratories", or in any other manner, that the respondent owns, controls, or operates a chemical workroom or place devoted to experimental study in any branch of natural science or to the application of scientific principles in the testing, analysis and preparation of the products, unless and until the respondent shall own, control or operate such a place or places. (Oct. 29, 1937.)

2. New;
3. Harmless;
4. The Hollywood Method;
5. Safe;

(d) That the use of REDUCE-EASIES will enable a person to reduce as if by magic;

(e) That a reduction in weight may be accomplished by REDUCE-EASIES without dieting or exercise. (Nov. 3, 1937.)

01918. Vendor-Advertiser—Paper Fasteners and Accessories.—The Bump Paper Fastener Co., a corporation, 1832-A, 12th St., La Crosse, Wis., vendor-advertiser, was engaged in selling Bump Paper Fasteners and Accessories, and agreed in soliciting the sale of and selling said product in interstate commerce to cease and desist from representing directly or otherwise:

(a) That an amazing invention opens a $10,000,000.00 market for agents of The Bump Paper Fastener Company;

(b) That for one who is an agent of The Bump Paper Fastener Company there is no competition;

(c) That its sales plan should make an agent an average of $89.00 or more weekly or any other sum unless reliable records of the sales of its agents show such to be the average net return of its full-time agents under normal conditions;

(d) That by any sales plan a prospective agent risks nothing when in fact a purchase price is charged the agent for the product and obtained before delivery thereof;

(e) That any of its products separately or in combination will clinch the whole stapler market;

(f) That because of its process of manufacture or any other reason, its products may be sold for 50% less than other makes;

(g) That a person will be made an exclusive agent unless in direct connection therewith it is stated that such is not the case unless and until it is shown to respondent's satisfaction that the agent works consistently and produces satisfactory results.

It is further agreed that respondent will not as an inducement to sell its products or to procure agents, represent that it will conduct a National Advertising Campaign for the benefit of its agents unless and until a contract for the same has been entered into or the same is actually carried on. (Nov. 4, 1937.)

Von Castleberg and Julianna Von Castleberg co-partners, trading and doing business as the Murvon Seed Co., Harbor View, South Norwalk, Conn., vendor-advertisers, were engaged in selling Japanese Rose Seeds, and agreed in soliciting the sale of and selling said product in interstate commerce to cease and resist from representing directly or otherwise:

(a) That Japanese rose bushes will bloom in the winter unless in direct connection therewith it is stated that such is the case only in a warm climate or when cared for in a greenhouse;

(b) That Japanese rose bushes when three years old will have five or six hundred roses, or will have roses the year round;

(c) That Japanese roses are very rare. (Nov. 5, 1937.)

01920. Vendor-Advertiser—Medicinal Preparation.—Zo-Ak Co., a corporation, 62 W. 45th Street, New York, N. Y., vendor-advertiser, was engaged in selling Zo-Ak Tablets for Men and Women, and agreed in soliciting the sale of and selling said product in interstate commerce to cease and desist from representing directly or otherwise:

(a) That Zo-Ak Tablets stimulate the sexual desires or the sexual powers of either men or women, unless limited to cases where the sex powers are temporarily reduced but not lost;

(b) That the ovarian hormone has value for promoting or stimulating spermatogenesis and increased sexual powers in the male;

(c) That the Zo-Ak preparations, for men and women, represent the very latest development in gonadal replacement therapy;

(d) That the majority of cases of male impotence

1. Are due to endocrine sluggishness; or
2. Respond to glandular stimulation;

(e) That the female sex hormone is now definitely known to "control" the menstrual cycle;

(f) That menopause symptoms can now definitely be traced to a deficiency of the female sex hormone;

(g) That desiccated ovarian substance is active when taken by mouth, unless such statement is accompanied by citation of medical authorities supporting it;

(h) That Zo-Ak Tablets promote menstrual flow, unless the Estrin ingredient is increased to an amount approved by the medical profession as adequate to increase the flow;

(i) That Zo-Ak Tablets are of material value for secondary types of amenorrhoea, or oligomenorrhoea, or dysmenorrhoea, unless the Estrin ingredient is increased to an amount approved by the medical profession as adequate to increase the flow;

(j) That Zo-Ak Tablets excites normal sexual desire in frigid women;

(k) That Zo-Ak Tablets stimulates female fertility;

(l) That taking Zo-Ak Tablets alone increases the capacity of both partners (husband and wife) for parenthood;

(m) That Zo-Ak Tablets will prove effective in aiding conception in very many cases where apparent sterility exists;

(n) That the efficacy of Zo-Ak Tablets in sex gland stimulation, or oral administration, has been "proved";

(o) That there is any such thing as a "love hormone";

(p) That the "love hormone", or Zo-Ak or any of its ingredients, when given to human beings by mouth, produce a romantic mood or increased vitality for marriage performance, as distinguished from temporary stimulation;

(q) That men who feel themselves slipping, whose powers have gradually become impaired but are not lost, may be benefited by taking Zo-Ak Tablets, unless limited to their aphrodisiac action;

(r) That Zo-Ak Tablets gives a boost to the glandular system and strengthens important functions in men past forty, unless limited to the aphrodisiac action of the tablets;

(s) That Zo-Ak Tablets—

1. Promotes marital vigor and vitality, unless limited to their aphrodisiac action;

2. Produces a feeling of well-being in men or women; or

3. Aids efficiency of men and/or women in daily work;

(t) That Zo-Ak Tablets are either a competent or effective remedy for temporary impairment of vitality due to fatigue, overwork, or remediable weakness of the glandular system;

(u) That Zo-Ak is "the most" efficacious gland stimulator for women, when taken by mouth;

(v) That doctors prescribe the ingredients of Zo-Ak for treating "periodical" irregularities in women of all ages;

(w) That Zo-Ak is a competent remedy in the treatment of "periodical irregularities" in women of all ages;

(x) That the hormone, Estrin, which "we import from Europe" is conceded by medical authorities to be the "physiological regulator" of normal periods, or that it has any value as a "physiological regulator" or normal periods;

(y) That Zo-Ak Tablets are harmless;

(z) That the lack of a certain essential hormone makes women approaching 45 hard to live with; or that taking Zo-Ak Tablets provides relief, by merely replacing in the system the hormone it lacks, in the majority of cases;

DECISIONS OF THE COURTS

IN CASES INSTITUTED AGAINST OR BY THE COMMISSION

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION v. REAL PRODUCTS CORPORATION ET AL.¹

No. 280

(Circuit Court of Appeals, Second Circuit. June 7, 1937)

TRADE DESIGNATIONS—APPROPRIATION OF COMPETITOR'S—WHERE SECONDARY MEANING AND USE FALSE AND MISLEADING.

The use by automotive manufacturers, without consent of Champion Spark Plug Company, of trade designation "Champion" for their automotive and metal specialties, including spark plug cable sets, constituted unfair competition under Trade Commission Act, where use of word was false, deceptive, and misleading to retail trade and purchasing public and tended unfairly to divert trade to such manufacturers. (Federal Trade Commission Act of 1914, sec. 5, as amended by Act Feb. 13, 1925, sec. 2, 15 U. S. C. A. sec. 45).

TRADE DESIGNATIONS—APPROPRIATION OF COMPETITOR'S—WHERE SECONDARY MEANING AND USE FALSE AND MISLEADING—UNFAIR COMPETITION INFERENCE.

The use by automotive manufacturers, without consent of Champion Spark Plug Company, of trade designation "Champion" for kindred products, which was necessarily deceptive to public, indicated a purpose to use such designation unfairly in competition.

[618] TRADE DESIGNATIONS—APPROPRIATION OF COMPETITOR'S—WHERE SECONDARY MEANING AND USE FALSE AND MISLEADING—PUBLIC INTEREST RE DECEPTION OR PREJUDICE OF COMPETITORS—QUALITY OR HARMLESSNESS OF MISREPRESENTED PRODUCT—MATERIALITY.

The public was entitled to be protected against unfair practice of automotive manufacturers of using for their products identical name used by competitor for kindred products, either on ground of deception suffered by public or prejudice occasioned to competitors of such manufacturers, regardless of whether misrepresented product was inferior, or harmful to public.

TRADE DESIGNATIONS—APPROPRIATION OF COMPETITOR'S—WHERE SECONDARY MEANING AND USE FALSE AND MISLEADING—COPYRIGHT AS DEFENSE.

Where automotive manufacturers had engaged in unfair competition by using trade designation "Champion" for their products without consent of Champion Spark Plug Company, fact that such manufacturers had copyrighted box label "Champion Spark Plug Set" was no defense to proceeding by Trade Commission to compel them to desist from such unfair practice, since a copyright is not a license to engage in unfair competition.

(The syllabus, with substituted captions, is taken from 90 F.
(2d) 617)

On application by Commission seeking enforcement of order issued by it against Real Products Corporation and others, to cease and desist unfair practices in trade, order enforced.

Mr. W. T. Kelley, Chief Counsel, Federal Trade Commission, Mr. Martin A. Morrison, Assistant Chief Counsel, and Mr. John W. Hill-drop and Mr. James W. Nichol, all of Washington, D. C., for petitioner.

Mr. Irving Beck, President, Real Products Corporation, in pro. per. Before MANTON, L. HAND, and AUGUSTUS N. HAND, Circuit Judges.

MANTON, Circuit Judge:

Respondents are corporations, organized under the laws of the State of New York, engaged in joint enterprises, manufacturing automotive and metal specialties, including spark plug cable sets, which are sold and distributed throughout the various States of the United States. Their products are transported in interstate commerce from their place of business in New York.

The charge against them is the use of unfair methods of competition in the sale of their products in interstate commerce in violation of § 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act (38 Stat. 719; 15 U. S. C. A. § 45). The order entered directed that they cease and desist from (a) "Representing in any manner that the automotive and metal specialties, including spark plug cable sets, manufactured and sold by the respondents are the products of or are made by the Champion Spark Plug Company of Toledo, Ohio. (b) Using the word 'Champion' alone or in connection or conjunction with any other word or words * * * to describe or designate automotive and metal specialties, including spark plug cable sets, made by respondents, and from using any other word or words so as to import or imply that said products are made by the Champion Spark Plug Company of Toledo, Ohio. (c) Using and displaying the word 'Champion' in their advertising * * * on cartons, boxes or other containers * * *. (d) The use, by any method, manner or means of advertising * * * in newspapers and circulars, of the device or picture of a spark plug at the bottom of which a simulation of electricity is displayed and containing the word 'Champion' therein."

The Commission made complete and specific findings, which have evidence to support them, and which justify the order entered to cease and desist. The Champion Spark Plug Company has been in the field fifteen years, engaged in the manufacture of automotive and metal specialties, including spark plugs and porcelains and in their sale and distribution in interstate commerce. It applied the word and trade designation "Champion" to its products, including spark plugs and used it on its stationery and in its corporate name and on its cartons and printed advertising matter. The name thus signifies to the trade and purchasing public that such automotive and metal specialties including spark plugs and porcelains were the products of the Champion Spark Plug Company. There was evidence to support the finding that the respondents, without the permission or consent of the Champion Spark Plug Company, used and continued to use the trade designation [619] "Champion" for their automotive and metal specialties, including spark plug cable sets and on their price list, cartons and advertising matters.

The Commission found, with evidence to support it, that the use of the word "Champion" by respondents as set forth was false, deceptive and misleading to the retail trade and the purchasing public and had a tendency to and did deceive the purchasing public by creating the impression that the products of the respondents were those of the Champion Spark Plug Company. It had a like tendency to unfairly divert trade to respondents from their competitors.

False and misleading representations of respondents' products constituted an unfair method of competition within the intent and meaning of § 5 of the Act, as amended. Fed. Trade Comm. v. Realty Milling Co., 288 U. S. 212; Fed. Trade Comm. v. Winsted Hosiery Co., 258 U. S. 483; Indiana Quartered Oak Co. v. Fed. Trade Comm., 26 F. (2d) 340 (C. C. A. 2); cert. den. 278 U. S. 623. The use of an identical name for kindred products necessarily was deceptive to the public and indicated a purpose to use it unfairly in competition. Standard Oil Co. of N. M. v. Standard Oil Co. of Cal., 56 F. (2d) 973 (980 C. C. A. 10); DelMonte Special Food Co. v. California Packing Corp., 34 F. (2d) 774, 776 (C. C. A. 9). The purchasing public would be likely to buy respondent's product on the strength of the first user's reputation where the word "Champion" was connected with the sale of spark plugs, spark plug cable sets, and porcelains.

The existence of a public interest here may rest either on the deception suffered by the public (F. T. C. v. Royal Milling Co., 288 U. S. 212; cf. F. T. C. v. Klesner, 280 U. S. 19) or the prejudice occasioned to competitors. F. T. C. v. Raladam, 283 U. S. 643. On either ground the public is entitled to be protected against unfair practices and its interest in such protection is specific and substantial. F. T. C. v. Royal Milling Co. supra. Nor is it necessary that the product misrepresented be inferior or harmful to the public. The deceptive misrepresentation suffices. See National Silver Co. v. F. T. C., 88 F. (2d) 425, 427 (C. C. A. 2).

The principle of the Raladam case, supra, that potential competitors are equally to be protected with actual competitors, is an integral part of the law of unfair competition. All persons are free to enter the trade at any time, and are therefore potential competitors. Here, however, it is clear that competition was wrongfully affected. The respondents obtained an advantage over their competitors.

Finally, it is not material that respondents have copyrighted the box label "Champion Spark Plug Set". A copyright is not a license to engage in unfair competition. Marietta Mfg. Co. v. F. T. C., 50 F. (2d) 641 (C. C. A. 7); N. Fluegelman & Co. v. F. T. C., 37 F. (2d) 59, 61 (C. C. A. 2).

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION v. MID WEST MILLS, INC.

No. 6115

(Circuit Court of Appeals, Seventh Circuit. June 15, 1937¹)

CEASE AND DESIST ORDERS—VALIDITY—OBJECTIONABLE METHODS IN COMPETITION AND COMMERCE AND PUBLIC INTEREST AS PREREQUISITES.

To validate Federal Trade Commission's order to cease and desist from using objectionable trade methods, unfair methods must be used in competition in interstate commerce and Commission's proceeding to prevent use thereof must appear to be in public interest (Federal Trade Commission Act, sec. 5, as amended, 15 U. S. C. A. sec. 45).

MISLEADING TRADE OR CORPORATE NAMES—QUALIFICATIONS—ADEQUACY—"JOBBER AND CONVERTERS" AS, FOR "MILLS" NAME.

A corporation, engaged in business as jobber of materials used in making furniture and "converter" of patterns produced by mills under name "Mid West Mills, Inc.," should use not merely words "jobbers and converters", but additional appropriate words, clearly conveying to public fact that it neither owns nor operates mills, on all its stationery, invoices, and other printed matter, to avoid false impression created by use of word "Mills" in such name.

A "converter" is one who changes patterns produced by mills to give them different construction of material and coloring.

On application by Commission for enforcement of order directing Mid West Mills, Inc., to cease and desist from representing itself as manufacturer or mill owner by use of such corporate name, petition denied without prejudice to entry of order by Commission in accordance with opinion.

Before EVANS and MAJOR, Circuit Judges, and LINDLEY, District Judge.

EVANS, Circuit Judge:

After investigation and hearing, the Federal Trade Commission entered an order directing respondent to cease and desist representing itself as a manufacturer or mill owner by the use of its corporate name "Mid West Mills, Inc." The part of the order of which complaint is made reads as follows:

[724] "It is ordered that the respondent, Mid West Mills, Inc., a corporation, its officers, agents, representatives, servants, and employees, in connection with the offering for sale and sale of upholstering fabrics, wooden frames, padding, felt, springs, and all other such material, relative to the construction of furniture, in interstate commerce, cease and desist from:

"Representing, directly or indirectly, through and by use of its corporate or trade name, through letterheads, circulars, advertising literature, or in any other manner, that it is a manufacturer, mill operator, or mill owner."

Petitioner is here with an application to enforce its cease and desist order which respondent has refused to obey.

Petitioner's order is largely based upon the respondent's use of the word "Mills" in its corporate name, because it is suggestive, if not indicative, of a fact which does not exist, namely, that respondent owns and operates mills where its goods are manufactured. Respondent admits it has no mills and manufactures none of the goods which it sells, yet it denies that it thereby violates any unfair trade practices such as are designated by section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

Respondent is a jobber and wholesaler of upholstering fabrics, wooden frames, padding, felt, springs, etc., and all materials used in the construction of furniture. It sells through salesmen in Illinois and other states and is in substantial competition with others engaged in like business. It urges that any possibility of deception through the use of the word "Mills" in its corporate name is overcome by the fact that all the garment labels, tickets, letterheads, invoices, and other printed matter (except envelopes) contain the words "Jobbers and Converters" directly under its corporate name.

In 1922, respondent's president purchased the good will of a defunct corporation, including its name "Mid West Mills, Inc.," and he caused to be formed another corporation by the name of "Mid West Mills Supply, Inc." which name was changed to "Mid West Mills, Inc." in 1927. It conducted a gross business of $525,000 in 1934, and $550,000 in 1935.

We reproduce the names as they appear on letterheads, envelopes, and ticket and garment labels.

Letterhead:

MID WEST MILLS, INC.
—Jobbers and Converters—

Envelope Heading:

MID WEST MILLS, INC.

Garment or Fabric Label Heading:

MID WEST MILLS, INC.
Jobbers and Converters

A converter is described as one who changes patterns produced by the mills. He is one who "changes patterns around to give them a different construction of material and coloring." "He converts the patterns and changes them."

The decision in Federal Trade Commission v. Royal Milling Company, 288 U. S. 212, controls the disposition of this appeal. In that case the complaint of the Commission was directed to the use of the words "Milling Company" by one who was not engaged in milling. The Court of Appeals (58 F. (2d) 581) set aside the order of the Commission on the ground that it did not appear to be in the interest of the public. On appeal the decree of the Circuit Court of Appeals was reversed with directions to enter an order directing the milling company to accompany each use of the name "Milling Company" with an "explicit representation that respondent was not a grinder of the grain from which the flour prepared and put out is made, such representation to be fixed as to form and manner by the commission."

The substance of the holding is that while it constituted unfair methods of competition to use words suggestive of activities not followed by the user, yet the Commission should go no further than is reasonably necessary to correct the evils and preserve the rights of competitors and the public; that this can be done in certain cases where value has attached to a trade name by requiring proper qualifying words to be used in immediate connection with the objectionable word in the user's name.

As we construe this decision a valid order of the Commission must be supported by three essential facts: (a) The objectionable methods must be used in competition in interstate commerce. (b) The methods adopted by the user in interstate commerce must be unfair. (c) The proceeding by the Commission to prevent the use of such methods must appear to be in the interest of the public.

[725] We are satisfied that respondent's use of the word "Mills" was prima facie unfair, and it was practiced by the respondent in interstate commerce. If there were no ameliorating circumstances, we would also unhesitatingly say that the Commission's action was in the interest of the public. Respondent's avoidance of liability must find support, if at all, in the fact that it acquired the name through the purchase of a business, and that to a certain extent, it did inform the public that it was merely a jobber and a converter.

It should, we think, however, have gone further. To avoid the false impression which the use of the word "Mills" created, it should have conveyed information to purchasers and prospective customers that it did not own or operate a mill from which its products came.

We are convinced that respondent may avoid any false impressions and implications arising from the use of the word "Mills" if it uses on all of its stationery, garment labels, tickets, invoices, and other printed matter, these words "Jobbers and Converters, Not Mill Owners or Mill Operators." There would then be no possibility of deception. Of course these are not the only words which might be adopted. The Commission must in the first instance determine whether the words sufficiently convey the information that respondent neither owns nor operates a mill.

We are at a loss to understand why the respondent should insist on using the word "Mills" after complaint has been filed with the Commission and objections made to it by that body. It has, it is true, for some years been using the name, and it may be that it believes its business is closely identified with the name.

If it does not see fit to voluntarily strike the word "Mills" from its name, it should clearly inform its prospective customers of the true facts. This can only be done by adding appropriate words such as suggested in the previous paragraph which will leave no room for doubt.

The petition is denied, but without prejudice to an order being entered by the Commission in accordance with the views here expressed and which will direct the addition of appropriate words which will clearly convey to the public the fact that respondent neither owns or operates a mill.

LOTTERY SCHEMES IN MERCHANDISING—SALE HOSIERY THROUGH PUNCH CARDS WITH WINNING NUMBERS PLAN, FURNISHED FREE TO VENDOR'S SOLICITOR OR AGENT

It is an unfair method of competition to sell hosiery in interstate commerce by means of punch cards sent to prospects enabling the person selling the card and persons pushing out designated numbers to receive hosiery free and calling for payment according to the numbers punched, though the cards are furnished free and the recipients of the cards determine whether or not to use them.

MAJOR, Circuit Judge:

This matter comes before the Court upon the petition to review an order to cease and desist entered by the Federal Trade Commission under authority of section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission (15 U. S. C. A., Section 45).

Petitioner is a corporation located in the city of Chicago, Illinois, engaged in the sale and distribution of hosiery and lingerie throughout the United States. In the conduct of its business it distributes to the public through the United States mails certain literature, instructions, and sales outfits including paper punch cards, order blanks, and advertisements containing illustrations of hosiery and lingerie, together with samples of fabrics and circulars explaining its plan of selling said merchandise and the allowing of premiums or prizes to the operators of the punch board. In order to obtain the address of "prospects" a letter is sent to a woman offering her a pair of ladies' silk hosiery free on condition that she send petitioner the address of ten other women. Upon compliance with this requirement the person is sent a pair of hosiery as promised, and each of the ten other "prospects" are sent the sales literature including a punch card with printed instructions for its operation. This card contains numbers from one to sixty and when pushed out of the card reveal the amount which is to be paid, ranging from one cent to fifteen cents according to the number punched. Certain numbers are free and the operators who push these numbers are required to pay nothing, but have the same chance with the others in winning. $5.95 is the amount collected when all the numbers are sold. The person who sells the card receives two pair of ladies' silk hose free, and certain other persons who push out certain designated numbers likewise receive their hose free.

² Rehearing denied July 27, 1937.

That the plan involves a game of chance or the sale of a chance to procure petitioner's merchandise is clearly shown, and that the operation of the plan is contrary to established public policy of the United States and the varied states and contrary to the criminal statutes of many of the states is conceded. Petitioner's sales were increased from $25,000.00 in 1932, the year it started in business, to $150,000.00 in 1934, and even more in 1935. The Commission found, among other things, that petitioner is engaged in offering for sale and selling its products in interstate commerce in competition with other persons likewise engaged; that the punch card system of obtaining the business is a species of gambling which many of its competitors do not use for the reason that the method is unethical, unfair, and in violation of law, and that said method injuriously affects the business of petitioner's competitors by diverting business from them. On the basis of these findings of fact it issued the order to cease and desist, which this Court is asked to vacate in these proceedings.

The contested issues as stated by petitioner are: First, does the method of business followed by the petitioner constitute an unfair method of competition? Second, does the evidence show that petitioner is engaged in competition with others in interstate commerce?

The Act itself provides that the findings of the Commission as to the facts, if supported by testimony, shall be conclusive. This provision of the Act is very forcibly enunciated in Federal Trade Commission v. Algoma Lumber Company, 291 U. S. 67, where the Court on Page 73 said:

The findings of the Commission as to facts, if supported by testimony, shall be conclusive. 15 U. S. C. A. § 45. The Court of Appeals, though professing adherence to this mandate, honored it, we think, with lip service only. In form the court determined that the finding of unfair competition had no support whatever. In fact what the court did was to make its own appraisal of the testimony, picking and choosing for itself among uncertain and conflicting inferences. Statute and decision (Federal Trade Comm'n v. Pacific States Paper Trade Assn., 273 U. S. 52, 61, 63) forbid that exercise of power.

Petitioner, as we understand its position, does not attack the sufficiency of the evidence to justify the findings of the Commission, and under the statute and court decision above cited there is no occasion for us to do so. However, we have investigated the record to the extent of satisfying ourselves that the evidence fully justifies the findings as made. We assume that the question which petitioner seeks to raise is that the facts as found by the Commission do not constitute an unfair method of competition. With this position we are unable to agree. We gather from petitioner's brief that it should not be held accountable for any consequences which result from the activity which it originates. It is claimed, for instance, that there can be no harm in the mailing of the punch cards; that whether they are used for disposing of merchandise by chance is one to be determined by the recipient of such cards and that, inasmuch as the cards are furnished free, petitioner is not engaged in a lottery or in disposing of its merchandise by chance. There is no merit in such contention. The petitioner originated and set in operation the scheme or device in question. Moreover, it sent through the mail specific instructions for the operation of the plan and reaped the benefits from its execution.

Under the authority of Federal Trade Commission v. Keppel, 291 U. S. 304, both questions which petitioner raises must be answered in the affirmative. Other cases might be cited sustaining the order in question, but, in view of the law as announced in the Keppel case, it would be useless reiteration so to do.

The order of the Commission is affirmed.

ELECTRO THERMAL COMPANY v. FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION ¹

No. 8333

(Circuit Court of Appeals, Ninth Circuit. July 19, 1937.)

EVIDENCE—ADMITTED FACTS AND CIRCUMSTANCES—WEIGHTS AND INFERENCES.

The weight of admitted facts and circumstances, as well as reasonable inferences therefrom, in proceedings by Federal Trade Commission to terminate unfair methods of competition in commerce, is for commission, not court (Act Sept. 26, 1914, sec. 5, 38 Stat. 719, 15 U. S. C. A. sec. 45).

COMPETITION—MANUFACTURE AND SALE OF DEVICES ADAPTED FOR SAME PURPOSE, AS ESTABLISHING.

Evidence of definitely identified parties' manufacture and sale in interstate commerce of devices adapted to same purposes as that of company charged with unfair methods of competition in proceedings by Federal Trade Commission was sufficient to warrant finding of competition with respondent's device.

COMPETITIVE EFFECT—MISLEADING ADVERTISING CLAIMS—ACTUAL OR POTENTIAL COMPETITION AND UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES REASONABLY ADVANTAGING RESPONDENT COMPETITIVELY, AS SHOWING.

Direct evidence that misleading advertising claims by respondent in proceedings by Federal Trade Commission diverted business from competitors thereof is not required to justify cease and desist order; it being sufficient to show actual or potential competition and unfair trade practices reasonably tending to give respondent advantage in competition.

COMPETITION—LEGITIMACY OF AFFECTED—CROSS-EXAMINATION OF MANUFACTURER OF ASSERTED COMPETITIVE DEVICE RE POSSIBLE COMMISSION CONTROVERSY OR DIFFICULTY AS ESTABLISHING LEGITIMACY OR ILLEGITIMACY THEREOF AS ARTICLE OF COMMERCE.

The Federal Trade Commission examiner properly excluded questions on cross-[478]examination of manufacturer of device alleged to compete with that of company charged with making false advertising claims as to whether witness ever had controversy or difficulty with commission or was called before it in connection with selling of former device as not sufficiently definite nor proper way to show whether such device was legitimate article of commerce.

COMPETITION—LEGITIMACY OF AFFECTED—BURDEN.

The burden was on corporation charged by Federal Trade Commission with unfair methods of competition in commerce by making false advertising claims to promote sale of device, to show that alleged competing devices were not legitimate articles of commerce.

COMPETITION—LEGITIMACY OF AFFECTED—WHERE AFFIRMATIVE SHOWING RE RESPONDENT'S AND COMPETITIVE DEVICES.

The Federal Trade Commission's order to cease and desist from unfair methods of competition by making false advertising claims to promote sale of a device will not be set aside on ground that commission did not sufficiently inquire into questions whether alleged competitive devices were legitimate articles of commerce or that method of competition affecting only outlaws of commerce engaged in fraudulent or criminal activities is not within commission's jurisdiction, where evidence affirmatively showed that respondent's device and competitive devices were all legitimate articles of commerce and commission never complained of respondent's device.

ENFORCEMENT OF ORDER—INFORMAL PRAYER OF COMMISSION'S BRIEF IN PETITION FOR REVIEW—DISREGARD OF ORDER AS PREREQUISITE TO COURT'S COGNIZANCE.

The Federal Trade Commission's informal prayer in brief for affirmation and enforcement of its order to cease and desist from unfair methods of competition in commerce was properly before court on petition to set aside order without showing that petitioner had disregarded it; court having plenary jurisdiction regardless of which party brings cause before it.

Petition by the Electro Thermal Company to set aside order of Commission requiring petitioner to cease and desist from certain unfair methods of competition in commerce, denied and order affirmed.

Mr. Daniel Dougherty, of Los Angeles, Cal., for petitioner.

Mr. W. T. Kelley, Chief Counsel, Federal Trade Commission, Mr. Martin A. Morrison, Asst. Chief Counsel, Mr. Daniel Murphy, Mr. Morton Nesmith, and Mr. James W. Nichol, Sp. Attys., all of Washington, D. C. for respondent.

Before DENMAN, STEPHENS, and HEALY, Circuit Judges.

DENMAN, Circuit Judge:

This is a petition by Electro Thermal Company to set aside an order of the Federal Trade Commission requiring the petitioner to cease and desist from certain unfair methods of competition in commerce.

The Commission brought proceedings under the Act of September 26, 1914 (38 Stat. 719, sec. 5), 15 U. S. C. A. § 45, which gives it power to institute a hearing when it has reason to believe that any person, corporation, etc. is using an unfair method of competition in commerce and that a proceeding would be in the public interest. If the hearing develops facts in accordance with the belief, a cease and desist order may issue.

Electro Thermal Company was cited by the Commission to show cause why an order should not be entered against the use by the company of certain alleged false advertising claims to promote the sale of a device termed Thermal-Aid, the device being manufactured for use in connection with disorders of the prostate gland.

The hearing was had and the Commission made findings of fact substantially in accordance with the complaint, to this effect:

That the petitioner is a corporation of Ohio, engaged in the interstate sale and offering for sale of a device designated "Thermalaid," consisting of a hard rubber unit designed to be inserted in the rectum for the application of heat to the prostate gland and adjacent tissues. It is activated through electricity derived from ordinary electric current or from a battery supply where no electricity is available.

[479] That, "In the course and conduct of its business, the respondent is, and has been, in competition with other individuals, corporations and associations engaged in offering for sale and selling in commerce between and among the different States of the United States various therapeutic devices and appliances designed and intended for the treatment of the prostate gland."

That certain advertising claims issued by the respondent (petitioner here) in connection with its product were false and misleading, e. g.: "the prostate gland slows down in men past middle age and, if unchecked, will swell until surgery is needed"; "if you have a mild case, you may surprise yourself with new joy of living, new energy and enhanced power to do. If you have a fretful, serious, nagging case, by all means waste not one minute in getting Thermalaid"; "Another point worthy of emphasis is the effect of an operation on sexual strength. When you lose your prostate gland you bid goodbye forever to a vital part of the procreative system. In a very real sense the saying is true that a man is no longer a man when his prostate is gone."

It was specifically found that the unfair practices tended to divert trade to respondent, injuring its competitors.

Fake claims were also found to have been made as to the therapeutic effect of the devices on constipation and piles.

The Commission made no complaint of the "Thermalaid" device itself, the unfair practices being confined to advertising. The evidence shows and the Commission found that the use of the device had some salutary effect.

A cease and desist order, based upon the findings, was entered.

The Electro Thermal Company then filed in this court a petition for review of the order and prayed to have it set aside. It is not urged that the Commission erred in finding that the practices enjoined were unfair methods. It is contended, however, that there is no evidence to support the finding that competition existed between the company and others.

The statute provides that "the findings of the commission as to facts, if supported by the testimony, shall be conclusive." 15 U. S. C. A. § 45. "The weight to be given the facts and circumstances admitted, as well as the inferences reasonably to be drawn from them, is for the commission." Fed. Trade Com. v. Pacific Paper Assn., 273 U. S. 52, 63.

The finding of competition in the present case must be supported, if it is supported, solely upon testimony and stipulations relative to two devices used for the same general purposes as the Thermalaid. The first is before the Commission by stipulation. It is stipulated that:

The Williams Institute, Inc., is a corporation organized, existing and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of California, with the principal place of business at 1648 Idlewood Road, Glendale, California, and has been such for the past nine years. It is engaged in the sale of a device known as "The Simplex Prostate and Rectal Normalizer", which device is used in the treatment of prostatic troubles, by means of heat applied through the rectum. It was first placed on the market approximately six years ago, and is sold and shipped principally to doctors and practitioners, but in some cases to the laity, in states other than the State of California.

There is in evidence an advertisement for the Simplex Prostate and Rectal Normalizer claiming that the device "Relaxes tight muscles, calms frayed nerves and offers both a tonic and a sedative effect. A natural way to help prevent a hardened prostate. Indicated in rectal and prostate conditions where better circulation is essential. Of great value in obstinate, chronic constipation. Helpful in many cases of piles".

This stipulation and exhibit warrant an inference that the Simplex device is in competition with the Thermalaid.

The second alleged competitive device, shown by undisputed evidence is the "Prosager", produced by the Midwest Products Company, of Michigan, and shipped in interstate commerce. The device is applied to the tissues near the prostate by way of the rectum, and, by means of air pressure, massages those tissues. It is advertised and sold for treatment of the same ailments as those for which Thermalaid is supposed to be efficacious. Wallace D. Smith, the manufacturer of the Prosager, testified, over objection, that his company was in competition with Thermalaid.

The question on this branch of the case is whether there is sufficient evidence to warrant the Commission's finding of com[480]petition. Petitioner relies on Federal Trade Commission v. Raladam Co., 283 U. S., 643, where the commission cited the Raladam Co. for unfair competitive practices in vending and advertising an alleged obesity cure, representing it to be harmless and effective when in fact it was harmful. The Supreme Court held that the commission was without jurisdiction because it was not shown that the unfair methods were methods of competition:

It is obvious that the word "competition" imports the existence of present or potential competitors, and the unfair methods must be such as injuriously affect or tend thus to affect the business of these competitors—that is to say, the trader whose methods are assailed as unfair must have present or potential rivals in trade whose business will be, or is likely to be, lessened or otherwise injured. 283 U. S. 643, 649.

Findings of the Commission justify the conclusion that the advertisements naturally would tend to increase the business of respondent; but there is neither finding nor evidence from which the conclusion legitimately can be drawn that these advertisements substantially injured or tended thus to injure the business of any competitor or competitors generally, whether legitimate or not. None of the supposed competitors appeared or was called upon to show what, if any, effect the misleading advertisements had, or were likely to have, upon his business. 283 U. S. 643, 652.

In this case there are definitely identified parties manufacturing and selling in interstate commerce a device adapted to the same purposes as is the petitioner's. The manner of their competition—how one may divert trade from another—is obvious. There is sufficient evidence to warrant a finding that competition exists.

What the record lacks is any direct evidence to the effect that petitioner's misleading advertising claims diverted any business from its competitors. This, however, is not required by the decision in the Raladam case, and would in many cases be impossible to prove. It would seem to be sufficient to show actual or potential competition and unfair trade practices which reasonably tend to give the perpetrator an advantage in such competition. That much certainly was shown here.

The petitioner asserts error in that the Commission's examiner refused to allow reasonable latitude in the cross-examination of Wallace D. Smith to show that the "Prosager" alleged competitive device, was not a legitimate article of commerce. The questions excluded were whether Mr. Smith had "ever had any controversy or difficulty with the Federal Trade Commission?" and whether he had "ever been called before the Federal Trade Commission in connection with the selling" of the Prosager. The examiner sustained objections because the questions were not definite enough as to time and because that was not a proper way to show whether the article was a legitimate article of commerce.

The examiner's action seems correct. The question should have been more definite. A difficulty with or a "calling before" the Commission in themselves mean nothing.

The petitioner complains that the Commission did not sufficiently inquire into the question of whether the alleged competitive devices were legitimate articles of commerce, and in failing to find that they were not legitimate.

There is no merit in this objection. In the first place, it was for the petitioner to show, if it desired it shown, that the competing devices were not legitimate. In the second place, the evidence affirmatively shows that both the petitioner's "Thermalaid" and the two devices found to be in competition with it are all legitimate articles of commerce, used by doctors and laymen for salutary purposes. Petitioner seems to lose sight of the fact that the Commission has never complained of its instrument but only of certain false and misleading advertising issued in connection with it.

This sufficiently answers the last claim of error, that: "* * * a method of competition affecting only outlaws of commerce, engaged in fraudulent or criminal activities, is not within the jurisdiction of the Commission."

Therefore, the petition to set aside should be denied.

In its brief (and not otherwise) the Commission asks for a decree of affirmance and enforcement of its cease and desist order. Petitioner moves to strike the "cross petition" because it is not properly before us. Petitioner alleges that before a decree of enforcement can be granted, [481] it must appear that the recipient of the cease and desist order has disregarded it.

* * * If such person, partnership, or corporation fails or neglects to obey such order * * * the commission may apply to the circuit court of appeals of the United States * * * for the enforcement of its order, * * *. Upon such filing of the application and transcript the court * * * shall have jurisdiction of the proceeding and of the question determined therein, and shall have power to make and enter * * * a decree affirming, modifying, or setting aside the order of the commission * * *.

Any party required by such order of the commission to cease and desist * * * may obtain a review of such order in said circuit court of appeals * * *. Upon the filing of the transcript the court shall have the same jurisdiction to affirm, set aside, or modify the order of the commission as in the case of an application by the commission for the enforcement of its order, * * *. 15 U. S. C. A., § 45.

It would seem, in view of the statute, that the Commission's informal prayer for affirmation of the Commission's order is properly here. It appears that the court is vested with plenary jurisdiction no matter which party brings the cause before it. The same language as to the court's jurisdiction is used in one case as in the other.

The order of the Commission is affirmed.

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION v. LEADER NOVELTY
CANDY COMPANY, INC.¹

(Circuit Court of Appeals, Second Circuit. October 7, 1937)

Application by Commission for enforcement of its order in Docket 2789, 24 F. T. C. 217, directing respondent, its officers, etc., in connection with manufacture, sale and distribution of candy and candy products and toy novelties, to cease and desist from the use of lottery schemes as therein set forth, affirmed per curiam.

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION v. BRECHT CANDY
COMPANY¹

No. 1612

(Circuit Court of Appeals, Tenth Circuit. October 21, 1937)

Decree affirming Commission's order in Docket 2662, 23 F. T. C. 269, directing respondent, its officers, etc., in connection with the offer, sale and distribution of candy and candy products, to cease and desist from the use of lottery schemes as therein set forth, and adopting, as below set forth, provisions thereof in court's order directing respondent, its officers, etc., to cease and desist.

On application for enforcement of Commission's order, affirming decree per curiam.

Mr. W. T. Kelley, Chief Counsel, Federal Trade Commission, Mr. Martin A. Morrison, Asst. Chief Counsel, Mr. Henry C. Lank and Mr. James W. Nichol, Sp. Atty., all of Washington, D. C., for petitioner.

Before LEWIS and PHILLIPS, Circuit Judges.

The court's per curiam affirming decision is reported in 92 F. (2d) 1002.

DECREE

The Federal Trade Commission, petitioner herein, having filed with this court on, to wit, September 28, 1937, its application for the enforcement of an order to cease and desist issued by it against the respondent, under date of November 13, 1936, under the provisions of Section 5 of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes" (38 Stat. 719, 15 U. S. C. A. Sec. 45); and said petitioner, having also certified and filed herein, as required by law, a transcript of the entire record in the proceeding lately pending before it, in which said order to cease and desist was entered, including all the testimony taken and the report of said petitioner; and respondent having subsequently filed its answer to said application for enforcement, in which answer respondent stated it was not willing to contest said application for enforcement or the proceedings based thereon, and in which said answer said respondent consented that this court might, upon said application and respondent's answer thereto, and upon the pleadings, testimony, and proceedings set forth in the transcript aforesaid, make and enter its decree affirming said order to cease and desist and commanding respondent, its officers, agents, representatives, and employees, to comply therewith—

Now, therefore, it is hereby ordered, adjudged and decreed by the court that said order to cease and desist, issued by the Federal Trade Commission, petitioner herein, under date of November 13, 1936, be and the same hereby is affirmed.

And it is hereby further ordered, adjudged and decreed by the court that the respondent, Brecht Candy Company, its officers, agents, representatives, and employees, in the offering for sale, sale, and distribution by it in interstate commerce of candy and candy products, cease and desist from:

(1) Selling and distributing to retail dealers, and to jobbers and wholesale dealers for resale to retail dealers, candy so packed and assembled that sales of such candy to the general public are to be made, or may be made, by means of a lottery, gaming device, or gift enterprise;

(2) Supplying to, or placing in the hands of, wholesale dealers and jobbers or retail dealers, packages or assortments of candy which are used, or may be used, without alteration or rearrangement of the contents of such packages or assortments, to conduct a lottery, gaming device, or gift enterprise in the sale or distribution of the candy contained in said assortments to the public;

(3) Packing or assembling in the same package or assortment of candy for sale to the public at retail, pieces of candy of uniform size and shape having centers of a different color, together with larger pieces or bars of candy, or small packages of candy, which said larger pieces or bars of candy or small packages of candy are to be given as prizes to the purchaser procuring a piece of candy with a center of a particular color;

(4) Supplying to, or placing in the hands of, retail and wholesale dealers and jobbers assortments of candy, together with a device called a "push card" or a device commonly called a "punch board", for use, or which may be used, in distributing said candy to the public at retail.

And it is hereby further ordered, adjudged and decreed by the court that the respondent, Brecht Candy Company, within thirty (30) days after the service upon it by the clerk of this court of a copy of this decree, shall file with the Federal Trade Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which it has complied with this decree.

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION v. COSNER CANDY
COMPANY¹

No. 1611

(Circuit Court of Appeals, Tenth Circuit. October 23, 1937)

Decree affirming Commission's order in Docket 2619, 23 F. T. C. 861, directing respondent, its officers, etc., in the offer, sale and distribution of candy and candy products, to cease and desist from the use of lottery schemes as therein set forth, and adopting, as below set forth, provisions thereof in court's order directing respondent, its officers, etc., to cease and desist.

On application for enforcement of Commission's order, affirming decree per curiam.

Mr. W. T. Kelley, Chief Counsel, Federal Trade Commission, of Washington, D. C., for petitioner.

Before LEWIS and PHILLIPS, Circuit Judges.

DECREE

The Federal Trade Commission, petitioner herein, having filed with this court on, to wit, September 28, 1937, its application for the enforcement of an order to cease and desist issued by it against the respondent, under date of November 13, 1936, under the provisions of Section 5 of an Act of Congress approved September 26, 1914, entitled "An Act to Create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes" (38 Stat. 719, 15 U. S. C. A. Sec. 45); and said petitioner having also certified and filed herein, as required by law, a transcript of the entire record in the proceeding lately pending before it, in which said order to cease and desist was entered, including all the testimony taken and the report of said petitioner; and respondent having subsequently filed its answer to said application for enforcement, in which answer respondent stated it was not willing to contest said application for enforcement or the proceedings based thereon, and in which answer said respondent consented that this court might, upon said application and respondent's answer thereto, and upon the pleadings, testimony, and proceedings set forth in the transcript aforesaid, make and enter its decree affirming said order to cease and desist and commanding respondent, its officers, agents, representatives, and employees, to comply therewith—

Now, therefore, it is hereby ordered, adjudged and decreed by the court that said order to cease and desist, issued by the Federal Trade Commission, petitioner herein, under date of November 13, 1936, be and the same hereby is affirmed.

And it is hereby further ordered, adjudged and decreed by the court that the respondent, Cosner Candy Company, its officers, agents, representatives, and employees, in the offering for sale, sale, and distribution by it in interstate commerce of candy and candy products, cease and desist from:

(1) Selling and distributing to retail dealers, and to jobbers and wholesale dealers for resale to retail dealers, candy so packed and assembled that sales of such candy to the general public are to be made, or may be made, by means of a lottery, gaming device, or gift enterprise;

(2) Supplying to, or placing in the hands of, retail dealers and wholesale dealers and jobbers, packages or assortments of candy which are used, or may be used, without alteration or rearrangement of the contents of such packages or assortments, to conduct a lottery, gaming device, or gift enterprise in the sale or distribution of candy or candy products contained in said assortments to the public;

(3) Packing or assembling in the same package or assortment of candy for sale to the public at retail, pieces of candy of uniform size and shape having centers of a different color, together with larger pieces of candy or small boxes of candy, which said larger pieces of candy or small boxes of candy, are to be given as prizes to the purchaser procuring a piece of candy with a center of a particular color;

(4) Furnishing to wholesale dealers and jobbers display cards, either with assortments of candy, or separately, bearing a legend or legends or statements informing the purchaser that the candy is being sold to the public by lot or chance, or in accordance with a sales plan which constitutes a lottery, gaming device, or gift enterprise;

(5) Furnishing to retail dealers or to wholesale dealers and jobbers display cards or other printed matter for use in connection with the sale of candy, which said advertising literature informs the purchasing public that upon the obtaining by the ultimate purchaser of a piece of candy of a particular colored center, a larger piece of candy, or small box of candy, will be given free to said purchaser;

(6) Supplying to, or placing in the hands of retail and wholesale dealers and jobbers, assortments of candy, together with a device commonly called a "push card" for use, or which may be used, in distribution of said candy to the public at retail.

And it is hereby further ordered, adjudged and decreed by the court that the respondent, Cosner Candy Company, within thirty (30) days after the service upon it by the clerk of this court of a copy of this decree, shall file with the Federal Trade Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which it has complied with this decree.

And it is hereby further ordered, adjudged and decreed by the court that the respondent, Savage Candy Company, within thirty (30) days after the service upon it by the clerk of this court of a copy of this decree, shall file with the Federal Trade Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which it has complied with this decree.

GOODYEAR TIRE & RUBBER COMPANY v. FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION¹

No. 7369

(Circuit Court of Appeals, Sixth Circuit. November 5, 1937)

MOOT PROPOSITIONS—PARTIES' AGREEMENT ON ACTUAL CONTROVERSY—EFFECT.

The Circuit Court of Appeals is not authorized to decide moot propositions merely because the parties are in agreement upon the presence of an actual controversy, since no stipulation of parties or counsel can enlarge the power constitutionally conferred upon the courts.

APPELLATE POWER—JURISDICTION—IN GENERAL.

A Circuit Court of Appeals must determine the limit of its own jurisdiction when such question is raised, whether by counsel or by itself.

MOOT PROPOSITIONS—IN GENERAL.

A Circuit Court of Appeals is not authorized to decide moot or abstract propositions nor to declare, for the government of future cases, principles or rules of law which cannot affect the result as to things in issue before the court.

DISCONTINUANCE OF PRACTICE—WHERE DUE TO INTERVENING EVENT FROM COMPLAINANT'S ACT OR POWER BEYOND CONTROL OF EITHER.

Mere discontinuance of an unlawful practice by parties charged with violating the law will not relieve the court of duty to pass upon a pending charge of illegality since, by mere volition of the parties, the illegal practice may be resumed, but, if discontinuance is the result of an intervening event which is owing to complainant's own act or to a power beyond the control of either party, the court will stay its hand.

MOOT PROPOSITIONS—PRICE DISCRIMINATION—VOLUNTARY ABRIGATION CHALLENGED CONTRACT ON BASIS SUBSEQUENT PROHIBITING LEGISLATION—ACT'S POSSIBLE REPEAL AND ACTIVITY'S RESUMPTION.

Controversy respecting tire manufacturer's alleged violation of the Clayton Act prohibiting discrimination in prices between purchasers, wherein manufacturer voluntarily abrogated the contract which resulted in discrimination, was not rendered less moot by a remote possibility of resumption of allegedly illegal activity or by fact that act under which activity was voluntarily discontinued as illegal might be repealed and the activity resumed, since rendition of decision would invoke exercise of judicial power not to decide existing controversy, but to establish a rule for controlling predicted future conduct which the Circuit Court of Appeals is unauthorized to render (Clayton Act, sec. 2, and sec. 2 as amended in 1936, 15 U. S. C. A., sec. 13).

ROBINSON-PATMAN ACT—PENDING PROCEEDINGS BEFORE COMMISSION PRECEDING ENACTMENT THEREOF—SAVINGS CLAUSE AND APPELLATE POWER WHERE PROPOSITIONS MOOT.

Robinson-Patman Act, purpose of which was to protect proceedings respecting tire manufacturer's alleged violation of Clayton Act prohibiting discrimination in prices between purchasers in which much testimony had been recorded and many months had been consumed in its hearing, could not enlarge the constitutional grant of judicial power of the Circuit Court of Appeals which extends only to cases of actual controversy (Robinson-Patman Act, sec. 2, 15 U. S. C. A., sec. 21a; Clayton Act, sec. 2, 15 U. S. C. A., sec. 13).

ROBINSON-PATMAN ACT—PENDING PROCEEDINGS BEFORE COMMISSION PRECEDING ENACTMENT THEREOF—DUTY TO DETERMINE VIOLATION UNDER OLD ACT WHERE VOLUNTARY ABRIGATION CHALLENGED CONTRACT.

Section of Robinson-Patman Act, purpose of which was to protect proceedings already taken against a tire manufacturer for alleged violation of Clayton Act prohibiting discrimination in prices between purchasers, in which much testimony had been recorded and many months consumed in its hearing, did not require Circuit Court of Appeals to determine the controversy respecting the violation, where the controversy had become moot because the actuality of the violation had ceased, due to the fact that the contract resulting in the violation had been voluntarily abrogated.

MOOT PROPOSITIONS—CEASE AND DESIST ORDER'S DISPOSITION WHEN INVOLVING—CRITERION.

Disposition of cease and desist order entered by Federal Trade Commission in controversy which had become moot was to be based upon determination of what would [678] be most consonant to justice in view of the conditions and circumstances of the particular case.

MOOT PROPOSITIONS—CEASE AND DESIST ORDER'S DISPOSITION WHEN INVOLVING—WHERE RESPONDENT MANUFACTURER LIABLE IN DAMAGES IF ORDER UNAFFECTED, BUT RESUMPTION CHALLENGED DISCRIMINATION STILL POSSIBLE AFTER OFFENDING CONTRACT'S VOLUNTARY ABRIGATION.

Where controversy over alleged violation of Clayton Act prohibiting discrimination in prices between purchasers had become moot, but to leave existing cease and desist order of Federal Trade Commission unaffected, would subject manufacturer to actions for damages for the alleged violation by persons injured, while resumption of price discrimination was allegedly possible without contract which had been canceled (appeal was dismissed without prejudice), cease and desist order was set aside, and case was remanded, but without direction to Commission to dismiss complaint and without prejudice to file supplemental complaint under amendment (Clayton Act, sec. 2, and sec. 2 as amended in 1936, and sec. 4, 15 U. S. C. A., secs. 13, 15; Robinson-Patman Act, sec. 2, 15 U. S. C. A., sec. 21a).

(The syllabus, with substituted captions, is taken from 92 F. (2d) 677)

On petition by Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co., to review order of Commission directing petitioner to cease and desist from alleged discrimination in price of tires between purchasers, with effect of lessening competition and tending to create monopoly both in manufacture and distribution, order set aside and case remanded, but without direction that complaint be dismissed and without prejudice to filing supplemental complaint in original proceeding by Commission.

Mr. Grover Higgins, of Cleveland, Ohio (Mr. Newton D. Baker and Mr. H. Chapman Rose, of Cleveland, Ohio, on the brief), for petitioner.

Mr. Everett F. Haycraft and Mr. W. T. Kelley, both of Washington, D. C. (Messrs. Martin A. Morrison, PGad B. Morehouse, and James W. Nichol, all of Washington, D. C., on the brief), for respondent.

Before HICKS and SIMONS, Circuit Judges, and HAMILTON, District Judge.

SIMONS, Circuit Judge:

The petitioner is a manufacturer of automobile tires, and by respondent's complaint of September 13, 1933, was charged with violation of § 2 of the Clayton Act (U. S. C. A., Title 15, § 13), by discriminating in the price of tires between those sold in interstate commerce to Sears, Roebuck & Co., and those sold to independent Goodyear dealers, with the effect of lessening competition and tending to create a monopoly both in manufacture and distribution. After extended hearings, in which a great volume of testimony was taken, the respondent issued its order directing the petitioner to cease and desist from the condemned practice, whereupon on April 5, 1936, the petitioner, led in this court the present petition for review.

The controversy involves principally a challenged interpretation given by the Commission to § 2 of the Clayton Act. That section declares it to be unlawful to discriminate in price between purchasers of commodities where the effect of such discrimination may be to substantially lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in any line of commerce, and contains the following proviso:

That nothing herein contained shall prevent discrimination in price between purchasers of commodities on account of differences in the grade, quality or quantity of the commodity sold, or that makes only due allowance for difference in the cost of selling or transportation or discrimination in price in the same or different communities made in good faith to meet competition; * * *.

The essential dispute in respect to the foregoing proviso is this: The petitioner contends that a discrimination in price is permitted if based upon the quantity of the commodity sold, and that a discrimination in price is also permitted that makes due allowance for difference in the cost of selling or transportation; that since its discrimination in favor of Sears Roebuck was approximately only 7% over and above a due allowance for difference in cost, it was not an unreasonable discrimination attributable to the great quantity of tires purchased by Sears Roebuck, that its effect did not substantially lessen competition, had no tendency to create monopoly, and so the petitioner did not offend against the statute. The Commission, however, contends that while the proviso permits discrimination on account of differences in quantity of the commodity sold, such discrimination is limited to the saving in cost of selling or transportation, and that all differences in price beyond such saving threatens competition, tends to monopoly, and so violates the statute.

[679] The cease and desist order was entered on March 5, 1936. On June 19 of the same year the Congress enacted the so-called Robinson-Patman Act (49 Statutes 1526), whereby § 2 of the Clayton Act was amended inter alia to provide "That nothing herein contained shall prevent differentials which make only due allowance for differences in the cost of manufacture, sale or delivery, resulting from the differing methods or quantities in which such commodities are to such purchasers sold or delivered." It is agreed that the Robinson-Patman Act limits differentials to differences in cost on account of quantity, but the petitioner insists that this marks a change in the law, while the respondent contends it is mere clarification. The petitioner stands upon the language of the Act and the history of the amendment, pointing among other facts to the Commission's final report on chain store investigation filed December 14, 1934, wherein, in discussion of § 2 of the Clayton Act, it said "Unless the price discrimination permitted on account of quantity shall make only due allowance therefor § 2 of the Clayton Act may be readily evaded by making a small difference in quantity the occasion for a large difference in price. If the section is to have any vitality it must either be interpreted and enforced to that effect or it should be amended to that effect," and to reports of Congressional committees to the effect that § 2 of the Clayton Act places no limit upon quantity differentials of any kind. The Commission's present view of the meaning of § 2 is that in the respect here indicated it requires neither amendment nor interpretation, for it asserts the proviso to be clear and unambiguous. For reasons presently to be discussed, we find it unnecessary to decide the question thus briefly indicated.

When the case reached the court for argument, we were informed that, when the Robinson-Patman Act became effective the petitioner at once ceased to manufacture tires for Sears Roebuck under the terms of its existing contract, and shortly thereafter received notice of its cancellation. Since, however, a large stock of tires made under the agreement was on hand and could not at once be liquidated, the parties made a new price arrangement designed to conform to the new law, and advised the Commission of the price basis it was proposed to use. Within the year all transactions between the petitioner and Sears Roebuck ceased and obligations were terminated by mutual releases. These circumstances appearing, the court inquired whether an actual controversy between the parties remained to be decided. The original briefs, except for a note on that of the petitioner, were silent upon the possibly moot character of the controversy. Permission to file supplemental briefs on the point raised was immediately sought and granted, and these have now been carefully considered.

Petitioner and respondent alike urge decision upon the validity of the Commission's order. That they are in agreement upon the presence of an actual controversy is, however, of no importance, since no stipulation of parties or counsel can enlarge the power constitutionally conferred upon the courts. Richardson v. McChesney, 218 U. S. 487; Stearns v. Wood, 236 U. S. 75; Security Life Insurance Co. v. Prewitt, 200 U. S. 446. It is the duty of the court to determine the limit of its own jurisdiction when any question concerning it presents itself, whether raised by counsel or sua sponte, for we are not empowered to decide moot or abstract propositions, or to declare for the government of future cases principles or rules of law which cannot affect the result as to the things in issue before us. California v. San Pablo & Tulare Railroad, 149 U. S. 308, 314; Ashwander v. Tennessee Valley Authority, 297 U. S. 288.

However debatable may have been the validity of the Commission's order based upon its asserted interpretations of the § 2 proviso of the Clayton Act, and upon this we express no opinion, there is no controversy between the parties as to the illegal character of the petitioner's practices under the terms of the Robinson-Patman Act. To the mandate of the latter, the petitioner has bowed.

So far as his case is concerned it accepts without question both its validity and its application. It has consented to the abrogation of a very profitable contract involving millions of units and many millions of dollars, with all the dislocation and reorganization of manufacturing schedules that such substantial reduction in volume in all probability entails. However contumacious it may have been in respect to the original complaint it now yields to what it conceives to be the certain expression of sovereign authority [680] without awaiting further complaint. The circumstance which compels its present practice is not of its own creation, but one beyond its power to control. In this situation we think the question as to the actuality of any present controversy between petitioner and respondent is ruled by United States v. Hamburg-American Co., 239 U. S. 466.

In that case there was a combination of steamship lines alleged to be illegal under the Anti-Trust Act of July 2, 1890. The Court held that since the business in which the parties to the combination were engaged had by the force of events beyond their control ceased, and since any continued relation between the members of the combination had become unlawful and impossible owing to the World War, all question respecting its validity had become moot and beyond the power of the court to determine. Mere discontinuance of an unlawful practice by parties charged with violating the law will, of course, not relieve the court of the duty to pass upon a pending charge of illegality because by the mere volition of the parties the illegal practice may be resumed. United States v. Trans-Missouri Freight Assn., 166 U. S. 290; Southern Pacific Terminal Co. v. Interstate Commerce Commission, 219 U. S. 498. But these cases are by the court distinguished in the ruling case, where it is said, in reliance upon Mills v. Green, 159 U. S. 651, "But if the intervening event is owing to the plaintiff's own act or to a power beyond the control of either party, the court will stay its hand." Moreover, it is idle, we think, to urge that one who has voluntarily surrendered an activity so great as that required by the petitioner's contract with Sears Roebuck, will of its own volition resume a practice now beyond peradventure condemned by law. Of course the amendatory statute may be repealed, or invalidated. More likely was peace to end the World War and trans-Atlantic communication to be resumed. Of such expectation the court said, "It is urged, in view of the character of the question and the possibility or probability that on the cessation of war the parties will resume or re-create their asserted illegal combination, that we should now decide the controversies in order that by operation of the rule to be established any attempt at renewal of or creation of the combination in the future will be rendered impossible. But this merely upon a prophecy as to future conditions invokes the exercise of judicial power not to decide an existing controversy, but to establish a rule for controlling predicted future conduct."

As against the view that the controversy has become moot, both parties urge upon us § 2 of the Robinson-Patman Act (15 U. S. C. A., § 21a), which provides that rights of action, pending litigation, or orders in effect or pending on review based upon § 2 of the Clayton Act, shall not thereby be affected, and which permits the Commission while its order is pending on review or is in effect as issued or modified by the court, to reopen its original proceeding and to modify or amend its original order to include additional violations of law, such modified or amended order to be subject to review and enforcement in the manner provided by the Clayton Act. This section further provides that if the court sets aside the Commission's modified or amended order, the original order shall not be affected thereby, but shall remain in force and effect as fully and to the same extent as if the supplementary proceedings had not been taken. The history of the section indicates that it was added to the bill specifically to protect proceedings already taken in the instant case, in which many thousands of pages of testimony had been recorded and many months consumed in its hearing.

It is elementary, however, that statutory provisions, even if applicable, may not enlarge the constitutional grant of judicial power which extends only to cases of actual controversy. But § 2 of the Robinson-Patman Act does not by its terms command, nor by necessary implication require, our determination of a dispute whose actuality has ceased. It but provides for the reopening of proceedings begun originally under the Clayton Act for the purpose of examining acts, practices or methods in violation of the amendatory act that have been committed or carried on since its effective date, and this notwithstanding the pendency of a review of its original order or its affirmance or modification by the court. Although sixteen months had elapsed between the effective date of the Robinson-Patman Act and the present hearing here, no supplementary proceedings have been taken, nor are we advised that any are in contemplation. The provi[681]sion contained in the amendment that if upon review of a modified or amended order it is set aside, that the original order shall not be affected thereby but shall remain in force and effect, was certainly not intended to nor could it have the effect of preventing the court from reviewing it or from an appropriate disposition of it in the event that the controversy should have become moot. The real purpose of the amendment was represented upon the floor of the House to be to preserve the extensive record already made in the event that the present petitioner should refuse to comply with orders of the Commission made under the authority of the amendatory act, in which case supplementary proceedings could be had upon the original record and an amended order issue. § 2 of the Robinson-Patman Act has no bearing upon the actuality of the issue presently urged, and our conclusion is that the controversy, notwithstanding its provisions, is moot.

In this situation it remains to be determined what should be done with reference to the cease and desist order made by the Commission. Following the reasoning of the Hamburg-American Company case, supra, and in response to authority controlling upon us, our decision must be based solely "upon determining what will be most consonant to justice in view of the conditions and circumstances of the particular case."

Upon behalf of the petitioner it is urged that since the cease and desist order is not the sole penalty for a violation of § 2 of the Clayton Act, but that under § 4 of that act persons injured by such violations may recover threefold damages and attorneys fees, disposition of the present case which would leave the existing order of the Commission unaffected, would have for it serious practical results in the encouragement of litigation, though necessarily conceding the order not to control such litigation under the doctrine of res judicata. More persuasive, however, is its contention in reliance upon the language of the Hamburg-American case, supra, wherein it was said: "We are of the opinion that the ends of justice exact that the judgment below should not be permitted to stand when without any fault of the government [here the petitioner] there is no power to review it upon the merits but that it should be reversed and the case remanded to the court below with directions to dismiss the bill without prejudice * * *." Certainly there must be recognition of the fundamental injustice of permitting a decision to stand in circumstances in which the defeated party cannot secure its review upon the merits. Commercial Cable Co. v. Burleson, 250 U. S. 360; Brownlow v. Schwartz, 261 U. S. 216.

On the other hand the respondent urges that since at the oral argument the petitioner for the first time definitely stated that its contract with Sears Roebuck had been cancelled and price discrimination stopped, that since there may be price discrimination without contract, and since the Commission's order was not directed to the cancellation of the contract but to unlawful discriminations, and there has been no examination into the practices of the petitioner since the effective date of the Robinson-Patman Act, and not sufficient opportunity for such investigation, appropriate disposition of the present case, based upon a conclusion that the controversy therein has become moot, is to dismiss the appeal without prejudice. We give consideration to both contentions when we set aside, as we do, the order of the Commission and remand the case, but without direction to the Commission to dismiss the complaint and without prejudice to its filing a supplemental complaint in the original proceeding if under § 2 of the amendatory act this may now be done, concerning which we express no opinion.

It is so ordered.

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION v. STANDARD EDUCATION SOCIETY ET AL.¹

No. 14

(Supreme Court of the United States. November 8, 1937)

FINDINGS OF COMMISSION—STATUTE'S MANDATE AS BINDING COURT.

The courts do not have right to ignore the plain mandate of statute which makes findings of Federal Trade Commission conclusive as to the facts if supported by testimony (Federal Trade Commission Act of 1914, sec. 5, 15 U. S. C. A. sec. 45).

PRODUCT AS GIVEN AWAY WITH THAT SOLD, WHERE REQUIRED PRICE REGULAR STANDARD FOR BOTH, AS UNFAIR PRACTICE.

Practice of publisher of encyclopedia in representing that set of books were given away and that only loose leaf extension service was to be paid for by purchaser could be forbidden by Federal Trade Commission as unfair trade practice where price required to be paid was regular standard price for both encyclopedia and loose leaf extension service.

CONTRIBUTOR TO ORIGINAL WORK AS CONTRIBUTOR TO REVISED, IN WHICH NO PART OF CONTRIBUTION INCLUDED, AS UNFAIR.

Order of Federal Trade Commission permitting publisher of encyclopedic work to represent any person as contributor to revised encyclopedia if part of his material appearing in original edition had been carried forward into revised encyclopedia, but prohibiting the representation of a contributor to the original encyclopedia as a contributor to the revised encyclopedia where no part of his contribution had been brought forward into the revised encyclopedia, was proper.

TESTIMONIAL'S USE WHERE NOT BY PERSON NAMED THEREIN.

Evidence sustained Federal Trade Commission's finding that publisher of encyclopedia used testimonials which had not been given by person whose name was used, justifying cease and desist order.

PARTIES RESPONDENT—JOINER OF NEW CORPORATION AND MANAGERS OF BOTH, WHERE INSTRUMENT OF EVASION.

Evidence sustained finding of Federal Trade Commission that managers of first corporation organized another corporation for purpose of evading any cease and desist order which might be issued against the first corporation, as regards propriety of including the other corporation and the managers in the cease and desist order.

¹ The case is reported in 302 U. S. 112, 58 S. Ct. 113. The case before the Commission is reported in 16 F. T. C. 1.

PARTIES RESPONDENT—CORPORATE RESPONDENTS' INDIVIDUAL CONTROLLERS AS BOUND BY ORDER AGAINST FORMER.

Individuals who were in charge and control of affairs of respondent corporations would be bound by cease and desist order of Federal Trade Commission against the corporations.

PARTIES RESPONDENT—MOVING PARTIES IN CORPORATE CONDUCT—WHERE ORDER COMPLIANCE DOUBTFUL.

Where circumstances, disclosed by findings of Federal Trade Commission and testimony, were such that further efforts of individuals, who were in charge and control of affairs of corporations, to evade cease and desist order of Federal Trade Commission might be anticipated, it was proper for Commission to include the individuals in its order.

PARTIES RESPONDENT—MOVING PARTIES IN CORPORATE CONDUCT—WHERE INDIVIDUAL ACTIONS OF SUCH, AS THOUGH NO CORPORATION.

Where record in proceeding for enforcement of cease and desist order of Federal Trade Commission showed that respondent corporations were owned and managed by three individual respondents, and that the individuals acted with practically the same freedom as though no corporation had existed, the Federal Trade Commission was justified in reaching conclusion that it was necessary to include the individuals in each part of its order.

(The syllabus, with substituted captions, is taken from 58 S. Ct. 113)

In proceeding by Commission against Standard Education Society and others for order to enforce its order to cease and desist from certain unfair methods of competition, and on certiorari by Commission to review that part of decree of Circuit Court of Appeals, 86 F. (2d) 692, which modified in part and reversed in part its said order, decree reversed in part, and cause remanded, with instructions.

[113] Messrs. Homer S. Cummings, Atty. Gen., and Robert H. Jackson, Asst. Atty. Gen., for petitioner.

Mr. Henry Ward Beer, of Washington, D. C., for respondents.

Mr. Justice Black delivered the opinion of the Court.

Upon application by the Federal Trade Commission this Court granted certiorari to review that part of a decree of the Circuit Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit, which modified in part and reversed in part a "cease and desist" order of the Commission (86 F. (2d) 692). The Commission, after service of a complaint, and extensive hearings, made a finding of facts from the testimony and ordered two corporation respondents and three individuals controlling these corporations, to desist from certain practices used by respondents in furthering the sale of encyclopedias and other books in interstate commerce. The Commission not only found the practices to be "unfair" but also "false, deceptive and misleading." The Court below modified and weakened the Commission's order in material aspects, and, the questions here are whether the testimony supported all the findings of the Commission, and whether these findings justified the entire order as against all the respondents.

All "unfair" practices found by the Commission related wholly to methods of sale. The Commission's order against respondents was based, in part, upon the following findings:

[114] That fictitious testimonials and recommendations had been used by respondents; that authorized testimonials and recommendations had been exaggerated and garbled; that authorized testimonials for a "previous work" were later used to further the sale of another "work, quite different in form, in material and in purpose." "For the purpose of selling their publications, Standard Reference Work and New Standard Encyclopedia" respondents advertised "a list headed 'Contributors and Reviewers' and in such list they include many who have not been either contributors or reviewers to either the Standard Reference Work or the New Standard Encyclopedia." Respondents sold "their publications at retail to the public by salesmen on the subscription plan" and in carrying out said plan they represented to prospects that they were selecting a small list of "well connected representative people" in various localities, in order to present them with an "artcraft de luxe edition" of the encyclopedia. Further carrying out respondents' scheme, their agents represented that "they are giving away a set of books; that they are not selling anything; that the books are free; that the books are being given free as an advertising plan * * * that the prospect has been specially selected, and that the only return desired for the gift is permission to use the name of the prospect for advertising purposes and as a reference"; that the "said prospects are paying only for the loose leaf extension service; * * * that the price of $69.50 is a reduced price and that the regular price of the books and the extension service is $150.00 sometimes even as high as $200.00." The statements that the encyclopedia is being given away; that payment is only being made "for the loose leaf extension service"; and that "$69.50 is a reduced price * * * and false, deceptive and misleading, as $69.50 is the regular, standard price" for both the encyclopedia and the loose leaf extension and research privileges.

[115] The Court of Appeals reversed clauses one and three of the Commission's order. These clauses ordered respondents not to represent falsely to purchasers of their publications that the publishing company was giving encyclopedias to them as a gift, and that purchasers were paying only for looseleaf supplements.

The Court of Appeals affirmed clauses two and six of the Commission's order. These clauses ordered respondents not to represent falsely to purchasers that sets of books had "been reserved to be given away free of cost to selected persons" and that the usual price at which respondents' publications are sold is higher than the price "at which they are offered to such purchasers."

It is clear, both from the findings of the Commission, and the testimony upon which they rest, that the practices forbidden in clauses one, two, three, and six are all tied together as parts of the same sales plan. As a first step under this plan, salesmen obtained an audience with prospective purchasers by representations made to them that by reason of their prestige and influence they had been selected by the company to receive a set of books free of cost for advertising purposes. After respondents' agents thus gained an audience by the promise of a free set of books, they then moved forward under the same general sales plan, by falsely representing that the regular price of the loose leaf supplement alone was $69.50, and that the usual price of both books and loose leaf supplements was much in excess of $69.50. The Commission ordered respondents not to engage in carrying out any part of this entire sales plan. However, as the Court of Appeals reversed clauses one and three of the Commission's order, a part of the sales scheme which the Commission condemned as unfair, can yet be carried out by respondents. That is to say—respondents by that reversal, are left free to continue to obtain audiences with prospects and to sell encyclopedias and loose leaf supple[116]ments to them, by false representations that the company gives them a set of encyclopedias free, and that $69.50 paid by them to the company, is for the loose leaf supplement alone.

In reaching the conclusion that respondents should be left free to engage in that part of the sales scheme prohibited by clauses one and three of the Commission's order, the Court below reasoned as follows:

"We cannot take too seriously the suggestion that a man who is buying a set of books and a ten years 'extension service' will be fatuous enough to be misled by the mere statement that the first are given away, and that he is paying only for the second * * *. Such trivial niceties are too impalpable for practical affairs, they are will-o-wisps which divert attention from substantial evils."

The fact that a false statement may be obviously false to those who are trained and experienced does not change its character, nor take away its power to deceive others less experienced. There is no duty resting upon a citizen to suspect the honesty of those with whom he transacts business. Laws are made to protect the trusting as well as the suspicious. The best element of business has long since decided that honesty should govern competitive enterprises, and that the rule of caveat emptor should not be relied upon to reward fraud and deception.

The practice of promising free books where no free books were intended to be given, and the practice of deceiving unwary purchasers into the false belief that loose leaf supplements alone sell for $69.50, when in reality both books and supplement regularly sell for $69.50, are practices contrary to decent business standards. To fail to prohibit such evil practices would be to elevate deception in business and to give to it the standing and dignity of truth. It was clearly the practice of respondents through their agents, in accordance with a well-matured plan, to mislead customers into the belief that they [117] were given an encyclopedia, and that they paid only for the loose leaf supplement. That representations were made justifying this belief; that the plan was outlined in letters going directly from the companies; that men and women were deceived by them—there can be little doubt. Certainly the Commission was justified from the evidence in finding that customers were misled. Testimony in the record from citizens of ten States—teachers, doctors, college professors, club women, business men—proves beyond doubt that the practice was not only the commonly accepted sales method for respondents' encyclopedias, but that it successfully deceived and deluded its victims.

The courts do not have a right to ignore the plain mandate of the statute which makes the findings of the Commission conclusive as to the facts if supported by testimony.¹ The courts cannot pick and choose bits of evidence to make findings of fact contrary to the findings of the Commission. The record in this case is filled with evidence of witnesses under oath which support the Commission's findings. Clauses one and three of the Commission's order should be sustained and enforced.

The seventh clause of the Commission's order forbade the use of names of persons as contributors or editors who had not consented to such use and who had neither actually contributed to the publications nor helped to edit them.

The Court of Appeals upheld this clause except as it might apply to the original contributors to Aiton's encyclopedia saying that "it seems to us not 'unfair' to announce as contributors to the derived works those who have been contributors to the original." Aiton's encyclopedia was published about 1909, and respondents' works represent the result of periodic revisions and expansions of the prior work. The Government concedes in [118] its brief that this clause of the Commission's order does not prevent respondents from representing a person who contributed to the original, as a contributor to their revised publication, if "some of the material originally in Aiton's encyclopedia remained in the new edition of the revised work." Respondents agree with this interpretation. As between these parties, therefore, this clause permits respondents to represent any person as a contributor to their present revised encyclopedia, if a part of his original material has been carried forward to it. If no part of his contribution to Aiton's encyclopedia has been brought forward, he is not a contributor and should not be represented as such. This clause as originally declared by the Commission would, under this interpretation, properly forbid respondents from falsely representing as contributors or editors those who had actually neither contributed to, nor edited, the publications. The decree of the Court below modifying this clause is not in accordance with our conclusion, and clause seven of the Commission's order should be enforced.

The Court of Appeals reversed the eighth clause of the order of the Commission. The reason given by the Court below for this action was as follows:

"For the eighth, which forbade the use of such testimonials which had not been given by the person whose name was used, we have been able to find no support in the evidence; * * *

We are convinced that the Commission's findings of fact justified this clause of the order and that the testimony supports these findings.²

[119] The Court of Appeals entirely excluded respondent Greener from the operation of the Commission's order, and partially excluded respondents Stanford and Ward. The Commission had found from the testimony that "Respondents H. M. Stanford, W. H. Ward, and A. J. Greener are the managers and sole stockholders of respondent Standard Education Society, and the managers and sole incorporators of respondent Standard Encyclopedia Corporation * * *. The Commission concludes and infers from the record in this case and so finds that this corporation was organized by the individual respondents for the purpose of evading any order that might be issued by the Federal Trade Commission against the respondent, the Standard Education Society."

There was ample support in the testimony for this finding of the Commission.

The Federal Trade Commission Act (supra) gives the Commission power to "prevent" persons, partnerships or corporations * * * from using unfair methods of competition in commerce."

This court has held that "a command to the corporation is in effect a command to those who are officially responsible for the conduct of

² From paragraphs fourteen and fifteen of the Commission's findings it appears that respondents used the names of various individuals in testimonials and that

"None of these men or this woman ever wrote any testimonial or recommendation of or concerning the New Standard Encyclopedia. The representations that these men and this woman wrote the recommendations for the so-called 'New Standard Encyclopedia,' are false, deceptive, and misleading."

its affairs. If they, apprised of the writ directed to the corporation, prevent compliance * * * they, no less than the corporation itself, are guilty of disobedience and may be punished for contempt." Wilson v. United States, 221 U. S. 361, 376.

Respondents Stanford, Ward, and Greener, who are in charge and control of the affairs of respondent corporations, would be bound by a cease and desist order rendered against the corporations. Since circumstances, disclosed by the Commission's findings and the testimony, are such that further efforts of these individual respondents to evade orders of the Commission might be anticipated, it was proper for the Commission to include them in its cease and desist order.

[120] The record in this case discloses closely held corporations owned, dominated, and managed by these three individual respondents. In this management these three respondents acted with practically the same freedom as though no corporation had existed. So far as corporate action was concerned, these three were the actors. Under the circumstances of this proceeding, the Commission was justified in reaching the conclusion that it was necessary to include respondents Stanford, Ward, and Greener in each part of its order if it was to be fully effective in preventing the unfair competitive practices which the Commission had found to exist. The Court below was in error in excluding these respondents from the operation of the Commission's order.

The decree below will be reversed except as to modification of clause ten of the Commission's order, and the cause is remanded with instructions to proceed in conformity with this opinion.

Reversed.
